¹⁷⁵ Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the protection of whistle-blowers.

This definition can identify “the legal institution” (Law on Whistleblowing) in charge to protect those citizens and workers who report irregularities or offences and eventually subjected to retaliation for their complaint.¹⁷⁶ It is clear that citizens and workers are the first to notice a malfunction of an organisation or of the public administration and are in the privileged position to propose corrective measures in relation to a large number of risks: environmental, economic, security, technical and many others.¹⁷⁷

The Transparency International Italy (TI-It) institute, a national branch of the world's leading organisation fighting against corruption and protecting whistle-blowers, provides benefits to all the community workers by guaranteeing them protection against penalties that may occur as a result of their reports. Indeed, the Transparency International Italy (TI-It) institute gives a more concrete support and help to the individuals denouncing situations such as corruption, bribes, etc., granting them the protection as whistle-blowers, because they might be in danger or, as in most of the cases, be suspended from work. Furthermore, thanks to the reporting of whistle-blowers, companies get aware of negligence or crimes committed inside their work places, thus they have the possibility to act quickly in order to avoid economical and image damages.

Whistleblowing is an act that requires the active participation of the civil society, in a context of a broader co-operation between citizens, institutions and organisations with the aim of reporting the irregularities and the risks to the security and life in order to prevent the occurrence of incidents with serious consequences for the community, for in the benefit of it.

One of the main challenges resulting from the existing high level of corruption is the emergence of the crime itself, which is characterised by a high index of occultation, for its own nature.¹⁷⁸ In most cases, an individual becomes a whistle-blower after witnessing cases of corruption occurring on the work place, involving colleagues or even their supervisors. In order not to be involved, they are obliged to notify the situation, to their supervisors (if any) or directly to the public authorities. Therefore, there is the need for a tool which encourages the individual will to report ambiguous situations, which are not following the daily work routine and which are explicitly against the honest and correct behavior that each worker should have. Indeed, by simplifying the procedure of reporting for whistle-blowers and at the same time having more efficient systems of protection from any type of retaliation (dismissal, harassment, transfer, etc.) would be certainly possible to encourage people to come forward.

11.2 The Regulation of Whistleblowing in the Italian System

¹⁷⁶M.CASTELLANETA, <http://www.marinacastellaneta.it> 16/04/2016

¹⁷⁷ Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/ProtectionOfSources.aspx>, 16/4/2016

¹⁷⁸ P. Davigo, G. Mannozi, Corruption in Italy. Social perception and criminal control (Bari 2007) 34 [Italian].

The introduction into national law of adequate protection of the employees, both public and private, which are reporting abuses and illegal acts within the working environment is provided in general by international conventions ratified by Italy, as well as in the recommendations of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, such as the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7.

Whistleblowing is not adequately regulated within the national legal system yet, and in particular whistle-blowers working in public and private offices are treated differently. Each organization is free to decide whether to accept a procedure for whistleblowing. In most cases, there are no specific guidelines and the employee can decide to proceed in three different ways: making an internal report to the appropriate organ identified by the company itself, report to the judiciary administration or, as often happens, remain silent.

Indeed, the Italian legislation oblige public officers to report a crime, and although the standards established are poorly implemented, Article 361 CC is clear:

‘A public officer, who fails or delays to report to the judicial authorities, or to another authority, a complaint he has the obligation to report, regarding a crime for which he gained knowledge while exercising or because of its functions, shall be punished with a fine from 30 Euros up to 516 Euros.

If the offender is an officer or a judicial police officer, who in any event was informed of an offense which he must report, the punishment is the imprisonment up to one year.’¹⁷⁹

Article 2, Law No. 69 of 1963 requires journalists and editors to maintain the confidentiality on the sources, thus not to disclose the name of the person(s) who provided confidential information. This provision allows the journalist to receive news, while the sources are protected. Also, article 138, Data Protection Code ensures the protections of journalistic sources. The violation of the ethical rule on the secret of the sources, involves disciplinary responsibility (Article 48 of Law No.69 of 1963).

The Law no. 190 of 2012 (Regulations to prevent and suppress corruption and illegality in public administration, also known as the Anti-corruption Law) introduced a specific article on whistleblowing in the public sector to the Privacy Law, the Article 54-bis paragraph 1 states: *‘Except for the cases of responsibility of slander or libel, or for the same responsibilities expressed under the Article 2043 of the Civil Code, the public employee which reports to the judicial Authorities or to the Court of Auditors or rather refers to the supervisor an illegal conduct on which he has knowledge by reason of his employment relationship, cannot be sanctioned, dismissed or subjected to a discriminatory measure, whether direct or indirect, having effect on working conditions for reasons related directly or indirectly to the complaint’.*¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁹ Art. 361, Criminal Code.

¹⁸⁰ Art. 54 bis, Legislative Decree no 165 (Consolidated Act on Civil Service) 2001 [Testo Unico sul Pubblico Impiego].

However, a single article is not sufficient to regulate such a complex issue and does not provide the tools or the necessary institutions that encourage the reports, which seem necessary in a cultural context such as the Italian one, traditionally not inclined to this type of reporting.¹⁸¹

Another aspect that this article does not address effectively concerns the protection of the whistle-blower. Very often employees do not give voice to their doubts, out of laziness, ignorance, selfishness and above all, for fear of retaliation (or even dismissal) or the frustration of not seeing a concrete and effective response to their complaints.¹⁸²

The law no. 190 of 2012, included this issues exclusively in relation to the field of the public administration, whose Art. 1, paragraph 51 focused on three aspects:

- the protection of anonymity;
- the prohibition of discrimination against the whistle-blowers;
- the right of access on the complaint filed is excluded, and the only derogation regard the exceptional circumstances described in paragraph 2 of the new Article 54-bis of the Legislative Decree No. 165 of 2001 it is necessary to reveal the identity of the complainant.

As it can be understood, the secrecy of the source of the information, is not an absolute principle. In fact, authorities and companies are prohibited by legislation to identify the source of information, except in some cases clearly explained by legislation.¹⁸³ Especially, as previously explained¹⁸⁴, Article 200 of CCP. prescribes the cases in which the disclosure of the name(s) from whom the journalist received the news is allowed.¹⁸⁵

11.2.1 Recent Case-Law on Whistleblowing

Recently, in Italy numerous cases of whistleblowing were brought before national Courts. The first case, Vito Belfiore v. Ferrovie dello Stato, before to the Court of Appeal of Genova, concerning one of the four employees of the State Railways Company who revealed some dangerous flaws of trains and tracks. Indeed, the employees anonymously share with the media the issue and allowed some journalists to board on trains and collect direct evidence of their malfunctioning. Later on, their identity was discovered and they were fired. One of them, Vito Belfiore, filed a lawsuit against his employer, managing to prove the illegitimacy of the dismissal on the ground of the absence of evidences on the reasons he was fired for. He obtained a compensation to restore the damage suffered and started working again at the same company.

¹⁸¹ Law no 190 (Regulations to prevent and suppress corruption and illegality in public administration) 2012 [Disposizioni per la prevenzione e la repressione della corruzione edell'illegalita' nella pubblica amministrazione].

¹⁸² Transparency International Italia, www.transparency.it, 4/2/2016

¹⁸³ M.Castellaneta, <http://www.marinacastellaneta.it>, 16/04/2016.

¹⁸⁴ See question 6 of this report.

¹⁸⁵ Article 200, Code of Criminal Procedure.

The second case, Cronaglia v. Istituti Gaslini, No. 2168, 5 February 2004, brought before the Supreme Court, involved a doctor who wrote a book reporting corruption in the hospital where he was working. After the publication of the book he was fired, therefore he sued the hospital. Later, he received a compensation for the damages suffered in addition to the amount of the missing salaries that he could not have. He was not hired again as a public manager because the “trust” relationship between the hospital and the manager was already missing.

The above-mentioned cases demonstrates that whistle-blowers can receive protection against unfair dismissals, especially on the basis of Article 18, Statute of Workers. Despite this, there still exist other issues concerning the protection of whistle-blowers, such as the cases when the reaction of employers does not consist in the dismissal, but in "minor" abuses, such as demotion, transfer, mobbing, etc.¹⁸⁶

11.3 Whistleblowing and the Protection of Journalistic Sources

The Italian legal system does not provide a specific protection for whistle-blowers under the laws that are protecting journalistic sources. In the Italian system, the figure of a whistle-blower is identified as an “informant”, protected under the rules established by Law No. 69 of 1963.

In the last years, due to the digital revolution that affected our daily routine, also for journalist, there is a less access to the “analogic” sources of information. In fact, in case of anonymity the digital source makes the information less reliable.

The use of digital sources, in combination with the risk of a misleading behavior, which does not pay attention to the reliability of the information entails enormous risks for the journalist, such as lawsuits, risk of disciplinary sanctions and risk of violation of the Privacy Law, action that can be easily brought before courts from the damaged part, victim of the publication of false information.

12. Conclusion

The analysis demonstrates that the Italian system sets a fragmented regulation on secrecy of sources, which is secured on different levels: civil, administrative, procedural and criminal, not to mention the self-regulatory mechanism created by the Association of Journalists.

The protection of journalistic sources is essential in order to grant the right to freedom of expression. Indeed, the disclosure of any information is the first step of a more complex path: it is the pillar on which the right to inform and be informed are based. The trust relation between journalists and their sources allows the dissemination of information and contributes to the emergence of the public opinions, and, consequently, to the development of the democratic process. Therefore, the intervention of the legislator is desirable to provide a consistent and coherent reform in order to reorganise the rules and to address the main controversial issues still at stake.

¹⁸⁶ Art.18, Law 30 (Provisions on the protection of the freedom and dignity of workers, trade union freedom and trade union activities at the workplace, and provisions on placement) 1970 [Norme sulla tutela della liberta' e dignita' dei lavoratori, della liberta' sindacale e dell'attivit  sindacale, nei luoghi di lavoro e norme sul collocamento].

13. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

13.1. Books and articles

13.1.1. English titles

- Council of Europe, Explanatory Report to the Convention on Cybercrime (2001) <<https://rm.coe.int/CoERMPublicCommonSearchServices/DisplayDCTMContent?documentId=09000016800cce5b>> accessed 6 March 2016.
- Council of Europe, Committee of Culture, Science and Education, The protection of journalists' sources (Doc. 12443 2011) <<http://assembly.coe.int/nw/xml/XRef/Xref-DocDetails-EN.asp?fileid1=12811&lang=EN&search=ZG9jIDEyNDQz>>.
- Directorate General of Human Rights and Legal Affairs Council of Europe, Freedom of expression in time of crisis. Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe (2008) <<http://www.un.org/en/sc/ctc/specialmeetings/2011/docs/coe/coe-guidelines-crisis-en.pdf>>.
- Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Report on the Protection of Sources and Whistle-blowers <<http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/ProtectionOfSources.aspx>>, accessed 16 April 2016.

13.1.2. Italian titles

- Antolisei F., Manuale di Diritto Penale. Parte Speciale (Giuffrè).
- Bevere A., Cerri A., Il diritto di informazione e i diritti della persona (Giuffrè 1995).
- Bin R., Diritti e argomenti. Il bilanciamento degli interessi nella giurisprudenza costituzionale (Giuffrè 1992).
- Boneschi L., La Deontologia del Giornalista. Diritti e doveri della professione (Egea 1997).
- Bonini G., Confortini M., Codice Penale Ipertestuale, (2th edn UTET Giuridica 2007).
- Canestrari S., Gamberini A., Insolera G., Mazzacuva N., Sgubbi F., Stortoni L., Tagliarini F., Diritto penale. Lineamenti di parte speciale (Monduzzi 2006)
- Caretti P., de Siervo U, Istituzioni di Diritto Pubblico (10th edn G.Giappichelli Editore 2014).
- Caretti P., I diritti fondamentali (3th edn G.Giappichelli Editore 2011).
- Crespi A., La Tutela Penale del Segreto (Priulla 1952).
- Cuniberti M., Lamarque B., Tonoletti B., Vigevani G.E., Viviani Schlein M.P., Percorsi di diritto dell'informazione (3rd edn, Giappichelli 2011).
- Davigo P., Mannozi G., La corruzione in Italia. Percezione sociale e controllo penale (Laterza 2007).

- Esposito C., La libertà di manifestazione del pensiero nell'ordinamento italiano (Giuffrè 1958).
- Fiandaca G, Musco E, Diritto Penale. Parte Speciale. Delitti contro la Persona (Zanichelli 2006).
- Finocchiaro G., Diritto all'anonimato. Anonimato, nome e identità personale (CEDAM 2008).
- Gardini G., Le regole dell'informazione (3rd edn G.Giappichelli Editore 2013).
- Mantovani F, Diritto Penale. Parte Speciale. Delitti contro la Persona (2th edn CEDAM 2005).
- Manzini V., Trattato di Diritto Penale Italiano (5th edn UTET 1986).
- Marini G, la Monica M e Mazza L, Commentario al Codice Penale. Vol. IV (UTET 2002).
- Papa G., Garofoli R., Manuale di Diritto Penale. Parte Speciale. Vol. 3 (Nel Diritto Editore 2015).
- Pedrazza Gorlero M., Giornalismo e Costituzione (CEDAM 1988).
- Protetti C., Il Giornalismo nella Giurisprudenza (CEDAM 1979).
- Rodotà S., Il diritto di avere diritti (Laterza 2012).
- Spagnolo P., Il Segreto Giornalistico nel Processo Penale (Giuffrè 2014).
- Tonini P., Manuale di Procedura Penale (11th edn Giuffrè).
- Ziccardi G., Crittografia e diritto (G.Giappichelli Editore 2003).
- Abiakam C. Battistoni C., Calabrese V., Caravella R., Giuliano D., Lucantoni G., La disciplina delle intercettazioni. Tra presupposti di legittimità, divieti d'uso e distruzione (2013) < http://www.archiviopenale.it/apw/wp-content/uploads/2013/06/Versione_Finale.pdf >.
- Calderone R.C., Segreto del Giornalista ed Essenzialità della Giustizia (Quaderni Giustizia 1986)
- Castellaneta M., Libertà di stampa nel diritto internazionale ed europeo (Collana di Studi sull'integrazione europea 2012).
- Chelo Manchìa A., Segreto giornalistico: un segreto davvero tutelato? (Cassazione Penale 2005).
- M. Cuniberti, Disciplina della stampa e dell'attività giornalistica e informazione in rete (Nuove tecnologie e libertà della comunicazione. Profili costituzionali e pubblicistici 2008).
- Gregori G., Informazione e Segreto professionale: Tutela del Giornalista e del Cittadino (Diritto Radiodiffusioni 1984).
- Monaco, Art. 622 (Commentario breve al codice penale).
- Mutti, Segreto Professionale (Digesto Penale 1997).
- Natoli U., Conflitto di diritti (Digesto Discipline Privatistiche, Vol. III 1998).
- Paolozzi G., Saracino N. G., Tutela Processuale del Segreto (Enciclopedia Giuridica Treccani 1992).
- Pedrazzi, Aspetti Penali e Processuale del Segreto Bancario (La Responsabilità Penale degli Operatori Bancari 1980) .

- Riccio G.M., Diritto all'anonimato e responsabilità civile del provider (Internet e il diritto dei privati. Persona e proprietà intellettuale nelle reti telematiche 2002).
- Sica S., Zeno-Zencovich V., Legislazione, giurisprudenza e dottrina nel diritto dell'Internet (Dir. Informaz. e Informatica 2010).
- Vigna P.L., Dubolino P., Segreto (Reati in Materia di) (Enciclopedia Giuridica Treccani XLI).
- Abruzzo F., Il Segreto Professionale dei Giornalisti (05/2003) <<http://www.diritto.it/articoli/editoria/abruzzo6.html>> accessed 8 January 2016.
- Betzu M., Anonimato e responsabilità in rete (2011) <<http://www.costituzionalismo.it/articoli/391/>>.
- Biagioni L., Note sul riconoscimento del segreto professionale ai giornalisti professionisti nel nuovo C.p.p (Giurisprudenza Italiana 1991).
- Castellaneta M., Protezione delle fonti dei giornalisti blindata da Strasburgo <<http://www.marinacastellaneta.it/blog/protezione-delle-fonti-dei-giornalisti-blindata-da-strasburgo.html>> accessed 23 April 2016.
- Castellaneta M., Tutela delle fonti: contrarie alla Convenzione le perquisizioni nelle redazioni giornalistiche <<http://www.marinacastellaneta.it/blog/contrarie-alla-convenzione-europea-dei-diritti-dell'uomo-le-perquisizioni-nelle-redazioni-e-il-sequestro-di-materiale-ai-giornalisti.html>> accessed 22 April 2016.
- Di Camillo M., Segreto Giornalistico e Diritto di Cronaca nel Diritto Sostanziale e Processuale alla Luce della Riforma del 1988 (Giurisprudenza di Merito 1990).
- Falcone V., "Segreto giornalistico ed esigenze processuali" (25/01/2008) <<http://www.altalex.com/documents/news/2008/01/24/segreto-giornalistico-ed-esigenze-processuali#sdfootnote10sym>> accessed 10 January 2016.
- Grilli L., La Pubblicazione degli Atti e il Segreto Professionale del Giornalista (Giustizia penale 1990).
- Insolera G., Reati associativi, delitto politico e terrorismo globale (Rivista Italiana di diritto e procedura penale 2004).
- Lonardo F., Informazione Giornalistica e Segreto Professionale (La Giustizia Penale 1976).
- Peron S., Cronisti inviati e legge, Il segreto professionale del giornalista <<http://www.odg.mi.it/node/30133>> accessed 12 January 2015.
- Pino G., Teoria e pratica del bilanciamento: tra libertà di manifestazione del pensiero e tutela dell'identità personale (Danno e Responsabilità 2003).
- Pisa P., Il «Segreto Giornalistico» nel Processo Penale: Spazi Stretti per una Prospettiva di Riforma (Rivista italiana Diritto e Procedura Penale 1982).
- Rarafaci T, Segreto del Giornalista e Processo Penale (Cassazione Penale 1991).
- Vigevani G. E., Anonimato, responsabilità e trasparenza nel quadro costituzionale italiano (2014) <<http://www.osservatorioaic.it/anonimato-responsabilit-e-trasparenza-nel-quadro-costituzionale-italiano.html>>
- Autorità Garante della Privacy, Press release (2000).
- Conso G., Il Segreto Giornalistico dopo la Sentenza della Corte Costituzionale (Nota a Corte costit., 28 gennaio 1981, n. 1, Massa) (Giurisprudenza costituzionale 1981).

13.2. Internet sources

- Marina Castellaneta. Notizie e commenti sul diritto internazionale e dell'Unione europea <<http://www.marinacastellaneta.it/blog/>>.
- Transparency International Italia < <https://www.transparency.it/> >.

14. Table of English Legislation

European Convention on Human Rights	Article 10 Freedom of expression 1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises. 2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.
Recommendation CM/Rec(2014)7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on The protection of whistle-blowers
Recommendation no. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on The Right of Journalists not to Disclose their Sources of Information	Definitions a) the term "journalist" means any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication; Principle 1 Right of non-disclosure of journalists Domestic law and practice in member states should provide for explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

Principle 4

Alternative evidence to journalists' sources

In legal proceedings against a journalist on grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, authorities should consider, for the purpose of establishing the truth or otherwise of the allegation, all evidence which is available to them under national procedural law and may not require for that purpose the disclosure of information identifying a source by the journalist.

Principle 5

Conditions concerning disclosures

- a. The motion or request for initiating any action by competent authorities aimed at the disclosure of information identifying a source should only be introduced by persons or public authorities that have a direct legitimate interest in the disclosure.
- b. Journalists should be informed by the competent authorities of their right not to disclose information identifying a source as well as of the limits of this right before a disclosure is requested.
- c. Sanctions against journalists for not disclosing information identifying a source should only be imposed by judicial authorities during court proceedings which allow for a hearing of the journalists concerned in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention.
- d. Journalists should have the right to have the imposition of a sanction for not disclosing their information identifying a source reviewed by another judicial

	authority. e. Where journalists respond to a request or order to disclose information identifying a source, the competent authorities should consider applying measures to limit the extent of a disclosure, for example by excluding the public from the disclosure with due respect to Article 6 of the Convention, where relevant, and by themselves respecting the confidentiality of such a disclosure. Principle 6 Interception of communication, surveillance and judicial search and seizure a. The following measures should not be applied if their purpose is to circumvent the right of journalists, under the terms of these principles, not to disclose information identifying a source: <ul style="list-style-type: none">i. interception orders or actions concerning communication or correspondence of journalists or their employers,ii. surveillance orders or actions concerning journalists, their contacts or their employers, oriii. search or seizure orders or actions concerning the private or business premises, belongings or correspondence of journalists or their employers or personal data related to their professional work. b. Where information identifying a source has been properly obtained by police or judicial authorities by any of the above actions, although this might not have been the purpose of these actions, measures should be taken to prevent the subsequent use of this information as evidence before courts, unless the disclosure would be justified under Principle 3.
--	--

Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation no. R (2000) 7	Definitions a. Journalists 11. It is generally understood that the right to freedom of expression implies free access to the journalistic profession, i.e. the absence of the requirement of an official admission by state organs or administrations [...]. Principle 1 21. The right of journalists not to disclose their source is part of their right to freedom of expression under Article 10 of the Convention. Article 10 of the Convention, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights, is binding on all Contracting States. Due to the importance of the protection of the confidentiality of journalists' sources for the media in a democratic society, national legislation should provide an accessible, precise and foreseeable protection. It is in the interest of journalists, journalists' sources and public authorities alike to have precise and clear legislative norms in this field. These norms should be guided by Article 10, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights and this Recommendation. A stronger protection of the confidentiality of journalists' sources of information under domestic law shall not be excluded by this Recommendation. As far as a right of non-disclosure exists, journalists may lawfully refuse to disclose information identifying a source without being exposed to any civil or criminal liability or any penalty for their refusal. Principle 3 a. legitimate aim under Article 10 of the Convention 24. The European Court of Human Rights has repeatedly underlined the requirement under Article 10, paragraph 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights, that limitations to Article 10 must be "prescribed by law". The Court has held that "relevant national law must be
--	---

	formulated with a sufficient precision to enable the persons concerned - if need be with appropriate legal advice - to foresee, to a degree that is reasonable in the circumstances, the consequences which a given action may entail", and be formulated with sufficient clarity to provide the individual "adequate protection against arbitrary interference" by public authorities through an unlimited discretion (see, for instance, Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, para. 31). [...] 26. Thirdly, when evaluating whether a particular legitimate interest under Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention justifies the restriction of the right to freedom of expression, the European Court of Human Rights applies a balancing test which determines whether a restriction is "necessary in a democratic society" (see, Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 2), 26 November 1991, para. 50). In order not to depart from Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention, the MM-S-HR decided not to list a set of specific legitimate interests which might justify mandatory source disclosure. Instead, the text of the Recommendation includes a series of checks and criteria which must be taken into account when assessing the legitimate interest. 27. The Recommendation reaffirms the balancing test used by the European Court of Human Rights when determining whether a restriction is "necessary in a democratic society" under Article 10, paragraph 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights (see, Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 2), 26 November 1991, para. 50). The right of journalists not to disclose their source and the public's interest in being informed by the media are to be considered as essential in any democratic society. The European Court of Human Rights has held that the media do not only have the task of imparting information and ideas on matters of public interest, but the public has also a right to receive them (see, Fressoz and Roire v. France, 21 January 1999, para. 51). The chilling effect of the disclosure of a source by a journalist will impede this role of the media. Hence, national courts and authorities shall pay particular regard to the importance of the right of journalists not to
--	---

	disclose their sources.[...] b. necessity of the disclosure 29. As referred to in paragraph a of this Principle, competent national authorities are held to pursue an adequate balancing of a legitimate interest in the disclosure with the right of journalists to maintain the confidentiality of their sources and the public interest in the non-disclosure. Paragraph c sets out the requirements for determining the necessity of the disclosure. 30. The need for any restriction on freedom of expression must be convincingly established, as the European Court of Human Rights has regularly held (see, Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 2), 26 November 1991, para. 50). Paragraph b therefore requires that it can be convincingly established that a legitimate interest in the disclosure exists which clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure. Convincingly in this respect shall refer to the requirement of evaluating the facts of a given case as well as the use of discretion established in a way which is open to later verification. It is recommended that the competent authorities specify the reasons why a serious interest outweighs the interest in the non-disclosure. This open balancing ensures not only public scrutiny, but enables also the possible later review of the imposition of a sanction on journalists for not disclosing their source under Principle 5, paragraph d of the Recommendation. Principle 8 i. interception of communication 55. In many cases, journalists have to correspond with their sources in writing or by using the telephone, telefax or E-mail or other means of telecommunications. Interception of such communication of journalists or their employers might disclose the identity of a source. The confidentiality of journalist's communications and
--	--

	correspondence is protected by Article 8 as well as Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Judicial authorities ordering an interception of the communication or correspondence of journalists should limit their interception order so as to maintain the confidentiality of the journalist's source. The actual interception action should also respect the confidentiality. In practice, this might require that any interception be limited to communications or correspondence with other persons than journalistic sources, or special procedures be applied under which information identifying a source be separated from intercepted communications and not be registered.
Recommendation No. R (95) 13 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States concerning problems of criminal procedural law connected with information technology	Chapter V Use of encryption Measures should be considered to minimise the negative effects of the use of cryptography on the investigation of criminal offences, without affecting its legitimate use more than is strictly necessary.
Council of Europe Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism 196 of 2005	Article 15 Duty to investigate 1. Upon receiving information that a person who has committed or who is alleged to have committed an offence set forth in this Convention may be present in its territory, the Party concerned shall take such measures as may be necessary under its domestic law to investigate the

	facts contained in the information.[...]
Recommendation No. R (96) 4 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on The Protection of Journalists in Situations of Conflict and Tension	Principle 5 Confidentiality of sources Having regard to the importance of the confidentiality of sources used by journalists in situations of conflict and tension, member states shall ensure that this confidentiality is respected. Principle 7 [...] 3. Member states should refrain from taking any restrictive measures against journalists such as withdrawal of accreditation or expulsion on account of the exercise of their professional activities or the content of reports and information carried by their media.
Regulation (EC) no 1334/2000 setting up a community regime for the control of exports of dual use items and technology
Resolution No. 2 on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights by the 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy (Prague, 1994)	Principle 3 The following enables journalism to contribute to the maintenance and development of genuine democracy: a) unrestricted access to the journalistic profession; [...].
Recommendation no. R (87) 15 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States regulating the use of personal data in the police sector

14.1. Table of English Case-Law

Case name	Judicial Body	Main content
De Haes e Gijssels c. Belgium	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Judgment against journalists for defamation of magistrats : violation .
Fressoz and Roire v. France	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Conviction for handling unlawfully obtained photocopies: violation .
Goodwin c. United Kingdom	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Disclosure order granted to private company requiring a journalist to disclose the identity of his source and fine imposed upon him for having refused to do so: violation .
Görmuş and Others v. Turkey	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Search and seizure operation conducted to identify journalistic source: violation .
Martin c. France	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Reasons for search of Midi Libre premises were relevant but insufficient: violation .

Riolo c. Italy	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression The applicant's conviction amounted to disproportionate interference with his right to freedom of expression and could not be said to have been "necessary in a democratic society": violation.
Roemen e Schmit c. Luxembourg	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Major searches and seizures with a view to identifying journalists' sources: violation.
Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 2)	European Court of Human Rights	Art. 10, Freedom of Expression Interlocutory injunctions restraining a newspaper from publishing, pending trial of actions in which Attorney General sought permanent injunctions, details of unauthorised memoirs alleging unlawful conduct by Security Service and information obtained from their author, a former employee of the Service – whether these restrictions justified in period from July 1987 (when – after book had been published in United States and become available in United Kingdom – they had been maintained by courts) to October 1988 (conclusion of the trial): violation.

14.2. Table of Relevant Italian Legislation

Charter of Journalists of 1993
Code of Criminal Procedure	Article 189 Evidence not regulated by law 1. If evidence not regulated by law is requested, the judge may introduce it if it is deemed suitable to determine the facts and does not compromise the moral freedom of the person. After hearing the parties on the methods for gathering evidence, the judge shall order the admission of evidence. Article 191 Unlawfully gathered evidence 1. Evidence gathered in violation of the prohibitions set by law shall not be used. 2. The exclusion of evidence may be declared also ex officio at any stage and instance of the proceedings. Article 200 Professional secret The following persons shall not be obliged to testify what they know on account of their function, service or profession, without prejudice to the cases in which they must report these facts to the judicial authority: a) ministers of the faiths whose charters do not contrast with the Italian legal system; b) attorneys, authorized private investigators, technical consultant and notaries; c) doctors and surgeons, pharmacists, obstetricians and any other person practicing a health profession; d) persons practicing different functions or professions to whom the law recognizes the right to abstain from testifying on account of their professional secret. 2. If the judge is doubtful about the validity of the statement made by these persons in an attempt to be exempted from testifying, he shall order the necessary ascertainment. If the statement proves to be groundless, he shall order that the witness testify. 3. The provisions referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 shall apply to professional journalists registered in their professional association, exclusively to the names of the person from whom they obtained confidential information while practicing the profession. If the information is essential to prove that the offence being prosecuted has been committed and its truthfulness may be ascertained only by identifying the source of information the judge shall order to the journalists to disclose its source. Article 201 Public service secret 1. Public officials and employees, as well as persons in charge of a public service must abstain from testifying on the facts known on account of their function which must remain secret, with the exception of the cases in which they must report these facts to the judicial authority. 2. The provisions of Article 200, paragraphs 2 and 3 shall apply. Article 204

--	---

	Exclusion of the application of professional secrecy 1. Facts, information or documentary evidence concerning offences aimed at the subversion of the constitutional system as well as the crimes provided for in articles 285, 416-bis, 416-ter and 422 of the Criminal Code shall not be covered by the secret provided for in Articles 201, 202, and 203. If the secret is declared, the judge shall define the nature of the offence. The preliminary investigation judge shall decide on the aforementioned issue upon request of a party prior to the criminal prosecution. [...] Article 240 Anonymous documentary evidence and documents and records of illegal interceptions 1. Documentary evidence containing anonymous statements shall neither be gathered nor used in any way whatsoever, unless they constitute the corpus delicti or originate in any way from the accused person. [...] 6. The destruction shall be recorded in the dedicated minutes, which shall contain information on the illegal interception, holding or gathering of the documentary evidence, media and documents referred to in paragraph 2, as well as to the procedures or tools used and the persons concerned, without any reference whatsoever to the content of such evidence, media and documents. Article 254 Seizure of correspondence 1. In offices providing postal, telegraphic, electronic or telecommunication services, the seizure of letters, envelopes, parcels, valuables, telegrams, as well as other items of correspondence, even if forwarded electronically, is permitted if the judicial authority has reasonable grounds to believe that they were sent by or addressed to the accused, also under a different name or by means of a different person, or may
--	--

	somehow be related to the offence. 2. If the seizure is performed by a criminal police official, he must hand the seized correspondence to the judicial authority, without opening or altering them and without otherwise gaining cognizance of their content. 3. Letters and other seized documents which cannot be object of a seizure shall be immediately returned to the person entitled to have them and shall not be used. Article 256 Duty of exhibition of evidences and secrecy 1. The persons referred to in Articles 200 and 201 must immediately hand to the judicial authority the documents and documentary evidences, even the original ones if ordered to do so, as well as data, information and software, also by copying them on a suitable medium, and anything else they possess by virtue of their function, job, service, profession or art, except if they declare in writing that they are covered by either State, public service or professional secrecy. 2. If the declaration involves a public service or professional secret, the judicial authority shall proceed with the necessary ascertainments if there are reasonable grounds to doubt about the legitimacy of the declaration and it believes it cannot proceed without gathering the documents and documentary evidence or the objects referred to in paragraph 1. If the declaration results groundless, the judge shall order the seizure. [...] Article 266 Limits on admissibility of interceptions 1. Telephone conversation or communications and other forms of telecommunications may be intercepted in proceedings related to the following offences: a) international crimes punishable with the penalty of either life sentence or imprisonment for a maximum term exceeding five years, established according to Article 4;
--	--

b) crimes against the public administration punishable with the penalty of imprisonment for a maximum term exceeding five years, established according to Article 4;

c) crimes concerning narcotic or psychotropic substances;

d) crimes concerning weapons or explosive substances;

e) smuggling crimes;

f) offences of insult, threat, usury, illegal financial activity, inside dealing, market manipulation, harassment or disturbance of persons by telephone;

f-bis) crimes referred to in Article 600-ter, paragraph 3, of the Criminal Code, even if related to the pornographic material referred to in Article 600-quarter of the same Code;

f-ter) crimes referred to in Articles 444, 473, 474, 515, 516 and 517-quater of the Criminal Code; f-quater) the crime provided for in Article 612-bis of the Criminal Code.

2. In the aforementioned cases, the interception of face-to-face conversations is allowed. However, if communications to be intercepted occur in the places referred to in article 614 of the Criminal Code, they may be intercepted exclusively if there are justified reasons to believe that a criminal activity is occurring there.

Article 267

Preconditions and forms for the measures to authorize interceptions

1. The Public Prosecutor shall require the preliminary investigation judge to issue an authorization for ordering the activities referred to in Article 266. The authorization shall be given by reasoned decree if there is serious suspicion that an offence has been committed and the interception is absolutely necessary to continue the investigation. [...]

2. In cases of urgency, if there are justified reasons to believe that any delay can seriously hamper the investigation, the Public Prosecutor shall order the interception by reasoned decree, which shall be forwarded immediately and, in any case, within twenty-four hours, to the judge referred to in para 1. Within forty-eight hours of the delivery of the decision, the judge shall decide on its validation by reasoned decree. If the decree of the Public Prosecutor is not validated within such time limit, the interception shall not be continued and its results shall not be used. [...]

Article 271

Prohibition of the use of interceptions

1. The results of interceptions shall not be used if the latter have been performed in cases other than those provided for by law or if the provisions of Article 267 and 268, paragraphs 1 and 3, have not been complied with.

2. Interceptions related to conversations or communications of the persons referred to in Article 200, paragraph 1, shall not be used, if they relate to facts known on account of their function, service or profession, unless the said persons have testified on these same facts or have disclosed them in some other way. [...]

Article 351

Other types of investigative questioning

1. The criminal police shall gather summary information from persons who may be able to provide information useful for the investigative purpose. The provisions of Article 362, para 1, second and third period shall apply. [...]

Article 361

	Identification of persons and things during preliminary investigations 1. The Public Prosecutor shall require the informal identification of persons, objects or anything else which may be sensorially perceived only if necessary to continue investigations. [...] Article 362 Information gathering during preliminary investigations 1. The Public Prosecutor shall gather summary information from persons who may be able to provide information useful for the investigation. Information about the question asked and the answers given shall not be asked to persons already heard by the lawyer or by his substitute. The provisions of Articles 197, 197-bis, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202 and 203 shall apply. [...]
Constitution of the Italian Republic	Article 2 1. The Republic recognises and guarantees the inviolable rights of the person, both as an individual and in the social groups where human personality is expressed. 2. The Republic expects that the fundamental duties of political, economic and social solidarity be fulfilled. Article 3 1. All citizens have equal social dignity and are equal before the law, without distinction of sex, race, language, religion, political opinion, personal and social conditions. 2. It is the duty of the Republic to remove those obstacles of economic or social nature which constrain the freedom and equality of citizens, thereby preventing the full development of the human person and the effective participation of all workers in the political, economic and social organisation of the country.

Article 13

1. Personal liberty is inviolable.
2. No one may be detained, inspected, or searched nor otherwise subjected to any restriction of personal liberty except by order of the Judiciary stating a reason and only in such cases and in such manner as provided by the law.
3. In exceptional circumstances and under such conditions of necessity and urgency as shall conclusively be defined by the law, the police may take provisional measures that shall be referred within 48 hours to the Judiciary for validation and which, in default of such validation in the following 48 hours, shall be revoked and considered null and void.
4. Any act of physical and moral violence against a person subjected to restriction of personal liberty shall be punished.
5. The law shall establish the maximum duration of preventive detention.

Article 14

1. The home is inviolable.
2. Personal domicile shall be inviolable.
3. Home inspections, searches, or seizures shall not be admissible save in the cases and manners complying with measures to safeguard personal liberty.
4. Controls and inspections for reason of public health and safety, or for economic and fiscal purposes, shall be regulated by appropriate laws.

Article 15

1. Freedom and confidentiality of correspondence and of every

	other form of communication is inviolable. 2. Limitations may only be imposed by judicial decision stating the reasons and in accordance with the guarantees provided by the law. Article 18 1. Citizens have the right to form associations freely and without authorization for those ends that are not forbidden by criminal law. 2. Secret associations and associations that, even indirectly, pursue political aims by means of organisations having a military character shall be forbidden. Article 21 1. Anyone has the right to freely express their thoughts in speech, writing, or any other form of communication. 2. The press may not be subjected to any authorisation or censorship. 3. Seizure may be permitted only by judicial order stating the reason and only for offences expressly determined by the law on the press or in case of violation of the obligation to identify the persons responsible for such offences. 4. In such cases, when there is absolute urgency and timely intervention of the Judiciary is not possible, a periodical may be confiscated by the criminal police, which shall immediately and in no case later than 24 hours refer the matter to the Judiciary for validation. In default of such validation in the following 24 hours, the measure shall be revoked and considered null and void. 5. The law may introduce general provisions for the disclosure of financial sources of periodical publications. 6. Publications, performances, and other exhibits offensive to
--	--

	public morality shall be prohibited. Preventive and repressive measure against such violations shall be established by law. Article 22 No-one may be deprived of his legal capacity, citizenship, or name for political reasons.
Criminal Code	Article 57 Offences committed by means of periodical press 1. Without prejudice for the responsibility of the author of the publication and beside the cases of collusion, the director or the deputy director, who fails to adequately control the content of the periodical he directs in order to prevent that a crime is committed through its publication, is liable for recklessly, if a crime is committed, and is punished with the penalty established for the offence, reduced up to one third. Article 270-bis Associations for purposes of terrorism, including international terrorism, or subversion of democracy 1. Anyone promoting, establishing, organizing, directing or financing associations aimed at committing acts of violence with the purpose of terrorism or subversion of democratic order shall be punished with imprisonment from seven to fifteen years. 2. Anyone who participates in such associations shall be punished with imprisonment from five to ten years. 3. For the purposes of criminal law, the terrorism aim arises also when the acts of violence are directed against a foreign State, an institution or an international organization. 4. Towards the convicted person the confiscation of the assets that were used or aimed at committing the offense and of the assets being the price, product, profit, or which constitute the use of the crime, shall always be ordered.

Article 270-sexies

Activities with terrorism aims

1. Any activity that, by its nature or context, may seriously damage a country or an international organization and is committed for the purpose of intimidating a population or compelling a Government or an organization to perform or abstain from performing any act, or destabilizing or destroying the fundamental political, constitutional, economic and social structures of a country or of an international organization is considered as having a terrorist purpose, as well as any other conduct defined as terrorism or with terrorism purposes by conventions or other international laws binding for Italy.

Article 326

Disclosure and use of secrets of office

1. The public officer or anyone in charge of a public service who discloses confidential information or allows the dissemination of knowledge on them, violating the duties related to its functions or service, or abusing of its position, shall be punished with the imprisonment from six months up to three years.[...]

Article 348

Abusive practice of a profession

1. Whoever unlawfully exercises a profession, for which a special authorization of the State is required, shall be punished with imprisonment up to six months or with a fine from EUR 103 to EUR 516.

Article 361

1. A public officer, who fails or delays to report to the judicial authorities, or to another authority, a complaint he has the obligation to report, regarding a crime for which he gained knowledge while exercising or because of its functions, shall be punished with a fine from 30 Euros up to 516 Euros.

2. If the offender is an officer or a judicial police officer, who in any event was informed of an offense which he must report, the punishment is the imprisonment up to one year.[...]

Article 417

Safety measures

1. In cases of conviction for the crimes provided by the two previous articles, a safety measure shall always be ordered.

Article 498

1. Whoever, apart from cases envisaged by Article 497-ter illegally holds public uniform or distinctive signs of an office or public employment, or a political body, administrative or judicial, or a profession for which a special authorization of the State is required, or improperly wears clerical garb in public, shall be punished with fine from 150 to 929 Euros.

2. The sanctions are applied to anyone who arrogates dignity or academic degrees, titles, decorations or other public honorary insignia, ie qualities inherent to any of the offices, jobs or professions, indicated in the earlier provision.

3. For violations referred to in this Article shall apply the sanction of the publication of the measure ensures that the violations in the manner established by art. 36 and do not qualify for reduced payment provisions of art. 16 of the Law 24 November 1981 no. 689.

Article 614

Breaking and entering

1. Whoever enters in the home of others, or in another private building, or in the areas part of the above, against the express or implied will of those who have the right to prevent it, or who has entered clandestinely or with deception, shall be punished with imprisonment from six months to three years.

2.[...]

Article 617

Illicit acknowledgement, interruption and obstruction of communication and telephone conversations

1. Whoever has fraudulently knowledge of a communication or conversation, by means of telephone or telegraph, among other people or in any case not directed to him, or that interrupts or prevents it, is punished with imprisonment from six months to four years.

2. Unless the fact constitutes a more serious offense, the same penalty is applied to whoever reveals, through any means of public information, in whole or in part, the content of the communications or conversations considered in the first part of this article. [...]

Article 617-bis

Installation of devices to intercept or prevent telephone and telegraphic communications or conversations

1. Whoever installs devices, tools, part of devices or tools in order to intercept or prevent telephone or telegraphic communications or conversations among other people, other than in those cases permitted by the law, is punished with the imprisonment from one to four years. [...]

Article 617-ter

Falsifying, concealing or deleting the content of telephone and telegraphic communications or conversations

1. Whoever falsely forms the text of a telephone or telegraphic communication or conversation, entirely or partially, otherwise conceals or delete, entirely or partially, the content of a real telephone or telegraphic communication or conversation, also if occasionally intercepted, in order to gain an advantage for himself or others, if using or allowing others to use these, is punished with imprisonment from one to four years. [...]

Article 617-quater

Illicit interception, prevention or interruption of computer or electronic communications

1. Whoever fraudulently intercepts communications concerning a computer or an electronic communication system or among several systems, or prevents or interrupts them, is punished with imprisonment from six months to four years.

2. Unless the fact constitutes a more severe offence, the same punishment shall apply to whoever entirely or partially disclose, by the mean of whatsoever mass communication tool, the content of the communications referred to in the first paragraph. [...]

Article 617-quinquies

Installation of devices to intercept, prevent or interrupt computer or electronic communications

1. Whoever installs devices to intercept, prevent or interrupt communications concerning a computer or an electronic communication system or among several systems, other than in those cases permitted by the law, is punished with the imprisonment from one to four years. [...]

Article 622

Disclosure of professional secret

1. Whoever having news of a secret, by reason of their status or office, or profession, or art, reveal it without a justified reason, or uses it in order to gain an advantage for himself or others, shall be punished, if his conduct causes a damage, with

	imprisonment up to one year or a fine ranging from EUR 30 to EUR 516. [...] Article 648 Stolen goods 1. Except for the cases of concurring in crime, whoever purchases, receives, conceals money on things originating from any offence whatsoever, or in all cases meddles to have them purchased, received or concealed, in order to obtain an advantage for himself or others, shall be punished with imprisonment from two to eight years and a fine from 516 to 10.329 euros [...].
Law no. 190 of 2012 (Regulations to prevent and suppress corruption and illegality in the public administration)	Article 1 [...]51. After Article 54 of the Legislative Decree 165 of 2001 shall be introduced the following Article “Article 54-bis 1. Except for the cases of responsibility of slander or libel, or for the same responsibilities expressed under the Article 2043 of the Civil Code, the public servant who reports to the judicial authorities or to the Court of Auditors or rather refers to the supervisor an illegal conduct on which he has knowledge by reason of his function, shall not be sanctioned, dismissed or subjected to a discriminatory measure, whether direct or indirect, having effect on working conditions for reasons related directly or indirectly to the complaint”.[...]
Law no. 300 of 1970 (Provisions on the protection of freedom and dignity of workers, and freedom of union association and union activity on the workplace) (also known as Charter of the	Article 18 Protection of the employee in the case of unlawful dismissal 1. The judge, with the judgment establishing the invalidity of the dismissal as provided for in the laws [...], shall order to the employer, whether or not an entrepreneur, the reintegration

Workers)	into work of the employee, irrespectively of the reasons assumed for the dismissal and whatever is the number of his employees. [...]
Law no. 48, March 18 2008 Ratification and implementation of the Council of Europe's Convention on computer crime, executed in Budapest on November 23, 2001, and provisions updating Italian laws
Law no. 675 of 1996 (Protection of personal data of persons and other entities)	Article 13 Rights of the data subject [...] 5. 1. The provision on the professional secrecy of those exercising the journalist profession shall apply, limited to the source of information¹⁸⁷.
Law no. 69 of 1963 (Organisation of the Journalistic Profession)	Article 1 Association of Journalists <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. It is founded the Association of Journalists. 2. The Association is composed by professional journalists and publicists, registered in the respective lists of the registries. 3. Professional journalists exercises exclusively and continuously the profession of journalist . 4. Publicists practice the journalistic activity not occasionally and upon payment, even though they exercise other professions or jobs'

¹⁸⁷ Article repealed by Article 183 Legislative Decree no. 196 of 2003, Data Protection Code

5. [...]

Article 2

Rights and duties of journalists

1. It is an irrepressible right of journalists the freedom of information and criticism, which are limited by the observance of the rules on the protection of others' personality, and it is a binding duty to respect the material truthfulness of the facts, in compliance with the duties imposed by loyalty and good faith.

2. Inaccurate news shall be amended, and possible mistakes shall be remedied.

3. Journalists and editors are obliged to respect the professional secret on the source of information, when this is required by the confidential character of it, and to promote the cooperation among colleagues, the cooperation among journalists and editors, and the trust relationship among press and readers.

Article 28

Special Lists

1. Annexed to the registries of journalists there are the lists of foreign journalists and the lists of the responsible managers of periodical or technical, professional or scientific magazines, with the exclusion of magazines related to sports or movies.
[...]

Article 45

Exercise of the profession

No one shall use the title of nor practice the profession of journalist, when not enrolled in the professional registry. The violation of this provision is punished with the penalties provided for in Articles 348 and 498 of the Criminal Code, except for the fact which constitutes a more severe offence.

Article 48

Disciplinary procedure

1. Anyone registered on the list or on the registry, guilty of facts inconsistent with the decorum and the professional dignity, or guilty of facts compromising its reputation or the dignity of the Association, shall be subject to the disciplinary procedure.
2. The procedure starts ex officio by the regional or the inter-regional Council or also on request of the general prosecutor competent according to Art. 44.

Article 51

Disciplinary sanctions

1. The disciplinary sanctions are inflicted by reasoned decision of the Council, following the hearing of the journalist under accusation.
2. The disciplinary sanctions are the following:
 - a) warning;
 - b) censorship;
 - c) the suspension from the exercise of the profession for a period between two months and one year;
 - d) the expulsion from the association.

Legislative Decree no. 196 of 2003 (Data Protection Code)	Article 1 Right to data protection 1. Anyone has the right to the protection of its personal data. Article 4 Definitions 1. For the purpose of this Code: a)[...] b) personal data shall mean any information concerning a natural person, legal person, institution or association, identified or identifiable, even indirectly, by reference to any other information including a personal identification number; c)[...]. Article 7 Right to Access to Personal Data and Other Rights [...] 2. A data subject shall have the right to be informed a) of the source of the personal data; b) of the purposes and methods of the processing; [...] Article 22 Principles Applying to the Processing of Sensitive Data as well as to Judicial Data [...]6. Sensitive or judicial data that are contained in lists, registries or data banks kept with electronic means shall be processed by using encryption techniques, identification codes or any other system such as to make the data temporarily unintelligible also to the entities authorised to access them and allow identification of the data subject only in case of necessity, by having regard to amount and nature of the processed data. [...]
--	--

Article 34

Processing by Electronic Means

1. Processing personal data by electronic means shall only be allowed if the minimum security measures referred to below are adopted in accordance with the arrangements laid down in the technical specifications as per Annex B:

a) [...]

h) implementation of encryption techniques or identification codes for specific processing operations performed by health care bodies, in respect of data disclosing health and sex life. [...]

Article 132

Traffic data retention for other purposes

1. Without prejudice to Section 123(2), telephone traffic data shall be retained by the provider for twenty-four months as from the date of the communication with a view to detecting and suppressing criminal offences, whereas electronic communications traffic data, except for the contents of communications, shall be retained by the provider for twelve months as from the date of the communication with a view to the same purposes. [...]

Article 137

Provisions applicable to journalism and other forms of expression

1. The processing operations referred to in Section 136 shall not be subject to the provisions laid down in this Code

	concerning any of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) the authorisation granted by the Authority pursuant to Section 26;b) the safeguards referred to in Section 27 in connection with judicial data;c) cross-border data flows as per Title VII of Part I. 2. The data processing operations referred to in paragraph 1 may be performed also in the absence of the data subject's consent as per Sections 23 and 26. 3. If the data are communicated or disseminated for the purposes referred to in Section 136, the limitations imposed on freedom of the press to protect the rights as per Section 2, in particular concerning materiality of the information with regard to facts of public interest, shall be left unprejudiced. It shall be allowed to process the data concerning circumstances or events that have been made known either directly by the data subject or on account of the latter's public conduct. Article 138 Professional secrecy 1. The provisions concerning professional secrecy in the journalistic profession shall be left unprejudiced as related to the source of the information if a data subject requests to be informed of the source of the personal data in accordance with Section 7(2), letter a).
--	--

Legislative Decree no. 70 of 2003 (Implementation of the Directive 2000/31/CE on the juridical profiles of information companies services, particularly e-commerce in the Italian market)	Article 17 Lack of the general obligation to surveillance 1. The provider, by providing the services referred to in Articles 14, 15 and 16, shall not be subjected to a general duty of surveillance on the information which are processed or stored, nor to a general duty to proactively investigate on facts or circumstances which may denote the presence of an unlawful activity. [...]
--	---

14.3. Table of Relevant Italian Case-Law

Case number	Judicial Body	Main content
1/1981	Constitutional Court	Although the Constitutional relevance, freedom of the press and freedom of information cannot be considered as generally dominant in respect of the administration of justice. The clash of the two values should be addressed by the legislator, with a balancing of the opposite interests.
144/1997	Supreme Court of Cassation, II Criminal Chamber	The lack of a formal opposition of the professional secrecy towards the request of the exhibition of documents as set by Art. 256 CCP allows the judicial authority to proceed to the seizure of the documentation required following the general rules provided by Art. 253 CCP. Article 256 CCP exclusively operates when a formal opposition of professional secrecy is filed and the judicial authority has reasonable doubts of its legitimacy.

15 th January 2003	Court of first instance of Naples	The obligations of loyalty and confidentiality imposed on professionals by Art. 622 CCP, which penalizes the disclosure of professional secrets in order to protect the personal freedom and security of the source, cease to apply exclusively when the information becomes renown, thus excluding the need to protect the secret.
16130/2002	Supreme Court of Cassation, V Criminal Chamber	The remote surveillance of the movements of an individual on the territory, performed by satellite navigation system devices, should not be considered as an interception of communication (since, materially, it is a mean of tracking), and do not require the authorization imposed by Article 266 CCP.
1827/1995	Supreme Court of Cassation, Labor Section	'Journalistic activity' is meant as an intellectual performance in order to gather, comment and elaborate news aimed to be the object of an interpersonal communication through the means of mass communication. Therefore, the journalist is a mediator between the fact and the dissemination of it, and its function is to acquire knowledge of the fact, evaluating its relevance in regard to the addressees and tailoring the message with a subjective and inventive contribution. [...] The difference between the journalistic activity and other professions is the promptness of information directed to stimulate citizens to gain knowledge and be aware of important issues.
20228/2012	Supreme Court of Cassation,	The control and the use of mail correspondence as evidentiary material do not fall under the rules provided for interception of conversations and communications. It is evaluated as a mean of seizure of correspondence regulated by Articles 254 and 353 CCP. [...]

21 st February 1994	District Judge of Rome	The exclusion of the right of the journalists to abstain from testifying in criminal proceedings could narrow the investigation activities, thus affecting the freedom of the press.
22397/2004	Supreme Court of Cassation, VI Criminal Chamber	The protection of the professional secrecy accorded to journalists, provided by Art 200 paragraph 3 CCP, also applies to all indications which may lead to the identification of the source.
24617/2015	Supreme Court of Cassation, Criminal Chamber	The judicial measure which orders the search and seizure of documents to identify the source of a journalist is not legitimate when the particular circumstance prevailing on the right of journalists to the confidentiality of sources is not provided by the judge.
25755/2007	Supreme Court of Cassation, VI Criminal Chamber	The seizure of the personal computer data of a journalist, who filed the opposition of professional secrecy, is only allowed when the secret is deemed ill-founded and there is the need to acquire information for the purpose of the investigation. The investigation should not compromise the right of the journalists to privacy and confidentiality of their sources.
31735/2014	Supreme Court of Cassation, IV Criminal Chamber	The respect of the principle of proportionality between the professional secrecy, accorded to journalists in order to protect the freedom of information, and the need to ascertain the facts under investigation requires a specific motivation for the order of exhibition ex Article 256 CCP and the subsequent seizure, with particular regard to the pinpointing of the items to be secured and the absolute need of the apprehension of the item to ascertain the crime.

36747/2003	Supreme Court of Cassation, Joined Criminal Chamber	Interception, as regulated by Article 266 CCP, is a mean of investigation which involves an occult and simultaneous apprehension of the content of a conversation, such as a communication between two individuals, with means that are objectively suitable for the purpose and able to neutralize any caution which has been possibly taken in order to protect the confidentiality of the dialogue
40380/2007	Supreme Court of Cassation, VI Criminal Chamber	The seizure order adopted against a journalist should strictly respect the principle of proportionality between the ablativo order and the need to ascertain the facts under investigation, avoiding as much as possible indiscriminate and invasive interventions within the journalists professional activity.
48587/2011	Supreme Court of Cassation, II Criminal Chamber	Article 200, paragraph 3, CCP sets the legal boundaries of interference by the judicial authority. Accordingly, the judge can order the disclosure of the journalistic sources exclusively when the disclosure is necessary to prove the crime against which the authority is proceeding, referring to specific facts under investigation, and when the information cannot be otherwise ascertained.

