

COPYRIGHT POLICY

ELSA will only accept original submissions to the ELSA Law Review (ELR) that have not previously been published or submitted for publication.

Copyright Ownership & Author Rights

The Author retains the copyright of their published work but grants ELSA the nonexclusive right to publish, distribute, and archive the manuscript in any format without obtaining the author's prior express special consent.

ELSA reserves the right to adapt, reproduce, distribute, and promote the published work in print, digital, and open-access formats.

Authors are permitted to:

- Share their published work on personal websites, institutional repositories, and academic platforms, with a proper citation to the original journal publication.
- Use parts of their work in future research, books, or lectures, provided proper acknowledgement is given.
- Translate their work into other languages, with prior notification to ELSA.

Third-Party Content & Permissions

- If the manuscript includes third-party materials (e.g., images, tables, charts), the author must obtain the necessary permissions for reproduction and submit proof of permission upon request.
- The journal is not liable for copyright infringement resulting from an author's failure to obtain proper permissions.

Publication in Other Journals

Authors must require prior written permission from ELSA to publish their article in another journal, following the publication of their submission in the ELR.

If permission is granted, authors must clearly indicate that this work was originally published in the ELSA Law Review with the proper citation.

Applicability

The rights and obligations outlined in this policy enter into force when and if the Author is informed by ELSA of the decision to shortlist their submission for publication in the ELR.