6/2000	Supreme Court of Cassation, Joined Criminal Chamber	A reasoned order of the judicial authority is sufficient to acquire the external data identifying the telephone communications stored in the electronic archives of the provider. It is not required, because of the different level of interference with the privacy which follows, to fulfill the procedural rules on interception of communications or conversations as set out in Article 266.
6672/1998	Supreme Court of Cassation	The provisions of the European Convention of Human Rights, as well as those of the First Additional Protocol, which were introduced in the Italian legal system by the Law no. 48 of 1955, do not have a purely political effectiveness. Indeed, they impose to States party actual juridical obligations immediately binding, and, once introduced within the National system, they are sources of obligation for all subjects.
978/1996	Supreme Court of Cassation, I Civil Chamber	The right to report news can prevail on the right to personal identity when the following requirements are met: a) the information is of public interest; b) the facts are true; c) the information is presented and evaluated objectively with the aim to inform, not to disparage.
98/1968	Constitutional Court	Constitutional illegitimacy of Article 46, para 1, Law 63 of 1963 for the violation of Article 21 of the Constitution. The article excluded the possibility to run the editorial staff of a newspaper, magazine or press agency for publicists, in an unjustified breach of the freedom granted by Article 21 of the Constitution.

ELSA LATVIA

Contributors

National Coordinator

Jūlija Terjuhana

National Academic Coordinator

Anrijs Šimkus

National Researchers

Madara Meļņika

Alīna Kalviša

Līva Rudzīte

Oļegs Sedjamins

Anrijs Šimkus

National Linguistic Editors

Mārtiņš Birģelis

Krišjānis Bušs

National Academic Supervisor

Asoc.prof. Artūrs Kučs

1. Introduction

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

The Council of Europe, in various recommendations and resolutions,¹ the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter – ECHR) in its case-law², as well as legal scholars³ acknowledge that the right to source protection is an inherent part of freedom of expression that allows journalists to effectively gather and disseminate news on matters of public interest. The Council of Europe recommendation Nr. R(2000)7, clearly states that member states should provide for explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source.⁴ Moreover, the UN Special Rapporteur on issues of freedom of expression has urged States to adopt legislative acts that guarantees the right to source protection of journalists.⁵

Right to Source Protection and its Scope under Latvian Law

Although the Constitution of Latvia guarantees everyone the right to freedom of expression, it does not explicitly recognize the right to source protection. However, this privilege is explicitly provided in the Law on the Press and Other Mass Media (hereinafter – Press Law).⁶ Article 22 of the Press Law provides that “A mass medium may choose to not indicate the source of information. If the person who has provided the information requests that his or her name is not to be indicated in a mass medium, this request shall be binding upon the editorial board. For the

¹ Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information"; Council of Europe, "Recommendation CM/rec (2011) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on a new notion of media"; CoE Parliamentary Assembly draft resolution, 1 December 2010, doc.12443, para.2; CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation 1950 (2011) on the protection of journalists' sources, para.2

² Goodwin v. the United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996); Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013); Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010)

³ Pieter van Dijk, Fried van Hoof, Arjen van Rijn, Leo Zwaak (eds.), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights (4th edn, Intersentia 2006), p.811; David Banisar, Silencing Sources: An International Survey of Protections and Threats to Journalists' Sources (Privacy International 2006-2007), p.8

⁴ Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", appendix, Principle 1

⁵ Promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression Report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. AbidHussain, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/26, E/CN.4/1998/40, 28 January 1998

⁶ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991

purpose of protecting vital interests of other persons or the public, only a court, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, may request to produce the source of information.”⁷

The wording of this Article might lead one to presume that the Press Law does not guarantee the right to source protection to a journalist, but only to a mass medium. According to Article 2 of the Press Law, mass media “are newspapers, magazines, newsletters and other periodicals (published not less frequently than once every three months, with a one-time print run exceeding 100 copies), as well as television and radio broadcasts, newsreels, information agency announcements, audio-visual recordings, and programmes intended for public dissemination”. Whereas a journalist, according to Article 23 of the Press Law, is “a person who gathers, compiles, edits or in some other way prepares materials for a mass medium and who has entered into an employment contract or performs such work upon the instruction of a mass medium, or is a person who is a member of the Journalists’ Union”.⁸

However, Paragraph 1 of Article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law indicates a broader understanding of the right to source protection, stating that “a court may assign a mass-media journalist or editor to indicate the source of published information.”⁹ Case-law of the domestic courts also shows that journalists themselves may directly rely on Article 22 of the Press Law and claim the right to source protection. For example, in 2006 Mr. Uldis Dreiblats, a journalist for the newspaper “Neatkarīgā Rīta Avīze”, published transcripts of a certain telephone conversation, which had been tapped by the Security Police. The Security Police went before an investigative judge to request that Mr. Dreiblats be ordered to reveal his source of information. Although this request was approved by the investigative judge,¹⁰ and later by the Riga Centre district court¹¹ on grounds of an overriding public interest, both decisions expressly acknowledged that Mr. Dreiblats, being a journalist, did have a right to source protection under Article 22 of the Press Law. This case later went before the ECtHR. In its judgment, the Court itself interpreted Article 22 of the Press Law as providing the right to source protection directly to journalists.¹²

To summarise, the law in Latvia provides the right to source protection to the mass media and their journalists. Nevertheless, the question remains whether journalists, who are not working in or for a mass medium, may claim this privilege. The grammatical interpretation of the above mentioned legal provisions yields a negative answer. To the best of ELSA Latvia’s Legal Research Group’s knowledge, there is also no domestic case-law that would clarify this issue in some way.

⁷ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991, article 22

⁸ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991, article 23

⁹ Criminal Procedure Law. Adopted by the Parliament of the Republic of Latvia on 21 April 2005, entered into force on 1 October 2005, Article 154(1)

¹⁰ 5 September 2006 decision of the Riga Centre District investigative judge in case No. KPL-27040006/3

¹¹ 20 September 2006 decision of the Riga Centre District court in case No. KPL27040006

¹² Dreiblats v. Latvia App no 8283/07 (ECtHR, 4 June 2013), para.24

The Elements of the Right to Source Protection

Although national law provides a right to source protection, there are, however, no legal provisions in Latvia's legal system that explain the underlying elements of this right. Namely, there are no provisions that have implemented the definitions of a "source" and "information identifying a source" set out in the Council of Europe Recommendation Nr. R(2000)7.¹³ A recent case in Latvia showed that national authorities do not have a clear understanding of these concepts.

Thus, in 2010 police authorities searched the home and seized data storage devices of Ms. Ilze Nagla, a journalist and producer of the investigative news programme "De Facto". These actions were followed after Ms. Nagla had reported on a security breach of the State Revenue Service (hereinafter – SRS), in which private information of taxpayers had been leaked. An anonymous source had contacted Ms. Nagla, giving her the leaked information and explaining how this was accomplished. Before the domestic courts, Ms. Nagla argued that the seizure of her data storage devices was an attempt to discover the source that leaked the information from SRS. Furthermore, the seizure could also disclose other sources used by the journalist. The domestic courts acknowledged that Ms. Nagla has the right to source protection, but sided with the arguments of the police, namely, that the search and seizure was not aimed at finding a source, but to merely stop the further unlawful dissemination of private information. Therefore, the right to source protection and its safeguards did not apply.¹⁴ The case went before the ECtHR, which found a violation of Ms. Nagla's freedom of expression. The Court noted that the seized data storage devices contained information capable of identifying other sources of Ms. Nagla.¹⁵ Accordingly, it concluded, inter alia, that the national authorities had not struck a fair balance between the need to investigate the leaked information from the SRS and Mrs. Nagla's right to source protection.¹⁶

Although it is debatable, whether clear legal provisions setting out the definitions of a "source" and "information identifying a source" would have prevented the infringement of Mrs. Nagla's rights, the Government of Latvia, in its action report on the execution of this judgment, concluded that the violation was an isolated failure of investigative authorities to substantiate their actions.¹⁷ Therefore, no improvements or amendments to the legislation are necessary, and continuous legal education of State officials regarding ECtHR case-law would suffice to prevent such violations in the future.¹⁸

¹³ Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", appendix, definitions c. and d.

¹⁴ 14 June 2010 decision of the Rīga Centre District Court in case No. KPL-27029710

¹⁵ Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013), para.82

¹⁶ Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013), paras.101, 102

¹⁷ Action report of the Government of the Republic of Latvia on the execution of the judgement of the ECHR in the case of Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013), adopted on 25 November 2015, para.15

¹⁸ Ibid., para.26

2. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

Considering that the main task for democratic state is to respect human rights, each of the individual rights which are included in international human rights documents should also be recognized under the constitution.¹⁹ Therefore, from Article 89 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia (hereinafter – the Constitution)²⁰ stems the binding nature of the international human rights instruments, including the principle that the provisions of the Constitution must be interpreted in the light of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms²¹ (hereinafter – ECHR). Although Article 100 of the Constitution protects the right to freedom of expression, Article 116 stipulates:

The rights of persons set out in Articles (..), one hundred (..) of the Constitution may be subject to restrictions in circumstances provided for by law in order to protect the rights of other people, the democratic structure of the State, and public safety, welfare and morals. On the basis of the conditions set forth in this Article, restrictions may also be imposed on the expression of religious beliefs.

Thus, freedom of expression can be restricted in several situations. However, journalists have the right not to disclose their sources, especially when disclosure of sources is related to criminal charges against the journalist. At such an occasion the right not to incriminate oneself, as stipulated in the Criminal Procedure Law,²² can be invoked. Nevertheless, this is only a right and not an obligation.

The functioning of an active, professional and independent media plays an important role in society²³ and is closely linked to access to information²⁴ because the right to freedom of expression derives from the right to receive information.²⁵ The possibility to receive information, especially classified information, will exist only if journalists are able to guarantee confidentiality and anonymity of their sources.²⁶ Therefore, strict conditions are laid down in order to protect journalist's sources. For instance, Article 22 of the Law on Press and Other Mass Media²⁷ stipulates that only a court may decide whether to restrict the right of source protection.

¹⁹ Pleps J., Pastars E., Plakane I. Constitutional Law. Supplemented and Revised Edition. Riga: VAS 'Latvijas Vēstnesis', 2014, p.140.

²⁰ The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia. Published: Latvijas Vēstnesis, 1 July 1993, No. 43.

²¹ Goodwin v The United Kingdom App no 28957/95 (ECHR 27, March 1995), para 28.

²² The Criminal Procedure Law. Published: Latvijas Vēstnesis, 11 May 2005, No. 74, article 19

²³ Kučs A., Bīriņa L. Protection of Sources of Journalists in ECHR Case Law and the case 'Nagla v. Latvia'. Published: „Jurista Vārds”, 27.08.2013, no. 35 (786).

²⁴ Martin and others v. France [ECHR 12, April 2012], App. no. 30002/08.

²⁵ Judgment no. 2003-02-0106 of the Constitutional court of the Republic of Latvia, 05.06.2003, para 1.

²⁶ Judgment no. SKA-194/2007 of the Administrative Department of the Supreme court Senate, 08.06.2007.

²⁷ Law on Press and Other Mass Media. Published: Ziņotājs, 14 February 1991, No. 5.

Furthermore, Recommendation No. R (2000) 7²⁸ establishes more detailed conditions for restrictions, emphasizing, inter alia, the binding nature of the ECHR. In addition, the Latvian Code of Ethics of Journalists²⁹ stipulates that journalists cannot publish the name of the source without its consent, except in cases when requested by a court. Although journalists are not legally bound by the Code of Ethics,³⁰ they enjoy the protection under Article 10 of the ECHR only if they act in a good faith.³¹ That also means that they have to inform the society about important aspects even if it requires disclosure of confidential information.³²

The Latvian Code of Ethics further stipulates that the Commission of Ethics of Journalists' Association of the Republic of Latvia supervises compliance with the Code of Ethics. According to the Provision of the Commission of Ethics,³³ sanctions applicable for breach of the Code of Ethics may include the following: 1) personal remark published on the Commission's Internal correspondence; 2) personal remark published on the Commission's public announcement for the media; 3) proposal to the Board of the Association to decide on the exclusion of a member from the Association in a case of serious breach of the Code of Ethics. Nevertheless, these sanctions may only be placed on those journalists, who are members of the Association (membership in the Association is voluntary). Therefore, there are no comprehensive sanctions for unlawful disclosure of a source's identity in Latvia's legal system that would apply to all journalists.

Furthermore, although the Criminal Law³⁴ establishes liability only for breach of secrecy of correspondence (Article 144), illegal spread of personal data (Article 145), and defamation in mass media (Article 157(2)) without specifying the liability for special subjects – journalists, a person whose rights have been violated is entitled to claim damages (Section 8) from the journalist under the Civil Law of the Republic of Latvia,³⁵ either as a tort (Article 1635), or for the retraction of information that injures reputation and dignity, if the disseminator of the information does not prove that such information is true (Article 2352¹).

In conclusion, even if there is no de jure prohibition for journalists to disclose their sources of information, the strict conditions for restricting these rights essentially amount to a de facto prohibition, except in cases where this is requested by a court.

²⁸ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information. Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, 8, March 2000, appendix, article 3 of the explanatory memorandum

²⁹ Code of Ethics. Association of Journalists of the Republic of Latvia, 14, March 2014, article 3

³⁰ Judgment no. 2003-05-01 of the Constitutional court of the Republic of Latvia, 29.10.2003, para 31.3.

³¹ Kučs A. The Article 100 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia. Commentary of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia. Section VIII Human Rights. Collective of authors. Riga 'Latvijas Vēstnesis', 2011, p. 367.

³² Editions Odile Jacob SAS v. European Commission [ECJ 9, June 2010], App. no. T237/05, para 41.

³³ The Provision of the Commission of Ethics. Association of Journalists of the Republic of Latvia, article 12

³⁴ Criminal Law. Published: Latvijas Vēstnesis, 8 July 1998, No.199/200.

³⁵ Civil Law of the Republic of Latvia. Published: Valdības Vēstnesis, 26 February 1937, No.46.

3. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

Definition of a “Journalist” Under Latvian Law

In the legal system of the Republic of Latvia, the definition of a journalist is provided in the Law on the Press and Other Mass Media (hereinafter – Press Law).³⁶ Article 23 states that “a journalist is a person who gathers, compiles, edits or in some other way prepares materials for a mass medium and who has entered into an employment contract or performs such work upon the instruction of a mass medium, or is a person who is a member of the Journalists’ Union.”³⁷ The wording of this Article shows that at the core of this definition is the institutional element, namely, the requirement that a person not only performs journalistic activities, but is also either affiliated with a registered mass medium, or is himself/herself registered as a member of the Journalists’ Union. Therefore, Article 23 of the Press Law implies a very restrictive definition of a “journalist”.

However, a case before the domestic courts has demonstrated a wider approach when defining someone a journalist and implying that, in certain situations, the institutional element may not be needed. Thus, in 2009 Mr. Lato Lapsa, a well-known journalist in Latvia, brought a request before the administrative courts to order the Central Bank of Latvia to give information regarding its board members’ salaries. The Supreme Court, in its judgment, noted that it is beyond doubt that the applicant is a member of the press who frequently writes about matters of public interest.³⁸ Therefore, it upheld the journalist’s request, concluding that in the present case the media’s right to receive information outweighed the Central Bank’s board members’ right to privacy.³⁹ This judgment is noteworthy for the reason that the Supreme Court did not use the definition of a journalist laid down in Article 23 of the Press Law, but rather referred to the case-law of the ECtHR regarding rights of the media. Furthermore, if it had relied on the Press Law, the Supreme Court would have probably found that Mr. Lapsa would not fit the definition laid down in this law, because at the time he was neither a member of the Journalists’ Union, nor working in or for a mass medium.

³⁶ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991

³⁷ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991, article 23

³⁸ 26 May 2011 judgment of the Supreme Court of Latvia No. SKA-421/2011, para. 6

³⁹ Ibid., paras. 8 and 9

The aforementioned Supreme Court judgment shows a progressive approach towards the notion of a “journalist” that is also more in line with the opinion of the Council of Europe, namely, that the definition of a journalist should not exclude those persons who work freelance or part-time, are at the beginning of their professional career, or those who work on an independent investigation over some time.⁴⁰ The definition offered in Recommendation Nr. R(2000)7 only requires the functional element, i.e. that a journalist can be any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication.⁴¹ As can be seen, no institutional element is required by the Council of Europe, because it was concluded that professional accreditation or membership should not be necessary in order to acknowledge someone as a journalist.⁴² Such reasoning is also supported by the ECtHR⁴³, the United Nations⁴⁴, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights⁴⁵, and others.⁴⁶

The Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors

Protection of persons, who acquire knowledge of the source due to professional relations with the journalist

As described previously in Question 1, the Press Law provides the right to source protection to a mass medium itself.⁴⁷ This implies that the privilege is guaranteed to all staff working for the mass medium. Support for such interpretation can be found in Paragraph 4 of Article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law which states that “a decision of a judge [on indication of the source of information] may be appealed by the submitter of a proposal, or a mass-media journalist or ⁴⁰Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", explanatory memorandum, para.13(ii)

⁴¹ Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", appendix, definition a.; see also, Council of Europe, "Recommendation CM/rec (2011) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on a new notion of media"

⁴² Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", explanatory memorandum, para.13(ii)

⁴³*Vides Aizsardzības Klubs v. Latvia* App no 57829/00 (ECtHR, 27 May 2004), para.40; Társaság a Szabadságjogokért v. Hungary App no 37374/05 (ECtHR, 14 April 2009), para.27; Steel and Morris v. the United Kingdom App no 68416/01 (ECtHR, 15 February 2005), para.89

⁴⁴ HRC "General comment no 34: Article 19, Freedoms of opinion and expression" (2011) UN Doc CCPR/C/GC/34; La Rue F. (11 August 2011), Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right of opinion and expression, UN Doc. A/65/284, para.61

⁴⁵ IACHR, Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985, Compulsory Membership in an association prescribed by law for the practice of journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights), para.71

⁴⁶ Article 19, Licensing of Media Workers, available at: <www.article19.org/pages/en/licensing-of-media-workers.html>

⁴⁷ Law on the Press and Other Mass Media. Adopted by the Supreme Council of the Republic of Latvia on 20 December 1990, entered into force of 1 January 1991, article 22

editor, and such appeal shall be examined within 10 days by a higher-level court judge in a written procedure the decision of which shall not be subject to appeal.”⁴⁸

Such an approach would at least to some extent conform with Council of Europe Recommendation Nr. R(2000)7, which states that “other persons who, by their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information identifying a source through the collection, editorial processing or dissemination of this information, should equally be protected under the principles established herein.”⁴⁹ However, it is unclear whether other persons outside the mass medium, for instance, Internet service providers, would also be protected under Latvian law.⁵⁰ To the knowledge of the ELSA Latvia research group, there is no domestic case-law or other examples of practice that would shed some light on these issues.

Protection of non-journalists

Latvian law does not provide the right to source protection to persons who are not considered journalists. Although the above mentioned case concerning Mr. Lapsa showed that domestic courts might characterise a person as a journalist even if he/she would not fit the general definition laid down in Article 23 of the Press Law, there is no case-law where domestic courts have acknowledged such a person as a journalist not only for the purpose of acquiring information in order to further inform the public of important matters, but also to afford the right to source protection.

Indeed, the Council of Europe, in wake of the ever-rising influence of Internet, has expressed the need to rethink the notion of a “journalist” and called for a debate on whether non-journalists, such as bloggers, podcasters and citizen journalists, should also be afforded the right to source protection.⁵¹ However, it has also admitted that non-journalists cannot benefit from the right of journalists not to reveal their sources, due to the reason that they would not be able to develop a relationship of trust to encourage sources to provide journalists with important information.⁵² Subsequently, the idea that a person must receive acknowledgment, under law or by domestic courts, that he/she is a journalist does not necessarily run contrary to international standards in media protection. Even the ECtHR⁵³, the Inter American Court of Human Rights⁵⁴

⁴⁸Criminal Procedure Law. Adopted by the Parliament of the Republic of Latvia on 21 April 2005, entered into force on 1 October 2005, Article 154(4)

⁴⁹ Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", appendix, principle 2

⁵⁰CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation, 1 December 2010, doc.12443, explanatory note, para.41

⁵¹CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation, 1 December 2010, doc.12443, explanatory note, paras.38, 39; CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation 1950 (2011) on the protection of journalists' sources, para.11

⁵²CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation, 1 December 2010, doc.12443, explanatory note, para.40; CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation 1950 (2011) on the protection of journalists' sources, para.15; see also, Council of Europe, "Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information", explanatory memorandum, para.10

⁵³*Groppera Radio AG and others v. Switzerland* App no 10890/84 (ECtHR, 28 March 1990); Clare Ovey, Robin White, The European Convention on Human Rights (4th edn, OUP 2006), p.331; see also, Pieter van Dijk, Fried van and the United Nations⁵⁵ have submitted that the requirement of journalists and mass mediums to register may encourage more responsible journalism and higher professional standards, and protect other persons from abusive freedom of expression.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

Besides Article 100⁵⁶ of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, the starting point of the legal safeguards for the protection of journalist sources in national level is the previously mentioned Article 22 of the Law on Press and Other Mass Media⁵⁷. It is important to point out that this article refers to “a mass medium”, not “a journalist”, but Article 27 of the Law on Press and Other Mass Media defines that “A person committing a breach of confidence with respect to a source of information... shall be held liable in accordance with laws of the Republic of Latvia”. Therefore, it can be concluded that the right and duty to protect information sources applies both to mass mediums and journalists.

The duty not to disclose a source is also implemented in the Code of Ethics of the Journalist Association of Latvia⁵⁸. Section 3.1 stipulates that “A journalist has no right to disclose the information source without his conduct”. Thus, non-disclosure of sources is not only a right, but also a duty. The Council of Europe has stated that “Professional ethical standards ensure that sources may rely on confidentiality and decide to provide journalists with information which may be of public concern.”⁵⁹ When a journalist or media will rather receive a fine or even go to prison than disclose their source, it can be looked upon as professional maturity and not as arbitrariness to the rule of law.⁶⁰ The European Court of Human Rights pays due regard to the chilling effect

Hoof, Arjen van Rijn, Leo Zwaak (eds.), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights (4th edn, Intersentia 2006), p.808

⁵⁴ IACHR, Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985, Compulsory Membership in an association prescribed by law for the practice of journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights)

⁵⁵ HRC "General comment no 34: Article 19, Freedoms of opinion and expression" (2011) UN Doc CCPR/C/GC/34, para.39

⁵⁶ “Everyone has the right to freedom of expression, which includes the right to freely receive, keep and distribute information and to express his or her views. Censorship is prohibited.”

⁵⁷ “A mass medium may choose to not indicate the source of information. If the person who has provided the information requests that his or her name is not to be indicated in a mass medium, this request shall be binding upon the editorial board. The source of information shall only be produced at the request of a court or a prosecutor.”

⁵⁸ Code of Ethics of the Latvian Journalists' Association, adopted with amendments by the Latvian Journalists' Association on 14 March, 2014

⁵⁹ The Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly 25 January, 2011 Recommendation (1950) 2011, para 14 <<http://assembly.coe.int/nw/xml/XRef/Xref-XML2HTML-en.asp?fileid=17943&lang=en>> accessed January 31 2016.

⁶⁰ Dimants A. ‘Privileģija klusēt’ <<http://providus.lv/article/privileģija-kluset>> accessed February 1 2016.

that 'arises whenever journalists were seen to assist in the identification of anonymous sources'.⁶¹ Both the Law on Press and Other Mass Media and the Journalists Code of Ethics do not allow a journalist to disclose his source, for example, if no authority asks him to but he just feels that he should tell someone. It is a journalist's duty to protect his sources and his source relies on it, so there is no place for a journalist's own thoughts of what he should or should not do.

The legal safeguards for protection of a journalist's sources are implemented in the Criminal Procedure Law⁶². Article 12 of the Criminal Procedure Law lays down a general obligation for the State authorities to respect human rights when conducting criminal proceedings, and a prohibition to arbitrarily interfere with these rights. This entails respecting the right to source protection. The European Court of Human Rights in Goodwin v. United Kingdom,⁶³ recognized this right as part of the broader right to freedom of expression. Regarding Article 12 of the Criminal Procedure Law, human rights (in this case - freedom of expression) may be restricted only in accordance with the Law. The procedure is laid down in Article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law:

“A court may assign a mass-media journalist or editor to indicate the source of published information. An investigating judge shall decide on the proposal of an investigator or public prosecutor, having listened to the submitter of the proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and having familiarised him or herself with the materials. An investigating judge shall take a decision on indication of the source of information, complying with the proportionality of the rights of the person and the public interest. A decision of a judge may be appealed by the submitter of a proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and such appeal shall be examined within 10 days by a higher-level court judge in a written procedure the decision of which shall not be subject to appeal”.

According to Article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law, there are two situations in which the right not to indicate the source could be violated:

- it could be violated by the investigator or prosecutor when forcing a journalist to disclose his source without a judge's decision; or
- it could be violated by the judge who inadequately weights the proportionality of the rights of the person and the public interest.

In the first scenario, a procedural breach made by an investigator or prosecutor can be easily determined, but it is more complex in the second situation, as it is difficult to assess whether the judge reached a fair balance between the competing interests. The case of *Nagla v. Latvia*⁶⁴ demonstrates this perfectly.⁶⁵

⁶¹ The European Court of Human Rights, Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom (application no. 821/03)

⁶² Criminal Procedure Law. Adopted by the Parliament of the Republic of Latvia on 21 April 2005, entered into force on 1 October 2005

⁶³ The European Court of Human Rights, Goodwin v. United Kingdom (application no. 17488/90)

⁶⁴ The European Court of Human Rights, Nagla v. Latvia (application no. 73469/10)

⁶⁵ For an outline of this case, see Question 1 of this report.

The ECtHR shed some light on the previously outlined issue – what the judge should take into account when balancing between the public interests and the rights of an individual. In this case there was no sufficient substantiation on allowing State authorities to search the home of Ilze Nagla.

In addition to Nagla, a few other domestic cases from 2006, dealing with the issues of source disclosure, are worth mentioning. The first case was regarding a journalist who worked for a newspaper 'Neatkarīgā Rīta Avīze', Uldis Dreibats. He wrote an article about telephone conversations between the chairman of the board of a limited liability company, 'Rezeknes galas kombinats', Guntis Piteronoks who was also a deputy of the Rezekne municipality and a member of a political party 'Jaunais Laiks' and several of his co-members from the 'Jaunais Laiks'. This shed light on the corruption of the individuals and other possible crimes. "The investigating authorities searched the office of the newspaper concerned and seized an audiotape of the impugned conversations."⁶⁶ The journalist was asked to reveal his source by the Security Police, but he refused. Later the investigative judge of Riga City Centre District Court and the Riga City Centre District Court upheld the request concerning the disclosure of the source of the published telephone conversations.⁶⁷ Mr. Dreibats still refused to disclose his source and criminal charges were brought against him. He was charged under Article 296 of the Criminal Law⁶⁸ for refusal to comply with a court order. The case reached the Supreme Court, which in 2013 overturned the lower court's decision, terminated the criminal proceedings and Mr. Dreibats was informed by the Office of the Prosecutor General of his right to institute civil proceedings for non-pecuniary damages in accordance with the Law on Compensation for Damage caused by State Institutions.⁶⁹

The second case concerns Mrs. Ilze Jaunalksne, who at the time was a journalist for a television broadcasting programme "De Facto". Her phone was tapped by State authorities. The situation raised question on whether it can lead to disclosure of journalist's sources. Four police officers related to tapping journalists' phone were found guilty of abuse of power and imprisoned.

Shortly after Ms. Nagla's case, on December 15 2011, the authorities made a search at journalist's Leonids Jakobsons apartment, took his laptop and other data storage devices. The Journalist Association of Latvia asked the Ombudsmen of Latvia to assess the facts in this case. The Ombudsmen refused to start an investigation, pointing out that the facts of the case were very similar to the situation of Ilze Nagla and he has already given his opinion in that matter.⁷⁰ This opinion referred to the need to find a fair balance between the competing interests, and a

⁶⁶ The European Court of Human Rights, Dreiblats v. Latvia (Application no. 8283/07), paragraph 6

⁶⁷ The European Court of Human Rights, Dreiblats V. Latvia (Application no. 8283/07), paragraphs 5-9

⁶⁸ For a person who commits intentionally failing to execute a court judgment or decision or delaying the execution thereof, the applicable punishment is a fine up to 60 minimum salaries.

⁶⁹ The European Court of Human Rights, Dreiblats V. Latvia (Application no. 8283/07), paragraph 18

⁷⁰ Conclusion of the Ombudsmen of the Republic of Latvia: <www.diena.lv/upload/manual/atzinums_par.doc> accessed 1 February, 2016

judge needs a sufficient substantiation to force a journalist to disclose its source.

The Ombudsmen of Latvia has also pointed out that these cases, where authorities potentially violates journalists rights, indicates that the Article 121 of Criminal Procedure Law, which refers to professional secrets that are protected by criminal procedure, should be amended in order to apply to journalists, as well.⁷¹ However, no amendments have been made in this regard.

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

The Criminal Procedure Law lays down a general obligation to conduct criminal proceedings in compliance with internationally recognized human rights (including article 10 of the ECHR). The article contains one exceptional circumstance under which the rights (including a right to not disclose journalists` source) can be restricted – public safety reasons. Furthermore, the previously mentioned article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law lays down safeguards for situations when an investigating judge takes the decision to order the reveal of the source of information. Therefore, the Criminal Procedure Law contains general duties, which authorities must follow with reference to the international standards, regarding the restriction of the human rights.

The Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 analyses decisions of the European Court of Human Rights. It examines whether reasonable alternative measures to disclosure exist and have been exhausted and if the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure. The main circumstances in which the disclosure of journalist source could be justified are:

- protection of human life;
- prevention of major crime;
- defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime.⁷²

⁷¹ The Office of the Ombudsman, “Policijai ir jārespektē vārda brīvība un informācijas avotu aizsardzība” <<http://www.tiesibsargs.lv/petijumi-un-publikacijas/relizes/policijai-ir-jarespekte-varda-briviba-un-informacijas-avotu-aizsardziba>> accessed February 1, 2016

⁷² The Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers of Member States on the Right of Journalists not to Disclose their Sources of Information,

Public safety reasons that are mentioned in the Criminal Procedure Law covers all of these that are mentioned in the Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The downside is that this is a broad term, which can be interpreted arbitrarily. Also, Article 110 of the Criminal Procedure Law can be used as a way to evade the procedure laid down in Article 154 and act as if there is an emergency situation where the search is needed immediately.

We can conclude that the Criminal Procedure Law, in general, tries to comply with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 related to the question, but the Law is not detailed enough and as we can see from the cases mentioned in the answer to the question 4, where Latvian authorities have tried to compel journalists to disclose their sources, in practice everything is not as clear. Because no exhaustive list of exceptions is provided in the Criminal Procedure Law, authorities sometimes interpret the law arbitrarily. Including the list of circumstances in the law would help to clarify the reasons that are sufficient enough for restricting journalists' right and duty to protect their sources.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

6.1. Fundamental Criteria for the Disclosure

Already in 2001, the Bureau of the Ombudsman in Latvia indicated the need for a change of Part 2 of Section 22 on Law on Press⁷³ so it would include the possible reasoning for the demand to reveal the sources of information. In their redaction, those reasons could be State security, fairness and the prevention of crime. However, it has not been done and, theoretically, the law still gives the court unlimited rights to ask for the revealing of sources.

Nevertheless, certain limitations are found in other laws. Firstly, it is established that this information is protected under law⁷⁴ and a mass media can only be forced to disclose their sources in criminal proceedings. Therefore, the case has to be important enough for society to be dealt with within the criminal sphere and then in the case the interests of disclosure again have to be important enough to outweigh the non-disclosure. Additionally, in the making of the decision, the principle of proportionality as recognised by the ECHR has having to be respected – the limitation has to be 1) appropriate and suitable for achieving the legitimate objective, 2) the most lenient way how to achieve the objective and 3) mutually proportionate with the benefit the society gains from setting the restriction on fundamental rights.⁷⁵

<http://www.coe.int/t/dghl/standardsetting/media/doc/cm/rec\(2000\)007&expmem_EN.asp007&expmem_EN.asp)> accessed 29 January, 2016

⁷³Tiesībsargabiņojums, 'Latvijas cilvēktiesību joma. 2000.gada 4.ceturksnis' [2001] JuristaVārds No 12(205), [Latvian].

⁷⁴GunārsKūtris, 'Rokasgrāmatatīesnešiemkrimīnālprocesā' [2010] TNA [Latvian], 39.

Already in 2007 the Committee of Law in the Parliament of Latvia had the idea that Section 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law has to be supplemented with the criteria for the analysis of the pleas according to the Recommendation (2000) 7 as right now the law allows too wide interpretations.⁷⁶ Yet neither in 2007,⁷⁷ nor in 2008,⁷⁸ the Law Commission developed possible appendixes to the law, thus the problem was left unresolved.

The prevailing interests established in the Constitution of Latvia are arguably the rights of other people, the democratic structure of the State, and the public safety, welfare and morals.⁷⁹ Those criteria have to be directly stated in Law. As the Criminal Procedure Law anticipates the limitation of the freedom of speech of the journalists and the Constitution has to be seen as the highest law in the state, applicable through the understanding of Article 10 of the Convention in any case when it is needed, these criteria through the principle of proportionality, theoretically, can be applicable for the demand to reveal the source of information and the possible restrictions on the Freedom of Expression.⁸⁰

6.2. The Case Law

The cases and the rulings by the courts concerning the revealing of the journalistic information sources are mostly confidential and not available to the public. Thus it is difficult to understand the criteria under which the court works in determining the importance of the plea to reveal the source. However, most of those cases are favourable for the journalists, so it is clear that the bar for the disclosure is high.

⁷⁵GrundgesetzKommentar, Band I, Präambelbis Art. 20, Aufl. 4. vonMünch / Kunig (Hrsg.). München: C.H.Beck'scheVerlagsbuchhandlung, 1992, [German] 54.

⁷⁶LieneBarisa, NRA, 'Saeimalabosotlikumapantu par žurnalistaavotuatklāšanu' (TvNet.lv, 16 May 2007) <http://www.tvnet.lv/zinas/latvija/216990-saeima_labosot_likuma_pantu_par_zurnalista_avotu_atklasanu> accessed February 13 2016 [Latvian].

⁷⁷'Apkopojums par 9. Saeimaskomisijudarbu 2007.gada rudenssesijā (no 2007.gada 4.septembra līdz 20.decembrim)' (20 December 2007).<<http://www.saeima.lv/documents/3bad5684a6bb465c53be89b00692f9b7af73f520>>accessed February 2 2016 [Latvian].

⁷⁸'LatvijasRepublikasSaeimasPubliskaisPārkats 2008' (2008) <<http://www.saeima.lv/documents/717e6615164717eca72c7ebb2cf8a7b44112d9a7>> accessed 2 February 2016 [Latvian].

⁷⁹The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia 1992 [LatvijasRepublikasSatversme], s 116.

⁸⁰*Nr.2003-05-01* [2003] Constitutional Court on the Republic of Latvia [Latvian], para 22; Nr.2009-45-01 [2010] Constitutional Court on the Republic of Latvia [Latvian], para 9.

The first time the court was asked to demand the journalist to reveal the information source was in 2006, in the 'NRA–Repše' case – and then the court was on the journalist's side,⁸¹ ruling that the rights of KNAB to know how the journalists got to know about the deals and trades of a certain politician are less important than the rights of the society to know about suspicious politicians' operations with money.⁸²

The loudest case, when the journalist was demanded to reveal the source of the information, was soon after this, in 2007. After the plea of the Security Police, a journalist, Dreiblats, was asked to reveal the source of information of his publication as the records of the calls published have contained the state secret.⁸³ This reasoning for the demand, even though not mentioned in Section 116 of the Constitution or the Recommendation, might comply with both, as the security of the state secret can be considered as an important legitimate interest. However, Dreiblats refused to reveal the source of information, arguing that the Security Police has other ways how to find out the people who could have been the sources of information as only a limited amount of people has the access to the state secret. Therefore, as there were alternative measures possible, the demand was not proportional according to the Recommendation.⁸⁴ Also, publishing those calls was the only way, and the best way, to solve and stop the crimes. Thus, the Principle 3 (d) of Resolution No. 2 on journalistic freedoms and human rights (1994) has ensured that the rights of the journalists to be 'public-watchdogs' were basically denied.⁸⁵ Additionally, on 19 April 2007, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, in its Assembly debate on fair trial issues in criminal cases concerning espionage or divulging state secrets, agreed that a state's legitimate interest in protecting official secrets must not become a pretext to unduly restrict the freedom of expression and of information.⁸⁶ Therefore, the reasoning of the court did not comply with the Recommendation or the Constitution.

The second loudest case with the journalist of the regional newspaper "Zemgales Ziņas" in 2013, the police had asked the court to demand the journalist to reveal the source of their

⁸¹Kamenska A. Pilsoniskās un politiskās tiesības (Cik demokrātiskairLatvija? : Demokrātijas audits, 2005–2014. Zin.red. Rozenvalds J.) [Latvian] 73;

Skudra O, Šulmane I, Dreijere V. Plašsaziņas līdzekļu demokrātiskā sabiedrība (ibid.) 204.

⁸²Delfi.lv Tiesanēliek NRA atklātinformācijasavotusRepšeslieta (Delfi.lv, May 23 2006), <<http://www.delfi.lv/news/national/politics/tiesa-neliek-nra-atklāt-informācijas-avotus-repses-lieta.d?id=13980196>>accessed February 13 2016, [Latvian].

⁸³LETA, Žurnālistamprasāpiespriestnaudasodu par informācijasavotaneatklāšanu (TvNet.lv, May 10 2007)

<http://www.tvnet.lv/zinas/kriminalzinas/281441-zurnalistam-prasa-piespriest-naudas-odu-par-informācijas-avota-neatklāšanu>, accessed 13 February 2013, [Latvian].

⁸⁴Explanatory Memorandum on the Committee of Ministers Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 (On the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information) 2000 Part II para 33.

⁸⁵*Goodwin v. the United Kingdom* ECHR 1996 [39].

⁸⁶Resolution 1551 (2007).Parliamentary Assembly debate on 19 April 2007 (17th Sitting) (Fair trial issues in criminal cases concerning espionage or divulging state secrets), s 1.

information.⁸⁷ This suggestion was inspected in a closed court session where the journalist had the right to express his opinion and after this session the court denied the plea of the police⁸⁸ as the journalist had explained that the information was taken from the public trial transcript⁸⁹ and there was no need for revealing the transferor of this transcript. The argument by the complainant that this information may be defamatory and that the way the journalist got the transcript may jeopardize the judicial system were not considered important enough.

This practice directly complies with Principle 4 of the Recommendation as well as the ECtHR judgment, De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, where the court agreed that the national courts may not reject an application from an accused journalist to consider alternative evidence beside the disclosure of the source of information by this journalist, if such alternative evidence for the proof of the journalist's statements is available to the judiciary.⁹⁰ Therefore, it can be seen that the court has analysed the necessity of the source detection through the weighing of the interests, so the plea was not satisfied automatically. The president of the Journalist Association of Latvia, Jānis Paiders, in 2013, also agreed that there are many cases when the police or other directors of the proceedings ask the court for the demand to disclose the sources, but the court usually analyses the social necessity of such demand and their rejection to satisfy the plea does not get appealed.⁹¹ Thus, mostly the court chooses to protect the journalists and their sources by agreeing that the reasons for the demand to reveal the sources are not important enough in comparison to the rights of the journalist and the source and that there are alternative measures available.

6.3. The Overall Criteria Weighing Consistency with the Recommendation

The situation in Latvia only partly complies with the Recommendation – even though there have been several debates that the laws should be made clearer and with a criteria that would establish when the interests of the society could outweigh the interests of the journalists.

The system concerning disclosures is consistent with Recommendation Principle 5. Even though it has been agreed by the journalists that the authorities trying to ask the court to demand the journalists to disclose the sources almost in every case,⁹² these authorities do have a direct legitimate interest and their right to ask it is established in law. Additionally, the Senate has

⁸⁷ LETA „Pēcpolicijasierosinājumatiesajelgavasžurnālistamlūgsatklāttiesassēdesprotokolakopijasiesniedzēju”, (ZemgalesZiņas, November 29 2013), <<http://zz.diena.lv/vietejas-zinas/jelgava/pec-policijas-ierosinajuma-tiesa-jelgavas-zurnalistam-lugs-atklat-tiesas-sedes-protokola-kopijas-ies-170867>> accessed February 13 2016 [Latvian]

⁸⁸ AtisRožentāls, „Izmanto, lai tiktu pie avota” (Diena.lv, 6 December 2013) <<http://www.diena.lv/sodien-laikraksta/izmanto-lai-tiktu-pie-avota-14035717>> accessed 13 February 2013 [Latvian].

⁸⁹ LETA „Pēcpolicijasierosinājumatiesajelgavasžurnālistamlūgsatklāttiesassēdesprotokolakopijasiesniedzēju”, (ZemgalesZiņas, November 29 2013), <<http://zz.diena.lv/vietejas-zinas/jelgava/pec-policijas-ierosinajuma-tiesa-jelgavas-zurnalistam-lugs-atklat-tiesas-sedes-protokola-kopijas-ies-170867>> accessed February 13 2016 [Latvian].

⁹⁰ De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium ECHR 1997 [55], [58].

⁹¹ AtisRožentāls, „Izmanto, lai tiktu pie avota” (Diena.lv, December 6 2013) <<http://www.diena.lv/sodien-laikraksta/izmanto-lai-tiktu-pie-avota-14035717>> accessed February 13 2016 [Latvian].

⁹² Private interview with one of the journalists of Latvian National Television Inga Šņore, January 26 2016.

agreed that the journalists cannot be punished under the Criminal Law for the failure to comply with a court decision for the disclosure;⁹³ only the sanctions can be imposed. Also, as mentioned in Principle 5(d) of the Recommendation and also Section 154(3) of the Criminal Procedure Law, the journalists have the right to appeal the imposition of a sanction. The cases, involving the disclosure of the sources, are not open to public, thus also Principle 5 (e) of the Recommendation has been implemented.⁹⁴

The principle of proportionality, which is stressed both by ECHR and the Recommendation Principle 3, is included in the Criminal Procedure Law and also protected by the Constitution as well.

However, there is no relevant national provision in law which clearly establishes that the investigative judge, police and/or prosecutors have to substantiate and pass a proportionality (latus sense) test before they can request for a disclosure of a journalistic source. What is more, the courts have sometimes failed to recognise the alternative measures available (Dreiblats case). Additionally, the legitimate interests established in the Constitution only partly comply with the interests mentioned in the Recommendation.⁹⁵

The courts have also used other justifications for the demand, such as the state secret that could maybe be justified under the “democratic structure of the State” – but not under the Recommendation. Also there has not been the analysis under subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (b) of Principle 3 of the Recommendation. These criteria could somehow comply with the principle of proportionality, for example, when analyzing the necessity of the disclosure as responding to the pressing social need; yet there is no proof that the courts would have directly analysed, for example, the nature of the circumstances.

Thus, the criteria for the determination which norms are outweighing the interests of the journalists should be set clearly in the Criminal Procedure Law in Latvia as soon as possible, following the Recommendation, so that both the journalists and the court can be sure of their actions.

⁹³SKK - 668/2007 [2007] Supreme Court of Latvia [Latvijas Republikas Augstākā tiesas Senāta Kriminālietudepartamenta 2007. gada 4. decembrālēmums Lietā SKK - 668/2007].

⁹⁴Explanatory Memorandum on the Committee of Ministers Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 (On the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information) 2000, Part II Para 50.

⁹⁵Ibid para 38.

7. In light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

A particularly important case in the matter at issue in the Republic of Latvia is the ECtHR judgement Nagla v Latvia.⁹⁶ In this judgement, the ECtHR, for the first time, evaluated whether the respective laws of searching journalist's home are in conformity with the right to freedom of expression and the right to protect sources in light of Article 10 of the ECHR.

The case concerned the search by the police of a well-known journalist's home and their seizure of data storage devices following a broadcast she had aired informing the public of an information leak from the State Revenue Service database based on the information spread by an anonymous source. After this broadcast, her source began to spread the above mentioned information on his Twitter account. The criminal proceedings were initiated, during which the journalist, as a witness, was asked to disclose the identity of her source. After she denied to reveal the source, according to her right, the source was arrested and a warrant to search her home was authorised under the procedure for urgent situations. During the search, the journalist's laptop, an external hard drive, a memory card, and four flash drives were seized.⁹⁷

The judgement and the ECtHR conclusions are based on two significant aspects – 1) lawfulness of searching the journalist's home in connection with Article 10 of the ECHR; 2) rights of journalist not to disclose their sources. Regarding the second aspect, according to Section c of Recommendation No.R (2000) 7,⁹⁸ the term 'source' relates to any person who provides information to a journalist. The interpretation of the source must include not only active spread but also when a source remains passive. The potential to identify a source determines the type of protected information and the range of such protection.⁹⁹

In summarizing the above mentioned, it can be seen that the understanding and protection of sources is extremely ample, namely, the ECtHR stands at the position that not only present information is considered a journalist's source but also that which may relate, or lead to, a journalist's source in the future. Therefore, the question appears to what extent or how strong that future possibility should be to reach the level of protection. Does this possibility need to be only hypothetical or should it at least include some minimum level of success in the future?

Principle 3 of the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 stipulates that the right of non-disclosure may be restricted only when other remedies are exhausted, when the legitimate aim is superior: when there is sufficiently vital and serious nature of circumstances, when there is pressing social

⁹⁶ Nagla v Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECHR 16, July 2013).

⁹⁷ Nagla v Latvia, paras 5-28.

⁹⁸ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information. Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, 8, March 2000.

⁹⁹ Ibid.

need and an overriding requirement of the need for disclosure is proved. Member States have a certain margin of appreciation in assessing this need. Similarly, Article 22 of the Law on Press and Other Mass Media stipulates that an order to disclose a source may be made only by a court taking into account considerations of proportionality.

Article 154 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the Republic of Latvia stipulates conditions under which a journalist or an editor is obliged to disclose a source of information. Such an order may be made only by a court. The investigating judge, upon application by an investigator or a public prosecutor, assesses the proportionality of the measure. The decision is amenable to judicial review. Whereas, Article 180 lays down the procedure for issuing a court warrant in urgent cases and stipulates that when a delay could allow the relevant documents or objects to be destroyed, hidden the search warrant may be issued by the competent investigating authority, approved by a prosecutor and submitted to the investigating judge, who then examines the lawfulness of and the grounds for the search.

In the present case, despite the fact that during the search the journalist had still remained the witness in criminal proceeding; despite the fact that the search was initiated only three months after information was known and the fact that during search several data carriers containing also the journalist's private information not related to the case had been taken, the investigating judge approved the search and afterwards the Supreme Court judge admitted lawfulness of the search. Both authorities concluded that necessity of the search was urgent, interests of the society surpassed interests of the journalist and the aim of the search was not to disclose journalist's source but to find an evidence for investigation.

Similarly, the Government argued that the application must be dismissed because the applicant has not exhausted all the domestic remedies, namely, the applicant should have lodged a complaint to the Constitutional Court if she considered that the procedure under Article 180 of the Criminal Procedure Law as applied to her lacked sufficient procedural guarantees, or that the failure to provide additional statutory safeguards in respect of journalists regarding non-disclosure privilege had interfered with her human right (see also *Grišankova and Grišankovs v. Latvia*¹⁰⁰). Furthermore, the interference had been "necessary in a democratic society" (see also *Kasabova v. Bulgaria*¹⁰¹, *Axel Springer AG v. Germany*¹⁰²) because states have a margin of appreciation and in the present case the applicant's right to freedom of expression was against the right of wide range of individuals in Latvia to the protection of their personal data. The Government affirmed that the aim of the search had not been to reveal journalistic sources, and argued that the present case should be distinguished from such cases as Goodwin v. the United Kingdom.

By contrast, the Ombudsman, at the end of his inquiry, concluded that the wording of the search warrant demonstrated that the aim of the search was to identify the journalist's source.

¹⁰⁰ Grišankova and Grišankovs v. Latvia [ECHR, 2003], App. no. 36117/02.

¹⁰¹ Kasabova v. Bulgaria [ECHR, 19, April 2011], App. no. 22385/03, paras 54.

¹⁰² Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC, 7, February 2012] App. no. 39954/08, paras 85-86.

Although the Supreme Court mentioned that the urgent procedure was necessary to take into account the specifics of cybercrimes, the inquiry did not contain any evidence of attempts by the journalist to continue unlawfully processing and further distributing the data, or to destroy such information. Therefore, the Ombudsman concluded that the competent investigating authority did not sufficiently evaluate the threat to freedom of expression.

Whereas the law does not state explicit conditions for restriction the right of journalists to freedom of expression, and law enforcement authorities have different interpretation for their margin of appreciation (see also *Valenzuela Contreras v. Spain*¹⁰³), therefore amendments in the law should be initiated.¹⁰⁴

Similarly, the ECtHR concluded that a chilling effect will arise wherever journalists are seen to assist in the identification of anonymous sources (see also *Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom*¹⁰⁵). Where the seized data storage devices contained also information capable of identifying her other sources of information, there was no necessity to demonstrate that the search yielded any results or indeed proved otherwise productive (see also *Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg*¹⁰⁶, *Ernst and Others v. Belgium*¹⁰⁷). Furthermore, the ECtHR had already dismissed a similar preliminary objection by the Latvian Government as for exhaustion of national legal remedies (see also *Liepājnieks v. Latvia*¹⁰⁸, *Savičs v. Latvia*¹⁰⁹). Conversely, the ECtHR differentiate this case from the previous cases, for instance, *Sanoma Uitgevers v. the Netherlands*¹¹⁰ and Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v. the Netherlands.¹¹¹ Furthermore, the ECtHR noted, that this case is fundamentally different from previous cases related to disclosure of journalist's sources, for example, the Goodwin and Telegraf cases because the source was already known. Nevertheless, it does not remove the protection under Article 10 of the ECHR. Moreover, the ECtHR underlined that it had already held that a search conducted with a view to identifying a journalist's source is a more drastic measure than an order to divulge the source's identity.¹¹² The right of journalists not to disclose their sources cannot be considered a mere privilege to be granted or taken away depending on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of their sources, but is part and parcel of the right to information, to be treated with the utmost caution, therefore it was the investigating judge's responsibility to carry out the necessary assessment of the conflicting interests.¹¹³

¹⁰³ Valenzuela Contreras v. Spain [ECHR 30, July 1998], App no. 58/1997/842/1048, para 61.

¹⁰⁴ Nagla v Latvia, paras 29-31.

¹⁰⁵ Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom [ECHR 15, December 2009], App. no.821/03, para 70.

¹⁰⁶ Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg [ECHR 25, February 2003], App. no. 51772/99, para 57.

¹⁰⁷ Ernst and Others v. Belgium [ECHR 15, July 2003], App. no. 33400/96, para 103.

¹⁰⁸ Liepājnieks v. Latvia [ECHR 2, November 2010], App no.37586/06, paras 73-76.

¹⁰⁹ Savičs v. Latvia [ECHR 27, November 2012], App. no. 17892/03, paras 113-117.

¹¹⁰ Sanoma Uitgevers v. the Netherlands [ECHR 14, September 2010], App. no. 38224/03, para 91.

¹¹¹ Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v. the Netherlands [ECHR 22, November 2012], App. no.39315/06, para 120.

¹¹² Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, para 57.

¹¹³ Nagla v. Latvia, para 101.

From the outline of the case it can be concluded that there was no consensus among the law enforcement authorities for the importance to protect journalist's sources. Despite the fact that this was the first case when the ECtHR examined whether the respective laws of searching journalist's home are in conform with the right to freedom of expression and right to protect sources in the light of Article 10 of the ECHR, the highest law enforcement authorities and the Government as the ECtHR emphasized had not taken into account not only the conclusions of the Ombudsman but also previous case-law of the ECtHR in various aspects. Conversely, the authorities avoided from nonconvenient evaluation procedure of proportionality of restriction of human rights and automatically have chosen the most convenient measures which guaranteed the quickest results. The activities of the authorities also reflected and approved that similarly as with granting limited access status for documents which do not qualify as such the authorities prioritize their interests rather than interests of an individual or the society.

As it can be seen also from the national case-law which were made before the judgment (analyses stipulated in the question 6 of the research), the judgment in the above mentioned case has a great impact to awareness and comprehension of authorities about importance of right to freedom of expression and extremely high standart of restriction. For instance, in the case where the journalist was accused of libel for writing an article that referenced the transcript of a court hearing, he was required by the Security Police to disclose his source. Despite of the request, the court did not accepted necessity to disclose journalist's source.¹¹⁴ Furthermore, the judgment has caused ample discussions among the public of the Republic of Latvia¹¹⁵ and has left an impressive legacy for the future case-law, not only in national level but also internationally (for instance, *Bureau of Investigative Journalism and Alice Ross v. The United Kingdom*¹¹⁶, *Szabó and Vissy v. Hungary*¹¹⁷, case no.133018914¹¹⁸).

Moreover, the ECtHR emphasized the conclusion that the fact that an applicant did not launch a claim in the Constitutional court of the Republic of Latvia is not a sufficient argument to dismiss an application, it has caused discussions among judges and experts of Constitutional Law that it should be considered whether to expand the competence of the judges of Constitutional court allowing to withdrawn unconstititutional acts made by law appliers including courts.¹¹⁹ Conversely, in the case Dreiblats v. Latvia,¹²⁰ the ECtHR dismissed an application on the grounds of non-exhaustion of national sources. The applicant complained that he, as a journalist, was asked to disclose his source. The investigating judge approved only disclosure of a half of information and so did the District Court in a similar fashion. When the applicant refused to ¹¹⁴ Freedom of the Press 2014. Published: <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-press/2014/latvia>.

¹¹⁵ Reine I. Commentary for the judgment 'Nagla v. Latvia'. "Jurista Vārds", 17.10.2013, no. 38 (789); Insight of the European Court of Human Rights judgment 'Nagla v. Latvia'. "Jurista Vārds", 27.08.2013, no. 35 (786).

¹¹⁶ Bureau of Investigative Journalism and Alice Ross v. The United Kingdom [ECHR 11 September, 2014], App. no. 62322/14, p. 4.

¹¹⁷ Szabó and Vissy v. Hungary [ECHR 12 January, 2016], App. no.37138/14, para. 36.

¹¹⁸ Riga District court case of 14, November 2014, App. no. 133018914, p. 9, 12.

¹¹⁹ Dubava I. Whether Competence of the Constitutional Court should be Expanded. Journal "Jurista Vārds", 15.10.2013, no. 42 (793).

¹²⁰ Dreiblats v. Latvia [ECHR 4 June, 2013], App. no. 8283/07.

follow the decision, he was fined. Afterwards the appellate court concluded that criminal liability for nonfulfillment of court order cannot be related to journalists.

It can be concluded that although there is absolute right of non-disclosure of journalist's sources, the ECtHR, with its binding case-law ipso facto, predicting almost de jure absolute status. In addition, from the analyses of the above mentioned cases seem that although it took some time for the national courts to acquire an interpretation of the ECtHR of non disclosure of sources, the national courts have learned to apply the given standard and endeavor to adopt more weighed and justified decisions relating to the disclosure of journalists' sources.

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

In accordance with Article 96 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, 'everyone has the right to inviolability of his or her private life, home and correspondence'. At the same time, the Constitution does not provide any special protection for journalists: therefore Article 96 could be defined as a common framework for legal protection of correspondence, including journalistic correspondence, which could contain data about sources of information.

Article 100 defines components of "freedom of expression" as the right to freely receive, keep and distribute information; and the right to express own views.

In addition to the definition of "freedom of expression" mentioned in Article 100, Article 89 of the Constitution notices that 'the State recognises and protects fundamental human rights in accordance with the Constitution, laws and international treaties binding upon Republic of Latvia'. This Article provides opportunity to extend a definition of "freedom of expression" by international legal acts.

Freedom of expression may be subjected to restrictions in circumstances provided for by law in order to protect the rights of other people, the democratic structure of the State, and public safety, welfare and morals.¹²¹ Such restrictions could be justified only by law. For example, Kriminālprocesa likums (Criminal Procedure Law) provides that 'a court may order a mass-media journalist or editor to reveal the source of published information'. Such an order should be decided by an investigating judge, taking into account the principle of proportionality.

¹²¹ The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia 1922 [Latvijas Republikas Satversme], Art. 116.

Furthermore, a journalist or editor of a mass media has a right to appeal such decision before a court.¹²²

However, the above described legislative framework only applies to criminal proceedings. As researchers have noticed: 'In the second group (the second group relates to procedural measures) from Criminal Procedure Law's 10th Chapter, in our opinion, there should be a referable obligation to reveal the source of information (this Article regulates in which way an obligation applies in the revelation of the information source)' (Pie otrajām (otrā grupa – procesuālie pasākumi), mūsu prāt, no KPL 10. nodaļā reglamentētajām darbībām būtu pieskaitāms informācijas avota norādīšanas pienākums (pantā reglamentēts tikai tas, kādā veidā uzliekams pienākums izpaust informācijas avotu)).¹²³ Surveillance activity is not always connected with criminal procedure and therefore this regulation of activity is wider.

Security services, in its activities, should always have a legal basis, prescribed by Article 3 of Operational Activities Law. The Operational Activities Law can be described as a framework for activity of investigation. From Article 6 it can be seen that investigatory surveillance (tracing), investigatory monitoring of correspondence and investigatory wiretapping of conversations are investigatory measures that are prescribed by law (besides, other investigatory measures are available: inquiring; inspection; acquisition of samples and research; examination of a person; entry; experiment; controlled delivery; detective work; acquisition of information expressed or stored by a person through technical means; video surveillance of a place not accessible to the public). These measures can be performed only in accordance with the special method (special method is used for operational activities measures, in the course of which there is significant infringement of the constitutional rights and freedoms)¹²⁴ and with the approval of the Chief of Supreme Court or a Judge of a Supreme Court specially authorised by him or her.¹²⁵ This statement is not contradicted with the Constitution (because of Articles 96 and 100 provide rights and freedoms; and Article 116 allows to limit it in some cases in order to protect the rights of other people, a democratic state system, the safety of society, welfare and morals).¹²⁶

In addition, foreseeable criterion should be mentioned. As noticed, in a recent case of ECtHR: 'Foreseeability in the special context of secret measures of surveillance, such as the interception of communications, cannot mean that an individual should be able to foresee when the authorities are likely to intercept his communications so that he can adapt his conduct accordingly. <...> The domestic law must be sufficiently clear to give citizens an adequate indication as to the circumstances in which and the conditions on which public authorities are ¹²² Criminal Procedure Law 2005 [Kriminālprocesa likums], Art. 154.

¹²³ Meikališa Ā., Strada-Rozenberga K., Kriminalprocess. Raksti. 2005 – 2010 (Rīga Latvijas Vēstnesis 2010) 128 [Latvian].

¹²⁴ Operational Activities Law 1993 [Operatīvas darbības likums], Art. 7 (3).

¹²⁵ ibid, Art. 7 (4).

¹²⁶ The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia 1922 [Latvijas Republikas Satversme], Art. 116.

empowered to resort to any such measures.¹²⁷ Looking into Operational Activity Law cannot be found any plain definition of object of operational activities measures, but it is clear that persons are potentially objects of operational measures through tasks of operational activities. For example, activities can be applied for searching missing persons, for protecting of official secrets, for searching persons who are suspected of, have been accused of or have been convicted of committing a criminal offence and so on.¹²⁸

The operational activities measures can be performed with approval of a prosecutor in case where immediate actions are required. This includes actions to avert, detect terrorism, murder, riots, and other serious crimes, or situations where the lives, health or property of persons are in real danger.¹²⁹ Approval of a judge must be obtained on the following working day, but not later than within seventy-two hours, even after prosecutor approval in the case of immediate actions. The necessity for an operational measure must be justified. Otherwise it can be deemed unlawful, and the relevant authorities shall immediately destroy all information obtained in the process of performing the operational measure.¹³⁰

An operational measure is initially approved to be carried out in 3 months, but this time-limit may be extended.¹³¹ The period of extension is not limited directly by duration: only for the period of time that the exercising of operational activities is being carried out with respect to the person. Limitation of this term could be found in Article 22, which regulates exercising of operational activities. The basic time for exercising of operational activity is six months; this period could be extended up to six months with the approval of the vadītājs (head) or vietnieks (deputy head) of the body performing operational activities (summarized term is 12 (twenty) months); the last extension may be done only with the Approval of the Prosecutor General or a Prosecutor specially authorised by the Prosecutor General, but shall not extend the limitation period of the crime in relation to which the exercising of operational activities is being conducted.¹³² No any additional condition, for example approval of a judge, is necessary.

In order to conduct an investigatory surveillance (tracing) of a person, the relevant body performing the operational activities must have reasonable and sufficient information that this person is planning or attempting to commit a criminal offence, or otherwise threatens the State's interests. Investigatory monitoring of correspondence, investigatory acquisition of information expressed or stored by a person from technical means, investigatory wiretapping of conversations and investigatory video surveillance can only be carried out on persons involved in crime, or otherwise posing a threat to the security and defence of the State.¹³³

¹²⁷ Case of Roman Zakharov v. Russia (application No. 47143/06) [2015] Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2015 [English], para 229.

¹²⁸ Operational Activities Law 1993 [Operatīvas darbības likums], Art. 2 (1).

¹²⁹ Operational Activities Law 1993 [Operatīvas darbības likums], Art. 7 (5).

¹³⁰ ibid, Art. 7 (5).

¹³¹ ibid, Art. 7 (4).

¹³² ibid, Art. 22 (5).

¹³³ ibid, Art. 17.

The Operational Actions Law further provides that operational activities cannot be used to obtain information from sworn advocates, sworn notaries, doctors, teachers, psychologists and clergy regarding their professional duties, except in cases where these persons themselves are suspected of being involved in a crime.¹³⁴ Although this provision essentially safeguards professional secrecy of specific persons, the law does not provide any criteria on how the authorities must prove their suspicions against the said persons to the judge, who may authorise operational measures. For instance, what if a protected person obtains information relating to his or her professional secrecy, but which is also connected to a crime? Therefore, it is possible to conclude that protection of professional secrecy is regarded more to information than to person; and regulation restricts from usage of the information in advance.

Existing provisions do not establish any special protection of professional activity of journalists in the same manner as for advocates and notaries. This may contradict the Council of Europe Recommendation No. R 2000 (7), especially Principle 6. As stated in the explanatory memorandum: 'principle 6 aims at ensuring that a mere interception order, surveillance order or search and seizure order does not circumvent the protection of journalist' sources...'¹³⁵ But at the same time 'this should not exclude, however that national authorities may apply measures of interception of communication, surveillance or judicial search and seizure for other lawful reasons in accordance with Articles 8 and 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights'.¹³⁶ Therefore, lack of this protection explains the analysis of common principles of Operational Activity, and requires extending of journalistic' sources protection in Operational Activities Law in accordance with these provisions.

Anti-Terrorism Laws

National anti-terrorism legislation does not explicitly refer to journalists and their sources of information, as it is mostly related to prevention of terrorism financing and money laundering (for example, the law on the prevention of money laundering and terrorism financing). And of course, the definition of terrorism is mentioned in Criminal Law: '[For a person, who commits a crime with] the use of explosives, use of fire, the use of nuclear chemical, chemical, biological, bacteriological, toxic or other weapons of mass destruction, mass poisoning, spreading of epidemics and epizootic diseases, kidnapping of persons, taking of hostages, hijacking of air, land or sea means of transport or other activities if they committed for the purpose of intimidating inhabitants or with the purpose of inciting the State, its institutions or international organizations to take any action or refrain therefrom, or for purposes of harming the State or the inhabitants thereof or the interests of international organizations (terrorism) <...>'.¹³⁷

¹³⁴ ibid, Art. 24 (5).

¹³⁵ Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 Principles concerning the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, principle 6; Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, para 53.

¹³⁶ ibid, para 54.

¹³⁷ The Criminal Law 1998 [Krimināllikums], Art. 88 (1, 2).

To summarize, operational activities measures in Latvia may be applied to any person. The legal system does not provide a special status for journalists, but at the same time it does provide protection for journalists' sources. Operational activities measures are applied both for surveillance and for investigation purposes. Accessibility of legislative norms is well established. However, certain improvements could be made regarding the precisability, foreseeability and clearance of legal norms. For example, it needs to be ensured that national legislation is in conformity with international human rights standards (especially taking into account ECtHR case-law). Regarding foreseeability, it is necessary to prevent all forms of arbitrary surveillance. To achieve this, legal norms should have clear conditions for the use of surveillance measures. If one of the defining criteria for execution of surveillance actions is committing of crime, it is necessary not only to enhance regulation on surveillance, but also keep legislation in line with the latest developments in the field, in order to avoid unlimited expansion of surveillance and violations of human rights. It is worth to mention that the basis for protection against violation of human rights by unlawful surveillance already exists in procedural law (both in civil and criminal). It is not allowed to use any facts that have been obtained by allowing procedural violations – this evidences shall be considered restrictedly inadmissible.^{138,139} It is also very important to mention about a lack of wide legal regulation in anti-terrorism sphere.

9. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

Encryption and anonymity, although used for both harm and benefit, can nevertheless greatly contribute to improving and strengthening the right to source protection. For example, a report on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression by the Special Rapporteur David Kayne indicates that encryption could be viewed as part of human rights.

Journalists have to understand a difference between encryption and anonymity: encryption protects the content of communications (“material” criteria), but anonymity protects identifying factors, for example Internet Protocol (IP) address, known as metadata (“procedural” criteria).¹⁴⁰ Also, it is quite important to know that different ways and measures exist for reaching anonymity (from fake accounts to Virtual Private Networks, VPNs).

Application of different measures of encryption such as “text-encryption” (e-mails, documents) and sound-encryption (conversations record with voice distortion) allow journalists to protect not only their sources, but also any other information. Such measures are applied in the activities of local mass media. Of course a lot of other measures exist, like anonymization of documents, which can help achieve the aim of encryption.

¹³⁸ Criminal Procedure Law [Kriminālprocesa likums], Art. 130 (3).

¹³⁹ Civil Procedure Law [Civilprocesa likums], Art. 95.

¹⁴⁰ Report of the Special Rapporteur (David Kaye) on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, para 9.

The question of encryption is closely connected with cyber security – if any devices which has been used for encryption (no matter at which stage: sending, receiving, transmission) have malicious software in its “realm” that could be reasonable enough to suggest that security of information is shattered. It can lead to any number of consequences: illegal access to data, illegal interception of data, data interference which are cybercrimes.¹⁴¹

Relating to anonymity, a description of special features of activity in the cyberspace can be found in writings of Latvian legal scholars. One of the main “features” of activity is conditional anonymity. The Vice-President of the Constitutional Court, Mr. Uldis Ķinis, believes that activity in cyberspace can be identified because of architecture of Internet and cookie-files. The existence of cookie-files in the cyberspace can help to identify user, who performed actions in the network.¹⁴² Therefore, it cannot be said that journalists can feel completely anonymous in cyberspace or while using electronic devices. For example, in the handbook for journalists of digital source protection, described that anonymization services are not so safe, because they can see source of connection; it is proposed to use “Tor” browser.¹⁴³

Furthermore, it is required to analyse a legal regulation related to encryption and anonymity. Any enterprise which provides electronic connection services to persons is subjected to the laws on Electronic Communications. One of the obligations for such enterprises (electronic communications merchants) is to be ensured, in accordance with procedures laid down in Article 71¹ of this Law, the storage of data to be retained for eighteen months, as well as the transfer thereof to pre-trial investigation institutions, bodies performing investigatory operation, State security institutions, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the court if these institutions request such.¹⁴⁴

Therefore this Article allows us to state that merchants have to collect information and if there is some kind of request from authorities (listed above) it must transfer this information to the authorities. The Law does not precisely describe a full list of information that should be collected, but mentioned regulation for location data processing,¹⁴⁵ for processing of traffic data,¹⁴⁶ and so on. But, two things should be noticed: first, the authorities can receive this information only after proper request, and second, the Law prescribes that all stored data must be deleted after the expiry of the eighteen-month time-limit.¹⁴⁷

¹⁴¹ Convention on cybercrime 2001, Arts. 2 – 4.

¹⁴² Ķinis Uldis, Informācijas un Komunikāciju Tiesības. (2nd edition Rīga Biznesa augstskola Turība 2002) 68 – 69 [Latvian].

¹⁴³ Praktiskā digitālo avotu aizsardzība, 6.

¹⁴⁴ Electronic Communications Law 2004 [Elektronisko sakaru likums], Art. 19 (1, sub. 11).

¹⁴⁵ ibid, Art. 71.

¹⁴⁶ ibid, Art. 70.

¹⁴⁷ Electronic Communications Law 2004 [Elektronisko sakaru likums], Art. 71¹ (8).

Also, it is worth mentioning that in the Latvian legal system, there are special procedural rules of request from authorities and transfer by merchants.¹⁴⁸ These rules provide a special request form, where a justification of such request should be given.¹⁴⁹ This can be counted as a mechanism which strengthens data protection on the one hand, and on the other – provides an opportunity for authorities to request such information for the needs of justice.

Regarding encryption, its aim should be mentioned. Put simply, encryption allows a sender to be sure that only the exact and intended recipient will have access to transmitted information. In addition, such information will not be the object of any interference or alteration.¹⁵⁰ The phenomenon of encryption can also be analysed by taking into account the balance between public interests and human rights. Namely, any person and civil society as a whole are subjected to interference and attacks by State and non-State actors.¹⁵¹ Of course, the existence of legislation, which provides right to a remedy for a violation of privacy, is welcomed. But, in practice, a problem still exists where victims of such violations, in most cases, are not able to provide any evidence of a violation (see, Zakharov v. Russia).¹⁵² The existence of such situations, in our opinion, demonstrates that encryption should be a part of privacy and should not be restricted.

With regard to the situation in Latvia, there is no special legislation of encryption and anonymity in cyberspace. This, being a problem, was previously noted in 2004,¹⁵³ but has not been solved as of yet.

Although the issue of anonymity was touched upon in the Nagla case,¹⁵⁴ there is no other domestic case-law relating to these topics.

10. The Protection of Whistle-blowers

Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under the laws protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

¹⁴⁸ Procedures by which Pre-trial Investigative Institutions, Bodies Performing Investigatory Operations, State Security Institutions, Office of the Prosecutor and Court Request and a Merchant of Electronic Communications Transfers Data to be Retained, and Procedures by which Statistical Information regarding Requests of Data to be Retained and Issuing thereof is Compiled, 2007

¹⁴⁹ Ibid., Annex 1 (Section 2)

¹⁵⁰ Report of the Special Rapporteur (David Kaye) on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, para 17.

¹⁵¹ Ibid, para 18.

¹⁵² Case of Roman Zakharov v. Russia (application No. 47143/06) [2015] Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2015 [English], para 165.

¹⁵³ Ķiniš Uldis, Patvaļīga Piekļūšana Datorsistēmai: kā Piemērot Krimināllikumu. [2004] Jurista Vārds 23/24 (328/329) [Latvian]

¹⁵⁴ Case of Nagla v. Latvia (application No. 73469/10), [2013] ... [English], para 80.

10.1. The Protection of Whistle-blowers under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources

Whistle-blowers are indirectly protected through the protection of journalistic sources in Section 22 (1) of the Law on the Press and Other Media, which states that the media is allowed not to specify the identity of whistle-blowers in any case, and is prohibited to reveal the identity of a person if he or she has explicitly expressed the will to stay anonymous.¹⁵⁵

Thus, however, Section 22(2) states that in order to protect the important interests of the society or the person and the court, it is possible for a court to ask to indicate the source of information. This implies that a court may also order to reveal the identity of the whistle-blower, regardless of whether anonymity was requested by this person. If such an order is made, the principle of proportionality nevertheless has to be taken into account. It is important to note that a court may order to reveal a whistle-blower's identity only in criminal proceedings.

Whistle-blowers will not be protected under the Law on the Press if they have decided to publish the information themselves, and not via the mass media, for example, by creating a personal blog. Such an approach is compatible with Recommendation No. R(2000) 7, according to which the protection of journalistic sources a certain occupational tendency is required and individuals who otherwise would not regard themselves as being journalists shall not qualify as journalists.¹⁵⁶ Additionally, not all whistle-blowers who have submitted their information to somebody receive protection, as specific criteria need to be fulfilled in order to qualify as a 'mass medium'.¹⁵⁷

10.2. Other Practices for Protecting Whistle-blowers

10.2.1. The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers and its Compliance with the Recommendation CM/Rec(2014)7

The Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia is currently being drafted and is expected to enter into force at the beginning of 2017.¹⁵⁸

This draft law defines whistle-blowers as natural persons, who in good faith, have submitted a report or information on any possible detected, past or future law violations in the work of public institutions and governmental, local government or private legal entities that causes or may cause damage to any group in society or the general public.¹⁵⁹ A whistle-blower must also be sure about the truthfulness of the reported news in order to be protected.¹⁶⁰

¹⁵⁵Law on the Press and Other Media 1990 [Par presiuncitiemmasuinformācijaslīdzekļiem], s 22.

¹⁵⁶Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No.R. (2000), Part II, section 13 (ii).

¹⁵⁷ See Section 2 of the Law on the Press

¹⁵⁸The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia 2015 [Trauksmescēlējulumprojekts].

¹⁵⁹Ibid., s 1.(1), 1(2).

¹⁶⁰Ibid., s 4.

Section 5 of the draft explicitly prohibits the punishment a whistle-blower or the creation of any adverse consequences for him or her because of the use of his or hers rights in the scope of this law in connection to the relation to the service or employment relationship. Thus, the protection is defined in its narrowest scope only for employees and people working in public institutions.

According to the draft law, whistle-blowers will be able to report to the Corruption Prevention and Combating Bureau (KNAB) or to any other institution according to its competence established in law – or to both of the institutions at the same time.¹⁶¹ Thus, clear channels are established for public interest reporting.¹⁶² What is missing, however, is the possibility to report the information to journalists (Recommendation, Section 14.3). This question is not mentioned at all in the draft law, even though the scope of the Law on the Press and Other Media is not enough. Also, the reports within the organisations/enterprises without the influence of an outside organisation (Recommendation, Section 14.1.) are left out.

In the report to the KNAB or other institutions, whistle-blowers will have to explicitly state if he or she wants their personal information and the information about the whistleblowing not to be revealed.¹⁶³ Thus, Principle 18 of the Recommendation is fulfilled – whistle-blowers are entitled to have their confidentiality of the identity maintained, however, not automatically. Whistle-blowers should be entitled to have their identities kept confidential by those to whom they report, unless they agree otherwise (subject to fair trial guarantees)¹⁶⁴ as it has been done in the Law on Submissions,¹⁶⁵ not vice versa.

Under the Draft Law, the KNAB will be responsible for the protection of the whistle-blowers and be competent to evaluate the complaints about the influencing of the whistle-blowers.¹⁶⁶ The protection of whistle-blowers is indented through determining the status of the report and also the initiated case files as a restricted access.¹⁶⁷ Also, the information about the whistleblowing fact will be allowed to be disclosed only with a written consent from the whistle-blower.¹⁶⁸ The information about the person will not be allowed to be published at least one year after the end of the examination period, initiated by the report of the whistle-blower.¹⁶⁹ The protection of the identity and the facts of the report, however, when looked in context of Section 6 (2) of the draft law, still apply only to the cases when a whistle-blower has asked for protection.

¹⁶¹The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia, s 6(1).

¹⁶²Appendix to Recommendation CM/Rec (2014)7 s 13.

¹⁶³The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia, s 6(2).

¹⁶⁴Leaflet by the Council of Europe on whistleblowing and the Recommendation, 2015, 3.

¹⁶⁵Law on Submissions 2000 [Iesniegumlikums] s 9.

¹⁶⁶The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia, s 7.

¹⁶⁷*ibid*, s 9(1)(1).

¹⁶⁸*ibid*, s 9(1)(2).

¹⁶⁹*ibid*, s 9(3).

The KNAB will have the right to issue binding orders to the employers of the whistle-blowers in relation to their legal protection.¹⁷⁰ Thus, the Principle 21 of the Recommendation is implemented and the whistle-blowers get protected against any retaliation by the employers and the persons working and acting on behalf of the employer. If the KNAB finds a causal link between the report and the counteractions, it will have the right to request in writing the employer or the institution to immediately stop those counteractions.¹⁷¹ In case it would not be possible for a whistle-blower to continue work even after this request, to protect the right of the whistle-blower to work unaffectedly, he or she will personally have the right to ask the head of the institution to transfer him to an equivalent post¹⁷² in 90 days' time.¹⁷³ The KNAB will also have the right to raise the issue of the prosecution of officials who were affecting the whistle-blowers and, if necessary, also to participate in the work of the disciplinary investigation commissions.¹⁷⁴ Hence, the scope and the possibilities of the protection will be quite wide in order to encourage reporting and to limit the possibility of retaliation from the employers.

If a whistle-blower demonstrates the factors, which could be the basis for influencing him/her because of his/hers report, the burden of the rebuttal of those conditions rests with the employer or the institution.¹⁷⁵ Thus, a whistle-blower will have the possibility to defend his rights in a fair trial before a court, as required by Section 10 of the Recommendation. The court will have the duty to evaluate the reasonableness of the disciplinary punishment and the connection between it and the report.¹⁷⁶ Additionally, whistle-blowers will have the right to ask compensation for damages from the employer if the counteractions, following the report, have led to violations of personal rights and legal interests of the whistle-blower.¹⁷⁷ So the rights of a person to have the appropriate remuneration after the violation of his/hers rights are again stressed.

The Draft Law states that the protection will not be applicable in the cases when the whistleblowing happens contrary to good faith or when the whistle-blowers have submitted the report in order to avoid responsibility for the consequences of the harm caused by their actions or inaction, and liability is inevitable due to the fact finding of infringement before the whistleblowing.¹⁷⁸ However, nothing is mentioned about the cases when the information in the report of a whistle-blower is accidentally wrong or the perceived threat to the public interest has not materialised (Section 22 of the Recommendation), even though this question was also stressed by the Cabinet of Ministers as an important problem that should be solved by ¹⁷⁰ibid, s 8(4).

¹⁷¹ibid, s 9(6).

¹⁷²ibid, s 9(7).

¹⁷³ibid, s 9(8).

¹⁷⁴The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia, s 8(6).

¹⁷⁵ibid., s 10(1).

¹⁷⁶ibid., s 10(2), s 10(3).

¹⁷⁷ibid., s 9.

¹⁷⁸ibid., s 9(11).

adoptingspecific regulations.¹⁷⁹ In those cases also the principle of proportionality should be applied alongside the assessment of potential benefits to society and the damages caused to other through the misinformation.¹⁸⁰

10.2.2. The Existing Protection of Whistle-blowers under other Legal Acts

At the moment, before the Law on the Protection of Whistle-blowers has come into force, the existing legislation is distorted and fragmented both in the material and personal scope.¹⁸¹ Many of the protections are general and applicable not only to whistle-blowers. Nevertheless, at least some kind of security, especially for the employees, is established.

The fundamental protection is Section 100 of the Constitution on the Republic of Latvia (Latvijas Republikas Satversme) that states that ‘everyone has the right to freedom of expression which includes the right to freely receive, keep and distribute information and to express his or her views.’ Secondly, the Law on Submissions explicitly protects the identity of a person, who submits a request, a complaint, a proposal or a matter within the competence of the institution.¹⁸² It is prohibited to disclose information revealing the submitters identity without his or hers consent, except the case when the institution must disclose such information in accordance with the law. If the submitter does not want that the facts referred to in the submission are disclosed, he or she shall specify it in the submission.¹⁸³ A similar provision found in the Administrative Procedure Law reads as follows: ‘Information regarding the private life of a natural person, except in cases provided for in the norms of law, may be given only with the consent of such person.’¹⁸⁴ The Supreme Court of Latvia has held that the goal of such regulation is to ensure that private persons who face the breaches of law in the work of governmental institutions or courts would report on those breaches without fearing from the revenge from the officials or any other adverse treatment.¹⁸⁵

Furthermore, from a more specific point of view the Law On Prevention on Conflict of Interest in Activities of Public Officials prohibits the head of a State or local government authority or a collegial authority to disclose the information, which has become known thereto, concerning which a public official or employee of the relevant authority has informed regarding conflicts of interest, and to cause any direct or indirect unfavourable consequences to such a person without any objective reason.¹⁸⁶ Slightly similar, the Labour Law forbids sanctioning an employee or otherwise directly or indirectly cause adverse consequences for him or her because the employee

¹⁷⁹Cabinet of Ministers Order No. 393 on Anti-Corruption Guidelines 2015-2020 2000 [Ministru kabineta rīkojums Nr.393 Par Korupcijas novēršanas un apkarošanas pamatnostādņem 2015.-2020.gadam] Division 8.

¹⁸⁰ibid.

¹⁸¹Kristīne Dupate, Trankums cēle jūtiesiskā aizsardzība Latvijā („Sabiedrība par atklātību – Delna”, 2012) 6 [Latvian].

¹⁸²Law on Submissions 2000 [Iesniegumlikums], s 2(1).

¹⁸³ibid., s 9.

¹⁸⁴Administrative Procedure Law 2001 [Administratīvā procesa likums], s 54(2)

¹⁸⁵SKA-87/201 [2014] Supreme Court of Latvia [AT 2014. g. 30. Maija spriedums lietā Nr. SKA-87/2014], [4], [7].

¹⁸⁶The Law On Prevention on Conflict of Interest in Activities of Public Officials | 2002 | Par interešu konfliktu novēršanu valsts amatpersonu darbībā, s 20(7).

informs competent institutions or officials regarding suspicions with respect to the committing of criminal offences or administrative violations in the workplace.¹⁸⁷

Additionally, Section 11 Part 6 of the Freedom of Information Law states that the correspondence between an institution and an applicant and information regarding this person shall be deemed to be restricted access information. Whistle-blowers are also protected under the Special Protection of Persons Law when they are taking part in the criminal proceedings as witnesses or other persons, who have given a testimony about a serious or a particularly serious crime, or when taking part in the detection or investigation of such crimes¹⁸⁸ if there is a legal ground for such protection.¹⁸⁹ The whistle-blowing, however, is not mentioned as one of the circumstances, which excludes criminal liability under the Criminal Law,¹⁹⁰ despite its societal value, and there also are no cases when the defendant would have been excluded from criminal liability through the need for the specific whistle-blower protection and the acquittal.¹⁹¹

10.3. The Prohibition of Identifying Whistle-Blowers

Under Section 6 of the Personal Data Protection Law, every natural person has the right to protection of his or her personal data. This 'personal data' is defined as any information related to an identified or identifiable natural person¹⁹² as the Supreme Court has acknowledged that it is prohibited not only to reveal such information about the person that directly is connected to its identity (name, surname, the title, etc.), but also reveal the information from which it would be possible to deduce the identity of the person.¹⁹³

However, there is no specific normative act that would generally prohibit the identifying of the whistle-blowers. Natural persons and companies can still somehow try identifying whistle-blowers there is no penalty for trying to find out the identity of the whistle-blower.

The Law Protecting Whistle-blowers, when adopted, will also prohibit only the affecting of whistle-blowers because of their reports. It is not specifically mentioned that the identification of a whistle-blower as such, as long as it does not have any negative effect of the person, would be prohibited.

¹⁸⁷Labour Law 2001 [Darbalikums], s 9(1).

¹⁸⁸Special Protection of Persons Law 2005 [Personuspeciālāsaizsardzībaslikums], s 4.

¹⁸⁹ibid. s 6.

¹⁹⁰Criminal Law 1998 [Krimināllikums], s 28.

¹⁹¹Dupate., Trauksmesceļjutiesiskā aizsardzība Latvijā 9

¹⁹²Personal Data Protection Law 2000 [Fiziskopersonudatuaizsardzībaslikums], s 2(3).

¹⁹³SKA-87/2014 [2014] Supreme Court of Latvia [AT 2014. g. 30. Maijaspriedumslietā Nr. SKA-87/2014], [8].

12. Conclusion

The duty not to disclose journalists source can be found in both – state legislative acts and journalists ethic norms. Criminal procedure law lays down a general obligation for state authorities to respect human rights, including the right to source protection.

There are two main situations in which the right not to indicate the source could be violated: 1) it could be violated by the investigator or prosecutor when forcing a journalist to disclose his source without a judge's decision; or 2) it could be violated by the judge who inadequately weights the proportionality of the rights of the person and the public interest.

Criminal Procedure Law in general tries to comply with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 related to the question, but the Law is not detailed enough. It allows to restrict human rights in a case when public safety is in concern. As we can see from the cases mentioned in the answer to the question 4 where Latvian authorities have tried to compel journalists to disclose their sources, in practice everything is not as clear. Because no exhaustive list of exceptions when the restriction of human rights is allowed is provided in the Criminal Procedure Law, authorities sometimes interpret the law arbitrarily. Including the list of circumstances in the law would help to clarify the reasons that are sufficient enough for restricting journalists' right and duty to protect its source.

The Ombudsmen of Latvia has also pointed out that these cases, indicates that the Article 121 of Criminal Procedure Law, which refers to professional secrets that are protected by criminal procedure, should be amended in order to apply to journalists, as well. However, no amendments have been made in this regard.

The current redaction of the Law on Press does not include the possible reasoning for the demand to reveal the sources of information, even though there have been several debates on changing it. Nevertheless, certain limitations are found in other laws. It is stated, that a mass media can only be forced to disclose their sources in criminal proceedings and also only if it is in compliance with the proportionality principle and according to the prevailing interest established in Constitution. The legitimate interests mentioned in Constitution do not comply with the ones mentioned in Recommendation

The cases and the rulings by the courts concerning the revealing of the journalistic information sources are mostly confidential and not available to the public.. However, in most of the known cases the court has ruled in favour of the journalist and only one decision had to be overruled in ECHR. Usually the sources of the journalist were not forced to be revealed because there were alternative measures possible for the complainant. Only in one case the Court did not weigh the interests and stated that the protection of the state secret is more important than the rights of the journalist; however, this was a controversial ruling that was later reversed in ECHR. Additionally the Senate has agreed that the journalists cannot be punished under the Criminal Law for the failure to comply with a court decision for the disclosure and the journalists can appeal the decision of the Court.

Thus the situation in Latvia only partly complies with the Recommendation; nevertheless the right of journalists to protect their sources is basically almost incontestable.

Currently the whistle-blowers are protected only through the distorted and fragmented general laws. The Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia is currently being drafted, and it defines whistle-blowers and also states the protection when the whistle-blowers get influenced after their report. The special institution will be responsible for protection of the whistle-blowers and competent to evaluate the complaints about the influencing of the whistle-blowers with the ability to issue binding orders to the employers. However, the whistle-blowers will have to explicitly state if he or she wants the personal information and the information about the whistle-blowing as such not to be revealed; the scope of possible whistle-blowers is very narrow (only employees and people working in public institutions) and the possibility to report the information to journalists and within the organisations/enterprises without the influence of an outside organisation are left out completely.

13. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

13.1. Legislation

- Convention on Cybercrime 2001
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists not to Disclosure their Sources of Information 2000.
- The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia 1992 [Latvijas Republikas Satversme].
- Administrative Procedure Law 2001 [Administratīvā procesa likums]
- Constitution Protection bureau Law 1994 [Satversmes aizsardzības biroja likums].
- Electronic Communications Law 2004 [Elektronisko sakaru likums].
- Labour Law 2001 [Darba likums]
- Law on the prevention of money laundering and terrorism financing 2008 [Noziedzīgi iegūtu līdzekļu legalizācijas un terorisma finansēšanas novēršanas likums].
- Law on Submissions 2000 [Iesniegumu likums]
- Law on the Press and other Mass Media 1990 [Likums par presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem]
- National Security Law 2000 [Nacionālās drošības likums].
- Personal Data Protection Law 2000 [Fizisko personu datu aizsardzības likums]
- Special Protection of Persons Law 2005 [Personu speciālās aizsardzības likums]
- The Civil Procedure Law 1998 [Civilprocesa likums]
- The Criminal Law 1998 [Krimināllikums]
- The Criminal Procedure Law 2005 [Kriminālprocesa likums].
- The Law On Prevention on Conflict of Interest in Activities of Public Officials 2002 [Par interešu konflikta novēršanu valsts amatpersonu darbībā]
- The Law on State Security institutions 1994 [Valsts drošības iestāžu likums].
- The Operational activities law 1993 [Operatīvās darbības likums]
- The Project of the Law Protecting Whistle-blowers in Latvia 2015 [Trauksmes cēlēju likumprojekts].
- Council of Europe, "Recommendation CM/rec (2011) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on a new notion of media"
- CoE Parliamentary Assembly draft resolution, 1 December 2010, doc.12443
- CoE Parliamentary Assembly recommendation 150 (2011) on the protection of journalists' sources
- Code of Ethics of the Latvian Journalists' Association, 2014 [Latvijas Žurnālistu asociācijas ētikas kodekss]
- The Provision of the Commission of Ethics. Association of Journalists of the Republic of Latvia [Latvijas Žurnālistu asociācijas Ētikas komisijas Nolikums].
- Civil Law of the Republic of Latvia. Published: Valdības Vēstnesis, 26 February 1937, No.46.

13.2. Case Law

- De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium ECHR 1997
- Goodwin v. the United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996)
- Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013)
- Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010)
- Dreiblats v. Latvia App no 8283/07 (ECtHR, 4 June 2013)
- Vides Aizsardzības Klubs v. Latvia App no 57829/00 (ECtHR, 27 May 2004)
- Társaság a Szabadságjogokért v. Hungary App no 37374/05 (ECtHR, 14 April 2009)
- Steel and Morris v. the United Kingdom App no 68416/01 (ECtHR, 15 February 2005)
- Groppera Radio AG and others v. Switzerland App no 10890/84 (ECtHR, 28 March 1990)
- Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom (ECtHR, application no. 821/03)
- IACHR, Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985, Compulsory Membership in an association prescribed by law for the practice of journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights)
- Martin and others v. France [ECHR 12, April 2012], App. no. 30002/08.
- Éditions Odile Jacob SAS v. European Commission [ECJ 9, June 2010], App. no. T237/05.
- Kasabova v. Bulgaria [ECHR, 19, April 2011], App. no. 22385/03.
- Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC, 7, February 2012] App. no. 39954/08.
- Valenzuela Contreras v. Spain [ECHR 30, July 1998], App no. 58/1997/842/1048.
- Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg [ECHR 25, February 2003], App. no. 51772/99.
- Ernst and Others v. Belgium [ECHR 15, July 2003], App. no. 33400/96.
- Liepājnieks v. Latvia [ECHR 2, November 2010], App no.37586/06.
- Savičs v. Latvia [ECHR 27, November 2012], App. no. 17892/03.
- Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v. the Netherlands [ECHR 22, November 2012], App. no.39315/06.
- Bureau of Investigative Journalism and Alice Ross v. The United Kingdom [ECHR 11 September, 2014], App. no. 62322/14.
- Szabó and Vissy v. Hungary [ECHR 12 January, 2016], App. no.37138/14.
- Grišankova and Grišankovs v. Latvia [ECHR, 2003], App. no. 36117/02.

Latvian Case Law

- Judgment no. 2003-02-0106 of the Constitutional court of the Republic of Latvia, 05.06.2003,
- Nr.2003-05-01 [2003] Constitutional Court on the Republic of Latvia [Latvian]
- Nr.2009-45-01 [2010] Constitutional Court on the Republic of Latvia [Latvian]
- SKA-87/201 [2014] The Supreme Court of Latvia [AT 2014. g. 30. Maija spriedums lietā Nr. SKA-87/2014]
- Judgment no. SKA-194/2007 of the Administrative Department of the Supreme court Senate, 08.06.2007.
- SKK - 668/2007 [2007] The Supreme Court of Latvia [AT 2007. gada 4. Decembra lēmums Lietā SKK - 668/2007]
- 5 September 2006 decision of the Rīga Centre District investigative judge in case No. KPL-27040006/3
- 20 September 2006 decision of the Rīga Centre District court in case No. KPL27040006
- 14 June 2010 decision of the Rīga Centre District court in case No. KPL-27029710

- 26 May 2011 judgment of the Supreme Court of Latvia No. SKA-421/2011.
- Riga District court case of 14, November 2014, App. no. 133018914

13.3. Books and articles

13.3.1. English titles

- Pieter van Dijk, Fried van Hoof, Arjen van Rijn, Leo Zwaak (eds.), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights (4th edn, Intersentia 2006)
- Clare Ovey, Robin White, The European Convention on Human Rights (4th edn, OUP 2006)

13.3.2. Latvian titles

- Dubava I. Whether Competence of the Constitutional Court should be Expanded. Journal "Jurista Vārds", 15.10.2013, No. 42 (793).
- Dupate K., Trauksmes cēlēju tiesiskā aizsardzība Latvijā („Sabiedrība par atklātību – Delna”, 2012).
- Insight of the European Court of Human Rights judgment ‘Nagla v. Latvia’. “Jurista Vārds”, 27.08.2013, no. 35 (786).
- Kučs A., Biriņa L. Protection of Sources of Journalists in ECHR Case Law and the case ‘Nagla v. Latvia’. Published: „Jurista Vārds”, 27.08.2013, no. 35 (786).
- Kučs A. The Article 100 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia. Commentary of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia. Section VIII Human Rights. Collective of authors. Riga ‘Latvijas Vēstnesis’, 2011.
- Kūtris G., ‘Rokasgrāmata tiesnešiem kriminālprocesā’ [2010] TNA.
- Kamenska A. ‘Pilsoniskās un politiskās tiesības’ (Cik demokrātiska ir Latvija? : Demokrātijas audits, 2005–2014. Zin.red. Rozenvalds J.)
- Ķīnis Ul., Informācijas un Komunikāciju Tiesības. (2nd edition Rīga Biznesa augstskola Turība 2002) .
- Ķīnis Uldis. Patvaļīga piekļūšana datorsistēmai: kā piemērot Krimināllikumu. Jurista vārds Nr. 23/24 (328/329) 2004)
- Meikališa Ā., Strada-Rozenberga K. Kriminālprocess. Raksti. 2005 – 2010. Rīga, Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2010, – 832 p
- Pleps J., Pastars E., Plakane I. Constitutional Law. Supplemented and Revised Edition. Rīga: VAS ‘Latvijas Vēstnesis’, 2014.
- Reine I. Commentary for the judgment ‘Nagla v. Latvia’. “Jurista Vārds”, 17.10.2013, no. 38 (789).
- Skudra O, Šulmane I, Dreijere V. ‘Plašsaziņas līdzekļi demokrātiskā sabiedrībā’ (Cik demokrātiska ir Latvija? : Demokrātijas audits, 2005–2014. Zin.red. Rozenvalds J.)
- Tiesībsargabiņrojs, ‘Latvijas cilvēktiesību joma. 2000.gada 4.ceturksnis’ [2001] Jurista Vārds No 12(205)

13.3.3. Other titles

- Grundgesetz Kommentar, Band I, Präambelbis Art. 20, Aufl. 4. Von Münch / Kunig (Hrsg.). München: C.H.Beck'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung, 1992, [German]

13.4. Internet sources

13.4.1. English titles

- Article 19, Licensing of Media Workers, available at: <www.article19.org/pages/en/licensing-of-media-workers.html>
- Freedom of the Press 2014. Published: <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-press/2014/latvia>

13.4.2. Latvian titles

- Delfi.lv ‘Tiesa neliek NRA atklāt informācijas avotus Repšes lietā’ (Delfi.lv, May 23 2006), <http://www.delfi.lv/news/national/politics/tiesa-neliek-nra-atklat-informacijas-avotus-repses-lieta.d?id=13980196> accessed February 13 2016.
- LETA, ‘Žurnālistam prasa piespriest naudas sodu par informācijas avota neatklāšanu’ (TvNet.lv, May 10 2007) <<http://www.tvnet.lv/zinas/kriminalzinas/281441-zurnalistam-prasa-piespriest-naudas-sodu-par-informacijas-avota-neatklasanu>>, accessed 13 February 2013.
- LETA, ‘Pēc policijas ierosinājuma tiesa Jelgavas žurnālistam lūgs atklāt tiesas sēdes protokola kopijas iesniedzēju’, (Zemgales Ziņas, November 29 2013), <<http://zz.diena.lv/vietejas-zinas/jelgava/pec-policijas-ierosinajuma-tiesa-jelgavas-zurnalistam-lugs-atklat-tiesas-sedes-protokola-kopijas-ies-170867>> accessed February 13 2016
- Liene Barisa, NRA, ‘Saeima labošot likuma pantu par žurnālista avotu atklāšanu’ (TvNet.lv, 16 May 2007) <<http://www.tvnet.lv/zinas/latvija/216990-saeima-labosot-likuma-pantu-par-zurnalista-avotu-atklasanu>> accessed 13 February 2016.
- Dimants A. ‘Privileģija klusēt’ <<http://providus.lv/article/privilegija-kluset>>
- Rozentāls A. ‘Izmanto, lai tiktu pie avota’ (Diena.lv, 6 December 2013) <<http://www.diena.lv/sodien-laikraksta/izmanto-lai-tiktu-pie-avota-14035717>> accessed 13 February 2013
- Latvijas Republikas Tiesībsarga atzinums: <www.diena.lv/upload/manual/atzinums_par.doc>
- Tiesībsarga birojs, ‘Policijai ir jārespektē vārda brīvība un informācijas avotu aizsardzība’ <<http://www.tiesibsargs.lv/petijumi-un-publikacijas/relizes/policijai-ir-jarespekte-varda-briviba-un-informacijas-avotu-aizsardziba>>

13.5. Other sources

13.5.1. English titles

- Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 Principles concerning the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information
- Explanatory Memorandum on the Committee of Ministers Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 (On the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information) 2000
- Leaflet by the Council of Europe on whistleblowing and the Recommendation, 2015
- Report of the Special Rapporteur (David Kaye) on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression
- David Banisar, Silencing Sources: An International Survey of Protections and Threats to Journalists' Sources (Privacy International 2006-2007)
- Promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression Report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Abid Hussain, submitted pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/26, E/CN.4/1998/40, 28 January 1998
- Action report of the Government of the Republic of Latvia on the execution of the judgement of the ECHR in the case of Nagla v. Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013), adopted on 25 November 2015
- HRC "General comment no 34: Article 19, Freedoms of opinion and expression" (2011) UN Doc CCPR/C/GC/34
- La Rue F. (11 August 2011), Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right of opinion and expression, UN Doc. A/65/284

13.5.2. Latvian titles

- Apkopojums par 9. Saeimas komisiju darbu 2007.gada rudens sesijā (no 2007.gada 4.septembra līdz 20.decembrim)' (20 December 2007).
<http://www.saeima.lv/documents/3bad5684a6bb465c53be89b00692f9b7af73f520>
- 'Latvijas Republikas Saeimas Publiskais Pārskats 2008' (2008)
<http://www.saeima.lv/documents/717e6615164717eca72c7ebb2cf8a7b44112d9a7>
- Cabinet of Ministers Order No. 393 on Anti-Corruption Guidelines 2015-2020 2000 [Ministru kabineta rīkojums Nr.393 Par Korupcijas novēršanas un apkarošanas pamatnostādņem 2015.-2020.gadam].

14. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 89. pants: Valsts atzīst un aizsargā cilvēka pamattiesības saskaņā ar šo Satversmi, likumiem un Latvijai saistošiem starptautiskajiem līgumiem.	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Article 89: The State shall recognise and protect fundamental human rights in accordance with this Constitution, laws and international agreements binding upon Latvia.
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 96. pants: Ikvienam ir tiesības uz privātās dzīves, mājokļa un korespondences neaizskaramību.	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Article 96: Everyone has the right to inviolability of his or her private life, home and correspondence.
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 100. pants: Ikvienam ir tiesības uz vārda brīvību, kas ietver tiesības brīvi iegūt, paturēt un izplatīt informāciju, paust savus uzskatus. Cenzūra ir aizliegta.	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Article 100: Everyone has the right to freedom of expression, which includes the right to freely receive, keep and distribute information and to express his or her views. Censorship is prohibited.
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 116. pants: Personas tiesības, kas noteiktas Satversmes deviņdesmit sestajā, deviņdesmit septītajā, deviņdesmit astotajā, simtajā, simt otrajā, simt trešajā, simt sestajā un simt astotajā pantā, var ierobežot likumā paredzētajos gadījumos, lai aizsargātu citu cilvēku tiesības, demokrātisko valsts iekārtu, sabiedrības drošību, labklājību un tikumību. Uz šajā pantā minēto nosacījumu	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Article 116: The rights of persons set out in Articles ninety-six, ninety-seven, ninety-eight, one hundred, one hundred and two, one hundred and three, one hundred and six, and one hundred and eight of the Constitution may be subject to restrictions in circumstances provided for by law in order to protect the rights of other people, the

pamata var ierobežot arī reliģiskās pārliecības paušanu.	democratic structure of the State, and public safety, welfare and morals. On the basis of the conditions set forth in this Article, restrictions may also be imposed on the expression of religious beliefs.
Elektronisko sakaru likums, 19. panta pirmā daļas 11 punkts: Elektronisko sakaru komersantam ir šādi pienākumi: <...> Regulatora noteiktajā kārtībā, apjomā un atbilstoši Regulatora nosacījumiem sniegt informāciju par kabeļu kanalizācijas izvietojumu, pieejamo ietilpību un citiem fiziskiem parametriem, kuri ir nepieciešami citiem operatoriem nākamās paaudzes piekļuves (NGA) kabeļtīklu ierīkošanai. Šī informācija nav uzskatāma par komercnoslēpumu. Elektronisko sakaru komersants nesniedz informāciju par publisko elektronisko sakaru tīklu un tā elementiem, kurus aizsargā nacionālo drošību un informācijas tehnoloģiju drošību reglamentējoši normatīvie akti. Informācijas sniegšanas maksa, ja tāda tiek piemērota, ir tuvināta izmaksām.	Electronic Communications Law, Section 19 (1.11): Electronic communications merchants have the following duties, to: <...> establish a separate electronic communications merchant for the utilisation and provision of services of cable television networks if an electronic communications merchant has a significant influence in the provision of an electronic communications network or the voice telephony services market, or if it is controlled by the State or local government or if it ensures an electronic communications network, which is established and operated in the same geographic territory on the basis of special rights.
Elektronisko sakaru likums, 70. pants: (1) (Izslēgta ar 03.05.2007. likumu.) (2) Noslodzes datus apstrādā laikposmā, kurā lietotājs vai abonents var apstrīdēt rēķinu un veikt maksājumus normatīvajos aktos noteiktajā kārtībā. Atsevišķos gadījumos noslodzes datu apstrāde un uzglabāšana ir atļauta, kamēr tiek izskatīta un atrisināta pretenzija, kā arī līdz laikam, kad tiek piedzīts neveiktais maksājums. (3) Elektronisko sakaru komersants ir tiesīgs apstrādāt noslodzes datus bez iepriekšējas saskaņošanas ar lietotāju vai abonentu tikai maksas uzskaitē par sniegtajiem elektronisko	Electronic Communications Law, Section 70: (1) [3 May 2007] (2) Traffic data shall be processed in a time period, in which the user or subscriber may dispute the bill and perform payments according to the procedures laid down in laws and regulations. In individual cases, it is allowed to process and store the traffic data while objections are being examined and resolved, as well as until the time when unpaid payments are recovered. (3) An electronic communications merchant is entitled to process traffic data without

sakaru pakalpojumiem, maksājumu piedziņai, pretenziju izskatīšanai vai starpsavienojumu nodrošināšanai, izņemot šā panta septītajā, astotajā un devītajā daļā, kā arī šā likuma 68., 71.1 un 71.2 pantā paredzētos gadījumus.

(4) Noslodzes datu apstrāde ir atļauta elektronisko sakaru pakalpojumu izplatīšanas un papildvērtības pakalpojumu sniegšanas nolūkos, ja lietotājs vai abonents, uz kuru šie dati attiecas, pirms noslodzes datu apstrādes ir devis piekrišanu saskaņā ar noslēgto elektronisko sakaru pakalpojumu līgumu. Lietotājam vai abonentam ir tiesības jebkurā laikā atsaukt piekrišanu noslodzes datu apstrādei.

(5) (Izslēgta ar 03.05.2007. likumu.)

(6) Lietotājam vai abonentam nav tiesību piekļūt noslodzes datiem un izdarīt tajos labojumus.

(7) Regulatoram ir tiesības no elektronisko sakaru komersanta pieprasīt un saņemt noslodzes datus, kas nepieciešami, lai izskatītu strīdu, jautājumu par starpsavienojumu vai krāpniecību, kas veikta, izmantojot numerāciju, kā arī attiecīgā iesnieguma izskatīšanai nepieciešamos noslodzes datus par lietotāju, kas Regulatoram iesniedzis iesniegumu.

(8) Lai veiktu normatīvajos aktos noteikto uzraudzību elektronisko sakaru, personas datu aizsardzības un informācijas sabiedrības pakalpojumu aprītes jomā, Datu valsts inspekcijai ir tiesības pieprasīt un elektronisko sakaru komersantiem ir pienākums 15 dienu laikā sniegt noslodzes datus.

previous co-ordination with the user or subscriber only for payment accounting regarding the electronic communications services provided, recovery of payments, examination of objections or provision of interconnections, except in the cases provided for in Paragraphs seven, eight and nine of this Section, as well as in Sections 68, 71.1 and 71.2 of this Law.

(4) Processing of traffic data is permitted for the distribution of electronic communications services and provision of value added services if a user or subscriber to whom such data relates has given a consent before processing of traffic data in accordance with an entered into electronic communications services contract. The user or subscriber has the right to revoke at any time his or her consent to the processing of traffic data.

(5) [3 May 2007]

(6) A user or subscriber does not have the right to access traffic data and to make corrections therein.

(7) The Regulator has the right to request and receive from an electronic communications merchant traffic data which is necessary in order to examine a dispute, an interconnection issue or fraud performed using numbering, as well as the traffic data regarding the user who has submitted an application to the Regulator, necessary for examination of the relevant application.

(8) In order to perform the supervision in the field of circulation of electronic communications, personal data protection and information society services laid down in laws and regulations, the Data State

(9) Finanšu un kapitāla tirgu reglamentējošu normatīvo aktu pārskatīšanu izmeklēšanas nolūkos Finanšu un kapitāla tirgus komisijai ir tiesības, pamatojoties uz tiesneša lēmumu, pieprasīt un no elektronisko sakaru komersanta saņemt noslodzes datus, kas minēti šā likuma 1.pielikuma 1.punktā un 2.punkta 1., 2., 3., 4., 5. un 6.apakšpunktā, kā arī datus, kas minēti šā likuma 2.pielikuma 1., 2., 3., 4., 5., 6., 7. un 8.punktā. (10) Elektronisko sakaru komersantam nav pienākuma veikt papildu pasākumus šā panta astotajā un devītajā daļā minētās informācijas iegūšanai, ja, sniedzot elektronisko sakaru pakalpojumu, elektronisko sakaru komersanta tehniskās iekārtas to neģenerē, neapstrādā un neregistrē. (11) Ministru kabinets nosaka noslodzes datu pieprasīšanas un nodošanas kārtību šā panta astotajā un devītajā daļā minētajām institūcijām.	Inspection has the right to request and electronic communications merchants has a duty to provide traffic data within 15 days. (9) For the purpose of investigating violations of the laws and regulations governing the financial and capital market, the Financial and Market Capital Commission has the right, on the basis of a decision of a judge, to request and receive from an electronic communications merchant the traffic data referred to in Paragraph 1 and Paragraph 2, Sub-paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Annex 1 to this Law, as well as the data referred to in Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of Annex 2 to this Law. (10) An electronic communications merchant has no duty to take additional measures for obtaining the information referred to in Paragraphs eight and nine of this Section, if in providing the electronic communications service technical equipment of the electronic communications merchant does not generate, process and record it. (11) The Cabinet shall determine the procedures for requesting and transfer of the traffic data to the institutions referred to in Paragraphs eight and nine of this Section.
Elektronisko sakaru likums, 71. pants: (1) Atrāšanās vietas datu apstrāde, ņemot vērā šajā pantā paredzētos izņēmumus, ir atļauta tikai elektronisko sakaru pakalpojumu sniegšanas nodrošināšanai. (2) Atrāšanās vietas datu apstrāde citam mērķim bez lietotāja vai abonenta piekrišanas ir atļauta tikai tādā gadījumā, ja lietotāju vai abonentu nav	Electronic Communications Law, Section 71: (1) The processing of location data, taking into account the exceptions specified in this Section shall be permitted only to ensure the provision of electronic communications services. (2) The processing of location data for other purposes without the consent of a user or

iespējams identificēt, izmantojot šos atrašanās vietas datus. (3) Atrašanās vietas datu apstrāde citam mērķim ir atļauta ar lietotāja vai abonenta piekrišanu laikposmā, kas nepieciešams, lai sniegtu papildvērtības pakalpojumus. (4) Pirms saņemta piekrišana par atrašanās vietas datu apstrādi citam mērķim, elektronisko sakaru komersantam ir pienākums informēt lietotāju vai abonentu par apstrādājamo datu veidu, apstrādes mērķi un termiņu, kā arī par to, vai atrašanās vietas dati tiks nodoti trešajām personām papildvērtības pakalpojumu sniegšanai. (5) Lietotājam vai abonentam ir tiesības jebkurā laikā atsaukt piekrišanu atrašanās vietas datu apstrādei citam mērķim, par to paziņojot attiecīgajam elektronisko sakaru komersantam. (6) Lietotājam vai abonentam, kas ir piekritis atrašanās vietas datu apstrādei citam mērķim, ir tiesības bez maksas pieprasīt, lai atrašanās vietas datu apstrāde uz noteiktu laiku tiek pārtraukta, par to paziņojot attiecīgajam elektronisko sakaru komersantam. (7) Elektronisko sakaru komersants drīkst apstrādāt atrašanās vietas datus bez lietotāja vai abonenta piekrišanas, ja atrašanās vietas datu apstrāde ir nepieciešama Valsts ugunsdzēsības un glābšanas dienestam, Valsts policijai, neatliekamās medicīniskās palīdzības un gāzes avārijas dienestiem, Jūras meklēšanas un glābšanas dienestam, kā arī Iekšlietu ministrijas Informācijas centram tā pienākumu veikšanai un šo datu nodošanai šajā panta daļā minētajiem dienestiem.	subscriber shall be permitted only in such cases if it is not possible to identify the user or subscriber utilising such location data. (3) The processing of location data for other purposes with the consent of a user or subscriber is permitted in the time period, which is necessary to provide value added services. (4) Before the receipt of consent regarding the processing of location data for other purposes, an electronic communications merchant has an obligation to inform the user or subscriber regarding the type of data to be processed, the purpose and time periods of the processing, as well as regarding the fact of whether the location data will be transferred to third persons for the provision of value added services. (5) A user or subscriber has the right to revoke his or her consent for the processing of location data for other purposes at any time, notifying the relevant electronic communications merchant of this revocation. (6) A user or subscriber who has consented to the processing of location data for other purposes has the right to request free of charge that the processing of location data be suspended for a specific time, notifying the relevant electronic communications service provider of this suspension. (7) An electronic communications merchant may process location data without the consent of the user or subscriber if the processing of location data is necessary for the State Fire-Fighting and Rescue Service, the State Police, the Emergency Medical Service and the gas emergency services, the Maritime Search and Rescue Service or the
---	--

	number “112” service, as well as the Information Centre of the Ministry of the Interior for the performance of the duties thereof and the transfer of such data to the services referred to in this Paragraph of this Section.
Elektronisko sakaru likums, 71¹. panta astotā daļa: Saglabājamie dati ir izdzēšami pēc šā likuma 19.panta pirmās daļas 11.punktā noteiktā termiņa beigām, izņemot tos datus, kurus šā panta pirmajā daļā minētās institūcijas ir pieprasījušas līdz datu saglabāšanas termiņa beigām, bet kuri vēl nav sniegti, kā arī datus, kas turpmāk nepieciešami pakalpojumu sniegšanai, maksas uzskaitē par sniegtajiem pakalpojumiem, pretenziju izskatīšanai, maksājumu piedziņai vai starpsavienojumu nodrošināšanai.	Electronic Communications Law, Section 71¹ (8): Data to be retained shall be extinguished at the end of the time period specified in Section 19, Paragraph one, Clause 11 of this Law, except for the data, which the institutions referred to in Paragraph one of this Section have requested up to the end of the time period for the retention of data, but which have not yet been issued, as well as data, which is necessary for the provision of further services, payment accounting for services provided, the examination of claims, recovery of payments or ensuring interconnections.
Krimināllikums, 7. panta ceturtnā daļa: Smags noziegums ir tīšs nodarījums, par kuru šajā likumā paredzēta brīvības atņemšana uz laiku, ilgāku par trim gadiem, bet ne ilgāku par astoņiem gadiem, kā arī nodarījums, kurš izdarīts aiz neuzmanības un par kuru šajā likumā paredzēta brīvības atņemšana uz laiku, ilgāku par astoņiem gadiem.	The Criminal Law, Section 7 (4): A serious crime is an intentional offence for which this Law provides for deprivation of liberty for a term exceeding three years but not exceeding eight years, as well as an offence, which has been committed through negligence and for which this Law provides for deprivation of liberty for a term exceeding eight years.
Krimināllikums, 7. panta piektā daļa: Sevišķi smags noziegums ir tīšs nodarījums, par kuru šajā likumā paredzēta brīvības atņemšana uz laiku, ilgāku par astoņiem gadiem, vai mūža	The Criminal Law, Section 7 (5): An especially serious crime is an intentional offence for which this Law provides for deprivation of liberty for a term exceeding

ieslodzījums.	eight years or life imprisonment.
Krimināllikums, 88. panta pirmā daļa: Par spridzināšanu, dedzināšanu, kodolķīmisko, ķīmisko, bioloģisko, bakterioloģisko, toksisko vai citu masveida iznīcināšanas ieroču lietošanu, masveida saindēšanu, epidēmiju, epizootiju izplatīšanu, personas nolaupīšanu, ķīlnieku sagrābšanu, gaisa, sauszemes vai ūdens transportlīdzekļu sagrābšanu vai citādām darbībām, ja tās veiktas nolūkā iebiedēt iedzīvotājus vai piespiest valsti, tās institūcijas vai starptautiskas organizācijas izdarīt kādu darbību vai atturēties no tās, vai kaitēt valsts, tās iedzīvotāju vai starptautiskas organizācijas interesēm (terorisms), — soda ar mūža ieslodzījumu vai brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku no astoņiem līdz divdesmit gadiem, konfiscējot mantu vai bez mantas konfiskācijas, un ar probācijas uzraudzību uz laiku līdz trim gadiem.	The Criminal Law, Section 88 (1): For a person who commits the use of explosives, use of fire, the use of nuclear chemical, chemical, biological, bacteriological, toxic or other weapons of mass destruction, mass poisoning, spreading of epidemics and epizootic diseases, kidnapping of persons, taking of hostages, hijacking of air, land or sea means of transport or other activities if they committed for the purpose of intimidating inhabitants or with the purpose of inciting the State, its institutions or international organisations to take any action or refrain therefrom, or for purposes of harming the State or the inhabitants thereof or the interests of international organisations (terrorism), — the applicable punishment is life imprisonment or deprivation of liberty for a term of eight and up to twenty years, with or without confiscation of property and with probationary supervision for a term up to three years.
Krimināllikums, 88. panta otrā daļa: Par valsts teritorijā vai kontinentālajā šelfā izvietotu fizisku objektu, automatizēto datu apstrādes sistēmu, elektronisko tīklu, kā arī citu objektu, kuru mērķis ir nodrošināt valsts drošību, iznīcināšanu vai bojāšanu, ja šādas darbības veiktas šā panta pirmajā daļā paredzētajā nolūkā, — soda ar mūža ieslodzījumu vai brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku no desmit līdz divdesmit gadiem, konfiscējot mantu vai bez mantas konfiskācijas, un ar probācijas uzraudzību uz	The Criminal Law, Section 88 (2): For a person who commits destruction or damage to physical objects, automated data processing systems, electronic networks, as well as other objects located in the territory or the continental shelf of the State, if such activities are committed for the purpose provided for in Paragraph one of this Section, — the applicable punishment is life imprisonment or deprivation of liberty for a

laiku līdz trim gadiem.	term of eight and up to twenty years, with or without confiscation of property and with probationary supervision for a term up to three years.
Krimināllikums 144. pants Korespondences un pa elektronisko sakaru tīkliem pārraidāmās informācijas noslēpuma pārkāpšana (1) Par personas korespondences noslēpuma tīšu pārkāpšanu — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz diviem gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu. (2) Par prettiesisku publiski nepieejamu datu pārraides vai signālu pārtveršanu elektronisko sakaru tīklos, kā arī par prettiesisku publiski nepieejamu elektromagnētisku datu iegūšanu no elektronisko sakaru tīkla, kurā atrodas šādi dati, — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz trim gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu. (3) Par šā panta pirmajā vai otrajā daļā paredzētajām darbībām, ja tās izdarītas mantkārīgā nolūkā, — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz pieciem gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu.	Criminal Law Section 144 Violating the Confidentiality of Correspondence and Information to be Transmitted over Telecommunications Networks (1) For a person who commits intentional violation of the confidentiality of personal correspondence, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to two years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine. (2) For a person who commits unlawful interception of publicly unavailable data transmissions or signals in telecommunications networks, as well as unlawful acquisition of publicly unavailable electromagnetic data from a telecommunications network in which such data is present, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to three years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine. (3) For committing the acts provided for in Paragraph one or two of this Section, if such are committed for purposes of acquiring property, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to five years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine.

Krimināllikuma 145. pants Nelikumīgas darbības ar fiziskās personas datiem (1) Par nelikumīgām darbībām ar fiziskās personas datiem, ja ar to radīts būtisks kaitējums, — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz diviem gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu. (2) Par nelikumīgām darbībām ar fiziskās personas datiem, ja tās izdarījis personas datu apstrādes pārzinis vai operators atreibības, mantkārīgā vai šantāžas nolūkā, — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz četriem gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu. (3) Par personas datu apstrādes pārziņa vai operatora vai datu subjekta ietekmēšanu, pielietojot vardarbību vai draudus vai ļaunprātīgi izmantojot uzticību, vai ar viltu nolūkā veikt nelikumīgas darbības ar fiziskās personas datiem — soda ar brīvības atņemšanu uz laiku līdz pieciem gadiem vai ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu, vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu.	Criminal Law Section 145. Illegal Activities Involving Personal Data of Natural Persons (1) For illegal activities involving personal data of a natural person, if it has caused substantial harm, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to two years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine. (2) For illegal activities involving personal data of a natural person, if they have been performed by a personal data processing administrator or operator for the purpose of vengeance, acquisition of property or blackmail, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to four years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine. (3) For influencing a personal data processing administrator or operator or the data subject, using violence or threats or using trust in bad faith, or using deceit in order to perform illegal activities involving personal data of a natural person, the applicable punishment is deprivation of liberty for a term up to five years or temporary deprivation of liberty, or community service, or a fine.
---	--

Krimināllikuma 157. pants Neslavas celšana (1) Par apzināti nepatiesu, otru personu apkaunojošu izdomājumu tīšu izplatīšanu iespiestā vai citādā veidā pavairotā sacerējumā, kā arī mutvārdos, ja tā izdarīta publiski (neslavas celšana), — soda ar piespiedu darbu vai ar naudas sodu. (2) Par neslavas celšanu masu saziņas līdzeklī — soda ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu.	Criminal Law Section 157 Defamation (1) For a person who knowingly commits intentional distribution of fictions, knowing them to be untrue and defamatory of another person, in printed or otherwise reproduced material, as well as orally, if such has been committed publicly (defamation), the applicable punishment is community service or a fine. (2) For defamation in mass media, the applicable punishment is temporary deprivation of liberty or community service, or a fine.
Kriminālprocesa likuma 19. pants Nevainīguma prezumpcija (1) Neviena persona netiek uzskatīta par vainīgu, kamēr tās vaina noziedzīga nodarījuma izdarīšanā netiek konstatēta šajā likumā noteiktajā kārtībā. (2) Personai, kurai ir tiesības uz aizstāvību, nav jāpierāda savs nevainīgums. (3) Visas saprātīgās šaubas par vainu, kuras nav iespējams novērst, jāvērtē par labu personai, kurai ir tiesības uz aizstāvību.	Section 19. Presumption of Innocence (1) No person shall be considered guilty until the guilt of such person in the committing of a criminal offence has been determined in accordance with the procedures laid down in this Law. (2) A person who has the right to assistance of a defence counsel shall not need to prove his or her innocence. (3) All reasonable doubts regarding guilt that it is not able to eliminate shall be evaluated as beneficial for the person who has the right to defence.

Kriminālprocesa likums, 154. pants: (1) Tiesa var uzdot plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālistam vai redaktoram norādīt publicētās informācijas avotu. (2) Par izmeklētāja vai prokurora ierosinājumu lemj izmeklēšanas tiesnesis, uzklausījis ierosinājuma iesniedzēju, plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālistu vai redaktoru un iepazinies ar materiāliem. (3) Lēmumu par informācijas avota norādīšanu izmeklēšanas tiesnesis pieņem, ievērojot personas tiesību un sabiedrības interešu samērīgumu. (4) Tiesneša lēmumu var pārsūdzēt ierosinājuma iesniedzējs, plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālists vai redaktors, un to izskata 10 dienu laikā augstāka līmeņa tiesas tiesnesis rakstveida procesā, kura lēmums nav pārsūdzams.	Criminal Procedure Law, Section 154: (1) A court may assign a mass-media journalist or editor to indicate the source of published information. (2) An investigating judge shall decide on the proposal of an investigator or public prosecutor, having listened to the submitter of the proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and having familiarised him or herself with the materials. (3) An investigating judge shall take a decision on indication of the source of information, complying with the proportionality of the rights of the person and the public interest. (4) A decision of a judge may be appealed by the submitter of a proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and such appeal shall be examined within 10 days by a higher-level court judge in a written procedure the decision of which shall not be subject to appeal.
Latvijas Republikas likums „Par presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem”, 22. pants: Masu informācijas līdzeklis var nenorādīt informācijas avotu. Ja persona, kura sniegusi informāciju, prasa, lai tās vārds netiktu norādīts masu informācijas līdzeklī, šī prasība redakcijai ir saistoša. Lai aizsargātu personas vai sabiedrības būtiskas intereses, tikai tiesa, ievērojot samērīgumu, var uzdot norādīt informācijas avotu.	Law of the Republic of Latvia “On the Press and other Mass media”, Section 22: A mass medium may choose to not indicate the source of information. If the person who has provided the information requests that his or her name is not to be indicated in a mass medium, this request shall be binding upon the editorial board. The source of information shall only be produced at the request of a court or a prosecutor.

Operatīvas darbības likums, 2. panta pirmā daļa: (1) Operatīvās darbības uzdevumi ir: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) personu aizsargāšana pret noziedzīgiem apdraudējumiem;2) noziedzīgu nodarījumu profilakse, to novēršana un atklāšana, noziedzīgu nodarījumu izdarījušo personu un pierādījumu avotu noskaidrošana;3) to personu meklēšana, kuras likumā noteiktajā kārtībā tiek turētas aizdomās, ir apsūdzētas vai notiesātas par noziedzīga nodarījuma izdarīšanu;4) noziedzīga nodarījuma rezultātā nodarītā kaitējuma atlīdzināšanas nodrošināšana;5) to personu meklēšana, kuras pēkšņi un bez acīmredzama iemesla pametušas savu pastāvīgo vai pagaidu uzturēšanās vietu, neievēro savu ierasto dzīvesveidu un sazināšanās ar tām nav iespējama, kā arī nepilngadīgo un to personu meklēšana, kuras vecuma, to fiziskā, garīgā stāvokļa vai slimības dēļ ir aprūpējamas, bet aizgājušas no mājām, ārstniecības iestādēm vai citām uzturēšanās vietām (bez vēsts pazudušās personas);6) politiskas, sociālas, militāras, ekonomiskas, zinātniskas, tehniskas, kriminālas un citas ar noziedzības sfēru un tās infrastruktūru, ar valsts drošības, aizsardzības un ekonomiskās suverenitātes apdraudējumiem saistītās informācijas iegūšana, uzkrāšana, analīze un izmantošana likumā noteiktajā kārtībā;7) valsts noslēpumu un citu valstij svarīgu interešu aizsardzība, kā arī likumā noteiktajos gadījumos — personu speciālās aizsardzības	Operational Activities Law, Section 2 (1): (1) The tasks of operational activities are: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) the protecting of persons against criminal threats;2) preventing, deterring and detecting of criminal offences, and the determining of persons committing criminal offences and the sources of evidence;3) searching for persons who, in accordance with procedures laid down in law, are suspected of, have been accused of or have been convicted of committing a criminal offence;4) ensuring compensation for damages resulting from a criminal offence;5) searching for such persons who have left their permanent or temporary place of residence suddenly and without obvious reason, deviate from their usual lifestyle and it is not possible to reach them, as well as searching for minors and such persons who are to be taken care of because of their age, physical or mental condition or illness, but who have left home, medical treatment institutions or other places of residence (missing persons);6) obtaining, accumulating, analysing and utilising, in accordance with procedures laid down in law, of political, social, military, economic, scientific and technical, criminal, and other information related to the criminal sphere and its infrastructure, and threats against State security, defence and economic sovereignty;
--	---

nodrošināšana; 8) informācijas iegūšana par konkrētām personām, ja izlemjams jautājums par to atbilstību darbam svarīgos valsts amatos un institūcijās, vai personām, kurām pieejami valsts vai citi ar likumu aizsargāti noslēpumi.	7) the protecting of official secrets and other interests important to the State, and, in cases laid down in law, the providing of special protection to persons; 8) gathering of information about specific persons, if decisions must be taken on their suitability for work in important State offices and for authorities, or regarding persons who have access to official secrets or other secrets protected by law.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 3. pants: (1) Operatīvās darbības tiesiskais pamats ir Latvijas Republikas Satversme, Kriminālprocesa likums, šis likums, kā arī citi likumi un starptautiskie līgumi, kas reglamentē valsts drošības, aizsardzības, ekonomiskās suverenitātes un sabiedriskās kārtības nodrošināšanas subjektu uzdevumus, tiesības un pienākumus. (2) Valsts institūcijas, kurām ar likumu ir noteiktas tiesības veikt operatīvo darbību, savas kompetences ietvaros un atbilstoši šim likumam izdod iekšējos normatīvos aktus par šīs darbības organizāciju, metodēm, taktiku, līdzekļiem un uzskaiti. Šie normatīvie akti stājas spēkā tikai pēc tam, kad tos akceptējis ģenerālprokurors. (3) Šā panta otrajā daļā minētie iekšējie normatīvie akti nav jāaskaņo ar Tieslietu ministriju.	Operational Activities Law, Section 3: (1) The legal basis of operational activities is the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, the Criminal Procedure Law, this Law, as well as other laws and international agreements which govern the tasks, rights and duties of the bodies that ensure State security, defence, economic sovereignty and public order. (2) State authorities, which by law have been assigned the right to conduct operational activities, shall within their competence and in accordance with this Law issue internal laws and regulations with respect to the organisation, methods, tactics, means and recording of such activities. Such laws and regulations shall come into force only after the Prosecutor General has approved them. (3) The internal laws and regulations referred to in Paragraph two of this Section need not be co-ordinated with the Ministry of Justice.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 6. pants: (1) Operatīvās darbības saturs ir operatīvie pasākumi un to īstenošanas metodes. Operatīvie pasākumi	Operational Activities Law, Section 6: (1) The substance of operational activities is investigatory measures and the methods of their implementation. Investigatory measures

ir: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) operatīvā izzināšana; 2) operatīvā novērošana (izsekošana); 3) operatīvā apskate; 4) operatīvā paraugu iegūšana un operatīvā izpēte; 5) personas operatīvā aplūkošana; 6) operatīvā iekļūšana; 7) operatīvais eksperiments; 7¹) kontrolētā piegāde; 8) operatīvā detektīvdarbība; 9) operatīvā korespondences kontrole; 10) operatīvā personas paustās vai uzglabātās informācijas satura iegūšana no tehniskajiem līdzekļiem; 11) operatīvā sarunu noklausīšanās; 12) operatīvā publiski nepieejamas vietas videonovērošana. (2) Šajā pantā dots pilnīgs operatīvās darbības pasākumu uzskaitījums, un to var grozīt vai papildināt tikai ar likumu. (3) Operatīvās darbības pasākumu gaitā var izdarīt ierakstus ar video un audio, kino un foto aparāturu, kā arī izmantot dažādas informācijas	are: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) investigatory inquiring; 2) investigatory surveillance (tracing); 3) investigatory inspection; 4) investigatory acquisition of samples and investigatory research; 5) investigatory examination of a person; 6) investigatory entry; 7) investigatory experiment; 7¹) controlled delivery; 8) investigatory detective work; 9) investigatory monitoring of correspondence; 10) investigatory acquisition of information expressed or stored by a person through technical means; 11) investigatory wiretapping of conversations; 12) investigatory video surveillance of a place not accessible to the public. (2) This Section provides a complete listing of operational activities measures, and it may be modified or expanded only by law. (3) In the course of operational activities
---	---

sistēmas, tehniskos, ķīmiskos un bioloģiskos līdzekļus. Šo līdzekļu izmantošana nedrīkst nodarīt kaitējumu iedzīvotāju veselībai un apkārtējai videi. To izmantošanas kārtību nosaka operatīvās darbības subjekts.	measures, recordings may be made with video and audio, cinematography and photography equipment, and various information systems and technical, chemical and biological means may be utilised. Such means shall be utilised so as to not cause harm to the health of the population or the environment. The procedures for utilising such means shall be determined by the body performing operational activities.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 7. panta trešā daļa: Operatīvās darbības pasākumi, kuru gaitā tiek būtiski aizskartas personu konstitucionālās tiesības, veicami sevišķajā veidā.	Operational Activities Law, Section 7 (3): Operational activities measures, in the course of which there is significant infringement of the constitutional rights of persons, shall be conducted in accordance with the special method.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 7. panta ceturtnā daļa: Operatīvā korespondences kontrole, operatīvā personas paustās vai uzglabātās informācijas satura iegūšana no tehniskajiem līdzekļiem, operatīvā nepublisku sarunu slepena noklausīšanās (arī pa tālruni, ar elektroniskajiem un cita veida sakaru līdzekļiem), operatīvā publiski nepieejamas vietas videonovērošana un operatīvā iekļūšana veicama tikai sevišķajā veidā un ar Augstākās tiesas priekšsēdētāja vai viņa īpaši pilnvarota Augstākās tiesas tiesneša akceptu. Atļauju veikt šos operatīvās darbības pasākumus var izsniegt uz laiku līdz trim mēnešiem un pamatotas nepieciešamības gadījumā to var pagarināt, taču tikai uz to laiku, kamēr attiecībā uz personu tiek veikta operatīvā izstrāde.	Operational Activities Law, Section 7 (4): Investigatory monitoring of correspondence, investigatory acquisition of information expressed or stored by a person by technical means, investigatory covert monitoring of non-public conversations (including by telephone, by electronic or other means of communication), investigatory video surveillance of a place not accessible to the public and investigatory entry shall be performed only in accordance with the special method and with the approval of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or a Justice of the Supreme Court specially authorised by him or her. Permission to perform such operational activities measures may be issued for a period of up to three months and may be extended where it is substantiated that it is necessary, but only for the period of time that exercising of operational activities is being carried out with

	respect to the person.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 7. panta piektā daļa: Gadījumos, kad jārikojas nekavējoties, lai novērstu vai atklātu terorismu, slepkavību, bandītismu, masu nekārtības, citu smagu vai sevišķi smagu noziegumu, kā arī tad, ja reāli ir apdraudēta personas dzīvība, veselība vai īpašums, šā panta ceturtajā daļā minētos operatīvās darbības pasākumus var veikt ar prokurora piekrišanu. Nākamajā darb dienā, bet ne vēlāk kā 72 stundu laikā, jāsaņem tiesneša akcepts. Tiesnesis, akceptējot operatīvās darbības pasākumu, lemj par tā neatliekamas uzsākšanas pamatotību, kā arī turpināšanas nepieciešamību, ja tas nav pabeigts. Ja tiesnesis atzinis operatīvās darbības pasākuma veikšanu par nepamatotu vai prettiesisku, operatīvās darbības subjekts iegūto informāciju nekavējoties iznīcina.	Operational Activities Law, Section 7 (5): In cases where immediate action is required in order to avert or detect terrorism, murder, gangsterism, riots, other serious or especially serious crime, as well as where the lives, health or property of persons are in real danger, the operational activities measures referred to in Paragraph four of this Section may be performed with the approval of a prosecutor. Approval of a judge must be obtained on the following working day, but not later than within 72 hours. Upon approving the operational activities measure, the judge shall decide on the validity of commencing it immediately, as well as the necessity to continue it, if it has not been finished. If the judge has recognised the performance of the operational activities measure as unjustified or unlawful, the subject of operational activities shall immediately destroy the information obtained.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 10. panta pirmā daļa: Ja operatīvās darbības subjekta rīcībā ir pamatota informācija par personu gatavotu vai izdarītu noziedzīgu nodarījumu vai citu prettiesisku rīcību, vai valstij svarīgu interešu apdraudējumu, ir atļauta šo personu un ar tām saistīto personu novērošana (izsekošana).	Operational Activities Law, Section 10 (1): If a body performing operational activities has available well-founded information regarding a criminal offence in preparation or having been committed by persons, or regarding other unlawful acts, or a threat to interests of importance to the State, the surveillance (tracing) of such persons and persons associated with them is permitted.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 10. panta otrā	Operational Activities Law, Section 10

daļa: Lai iegūtu vai pārbaudītu ziņas par prettiesisku rīcību vai valstij svarīgu interešu apdraudējumu, ir atļauta dažādu stacionāro un mobilo objektu novērošana un ar tiem saistīto personu novērošana (izsekošana).	(2): In order to obtain or verify information regarding unlawful acts or a threat to interests of importance to the State, the surveillance of various stationary and mobile facilities and surveillance (tracing) of persons associated with such is permitted.
Operatīvas darbības likums, 17. pants: Ja operatīvās darbības subjekta rīcībā ir pamatotas ziņas par personu saistību ar noziegumu, kā arī par valstij svarīgu interešu, valsts drošības un aizsardzības apdraudējumu, ir atļauta: 1) operatīvā korespondences kontrole — tas ir, drīkst kontrolēt šo personu nosūtāmo un saņemamo pasta, telegrāfa un cita veida korespondenci un tās rīcībā esošās elektrosakaru un cita veida sistēmas šādas korespondences nosūtīšanai un saņemšanai; 2) operatīvā personas paustās vai uzglabātās informācijas satura iegūšana no tehniskajiem līdzekļiem - tas ir, informācijas noņemšana vai kopēšana no personu īpašumā vai rīcībā esošajām elektroniskajām un cita veida informācijas glabāšanas ierīcēm un informācijas kanāliem; 3) operatīvā sarunu noklausīšanās — tas ir, to sarunu noklausīšanās, kuras notiek starp šīm personām un citām personām (arī pa tālruni, ar elektroniskajiem un cita veida sakaru līdzekļiem); 4) operatīvā publiski nepieejamas vietas videonovērošana — tas ir, publiski nepieejamā vietā notiekošo norišu videonovērošana bez šīs vietas īpašnieka, valdītāja un apmeklētāju ziņas.	Operational Activities Law, Section 17: If a body performing operational activities is in possession of well-founded information with respect to the involvement of persons in crime, as well as regarding threats to interests of importance to the State, State security and defence, the following is permitted: 1) investigatory monitoring of correspondence – that is, it is permitted to monitor the outgoing and incoming postal, telegraphic and other types of correspondence of such persons, and electronic communications and other types of systems that are at their disposal for the sending and receipt of such correspondence; 2) investigatory acquisition of information expressed or stored by a person from technical means – that is, downloading of information or copying thereof from electronic and other types of information storage devices and information channels owned by or at the disposal of persons; 3) investigatory wiretapping of conversations – that is, the wiretapping of such conversations as take place between such persons and other persons (including by telephone, and by electronic and other types of means of communication); 4) investigatory video surveillance of a place not accessible to the public – that is, the

	video surveillance of the ongoing processes at a place not accessible to the public without the awareness of the owner, possessor and visitors of such place.
Operatīvās darbības likums, 22. panta piektā daļa: Operatīvās izstrādes termiņš šajās lietās ir seši mēneši, un to vēl uz sešiem mēnešiem var pagarināt ar operatīvās darbības iestādes vadītāja vai viņa vietnieka akceptu. Vēlreizējs termiņa pagarinājums iespējams tikai ar ģenerālprokurora vai viņa speciāli pilnvarota prokurora akceptu, bet ne ilgāk par tā noziedzīga nodarījuma noilguma termiņu, sakarā ar kuru operatīvā izstrāde tiek veikta.	Operational Activities Law, Section 22 (5): The term for exercising of operational activities in such matters is six months, which may be further extended for six months with the approval of the head or deputy head of the body performing operational activities. A further extension of the term may be done only with the approval of the Prosecutor General or a prosecutor specially authorised by the Prosecutor General, but it shall not be for more than the limitation period of the crime in relation to which the exercising of operational activities is being conducted.
Operatīvās darbības likums, 24. panta piektā daļa: Aizliegts ar operatīvās darbības pasākumiem mērķtiecīgi iegūt informāciju zvērinātu advokātu, zvērinātu notāru, ārstu, pedagogu, psihologu un garīdznieku profesionālās palīdzības sniegšanas laikā, izņemot gadījumus, kad minētās personas pašas ir operatīvās izstrādes objekti.	Operational Activities Law, Section 24 (5): It is prohibited to purposefully obtain, through operational activities measures, information at the time professional assistance is being provided by sworn advocates, sworn notaries, doctors, teachers, psychologists and clergy, except in cases when the persons mentioned are themselves being subjected to an exercising of operational activities.
Par Presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem, 22. pants Informācijas avota noslēpums	Law on the Press and Other Media, Section 22. Secrecy of the Source of Information

Masu informācijas līdzeklis var nenorādīt informācijas avotu. Ja persona, kura sniegusi informāciju, prasa, lai tās vārds netiktu norādīts masu informācijas līdzeklī, šī prasība redakcijai ir saistoša. Lai aizsargātu personas vai sabiedrības būtiskas intereses, tikai tiesa, ievērojot samērīgumu, var uzdot norādīt informācijas avotu. (Ar grozījumiem, kas izdarīti ar 13.12.2001. likumu, kas stājas spēkā 01.07.2002.)	A mass medium may choose to not indicate the source of information. If the person who has provided the information requests that his or her name is not to be indicated in a mass medium, this request shall be binding upon the editorial board. The source of information shall only be produced at the request of a court or a prosecutor. [1 July 2002]
Kriminālprocesa likums, 154 pants Informācijas avota norādīšanas pienākums (1) Tiesa var uzdot plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālistam vai redaktoram norādīt publicētās informācijas avotu. (2) Par izmeklētāja vai prokurora ierosinājumu lemj izmeklēšanas tiesnesis, uzklaušijis ierosinājuma iesniedzēju, plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālistu vai redaktoru un iepazīies ar materiāliem. (3) Lēmumu par informācijas avota norādīšanu izmeklēšanas tiesnesis pieņem, ievērojot personas tiesību un sabiedrības interešu samērīgumu. (4) Tiesneša lēmumu var pārsūdzēt ierosinājuma iesniedzējs, plašsaziņas līdzekļa žurnālists vai redaktors, un to izskata 10 dienu laikā augstāka līmeņa tiesas tiesnesis rakstveida procesā, kura lēmums nav	Criminal Procedure Law, Section 154. Duty to Indicate the Source of Information (1) A court may assign a mass-media journalist or editor to indicate the source of published information. (2) An investigating judge shall decide on the proposal of an investigator or public prosecutor, having listened to the submitter of the proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and having familiarised him or herself with the materials. (3) An investigating judge shall take a decision on indication of the source of information, complying with the proportionality of the rights of the person and the public interest. (4) A decision of a judge may be appealed by the submitter of a proposal, or a mass-media journalist or editor, and such appeal

pārsūdzams. (Ar grozījumiem, kas izdarīti ar 12.03.2009. likumu, kas stājas spēkā 01.07.2009.)	shall be examined within 10 days by a higher-level court judge in a written procedure the decision of which shall not be subject to appeal. [12 March 2009]
Par Presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem, 2. pants. Prese un citi masu informācijas līdzekļi Saskaņā ar šo likumu prese un citi masu informācijas līdzekļi (turpmāk tekstā — masu informācijas līdzekļi) ir avīzes, žurnāli, biļeteni un citi periodiskie izdevumi (iznāk ne retāk kā reizi trīs mēnešos, vienreizējā tirāža pārsniedz 100 eksemplārus), kā arī elektroniskie plašsaziņas līdzekļi, kinohronika, informācijas aģentūru paziņojumi, audiovizuāli ieraksti, kas paredzēti publiskai izplatīšanai. Interneta vietni var reģistrēt kā masu informācijas līdzekļi. Šā likuma noteikumi neattiecas uz valsts varas un pārvaldes institūciju instrukcijām, normatīvajiem aktiem, tiesu un arbitražas prakses periodiskajiem biļeteniem, mācību un zinātnisko iestāžu izdotajiem materiāliem. (Ar grozījumiem, kas izdarīti ar 22.09.2011. likumu, kas stājas spēkā 20.10.2011.)	Law on the Press and Other Media, Section 2. The Press and Other Mass Media In accordance with this Law the press and other mass media (hereinafter – mass media) are newspapers, magazines, newsletters and other periodicals (published not less frequently than once every three months, with a one-time print run exceeding 100 copies), as well as television and radio broadcasts, newsreels, information agency announcements, audio-visual recordings, and programmes intended for public dissemination. The provisions of this Law shall not apply to instructions of State authorities and administrative bodies, regulatory enactments, official bulletins of the courts and arbitration practices, and materials issued by educational and scientific institutions. [20 October 2011]
Personu speciālās aizsardzības likums, 4. pants	Special Protection of Persons Law, Section 4.

Tiesības uz speciālo aizsardzību (1) Tiesības uz speciālo aizsardzību ir šādām personām, kas liecina vai ir liecinājušas kriminālprocesā (turpmāk— kriminālprocesā liecinošā persona): 1) cietušajam, lieciniekam vai citai personai, kura liecina vai ir liecinājusi par smagu vai sevišķi smagu noziegumu; 2) nepilngadīgai personai, kura liecina par Krimināllikuma 161., 162. un 174.pantā paredzētajiem noziegumiem; 3) personai, kuras apdraudējums var ietekmēt kriminālprocesā liecinošo personu. (2) Tiesības uz speciālo aizsardzību ir arī personai, kura neliecina kriminālprocesā, bet piedalās smaga vai sevišķi smaga nozieguma atklāšanā, izmeklēšanā vai iztiesāšanā, kā arī personai, kura sakarā ar minēto personu darbībām ir apdraudēta (turpmāk — cita aizsargājamā persona).	Rights to Special Protection (1) The following persons testifying in criminal proceedings (hereinafter – person testifying in criminal proceedings) have the right to special protection: 1) a victim, witness or another person who is testifying or has testified regarding a serious or especially serious crime; 2) a minor who is testifying regarding the crimes provided for in Sections 161, 162 and 174 of the Criminal Law; and 3) a person the danger to whom may influence the person testifying in criminal proceedings. (2) A person who is not testifying in criminal proceedings, but participates in the uncovering, investigation or adjudication of a serious or especially serious crime, as well as a person who is in danger due to the activities of the referred to persons (hereinafter – another person to be protected), has the right to special protection.
Personu speciālās aizsardzības likums, 6. pants Speciālās aizsardzības iemesls un pamats (1) Iemesls noteikt speciālo aizsardzību ir reāli noticis personas dzīvības, veselības vai citu likumisko interešu apdraudējums, izteikti reāli draudi vai pietiekams pamats domāt, ka	Special Protection of Persons Law, Section 6. Reason and Grounds for Special Protection (1) A reason for prescribing special protection shall be a threat that has actually occurred to the life, health or

apdraudējums var notikt sakarā ar sniegto liecību vai piedalīšanos nozieguma atklāšanā, izmeklēšanā vai iztiesāšanā. (2) Pamats speciālās aizsardzības noteikšanai ir: 1) kriminālprocesā liecinošās personas vai tās pārstāvja vai aizstāvja rakstveida iesniegums un procesa virzītāja ierosinājums; 2) tiesas iniciatīva, ja iztiesāšanas procesā rodas iemesls noteikt speciālo aizsardzību; 3) citas aizsargājamās personas vai tās likumiskā pārstāvja rakstveida iesniegums.	other legal interests of a person, expressed imminent threats, or sufficient grounds for believing that the danger may be imminent due to a provided testimony or participation in the uncovering, investigation or adjudication of a crime. (2) The grounds for the prescription of special protection shall be: 1) a written submission of a person testifying in criminal proceedings or his or her representative or counsel and a proposal of the performer of procedures 2) the initiative of a court, if a reason for prescribing special protection has arisen during the course of adjudication; or 3) a written submission of another person to be protected or his or her legal representative.
Iesniegumu likums, 9. pants Informācijas izpaušanas ierobežojumi (1) Aizliegts bez iesnieguma iesniedzēja piekrišanas izpaust informāciju, kas atklāj viņa identitāti, izņemot gadījumu, kad iestādei saskaņā ar likumu šāda informācija ir jāizpauž. (2) Ja iesniedzējs nevēlas, lai iesniegumā minētie fakti tiktu izpausti, viņš to norāda iesniegumā. Ja iesniegumā nav ietverta norāde par aizliegumu izpaust tajā minētos faktus, iestāde tos ir tiesīga izpaust, ievērojot šā panta	The Law on Submissions, Section 9. Restrictions for Disclosure of Information (1) It is prohibited to disclose information without the consent of the submitter of information revealing his or her identity, except the case when the institution must disclose such information in accordance with the law. (2) If the submitter does not want that the facts referred to in the submission are disclosed, he or she shall specify it in the submission. If the indication regarding prohibition to disclose the facts referred in the submission is not included therein,

pirmās daļas un citu normatīvo aktu prasības.	the institution is entitled to disclose them, taking into account the requirements of Paragraph one of this Section and other regulatory enactments.
Administratīvā procesa likums, 54. Pants Informācijas sniegšana (1) Privātpersonai un iestādei, kas nav administratīvā procesa dalībnieks, informāciju sniedz saskaņā ar Informācijas atklātības likumu, Fizisko personu datu aizsardzības likumu un citiem normatīvajiem aktiem. (2) Informāciju, kas atklāj tās personas identitāti, kura ziņojusi par tiesībpārkāpumu, var sniegt tikai ar šīs personas piekrišanu, izņemot tiesību normās noteiktos gadījumus. (26.10.2006. likuma redakcijā, kas stājas spēkā 01.12.2006.)	Administrative Procedure Law, Section 54. Provision of Information to Private Persons (1) To a private person and an institution, which is not a participant of the administrative proceedings, the information is provided according to the Freedom on Information Law, Personal Data Protection Law and other normative acts. (2) Information regarding the identity of a person, who has reported on the violation of the law, may be given with the consent of such person. [1 December 2006]
Informācijas Atklātības likums, 11. panta 6. daļa Informācijas pieprasījuma forma un reģistrēšanas kārtība (6) Iestādes sarakste ar informācijas pieprasītāju un ziņas par šo personu uzskatāmas par ierobežotas pieejamības informāciju.	Freedom of Information Law, Section 11, Paragraph 6. Form for Requesting Information and Registration Procedures (6) Correspondence between an institution and an applicant and information regarding this person shall be deemed to be restricted access

	information.
Par interešu konflikta novēršanu valsts amatpersonu darbībā, 20. panta 7. daļa Publiskas personas institūcijas vadītāja pienākumi (7) Publiskas personas institūcijas vadītājam, personai, kurai institūcijas vadītājs uzdevis pildīt interešu konflikta un korupcijas novēršanas pienākumus attiecīgajā institūcijā, vai koleģiālai institūcijai aizliegts izpaust informāciju, kas tai kļuvusi zināma, par to, kura attiecīgās publiskas personas institūcijas amatpersona vai darbinieks informējis par interešu konfliktiem, un bez objektīva iemesla radīt šādai personai tiešas vai netiešas nelabvēlīgas sekas. Aizliegums izpaust informāciju neattiecas uz informācijas sniegšanu Korupcijas novēršanas un apkarošanas birojam, Valsts policijai, Satversmes aizsardzības birojam, tiesai un prokuratūrai.	The Law On Prevention on Conflict of Interest in Activities of Public Officials, Section 20, Paragraph 7. Duties of the Head of a State or Local Government Authority (7) The head of a State or local government authority, a person whom the head of an authority has entrusted fulfilment of duties related to the prevention of a conflict of interest and corruption in the relevant authority, or a collegial authority are prohibited from disclosure of information, which has become known thereto, concerning which public official or employee of the relevant State or local government authority has informed regarding conflicts of interest, and from causing any direct or indirect unfavourable consequences to such a person without any objective reason. The prohibition to disclose information shall not apply to the provision of information to the Corruption Prevention and Combating Bureau, the State Police, the Constitution Protection Bureau, the court and the Prosecutor's Office.
Darba likums, 9. pants Aizliegums radīt nelabvēlīgas sekas (1) Aizliegts sodīt darbinieku vai citādi tieši vai netieši radīt viņam nelabvēlīgas sekas tāpēc, ka darbinieks darba tiesisko attiecību	Labour Law, Section 9. Prohibition to Cause Adverse Consequences (1) It is prohibited to apply sanctions to an employee or to otherwise directly or

ietvaros pieļaujamā veidā izmanto savas tiesības, kā arī tad, ja viņš informē kompetentās iestādes vai amatpersonas par aizdomām par noziedzīga nodarījuma vai administratīva pārkāpuma izdarīšanu darbavietā. (2) Ja strīda gadījumā darbinieks norāda uz apstākļiem, kas varētu būt par pamatu darba devēja radītajām nelabvēlīgajām sekām, darba devējam ir pienākums pierādīt, ka darbinieks nav sodīts vai viņam nav tieši vai netieši radītas nelabvēlīgas sekas tāpēc, ka darbinieks darba tiesisko attiecību ietvaros pieļaujamā veidā izmanto savas tiesības. (Ar grozījumiem, kas izdarīti ar 22.04.2004. un 21.09.2006. likumu, kas stājas spēkā 25.10.2006.)	indirectly cause adverse consequences for him or her because the employee, within the scope of employment legal relationships, exercises his or her rights in a permissible manner, as well as when if he or she informs competent institutions or officials regarding suspicions with respect to the committing of criminal offences or administrative violations in the workplace. (2) If in the case of a dispute, an employee indicates conditions, which could be a basis for the adverse consequences caused by the employer, the employer has a duty to prove that the employee has not been punished or adverse consequences have been directly or indirectly caused for him or her because the employee, within the scope of employment legal relationships, exercises his or her rights in a permissible manner. [22 April 2004; 21 September 2006]
Fizisko personu datu aizsardzības likums, 6. pants Ikvienai fiziskajai personai ir tiesības uz savu personas datu aizsardzību.	Personal Data Protection Law, Section 6. Every natural person has the right to protection of his or her personal data.
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 110. pants Ikvienam ir tiesības uz vārda brīvību, kas ietver tiesības brīvi iegūt, paturēt un izplatīt informāciju, paust savus uzskatus. Cenzūra ir aizliegta.	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Section 110. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression, which includes the right to freely receive, keep and distribute information and to express his or her

	views. Censorship is prohibited.
Latvijas Republikas Satversme, 116. Pants Personas tiesības, kas noteiktas Satversmes deviņdesmit sestajā, deviņdesmit septītajā, deviņdesmit astotajā, simtajā, simt otrajā, simt trešajā, simt sestajā un simt astotajā pantā, var ierobežot likumā paredzētajos gadījumos, lai aizsargātu citu cilvēku tiesības, demokrātisko valsts iekārtu, sabiedrības drošību, labklājību un tikumību. Uz šajā pantā minēto nosacījumu pamata var ierobežot arī reliģiskās pārliecības paušanu.	The Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, Section 116. The rights of persons set out in Articles ninety-six, ninety-seven, ninety-eight, one hundred, one hundred and two, one hundred and three, one hundred and six, and one hundred and eight of the Constitution may be subject to restrictions in circumstances provided for by law in order to protect the rights of other people, the democratic structure of the State, and public safety, welfare and morals. On the basis of the conditions set forth in this Article, restrictions may also be imposed on the expression of religious beliefs. [15 October 1998; 30 April 2002; 23 September 2004; 15 December 2005]
Latvijas Administratīvo pārkāpumu kodekss, 166.³³ panta 2. daļa Valsts un pašvaldību institūciju vadītājiem noteikto pienākumu nepildīšana Par likumā noteiktā aizlieguma izpaust informāciju attiecībā uz personu, kura informējusi par citas valsts amatpersonas interešu konfliktu, pārkāpšanu vai par nelabvēlīgu seku radīšanu šai personai bez objektīva iemesla — uzliek naudas sodu valsts amatpersonai no septiņdesmit līdz septiņsimt euro, atņemot	Administrative Violations Code, section 166³³ (2) Breach of the duties by the state and local government leaders For the breach of the statutory prohibition of disclosure of information concerning the person who notified the other public officials a conflict of interest, or for causing adverse effects to that person without an objective reason - fine on public officials from seven to seventy euro, with deprivation of the right

tiesības ieņemt valsts amatpersonas amatu vai bez tā. (19.06.2003. likuma redakcijā ar grozījumiem, kas izdarīti ar 16.06.2011. un 26.09.2013. likumu, kas stājas spēkā 01.01.2014.)	to hold public office or officials without it. (01.01.2014.)
Par Presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem, 23. Pants Par žurnālistu šajā likumā tiek uzskatīta persona, kura vāc, apkopo, rediģē vai citādā veidā sagatavo materiālus masu informācijas līdzeklim un kura ar to noslēgusi darba līgumu vai veic šo darbu masu informācijas līdzekļa uzdevumā, kā arī žurnālistu apvienību biedrs.	Law on the Press and Other Media, Section 23 Under this Law, a journalist is a person who gathers, compiles, edits or in some other way prepares materials for a mass medium and who has entered into an employment contract or performs such work upon the instruction of a mass medium, or is a person who is a member of the Journalists' Union.
Par presi un citiem masu informācijas līdzekļiem, 27.pants Par informācijas avota noslēpuma izpaušanu, žurnālista pienākumu izpildes traucēšanu vai šā likuma 7.pantā noteiktās informācijas publicēšanu vainīgās personas atbild Latvijas Republikas likumos noteiktajā kārtībā. Par masu informācijas līdzekļu izgatavošanu un izplatīšanu bez reģistrācijas vai pēc to darbības izbeigšanas vainīgās personas atbild Latvijas Republikas likumos noteiktajā kārtībā.	Law on Press and Other Mass Media, Article 27 A person committing a breach of confidence with respect to a source of information, interference with the performance of the duties of a journalist, dissemination of information injuring human honour and dignity or disclosure of an official or other secret protected by law shall be held liable in accordance with laws of the Republic of Latvia. Persons at fault for the creation and dissemination of a mass media without registration or after termination of their activity shall be held liable in accordance with the procedures prescribed by laws of the Republic of Latvia

Latvijas Žurnālistu asociācijas ētikas kodekss, 3.1.pants Žurnālistam nav tiesību atklāt informācijas avotu bez tā piekrišanas	Code of Ethics of the Journalist Association of Latvia, Section 3.1. A journalist has no right to disclose the information source without his conduct
Latvijas Žurnālistu asociācijas Ētikas komisijas Nolikuma 12.punkts: “Komisija Ētikas kodeksa pārkāpuma gadījumā var paust aizrādījumu LŽA iekšējā sarakstē, kā arī LŽA mājas lapā vai LŽA publiskajā paziņojumā masu medijiem. Sevišķi smagu Ētikas kodeksa pārkāpumu gadījumā komisija LŽA valdei var rosināt LŽA biedra izslēgšanu no organizācijas.”	The Provision of the Commission of Ethics. Association of Journalists of the Republic of Latvia Article 12 The Commission in cases of a breach of the Code of Ethics may express a remark in LJA internal correspondence, as well as in LJA website or public communication media. In cases of especially serious breaches of the Code of Ethics the Commission may encourage to the Board of LJA an expulsion of a member of the organization.
Kriminālprocesa likums, 12.pants (1) Kriminālprocesu veic, ievērojot starptautiski atzītās cilvēktiesības un nepieļaujot neattaisnotu kriminālprocesuālo pienākumu uzlikšanu vai nesamērīgu iejaukšanos personas dzīvē. (2) Cilvēktiesības var ierobežot tikai tajos gadījumos, kad to prasa sabiedrības drošības apsvērumi, un tikai šajā likumā noteiktajā	Criminal procedure law, Article 12 (1) Criminal proceedings shall be performed in conformity with internationally recognised civil rights and without allowing for the imposition of unjustified criminal procedural duties or excessive intervention in the life of a person. (2) Civil rights may be restricted only in

kārtībā atbilstoši noziedzīgā nodarījuma raksturam un bīstamībai.

(3) Piemērot ar brīvības atņemšanu saistītu drošības līdzekli, pārkāpt publiski nepieejamas vietas neaizskaramību, korespondences un sakaru līdzekļu noslēpumu drīkst vienīgi ar izmeklēšanas tiesneša vai tiesas piekrišanu.

(4) Amatpersonai, kura veic kriminālprocesu, ir pienākums aizsargāt personas privātās dzīves noslēpumu un komercnoslēpumu. Ziņas par to drīkst iegūt un izmantot tikai tad, ja tas ir nepieciešams pierādāmo apstākļu noskaidrošanai.

(5) Fiziskajai personai ir tiesības pieprasīt, lai krimināllietā netiek iekļautas ziņas par šīs personas pašas vai tās saderinātā, laulātā, vecāku, vecvecāku, bērnu, mazbērnu, brāļu un māsu, kā arī tās personas, ar kuru attiecīgā fiziskā persona dzīvo kopā un ar kuru tai ir kopīga (nedalīta) saimniecība (turpmāk — tuvinieki) privāto dzīvi, komercdarbību un mantisko stāvokli, ja tas nav nepieciešams krimināltiesisko attiecību taisnīgai noregulēšanai.

cases where such restriction is required for public safety reasons, and only in accordance with the procedures laid down in this Law according to the character and danger of the criminal offence.

(3) The application of safety measures related to the deprivation of liberty, the infringement of the immunity of publicly inaccessible places, and the confidentiality of correspondence and means of communication shall be permitted only with the consent of the investigating judge or court.

(4) An official, who performs the criminal proceedings, has a duty to protect the confidentiality of the private life of a person and the commercial confidentiality of a person. Information regarding such confidentiality shall be obtained and used only in the case where such information is necessary in order to clarify conditions that are to be proven.

(5) A natural person has the right to request that a criminal case does not include information regarding the private life, commercial activities, and financial situation of such person or the betrothed, spouse, parents, grandparents, children grandchildren, brothers or sisters of such person, as well as of the person with whom the relevant natural person is living together and with whom he or she has a common (joint) household (hereinafter — the immediate family), if such information is not necessary for the fair regulation of criminal legal relations.

Kriminālprocesa likums 180.pants

Lēmums par kratīšanu

(1) Kratišanu izdara ar izmeklēšanas tiesneša vai tiesas lēmumu. Izmeklēšanas tiesnesis lēmumu pieņem, pamatojoties uz procesa virzītāja ierosinājumu un tam pievienotajiem materiāliem.

(2) Lēmumā par kratīšanu norāda, kas, kur, pie kā, kādā lietā un kādus priekšmetus un dokumentus meklēs un izņems.

(3) Neatliekamajos gadījumos, kad novilcināšanas dēļ meklējamie priekšmeti vai dokumenti var tikt iznīcināti, noslēpti vai sabojāti vai arī meklējamā persona var aizbēgt, kratīšanu var izdarīt ar procesa virzītāja lēmumu. Ja lēmumu pieņem izmeklētājs, tad kratīšanu izdara ar prokurora piekrišanu.

(4) Lēmums par kratīšanu nav nepieciešams, izdarot aizturamās personas kratīšanu, kā arī šā likuma 182.panta piektajā daļā noteiktajā gadījumā.

(5) Par šā panta trešajā daļā norādīto kratīšanu procesa virzītājs ne vēlāk kā nākamajā darba dienā pēc tās izdarīšanas paziņo izmeklēšanas tiesnesim, uzrādot materiālus, kas pamatoja izmeklēšanas darbības nepieciešamību un neatliekamību, kā arī izmeklēšanas darbības protokolu. Tiesnesis pārbauda kratīšanas tiesiskumu un pamatotību. Ja izmeklēšanas darbība izdarīta prettiesiski, izmeklēšanas tiesnesis iegūtos pierādījumus atzīst par nepieļaujamiem kriminālprocesā un lemj par rīcību ar izņemtajiem priekšmetiem.

Criminal Procedure Law, Section 180

Decision on a Search

(1) A search shall be conducted with a decision of an investigating judge or a court decision. An investigating judge shall take a decision based on a proposal of a person directing the proceedings and materials attached thereto.

(2) A decision on a search shall indicate who will search and remove, where, with whom, in what case, and the objects and documents that will be sought and seized.

(3) In emergency cases where, due to a delay, sought objects or documents may be destroyed, hidden, or damaged, or a person being sought may escape, a search shall be performed with a decision of the person directing the proceedings. If a decision is taken by an investigator then a search shall be performed with the consent of a public prosecutor.

(4) A decision on a search shall not be necessary in conducting a search of a person to be detained, as well as in the case determined in Section 182, Paragraph five of this Law.

(5) A person directing the proceedings shall inform an investigating judge regarding the search indicated in Paragraph three of this Section not later than the next working day after conducting thereof, presenting the materials that justified the necessity and emergency of the investigative action, as well as the minutes of the investigative

	action. The judge shall examine the legality and validity of the search. If the investigative action was conducted illegally, the investigating judge shall recognise the acquired evidence as inadmissible in criminal proceedings, and shall decide on the actions with the seized objects.
Krimināllikums, 296.panta pirmā daļa Par tiesas nolēmuma vai prokurora priekšraksta par sodu neizpildīšanu vai izpildes kavēšanu, ja to izdarījusi persona, kurai tas pēc likuma vai uzlikta uzdevuma bija jāizpilda, — soda ar īslaicīgu brīvības atņemšanu vai ar piespiedu darbu, vai ar naudas sodu.	Criminal law, Article 296, Section 1 For a person who commits intentionally failing to execute a court judgment or decision, or a public prosecutor's penal order, or delaying the execution thereof, the applicable punishment is temporary deprivation of liberty or community service, or a fine.
Civillikuma 1635. pants Katrs tiesību aizskārums, tas ir, katra pati par sevi neatļauta darbība, kuras rezultātā nodarīts kaitējums (arī morālais kaitējums), dod tiesību cietušajam prasīt apmierinājumu no aizskārēja, ciktāl viņu par šo darbību var vainot. Ar morālo kaitējumu jāsaprot fiziskas vai garīgas ciešanas, kas izraisītas ar neatļautas darbības rezultātā nodarītu cietušā nemantisko tiesību vai nemantisko labumu aizskārumu. Atlīdzības apmēru par morālo kaitējumu nosaka tiesa pēc sava ieskata,	Civil Law, Section 1635 Every delict, that is, every wrongful act per se, as a result of which harm has been caused (also moral injury), shall give the person who suffered the harm therefrom the right to claim satisfaction from the infringer, insofar as he or she may be held at fault for such act. By moral injury is understood physical or mental suffering, which are caused as a result of unlawful acts committed to the non-financial rights or non-financial benefit delicts of the person

ņemot vērā morālā kaitējuma smagumu un sekas. Ja šā panta otrajā daļā minētā neatļautā darbība izpaudusies kā noziedzīgs nodarījums pret personas dzīvību, veselību, tikumību, dzimumneaizskaramību, brīvību, godu, cieņu vai pret ģimeni, vai nepilngadīgo, pieņemams, ka cietušajam šādas darbības rezultātā ir nodarīts morālais kaitējums. Citos gadījumos morālais kaitējums cietušajam jāpierāda. P i e z ī m e. Darbība šeit jāsaprot plašākā nozīmē, aptverot ne vien darbību, bet arī atturēšanos no tās, tas ir, bezdarbību.	who suffered the harm. The amount of compensation for moral injury shall be determined by a court at its own discretion, taking into account the seriousness and the consequences of the moral injury. If the unlawful acts referred to in Paragraph two of this section are expressed as criminal offences against a person's life, health, morals, inviolability of gender, freedom, honour, dignity or against the family, or minors, it is presumed that the person who suffered the harm as a result of such acts has been done moral injury. In other cases moral injury shall be proved by the person who suffered the harm. Note. The term act is used here within the widest meaning, including not only acts, but also the failure to act, that is, inaction.
Civillikums 2352¹ pants Katram ir tiesības prasīt tiesas ceļā atsaukt ziņas, kas aizskar viņa godu un cieņu, ja šādu ziņu izplatītājs nepierāda, ka tās atbilst patiesībai. Ja personas godu un cieņu aizskarošās ziņas izplatītas presē, tad gadījumā, kad tās neatbilst patiesībai, šīs ziņas presē arī jāatsauc. Ja personas godu un cieņu aizskarošās ziņas, kas neatbilst patiesībai, ietvertas dokumentā, šāds dokuments jāapmaina. Citos gadījumos atsaukšanas kārtību nosaka tiesa. Ja kāds prettiesiski aizskar personas godu un cieņu mutvārdiem, rakstveidā vai ar darbiem,	Civil Law, Section 2352¹ Each person has the right to bring court action for the retraction of information that injures his or her reputation and dignity, if the disseminator of the information does not prove that such information is true. If information, which injures a person's reputation and dignity, is published in the press, then where such information is not true, it shall also be retracted in the press. If information, which injures a person's reputation and dignity, is included in a document, such document shall be replaced. In other cases, a court shall

tad viņam jānodod atlīdzība (mantiska kompensācija). Atlīdzības apmēru nosaka tiesa.	determine the procedures for retraction. If someone unlawfully injures a person's reputation and dignity orally, in writing or by acts, he or she shall provide compensation (financial compensation). A court shall determine the amount of the compensation.
---	--

ELSA REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA

Contributors

National Coordinator

Maja Veljanova

National Academic Coordinator

Professor Daniela Blazevska

National Researchers

Ratko Ajcev

Sara Kajevikj

Ivan Durgutov

Vasilij Berzetski

National Linguistic Editors

Olgica Jankulovska

1. Introduction

The freedom in journalism, to a great extent, depends on the free flow of information from the media to the citizens. However, it also depends on the flow of information from the citizens to the media. The protection of the source of information is necessary in order to establish trust between the “source” and the journalist when the public is being informed on matters of public interest. In this time of modern media, a system of provision of information that will provide quick, accurate and relevant information is required. This same challenge applies for many countries, one of which is Macedonia – the existence of free media and free access to information for journalists. The truth is that this is not an easy thing to do, especially if one considers the tradition of the past, when information was reached through connections and links, or when specific information was presented to a specific target.

The right to protection of the source of information among journalists is recognised in the Macedonian legislation, as well as in international law. Statistically, more than 100 countries worldwide have implemented and protected this right in their legislations, and this right enjoys absolute protection in 20 countries.

Each person who provides information to a journalist is considered a “source”. Journalists may get information from all types of sources. When obtaining information from the protected source, the very journalist should provide appropriate protection of all other information that would probably lead to identification of the source.

In the Republic of Macedonia, the right to protection of the source of information is primarily guaranteed in Article 16, paragraph 6 of the Constitution (Устав). The Constitution guarantees the journalists the right to protect their sources, thereby enabling free exchange of information between citizens and journalists. This is particularly important, because the lack of such a protection may discourage the sources to help the media in the process of informing the public on matters of public interest.

The issue of protection of the source of information is also addressed in the Law on Media (Закон за медиуми). According to this law, the journalist has the right not to disclose the source of the information, that is, data that may reveal the source in accordance with the international law and the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia.

When it comes to the Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation, journalists are provided special protection. Namely, in such proceedings, the journalist cannot be requested to reveal the secret source of information about the facts that he/she is obliged to prove. The court may ask the defendant to disclose relevant information for the purpose of determination of the trustworthiness of the published information, without an identification of the source of information.

Furthermore, the Law on the Prevention of Corruption (Закон за спречување на корупцијата) prohibits any coercion, deterrence or other form of influence on the media, to publish or not to publish cases of corruption. Nobody may ask the journalist who published information on an act of corruption, to disclose the source of the information, except during a proceeding before a court.

The European Convention on Human Rights, through article 10, provides extensive protection of the freedom of expression, including the protection of the source of information through the freedom to obtain and to transfer information or ideas, without the interference of public authorities and regardless of borders. According to this convention, which is ratified by our country, the journalist enjoys full protection in terms of the reception and the transfer of information of public interest. Courts in no event may threaten the right of journalists to protect their sources, and an appropriate indicator in this regard includes the numerous judgments by the European Court of Human Rights in favour of journalists. However, the Convention does not provide absolute right not to disclose the source. The conditions when this right may be restricted are specifically indicated.

The European Convention on Human Rights indicates that the exercise of these freedoms may be subject to specific formalities, conditions, limitations and sanctions stipulated by law, which in a democratic society, are measures required for state security, territorial integrity and public security, protection of the order and prevention of disorder and crime, protection of health or morale, reputation or rights of the others, for prevention of the spread of confidential information or for preservation of the authority and the impartiality of the judiciary. Therefrom, the court may order disclosure of the source of information if there is a prevailing demand of public interest and if the circumstances are of sufficiently vital and serious nature.

The indicated legal protections in this paper are of vital importance for the free flow of information in the society and the protection of the source of information for journalists. This encourages individuals to share information and reduces their fear. Otherwise, the public would be deprived of vital information and many relevant news, data and information about our society, the functioning of the government and politics in general, the conduct of trade, all economic and financial affairs etc. The provision of such information is what people need and what they are willing to learn at all times, and the source of such information should be protected.

2. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

In the Republic of Macedonia the right of journalists not to disclose their source of information is primarily provided in the highest legal act – the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia (Устав на Република Македонија) in article 16 (paragraph 6) where the right to protect a source of information in the media is guaranteed.¹ With this, not only the right not to disclose the source of information is protected, but also free exchange of information between citizens and journalists is allowed. The right to protect a source of information in Macedonia is regulated with several legal acts.

- The Law on Media (Закон за медиуми) guarantees this right in article 12, where it provides that a journalist has the right not to disclose a source of information, or the data that can reveal the source of information. According to international law and the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, however, in order to use this right, the journalist must notify the main editor.²
- With the decriminalisation of insult and defamation, the Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation (Закон за граѓанска одговорност за навреда и клевета) was adopted in 2012. This Law regulates civil liability for damage to the reputation of a natural person or a legal entity caused with an insult or defamation. One of the fundamental principles that guide the law is the guarantee of freedom of expression and information as one of the essential foundations of a democratic society. This law applies to everyone, not only to journalists, however the Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation provides special protection for journalists. According to this law, in court proceedings for an insult or defamation that a journalist might have committed, journalists cannot be requested to reveal their secret source of information in regard to the facts that he/she is obliged to prove.³ Article 12 (paragraph 2) provides that the Court may request from the defendant to disclose relevant information in order to determine the authenticity of the published information, without identifying the source of the information. Paragraph 3 of the same article provides that the refusal of the defendant to reveal the secret source of information cannot be interpreted as any admission of guilt, or based on the conclusion that it did not prove the truthfulness of the facts.
- The Law on Prevention of Corruption (Закон за спречување на корупцијата). Investigative journalism is an important segment and a main ally of the society in detection of these occurrences. For this reason, with the adoption of the Law on Prevention of Corruption, it was processed and a part of the law that allow protection for the Journalists when they detect corruption scandals.⁴ According to article 56 of this law, any enforcement, prevention or other form of influence on media to publish or not to publish information on a case of corruption, is prohibited. Nobody can request from a journalist who published information on acts of corruption, to reveal the source of information, except in proceedings before court. Article 65 provides a fine of 500 to 1,000 Euros in MKD for a person who performed coercion or in any manner prohibited

¹Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia (“Official Gazette” no.52/1991).

²Law on Media (“Official Gazette” no. 184/2013 and 13/2014).

³Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation (“Official Gazette” no. 143/2012).

⁴Law on Prevention of Corruption (“Official Gazette” no.28/2002, 46/2004, 126/2006, 10/2008, 161/2008, 145/2010, 47/2015, 145/2015).

to publish or not to publish information on cases of corruption, and to a person who hinders access to sources of information, contrary to Article 56 of this law.

In this context, it is necessary to mention the Recommendation No. R(2000)7 of the committee of ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information,⁵ which predicts that domestic law and practice of the Member States should provide explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information that identify the source in accordance with Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights and the principles established by it, which should be regarded as minimum standards in terms of the law.

In order to define the term “journalistic source”, first we should make a distinction between investigative journalism and daily reporting. The reporting on daily events usually does not have a research component because it is based on information derived from official institutions or as a response to official announcements. Daily reporting mainly refers to events where journalists themselves or the interviewed witnesses testify, and journalists rarely resort to more detailed research than what is said or seen. The texts are mostly based on one source, or anonymous sources, and there is no answer to the questions why and how, but only to the questions who, what, where and when. Investigative journalism does not imply mere reporting on what others communicate (governmental institutions, political parties, companies etc.). It requires more comprehensive and substantial involvement of the journalist, who on his own initiative, goes beyond what is said and seen, in order to expose more facts and to discover something new, previously unknown to the public. The research story aims to initiate a certain action, to cause changes, to disclose something that is done in an inappropriate way, for which the public was not informed.

In any case, the Journalist Guide (Прирачник зановинари) and the Journalist Code (Новинарски кодекс/законик) provide the elements on the basis of which we can get to the definition of this right.⁶ As a rule:

- The source of information should be identified unless it can affect the safety of the source, or due consideration to a third party;
- One must be critical in the selection of the source and one should always check that the provided information is correct;
- A good practice is to insist the sources to be diverse and relevant while they are being chosen;

⁵Recommendation no.R (2000) 7 of the committee of ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on March 8 2000, at the 701st meeting of the Ministers' Deputies http://www.ravnopravnost.gov.rs/jdownloads/files/COE_R%20\(2000\)%207.pdf%207.pdf) .

⁶ <http://civil.org.mk/wp-content/uploads/2013/05/Journalist-Manual-inside-MK-4web.pdf> and <http://www.znm.org.mk/drupal-7.7/mk/node/440> .

- Special attention should be dedicated when it comes to information from anonymous sources, information from sources which themselves offer exclusivity, as well as information provided by sources in exchange for compensation;
- The name of the person who provided confidential information shall not be disclosed except with the express consent provided by this person;
- When reporting is a direct viewpoint, journalists are obliged to publish in quotes. Direct references/citations must be correct;
- Journalistic research should be carefully conducted;
- Special attention should be dedicated to people who are not expected to be aware that their statements could have consequences;
- Emotions or feelings of people, their ignorance or inability of reasoning, should never be abused;
- Hidden camera/microphone or false identity may only be used in special circumstances. These assets can be used only if such methods are the only way to identify cases that are of crucial importance for the society.

In our opinion, the fact that the code does not enumerate the special circumstances is a big disadvantage.

As a rule, journalists do not pay to the sources or interviewees for the provided information. It is incompatible with good practice to introduce a payment system in order to attract people because of two reasons: because of the invasion of privacy of others or disclosure of sensitive personal information.

According to the laws indicated above, we can conclude that our national legislation on this issue is harmonised with the European Convention on Human Rights. This is also observable in article 3 of the Law for Civil Liability for Insult or Defamation, which provides that if the court, by applying the provisions of this law, cannot resolve a certain issue related to the determination of liability for an insult or defamation, or considers that there is a legal emptiness or conflict of provisions of this law with the provisions of the ECHR, it shall apply the provisions of the ECHR and the views of the European Court of Human Rights, contained in its judgments.

On this basis, we can say that the laws are good and they provide sufficient protection of journalists in regard to disclosure of the sources of information, however the problem arises in their practical application and implementation, which is observable in the case against the journalist Tomislav Kezarovski that shall be highlighted below.

The case against the journalist was waged under the name “Liquidation”. Kezarovski was accused because he revealed the identity of an allegedly protected witness “Birch” for the murder case from 2005 in Oreshe, a village near Veles, in two texts published in the magazine “Reporter 92” eight years ago. During the investigation, the police, the prosecutors and the investigative judge questioned him about the source of the information he published in the magazine “Reporter 92” or who gave him the documents - minutes of the hearing of the protected witness? He was sentenced to four years and six months in prison, even though three key issues were not clarified. First, does the witness in the case Oreshe, Zlatko Arsovski, really had the status of a protected witness as it is claimed by the prosecution and the court, or by his own admission, agreement for protected witness he signed in January 2010, two years after publishing the texts? Second, was the witness Arsovski genuine, authentic or false witness in the case Oreshe set by the police, as he himself said? And third, whether, in light of all these considerations, and controversy about the case Oreshe, the journalist Kezarovski represented the public interest when he published information that allegedly revealed his identity, writing it exactly – do the people from the police sets the witness? Because of pressure from the international community and journalists' associations, the higher court reduced his sentence to 2 years. In this context, the International Federation of Journalists and the European Federation of Journalists condemned the arrest of Tomislav Kezarovski and they stated that the arrest is contrary to his right as a journalist to provide information of public interest.

This judgment is not only a violation of Article 16 of our Constitution, but also of Article 10 of the ECHR. This, we can conclude from the case Goodwin v The United Kingdom, where the journalist published information about the financial condition of a prominent company in the UK. The company requested the court to issue an order that would oblige a journalist to disclose the source of information. Goodwin refused it and was fined £5,000 for disobeying a court order. After the complaint of Goodwin, the Strasbourg Court held that this infringed the right to freedom of expression, with the explanation that the published data about the financial situation of the company is of greater public interest than its reputation.⁷

What is relevant in our case is the standard which established the Court “If journalists are forced to reveal the source of information, their role as "guardians of the public" may be seriously undermined and it would have a chilling effect on the flow of information”, in the abovementioned case, if we consider the fact that during the investigation, the police, the prosecutors and the investigative judge questioned him about the source of the information he published in the magazine.

In this context, after the process against the journalist Tomislav Kezarovski, the retired Professor of Constitutional Law, Svetomir Shkarich, stated: the Constitution guarantees the right to information, and guarantees the right to protect a source of information. However Kezharovski is held accountable before the law, and he is condemned. In fact, this is inadmissible, because he has the constitutional right to information and the right not to disclose the source of the information. If journalists disclose their sources, then no journalism exists.⁸

⁷ Goodwin v UK, app no. 17488/90, Judgment of 27.03.1996 ([http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{"fulltext":\["goodwin"\],"documentcollectionid2":\["GRANDCHAMBER","CHAMBER"\],"itemid":\["001-57974"\]}](http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{)).

⁸<http://www.telma.com.mk/node/8851>.

3. Is there a provision, in domestic law, that prohibits a journalist to disclose his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

Although the protection of the source of information is the first and the most important rule in the journalistic profession (which is also demonstrated by the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of the British journalist Goodwin, who in 1996 published information about the financial condition of a prominent company in the UK), however, in some cases this rule may be prohibited.⁹ This issue is not precisely regulated in our legislation. According to Article 8 of the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, one of the fundamental values of the Constitution includes human rights that are acknowledged by the international law and the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia. In that context, the matter regarding the prohibition to publish certain information is elaborated in some national laws and ratified conventions, such as the following:

1) The Law on Media (Закон за медиуми) prohibits the journalists to publish or broadcast content in the media that may endanger national security, may foster violent overthrow of the constitutional order of the Republic of Macedonia, may refer to military aggression or armed conflict, may incite or spread discrimination, hostility or hatred based on race, sex, religion or nationality.

2) The Law on Prevention of Corruption (Закон за спречување на корупцијата) in Article 65 provides penalties in an amount between 500 and 1000 Euros for anyone who performs enforcement or in any way prohibits publishing or non-publishing of information about a case of corruption, thereby hindering access to sources of information about corruption.

3) The Criminal Law (Кривичен Законик) in Article 281 provides that the person which will tell, hand over or otherwise make available information which by law are declared confidential to an unauthorised person, and who acquires such information with the intention to hand over to an unauthorised person, shall be punished with imprisonment of one to five years. In paragraph 3 of the same article, it is provided that if the information from the paragraph 1 are of particular importance or if disclosing or collection the information was done because of carrying them abroad, shall be punished with imprisonment of one to ten years.

4) In the Labor Law (Закон за работните односи) in Article 35 it is provided that employee may not use for their own purposes or to give to a third party information that are considered confidential by the employer. In paragraph 2 of the same Article it is provided that he employee is responsible for issuing a trade secret, if he knew or should have known of the information status.

⁹[http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{"itemid":\["001-60596"\]}](http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{).

In Article 82 it is provided that, the employer can cancel the employment contract without a notice period in case of violation of the working order and discipline or failure to fulfill work obligations stipulated by this or other laws, collective agreements, rules on working order and discipline and the employment contract, especially if the employee embarked business, official or state secret.

Although, as mentioned above, the European Convention on Human Rights provides that courts in any case should not threaten the right of journalists to protect their sources, however it does not give an absolute right not to disclose their source. Specifically, there are specific conditions when this right must be limited. The European Convention on Human Rights indicates that the realization of freedom may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as provided by law, which represent some necessary measures in a democratic society. This right can be limited in three cases:

- When it should protect the public interest (national security, territorial integrity, public safety, prevention of disorder or crime, protection of health or morals);
- When the goal is to protect individual rights (protect the reputation or rights of others, preventing the disclosure of confidential information);
- Restrictions which are necessary in order to maintain the authority and the impartiality of the judiciary.

Hence, the court may order disclosure of the source of information if there is a prevailing public interest and if circumstances are of sufficiently serious nature. It is important to note that journalists should primarily be informed by the competent authorities about their right not to disclose information that is identifying a source, and about the limits of this right before the disclosure request. If journalists are forced to disclose their sources of information, despite of the absence of any of the three characteristics indicated above, their role as “guardians of the public” may be seriously undermined. It would have a chilling effect on the information flow.

The problem (the practical application of the law and its implementation) that we noted in the first question is manifested in this issue as well. We can use the case of the journalist Natasha Janchikj, which is not taken to court, however it is a strong indicator of the situation with journalists on one side and “powerful fishes” on the other side. The case actually starts with the publication of a text with negative context in regard to an influential national company. The company sought to reveal the source through which the journalist reached the information (because the source is an employee in the company), otherwise it was facing a criminal complaint. The main editor asked the journalist to reveal the source, however she refused, so later on she was fired.¹⁰ It is undisputed that the law is violated and this tells us that very often opinions and other characteristics are considered, which are not provided in the laws that I mentioned above.

¹⁰Statement of the journalist Natasha Janchikj
(<http://infomax.mk/wp/?p=22794#>).

4. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Do you consider that the definition on the purpose of protection of journalistic sources is restricted? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

The national legislation of the Republic of Macedonia, apart from the Media Law, does not provide a specific definition of a “journalist” in another regulation. In this context, we should note that there is no generally accepted definition of a journalist in Europe.

The Law on Media, as mentioned before, in Article 2 (paragraph 5) defines that a journalist is a person who performs activities of collection, analysis, processing, and/or classification of information published in the media, and is employed by the media publisher or has concluded an agreement with the media publisher, or is a person who performs journalistic activities as an independent profession (a free journalist).

In the next paragraph (paragraph 6) of the same law, there is a provision which says that the journalist has the right to refuse to produce, write or take part in the compiling of the text whose content is against the professional rules of the journalistic profession and in such case he/she has the obligation to submit his/her own written statement to the editor.

A definition of the term journalism is provided in the Statute of the Association of Journalists (Статут на Здружението на новинари) of Macedonia. According to Article 17 of the Statute, the term “journalism” means:¹¹

- Published written, spoken, pictured or online articles: written reports, news, commentary (note or review, social chronicle article, review) criticism, cartoon, essay, interview, reportage, travelogue, hyphens;
- Text arrangement and editing;
- Editorial work in editorial rooms on print and broadcast media, news agencies, and web portals;
- Provision of information by means of photography, electronic image, movie and cartoons which are published by professional photographers, cameramen and cartoonists, but only if this is their main occupation.

On this basis, we can conclude that a journalist would be a person who:

- Publishes written, spoken, pictured or online articles, reports, news, commentary, criticism, cartoons, essays, interviews, stories, travelogues, hyphens;
- Arranges and edits texts;

¹¹<http://www.znm.org.mk/drupal-7.7/mk/docs/statut>.

- Performs editorial work in printed and electronic media, news agencies and internet portals;
- Informs by means of photography, electronic image, film, cartoon etc.

This, not so long, definition may be updated with the provision of the journalists guide in the section “the principles of conduct” which provides that a journalist is a person who transmits information, ideas and opinions, and has the right to comment. Respecting the ethical values and professional standards when transmission of information is conducted, the journalist is honest, objective and accurate. The right and duty of journalists is to strive to prevent censure and distortion of news. Following their role in building democracy and civil society, journalists must respect human rights, dignity and freedom, they must respect pluralism of ideas and attitudes, they must contribute to the strengthening of the rule of law and the control of the government and other entities of public life.

On the basis of what is written above, the members of the national team of ELSA Macedonia, consider that the definition provided in the Law on Media, and the definitions derived from other regulations are quite limited for the purposes of protection of journalistic sources, because they do not mention journalistic sources in any particular point, or protection of these sources. According to the Law on Media, as it is mentioned in the first question, the journalist is guaranteed the right not to disclose the source of information, however in the main, poor definition of what the term journalist should represent, journalistic sources are not mentioned anywhere in particular, nor the protection of such a source.

In regard to the question, who can be a journalist in our country, it is very important to emphasise that journalism in our country is not a regulated profession. Accordingly, every person in the Republic of Macedonia who wants to be engaged in this activity, can be a journalist. Regarding the membership in the Association of Journalists of Macedonia, according to Article 11 of the Statute of the Association, a member of the Association of Journalists can be every journalist in the country who meets the requirements on membership in accordance with this Statute and other documents of the Association, so in that direction the Association has regular, honorary and associate members. According to Article 12 of the same Statute, a regular member can be a journalist who is engaged in journalism for at least one year. Associate members may be persons employed in public services, educational, scientific, cultural, business and other institutions, publicists, etc. who are occasionally engaged in journalism. Honorary member can be selected only by a majority decision of the Board members.

In regard to the other media actors, or whether the protection of sources expands to them, we think that the right to protection of journalists' sources must be applicable not only to journalists. This right must be extended to any other individual who is professionally related to the specific journalist, and as a result of this relation, he/she is informed and familiar with all the data that originate from specific sources.

The Law on Media in article 12 (paragraph 1) provides that the Journalist has the right not to disclose the source of information or data that may reveal the source in accordance with the international law and the Constitution, as we mention in the first question. Relevant for this question is paragraph 2 of the same article which says “the right under paragraph (1) of this Article shall apply to other persons who due to their professional relationship with the journalist are familiar with the data that may reveal the source, through the collection, editorial framing or disseminated information”. With that provision we can conclude that we have accepted the recommendations of the European Union that overlook the adoption of legislation that provides adequate protection of journalists and other whistle-blowers/informants/informers and the provision of legal protection of the right to non-disclosure of sources of information.

5. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws being implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

Every information given to the journalist is the source the needs to be protected. Having in mind the importance of the journalistic source and the fact that it needs to be protected, Republic of Macedonia has regulated this topic in several Laws which are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources and those are:

The Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia was adopted by the Parliament of the Republic of Macedonia on November 17 1991. A handful of countries in Europe have set the highest recognition of the importance of protection of journalistic sources by including this as a constitutional right. The Republic of Macedonia is one of them. One of the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources is contained in Article 16 of the Constitution which states “The right to protect a source of information in mass media is guaranteed”.¹² With this article, the Constitution guarantees the right for protecting the source of the information of the journalist. This article also makes the communication between journalists and the citizens easier, because it gives courage for movement of the information from the ones that have it to the journalists who can publish it.¹³

Another legal safeguard is contained in the Law on Media. The Law of Media contains the foundation principals and conditions that every media needs to take in consideration while working. One of the topics that is being discussed in this Law is the protection of journalistic sources and in Article 12, it is stated that journalists have a right not to disclose a certain source of information in accordance with the international law and the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia. Before publishing an information whose source is not disclosed, the journalist must inform the responsible editor in the media.¹⁴

This institute is as well regulated in the Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation¹⁵ in Article 12 in which it is noted that by a journalist who is accused in a procedure for civil liability for insult and defamation it cannot be asked from him to disclose the secret source of the information about the facts that he needs to prove in the procedure. The court can request

¹²Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia (“Official Gazette” no.52/1991).

¹³ <http://www.pravdiko.mk/zakonska-ramka-na-pravoto-na-zashtita-na-izvorot-na-informatsii/>

¹⁴Law on Media (“Official Gazette” no. 184/2013 and 13/2014)

¹⁵Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation (“Official Gazette” no.143/2012)

information which are relevant and will lead to proving the truth of the information by the accused without disclosing the source of the information itself. If it is asked by the accused to disclose the source of the information and he denies doing that- that fact cannot be taken as confession of guilty.¹⁶

The implementation of the laws in the Republic of Macedonia, in general, is problematic, which means that there are good laws, but sometimes there seem to be laws that are written only in books, and not laws in practice. In other words, there is a lot to be done in this field the purpose of which is appropriate implementation of the laws, but speaking on the field of protection of journalistic sources we can conclude that the laws are respected. One of the latest cases dealing with this topic is the case “Affair about identity cards” (Афера за личните карти). In this case, one journalist whose name is Ljubisha Arsikj (Љубиша Арсиќ) and works in Focus published an information in which he claims that there are 3,000,000 fake identity cards which have been made in secret locations in Shuto Orizari and Shtip.¹⁷ Ljubisha Arsikj is a journalist who has been writing about that topic and as well as researching on that field (fake identity cards in Republic of Macedonia), so as a result of that the secret source of the information has contacted him and given a set of 105 fake identity cards. Ljubisha has immediately given the fake identity cards to the authorities and later on he was called as a witness in the procedure that was going on about that issue. He says that most of the questions that the police has asked him were about the source of the information, but that he didn't disclose the source. The source has told Ljubisha that the fake identity cards have been used for elections and that crimes related with elections have been made. Some of the cards have had same picture and different address just for the elector to have the right to vote several times. The source has given many arguments to Ljubisha and he relied on them, so he published that information. The Prosecutor has asked Ljubisha about the source of the information, but he didn't disclose it.¹⁸ In the Republic of Macedonia, there no formal regulated procedure in which you can request disclosing the source of the information. However, the journalists can be called as witnesses in procedures and can be asked to disclose the source of the information, but they can't force him to disclose the source. Everything is up to the journalist. If he wants- he can disclose the source and if not, he can't be forced to do it as noted in the legal documents in which this topic is regulated. Additionally, there is no written rule about voluntarily disclosing the source by the journalist, but in the practice there is a general rule that he needs to obtain consent from the boss.

The Association of Journalists in Republic of Macedonia has conducted a body, The Council of Honour (Совет на честа). The Council is self-regulatory mechanism which cares about the appreciation of the Journalist Code. There is a procedure in which if someone thinks that someone (a journalist or the place where he works) doesn't respect the principles noted in the Journalistic Code can file a complaint to the Council. One of the principles is the one about nondisclosing of the source of the information. After that compliant is sent, the Council takes measures to correct the mistake that has been done (if any).¹⁹

¹⁶<http://www.pravdiko.mk/zakonska-ramka-na-pravoto-na-zashtita-na-izvorot-na-informatsii/>

¹⁷<http://novatv.mk/arsikj-izvorot-prenese-vazhni-informacii-za-30-000-lazhni-lichni-karti/>

¹⁸ <http://proverkanafakti.mk/dimitrovski-obvinitelot-barashe-od-novinarot-da-go-otkrie-izvorot-za-falsifikuvanite-lichni-karti/>

6. Are the limits of non-disclosure of information in the respective national legislation, in line with the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What procedures are being applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do authorities first search and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests, and at the same time they are less intrusive in regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

The respective national legislation and the limits of non-disclosure of information within the legislation are mostly in line with the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

Firstly, in that recommendation is provided that the right to freedom of expression and information are one of the essential foundations of a democratic society and one of the basic conditions for its progress and the development of every individual. In that line the Law on Media in article 2 provided that one of the target of this Law is to provide freedom of expression and free medias²⁰.

Next, in the recommendation is provided the need for democratic societies to secure adequate means of promoting the development of free, independent and pluralist media. Article 4 of the Media law guaranties this rights, especially free media, independence in the media, freedom of gathering, research, publishing information and pluralism in the medias. With that, we can conclude that our legislation on that issue is in line with the recommendation no. R(2000)7, but there is a big problem with this provision in reality. In last years the medias are fully dictated from the government party, so this article that provide independence and freedom of medias is just a dead word in a letter which is not viewable in the reality and practice.

As regards to disclosure of information, the recommendation provide that that the protection of journalists' sources of information constitutes a basic condition for journalistic work and freedom as well as for the freedom of the media and that there is an obligation not to disclose their sources of information in case they received the information confidentially. As it is mention in the first question, in Macedonia this right is protected in many Laws. Firstly this right is guaranteed in the article 6, paragraph 12 in the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia.

¹⁹

<http://www.znm.org.mk/drupal-7.7/sites/default/files/Priracnik%20za%20etika%20vo%20novinarstvoto%20maj%202012.pdf>

²⁰ Law on Media ("Official Gazette" no. 184/2013 and 13/2014).

Then, this right is guaranteed in the Law on media in article 12, which provides that the journalist has the right not to disclose a source of information, or the data that can reveal the source of information, The Law on preventing of corruption which provided that nobody can request from the journalist who published information on acts of corruption, to reveal the source of information, except in proceedings before court²¹ and The Law for civil liability for insult and defamation in article 12 which provides that the Court may request from the defendant to disclose relevant information in order to determine the authenticity of the published information, without identifying the source of the information.²² On that basis, we can conclude that our legislation on this issue is in line with the recommendation.

The recommendation also provided that the exercise by journalists of journalistic right not to disclose their sources of information carries with it duties and responsibilities as expressed in Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. As it is mention in the first question, our legislation is harmonised with the ECHR, but the problem is in their practical implementation.

The limits are indicated in a such a way that the right of journalists not to disclose their sources can be limited in an event when there are exceptional circumstances such as when reasonable alternative measures for the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted by the persons or public authorities that seek the disclosure. Another limitation is the situation when the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure, bearing in mind that an overriding requirement of the need of disclosure is proved, the circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature, the necessity of the disclosure is identified as responding to a pressing social need, and member states enjoy a certain margin of appreciation in assessing this need, however this margin goes hand in hand with the supervision by the European Court of Human Rights.

As regards to the issue about using alternative measures from the authorities to protect the right of the journalists, there is not a specific provision that predicts this. With the next changes of the Law on media it is planned to be insert new chapter that will be named “Protection of a journalist”. Article 8 of this Law will provide that:

- (1) Every journalist must be protected against physical threats or attacks.
- (2) Where there are serious indications that the journalist may be jeopardised its safety should be provided police protection.
- (3) The public prosecutor and the courts in the country timely and appropriate act in cases where the journalist got physically threatened or physically attacked.

²¹ Law on Prevention of Corruption (“Official Gazette” no.28/2002, 46/2004, 126/2006, 10/2008, 161/2008, 145/2010, 47/2015, 145/2015.

²² Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation (“Official Gazette” no. 143/2012).

With this we can see that there will be provided a general protection of the journalist as regards to the possible attacks, but in the national legislation there is not provided a specific provisions that regulates taking the alternative measures from the authorities to protect the journalist rights, especially the right of journalists not to disclose information, as it is provided in the Resolution that is adopted from the Security Council of the United Nations²³ and in the jurisdiction of the European Court of human Rights.²⁴

These requirements are in line with adequate protection of the respective rights and interests and are being applied in all stages of any proceedings where the right to non-disclosure might be invoked.

7. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the following principles should be respected when there is a stated necessity of disclosure: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defense of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

The motion or request to initiate any action by competent authorities aimed at disclosure of information wherewith a source is identified, should only be introduced by persons or public authorities that have a direct legitimate interest in the disclosure.

Journalists should be informed by competent authorities of their right not to disclose information wherewith a source is identified, as well as of the limits of this right before a disclosure is requested.

Sanctions against journalists for not disclosing information that identify a source should only be imposed by judicial authorities during court proceedings which allow a hearing of the concerned journalists in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention.

Journalists should have the right to an imposition of a sanction for the non-disclosure of their information wherewith a source is identified as a source, reviewed by another judicial authority.

In an event when journalists respond to a request or an order to disclose information where a source is identified, the competent authorities should consider the application of measures to limit the extent of a disclosure, for example by excluding the public from the disclosure with due respect to Article 6 of the Convention, where relevant, and by respecting the confidentiality of such a disclosure themselves.

²³ <http://lokalno.mk/on-usvoi-rezolucija-za-zashtita-na-novinarite/>

²⁴ Thoma v. Luxembourg, judgment of 29.03.2001, no. 38432/97 &58

8. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, how do national courts apply the respective laws in regard to the right to protect sources?

The right to protect the source of information is recognized in international law as well as is in the law in Macedonia. Any person who provides valuable information to a journalist is considered a source of information. The legal protection of the source of information begins from the highest legal act in Macedonia, The Constitution (Устав) in article 16 paragraph 6 which guarantees the right to protect a source of information in the media.²⁵ This gives journalists the ability to protect their source of information. The legal protection of the source provides the sources a freedom of provision of information to the journalist, whereby this information is of interest to the people and the public.

The media in Macedonia and their work are regulated with the Law on Media, where the following is indicated in Article 12 “the journalist has the right not to reveal the identity of the person who is their source of information, or to give information that can be used in order to find the identity of the source, guaranteed by the international law and the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia”.²⁶ In addition, this right provides protection to a person who is not a journalist, however who works with the media or in the media, to protect the identity of the source. The journalist who is not going to publish the source of information, is obligated to inform his editor of his intent (Law on Media, article 12 paragraph 2).

The legal protection for non-disclosure of their sources is particularly important for obtaining information from the involved people, without being afraid for their jobs, the jobs of their family members, lawsuits for an insult or defamation. The politicians in Macedonia often take the journalists to court because they think that the news are not true, so there are numerous lawsuits issued by politicians against journalists, and if they were informed about the source of that information, this source would be sued same as the journalist. According to a research, politicians have the role of plaintiffs who sue journalists or other people who are not politicians, in 25 cases or 58% of all legal cases for an insult or defamation.²⁷

Crime committed through a newspaper, radio, television, etc., the editor will be held criminally responsible, if the author of the information remains unknown (article 1 paragraph 1 of the Criminal Code, Article 26), thus the Criminal Code (Кривичен законик) provides the right of a journalist or an editor to protect the source of the information even in an event of a criminal offence produced by this information.²⁸ In this case, if the statement is false, abusive or ²⁵Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia – Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia number 1/1992.

²⁶Law on Media, 2013.

²⁷ Report, Politicians and Court Cases of Defamation, January 2013-2015, published 2015.

²⁸Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15).

defamatory, pursuant to the Constitution and the law, the journalist has the right to protect the source of the information. In an event when the editor or the journalist reveals the identity of the source in the first instance of the court proceeding, it will have no effect in the procedure and will not affect the final decision. If the author of the text is unknown or the author's identity is protected, in regard to criminal responsibility the criminal acts of Macedonia regulate that the responsibility is transferred to the editor.²⁹

In order to enrich this research on issues that are beyond the legal norms in Macedonia, I will indicate a court example from the current topic.

8.1 Operation Liquidation

In this case it was a matter of a crime where judges, public prosecutors, lawyers, and a journalist, committed several crimes such as accepting bribes, misuse of official position and authority, unauthorised publication of information and data of a protected witness and other criminal acts. In particular, the journalist in this case was charged for revealing the identity of a protected witness, and he was in custody. During the procedure, the journalist was repeatedly been queried by the police, the prosecutor and the investigative judge in order to indicate the protected source of the information which he published in the newspaper "Reporter 92" or who gave the recorded documents from the investigative judge from the hearing of the protected witness.³⁰ However, during the procedure the journalist did not reveal the identity of the source of his information, because he said that the intention was to reveal that there was an illegal act in the court procedure, and not to reveal the identity of a protected witness, which he did not do in his newspaper. The journalist was arrested in May and was detained for 6 months without clear judicial grounds, despite protests by non-government organisations. Then he was moved to a house arrest in November.³¹ The journalist was initially sentenced to 4 years and 6 months for unauthorised disclosure of information and data about the protected witnesses and members of their families, however in the end he was sentenced to two years in prison, with a judgment of the Appellate Court.³² This does not seem to be in conflict with the right of a journalist provided in Article 12 of the Law on Media where it is indicated that a journalist has the right to refuse to reveal the identity of the source of information in accordance with international law and the Constitution, a single objection would be that the investigative judge should not have asked questions with the intent to find out the identity of the source, but only to establish the credibility of the information.

²⁹Commentary of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Macedonia by Professor VladoKambovski, 2011.

³⁰ Newspaper Nova Makedonija-Www.novamakedonija.com.mk /NewsDetal.asp?vest=610131032302&id=9&setIzdanie=22900.

³¹Notes for the work of courts and media according to domestic and foreign organizations, 2014 – Association of Journalists of Macedonia.

³² Legal site „academic,, -<http://www.akademik.mk/presuda-likvidatsija-sudot-gi-proglasi-site-osummina-obvineti-za-vinovni-najvisoki-zatvorski-kazni-dobija-zafirov-i-kezharovski-4/>.

9. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable, and do they include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

The Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, as the supreme law of the country, guarantees protection of confidential information, freedom and confidentiality of correspondence and other forms of communication. However, there are certain exceptions to this generally applicable rule. Under the conditions and in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law, non-application of the principle of inviolability of correspondence and other forms of communication may be authorised, in cases where it is indispensable to prevent or to reveal criminal acts, to a criminal investigation or where required in the interests of the security and the defence of the Republic³³.

A criminal act is defined as an act performed by a human, proclaimed as a criminal act by law, where a punishment or other sanction is stipulated for its perpetrator.

A criminal investigation is a stage of a regular criminal proceeding and it is initiated against a person when a reasonable doubt exists that the person has committed a crime.

The exception to the right to privacy is further regulated in the Code of Criminal Procedure (Закон за кривична постапка) (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012), which provides special investigative measures as a part of the established criminal procedure.³⁴ These measures have a specific purpose and can only be implemented in exceptional circumstances – when it is likely that by using them, the authorities will be able to obtain data and evidence that are necessary for a successful criminal procedure, and which cannot be obtained by other means.

There are several investigative measures that may be ordered, including but not limited to:

- Monitoring and recording of telephone and other electronic communications;
- Surveillance and recording in homes, closed up or fenced space that belongs to the home or office space designated as private or in a vehicle and the entrance of such facilities in order to create the required conditions for monitoring of communications;
- Secret monitoring and recording of conversations with technical devices outside the residence or the office space designated as private;
- Secret access and search of computer systems;
- Inspection of telephone or other electronic communications.

³³Amendment 19, Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia.

³⁴Article 252, paragraph 1 – Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

The special investigative measures may be ordered when there are grounds for suspicion that a crime has been committed. However, the list of crimes³⁵ for which special investigative measures can be ordered is limited, mostly to severe crimes such as: organized crime, corruption, money laundering, human trafficking, drug trafficking, crimes against the state, crimes against humanity and international law.

Regarding the persons against whom special investigative measures may be ordered - pursuant to the conditions listed above, the order may pertain to a person who:³⁶

- committed a criminal offense as stipulated in article 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure;
- undertakes activities in order to commit a criminal offense as stipulated in article 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure;
- is preparing the commission of a criminal offense as stipulated in Article 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when such preparation is punishable according to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

The order may also pertain to a person who receives or relays shipments to and from the suspect or if the suspect uses his or her communication device.

The measure Surveillance and recording in homes, closed up or fenced space that belongs to the home or office space designated as private or in a vehicle and the entrance of such facilities, in order to create the required conditions for monitoring of communications, may only be directed towards the suspect and implemented only in the home of the suspect. The measure shall be allowed in other persons' homes, only if it is based on a reasonable suspicion that the suspect resides there.³⁷

As soon as the objectives, for which the special investigative orders have been established, have been achieved, or the reasons due to which they have been approved cease to exist, the entity that issued or extended the order shall be obliged to immediately order termination of the measures.³⁸ This provision ensures that the measures will last only as long as it is really necessary – not longer than necessary for the objectives to be achieved.

Additionally, there are certain provisions which aim to ensure time limits for the existence of the measures, and therefore strengthen the protection of the rights that the suspect is entitled to.

³⁵Article 253 – Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

³⁶Article 255 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

³⁷Article 268, paragraph 1 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

³⁸Article 261 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

Any special investigative measure may not last longer than 4 months.³⁹ An extension for a maximum additional period of up to 4 months, regarding the measures referred to in Article 252, paragraph 1, items 1-4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure may be approved by the preliminary procedure judge.⁴⁰

This period may be additionally extended for another 6 months, for criminal offenses that entail a prison sentence of at least four years and which are suspected to have been committed by an organised group, gang or other criminal enterprise, upon a written request by the public prosecutor, and based on the assessment of the usefulness of the data obtained through the use of the measure and with a reasonable expectation that the measure may continue to result with data of interest for the procedure.⁴¹

Some of the special investigative measures, specifically those referred to in article 251, paragraph 1, items 9-12 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, may be extended until the goal for which the measure has been introduced is fulfilled, but until the completion of the investigation at the latest.⁴²

Since monitoring and recording of telephone and other electronic communications is one of the frequently used measures for investigation because of its suitability and additionally due to the acknowledgement of the fact that this measure is basically an invasion of privacy, the use of this measure is regulated under a procedure stipulated with a separate law - Law on Interception of Communications (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no.121/06, 110/08, 4/09 and 116/2012).

The criteria on the use of electronic surveillance, consistent with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure are as follows:⁴³

The court may order interception of communications for a person for whom there is a reasonable doubt that he/she is preparing to commit a criminal act against the state, armed forces or against humanity and international law.

Apart from these cases, the court may order interception of communications when an armed attack against the Republic of Macedonia is being prepared, incited, organised or participated in, or its security system for performance of its own functions is being disabled, if there is no other ³⁹Article 258, paragraph 1 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

⁴⁰Article 258, paragraph 2 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

⁴¹Article 258, paragraph 3 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

⁴²Article 258, paragraph 4 - Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

⁴³ Article 29 - Law on Interception of Communications (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no.121/06, 110/08, 4/09 and 116/2012).

way to discover data for such an activity in order to stop the committing of the crime, armed attack or disablement of the security system.

Reasonable doubt is defined as findings that are based on the knowledge of a crime and experience, and can be assessed as an evidence of a committed crime – implying the lowest level of doubt. The criminal acts against the state, armed forces, humanity and international law are contained in chapters 28, 29 and 34 of the Criminal Code, respectively.

Even though the identified legislations are accessible since they are all published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia and are also available online, one can conclude that they are not as precise and clear as they should be, especially taking into consideration the fact that they regulate intrusive measures.

There are several reasons for this, the first one being the fact that even though the acts are all formally consistent with the Constitution and with each other, cumulatively speaking, there is a wide range of exceptional circumstances.

Furthermore, clear definitions of the criteria are formally not provided. It is only stipulated that there has to be a reasonable doubt for an existence of a potential threat that can be prevented or a reasonable expectation that crucial evidence will be obtained, regardless of the fact that it is understood that these measures can only be used as a last resort.

For the purpose of implementation of special investigative measures, the existence of a court decision or a written order by the public prosecutor is necessary, since these are the only authorised bodies to order special investigative measures.⁴⁴ Therefore, the interpretation of the elements that are a part of the provided provisions, as well as the assessment of the necessity of an implementation measure is solely in the hands of the judges and sometimes even in the hands of public prosecutors. This implies that the control of the potential misuse and discrimination depends on individual judges and public prosecutors themselves, thus, foreseeability cannot be guaranteed as well.

According to the current situation, the terminological confusion, the numerous ambiguities, the wide scope of exceptions, the low threshold for an approval of invasion of privacy and the unlikelihood for the existence of an efficient control, all imply that the arbitrary invasion of privacy will not reduce, on the contrary, it will be legalised.⁴⁵

According to the provided relevant legislations and regardless of the fact that they are not clear enough, a conclusion can be drawn that electronic surveillance and similar measures cannot be used against journalists in order to identify their sources of information. This is due to the fact that the special investigative measures can only be ordered against suspects or persons who committed a crime (pursuant to the conditions listed above), while a journalist cannot be referred to as a suspect, but simply as someone who informs the public. This is consistent with the Constitutional and other legislations which guarantee the protection of the journalists' sources, especially in light of the relevant instruments of the Council of Europe, such as the Recommendation 1950 (2011) of the Parliamentary Assembly on the protection of journalists' sources, which reaffirms that the protection of journalists' sources of information is a basic condition for both the full exercise of the journalistic work and the right of the public to be informed on matters of public concern.

⁴⁴Article 256, Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012).

⁴⁵Code of Criminal Procedure, N. Matovski, G. Lazhetikj-Buzharovska and G. Kalajdziev, 2009, page 288.

As a conclusion, in relation to the answers of the previous question, even though in certain situations journalists can be asked to reveal their source, still, intrusive measures such as surveillance and seizure actions may not be legally invoked.

Regarding the practical applications of the provisions, it has to be noted that lawsuits for non-disclosure of the sources of information are not recorded; however, again, there are cases when journalists were sued for defamation and an insult, and plaintiffs have requested that they reveal their sources of information.⁴⁶

Anti-terrorism legislation

The anti-terrorism legislation of the Republic of Macedonia mostly relies on international legislation due to the strong and efficient long-term collaboration with relevant international stakeholders such as the Council of Europe, OSCE, NATO, Europol, and the EU.

National policies such as the National Programme for Adoption of the Acquis Communautaire and the Revised National Strategy against Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing are therefore drawn from relevant international conventions and treaties. The Republic of Macedonia is also a party to several bilateral agreements with countries from the region and other countries and international organisations. These agreements refer to co-operation, inter alia, in the fields of fight against terrorism, organised crime, money laundering and other criminal acts pertaining to terrorism.

Furthermore, the National Security Strategy from 2008 and the Strategy on defence from 2010, emphasize that terrorism has the greatest influence on the national security policy.⁴⁷

In terms of the national laws, terrorism is regulated with:

- the Criminal Code (Кривичен законик) (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15);

⁴⁶ Analysis: The Development of Media in Macedonia according to the UNESCO Indicators, Macedonian Institute for Media (MIM), 2012, page 18.

⁴⁷ http://www.coe.int/t/dlapil/codexter/country_profiles.asp.

- Code of Criminal Procedure (Закон за кривична постапка) (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012); and
- Law on Prevention of Money Laundering and Financing of Terrorism (Закон за спречување перење на пари и финансирање на тероризам) (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 130/2014).

The provisions of these laws are mostly focused on the definition of the terms terrorism⁴⁸, international terrorism⁴⁹, terroristic organisation⁵⁰, and financing terrorism⁵¹, as well as prescribing of punishments for such committed acts. The definitions are quite extensive, covering a significant number of actions that can be a part of terrorism. They are also focused towards the realization of the following activities:⁵²

- Prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering and terrorist financing;
 - Harmonisation of the legislation with the regulations of the European Union and relevant international standards on prevention of money laundering and financing of terrorism;
 - Harmonisation of the domestic legislation with the EU legislation;
 - An effective system of inter-institutional cooperation;
 - Strengthening of international co-operation; and
 - Raising public awareness about the necessity to take measures to prevent money laundering and terrorism financing.

10. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

The primary purpose of encryption is to protect the confidentiality of digital data stored on computer systems or transmitted via the Internet or other computer networks. Modern encryption algorithms play a vital role in the security assurance of IT systems and communications as they can provide not only confidentiality, but also the following key elements of security:

- Authentication: the origin of a message can be verified;

⁴⁸ Article 394-b - Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15).

⁴⁹ Article 419 - Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15).

⁵⁰ Article 394-a - Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15).

⁵¹ Article 394-c - Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15).

⁵² http://www.coe.int/t/dlapil/codexter/country_profiles.asp.

- Integrity: proof that the contents of a message have not been changed since it was sent;
- Non-repudiation: the sender of a message cannot deny the sending of the message.⁵³

In the modern society, a fact is that a significant part of the communications between people and organizations takes place online, on a daily basis.

Individuals developed a need of security online, so that they could seek, receive and impart information without the risk of repercussions, disclosure, surveillance or other improper use of their opinions and expression.⁵⁴

However, by interpreting the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, several findings can be made. First, one pillar of the fundamental values of the constitutional order of the Republic of Macedonia includes the fundamental freedoms and rights of the individual and citizen, recognized in international law and determined by the Constitution.

Regarding the legislation of the Republic of Macedonia, so far, no specific legislation has been enacted in order to forbid or limit specific subjects to use encryption and anonymity online in specific situations. In addition, no specific legislation has been enacted in order to promote, protect and preserve encryption and anonymity online as a tool that enables people to exercise their rights to freedom of opinion and expression.

However, by interpreting the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, several findings can be made. First, one pillar of the fundamental values of the constitutional order of the Republic of Macedonia includes the fundamental freedoms and rights of the individual and citizen, recognized in international law and determined by the Constitution.⁵⁵

Thus, the Constitution recognises and reaffirms the right to privacy as set in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁵⁶ and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁵⁷, protecting journalists' privacy against arbitrary interference.

Moreover, several instruments that have emerged in this area came originally from the Council of Europe and the European Union. For example, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted the Declaration on Freedom of Communication on the Internet in May 2003. Principle 7 on anonymity provides that: In order to ensure protection against online surveillance and to enhance the free expression of information and ideas, member states should respect the will of users of the Internet not to disclose their identity. This does not prevent member states ⁵³<http://searchsecurity.techtarget.com/definition/encryption>.

⁵⁴Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, David Kaye, 2015.

⁵⁵Article 8, Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia.

⁵⁶Article 12, Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

⁵⁷Article 17, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

from taking measures and co-operating in order to trace those responsible for criminal acts, in accordance with national law, the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and other international agreements in the fields of justice and the police.⁵⁸

Additionally, the European Court of Human Rights recognized the importance of anonymity to the rights to privacy and freedom of expression, but also has been clear that anonymity is not absolute and may be limited for the protection of other legitimate interests, especially the protection of vulnerable groups. Specifically, it stated that anonymity and confidentiality on the internet must not lead states to refuse to protect the rights of potential victims, especially where vulnerable people are concerned.

Although freedom of expression and confidentiality of communications are primary considerations and users of telecommunications and Internet services must have a guarantee that their own privacy and freedom of expression will be respected, such a guarantee cannot be absolute and must yield on occasion to other legitimate imperatives, such as the prevention of disorder or crime or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.⁵⁹

The European Court expressed a similar view in the case of Delfi v Estonia when it noted that it was: [M]indful, in this context, of the importance of the wishes of Internet users not to disclose their identity in exercising their freedom of expression. At the same time, the spread of the Internet and the possibility – or for some purposes the danger – that information once made public will remain public and circulate forever, calls for caution.⁶⁰

Furthermore, in its explanatory report, OECD also notes the importance of cryptography to the protection of the fight to privacy, declaring that cryptography forms the basis for a new generation of privacy enhancing technologies.⁶¹

Taking into consideration what is previously mentioned, Amendment 19 of the Constitution also guarantees the freedom of correspondence and other forms of communication, and it can be concluded that the Constitution does provide a guarantee for journalists to rely on online encryption and anonymity in order to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance and other measures that are intrusive to their right to privacy.

In light of the media, it is a notorious fact that media depend to a large extent on members of the public for the supply of information. However, anonymity is often a precondition for the source's willingness to speak, especially when citizens come forward with information of a highly sensitive nature.

⁵⁸https://www.article19.org/data/files/medialibrary/38006/Anonymity_and_encryption_report_A5_final-web.pdf.

⁵⁹Article 8, European Convention on Human Rights.

⁶⁰ https://www.article19.org/data/files/medialibrary/38006/Anonymity_and_encryption_report_A5_final-web.pdf.

⁶¹ <http://www.oecd.org/sti/ieconomy/guidelinesforcryptographypolicy.htm>.

Because of these reasons, while taking into consideration the fact that encryption and anonymity enable individuals to exercise their rights to freedom of opinion and expression in the digital age, strong protection is encouraged.

This will enable not only journalists, but other people as well, to share and receive information that they need in order to form opinions on certain matters, especially in a society where access to information is crucial.

11. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under the law on protection of journalistic sources? Is there another practice that protects whistle-blowers? Does the legislation prohibit identification of whistle-blowers by authorities and companies?

Whistle-blowers are considered civil servants that indicate corruption, violation of laws, abuse of official position etc. Such people are described as courageous individuals that act on moral grounds, regardless of the risk imposed on their own career publicly, and determined to object to the illegal conduct of state authorities.

A law on whistle-blowers exists in many countries and aims to protect the suppliers of information, people who want to reveal corruption in state bodies, who are employed in the administration and provide information on abuse of power and crime.⁶² EU requests for this law, together with the law against posting “bombs”, to be agreed not later than October 20 2015, and the need for its legal act is even in the report Priebe.

So far, in Macedonia, there is no official information on whether an employee in the administration reported to the State Anti-Corruption Commission, a minister, director or mayor on abuse or bribery.⁶³ The conference for “whistle-blowers” addressed the time and the capacity of the law to protect whistle-blowers, organised in order to make recommendations and conclusions on whether there is a need to adopt this law. The Minister of Justice Jashari stressed that now persons will be encouraged to report crime and abuse of power, and that they are protected under the law on prevention of corruption. He also stated that the procedure for adoption of the Law on Whistle-blowers (Закон за пријавувачи на кривични дела/свиркачи) already started, which will be on the basis of a detailed analysis and an opinion from the European Commission, and comparative analysis of the EU law, and finally Jashari added that although this law is not yet applicable in Macedonia, there are other laws that provide basic protection in the reporting of crime, corruption and abuse of power.⁶⁴ At the same time, at the conference, the EU Ambassador Aivo Orav emphasised that the state has a key task in the adoption of the Law on Whistle-blowers, which will instigate a feeling of real protection in people, pursuant to the law and the freedom to report crime and abuse of power anonymously.⁶⁵

⁶² <http://www.telegraf.mk/aktuelno/makedonija/ns-newsarticle-311776-zakon-za-svirkaci-potkazuvacite-na-korupcija-ke-dobijat-pravna-zastita.nspx>.

⁶³ Ibid.

⁶⁴ <http://fokus.mk/konferentsija-za-svirkachi-ima-li-vreme-i-ka-patsitet-za-zakonot-za-prijavuvachi/> 14.10.2015.

Currently, only the Law on Prevention of Corruption has the main objective to establish measures to prevent corruption in the exercise of power and the assigned public authorities.⁶⁶ The following is stipulated in Article 19 of this law: “a person who provided information that indicates corruption cannot be prosecuted and liability of this person will not be invoked”. According to paragraph 2 “protection shall be provided to a person who has testified or gave a statement about a corruption procedure, also he or a member of his family are entitled to compensation for damages which he or the members of the family may suffer because of the statement or the testimony”. If the person really suffers some sort of damage, he may submit a request for compensation to the competent authority, which shall be paid from the state budget according to the act to the Minister of Justice.

It seems that the lack of court cases on corruption or abuse of power provided by whistle-blowers is due to the lack of an effective act on the protection of whistle-blowers in Macedonia, as well as means to guarantee an effective court procedure. Macedonia should fulfil the recommendations stated by Bailey and Aivo Orav, and the law that will be in accordance with the EU law should be adopted, and whistle-blowers should be given the freedom to report on cases of corruption.

12. Conclusion

Protection of the sources of journalists is one of the basic prerequisites for the freedom of media, as determined in laws and in the professional codes of conduct in many countries, and it is confirmed in several international instruments on the freedoms of journalists... A free democratic society needs a press and media that must be maximally protected in their reporting. Hence, when it comes to regulation – the basic measure would be to protect the press and the media against restrictions. This is also accompanied by the provision of access to information, which means that the country and the institutions must make available to journalists all the information they need.

The national law and the practice of the member states of the European Union should provide explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information that identify the source in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and the principles determined with this convention, which should be considered minimum standards in regard to this law.

⁶⁵ Ibid.

⁶⁶ Law on the Prevention of Corruption, Official Gazette no. 07-1733/1, no.07/4460/1, April 18 2012.

The most important conclusion that can be drawn from this paper is that the familiarity of journalists with their legally guaranteed rights would help them to protect themselves against possible pressures. What is even more important is that journalists should be primarily informed by the competent authorities about their right not to disclose information that identify the source, as well as about the limitations of this right before the disclosure is requested.

13. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

13.1. Legislation

- Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia (“Official Gazette” no.52/1991)
- Criminal Code ("Official Gazette" no. 37/1996, 80/1999, 4/2002, 43/2003, 19/2004, 81/2005, 60/2006, 73/2006, 7/2008, 139 / 2008 114/2009, 51/2011, 135/2011, 185/2011, 142/2012, 166/2012, 55/2013, 82/2013, 14/2014, 27/2014, 28/2014, 41/2014, 115/2014, 132/2014, 160/2014, 199/2014, 196/2015 and 226/2015)
- Criminal Code of Macedonia - Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11
- Commentary of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Macedonia by Professor VladoKambovski, 2011.
- Law on Media (“Official Gazette” no. 184/2013 and 13/2014).
- Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation (“Official Gazette” no. 143/2012).
- Law on Prevention of Corruption (“Official Gazette” no.28/2002, 46/2004, 126/2006, 10/2008, 161/2008, 145/2010, 47/2015, 145/2015)
- Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012)
- Law on Interception of Communications (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no.121/06, 110/08, 4/09 and 116/2012).
- Law on the Prevention of Corruption, Official Gazette no. 07-1733/1, no.07/4460/1, April 18 2012

13.2. Books and articles

- Analysis: The Development of Media in Macedonia according to the UNESCO Indicators, Macedonian Institute for Media (MIM), 2012, page 18
- Analysis of the Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation provided by the Centre for Media Development <http://mdc.org.mk/uploads/2014/03.Експертиза-клевета-и-навреда.pdf>
- David Kaye, Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, 2015.

13.3. Internet sources

- <http://civil.org.mk/wp-content/uploads/2013/05/Journalist-Manual-inside-MK-4web.pdf> <http://www.znm.org.mk/drupal-7.7/mk/node/440>
- http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_ENG.pdf
- <http://www.telma.com.mk/node/8851>
- [http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{"itemid":\["001-60596"\]}](http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/eng#{)

- <http://www.znm.org.mk/drupal-7.7/mk/docs/statut>
- http://www.coe.int/t/dlapil/codexter/country_profiles.asp
- <http://searchsecurity.techtarget.com/definition/encryption>
- <http://www.telegraf.mk/aktuelno/makedonija/ns-newsarticle-311776-zakon-za-svirkaci-potkazuvacite-na-korupcija-ke-dobijat-pravna-zastita.nsp>
- <http://fokus.mk/konferentsija-za-svirkachi-ima-li-vreme-i-kapacitet-za-zakonot-za-prijavuvachi/> 14.10.2015
- Legal site- <http://www.akademik.mk/presuda-likvidatsija-sudot-gi-proglasi-site-osummina-obvineti-za-vinovni-najvisoki-zatvorski-kazni-dobija-zafirov-i-kezharovski-4/>
- Newspaper Nova Makedonija www.novamakedonija.com.mk/NewsDetal.asp?vest=610131032302&id=9&setIzdanie=22900
- Report, Politicians and Court Cases of Defamation, January 2013-2015, published 2015
- Statement of the journalist Natasha Janchikj (<http://infomax.mk/wp/?p=22794#>)

14. Table of Provisions

Used provisions
The Universal Declaration of Human Rights Article 12 No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.
International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights Article 17 1. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation. 2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.
The Law on Civil Liability for Insult and Defamation Article 12 1. The Court may request from the defendant to disclose relevant information in order to determine the authenticity of the published information, without identifying the source of the information. 2. The refusal of the defendant to reveal the secret source of information cannot be interpreted as any admission of guilt, or based on the conclusion that it did not prove the truth of the facts.

The Law on Prevention of Corruption

Article 56

Any enforcement, prevention or other form of influence on media to publish or not to publish information on a case of corruption, is prohibited. Nobody can request from a journalist who published information on acts of corruption, to reveal the source of information, except in proceedings before court.

Article 65

A fine of 500 to 1,000 Euros in MKD will pay that person who carried coercion or in any manner prohibited to publish or not to publish information on cases of corruption, and to that one who hinders access to sources of information, contrary to Article 56 of this law.

The Law on Media

Article 2 (paragraph 5)

A journalist is a person who performs activities of collection, analysis, processing, molding and/or classification of information published in the media, and is employed by the media publisher or has concluded an agreement with the media publisher, or is a person who performs journalistic activities as an independent profession.

Article 12 (paragraph 1)

The Journalist has the right not to disclose the source of information or data that may reveal the source in accordance with international law and the Constitution, as we mention in first question.

Article 12 (paragraph 2)

Right under paragraph (1) of this Article shall apply to other persons who due to their professional relationship with the journalist are familiar with the data that may reveal the source, through the collection, editorial framing or disseminate information

European Convention on Human Rights

Article 8

Right to respect for private and family life

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia

Article 8

- (1) The fundamental values of the constitutional order of the Republic of Macedonia are:
- the fundamental freedoms and rights of the individual and citizen, recognized in international law and determined by the Constitution;
 - the free expression of national identity;
 - the rule of law;
 - the separation of state powers into legislative, executive and judicial;
 - political pluralism and free, direct and democratic elections;
 - the legal protection of property;
 - the freedom of the market and entrepreneurship;

- humanity social justice and solidarity;
- local self-government;
- space development based on urban and rural planning to promote and improve social wellbeing and protection and promotion of the environment and nature;
- respect for the generally accepted norms of international law.

(2) Anything that is not prohibited by the Constitution and by law is permitted in the Republic of Macedonia.

Article 16

The right to protect a source of information in mass media is guaranteed.

Amendment XIX

1. The freedom and inviolability of correspondence and other forms of communication is guaranteed. Only a court decision may, under conditions and in procedure prescribed by law, authorise non-application of the principle of inviolability of correspondence and other forms of communication, in cases where it is indispensable to preventing or revealing criminal acts, to a criminal investigation or where required in the interests of security and defence of the Republic.

2. This amendment replaces Article 17 of the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia. Pursuant to Article 131, paragraph 5 of the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, the Assembly of the Republic of Macedonia, at its session held on December 7 2005 adopted the following.

Article 16 (paragraph 6)

The right to protect a source of information in the mass media is guaranteed.

Code of Criminal Procedure (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 150/10, 5/11 and 100/2012)

Article 252

Purpose and types of special investigative measures

(1) If likely to obtain data and evidence necessary for successful criminal procedure, which cannot be obtained by other means, the following special investigative measures may be ordered:

- 1) Monitoring and recording of the telephone and other electronic communications under a procedure as stipulated with a separate law;
- 2) Surveillance and recording in homes, closed up or fenced space that belongs to the home or office space designated as private or in a vehicle and the entrance of such facilities in order to create the required conditions for monitoring of communications;
- 3) Secret monitoring and recording of conversations with technical devices outside the residence or the office space designated as private;
- 4) Secret access and search of computer systems;
- 5) Automatic or in other way searching and comparing personal data of citizens;
- 6) Inspection of telephone or other electronic communications;
- 7) Simulated purchase of items;
- 8) Simulated offering and receiving bribes;
- 9) Controlled delivery and transport of persons and objects;
- 10) Use of undercover agents for surveillance and gathering information or data;
- 11) Opening a simulated bank account; and
- 12) Simulated incorporation of legal persons or using existing legal persons for the purpose of collecting data.

(2) In case when no information is available on the identity of the perpetrator of the criminal offence, the special investigative measures as referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article may be ordered also in respect of the object of the criminal offense.

Article 253

Crimes for which special investigative measures may be ordered

Special investigative measures may be ordered, when there are grounds for suspicion:

(1) for criminal offenses that entail a prison sentence of at least four years, and which have been prepared, are being committed or have been committed by an organized group, gang or other criminal enterprise;

(2) for the criminal offences of homicide as per Article 123;

abduction as per Article 141;

mediation in prostitution as per Article 191, paragraphs 1, 3 and 4; showing pornographic materials to a juvenile from article 193, production and distribution of child pornography from 193 –a , luring to an intercourse or other sexual acts against a juvenile who has not turned 14 years of age from article 193-b, unauthorized production and selling of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors as per Article 215, paragraphs 1 and 3; damaging and unauthorized entry in computer systems as per Article 251, paragraphs 4 and 6; extortion as per Article 258, blackmail as per Article 259, paragraph 2; appropriation of goods under temporary protection or cultural heritage or natural rarities as per Article 265; taking out, i.e. exporting abroad goods under temporary protection or cultural heritage or natural rarities as per Article 266, paragraph 1; sale of cultural heritage of special importance owned by the state as per Article 266-a; money laundering and other proceeds from a punishable act as per Article 273, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 and paragraphs 5, 6, 8 and 12; smuggling as per Article 278, paragraphs 3 and 5; customs fraud as per Article 278-a; misuse of an official position and authority as per Article 353; defalcation in official service as per Article 354; fraud in official service as per Article 355; stealing in official service as per Article 356; accepting a bribe as per Article 357, paragraphs 1, 4, 5 and 6; giving a bribe as per Article 358, paragraphs 1 and 4; illegal mediation as per Article 359, paragraph 6; illegal influence on witnesses as per Article 368-a, paragraph 3; establishing a criminal enterprise as per Article 394, paragraph 3; terrorist organization as per Article 394-a, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3; terrorism as per Article 394-b and financing terrorism as per Article 394-c, all of those from the Criminal Code; or

(3) for criminal offenses against the state (Chapter XXVIII), crimes against humanity and the international law (Chapter XXXIV) from the Criminal Code.

(2) In case when no information is available on the identity of the perpetrator of the criminal offence, the special investigative measures as referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article may be ordered also in respect of the object of the criminal offense.

Article 255

Persons against whom special investigative measures may be ordered

(1) Pursuant to the conditions listed in Article 252, paragraph 1 of this Law, the order may pertain to a person:

- 1) who committed a criminal offense as stipulated in article 253 of this Law;
- 2) who undertakes activities in order to commit a criminal offense as stipulated in article 253 of this Law; and
- 3) who is preparing the commission of a criminal offense as stipulated in Article 253, when such preparation is punishable according to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

(2) The order may also pertain to a person who receives or relays shipments to and from the suspect or if the suspect uses his or her communication device.

(3) If, during the implementation of the measures, communications of a person who is not a subject of the order are monitored and recorded, the public prosecutor shall be obliged to set them aside and inform the judge of the preliminary procedure thereof. Upon proposal by the public prosecutor, the preliminary procedure judge may order, only the parts that pertain to the criminal offense for which the order had been given to be removed from the overall documentation on the implementation of the measures.

Article 256

Authorized body for ordering special investigative measures

The measures referred to in Article 252, paragraph 1, items 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 of this Law, upon an elaborated motion by the public prosecutor shall be ordered by the preliminary procedure judge with a written order. The measures referred to in Article 252, paragraph 1, items 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of this Law shall be ordered by the public prosecutor with a written order.

Article 260

Duration of the measures

- (1) Any special investigative measure, shall last for not longer than 4 months.
- (2) Any extension of the measures referred to in Article 252, paragraph 1, items 1, 2, 3 and 4 for a maximum additional period of up to 4 months may be approved by the preliminary procedure judge, upon an elaborated written request by the public prosecutor.
- (3) For criminal offenses that entail a prison sentence of at least four years and which are suspected to have been committed by an organized group, gang or other criminal enterprise, upon a written request by the public prosecutor, and based on the assessment of the usefulness of the data obtained through the use of the measure and with a reasonable expectation that the measure may continue to result with data of interest for the procedure, the judge of the preliminary procedure may additionally extend the period referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article for another 6 months at the most.
- (4) The measures referred to in article 252, paragraph 1, items 9, 10, 11 and 12 of this Law, may be extended until the goal, for which the measure has been introduced is fulfilled, and until the completion of the investigation at the latest.
- (5) Upon an appeal by the public prosecutor, the Chamber of the Court as referred to in Article 25, paragraph 5 of this Law shall rule within 24 hours on the appeal against the judge's decision to overrule the extension of the measure.

Article 261

Termination of special investigative measures

As soon as the objectives, for which the special investigative orders have been established, have been achieved or the reasons due to which they have been approved cease to exist, the entity that issued or extended the order shall be obliged to immediately order the termination of the measures. If the public prosecutor waives the right of criminal prosecution or if any collected information through the special investigative measures is not significant for the procedure, they shall be destroyed under supervision by the judge, and the public prosecutor shall produce a record thereof.

Article 268

Reasons for restricting the use of special investigative measures

- (1) The measure referred to in Article 252, paragraph 1, item 2 of this Law may only be directed towards the suspect and implemented only at the home of the suspect. The measure shall be allowed in other persons' homes, only if based on a reasonable suspicion that the suspect resides there.
- (2) The recording shall be stopped, if during the recording, there are indications that it might be possible for statements to be recorded, which belong in the basic sphere of private and family life. Any documentation on such statements shall be destroyed immediately.

Law on surveillance of communications (Law on Interception of Communications (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no.121/06, 110/08, 4/09 and 116/2012)

Article 29

The court may order for interception of communications for a person for whom there is a reasonable doubt that is preparing to commit a criminal act against the state, armed forces or against humanity and international law. Except in these cases, the court may order for interception of communications when an armed attack against the Republic of Macedonia is being prepared, incited, organized or participated in or its security system for performing its own functions is being disabled, if there is no other way to discover data for such activity in order to stop the commit of the criminal act, armed attack or disablement of the security system.

Criminal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 37/96, 80/99, 4/02, 43/03, 19/04, 81/05, 60/06, 73/06, 87/07, 7/08, 139/08, 114/09, 51/11, 135/11, 185/11, 42/12, 166/12, 55/13, 82/13, 14/14, 27/14, 28/14, 41/14, 115/14, 132/14, 160/14, 199/14 and 196/15)

Terroristic organization

Article 394-a

(1) Any person who organizes a group, gang or other criminal enterprise to commit the criminal offences of murder, corporal injuries, abduction, destruction of public facilities, transport systems, infrastructure facilities, information systems and other facilities of general use, hijacking of airplanes or other means of public transport, production, possession or trade in nuclear weapons, biological, chemical weapons and other types of weapons and hazardous materials, dispersal of hazardous radioactive, poisonous and other dangerous substances or arson or causing explosions, destruction of plants and facilities for supply of water, energy and other fundamental natural resources, with an intention to endanger the lives and bodies of the citizens and create a feeling of insecurity and fear, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least eight years.

(2) The member of the group, gang or other criminal enterprise, as well as the person, who assists in any possible manner, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of four, up to ten years.

(3) The sentence as referred to in paragraph (2), shall be also imposed to any person who publicly calls for, instigates or supports the establishment of a terrorist organization.

(4) The perpetrator of the crime as referred to in paragraph (1), who, by discovering the organization, or in any other manner prevents the execution of the planned crimes, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of 3 months, up to 3 years, or he or she may be acquitted.

(5) The perpetrator of the crime as referred to in paragraph (2), who discovers the organization before committing one of the crimes referred to in paragraph (1) as its member or for its benefit, shall be acquitted.

(6) Any real estate used, and the items and objects intended for preparation of the crimes referred to in paragraphs (1), (2) and (3) shall be seized.

Terrorism

Article 394-b

(1) Any person who commits one or more crimes of murder, corporal injuries, abduction, destruction of public facilities, transportation systems, infrastructure facilities, computer systems and other facilities of general use, hijacking of airplanes or other means of public transportation, production, possession, transportation, trade, procurement or use of nuclear weapons, biological, chemical weapons and other types of weapons and hazardous materials, as well as research in the direction of development of biological and chemical weapons, release of dangerous radioactive, poisonous and other dangerous substances or causing fire or an explosion, destruction of facilities for water supply, energy supply or other basic natural sources, with the intention to endanger human life and body and to create feeling of insecurity or fear among citizens, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least ten years or life imprisonment.

(2) Any person who seriously threatens to commit the crime referred to in paragraph (1) of this article directly or indirectly, by using electronic means or other ways, with the intention to endanger human life and body and to create feeling of insecurity or fear among citizens, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least eight years.

(3) Any person who publicly calls for, by spreading a message or making it publicly available in any other manner, with an intention to instigate some of the activities referred to in paragraph (1) of this article, when the appeal itself creates a danger of committing such a crime, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of four to ten years.

(4) The sentence referred to in paragraph (1) of this article shall be also applied for a person who forces someone to perform the crime specified in paragraph (1) of this article by force or serious threat upon the person's life and body or upon the life and body of the person's closely related people.

(5) The sentence referred to in paragraph (2) shall also be imposed to any person who shall agree with another person to commit the crimes referred to in paragraph (1), or shall invite another person to join an enterprise or a group with an intention to commit the crime referred to in paragraph (1).

(6) Any person who organizes manufacture, prepares, produces, sells, buys, transports or holds explosives, firearms or other types of weapons or hazardous substances intended to commit the crime as referred to in paragraph (1), as well as any person who conducts training, or in any other manner prepares another person to commit the crime referred to in paragraph (1), shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least four years.

(7) A person who performs a grand larceny in order to obtain the necessary objects to commit any of the crimes referred to in paragraph (1) of this article, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least four years.

(8) If the crime has been committed by a legal entity, it shall be punished with a monetary fine.

(9) Any real estate used, and the items and objects intended for preparation or committing the crimes shall be seized.

Financing of terrorism

Article 394-c

(1) Any person who provides or collects funds in any way, directly or indirectly, unlawfully and consciously, with the intention to use them, or knowingly that they will be used, fully or partially, to commit the criminal offence of hijacking an airplane or a ship (Article 302), endangerment of air traffic security (Article 303), terrorist endangerment of the constitutional order and security (Article 313), terrorist organization (Article 394-a), terrorism (Article 394-b), crimes against humanity (Article 403-a), international terrorism (Article 419), taking hostages (Article 421) and other crimes of murder or serious bodily injuries, committed with an intention to create a feeling of insecurity and fear amongst the citizens, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least four years.

(2) A person who publicly calls for, by disseminating, or making available to the public in any other manner, a message that instigates the perpetration of some of the actions referred to in paragraph (1) of this article, and when the call itself creates a danger for realization of such action, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of four to ten years.

(3) The sentence referred to in paragraph (2) shall also be imposed to any person who shall agree with another person to commit the crimes referred to in paragraph (1), or shall invite another person to join an enterprise or a group with an intention to commit the crime referred to in paragraph (1).

(4) Any person who organizes a group or a gang, in order to commit the crime as referred to in paragraph (1), shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least eight years.

(5) The members of the group or the gang shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least five years.

(6) The members of the group or the gang who discover the group i.e. the gang before committing some crime as its member or for its benefit, shall be acquitted.

(7) An official person, responsible person in a bank or other financial institution, or person performing activities of public interest, who according to the law is authorized to undertake measures and activities for prevention of terrorism financing, and consciously fails to undertake the measures determined by law and thus enables the crime referred to in paragraph (1) of this article to be committed, shall be sentenced to imprisonment of at least four years.

(8) The sentence referred to in paragraph (7) of this article shall be imposed to an official person who illegally discloses to a client or other person data that refer to the procedure for investigation of suspicious transactions or application of other measures and activities for terrorism financing.

(9) If the crime defined in paragraphs (7) and (8) of this article has been committed out of negligence, the perpetrator shall be sentenced with a fine or imprisonment of up to three years.

10) If the crime referred to in this article has been committed by a legal entity, it shall be punished with a monetary fine.

(11) All means intended for the preparation, financing and committing the crimes as referred to in paragraphs (1), (2), (3) and (4) shall be seized.

International terrorism

Article 419

(1) A person who with the intention of harming a foreign state or some international organization, commits a kidnapping of another or some other act of violence, causes an explosion or fire, or with some other generally dangerous act or by generally dangerous means causes a danger to the life of people and to property to a significant value, shall be punished with imprisonment of at least three years.

(2) If because of the crime from item 1, one or more persons died, or a damage was caused of a large extent, the offender shall be punished with imprisonment of at least five years.

(3) If when committing the crimes from item 1, the offender kills another with intent, he shall be punished with imprisonment of at least ten years, or with life imprisonment

ELSA MALTA

Contributors

National Coordinator

Bernice Saliba

National Academic Coordinator

Nicole Sultana

National Researchers

Luca Zahra

Sara Ezabe

Nicole Sciberras Debono

Charlene Valentina Giordimaina

Michaela Pace

National Linguistic Editors

Yasmine Aquilina

Cinzia Azzopardi Alamango

National Academic Supervisor

Profs Kevin Aquilina

Introduction:

Before the 1974 Press Act, Chapter 248 of the laws of Malta, was amended in 1996, journalists were afforded no protection as regards their sources. Therefore, a court could require journalists to disclose the source of their information. One typical judgment reflecting this is *Carmel Cacopardo vs. Minister of Works et.*¹ in 1985, where the editor of a weekly newspaper was asked to disclose the identity of a particular article's author writing in that newspaper, and although the editor asked the court to be exempted from disclosing his source due to his office, the court ordered him to reveal his source.² Today, article 46 of the Press Act is the main article dealing with the confidentiality of sources.

Another source which journalists should be in line with is the Code of Journalistic ethics, which was launched in November 1991. Since the Press Ethics Commission isn't awarded any legal standing, this code is simply soft law, which can be referred to.

In addition to this, one can also refer to the Recommendation No. R (96) 6, Of the Committee of Ministers to Member States On The Protection Of Journalists In Situations Of Conflict And Tension (Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 3 May 1996 at its 98th Session). However, no situation has ever arisen where there was the need to resort to this Recommendation or other community law.

As shall be seen throughout our report, the protection of journalism and the safety of journalists is not a topical issue on the islands. In fact, discussions on the topic still remain at their preliminary stages, an issue which is mirrored in our legislation. It is only a very recent case of il-Pulizija vs Dr Jason Azzopardi, where the court in its commenting affirmed the importance of protection journalistic sources.³ This is however one case, making it the exception rather than the norm.

¹ Carmel Cacopardo vs. Minister for Works et., Constitutional Court, 25 March 1985, Vol. 69, Pt I, Section I, p. 24.

² Kevin Aquilina, 'Protection of journalistic sources in Maltese Law: an appraisal from the viewpoint of the European Convention of Human Rights' [2011] Journal of Public Law and Policy 245, 246.

³ Il-Pulizija vs Dr Jason Azzopardi, Court of Magistrates (Court of Criminal Judicature), 15th April, 2016, 4/2016

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

With the introduction of the protection of journalistic sources in 1996, the confidentiality of sources is dealt with in article 46.⁴

No court shall require any person mentioned in article 23 to disclose, nor shall such person be guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a newspaper or broadcast for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that such disclosure is necessary in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice:

Provided that the court shall not order such disclosure unless it is also satisfied that in the particular circumstances of the case the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in a democratic society:

Provided further that nothing in this article shall be interpreted as exempting any person mentioned in article 23 from proving the truth of any facts attributed by him in terms of article 12.⁵

Article 46 provides that no court shall require an author, editor, or publisher,⁶ to disclose, nor shall such person be guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a newspaper or broadcast for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that such disclosure is necessary in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice.⁷

Article 46 applies to all courts of justice, both to civil and to criminal jurisdiction, and this emerges through the use of 'no court' in the provision.

The court shall not order such disclosure unless it is also satisfied that, in the particular circumstances of the case, the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in

⁴ Kevin Aquilina, 'Protection of journalists' sources' Times of Malta (Malta, 5 October 2011) <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20111005/opinion/Protection-of-journalists-sources.387809>> accessed 1 February 2016.

⁵ Press Act 1974, Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta, s 46.

⁶ The persons mentioned in Article 23, Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta.

⁷ Press Act 1974 (n 4).

a democratic society.⁸ This situation is similar to what was held in Christine Goodwin vs. the United Kingdom.⁹ In fact, Article 46 is a reflection of the development of the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, as well as reflecting Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Article 10 protects both the journalist as well as 'the source who volunteers to assist the press in informing the public about matters of public interest'.¹⁰

In addition, it is to be noted, that nothing in Article 46 exempts any person from giving any truth on any facts attributed to him in terms of Article 12.¹¹

It is important to point out that under Maltese law, there are three types of privileges to protect the confidentiality of sources, that is, an absolute privilege, a qualified privilege, or no privilege. Where there is an absolute privilege, the court, irrespective of any competing rights or interests, the source cannot be revealed, as is the case with advocates, legal procurators and priests.¹² Where journalistic sources are concerned, the protection it is given is that of a qualified privilege in the case of the Press Act – as evident in terms of Article 46, and in terms of other special laws no privilege is given. Although the situation improved following the addition of Article 46 in the Press Act, journalists remain without any absolute privilege.

Unravelling Article 46

The protection awarded to journalists ensures that they are not faced with the charge of contempt of court for not disclosing the source of information, where otherwise any other person would be so charged. The qualified privilege translates into the court obliging journalists to disclose their sources in certain instances where it is deemed necessary in a handful of situations. This signifies the first test out of three which have to be satisfied for a source to be revealed, as confirmed by Professor Kevin Aquilina.¹³ Therefore, the disclosure of the source has to be 'necessary' in the interest particular legitimate aims, and necessary does not translate into 'expedient' or 'required' but it means that it must be 'really needed'.¹⁴

The second test that needs to be fulfilled is that despite the journalistic privilege being mentioned in the first limb of the article, the privilege is limited on the basis of a number of legitimate aims, that is, where it is in the interest of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice.

This article is modelled on Article 10 of the United Kingdom Contempt of Court Act 1981 but ⁸ ibid.

⁹ 22 EHRR 25 Christine Goodwin vs. the United Kingdom [1996].

¹⁰ Aquilina (n 2) 254.

¹¹ Article 12 deals with instances where in an action for a defamatory libel the accused assumes full responsibility for the alleged libel and declares in his defence that he wishes to prove the truth of the facts attributed to him by the aggrieved party.

¹² Aquilina (n 3).

¹³ Aquilina (n 2) 249.

¹⁴ Geoffrey Robertson and Andrew Nicol, 'Media Law' (4th edn, Penguin Books, London 2002) 261.

this article refrains from including territorial integrity and public safety as legitimate aims.¹⁵ This renders the United Kingdom provision as more liberal and more human rights friendly when compared to the Maltese provision.¹⁶

Another issue which is to be noted here is that these six legitimate aims are not defined in the Press Act and therefore it is left at the discretion of the court to interpret their exact definition, and consequently it can be presumed that UK law is referred to when determining such latitude since they are based on such law.¹⁷

The proviso to Article 46 further provides the third test that is to be satisfied. According to the proviso, disclosure is not to be ordered by the court unless the need for investigation outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources.

As regards this point, Article 19 and Interights holds that:

The party seeking disclosure will have to demonstrate not only the presence of a countervailing interest but also that the information sought is of sufficient importance to warrant a disclosure order. In many jurisdictions this means that the courts will weigh the harm of disclosure to freedom of expression against the countervailing interest. Given the importance of the former, the latter is only occasionally deemed dominant. In addition, in a number of jurisdictions, if the information may be obtained by other means, or if the goal served by disclosure has substantially been satisfied in another way, courts will not order disclosure. This careful balance, reflected in both international and national law standards, is necessary to protect a free press and hence the fundamental democratic right to freedom of expression.¹⁸

Moreover, Maltese courts are guided by the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). It is important that the scale is to tip in favour of the media in light of a democratic society.

Problems with Article 46

This qualified privilege in Article 46 is inapplicable if the journalist does not fall under Article 23, that is, if he is not an editor, author or publisher. An issue which emerges from the Press Act is that whilst the terms 'editor' and 'publisher' are defined in the act, there is no definition provided for the term 'author'. One can presume that such term includes a journalist where he is the author of the writing or broadcast. However, the term 'journalist' is neither mentioned, nor defined in the Press Act. Moreover, it may be the case where workers, inter alia, heads of news,

¹⁵ United Kingdom Contempt of Court Act 1981 c 49.

¹⁶ Aquilina (n 2) 249.

¹⁷ ibid.

¹⁸ Freedom of Expression Litigation Project (May 1998), Briefing Paper on Protection of Journalists' Sources, Article 19 and Interights.

secretaries, film crew, drivers, administrative and finance personnel and others who are privy to the identity of the source of information are not protected by the privilege and therefore may still be requested to reveal journalistic sources.¹⁹

The privilege found in Article 46 which, on pain of contempt of court, requires editors, authors or publishers to disclose their sources is limited to a 'newspaper or broadcast'.²⁰ 'Newspaper' is defined in Article 2 as 'any paper containing news, advertisements, intelligence, occurrences, or any comments or observations thereon, printed for sale or to be distributed free or in any other manner, and published daily or periodically'.²¹ This definition is limited to the traditional tabloids and therefore forms of media which today are widespread are excluded from such definition. 'Broadcast' is also defined in Article 2 as 'the transmission by wire or over the air, including that by satellite, in encoded or unencoded form of words or of visual images, whether or not such words or images are in fact received by any person'.²² In this definition it appears, at face value, that the new media are included in such definition and therefore journalists working for new media are to be protected under this article.²³

Special Laws

There are situations where Article 46 does not apply, because particular special laws prevail over general laws, according to the lex specialis derogat lex generalis principle. The judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, which Malta is to embrace, extend well beyond the limitations found in our law. These special laws include the Official Secrets Act, the Security Service Act, the Prevention of Money Laundering Act, the Police Act and the Criminal Code.

Official Secrets Act

Three provisions in the Official Secrets Act exclude the application of the qualified privilege.

Article 13 criminalises a person who fails to comply with an official direction to return a document or other article relating to international relations, security or defence in his possession which it would be an offence for him to disclose without having the lawful authority.²⁴

Article 19 allows the carrying out of a search by a superintendent of police where it appears that the case is one of great emergency and that in the interest of the State immediate action is necessary without the need for a magistrate's warrant. A magistrate can also issue such a search warrant.²⁵

¹⁹ Aquilina (n 3).

²⁰ Press Act 1974 (n 4).

²¹ Press Act 1974 (n 4) s 2.

²² ibid.

²³ Aquilina (n 2) 248.

²⁴ Official Secrets Act 1996, Chapter 50 of the Laws of Malta, s 13.

²⁵ ibid s 19.

Article 22 provides that every person is to give on demand to any police officer not below the rank of inspector, or any member of the armed forces of Malta, 'any information in his power relating to an offence or suspected offence' under the act and 'to attend at such time and place as may be specified for the purpose of furnishing such information'.²⁶ It is a criminal offence if when such information is requested or when one is asked to attend, one does not cooperate.²⁷

Security Service Act

The Security Service Act allows the Minister responsible for Security Service to, firstly, authorise an entry on and interference with property in terms of Article 6(1) and secondly the interception of communications, that is, post, radio communications or telecommunication system or by other means in terms of Article 6(2).²⁸

It is to be mentioned that this law neither refrains the Minister from authorising the Security Service from entering on or interfering with the property used by journalists, for instance newsrooms or offices, nor does it prohibit the authorisation of the Security Service to intercept communications, for instance, telephone calls, SMS messages, e-mails, etc., through which the journalists might use to communicate with sources or whistle-blowers with the ultimate aim of publishing information in the general interest of society.²⁹

Prevention of Money Laundering Act

The Prevention of Money Laundering Act contains two provisions in terms of which journalistic sources may be disclosed.

Firstly, Article 4 stipulates that where on the basis of information received, the Attorney General has reasonable cause to suspect that a person is guilty of an offence falling under Article 3 of the Act, an application may be made in the Criminal Court for an investigation order to be issued, that the person named in the order who appears to be 'in possession of particular material or material of a particular description which is likely to be of substantial value to the investigation of, or in connection with, the suspect, shall produce or grant access to such material to the person or persons indicated in the order; and the person or persons so indicated shall, by virtue of the investigation order, have the power to enter any house, building or other enclosure for the purpose of searching for such material'.³⁰

Such an investigated order cannot be utilized in relation to advocates and legal procurators and ²⁶ ibid s 22.

²⁷ Aquilina (n 2) 250.

²⁸ Security Service Act 1996, Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta, s 6.

²⁹ Aquilina (n 2) 250-251.

³⁰ Prevention of Money Laundering Act 1994, Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta, s 4(1).

their clients, or between clergymen and people confessing to them.³¹ This demonstrates that absolute privilege is protected, but the qualified privilege of the protection of sources of information is not, if the need arises.

Moreover, no reference is made to a journalist and his source, and as a result, the Criminal Court may issue an investigation order against a journalist.³²

Secondly, Article 30A authorises the Financial Intelligence Analysis Unit 'to demand from any person, authority or entity ... any information it deems relevant and useful for the purpose of pursuing its functions', 'notwithstanding anything contained in any other law'.³³

Police Act

Article 66 of the Police Act states:

- (1) The Minister may by regulations issue codes of practice in connection with:
 - (a) the exercise by police officers of statutory powers:
 - (i) to search a person without first arresting
 - (ii) to search a vehicle without making an arrest
 - (b) the detention, treatment, questioning and identification of persons by police officers
 - (c) searches of premises by police officers
 - (d) the seizure of property found by police officers on person or premises.”³⁴

However, no codes of practice have as yet been issued.

Criminal Code

The Criminal Code in Article 355E provides that there is no right entry, search of seizure in case of a crime which is punishable under the Press Act;³⁵ where a crime is committed in flagrante delicto under the Press Act;³⁶ and in the case of prevention of the commission of a crime in terms ³¹ ibid s 4 (1)(3)(a).

³² Aquilina (n 2) 251.

³³ Prevention of Money Laundering Act 1994 (n 29) s 30A.

³⁴ Police Act 1961, Chapter 164 of the Laws of Malta, s 66.

³⁵ Criminal Code 1854, Chapter 9 of the Laws of Malta, s 355E (1)(a).

³⁶ ibid s 355E (1)(b).

of the Press Act.³⁷

In terms of the Criminal Code, there can be no arrest by the Police of any person in cases where there are crimes punishable under the Press Act without there being a warrant.³⁸

The absolute privilege awarded to advocates and legal procurators emerges out of Article 642, whereby it provides that: 'advocates and legal procurators may not be compelled to depose with regard to circumstances knowledge whereof is derived from the professional confidence which the parties themselves shall have placed in their assistance or advice'.³⁹ Furthermore, the same rule applies to 'those persons who are by law bound to secrecy respecting circumstances on which evidence is required'.⁴⁰

Article 355Q enables the Police '...in addition to the power of seizing a computer machine, [to] require any information which is contained in a computer to be delivered in a form in which it can be taken away and in which it is visible and legible'.⁴¹

Article 355AD (3) allows the Police to:

orally or by a notice in writing, [to] require any person to attend at the police station or other place indicated by them to give such information and to produce such documents as the Police may require and if that person so attends at the police station or other place voluntarily. The written notice referred to in this subarticle shall contain a warning of the consequences of failure to comply, as are mentioned in subarticle (5).⁴²

Article 355AD (4) consequently provides that:

Any person who is considered by the police to be in possession of any information or document relevant to any investigation has a legal obligation to comply with a request from the police to attend at a police station to give as required any such information or document:

Provided that no person is bound to supply any information or document which tends to incriminate him'.⁴³

It is a criminal offence not to comply with the law, in terms of Article 355AD (3) and (4).⁴⁴

³⁷ ibid s 355E (1)(c).

³⁸ ibid s 355X (5) and s 355Y (1).

³⁹ ibid s 642(1).

⁴⁰ ibid s 642(2).

⁴¹ ibid s 355Q.

⁴² ibid s 355AD (3).

⁴³ ibid s 355AD (4).

⁴⁴ ibid s 355AD (3) and (4).

The Minister responsible for justice may make regulations regarding the interception of communications to provide mutual assistance in criminal matters to foreign law enforcement agencies in terms treaties to which Malta is a party to.⁴⁵

Article 61 provides that the failure to disclose the commission of a crime against the safety of the government is punishable:

Whosoever, knowing that any of the crimes referred to in the preceding articles of this Title is about to be committed, shall not, within twenty-four hours, disclose to the Government or to the authorities of the Government, the circumstances which may have come to his knowledge, shall, for the mere omission, be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment for a term from nine to eighteen months.⁴⁶

Article 61 of the Criminal Code is applicable to journalists and therefore they are under a legal duty to disclose information that they might be in possession of, such as the identity of the source, to the police if they are aware of any crime against the safety of the government, 'that is, attempts against the President of Malta (Article 55), insurrection or coup d'état (Article 56), conspiracy against the State (Article 57) and provocation to perpetrate crimes against the safety of the government (Article 59).'⁴⁷

The Code of Organisation and Civil Procedure

In the Code of Organisation and Civil Procedure, Article 588 mentions the individuals who enjoy a privilege from non-disclosure of source in civil proceedings.⁴⁸ Article 588(1) mentions the absolute privilege in communications that extends to advocates, legal procurators and priests, while Article 588(2) alludes to particular members of a profession who are awarded a qualified privileged communication, that is, accountants, medical practitioners, social workers, psychologists, and marriage counsellors. As a result, it is within the court's discretion whether or not to allow such individuals in such a position to exercise such a privilege 'without delineating the criteria to be applied by the court to accord or deny such privileged status'.⁴⁹ As evident from the legal extract, journalists are not listed among such individuals.

2. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

⁴⁵ ibid s 628B.

⁴⁶ ibid s 61.

⁴⁷ Aquilina (n 2) 253.

⁴⁸ Code of Organization and Civil Procedure 1855, Chapter 12 of the Laws of Malta, s 588.

⁴⁹ Aquilina (n 2) 253.

Malta's Code of Journalistic Ethics self-regulates the behaviour of 'all those who are engaged directly or indirectly in that activity and that profession'.⁵⁰ The Code contains a list of cases which are considered to be in breach of ethical behaviour, among which one can find 'whenever the confidentiality of the source of information, as requested, is not respected', and 'whenever a source of information is divulged without obtaining an explicit permission so to do'.⁵¹ Therefore, this soft law renders unethical the divulging of a source of information by a journalist whenever the confidentiality is breached when it was requested or when permission was not sought by such journalist.

The Press Ethics Commission is set up by the Malta Press Club to 'be competent to consider any complaints made to it against any journalist for any alleged breach of ethical behaviour'.⁵² As for sanctions, if the Press Ethics Commission finds that 'a journalist has violated one or more of the rules of this Code of Ethics', sanctions may be imposed in accordance with the gravity of the offence. Such sanctions are disapproval, censure, or grave censure. The decision by the Commission is to be given the publicity as seen fit by the same Commission. Moreover, the decision by the Commission is to be communicated to the Organizational Head of the journalist concerned.⁵³

The Press Ethics Commission is a totally independent entity which was set up by the IGM, the Institute of Maltese Journalists, but it works autonomously to the IGM. The task of the Press Ethics Commission is to investigate complaints made against a journalist, irrespective of whether he is a member of the Institute or not. The Commission is composed of ten members, with a lawyer chairing the same Commission while another member of the legal profession is one of the ten members, having experience in journalism.⁵⁴

The Press Ethics Commission interprets the Code of Ethics and journalists breaching their source of information falls under a breach of the code. The Commission is to hear the different parties in each case, and when a decision is taken it is heeded by all the members of the profession.⁵⁵

However, the Press Ethics Commission is awarded no legal standing, because it is a moral institution which is empowered to name and shame where applicable. As regards sanctions, it can only disapprove the journalist's actions, censure the wrong-doing journalist or gravely censure the journalist. The Press Ethics Commission is founded on standards of journalism

⁵⁰ Code of Journalistic Ethics, s 1.

⁵¹ ibid s 4.

⁵² ibid s 2.

⁵³ ibid s 12.

⁵⁴ Malcolm J. Naudi, 'Press Ethics Commission judgment' Malta Independent Sunday (Malta, 30 June 2013) <<http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2013-06-30/letters/press-ethic-commission-judgement-1951694854/>> accessed 18 February 2016.

⁵⁵ ibid.

which are needed in any democracy, while having the media having credibility and moral authority.⁵⁶

Although Article 46 of the Press Act applies to the protection of the source of information, the journalist is not protected. Therefore, if a journalist commits a criminal act when disclosing secret or confidential information, he would still be prosecuted according to the law for any criminal offence committed.⁵⁷

In the Press Act, Article 8 provides that whosoever shall divulge any secret matter confided to him by reason of his profession or calling, shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three month or to a fine, or to both such imprisonment and fine.⁵⁸ The Press Act, under Article 8, only covers acts done through the publication or distribution in Malta of printed matter, from whatsoever place such matter may originate, or by means of any broadcast.⁵⁹ This depends on the definition awarded to 'broadcast', which according to Article 2 of the Press Act, 'means the transmission by wire or over the air, including that by satellite, in encoded or unencoded form of words or of visual images, whether or not such words or images are in fact received by any person'.⁶⁰ It appears at face value that new media are covered through this definition.⁶¹

Our Employment and Industrial Relations Act is also silent on the matter and does not provide for journalists and their work.⁶²

3. Who is a “Journalist” according to the National Legislation? Is it, in your view, a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources? What is the Scope of Protection of other Media Actors? Is the Protection of Journalists’ Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

Maltese law does not define what a journalist is and in fact the Press Act does not even make reference to the word “journalist”. However, the chairman of the Institute of Maltese Journalists (IGM)⁶³ and RTK Radio station manager, Karl Wright, says that, from practical experience, it is now accepted that a journalist is any person whose income derives from journalism, including photographers and cameramen. However, a journalist is not just limited to that. In fact, he says

⁵⁶ ibid.

⁵⁷ Aquilina (n 2) 248.

⁵⁸ Press Act 1974 (n 4) s 8.

⁵⁹ ibid s 3.

⁶⁰ ibid s 2.

⁶¹ Aquilina (n 2) 248.

⁶² Employment and Industrial Relations Act, Chapter 452 of the Laws of Malta

⁶³ <http://igm.org.mt/about/> Author, | ‘original title’ | (additional information, date of publication) | | date of access | that any person who, in his daily job, has some sort of link with current affairs, including journals, TV stations and electronic sites, is also considered a journalist. For the (IGM), preferably such person would be accredited by the company with which he or she works and ideally he should also have some sort of link with that company.

Karl Wright is of the opinion that the idea that a journalist is only that person that is employed within a newsroom is an outdated and incorrect idea. Currently, the law does not only protect the person employed within a newsroom but, as stated earlier, a much wider definition is adopted. For this reason, one cannot say that the definition of a journalist for the protection of journalistic sources is restricted, considering that the definition of who is a journalist is so wide.

Unlike under Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Maltese law does not provide a definition of what a journalist is. The Recommendation states that a journalist is “any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication”. Unfortunately, this couldn’t be compared to what Maltese law says, because Maltese law is silent on this issue, but if we compare the definition provided for in the Recommendation with the generally accepted definition of what a journalist is in Malta, even though it cannot be found in the law, in Malta the term “journalist” is given a much wider definition than that provided in the Recommendation. This is due to the fact that it covers more media actors. However, nevertheless, Maltese law does not provide a definition of what a journalist is so it is quite difficult to compare like with like.

Moreover, the profession of a journalist is not simply attached to the collection of daily news, but it also extends to the necessary analysis, commentaries, the creation of features, and the delivery of programmes which are inspired from various stories, persons, situations, collection and delivery of information, styles and various other tools. All those that occasionally are involved in this type of job also qualify as journalists. Nevertheless, it is necessary that such activity is carried out from time to time, and not once or twice a year.

In fact, the word journalist also extends to bloggers, columnists and broadcasters (most of them would be journalists with an extensive work experience in news gathering and news features) that are involved in the collection, distribution and analysis of daily news also qualify as journalists. This, however, does not extend to bloggers, columnists and broadcasters who simply limit themselves to subjects such as cooking, health, social affairs, and so forth. With regards the latter though, it would be quite immature to argue that they should also be considered as journalists and thus their sources should also be protected, considering the fact that when one speaks about cooking, health, social affairs and so on, one is merely stating and distributing to the public facts, and not some sort of information which he may have acquired from one’s own sources.

The Institute of Maltese Journalists believes that a revision in Maltese laws is necessary, and in fact, Mr Wright has already expressed his preoccupation with Malta’ Minister of Justice Owen Bonnici about the current not-so-ideal situation. Moreover, the IGM also believes that journalists should be given some form of warrant to practice as journalists. This would be intimately linked with the education and training of the journalist, which is another sector which the IGM would like to work on, so as to ensure that Malta’s journalists are fully educated and qualified personnel.

In Malta we also have a system of a 'Press Card', which is a card granted to all journalists (including photographers and cameramen), both those working within a newsroom and those working freelance, which is granted after the necessary application form is filled in and handed in to the Department of Information Office, which is a branch of the Maltese Government, and which also issues the Press Card upon receiving all the necessary documents.

The following media category can apply for a press card:

- A. Employees of media organisations publishing registered newspapers, magazines or other registered publications
- B. Employees of media organisations running registered television or radio stations
- C. Freelance journalists, photographers or camera persons
- D. Employees of media organisations providing news or current affairs material to be published or broadcast on registered publications or stations
- E. Employees of media organisations publishing local online news portals that have been active for six months or longer
- F. New Freelance journalists, photographers or camera persons
- G. Employees of media organisations publishing NEW local online news portals.
- H. Local correspondents of foreign media organisations
- I. Foreign media on local assignments⁶⁴

Regarding this point, Karl Wright states that the IGM opines that such Press Card should start being issued by an institution which is recognised by the IGM. New procedures may be created so that one may ensure that the person for whom the Press Card is issued truly qualifies for such Card. All Media Cards should moreover be used as a genuine method for the journalist to be given the necessary access and facilities, and no card should be used for malignant or ulterior purposes.

4. What are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How are the Laws implemented? How are the Legal Safeguards combined with Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

Prior to the 1996 amendments to the Press Act, any court could order a journalist to disclose the source of his information, as was the case in *Carmel Cacopardo vs Minister of Works et.*⁶⁵ With the amendments, article 46 was added, which deals with the confidentiality of sources.

Article 46 provides that no court shall require an editor, author or publisher to disclose, nor shall such person be guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose the source of information contained in a newspaper or broadcast for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that such disclosure is necessary for the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice. Furthermore, the court shall not order the disclosure unless it is also satisfied that, in the particular circumstances of the case, the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in a democratic society.

⁶⁴ <https://gov.mt/en/Communities/Media%20and%20Press/Pages/Press-Card%20info.aspx>

⁶⁵ Constitutional Court, 25th March 1985 .

In Maltese law, the privilege to protect the confidentiality of sources can be (a) an absolute privilege, (b) a qualified privilege, or (c) no privilege.

The qualified privilege in article 46 does not apply to a journalist when he does not fall under the category of an editor, author or publisher, nor does it apply to journalists working in a newsroom or to employees of a news medium who are privy to the identity of the source of information.

There are, however, a number of special laws that require the disclosure of journalistic sources, such as for-example in the cases of the Official Secrets Act,⁶⁶ the Security Service Act,⁶⁷ the Prevention of Money Laundering Act,⁶⁸ the Police Act⁶⁹ and the Criminal Code.⁷⁰, as previously discussed in question one.

Orders requiring the disclosure of journalistic sources should be delivered only by the judiciary and after having heard the journalist. Should the court request the disclosure, such relegation should take place behind closed doors. Moreover, such order should not be a prerogative power of the Executive (be it a minister or any public officer).

Before ordering disclosure, a judge should be given reasonable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed under one or more of the said laws and the following conditions are fulfilled:

- (a) The judge is informed that reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure are inexistent or have been exhausted without success;
- (b) The information sought is likely to be of substantial value to the investigation and is likely to constitute relevant evidence in a criminal prosecution;

The legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure. In particular, the necessity of the disclosure is identified as responding to a pressing social need.

At the beginning of 2016, there was a very interesting court case in Malta which had to do with the protection of journalistic sources. In this case, a court had been requested by the plaintiff's lawyer to force a Maltese blogger, Daphne Caruana Galizia, to reveal the source behind the claim she included in one of her blogs. This was part of a libel case that a Minister opened against

⁶⁶ Chapter 50 of the Laws of Malta.

⁶⁷ Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta.

⁶⁸ Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta.

⁶⁹ Chapter 164 of the Laws of Malta.

⁷⁰ Chapter 9 of the Laws of Malta.

Daphne Caruana Galizia after she wrote in one of her blogs that the Minister was seen kissing his communications coordinator. The legal issues at hand were whether Daphne Caruana Galizia is a journalist (since she wrote her claim on her blog and not on a newspaper article) and thus whether she is protected by Maltese law, and whether she can be forced to reveal her sources. Both questions were closely connected because if the Court decided that she was not in fact a journalist, then she would not be covered by Maltese law and thus she would have to reveal her sources, but if she was indeed a journalist, then she is protected by Maltese law.

The Court in March 2016 came to the conclusion that Daphne Caruana Galizia is a journalist and that she would not be forced to reveal her sources in this libel case. In fact the magistrate turned down the request made by the Minister's wife to force Daphne Caruana Galizia to identify her sources, and declared that she was a journalist at law. In his decree, Magistrate Francesco Depasquale said that the Press Act does not speak of "journalists" but of "authors", and in such absence under Maltese law, the court referred to the definition adopted by the European Council's Committee of Ministers, which defines the term "journalist" as "any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication".

The plaintiffs argued that Daphne Caruana Galizia's blog was not covered by the Press Act, which only speaks of "newspapers or broadcasts", but the Court noted that another provision in the Act defined "printed matter" as "writing printed in typographical characters...or other means whereby words or visual images may be heard, perceived or reproduced". The Court said that, by this definition, Daphne Caruana Galizia's blog does fall under the remit of the Press Act, and the Magistrate said that "There is no reason for which the electronic means used by the defendant should not be not considered as a newspaper".

Thus, since the Court said that Daphne Caruana Galizia is indeed a journalist, then she is protected by Maltese law, which says that a journalist, unless established to the satisfaction of the court, cannot be compelled to reveal his sources. The Court said that the revelation is "required in the interests of national security, territorial integrity, public safety, protection from criminality or disorder, or the interests of justice."

In handing down its judgement, the Court also made reference to European Court of Human Rights judgements, including the case *Voskuil vs The Netherlands*⁷¹, where the protection of journalistic sources was described as "one of the basic conditions for press freedom... Without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result the vital public watchdog role of the press may be undermined and the ability of the of the press to provide accurate and reliable information may be adversely affected."

⁷¹ Case of Voskuil v. The Netherlands, Application no. 64752/01, 22nd November 2007, European Court of Human Rights

The law does not speak about who can access the information on source once the request of disclosure is approved, and it has never been tested because no Court has ever approved the request of disclosure. Recently there was a request for the Court to request the journalist to disclose her sources (Daphne Caruana Galicia case) but this was rejected by the Court. Should the journalist decide to disclose the source out of his own free will, then such information become public information and thus the public has a free hand to use in any way he may deem fit.

The journalist, just like any other Maltese citizen, has a right to be heard. This is also enshrined in Article 41 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, which states that every citizen has the "...right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions and bodies of the Union." This includes "the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken ...". In addition to this, the journalist also has a right to appeal an unfavourable decision to disclose. This is done according to Malta's civil and criminal procedures. These enable the individual to appeal the first Court's decision until the Superior Courts either amend or confirm the first Court's decision.

Furthermore, a journalist has a right not to incriminate himself. This is laid down in Article 392(2) of the Criminal Code, which lays down the following:

"Before asking any of the above questions, the court shall explain to the accused the nature of the charge preferred against him and shall inform him that he is not obliged to answer any question nor to incriminate himself; that he may, if he so desires, be assisted by advocates or legal procurators and that whatever he says may be received in evidence against him."

A journalist is free to disclose his sources without any form of consent. However, such action is considered to be in breach of ethical behaviour, as laid down in the Code of Journalistic Ethics⁷² which says that "Whenever the confidentiality of the source of information, as requested, is not respected", this is considered to be in breach of ethical behaviour.

Complaints against bona fide journalists alleging breach of Journalistic Ethics can be made to the Commission by any person who considers himself to be injured by the breach.⁷³ When the Commission decides that a breach has been committed it shall condemn the transgressor and inflict one or more of the sanctions contained in the Code so as to reflect the gravity of the offence⁷⁴.

⁷² Article 4 of the Code of Journalistic Ethics: <https://igm.org.mt/resources/code-of-journalistic-ethics/>

⁷³ Article 10 of the Rules of Procedure of the Press Ethics Commission (<https://instituteofmaltesejournalists.files.wordpress.com/2012/04/rules-of-procedure-press-ethics-commission.doc>)

⁷⁴ Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure of the Press Ethics Commission

5. In the respective national legislation, are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

The Freedom of Information Act, the Data Protection act and the Press act is the relevant domestic legislation which deals with the non-disclosure of information. However, in relation to Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the domestic legislation still has much room for development.

The 1996 amendment to the Press Act was clearly a step forward in the right direction, yet, account has evidently not been taken of Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Council of Europe Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, adopted on March 8, 2000.

Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 includes a definition of “Source” and “Information of identifying of a source”, however there is no incorporation of these definitions in the domestic legislation. It would be vital for the national legislation to take up these definitions. “Source” is defined to mean any person who provides information to a journalist. In this light one can look into the (see, Eu. Court H.R., Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, para. 39)⁷⁵. “Information identifying a source” means, as far as this is likely to lead to the identification of a source, the name and personal data as well as voice and image of a source, the factual circumstances of acquiring information from a source by a journalist, the unpublished content of the information provided by a source to a journalist and personal data of journalists and their employers related to their professional work. However, this is not defined in the national legislation and the Press act does not include these definitions.

The Freedom of Information Act, chapter 496 of the Laws of Malta⁷⁶, part V of this act speaks about the conclusive reasons for not disclosing official documents. Articles 29 to 34 enlist the reasons for non-disclosure on the basis of specific documents. These include;

Documents affecting national security, defence or international relations, and Cabinet documents.

Documents affecting the enforcement of the law and the protection of public safety.

Documents subject to legal professional privilege or containing material obtained in confidence

⁷⁵Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, Strasbourg, 27 March, 1996

⁷⁶ Chapter 496 of the Laws of Malta

Documents relating to business affairs, the economy and research.

Documents the disclosure of which would be contempt of Parliament or of Court.

Information concerning existence of certain documents.

The privilege should also extend to the other laws referred to above and a member of the judiciary should order disclosure.

The second limb of Article 10 of the European convention on human rights⁷⁷, protects the “The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society” This provision is applicable to the Maltese Law.

In terms of procedure it is necessary that the orders requiring the disclosure of journalistic sources should be delivered only by the judiciary and after heard the journalist. If then, the court requests for disclosure, such revelation should take place behind closed doors. In this case, this should not be the prerogative power of the Executive, be it a minister or any public officer.

Before ordering disclosure, a judge should be given reasonable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed under one or more of the said laws and the following conditions are fulfilled:

The judge is informed that reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure are inexistent or have been exhausted without success.

The information sought is likely to be of substantial value to the investigation and is likely to constitute relevant evidence in a criminal prosecution.

The legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure. In particular, the necessity of the disclosure is identified as responding to a pressing social need⁷⁸.

Data Protection Act⁷⁹ of the laws of Malta, Article 9 speaks about the possession of personal data and provision (e) states:

“Processing is necessary for the performance of an activity that is carried out in the public interest or in the exercise of official authority vested in the controller or in a third party to whom the data is disclosed”

When looking into national legislation, it is evident that there is still much to improve in the Maltese Legislation. Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, is a great piece of legislation, which should be included into the Maltese Legislation, especially the definition of “sources” and

⁷⁷ The European Convention on Human Rights, Article 10 (2)

⁷⁸ The Protection of Sources, Article by Prof. Kevin Aquilina.

⁷⁹ Data Protection Act, Laws of Malta - Chapter 440.

“Information of identifying of a source”. This should be done, to ensure that the unhindered exercise of journalism enshrined in the right to freedom of expression is afforded by all institutions.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following Principles should be respected when the Necessity of Disclosure is stated: absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, outweighing Legitimate Interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the Disclosure outweigh the interest in the Non-Disclosure?

With the 1996 amendments to the Maltese Press Act⁸⁰, article 46 was added to deal with the confidentiality of journalistic sources. In Malta there is no absolute privilege granted to journalists to protect their own sources. Although a journalist is still granted a qualified privilege in particular circumstances, there remain other situations where the pre-1996 position in Malta continues to prevail and a journalist may nevertheless be called upon to disclose his sources in terms of a number of provisions contained in special laws during judicial and non-judicial proceedings.⁸¹ Even though article 46 is modelled on Section 10 of the UK Contempt of Court Act 1981, the UK provision seems to be more liberal and human rights friendly.

The general provision allowing qualified protection of journalistic sources is found in Article 46 of the Press Act, which states:

“No court shall require any person mentioned in article 23 to disclose, nor shall such person be guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a newspaper or broadcast for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that such disclosure is necessary in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice:

Provided that the court shall not order such disclosure unless it is also satisfied that in the particular circumstances of the case the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in a democratic society:

Provided further that nothing in this article shall be interpreted as exempting any person mentioned in article 23 from proving the truth of any facts attributed by him in terms of article 12.”

⁸⁰ Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta.

⁸¹ Protection of journalistic sources in Maltese law: an appraisal from the European Convention on Human Rights. Kevin Aquilina – taken from International Journal Of Public Law and Policy.

Even though the article speaks of a journalistic privilege, it goes on to limit this privilege by speaking of national security, territorial integrity, public safety, prevention of disorder, prevention of crime and protection of justice. The relevant UK provision does not include legitimate aims of territorial integrity and public safety, showing its liberal aspect and limited restriction. Since the legitimate aims mentioned above are not defined in the Maltese Press Act, the Courts have discretion to interpret their extent and meaning, while referring to UK case law on the matter.

Another important aspect is the first proviso to Article 46 polishing upon the concept of the interest in the disclosure outweighing the interest in the non-disclosure. This requires the court not to order such disclosure “unless it is also satisfied that in the particular circumstances of the case the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in a democratic society.” In many jurisdictions this would mean that the Court would weigh the harm of disclosure to freedom of expression against the countervailing interest⁸².

The other exceptions to the protection of journalistic sources fall under different sources of Maltese Law, which are not mentioned under Article 46 of the Press Act. All these provisions in our legislation seem to indicate that the interest in the non-disclosure is outweighed as these laws insist on the need of disclosure. The Official Secrets Act⁸³ contains three articles which can be seen to compel a journalist to disclose his sources. A person is criminalised for the failure to comply with an official direction to return any document or other article relating to security, defence or international relations in his possession which it would be an offence for him to disclose without lawful authority under Article 13. Article 19 of the said Act then authorises a superintendent of police to carry out a search without a magistrate’s warrant where the case ‘is one of great emergency and that in the interest of the State immediate action is necessary’. Also, under article 22 there is the requirement of any person to give on demand to any police officer not below the rank of inspector ‘any information in his power relating to an offence or suspected offence under this Act’ and ‘to attend at such time and place as may be specified for the purpose of furnishing such information’. It is a criminal offence to fail to comply with these provisions of the law.

Under the Maltese Security Service Act⁸⁴, the Minister responsible for the security service is allowed to authorise an entry on and interference with property; and to intercept or interfere with communications in the course of their transmission by post or by means of a radio communication or telecommunication system or by other means, as stated in Article 6 of the abovementioned Act. This Act does not contain any provisions to the effect that the Minister is prohibited from authorising the Security Service from entering on or interfering with property used by journalists such as their newsrooms or other offices from where they are working; or from authorising the Security Service to intercept communications which journalists might have with the criminal world for the purpose of publishing information in the general interest of society.

⁸² Freedom of Expression Litigation Project (May 1998), Briefing Paper on Protection of Journalists’ Sources, Article 19 and Interrights.

⁸³ Chapter 50 of the Laws of Malta.

⁸⁴ Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta.

Journalistic sources may also be disclosed under the Prevention of Money Laundering Act⁸⁵. Article 4(1) of the said Act authorizes the Criminal Court, following an application by the Attorney General, to issue an investigation order in terms of which any person named in the order 'who appears to be in possession of particular material or material of a particular description which is likely to be of substantial value (whether by itself or together with other material) to the investigation of, or in connection with, the suspect, shall produce or grant access to such material to the person or persons indicated in the order; and the person or persons so indicated shall, by virtue of the investigation order, have the power to enter any house, building or other enclosure for the purpose of searching for such material'. Under article 4(3) (a) it is stated that this provision does not apply in the case of communications between an advocate or legal procurator and his client and between a clergyman and a person making a confession to him. As one may notice by this article, there is no reference made to a journalist and his source, meaning that the Criminal Court may issue an investigation order against a journalist. Article 4(5) states that it is a criminal offence not to comply with such an investigation order and one shall be liable to a fine and/or imprisonment. The FIAU⁸⁶ is also authorised to 'demand from any person, authority or entity... any information it deems relevant and useful for the purpose of pursuing its functions'.⁸⁷ The fact that this provision is made 'notwithstanding anything contained in any other law' shows a greater interest in the disclosure than non-disclosure of sources. Provisions in the Medical and Kindred Professions Ordinance and the Dangerous Drugs Ordinance⁸⁸ have similar aims to those contained in Article 4 of the Prevention of Money Laundering Act.

The Criminal Code⁸⁹ of Malta also gives empowering provisions to the police to pursue the disclosure of sources. Such is the case under article 355AD (3) as, 'the Police may, orally or by a notice in writing, require any person to attend at the police station or other place indicated by them to give such information and to produce such documents as the Police may require and if that person so attends at the police station or place indicated to him he shall be deemed to have attended that police station or other place voluntarily. The written notice referred to in this sub-article shall contain a warning of the consequences of failure to comply, as are mentioned in sub-article (5).' Sub-article (4) of the same article then provides that 'any person who is considered by the police to be in possession of any information or document relevant to any investigation has a legal obligation to comply with a request from the police to attend at a police station to give as required any such information or document: Provided that no person is bound to supply any information or document which tends to incriminate him.' It is a criminal offence not to comply with the abovementioned provisions; and under article 628B of the Criminal Code, the Minister responsible for justice may make regulations as to the interception of communications for providing mutual assistance in criminal matters to foreign law enforcement agencies in terms of any treaties to which Malta is a party.

⁸⁵ Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta.

⁸⁶ Financial Intelligence Analysis Unit.

⁸⁷ Article 30A of Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta.

⁸⁸ Article 120C of Chapter 31 of the Laws of Malta and Article 24A of Chapter 101 of the Laws of Malta, respectively.

⁸⁹ Chapter 9 of the Laws of Malta.

Article 61 of the Code also punishes the failure to disclose the commission of a crime against the safety of the government when it provides that: 'Whosoever, knowing that any of the crimes referred to in the preceding articles of this Title is about to be committed, shall not, within twenty-four hours, disclose to the Government or to the authorities of the Government, the circumstances which may have come to his knowledge, shall, for the mere omission, be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment for a term from nine to eighteen months'. This is a clear situation in which the interest in disclosure outweighs the interest in the non-disclosure as journalists are under a legal duty to disclose any information they might have, including the identity of their source, to the police if they are aware of any crime against the safety of the government.⁹⁰

Our law is thus not seen to give an absolute privilege to journalists, as it does to advocates, legal procurators and priests under the COCP⁹¹; and there are many provisions in special laws which indicate a great need in the disclosure of sources rather than the protection of journalistic sources.

7. In the light of the Case Law of the European Court of Human Rights how do National Courts apply the Respective Laws with regard to the Right to Protect Sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

The Maltese Press Act⁹² amended in 1996 offers different types of privilege to protect the confidentiality of journalistic sources: absolute privilege, qualified privilege or no privilege. Prior to the amendments, journalists enjoyed no protection in relation to their sources as was seen in "Carmel Cacopardo vs. Minister of Works et".⁹³ In this case, the plaintiff was dismissed from government service on the ground that, as a public officer, he was contributing articles of a political nature to Maltese newspapers. He sued the defendant claiming that his dismissal from the public service was discriminatory in nature, based on political opinion. And that other public officers, whose political opinions sympathized with the government, were allowed to publish articles of a political nature in the local press and no disciplinary action was taken against them. The editor of the weekly Maltese newspaper called 'It-Torca' was subpoenaed and asked to disclose the identity of a particular article's author writing in that newspaper. The editor asked the court to exempt him from answering that question in the light of his office but the court ordered him to disclose the identity of the article's author in question. The editor appealed to the ⁹⁰ The crimes include attempts against the President of Malta, insurrection or coup d'etat, conspiracy against the State and provocation to perpetrate crimes against the safety of the government; all found under 'of crimes against the safety of the government' in the criminal code.

⁹¹ The Code of Organisation and Civil Procedure, Article 588.

⁹² Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta

⁹³ Constitutional Court, 25th March 1985

Constitutional Court but the said court threw out his appeal as he was a witness not a party to those proceedings and thus had no *locus standi in judicio*⁹⁴.

Even though the amendments to the Act now offer certain protection, there is still no absolute privilege granted to journalists for the protection of their own sources. A journalist may thus still be called upon to disclose his sources during judicial and non-judicial proceedings. As there is no Maltese case law on these rights, the case law of the European Court of Human Rights' is particularly relevant⁹⁵. Yet, even though it is evident that the ECtHR is very reluctant to allow disclosure, journalists are still being asked to reveal their sources in Maltese courts. As a matter of fact, in January 2016 a Court has been requested to force a columnist and blogger to reveal the source behind certain claims⁹⁶. The defendant refused claiming that as a journalist one has a legal right to protect one's sources. The case is still on-going and will determine major issues. A case similar to this occurred in 2014⁹⁷.

Prof. K. Aquilina⁹⁸ comments on this stating, "In the same way that the police are entitled to protect their informants, journalists have a right to protect their own sources too. Otherwise, they would not be in a position to act as watchdogs of society, a role which has been recognised both by the Strasbourg court and Maltese courts. This case law makes it quite clear that the press has to be protected in its watchdog role in society."

The balancing provision in relation to the different interests at stake is found under the first proviso to Article 46 of the Press Act. This states that 'unless it is also satisfied that in the particular circumstances of the case the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of the role of the media in a democratic society', the court will not order such disclosure. On this point, the Freedom of Expression Litigation Project⁹⁹ particularly states:

"The party seeking disclosure will have to demonstrate not only the presence of a countervailing interest but also that the information sought is of sufficient importance to warrant a disclosure order. In many jurisdictions this means that the courts will weigh the harm of disclosure to freedom of expression against the countervailing interest. Given the importance of the former, the latter is only occasionally deemed dominant. In addition, in a number of jurisdictions, if the information may be obtained by other means, or if the goal served by disclosure has substantially been satisfied in another way, courts will not order disclosure. This careful balance, reflected in both international and national law standards, is necessary to protect a free press and hence the fundamental democratic right to freedom of expression."

⁹⁴ Protection of journalistic sources in Maltese law: an appraisal from the European Convention on Human Rights. Kevin Aquilina – taken from International Journal Of Public Law and Policy

⁹⁵ <http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20160125/opinion/Bloggers-and-their-sources.600021>

⁹⁶ <http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2016-01-18/local-news/Court-requested-to-force-Daphne-Caruana-Galizia-to-reveal-source-of-minister-s-affair-claims-6736151916>

⁹⁷ <http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2014-01-16/news/police-seek-identity-of-fuel-procurement-scandal-source-3701211136/>

⁹⁸ Dean of the Faculty of Laws at the University of Malta

⁹⁹ Freedom of Expression Litigation Project (May 1998), Briefing Paper on Protection of Journalists' Sources, Article 19 and Interrights.

Malta needs to legislate the soft law instruments of the Council of Europe in its domestic legislation to ensure the protection of sources and that the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity are respected¹⁰⁰.

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, and foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

National law in Malta is accessible in that all national legislation, including subsidiary legislation, notices and bye-laws are made public through the judiciary's website.¹⁰¹

With reference to the general activity to communicating ideas and information, this freedom is protected by article 41 (1) of the Laws of Malta. This proviso states that every person is free to receive ideas and information without interference¹⁰². There is thus a general freedom applicable to all the citizens of Malta. Nevertheless the same article, sub-article 2 continues that such freedoms may be restricted in the interest of defence and public safety.¹⁰³ These restrictions are seen in the Security Service Act.¹⁰⁴

This Maltese Legislation empowers law-enforcement authorities to intercept communications. The Act which deals with electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, contains no specific mention of journalists, yet for reasons of national security and anti-terrorism measures this Act would be the most applicable in terms of the issue in question.

The Security Service Act

Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta defines interception as; in relation to a warrant, includes the obtaining possession of, disrupting, destroying, opening, interrupting, suppressing, stopping, seizing, eavesdropping on, surveilling,

¹⁰⁰ <http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20120914/opinion/The-protection-of-sources.436876> accessed on the 2nd February 2016

¹⁰¹ <http://www.justiceservices.gov.mt/> (accessed 27th May 2016)

¹⁰² Constitution of Malta, Article 41

¹⁰³ ibid. s41(2)

¹⁰⁴ Security Service Act, Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta

recording, copying, listening to and viewing of communications and the extraction of information from such communications;¹⁰⁵

Authorities are thus empowered to make lawful interceptions for reasons of national security. Nevertheless interception can be also utilized for other reasons such as public safety and to prevent serious crime.

With reference to who is in charge of administering such interceptions, the role lies with Commissioner of the Security Service. The Commissioner is appointed by the Prime Minister¹⁰⁶ of Malta whilst decisions of the Commissioner cannot be subject to appeal, nor may it be questioned before a court of law.¹⁰⁷ The role of the Minister in the issuing of such warrants in relation to Chapter 391 was reinforced in the case of Republic of Malta v. Charles Steven Muscat.¹⁰⁸ This case however did not concern journalistic sources but drug trafficking.

Therefore the expected standards adopted by the judicial authority are not applicable and the judicial mechanism is not part of this process. The commissioner's ability to bring a problem to the public's attention is limited in that the law directs him/her to only report to the Prime Minister and any other avenue of informing is curtailed by the law.¹⁰⁹

Accessibility, Precision and Forseeability of Laws

In its judgment in *S. and Marper v. the United Kingdom*¹¹⁰, the Court ruled that it is essential in the context of telephone tapping, secret surveillance and covert intelligence gathering to have "clear,detailed rules governing the scope and application of measures, as well as minimum safeguards concerning inter alia, duration, storage, usage, access of third parties, procedures for preserving the integrity and confidentiality of data and procedures for its destruction, thus providing sufficient guarantees against the risk of abuse and arbitrariness"¹¹¹. Through research on the Maltese scenario, one is aware that there is no existing legislation on journalists and the protection of their sources. It was only in a very recent libel case of il-Pulizija vs Dr Jason Azzopardi, where the Judge¹¹² made a reference to journalistic sources and quoted an ECtHR case:

"protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom, as is recognised and reflected in various international instruments including the Committee of Ministers Recommendation (...).

¹⁰⁵ ibid. 2(1)

¹⁰⁶ *ibid.*12(1)

¹⁰⁷ ibid. 13

¹⁰⁸ Republic of Malta vs. Charles Steven Muscat, Court of Criminal Appeal (Superior), 31 July 2014, 47/2010

¹⁰⁹ Surveillance by Intelligence Services: fundamental rights safeguards and remedies in the EU. European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights, 2015

¹¹⁰ S. and Marper v. the United Kingdom, Applications Nos. 30562/04 and 30566/04, judgment of 4 December 2008

¹¹¹Parliamentary Assembly, The protection of journalists' sources,Doc. 12443

1 December 2010 - Rapporteur: Mr Morgan JOHANSSON, Sweden, Socialist Group

¹¹² Il-Pulizija vs Dr Jason Azzopardi, Court of Magistrates (Court of Criminal Judicature), 15th April, 2016, 4/2016

*Without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result the vital public-watchdog role of the press may be undermined and the ability of the press to provide accurate and reliable information may be adversely affected. Having regard to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest”.*¹¹³

With reference to accessibility, as aforementioned, Maltese law is public and accessible. With reference to foreseeability and precision of Maltese legislation on matters of surveillance and anti-terrorism, the UN Special Rapporteur on Privacy, Profs Joe Cannataci of the University of Malta said that these laws are ill-conceived, outdated and that they do not offer citizens enough protection and also stated that:

“One of the problems with the Maltese law is that it is ill-conceived, having apparently been modelled on one of the weakest oversight mechanisms in the world, that of the UK, where, recently too, we have witnessed widespread calls to replace the authorisation role of the minister with that of an independent judicial authority.”¹¹⁴

At this moment in time therefore there is no clear foreseeability. This also stems from the fact that such an issue on terrorism, surveillance and journalistic sources has not arisen yet in front of the Maltese Courts.

9. Can journalists rely on Encryption and Anonymity online to Protect themselves and their Sources against Surveillance?

With reference to the modern age of digital communications, the United Nations special rapporteur on Freedom of Expression presented a report¹¹⁵ which dealt on the significance and importance of encryption and anonymity, being leading instruments for online security. This report somewhat extended the freedom of opinion and expression and gave it a modern outlook, with reference to the right of privacy in the modern digital age. The report urged countries to ensure that people are free to protect the privacy of digital communications by using strong encryption and anonymity tools.¹¹⁶ Furthermore, the ability given to journalists to rely on anonymity online could be said to be an extension of the right to freedom of speech, as online

¹¹³ ECtHR (Decision) 8 December 2005, Case No. 40485/02, Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark u ECtHR 31 May 2007, Case No. 40116/02, S ec ic v. Croatia.

¹¹⁴ <http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20150715/local/surveillance-laws-are-out-of-date-dont-offer-protection.576641> anonymity enables commenters to express unpopular political views, expose government corruption, and reveal information about sensitive topics.

¹¹⁵ Jeff Kosseff, ‘Do we have a right to online anonymity?: It depends on which judge you ask’ <<http://www.rcfp.org/browse-media-law-resources/news-media-law/news-media-and-law-winter-2014/do-we-have-right-online-ano>> accessed 16 February 2016.

¹¹⁶ Human Rights Watch, ‘UN: Online Anonymity, Encryption Protect Rights: Support Safeguards Against Invasive Surveillance’, (17 June 2015).

However, to this date, there is no particular piece of legislation which makes reference to encryption or anonymity online for journalists to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance. In the light of the fact that there are no laws which prohibit journalists from anonymity, this lacuna in the law could lead one to conclude that journalists could choose to publish their reports anonymously, as there is nothing which prohibits them from doing so. This coincides with the right to privacy, implemented through our Data Protection Laws.¹¹⁷

However, with such use of anonymity, laws which protect libelous or harmful claims by the media still apply. In fact, in the case of defamation, before victims can collect damages, the defendant must be identifiable, and this is typically accomplished by issuing a subpoena to the defendant's Internet Service Provider, seeking the defendant's name and address, proving to be/have become a limitation to the right of privacy of journalists when it is in breach of the rights of others.

This brings to mind encryption. One would think that there is nothing stopping the authorities from using methods of surpassing such anonymity, where possible. Encryption is said to be a method of protecting information from being seen by those who were not intended to see it.

This is done by using mathematical formulae in order to scramble data, which can only be deciphered with a specific key. Encryption has become an important tool for journalists ever since awareness was raised on global surveillance operations in 2013.¹¹⁸ In Malta, there are no laws which prohibit journalists from making use of encryption in their means of communication.

In accordance to the legal maxim, ubi lex voluit dixit, it provides that this lacuna in the law could be used in favour of journalists in using encryption to protect their sources against surveillance.

The above mentioned report by the United Nations special rapporteur on Freedom of Expression expresses that encryption and anonymity should be used, in light of the fact that without so, states could use loopholes in technology which would be oppressive on journalists.¹¹⁹

10. Are Whistle-Blowers explicitly Protected under Law protecting Journalistic Sources? Is there another practice Protecting whistle-

¹¹⁷ Chapter 440 of the Laws of Malta.

¹¹⁸ Karen D Burke, 'Toolkit for Protecting Journalistic Sources' (Global Editors Network, July 2015).

¹¹⁹ Geoffrey King, 'UN report promotes encryption as fundamental and protected right', (Committee to Protect Journalists, June 2015), <<https://cpj.org/blog/2015/06/un-report-promotes-encryption-as-fundamental-and-p.php>>, accessed 16 February 2016.

blowers? Is the Legislation prohibiting Authorities and Companies from Identifying whistle-blowers?

In the light of the exposure given to the concept of 'whistleblowing' in recent years, such as in the internationally known WikiLeaks case, or more locally in Malta, the recent scandal regarding corrupt practices in the procurement of fuel by EneMalta,¹²⁰ whistle-blowers are deemed to be a primary journalistic source if discretion is used to determine their authenticity. The latter case is mentioned further on through the case of George Farrugia. However, Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta, the Protection of the Whistle-blower Act, has been thoroughly criticised for lacking basic procedures to ensure that journalists are not harassed or victimised for their efforts in order to uncover their sources.¹²¹ Therefore, to introduce the matter, regardless of the protection given under the Press Act regarding Journalistic Freedoms and the confidentiality of resources,¹²² several instances have shown that whistle-blowers, as a source, are given a different treatment.

The intention of the Protection of the Whistle-blower Act is to provide *'for procedures in terms of which employees in both the private sector and the public administration may disclose information regarding improper practices by their employers or other employees in the employ of their employers and to protect employees who make said disclosures from detrimental action.'*¹²³ Article 46 of the Press Act refers to the confidentiality of journalistic sources, of which information derived from a whistle-blower forms part. However before delving further into this matter, it is important to differentiate between the journalist and the whistle-blower, as they are entitled to different protection and should not be confused to be one and the same in the eyes of our law. Article 46 of the Press Act protects the journalist, and does not make reference to the whistle-blower, even though in practice, considering the whistle-blower would be a journalistic source, such would be protected.

Since in the aforementioned answers, a thorough discussion was made on the protection of journalists and their sources, this section will be dealing with the protection given to whistle-blowers as a source. The main piece of legislation regarding whistle-blowers is the Protection of the Whistle-blower Act, referred to by Profs. Kevin Aquilina as 'a feather in the cap of democracy' but yet 'contains provisions that discourage the mass media from carrying out their fourth estate public watchdog duty'.¹²⁴ This is because a journalist (who could also be referred to as the 'whistleblowing reporting officer' in terms of Article 2 of Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta)¹²⁵ who reveals the

¹²⁰ MaltaToday, 'Corruption at EneMalta and the oil scandal' (27 January 2013), <<http://www.maltatoday.com.mt/news/national/24262/corruption-at-enemalta-and-the-oil-scandal-20130127#.VxQAT2MRpE4>>

¹²¹ MaltaToday, 'Whistle-blowers still unprotected' (17 March 2015),

<http://www.maltatoday.com.mt/comment/editorial/50752/whistle-blowers_still_unprotected#.Vr8w1Mdh1E4>

¹²² Articles 46 and 47, Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta.

¹²³ Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta.

¹²⁴ Kevin Aquilina, 'A whistle-less Whistle-blower' (MaltaToday, 9 April 2014), http://www.maltatoday.com.mt/comment/blogs/37813/a_whistleless_whistle-blower#.Vr9YB8dh1E5.

¹²⁵ Under Article 2 of Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta, the "whistleblowing reporting officer" means such officer within an employer charged with carrying out the functions designated under Article 12 of the same Act.

identity of a whistle-blower, though ought to keep such information secret,¹²⁶ and improperly divulges such information, is not subject to a criminal punishment, that which is established under Article 19 of the same act.¹²⁷ The enactment does not punish such conduct through a specifically established offence for the purpose but relies on the general crime contained in the Criminal Code and on disciplinary proceedings which may be instituted against the reporter.¹²⁸

Although it is stated that whistle-blowers are protected under the aforementioned act, in reality such protection is very restricted. A whistle-blower is defined under article 2 of the Act as *'any employee who makes a disclosure to a whistleblowing reporting officer or a whistleblowing reports unit, as the case may be, whether it qualifies as a protected disclosure or not under this Act'*¹²⁹. Under our law the organisations subject to this Act, and of which the employees mentioned in the definition form part of, are, within the private sector, those whose last annual accounts meets at least two of the following criteria, that is an average number of more than 250 employees, during the financial year, a total balance sheet exceeding €43,000,00 and an annual turnover exceeding €50,000,000.¹³⁰ As regards to the public sector, the term 'employer' which the employee is subject to is each ministry of the Government of Malta.¹³¹ An exhaustive list of 'improper practices' are defined under article 2, however, excluded from the protection provided by this enactment are the following three:

- (a) members of a disciplined force (including the Armed Forces of Malta, the Police Force, the Department of Civil Protection Personnel, and the Corroding Correctional Facility Officers
- (b) members of the Security Service; and
- (c) persons employed in the foreign, consular or diplomatic service of the government.

Furthermore, a whistle-blower is only protected by law if his disclosure is a protected one, i.e. that through an explicit reference by a legal provision. Therefore this brings to mind instances in which are not subject to being considered as 'protected disclosures', hence one would not be considered a whistle-blower, and moreover not liable to the law's protection. An interesting occurrence was in the local case between George Farrugia, a middleman in a bribery scandal, and John's Garage, the Farrugia family business.¹³² In January 2013, a Maltese newspaper MaltaToday, had published emails which revealed information related to commissions paid to oil companies to secure oil contracts. This was used as evidence in a court case between the above mentioned, of which police later investigated the newspaper, pressuring it to reveal its sources.

¹²⁶ Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta.

¹²⁷ ibid.

¹²⁸ Aquilina (n 3).

¹²⁹ Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta.

¹³⁰ Second Schedule, Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta.

¹³¹ Second Schedule, Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta.

¹³² Times of Malta, 'Oil Scandal: George Farrugia made donation at Austin Gatt event: Manual Mallia as lawyer knew of bribery since 2010' (16 December 2013), <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20131216/local/oil-procurement-scandal-george-farrugia-continues-to-give-evidence.499311>

Eventually, enough evidence emerged and allowed for a warrant to take criminal action to be issued in regards to the officials involved.

George Farrugia was offered a Presidential pardon in exchange of giving out incriminating information. In taking up this offer, the Farrugia brothers were arrested, well after the Whistle-blower's Act coming into force in September of that year. Their arrest circulated around the depositing of the incriminating emails in the public domain, being the who first lifted the lid on this scandal.

What is most anomalous about this case is how this act of law, which aims to protect the whistle-blower, was used to achieve something completely opposite to this. According to the act, the Farrugia brothers couldn't have been considered to be whistle-blowers as they do not meet the requirements, and George Farrugia was offered a settlement in return for former's immunity. The man who was the cause of the scandal, was rather anomalously given immunity. This instance set about a dangerous precedent, running counter to the intentions of the Whistle-blower's Act. The idea behind this law was to encourage people to reveal corruption without fear of incrimination. In practice, however, this case showed the contrary. As the definition of 'whistle-blower' is restricted only to employees within a company or entity within which the improper conduct was reported, we find that this was not applicable to the Farrugia brothers, who were not granted immunity, even if their revelation of the facts were, so to speak, accidental.

This case shows how one could opine that Malta's law on the protection of whistle-blowers is limited, even without considering the limitations set as regards to the Armed Forces of Malta, the Police Force, the Department of Civil Protection Personnel, the Corradino Correctional Facility officers and the Foreign Office. It is thus debatable as to whether this law is in fact effective, giving regard to how limited it is, and how very few persons could be considered as 'whistle-blowers' in the eyes of the law.

The Council of Europe recognised that individuals who report and disclose information on threats or harm to the public interest, i.e. the scope being the concept of the 'whistle-blower', can contribute to strengthening transparency and democratic accountability.¹³³ The personal scope enlisted in this recommendation indicates that the definition of whistle-blower should cover 'all individuals working in either the public or private sectors, irrespective of the nature of their working relationship and whether they are paid or not'. This proves inconsistency with our law, as whereas this definition is deemed to be rather wide, our law and case law have shown far too many limitations. Ultimately, regardless of the limitations set, it is always of great importance that the element of public interest is maintained, and it is debatable whether this is reflected in our legislation.

¹³³ Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Protection of Whistle-blowers.

It could thus be argued that Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers is not implemented and mirrored into our legislation to the fullest extent, but only partly. The ensuing legislation contains far too many loopholes for it to be considered an adequate Whistle-blower's Protection Act. This could be reflected merely through the limited definition of a whistle-blower, without considering all the other prospects.

11. Conclusion

The judgments by the ECtHR emphasise that the balance tips towards protecting journalistic sources and not towards revealing information, irrespective of the reasons as to why this is to be done. Since these judgments are to be taken into consideration in Malta, it may be held that the journalistic sources' protection is awarded a considerably high esteem because it is a fundamental constituent of a democratic society.¹³⁴ Moreover, since there is no extant case law in Malta on this point, the ECtHR cases are paramount in such area of law.

However, in Maltese legislation it may be said that there is a two-fold void, because neither the definition of 'journalist', 'journalistic sources' or 'media', and nor the definition of the six legitimate aims in Article 46 of the Press Act (as mentioned above) are found in our law, among other lacking definitions mentioned above.

It can be concluded that the privilege to protect journalistic source is limited, and as evident it is not always granted, due to it not being absolute, such privilege being qualified under the Press Act but not afforded under the above-mentioned laws. Therefore there is no uniformity where journalistic sources are concerned because under different situations there is either a limited privilege or no privilege at all. Moreover, the legitimate aims in terms of which a journalist may be forced to disclose the source of information are broader than those under UK law.

As held by Professor Kevin Aquilina, the protection given by Article 10 of the ECHR to journalistic sources may be circumvented by having the Police or the security service reach the journalistic source through different means than the disclosure of the journalist's information, inter alia, telephone or e-mail interception.¹³⁵

It has to be noted that individuals other than journalists at a particular medium are privy to the source of journalistic information, but the protection awarded to journalists is not extended to them and therefore where journalists would not be requested to reveal their sources, such workers would be, and therefore have no legal protection.

The special laws in Malta which deny the qualified privilege of journalistic sources or criminalise not revealing journalistic sources can be compared to the judgments of the ECtHR because the protection given by the Court contrasts with the position in Malta.¹³⁶ This is so because the ECtHR in its case law seems to require that the restrictions on freedom of expression are as limited as possible, due to the protection of journalistic sources being indispensable in a democratic society which respects the freedom of the press.¹³⁷ Moreover, in our courts, there have been please[1] by the Police to request individuals falling under the umbrella protected by journalistic sources such as editors, to be ordered by the court to disclose sources, despite the constant ECtHR judgments and the unequivocal direction they adopt.¹³⁸

¹³⁴ Aquilina (n1)

¹³⁵ Aquilina (n1)

For the above-mentioned reasons the Maltese Press Act requires extensive updates, especially as regards definitions, to extend and enhance the protection to journalistic sources, in line with ECtHR judgments. This would serve to firmly establish and emphasise the important function of journalists within the media, that of having the public being able to access, in a democratic society founded on the rule of law, information about the State, its institutions, the public administration, and all that may affect society. Finally, Malta should legislate soft law instruments of the Council of Europe, particularly the Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of 8 March 2000 in our domestic legislation, whereby the 'unhindered exercise of journalism enshrined in the right to freedom of expression is afforded by all institutions and to fill in the gaps in Maltese Law concerning the application of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source'.¹³⁹

¹³⁶ Aquilina (n1)

¹³⁷ Aquilina (n3) 249

¹³⁸ Kevin Aquilina, 'Bloggers and their sources' Times of Malta (Malta, January 25 2016) <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20160125/opinion/Bloggers-and-their-sources.600021>> accessed 2 February 2016.

¹³⁹ Aquilina (n 3) 260-261.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- Code of Organization and Civil Procedure 1855, Chapter 12 of the Laws of Malta
- Constitution of Malta
- Criminal Code 1854, Chapter 9 of the Laws of Malta
- Dangerous Drugs Ordinance 1939, Chapter 101 of the Laws of Malta
- Medical Kindred Professions Ordinance 1901, Chapter 31 of the Laws of Malta
- Official Secrets Act 1996, Chapter 50 of the Laws of Malta
- Police Act 1961, Chapter 164 of the Laws of Malta
- Press Act 1974, Chapter 248 of the Laws of Malta
- Prevention of Money Laundering Act 1994, Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta
- Security Service Act 1996, Chapter 391 of the Laws of Malta
- Chapter 527 of the Laws of Malta
- The Prevention of Money Laundering Act, Chapter 373 of the Laws of Malta
- Medical and Kindred Professions Ordinance, Chapter 31 of the Laws of Malta
- Maltese Code of Journalistic Ethics
- United Kingdom Contempt of Court Act 1981
- Freedom of Expression Litigation Project (May 1998), Briefing Paper on Protection of Journalists' Sources, Article 19 and Interights.

12.2. Case Law

- Carmel Cacopardo vs. Minister for Works et, Constitutional Court, 25 March 1985, Vol. 69, Pt I, Section I, p. 24.
- Carmel Cacopardo vs. Minister of Works et - Constitutional Court, 25th March 1985
- Il-Pulizija vs Dr Jason Azzopardi, Court of Magistrates (Court of Criminal Judicature), 15th April, 2016, 4/2016
- Republic of Malta vs. Charles Steven Muscat, Court of Criminal Appeal (Superior), 31 July 2014, 47/2010
- 22 EHRR 25 Christine Goodwin vs. the United Kingdom [1996].
- Roemen and Schmidt vs. Luxembourg [2003] 8-9 para 46 ECHR 102 (2015).
- S. and Marper v. the United Kingdom, Applications Nos. 30562/04 and 30566/04, judgment of 4 December 2008
- ECtHR (Decision) 8 December 2005, Case No. 40485/02, Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark u ECtHR 31 May 2007, Case No. 40116/02, Secić v. Croatia.

12.3. Books and articles

- Robertson G and Nicol A, 'Media Law' (4th edn, Penguin Books, London 2002)
- Aquilina K, 'Bloggers and their sources' Times of Malta (Malta, January 25 2016) <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20160125/opinion/Bloggers-and-their-sources.600021>>
- Aquilina K, 'Protection of journalists' sources' Times of Malta (Malta, 5 October 2011) <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20111005/opinion/Protection-of-journalists-sources.387809>>
- Naudi J M, 'Press Ethics Commission judgment' Malta Independent Sunday (Malta, 30 June 2013) <<http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2013-06-30/letters/press-ethic-commission-judgement-1951694854/>>
- Ganado P L, 'Surveillance laws are out of date, don't offer protection' Times of Malta (Malta, 15 July 2015) <<http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20150715/local/surveillance-laws-are-out-of-date-dont-offer-protection.576641>>
- MaltaToday, 'Whistle-blowers still unprotected' Aquilina A, 'A whistle-less Whistle-blower', (MaltaToday)
- Aquilina K, 'Protection of journalistic sources in Maltese Law: an appraisal from the viewpoint of the European Convention of Human Rights' [2011] Journal of Public Law and Policy 245
- Human Rights Watch, 'UN: Online Anonymity, Encryption Protect Rights: Support Safeguards Against Invasive Surveillance'
- Kosseff J, 'Do we have a right to online anonymity?: It depends on which judge you ask' (Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press)
- Burke K, 'Toolkit for Protecting Journalistic Sources' (Global Editors Network, July 2015)
- King G, 'UN report promotes encryption as fundamental and protected right', (Committee to Protect Journalists, June 2015)
- Protection of journalistic sources in Maltese law: an appraisal from the European Convention on Human Rights. Kevin Aquilina – taken from International Journal Of Public Law and Policy
- Freedom of Expression Litigation Project (May 1998), Briefing Paper on Protection of Journalists' Sources, Article 19 and Interrights

12.4. Internet sources

- <http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20160125/opinion/Bloggers-and-their-sources.600021>
- <http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2016-01-18/local-news/Court-requested-to-force-Daphne-Caruana-Galizia-to-reveal-source-of-minister-s-affair-claims-6736151916>
- <http://www.independent.com.mt/articles/2014-01-16/news/police-seek-identity-of-fuel-procurement-scandal-source-3701211136/>

- <http://www.timesofmalta.com/articles/view/20120914/opinion/The-protection-of-sources.436876>

12.5. Other sources

- Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Protection of Whistle-blowers.
- Surveillance by Intelligence Services: fundamental rights safeguards and remedies in the EU. European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights, 2015
- Parliamentary Assembly, 'The protection of journalists' sources, Doc. 124431 December 2010 - Rapporteur: Mr Morgan JOHANSSON, Sweden, Socialist Group

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in the Maltese Language	Corresponding Translation
Att dwar l-istampa – Kapitlu 248 – Artikolu 46 Ebda qorti ma għandha teħtieġ li persuna msemmija fl-artikolu 23 tikkxef, anqas ma għandha dik il-persuna tkun hatja ta' disprezz lejn l-awtorità tal-qorti talli ma tkunx trid tikkxef, is-sorsi ta' informazzjoni li tkun tinsab f'gazzetta jew xandira li hija tkun responsabbli għaliha, kemm-il darba ma jiġix stabbilit għassodisfazzjon tal-qorti li dak il-kxif ikun meħtieġ fl-interess tassigurtà nazzjonali, integrità territorjali jew inkolumità pubblika, jew għat-tharis mid-dizordni jew kriminalità, jew għall-harsien talinteressi tal-gustizzja: Iżda l-qorti m'għandhiex tordna dak il-kxif sakemm ma tkunx ukoll sodisfatta li fiċ-ċirkostanzi partikolari tal-każ il-htieġa li l-qorti tagħmel investigazzjoni tkun ikbar mill-htieġa tal-media li jiproteġu s-sorsi ta' informazzjoni tagħhom, wara li jitqies sew irrwol tal-media f'soċjetà demokratika: Iżda wkoll, ebda haġa f'dan l-artikolu ma għandha titfisser bħala li teżenta lil xi persuna msemmija fl-artikolu 23 milli ġgħib prova dwar il-verità ta' xi fatti minnha attribwiti skont ma	Press Act- Chapter 248- Article 46 No court shall require any person mentioned in article 23 to disclose, nor shall such person be guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a newspaper or broadcast for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that such disclosure is necessary in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime or for the protection of the interests of justice: Provided that the court shall not order such disclosure unless it is also satisfied that in the particular circumstances of the case the need for investigation by the court outweighs the need of the media to protect its sources, due regard being taken of the importance of PRESS [CAP. 248. 13 the role of the media in a democratic society: Provided further that nothing in this article shall be interpreted as exempting any person mentioned in article 23 from proving the truth of any facts attributed by him in terms of article 12.

hemm flartikolu 12.
Att dwar l-istampa – Kapitolu 248 – Artikolu 12 (1) F'kull kawża ta' libell minhabba malafama taht l-artikolu 11, il-prova tal-verità tal-fatti attribwiti hija ammessa jekk l-akkużat, fl-istadju preliminari tal-kawża, jieħu r-responsabbiltà kollha ta' malafama li tagħha huwa akkużat u jiddikjara illi b'difiża tiegħu huwa jrid jipprova l-verità tal-fatti attribwiti minnu lill-parti offiża: Izda l-prova tal-verità tal-fatti attribwiti hija ammessa biss fil-każ li l-persuna offiża – (a) tkun uffiċjal jew impjegat pubbliku u l-fatti attribwiti lilha huma dwar l-eżerċizzju tal-funzjonijiet tagħha; jew (b) tkun kandidat għal kariga pubblika u l-fatti attribwiti lilha jkunu dwar l-onestà, il-ħila jew il-kompetenza tagħha li tokkupa dik il-kariga; jew (ċ) abitwalment teżerċita professjoni, arti jew sengħa, u l-fatti attribwiti lilha jkunu dwar l-eżerċizzju ta' dik il-professjoni, arti jew sengħa; jew (d) tieħu parti attiva fil-politika u l-fatti attribwiti lilha jkunu dwar il-parti li hi tieħu fil-politika; jew (e) jkollha kariga ta' fiduċja fi kwistjoni ta' interess pubbliku ġenerali: Izda wkoll il-prova tal-verità tal-fatti attribwiti ma hijjex ammessa jekk dawk il-fatti ikunu dwar il-ħajja domestika tal-offiż.	Press Act- Chapter 248- Article 12 (1) In any action for a defamatory libel under article 11, the truth of the matters charged may be enquired into if the accused, in the preliminary stage of the proceedings, assumes full responsibility for the alleged libel and declares in his defence that he wishes to prove the truth of the facts attributed by him to the aggrieved party: Provided that the truth of the matters charged may be enquired into only if the person aggrieved – (a) is a public officer or servant and the facts attributed to him refer to the exercise of his functions; or (b) is a candidate for a public office and the facts attributed to him refer to his honesty, ability or competency to fill that office; or (c) habitually exercises a profession, an art or a trade, and the facts attributed to him refer to the exercise of such profession, art or trade; or (d) takes an active part in politics and the facts attributed to him refer to his so taking part in politics; or (e) occupies a position of trust in a matter of general public interest: Provided further that the truth of the matters charged may not be enquired into if such matters refer to the

(2) Jekk il-verità tal-fatti attribwiti tiġi ammessa skont iddisposizzjonijiet ta' qabel ta' dan l-artikolu – (a) jekk il-verità tal-fatti attribwiti tkun sostanzjalment ippruvata, l-akkużat ma jehel ebda piena jekk il-qorti tkun sodisfatta illi l-prova tal-verità saret fl-interess pubbliku u hu jkollu jedd għall-ħlas lura mingħand ilkwerelant jew l-attur tal-ispejjeż li jkun għamel f'xi proċedimenti kriminali jew ċivili: Iżda il-prova tal-verità tal-fatti attribwiti ma teħlisx lill-akkużat mill-piena għal insulti, akkużi jew allegazzjonijiet illi l-qorti jkun jidhrilha li ma kenux meħtieġa li jiġu attribwiti lill-persuna offiża l-fatti li l-prova tagħhom tkun giet ammessa; (b) jekk il-verità tal-fatti attribwiti ma tkunx sostanzjalment ippruvata, l-akkużat jehel priġunerija għal żmien ta' mhux iżjed minn sitt xhur jew multa ta' mhux iżjed minn elf, mija u erbgħa u sittin euro u disgħa u sittin ċenteżmu (1,164.69) jew dik ilpriġunerija u multa flimkien.	domestic life of the aggrieved party. (2) Where the truth of the matters charged is enquired into in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this article – (a) if the truth of the matters charged is substantially proved, the defendant shall not be liable to punishment if the court is satisfied that the proof of the truth has been for the public benefit and he shall be entitled to recover from the complainant or plaintiff the costs sustained by him in any criminal or civil proceedings: Provided that the proof of the truth of the matters charged shall not exempt the defendant from punishment for any insult, imputation or allegation which the court shall consider to have been unnecessary in attributing to the person aggrieved the facts the proof of the truth whereof shall have been allowed; (b) if the truth of the matters charged is not substantially proved, the accused shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to a fine (multa) not exceeding one thousand and one hundred and sixtyfour euro and sixty-nine cents (1,164.69) or to both such imprisonment and fine.
Att dwar l-istampa – Kapitolu 248 – Artikolu 2 F'dan l-Att, kemm-il darba r-rabta tal-kliem ma teħtieġx xort'ohra - "editur" tfisser il-persuna responsabbli għall-pubblikazzjoni ta' kull stampat u dwar gazzetta jew servizz ta' xandir tinkludi kull persuna li tħares id-disposizzjonijiet tal-artikolu 35; "gazzetta" tfisser kull gazzetta li jkun fiha aħbarijiet,	Press Act- Chapter 248- Article 2 "broadcast" means the transmission by wire or over the air, including that by satellite, in encoded or unencoded form of words or of visual images, whether or not such words or images are in fact received by any person;

avviżi, informazzjonijiet, grajjiet, jew xi kummenti jew osservazzjonijiet fuqhom, stampata għall-bejgħ jew sabiex titqassam bla hlas jew xort'ohra, u pubblikata kuljum jew kull tant żmien; "Malta" għandha l-istess tifsir kif mogħti lilha bl-artikolu 124 tal-Kostituzzjoni ta' Malta; "persuna" tinkludi korp ta' persuni sew jekk ikollhom personalità ġuridika distinta sew jekk le; "pubblikazzjoni" tfisser kull att li bih kull stampat jiġi jew jista' jiġi ikkommunikat jew imgharraf lil xi persuna jew li bih kliem jew immaġini viżwali jiġu mxandra; "Reġistratur" tfisser dik il-persuna li l-Prim Ministru jista', minn żmien għal żmien b'avviż fil-Gazzetta tal-Gvern, jahtar bhala Reġistratur tal-Istampa għall-finijiet ta' dan l-Att; "responsabbli għall-pubblikazzjoni" tfisser persuna li tkun sid ta' impriza għall-pubblikazzjoni ta' gazzetta jew li jkollha liċenza għax-xandir u tinkludi kull persuna li jkollha faċilitajiet għallproduzzjoni jew riproduzzjoni ta' kull stampat; "stampat" tfisser kull kitba stampata b'tipi tipografici jew billitografija jew b'mezzi jew proċessi oħra bħal dawn fuq karta jew sustanza oħra, kif ukoll kull kartellun jew avviż ieħor li jitwaħħal li jkun fih xi sinjal jew kitba miktuba, stampata, impingija, riżaltata jew xort'ohra impressa, u tinkludi kull diska, tape, film jew mezz ieħor li bih kliem jew immaġini viżwali jistgħu jinstemgħu, jitwasslu jew jiġu riprodotti; "xandir" tfisser it-trasmissjoni permezz ta' fili jew minn ġewwa l-arja, inkluża wkoll permezz ta' satellita, f'għamla kodifikata jew mhijiex; ta' kliem jew immaġini viżivi, sew jekk daww il-kliem jew immaġini jkunu fil-fatt riċevuti minn xi persuna sew jekk le.	"newspaper" means any paper containing news, advertisements, intelligence, occurrences, or any comments or observations thereon, printed for sale or to be distributed free or in any other manner, and published daily or periodically;
Att dwar l-istampa – Kapitolu 248 – Artikolu 8	Press Act- Chapter 248- Article 8

Kull min, b'xi mezz imsemmi fl-artikolu 3, jikkxef xi haġa sigrieta li tkun giet fdata lilu minhabba l-professjoni jew il-kariga tiegħu, jeħel meta jinsab hati prigunerija għal żmien ta' mhux iżjed minn tliet xhur jew multa jew dik il-prigunerija u multa flimkien.	Whosoever, by any means mentioned in article 3, shall divulge any secret matter confided to him by reason of his profession or calling, shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to a fine (multa) or to both such imprisonment and fine.
Att dwar is-sigrieti uffiċjali – Kapitlu 50 – Artikolu 13 (1) Meta funzjonarju pubbliku jew kuntrattat mill-Gvern, bis-saħħa tal-kariga tiegħu bħala tali, ikollu fil-pussess tiegħu jew taħt il-kontroll tiegħu xi dokument jew oġġett ieħor li jekk huwa jikkxifhom mingħajr awtorità legittima taħt xi waħda mid-disposizzjonijiet ta' qabel ta' dan l-Att huwa jkun qed jaġħmel reat, huwa jkun hati ta' reat jekk – (a) billi jkun funzjonarju pubbliku, iżomm dak iddokument jew oġġett kontra d-dmirijiet uffiċjali tiegħu; jew (b) billi jkun kuntrattat mill-Gvern, jonqos milli jħares direttiva uffiċjali biex iragġa' lura jew jiddisponi minn dak id-dokument jew oġġett, jew jekk huwa jonqos milli jara li ma jsehħx il-kxif mhux awtorizzat tad-dokument jew tal-oġġett li bħala persuna fil-kariga tiegħu huwa jista' raġonevolment ikun mistenni li jara li ma jsehħx. (2) Tkun difiża għal funzjonarju pubbliku li jkun akkużat b'reat taħt is-subartikolu (1)(a) li jgħib prova li fil-waqt* tar-reat allegat huwa kien qed jaġixxi skont id-dmirijiet uffiċjali tiegħu u li ma kellu ebda kawża raġonevoli għaliex il-fehma tiegħu kellha	Official Secrets Act- Chapter 50 – Article 13 13. (1) Where a public servant or government contractor, by virtue of his position as such, has in his possession or under his control any document or other article which it would be an offence under any of the foregoing provisions of this Act for him to disclose without lawful authority he is guilty of an offence if - (a) being a public servant, he retains the document or article contrary to his official duty; or (b) being a government contractor, he fails to comply with an official direction for the return or disposal of the document or article, or if he fails to take such care to prevent the unauthorised disclosure of the document or article as a person in his position may reasonably be expected to take. (2) It is a defence for a public servant charged with an offence under subarticle (1)(a) to prove that at the time of the alleged offence he believed that he was acting in accordance with

tkun xort'ohra. (3) Fis-subartikolu (1) u (2) referenzi għal funzjonarju pubbliku jinkludu kull persuna, li ma tkunx funzjonarju pubbliku jew kuntrattat mill-Gvern, li fil-każ tagħhom ikun hemm fis-sehħ avviż għall-għanijiet tal-artikolu 6(1) . (4) Meta persuna jkollha fil-pussess tagħha jew taht il-kontroll tagħha xi dokument jew oġġett ieħor li jkun reat għaliha taht lartikolu 10 li tikxef mingħajr awtorità legittima, hija tkun hatja ta' reat jekk – (a) hija tonqos milli tħares xi direttiva ufficjali biex titragga' lura jew tiddisponi minn dak id-dokument jew oġġett; jew (b) meta hija tkun kisbitu mingħand funzjonarju pubbliku jew kuntrattat mill-Gvern b'patti li jkunu jehtiegu li jinżamm b'mod konfidenzjali jew f'ċirkostanzi li fihom dak il-funzjonarju jew persuna kuntrattata jistgħu raġonevolment jippretendu li jkunu hekk se jinżammu, hija tonqos milli tiehu dak il-hsieb sabiex tara li kxif mhux awtorizzat ma jsirx hekk bħalma persuna fil-kariga tagħha tista' tkun raġonevolment mistennija li tiehu. (5) Meta persuna jkollha fil-pussess tagħha jew taht il-kontroll tagħha xi dokument jew oġġett ieħor li jkun reat għaliha taht lartikolu 11 li tikxef mingħajr awtorità legittima, hija tkun hatja ta' reat jekk hija tonqos milli tħares direttiva ufficjali sabiex titragga' lura jew tiddisponi minn dak id-dokument jew oġġett. (6) Persuna tkun hatja ta' reat jekk hija tikxef xi informazzjoni, dokument jew oġġett ieħor ufficjali li jista' jintuza bil-għan li jinkiseb aċċess għal xi informazzjoni, dokument jew oġġett ieħor li jkun protett kontra l-kxif bid-disposizzjonijiet ta' qabel ta' dan lAtt u ċ-ċirkostanzi li fihom isir il-kxif ikunu tali li jkun	his official duty and had no reasonable cause to believe otherwise. (3) In subarticles (1) and (2) references to a public servant include any person, not being a public servant or government contractor, in whose case a notification for the purposes of article 6(1) is in force. (4) Where a person has in his possession or under his control any document or other article which it would be an offence under article 10 for him to disclose without lawful authority, he is guilty of an offence if - (a) he fails to comply with an official direction for its return or disposal; or (b) where he obtained it from a public servant or government contractor on terms requiring it to be held in confidence or in circumstances in which that servant or contractor could reasonably expect that it would be so held, he fails to take such care to prevent its unauthorised disclosure as a person in his position may reasonably be expected to take. (5) Where a person has in his possession or under his control any document or other article which it would be an offence under article 11 for him to disclose without lawful authority, he is guilty of an offence if he fails to comply with an official direction for its return or disposal. (6) A person is guilty of an offence if he discloses any official information, document or other article which can be used for the purpose of obtaining access to any information, document or other article protected against disclosure by the foregoing provisions of this
--	---

ragonevoli li wiehed jistenna li dak se jintuza ghal dak l-għan mingħajr ebda awtorità. (7) Għall-għanijiet tas-subartikolu (6) persuna tikxef informazzjoni jew dokument jew oġġett uffiċjali jekk – (a) l-informazzjoni, dokument jew oġġett ikun jew kien fil-pussess tagħha bis-saħħa tal-kariga tagħha ta' funzjonarju pubbliku jew ta' kuntrattat mill-Gvern; jew (b) tkun taf jew ikollha kawża ragonevoli li tkun tal-fehma li funzjonarju pubbliku jew kuntrattat mill-Gvern ikollu jew kellu din l-informazzjoni, dokument jew oġġett bis-saħħa tal-kariga tiegħu bħala tali. (8) L-artikolu 10(5) japplika għall-għanijiet tas-subartikolu (6) hekk kif japplika għall-għanijiet ta' dak l-artikolu. (9) F'dan l-artikolu "direttiva uffiċjali" tfisser direttiva debitament mogħtija minn funzjonarju pubbliku jew minn kuntrattat mill-Gvern jew minn jew f'isem korp preskritt jew korp ta' klassi preskritta.	Act and the circumstances in which it is disclosed are such that it would be reasonable to expect that it might be used for that purpose without authority. (7) For the purposes of subarticle (6) a person discloses information or a document or article which is official if - (a) he has or has had it in his possession by virtue of his position as a public servant or government contractor; or (b) he knows or has reasonable cause to believe that a public servant or government contractor has or has had it in his possession by virtue of his position as such. (8) Article 10(5) applies for the purposes of subarticle (6) as it applies for the purposes of that article. (9) In this article "official direction" means a direction duly given by a public servant or government contractor or by or on behalf of a prescribed body or a body of a prescribed class.
Att dwar is-sigrieti uffiċjali – Kapitlu 50 – Artikolu 19 (1) Jekk maġistrat ikun sodisfatt minn informazzjoni taht ġurament li hemm raġuni biex wiehed jissuspetta illi sar jew se jirreat taht dan l-Att, li ma jkunx reat taht l-artikolu 13(1), (4) u (5), hu jista' joħroġ mandat ta' perkwiżizzjoni u bih jawtorizza lilluffiċjal tal-	Official Secrets Act- Chapter 50 – Article 19 (1) If a magistrate is satisfied by information on oath that there is reasonable ground for suspecting that an offence under this Act, other than an offence under article 13(1), (4) and (5), has been or is about to be committed, he may grant a search warrant authorizing any Police officer named therein to enter at any

Pulizija hemm fih imsemmi li jidhol f'kull żmien f'fond jew post iehor imsemmi fil-mandat, billi juża, jekk ikun meħtieġ, il-forza, u li jfittex f'dan il-fond jew post u fuq kull persuna li tkun tinsab hemm ġew, u li jaqbad kull skizz, pjanta, mudell, oġġett, nota, jew dokument, jew kull haġa ta' din ix-xorta jew kull haġa li tista' sservi bħala prova li sar jew sejjer isir reat taħt dan l-Att, li ma jkunx reat taħt l-artikolu 13(1), (4) u (5), illi huwa jsib fil-fond jew post jew fuq dawk il-persuni, kemm-il darba hu jkollu raġun biex jissuspetta li sar jew sejjer isir reat taħt dan l-Att, li ma jkunx reat taħt l-artikolu 13(1), (4) u (5) rigward jew dwar dawk il- hwejjeg. (2) Meta jkun jidher lil Superintendent tal-Pulizija illi l-każ hu ta' urġenza kbira u li hu meħtieġ fl-interess tal-Istat li jittiehdu passi minnufih, hu jista' b'ordni bil-miktub taħt il-firma tiegħu jagħti lil ufficjali tal-Pulizija l-istess setgħa li tista' tingħata b'mandat ta' maġistrat taħt dan l-artikolu.	time any premises or place named in the warrant, if necessary, by force, and to search the premises or place and every person found therein, and to seize any sketch, plan, model, article, note, or document, or anything of a like nature or anything which is evidence of an offence under this Act other than an offence under article 13(1), (4) and (5) having been or being about to be committed, which he may find on the premises or place or upon any such person, and with regard to or in connection with which he has reasonable ground for suspecting that an offence under this Act, other than an offence under article 13 (1), (4) and (5), has been or is about to be committed. (2) Where it appears to a superintendent of Police that the case is one of great emergency and that in the interest of the State immediate action is necessary, he may by a written order under his hand give to any Police officer the like authority as may be given by the warrant of a magistrate under this article.
Att Dwar is-Sigrieti Ufficjali- Kapitlou 50-Artikolu 22 Kull persuna għandha tagħti, meta mitluba, lil ufficjal tal-Pulizija ta' grad mhux anqas minn dak ta' spettur maħtur għaldaqshekk mill-Kummissarju tal-Pulizija, jew lil membru tal-Forzi Armati ta' Malta inkarigat mill-għassa, sentinella, pattulja jew dmir iehor bħal dan, kull informazzjoni li tkun tista' tagħti dwar reat li sar jew li dwaru jkun hemm suspett li sar taħt dan l-Att; u, kemm-il darba tiġi hekk mitluba, u	Official Secrets Act- Chapter 50 – Article 22 It shall be the duty of every person to give on demand to any Police officer not below the rank of inspector appointed by the Commissioner of Police for the purpose, or to any member of the armed forces of Malta engaged on guard, sentry, patrol, or other similar duty, any information in his power relating to an offence or suspected offence under this Act, and, if so required, and upon tender of his reasonable expenses, to attend at

wara l-ħlas lilha tal-ispejjeż xierqa, għandha tmur fiż-żmien u fil-post li jiġu lilha speċifikati sabiex tagħti din l-informazzjoni, u kull min jonqos li jagħti din l-informazzjoni jew li jmur kif jingħad hawn fuq, jeħel, meta jinsab ħati, il-piena tal-prigunerija għal żmien ta' mhux iżjed minn sentejn jew multa jew dawn iż-żewġ pieni flimkien.	such time and place as may be specified for the purpose of furnishing such information, and if any person fails to give any such information or to attend as aforesaid, he shall be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine (multa) or to both such imprisonment and fine.
Kostituzzjoni ta' Malta – Artikoli 41 (1) Hlief bil-kunsens tiegħu stess jew bħala dixxiplina tal- ġenituri, hadd ma għandu jiġi mfixkel fit-tgawdija tal-libertà tiegħu ta' espressjoni, magħduda libertà li jkollu fehmiet mingħajr indhil, libertà li jirċievi idejiet u tagħrif mingħajr indhil, libertà li jikkomunika idejiet u tagħrif mingħajr indhil (kemm jekk ilkomunikazzjoni tkun lill-pubbliku in ġenerali jew lil xi persuna jew klassi ta' persuni) u libertà minn indhil dwar il-korrispondenza tiegħu. (2) Ebda haġa li hemm fi jew magħmula skont l-awtorità ta' xi liġi ma għandha titqies li tkun inkonsistenti ma' jew bi ksur tassubartikolu (1) ta' dan l-artikolu safejn dik il-liġi tagħmel provvediment - (a) li jkun meħtieġ raġonevolment - (i) fl-interess tad-difiża, sigurtà pubblika, ordni pubbliku, moralità jew deċenza pubblika, jew saħħa pubblika;	Constitution of Malta- Article 41 (1) Except with his own consent or by way of parental discipline, no person shall be hindered in the enjoyment of his freedom of expression, including freedom to hold opinions without interference, freedom to receive ideas and information without interference, freedom to communicate ideas and information without interference (whether the communication be to the public generally or to any person or class of persons) and freedom from interference with his correspondence. (2) Nothing contained in or done under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of subarticle (1) of this article to the extent that the law in question makes provision - (a) that is reasonably required - (i) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or decency, or public health; or
Att dwar is-servizz tas-sigurta' – Kapitolu 391 – Artikolu 2 "interċettazzjoni", għar-rigward ta' ordni, tinkludi l-ksib, ittfixkil, il-qirda, il-ftuħ, l-interruzzjoni, is-soppressjoni, il-waqfien, il-	Security Service Act – Chapter 391 – Article 2 "interception", in relation to a warrant, includes the obtaining possession of, disrupting, destroying, opening, interrupting,

qbid, it-tismigh, is-sorveljanza, ir-registrazzjoni, l-ikkupjar, is-smigh ta' u li tara komunikazzjonijiet u l-ksib ta' informazzjoni minn dawk il-komunikazzjonijiet;	suppressing, stopping, seizing, eavesdropping on, surveilling, recording, copying, listening to and viewing of communications and the extraction of information from such communications;
Att dwar is-servizz tas-sigurta' – Kapitolu 391 – Artikolu 6 (1) Ebda dhul fi, jew interferenza ma' proprjeta' ma tkun kontra l-ligi jekk dawn ikunu awtorizzati b'mandat mahruġ mill-Ministru bis-sahha ta' dan l-artikolu. (2) Ebda intercettazzjoni ta' jew interferenza ma' komunikazzjonijiet fil-kors tat-trasmissjoni tagħhom bil-posta jew bil-mezz ta' sistema ta' radjokomunikazzjoni jew ta' telekomunikazzjoni jew b'kull mezz ieħor ma għandu jkun kontra l-ligi jekk dan jiġi awtorizzat b'mandat mahruġ mill-Ministru bissahha ta' dan l-artikolu. (3) Il-Ministru jista', wara li ssirlu talba mis-Servizz ta' Sigurta', johroġ jew jibdel mandat bis-sahha ta' dan l-artikolu li jkun jawtorizza li tittiehed kull azzjoni bħalma jkun hemm speċifikat fil-mandat dwar dik il-proprjeta' li tkun hekk speċifikata jew dwar kull komunikazzjoni hekk speċifikata jekk il-Ministru - (a) iqis bħala li jkun meħtieġ li l-azzjoni jkollha tittiehed għar-raġuni li x'aktarx tkun ta' valur sostanzjali flassistenza li tingħata lis-Servizz fit-twettiq talfunzjonijiet tiegħu skont dan l-Att; u (b) ikun sodisfatt li dak li l-azzjoni tkun qiegħda tfittex li tikseb ma jkunx jista'	Security Service Act – Chapter 391 – Article 6 (1) No entry on or interference with property shall be unlawful if it is authorised by a warrant issued by the Minister under this article. (2) No interception of or interference with communications in the course of their transmission by post or by means of a radiocommunications or telecommunication system or by any other means shall be unlawful if it is authorised by a warrant issued by the Minister under this article. (3) The Minister may, on an application made by the Security Service, issue or modify a warrant under this article authorising the taking of such action as is specified in the warrant in respect of any property so specified or in respect of any communications so specified if the Minister – (a) thinks it necessary for the action to be taken on the ground that it is likely to be of substantial value in assisting the Service in carrying out any of its functions under this Act;

ragonevolment jinkiseb b'mezzi oħra; u (ċ) ikun sodisfatt illi jkun hemm fis-seħħ arrangamenti sodisfaċenti skont dan l-Att għar-rigward tal-kxif ta' informazzjoni miksuba bis-saħħa ta' dan l-artikolu u li kull informazzjoni miksuba bis-saħħa tal-mandat tkun sugġetta għal dawk l-arrangamenti.	and (b) is satisfied that what the action seeks to achieve cannot reasonably be achieved by other means; and (c) is satisfied that satisfactory arrangements are in force under this Act with respect to the disclosure of information obtained by virtue of this article and that any information obtained under the warrant will be subject to those arrangements.
Att dwar is-servizz tas-sigurta' – Kapitolu 391 – Artikolu 12 (1) Il-Prim Ministru għandu jaħtar Kummissjunarju għallgħanijiet ta' dan l-Att li jkun persuna li jkollha jew kellha l-kariga ta' mħallef tal-qrati superjuri jew li kellha l-kariga ta' Avukat Ġenerali: Izda jekk ma jigix hekk mahtur Kummissjunarju mill-Prim Ministru, l-Avukat Ġenerali għandu jassumi b'mod awtomatiku lfunzjonijiet ta' Kummissjunarju sa dak iż-żmien meta jinħatar Kummissjunarju kif dovut. (2) Il-Kummissjunarju jibqa' f'dik il-kariga għal żmien skont ma jkollu stipulat fil-ħatra tiegħu u, fil-każ ta' Kummissjunarju li ma jkunx imħallef tal-qrati superjuri attwalment fil-kariga jew l-Avukat Ġenerali, huwa għandu jingħata mill-Ministru dawk l-allowances li jistgħu jigu hekk stabbiliti mill-Prim Ministru. (3) (a) B'żieda mal-funzjonijiet lil mogħtija biddisposizzjonijiet sussegwenti ta' dan l-Att, il-Kummissjunarju għandu jistharreġ il-mod kif il-Ministru jkun qed iwettaq is-setgħat li għandu bl-artikoli minn 6 sa 10. (b) Fit-twettiq tal-funzjonijiet tiegħu skont dan l-Att, il-Kummissjunarju għandu jaġixxi skont il-għudizzju individwali tiegħu u ma jkun sugġett	Security Service Act – Chapter 391 – Article 12 (1) The Prime Minister shall appoint as a Commissioner for the purposes of this Act a person who holds or has held the office of judge of the superior courts or who has held the office of Attorney General: Provided that if a Commissioner is not so appointed by the Prime Minister the Attorney General shall automatically assume the functions of Commissioner until such time as a Commissioner shall be so appointed. (2) The Commissioner shall hold office in accordance with the terms of his appointment and, in the case of a Commissioner who is not a serving judge of the superior courts or the Attorney General, there shall be paid to him by the Minister such allowances as the Prime Minister may determine. (3) (a) In addition to his functions under the subsequent provisions of this Act, the Commissioner shall keep under review the exercise by the Minister of his powers under articles 6 to 10 (b) In the discharge of his functions under the Act, the Commissioner shall act in his individual judgment and shall not be subject to the

għad-direzzjoni jew il-kontroll ta' ebda persuna jew awtorità oħra u ma jkun sindakabbli minn ebda qorti.	direction or control of any other person or authority and shall not be liable to be questioned by any court.
Att dwar is-servizz tas-sigurta' – Kapitlu 391 – Artikolu 13 (1) Il-Kummissjunarju għandu wkoll jinvestiga ilmenti dwar is-Servizz ta' Sigurtà bil-mod speċifikat fl-Iskeda 1 li tinsab ma' dan l-Att. (2) Id-deċizzjonijiet tal-Kummissjunarju skont l-Iskeda 1 li tinsab ma' dan l-Att ma għandhom ikunu appellabbli jew sindakabbli minn ebda qorti.	Security Service Act – Chapter 391 – Article 13 (1) The Commissioner shall also investigate complaints about the Security Service in the manner specified in Schedule 1 to this Act. (2) The decisions of the Commissioner under Schedule 1 to this Act shall not be subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court.
Att Kontra Money Laundering – Kapitlu 373 – Artikolu 4(3)(a) (a) ma jagħti ebda jedd għall-produzzjoni ta' aċċess għal, jew tiftix għal komunikazzjonijiet bejn avukat jew prokuratur legali u l-klijent tiegħu, u bejn saċerdot u persuna li tkun għamlet qrara miegħu, li fi proċedimenti legali jkunu protetti kontra l-kxif bl-artikolu 642(1) tal-Kodiċi Kriminali jew bl-artikolu 588(1) tal--Kodiċi ta' Organizzazzjoni u Proċedura Ċivili;	Prevention of Money Laundering Act-Chapter 373- Article 4 (3)(a) (a) shall not confer any right to production of, access to, or search for communications between an advocate or legal procurator and his client, and between a clergyman and a person making a confession to him, which would in legal proceedings be protected from disclosure by article 642(1) of the Criminal Code or by article 588(1) of the Code of Organization and Civil Procedure.
Att kontra money laundering – Kapitlu 373 – Artikolu 30A	Prevention of Money Laundering Act-Chapter 373- Article 30A

(1) Minkejja kull haġa li tista' tinsab f'xi ligi oħra, il-Korp jista' bl-istess mod jitolb mingħand kull persuna, awtorità jew entità, bħal ma hemm imsemmi fl-artikolu 30, kull informazzjoni li jqis bħala rilevanti u utli għall-fini li jikkonforma ruħu malfunzjonijiet taħt l-artikolu 16. (2) Id-disposizzjonijiet tal-artikolu 30(2) u (3) għandhom ikunu mutatis mutandis japplikaw meta tintalab xi informazzjoni lill-Korp taħt dan l-artikolu	(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law, the Unit may likewise demand from any person, authority or entity, as is referred to in article 30, any information it deems relevant and useful for the purpose of pursuing its functions under article 16. (2) The provisions of article 30(2) and (3) shall mutatis mutandis apply where any information is demanded by the Unit under this article.
Att dwar il-Pulizija – Kapitlu 164 – Artikolu 66 (1) Il-Ministru jista' b'regolamenti johroġ kodicijiet ta' Prattika f'dak li għandu x'jaqsam - (a) ma' l-esercizzju minn uffiċjali tal-pulizija ta' poteri statutorji - (i) li jfittxu fuq persuna mingħajr ma qabel jarrestawh; (ii) li jfittxu fuq vettura mingħajr ma jagħmlu arrest; (b) id-detenzjoni, it-trattament, l-interrogazzjoni u lidentifikkazzjoni ta' persuni minn uffiċjali tal-pulizija; (c) it-tiftix li jista' jsir go xi fond minn uffiċjali tal-pulizija; u (d) il-qbid ta' proprjetà li tinstab minn uffiċjali tal-pulizija fuq xi persuna jew go xi fond.	Police Act- Chapter 164 – Article 66 (1) The Minister may by regulations issue codes of practice in connection with - (a) the exercise by police officers of statutory powers - (i) to search a person without first arresting him; (ii) to search a vehicle without making an arrest; (b) the detention, treatment, questioning and

	identification of persons by police officers; (c) searches of premises by police officers; and (d) the seizure of property found by police officers on person or premises.
Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 355E Salvi l-kazijiet fejn il-liġi tipprovdi xort'oħra, ebda uffiċjal tal-Pulizija ma għandu, sakemm ma jkollux mandat minn Magistrat, jidhol f'xi lokal, dar, bini jew reċint għall-fini li jagħmel xi perkwiżizzjoni hemm ġew jew li jarresta lil xi persuna li tkun għamlet reat jew li tkun raġonevolment suspettata li tkun għamlet jew li tkun se tagħmel xi reat, hlief jekk - (a) ir-reat ikun delitt, minbarra delitt punibbli taħt l-Att dwar l-Istampa, u jkun hemm periklu imminenti li dik il-persuna tista' taħrab jew li l-corpus delicti jew ilprovi dwar ir-reat jistgħu jiġu mneħhija; jew (b) il-persuna tinkixef fl-att tal-għemil tar-reat innifsu, minbarra reat punibbli taħt l-Att dwar l-Istampa; jew (c) l-intervent tal-pulizija jkun meħtieġ sabiex jipprevjeni l-għemil ta' delitt, li ma jkunx delitt punibbli taħt l-Att dwar l-Istampa; jew	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 355E (1) Saving the cases where the law provides otherwise, no police officer shall, without a warrant from a Magistrate, enter any premises, house, building or enclosure for the purpose of effecting any search therein or arresting any person who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed or of being about to commit any offence unless – (a) the offence is a crime other than a crime punishable under the Press Act and there is imminent danger that the said person may escape or that the corpus delicti or the means of proving the offence will be suppressed; or Cap. 248. (b) the person is detected in the very act of committing a crime other than a crime punishable under the Press Act; or Cap. 248. (c) the intervention of the Police is necessary in order to prevent the commission of a crime other than a crime punishable under the Press Act; or

Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 355Q Il-Pulizija tista', flimkien mas-setgħa li taqbad magna ta' computer, titlob li tinghatalha informazzjoni li tkun maħzuna f'xi computer f'għamla li tista' tingarr u li tkun tidher u tinqara.	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 355Q The Police may, in addition to the power of seizing a computer machine, require any information which is contained in a computer to be delivered in a form in which it can be taken away and in which it is visible and legible.
Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 355AD(3)(4) (3) Il-Pulizija tista, bil-fomm jew b'avviż bil-miktub, tehtieg lil xi persuna li tattendi l-Għassa tal-Pulizija jew xi post ieħor li tindikalha sabiex hemm tagħti dak it-tagħrif u ggħib magħha daww id-dokumenti li l-Pulizija jistgħu jinhtiegu u jekk dik il-persuna hekk tattendi fl-Għassa tal-Pulizija jew post lilha indikat hija għandha titqies bhala li tkun attendiet dik l-Għassa tal-Pulizija jew post ieħor volontarjament. L-avviż bil-miktub imsemmi f'dan il-subartikolu għandu jkun fih twissija dwar il-konsegwenzi li nnuqqas ta' tharis igħib miegħu, kif jinsabu msemmija fis-subartikolu (5). (4) Kull min il-Pulizija tqis li jkollu xi tagħrif jew dokument rilevanti għal xi investigazzjoni, għandu l-obbligu legali li jimxi mat-talba li ssirlu mill-Pulizija li jattendi f'Għassa tal-Pulizija sabiex hemm jagħti kif ikun mehtieg	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 355AD(3)(4) (3)The Police may, orally or by a notice in writing, require any person to attend at the police station or other place indicated by them to give such information and to produce such documents as the Police may require and if that person so attends at the police station or place indicated to him he shall be deemed to have attended that police station or other place voluntarily. The written notice referred to in this subarticle shall contain a warning of the consequences of failure to comply, as are mentioned in subarticle (5). (4)Any person who is considered by the police to be in possession of any information or document relevant to any investigation has a legal obligation to comply with a request from the police to attend at a police station to give as required any such information or document: Provided that no person is bound to supply

dak it-tagħrif jew dokument: Izda ħadd ma jkun marbut li jagħti xi tagħrif jew dokument li jista' jinkriminaha.	any information or document which tends to incriminate him.
Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 642 (1) L-avukati u l-prokuraturi legali ma jistgħux jiġu mgeġġlin jixhdu fuq ħwejjeg li jkunu ġew jafu minħabba li lpartijiet infishom ikunu fdaw fil-patroċinju jew konsult tagħhom. (2) Din ir-regola tgħodd ukoll għal dawk li huma obbligati milligi għas-sigriet dwar ħwejjeg li fuqhom tintalab ix-xiehda tagħhom.	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 642 Advocates and legal procurators may not be Professional secret. compelled to depose with regard to circumstances knowledge whereof is derived from the professional confidence which the parties themselves shall have placed in their assistance or advice. (2) The same rule shall apply in regard to those persons who are by law bound to secrecy respecting circumstances on which evidence is required.
Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 61 Kull min waqt li jkun jaf li sejjer isir wieħed mid-delitti msemmijin fl-artikoli ta' qabel ta' dan it-Titolu, u, fi żmien erbgħa u għoxrin siegħa, ma jgħarrafx lill-Gvern jew lill-awtoritajiet talGvern, iċ-ċirkostanzi li huwa jkun sar jaf bihom, jeħel, meta jinsab hati, għal dan in-nuqqas biss, il-piena ta' prigunerija minn disa' xhur sa tmintax-il xahar.	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 61 Whosoever, knowing that any of the crimes referred to in Failure to disclose. the preceding articles of this Title is about to be committed, shall not, within twenty-four hours, disclose to the Government or to the authorities of the Government, the circumstances which may have come to his knowledge, shall, for the mere omission, be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment for a term from nine to eighteen months.

Kodici Kriminali – Kapitlu 9 – Artikolu 392(2) (2) Qabel ma tagħmel ebda waħda mill-mistoqsijiet hawn fuq imsemmija, il-qorti għandha tfisser lill-imputat ix-xorta tal-akkuża miġjuba kontra tiegħu u twissih li mhux obligat iwieġeb għal ebda mistoqsija lanqas li jitfa' l-ħtija fuqu nnifsu, li hu jista', jekk irid, ikun assistit minn avukati jew prokuraturi legali u li kull haġa li huwa jgħid tkun tista' tingieb bħala prova kontra tiegħu.	Criminal Code- Chapter 9 – Article 392(2) (2) Before asking any of the above questions, the court shall explain to the accused the nature of the charge preferred against him and shall inform him that he is not obliged to answer any question nor to incriminate himself; that he may, if he so desires, be assisted by advocates or legal procurators and that whatever he says may be received in evidence against him.
Kodici ta' Organizzazzjoni u Procedura Civili – Kapitlu 12 – Artikolu 588 (1) L-avukat u l-prokuratur legali ma jistgħux, mingħajr il-kunsens tal-klijent, u s-sacerdot mingħajr il-kunsens tal-persuna li tkun għamlet il-qrara, jiġu mistoqsija fuq hwejjeġ li jkunu ġew jafu, l-avukat jew il-prokuratur legali billi jkunu ġew fdati lilhom mil-klijent għall-finijiet tal-kawża, u s-sacerdot billi jkun ġie jafhom taht is-sigriet tal-qrar jew bħala qrar. (2) Hlief bl-ordni tal-qorti, ebda accountant, tabib jew haddiem soċjali, psikologu jew	Code of Organization and Civil Procedure-Chapter 12 – Article5 88 (1) No advocate or legal procurator without the consent of the client, and no clergyman without the consent of the person making the confession, may be questioned on such circumstances as may have been stated by the client to the advocate or legal procurator in professional confidence in reference to the cause, or as may have come to the knowledge of the clergyman under the seal of confession or loco confessionis. (2) Unless by order of the court, no accountant, medical practitioner or social

marriage counsellor ma jista' jigi mistoqsi fuq hwejjeg li jkun sar jaf mill-klijent tieghu taht sigriet professjonali jew li seta' sar jaf bihom fil-kapacità professjonali tieghu. (3) Dan il-privilegg igħodd ukoll għall-interpretu li jkun gie mqabbad sabiex jistgħu jsiru dawk il-hwejjeg sigrieti.	worker, psychologist or marriage counsellor may be questioned on such circumstances as may have been stated by the client to the said person in professional confidence or as may have come to his knowledge in his professional capacity. Privilege to extend to interpreter. (3) This privilege extends to the interpreter who may have been employed in connection with such confidential communications.
Att Dwar il-Protezzjoni u l-Privatezza tad-Data – Kapitolu 440 – Artikolu 9 Id-data personali jistgħu jkunu proċessati biss jekk: (a) is-sugġett ta' data jkun mingħajr ebda ambigwità ta lkunsens tieghu; jew (b) l-ipproċessar ikun meħtieġ sabiex jista' jitwettaq kuntratt li fih is-sugġett ta' data ikun parti jew biex jittiehdu passi fuq talba tas-sugġett ta' data qabel lgħemil tal-kuntratt; jew (c) l-ipproċessar ikun meħtieġ biex tithares xi obbligazzjoni legali li l-kontrollur ikun sugġett għaliha; jew (d) l-ipproċessar ikun meħtieġ sabiex jigu protetti linteressi vitali tas-sugġett ta' data; jew (e) l-ipproċessar ikun meħtieġ għat-twettiq ta' attivita li ssir fl-interess pubbliku jew fl-esercizzju tal-awtorita ufficjali vestita fil-kontrollur jew f'terzi li d-data jigu zvelati lilhom; jew (f) l-ipproċessar ikun meħtieġ għal xi skop li jolqot linteress legittimu tal-kontrollur jew ta' dawk it-terzi li lilhom jkunu gew ipprovduti d-data personali, hliet meta dak l-interess jigi megħlub b'kull interess biex jigu protetti d-drittijiet u l-libertajiet fundamentali tassugġett ta' data u partikolarment id-dritt għallprivatezza.	Data Protection Act- Chapter 440- Article 9 Personal data may be processed only if: (a) the data subject has unambiguously given his consent; or (b) processing is necessary for the performance of a contract to which the data subject is party or in order to take steps at the request of the data subject prior to entering into a contract; or (c) processing is necessary for compliance with a legal obligation to which the controller is subject; or (d) processing is necessary in order to protect the vital interests of the data subject; or (e) processing is necessary for the performance of an activity that is carried out in the public interest or in the exercise of official authority vested in the controller or in a third party to whom the data is disclosed; or (f) processing is necessary for a purpose that concerns a legitimate interest of the controller or of such a third party to whom personal data is provided, except where such interest is overridden by the interest to protect the fundamental rights and freedoms of the data subject and in particular the right to privacy

Att Dwar il-Protezzjoni u l-Privatezza tad-Data – Kapitolu 527 – Artikolu 2 "informatur" tfisser kull impjegat li jizvela lill-ufficjal li jirrapporta dwar zvelar ta' informazzjoni protetta jew lill-unità dwar rapporti ta' zvelar ta' informazzjoni protetta, skont il-każ, kemm jekk l-informazzjoni tikkwalifika jew ma tikkwalifikax bhala zvelar protett taht dan l-Att;	Protection of the Whistle-blower Act-Chapter 527- Article 2 "whistle-blower" means any employee who makes a disclosure to a whistleblowing reporting officer or a whistleblowing reports unit, as the case may be, whether it qualifies as a protected disclosure or not under this Act;
Att Dwar il-Protezzjoni u l-Privatezza tad-Data – Kapitolu 440 – Artikolu 19 Kull persuna li, bil-ħsieb li gġiegħel lil xi persuna oħra li ma tagħmilx jew li tagħmel xi għemil li dik il-persuna l-oħra għandha jedd billiġi li tagħmel jew li ma tagħmilx skont iddispożizzjonijiet ta' dan l-Att, mingħajr dritt u mingħajr setgħa billiġi - (a) tuża jew thedded li tuża vjolenza fuq dik il-persuna, jew fuq martu, żewġha jew uliedha, jew fuq xi persuna oħra li tgħix magħha, jew tagħmel jew thedded li tagħmel ħsara lill-proprjetà tagħha; (b) kontinwament timxi wara dik il-persuna l-oħra minn post għall-iehor; (c) tgħasses jew iddawwar id-dar jew post ieħor fejn dik il-persuna l-oħra toqgħod, jew l-inħawi ta' dik id-dar jew dak il-post; (d) iċċaħhad lil dik il-persuna, jew b'xi mod tfixkilha flužu ta' xi għodod, ilbies jew proprjetà oħra ta' dik il-persuna l-oħra jew użati minnha, tkun ħatja ta' xi reat u tehel meta tinsab ħatja prigunerija għal żmien ta' mhux iżjed minn sena jew multa minn ħames mitt euro (€500) sa ħamest elef	Protection of the Whistle-blower Act-Chapter 527- Article 19 Any person who, for the purpose of compelling any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or to abstain from doing under the provisions of this Act, wrongfully or without legal authority - (a) uses or threatens to use violence against such person, or the wife, husband or child of such person, or a member of his household, or causes or threatens to cause damage to his property; (b) persistently follows such other person from place to place; (c) watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides or the approaches to such house or place; (d) deprives such person, or in any matter hinders him in the use of, any tools, clothing or other property owned or used by such other person, shall be guilty of any offence and be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year or to a fine (multa) of not less than five hundred euro (€500) and of not more than five thousand euro (€5,000) or to both such imprisonment and fine, without prejudice to any heavier punishment to which the offence may be liable under any other enactment: Provided that where as a result of his conduct the person convicted has achieved his aim the punishment of imprisonment shall be increased by one to two degrees and the fine (multa) shall not be less than one thousand five hundred euro ((€1,500) and not more than ten thousand euro (€10,000).

euro (€5,000) jew dik il-prigunerija u multa flimkien, bla hsara għal piena akbar li jkun hemm għal dak ir-reat taħt xi legislazzjoni oħra: Izda jekk b'dan l-għemil il-hati jkun fil-fatt laħaq l-għan tiegħu l-piena ta' prigunerija għandha tiżdied b'minn grad sa żewġ gradi u l-multa tkun ta' mhux inqas minn elf u ħames mitt euro (€1,500) u ta' mhux iżjed minn għaxart elef euro (€10,000).

ELSA NETHERLANDS

Contributors

National Coordinator

Giovanni Torres Taytelbaum

National Academic Coordinator

Dr. T. (Tarlach) McGonagle

National Researchers

Jordi Bierens

Willem Knigge

Feodora Mendes de Leon

Philipp Niewiera

Rachel Wouda

National Linguistic Editors

Elin Börjedal

Silvia Carpanè

Elena Alexandra Radu

National Academic Supervisor

Mr. Dr. A.W. (Wouter) Hins

1. Overview of the Current Legal Framework

This contribution will set out the applicable law and relevant developments relating to the protection of journalistic sources in the Netherlands. For a relevant part of the 20th century, the dominant position in the Dutch literature and case-law was unwilling to accept the idea of a general right to protect journalistic sources.¹ Case-law dating back to 1948 confirms that, unlike lawyers, notaries and doctors, journalists were initially unable to rely on any form of legal privilege. It will become clear that starting from the 1996 European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) Goodwin judgment,² the (scope of) protection of journalistic sources in the Netherlands has strongly been interlinked with Strasbourg law.

Dutch law does not provide for any explicit legislation regulating the protection of sources for journalists. The Dutch Supreme Court (Hoge Raad) directly derives this protection from Article 10 European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) and its interpretation by the ECtHR. International treaties have direct effect in the Netherlands according to Articles 93 and 94 of the Dutch Constitution (Nederlandse Grondwet). These Articles ensure that Article 10, ECHR has direct effect and takes priority over all domestic legislation, even the Constitution itself. Article 92 of the Constitution provides that legislative, executive and judicial powers may be conferred on international institutions by or pursuant to a treaty. Judgments of the ECtHR have more authority than judgments of any Dutch court, including those given by the Supreme Court. Therefore, it is the ECtHR that decides how Article 10 ECHR should be interpreted within the Dutch legal order.

Furthermore, Article 7 of the Constitution protects the freedom of expression and Article 13 safeguards privacy. More specifically, Article 7 provides that the press can freely express its thoughts and feelings, notwithstanding everyone's responsibility according to the law. It further explains that statutes are created for television and broadcast, but that no supervision takes place regarding the content. In paragraph 3 it is subsequently made clear that regarding means of communication that have not been stipulated in the provision, freedom of expression exists as well but again with the condition that the law is respected. Article 13 makes clear that privacy (by means of correspondence, telegraph and telephone) is an absolute concept and may only be derogated from if authorisation is granted by statute, which, in the case of correspondence, may only come from a judge. Article 7 of the Constitution is an important platform on which the legislative proposals are built.

¹ Gerard Schuijt, Bronbescherming en het journalistieke verschoningsrecht in Gerard Schuijt, Vrijheid van nieuwsgaring (Boom Juridische Uitgevers 2006) 143 [Dutch].

² Christine Goodwin v United Kingdom [1966] ECHR 2002-VI.

2. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

The protection of journalistic sources is a much debated topic in the Netherlands. Yet, there has been no codification, fact which has caused several issues regarding the required legal safeguards. Below, it will be explained how these problems emerged and evolved through time, the attempts to find solutions and the current state of affairs. On the other hand, there is currently no legislation in place that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his or her sources.

2.1. Historical Background: (Lack of) Codification of the Non-Disclosure Right

The Supreme Court of the Netherlands has been asked several times whether a journalist has the privileges that are granted to certain traditional professions, such as doctors, lawyers, notaries and clergymen, by Article 218 Sv (the Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure) that protects their sources for the reasons of confidentiality. Before *Goodwin v United Kingdom*³ in 1996, the Supreme Court was, and still is, reluctant to grant this privilege to journalists.⁴ This unwillingness can be illustrated by the famous KGB case of 1977, when it was held that ‘the position that a journalist has a right to protect his sources cannot be accepted as a general rule.’⁵ Therefore, Dutch member of Parliament, submitted a legislative proposal for the protection of journalistic sources in 1993. Unfortunately, the legislative proposal was pushed to the background when the Lower Chamber in 2005 announced that it would not continue the process.⁶

Nevertheless, shortly after the Goodwin case in 1996, the Supreme Court changed its position when a similar case arose. In *Van den Biggelaar et al v Dohmen and Langenberg*⁷, the Supreme Court took the Goodwin judgment into account and concluded that it would have to change the rule established earlier: it considered that it followed from the first limb of Article 10 ECHR that a journalist should be granted the protection of sources if there would be a risk that the relevant source would have to be disclosed. Thus, the Supreme Court took the opposite position than before and followed the case law of the ECtHR. Consequently, journalists only had to reveal their sources if the conditions of the second limb of Article 10 ECHR were fulfilled.

³ Goodwin (n 2).

⁴ Council of State Advice W04.13.0151/I 2013 [Advies van de Raad van State].

⁵ KGB-affaire [1977] Hoge Raad NJ 399 [1978] [Dutch].

⁶ Letter repealing the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the protection of journalistic sources (disclosure of information) [Kamerstukken II 2004/05, 23133, nr 9].

⁷ Van den Biggelaar v Dohmen & Langenberg [1996] Hoge Raad NJ 1996 [1996] 578 [Dutch].

In 2007, the Dutch journalist, Voskuil, was compelled by the domestic court to disclose his sources. This case was eventually referred to the ECtHR where it was settled that the protection of sources is one of the basic conditions for the freedom of the press, as decided in the Goodwin case. Such a right could only be curtailed by a justified overriding requirement in the public interest.⁸ The judgment was a wake-up call for the Netherlands. The former Minister of Security and Justice Hirsch Ballin, after consulting the Lower Chamber, decided to make a draft legislative proposal to strengthen the protection of journalistic sources.⁹ Nevertheless, a bill was never introduced in the Parliament.

A few years later, following the case *Sanoma v the Netherlands*¹⁰, it was made clear by the ECtHR that the Netherlands had not fulfilled its obligations in the light of source protection as it was decided that an order of a Dutch court to hand over a CD-ROM containing evidence was a breach of Article 10 of the Convention. It was also pointed out that procedural safeguards were needed. Namely, there was 'no procedure attended by adequate legal safeguards for the applicant's company in order to enable an independent assessment as to whether the interest of the criminal investigation overrode the public interest in the protection of journalistic sources.'¹¹ Following the judgment of *Telegraaf v the Netherlands*¹² a few years later, the Dutch Minister of Internal Affairs sent a letter to the Lower Chamber, which recognised the importance of the judgment of the ECtHR, concluding that legislation in the field of the protection of journalistic sources was highly necessary.¹³ Firstly, an amendment to the Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) was needed. Secondly, a proposal was made for an amendment of Article 218a of the Sv (Code of Criminal Procedure).

2.2. Two Legislative Proposals

It is now clear that the introduction of clear-cut legislation seems to be an issue. At the moment there are two pending legislative proposals: Article 218a Sv and Wiv.

2.2.1. Article 218a Sv

Article 218a does not create a new law, but adds a new provision to a pre-existing law. The provision is part of the Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure. As the law stands right now (Article

⁸ Voskuil v the Netherlands App no 64752/01 (ECtHR, 22 November 2007).

⁹ Letter of the Minister of Security and Justice [Kamerstukken II 2007/08, 31200 VI, nr 92]; General Consultation [Kamerstukken II 2007/08, 31, 200 VI, nr 104, 7].

¹⁰ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010).

¹¹ ibid, para 100.

¹² Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v the Netherlands App no 39315/06 (ECtHR, 22 November 2012).

¹³ Letter from the Ministry of the Interior and Kingdom Relations [Kamerstukken II 2012–2013, 30977, nr 49].

218), the provision only protects the sources of professions such as doctors, lawyers, notaries and clergymen. Only for the people mentioned in Articles 217 to 219b, exceptions have been made to the legal duty to speak up (family members of witnesses). The adjustment brought by Article 218a Sv would add journalists to these categories. The protection of journalists would look as follows: 'Witnesses, being journalists or publishers, who in the framework of spreading the news, possess information from sources, that have provided this information under the condition that it will not be traced back to them, have the right to protect their sources, when questioned about their origin.'

The proposed Article 218a Sv concerns both journalists and publishers. This is different from the Win, which only concerns journalists. The impact of this difference will be analysed in the following chapter. Article 218a Sv would be limited as journalists would not be able to invoke the right in case of an overriding public interest or when there would be a disproportionate amount of damage, which would be inflicted if the information would not be revealed. This would be decided by the investigative judge. The limitation allegedly reflects the requirement of an 'overriding requirement in the public interest', prescribed by the ECtHR in its case law.¹⁴

2.2.2. Win

After the judgment in *Telegraaf v the Netherlands*¹⁵, the Dutch government had to reconsider its legislative proposals. It was emphasised by the ECtHR that Articles 8 and 10 of the Convention were breached as the Win did not contain sufficient legal safeguards. Prior judicial review for the use of special powers against journalists in order to reveal their sources was lacking.¹⁶ In the proposed Article 19a Win, the court chosen by the legislator would have to give permission for the use of special powers against journalists whereby the aim would be to track down their sources. The general rule of the current legislation is reflected in Article 19(1), which provides that 'the use of special powers is only permitted when, in so far it is not determined otherwise by this paragraph, the Minister concerned or on behalf of him the head of the service has given permission.' The proposed Article 19a, first paragraph aims to take into account the requirement formulated by the ECtHR, that prior independent review for the exercise of special powers is necessary as the authorisation of the Minister of Interior and Kingdom Relations is deemed to be insufficient and can hardly be regarded as independent and impartial.¹⁷ The reason that the specific court was chosen is that it already has experience with giving permission pursuant to Article 23 which prescribes authorisation for the opening of letters.¹⁸ Consequently, this would ¹⁴ Amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure laying down the law on protection of sources for free news (source protection in criminal matters) [Kamerstuk 34032, nr 8].

¹⁵ Telegraaf and others (n 14).

¹⁶ Telegraaf and others (n 14) para 82.

¹⁷ Telegraaf and others (n 14); Amendments to the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002 in connection with the establishment of an independent binding test (which aims to identify their sources) prior to the use of special powers against journalists [Kamerstukken 2014/2015, 34027, nr 3].

¹⁸ Constitutional obligation derived from Article 13, para 1 of the Dutch Constitution [Nederlandse Grondwet].

provide for a more uniform procedure. What exactly a journalistic source is has not (yet) been defined in neither of the proposals.

2.2.3. Temporary Regulation of the Wiv

Since January 1 2016, the Wiv, a temporary regulation for judicial review, regarding the exercise of special powers against lawyers and journalist, has come into force. The Minister of Interior and Kingdom Relations has announced that this regulation is necessary while awaiting the definitive legislation.¹⁹ A temporary independent commission, compulsorily composed by jurists, is set up to review the application of special powers against lawyers and journalists, such as telephone tapping. If the commission gives a negative advice, the Minister of Interior and Kingdom Relations will not allow the use of this special power. The procedure will only be used in two cases: when the use of a special powers (direct or indirect) can breach the fundamental right of confidential communication with a person's lawyer and when it is aimed at obtaining the source of a journalist. A strict proportionality test needs to be applied; when using the special powers, the interest of the individual enjoying the right must be taken into account next to the interest of the protection of privacy and, additionally, concrete reasons to fear direct danger for public security must be available.²⁰

2.2.4. Regulation on Whistle-Blowers

In order to protect whistle blowers several mechanisms in the Netherlands exist. More recently, the Parliament has adopted a more comprehensive Bill that establishes "The House for the Whistle-blowers." This institution shall both advise and investigate in situations where whistle blowers suspect societal misconduct.

3. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

There is no legislation in Dutch law that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources. Therefore, this question cannot be answered.

¹⁹ Letter from the Ministry of the Interior and Kingdom Relations [Kamerstukken 2015/2016, 29279, nr 292].

²⁰ Temporary scheme on the application of special powers (determined by the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002) of lawyers and journalists [Tijdelijke Regeling van de Ministers van Binnenlandse Zaken en Koninkrijksrelaties en van Defensie van 16 December 2015].

4. Who is a 'journalist' according to the national legislation? Is it, in your view, a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists' sources extended to anyone else?

The term 'journalist' can be drawn from several sources of information. It appears that the Netherlands Union of Journalists and the Netherlands Press Council seem to wield a certain level of influence regarding the definition. In their statutes, a journalist is defined as 'a person who, whether employed or self-employed, contributes as his/her main profession to the editorial leadership or editorial composition; a. a daily newspaper, newspaper, door-to-door magazine, magazine or news website, in so far the content thereof consists of news, pictures and other illustrations, reports or articles (...); c. programmes spread on the radio, television or internet, in so far these consist of news, reports, considerations²¹ or columns of informational nature; (...).' According to Article 4(1) of the Statutes of the Press Council, reporters who regularly perform journalistic acts, while not doing so as their main profession, but considered relevant for the Dutch occupational group are also considered to be journalists.

The legislative proposal, Wiv, seems to adhere to the definition given by the Union of Journalists and the Press Council, as well as the indications provided for by Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The occupation seems to refer to a person who is a journalist as a main profession against payment, or not as a main profession but regularly against payment, tasked with collecting, spreading or publishing information for the purpose of public debate, irrespective of the nature of the medium and its legal status (e.g. part-time contract).²² The temporary regulation of Wiv 2002 adheres to the definition that was proposed for the Wiv 2002.

Opposed to the Wiv, Article 218a Sv would not only apply to journalists but also publicists. In the Explanatory Memorandum it has been explained that it would not be necessary to stand by the same strict limitation of the definition of 'journalist' as Article 218a Sv. In the context of the developing media and society, it would become possible to extend the possibilities for invoking the protection of sources: indeed, someone who regularly collects and spreads information could be called a publicist. It is important to take into account that public debate does not only play a role within the classic media but also outside these boundaries, such as websites and blogs. As public debate must be based on reliable and correct information where one can express his or her opinion freely, publicists must be able to count on the fact that their sources will be protected. It was also considered that, even though it might appear difficult to define this category in this way, the nature and content of the publications should be able to demonstrate whether someone intended to make him or herself known as a publicist. Someone who regularly collects and spreads information can be called a publicist.²³

²¹ The concept concerns a beschouwing which is not easily translated to English but it refers to a text in which different opinions are mentioned (look at an issue from different perspectives) and the opinion of the author does not prevail.

²² Amendments to the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002 in connection with the establishment of an independent binding test (which aims to identify their sources) prior to the use of special powers against journalists, which aims to identify their sources [Kamerstukken 2014-2015 34027 nr 3].

The research group pleads for a wide definition of a journalist as, in the context of the research conducted, the aim is the protection of the sources and not, per se, of a journalistic privilege. This was also pointed out by the Netherlands Union of Journalists; the legislative proposal is not about making a distinction between good or bad journalism or between amateurs and professionals, but rather to prevent that the Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst (the General Intelligence and Security Service of the Netherlands) (AIVD) or the judicial authorities do not intervene in such secrecy.²⁴ Nevertheless, it must be taken into account that the wide definition of 'publicist' could lead to confusion and still requires further consideration, as was clarified in the opinion of the Council of State.²⁵

5. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

According to Articles 93 and 94 of the Dutch Constitution, Article 10 ECHR has direct effect in the Netherlands. Therefore, every public authority in the Netherlands is obliged to comply with Article 10 ECHR and leave aside all national law that contravenes it (in theory, also the Constitution itself).

However, it should be emphasised that it has followed from several ECtHR cases that the protection granted under Dutch law has, at least in the past, not been in line with Article 10 of the Convention.²⁶ In reaction to the ECtHR case law, the Dutch Public Prosecutor has revised its previous policy on the matter and has published a new version of its Aanwijzing toepassing dwangmiddelen tegen journalisten (Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists) in

²³ Explanatory Memorandum [Wijziging van het Wetboek van Strafvordering tot vastlegging van het recht op bronbescherming van vrije nieuwsgaring (bronbescherming in strafzaken)] 12-13.

²⁴ Thomas Bruning, 'Onderwerp: bijdrage NVJ inzake rondetafelbijeenkomst wetsvoorstel bronbescherming' (December 2014) <https://www.nvj.nl/uploads/bestanden/bijdrage_nvj_rondetafel_wetsvoorstel_bronbescherming_dec_2014.pdf> accessed 26 April 2016 [Dutch].

²⁵ Advice W03.13.0152/II of the Council of State.

²⁶ Sanoma (n 12); Telegraaf (n 14); Voskuil (n 10).

2012. Although these Instructions are not Dutch legislation strictu sensu, they bind the public prosecutor when applying coercive measures against journalists.²⁷

As for the self-regulatory mechanisms, they do not have force of law but merely illustrate the ethical duty of journalists not to betray their sources, as made clear in Article b2 of the Guidelines of the Netherlands Press Council.²⁸

6. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regards to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

6.1. Introduction

Recommendation No R (2000) 7 identifies seven principles, each of which will be explained and analysed to the extent to which (both civil and criminal) Dutch law is in line with them. The applicable procedures and the circumstances to which disclosure is limited will be clarified and the question to what extent authorities first search for alternative, less intrusive measures will be answered. Finally, a general conclusion will be provided.

There are currently two pending legislative proposals that will codify the right to protection of journalistic sources.²⁹ Although this codification might have implications for the applicable procedures and (thus) the question to what extent Dutch law is in line with the principles of Recommendation No R (2000) 7, a final version of this legislation (April 6 2016) will have to be approved by the Dutch parliament. For this reason, focus will primarily be given to the current state of affairs and only make additional and/or supporting comments about the upcoming legislation where appropriate.

6.2. Principle 1: Right of Non-Disclosure of Journalists

²⁷ The legal basis of this Instruction is Article 130(4) of the Judicial Organisation Act. It should be mentioned that this instruction does not bind members of the public.

²⁸ Guidelines of the Netherlands Press Council 2015. For more details, see Annex I.

²⁹ Amendment (n 16) nr 2; Amendment (n 19).

The first principle of Recommendation No R (2000) 7 prescribes that domestic law and practice in member states should provide for explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention. In this context, account should be taken of the fact that the protection of journalistic sources in the Netherlands does not (yet) have a statutory basis under both criminal and civil law. However, this does not implicate that the Netherlands does not offer clear and explicit protection at all. As mentioned in Chapter 2, the explicit recognition of the right not to disclose sources in the Netherlands can be traced back to a judgment only six weeks after this right was introduced in ECtHR case-law.³⁰ Thus, although not codified, explicit and clear protection in the Netherlands has been recognised and it is directly derived from Article 10 of the Convention.³¹ In addition, specifically focusing on criminal law, the earlier mentioned Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists recognises the non-disclosure right by, once more, emphasising that it follows from the case law of the ECHR that ‘the use of coercive measures against journalists to identify their sources, like seizure, search or interception of telephone calls, is, in principle, impermissible. In those cases in which these restraints can be applied, extra safeguards should be taken into account’. Finally, the aforementioned new legislation will – if adopted – codify the right to protect sources by giving it an explicit statutory basis in the Sv.³² For these reasons, it can be concluded that the Netherlands offers explicit and clear protection for the right of journalist not to disclose their sources. At the same time, the mere existence of this right should not be confused with the question to what extent the scope of protection granted by the right is in line with (other) principles of Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The latter question will be assessed under principles 3 to 7.

6.3. Principle 2: Right of Non-Disclosure of Other Persons

The second principle of Recommendation No R (2000) 7 prescribes that other persons who, by their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information identifying a source through the collection, editorial processing or dissemination of this information, should equally be protected. Civil case-law shows that courts have referred to the right of non-disclosure not only in cases against journalists, but also in cases against the legal entity a journalist of a certain publication was working for.³³ In a case concerning alleged unlawful allegations in a newspaper, even a witness who attended a certain meeting but who did not have a professional relationship with a journalist was able to count on the protection granted by the right of non-³⁰ Van den Biggelaar/Dohmen & Langenberg (n 9).

³¹ In that context, it must be mentioned that this case law has learned that the right of non-disclosure is not only limited to protection of the identity of the source, but can also (solely) protect the information the source has given when the identity of the source is no longer secret: Plaintiff v Stichting Betaald Voetbal S.V. Top Oss and others [2006] Gerechtshof 's Hertogenbosch NJF 2006 [2006] 475 [Dutch].

³² Amendment (n 16) nr 2.

³³ See Omroepvereniging Bunch v Pretium Telecom BV [2011] Rechtbank 's-Gravenhage, published online on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBSGR:2011:BU3512>> [2011] [Dutch].

disclosure. The reason for this was that a journalist, who had also attended the meeting, had later based an article on the information he had obtained there.³⁴

Concerning criminal law, it should be mentioned that, even though the Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists constantly refer to 'journalists', they recognise the right of non-disclosure of other persons. The accompanying definition of 'journalist' mentioned in the Instructions indicates that the use of the word 'journalist' also extends to staff desk editors, camera and sound technicians, or others who may have information about journalistic sources and by virtue of their profession are involved in the journalistic product. For that reason, the special procedures as described in the Instructions also apply to them. Finally, the Dutch Minister of Safety and Justice emphasised in the Explanatory Memorandum to the pending legislative proposals, that it is clear that the protection of sources would be illusory if it could be circumvented by addressing persons to whom the right has not been explicitly granted. Hence, those who are primarily engaged in the gathering of documentation and background information for these reports will also be covered.³⁵ The above indicates that the right of non-disclosure in the Netherlands is not solely restricted to journalists but also extends to others, who carry out similar functions.

6.4. Principle 3: Limits to the Right of Non-Disclosure

The third principle prescribes that (i) the right of journalists not to disclose their sources must not be subject to other restrictions than those mentioned in Article 10, paragraph 2 ECHR and (ii) that the disclosure of information identifying a source should not be deemed necessary unless (a) it can be convincingly established that reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted, and (b) the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure.³⁶

6.5. Principle 4: Alternative Evidence to Journalists' Sources

Principle 4 prescribes that in cases against a journalist on grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, authorities should consider, for the purpose of establishing the truth or otherwise of the allegation, all evidence which is available to them under national procedural law. They may not demand the disclosure of information identifying a source by the journalist for that purpose. There have been several court cases against a journalist (or their newspapers/websites) concerning an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person. In almost all of these cases, the courts have not demanded the disclosure of journalistic sources and/or based their decisions about the lawfulness of the publication on alternative evidence.³⁷ An illustrating example can be found in the case of Pretium against Wegener Media, in which the plaintiff explicitly asked for disclosure of journalistic sources.³⁸ The reason for this was an intentional, allegedly unlawful publication by the defendant that summarised customer complaints about the aggressive sales methods used by the plaintiff. Although disclosure of sources could have been relevant to assess the lawfulness of the publication and would have enabled the plaintiff to defend himself against the allegations, disclosure was denied by explicitly referring to the importance of not disclosing journalistic sources.³⁹ In another case, an investigative judge prevented a witness from answering certain questions, as it could have led to the identification of journalistic sources.⁴⁰ In a case dealing with the publication of paparazzi pictures of a topless Dutch celebrity, a magazine was ordered to disclose their source.⁴¹ However, the reason for this was not related to finding the truth of the allegation, but had to do with the prohibition of possible future infringements of the right to privacy of this celebrity.

³⁴ Van Heest v De Limburger [2013] Hoge Raad NJB 2013 [2013] 561 [Dutch].

³⁵ Amendment (n 16) nr 3.

³⁶ A comprehensive and separate analysis of the extent to which Dutch law is in line with this principle will follow under Chapter 6, regarding the application of Dutch law in light of the ECtHR case law.

6.6. Principle 5: Conditions Concerning Disclosures

Principle 5 prescribes five different procedural aspects that should be complied with when a disclosure is requested. Due to the variability of these procedural principles, we will analyse separately the extent to which Dutch law is in line with them:

1. The motion or request for initiating any action by competent authorities, aimed at the disclosure of information identifying a source, should only be introduced by persons or public authorities that have a direct legitimate interest in the disclosure.

Article 303 of Book 3 of the Burgerlijk Wetboek (the Dutch Civil Code) states that ‘without sufficient interest, no one may submit an action’. Under civil law, this is a safeguard that a request for initiating an action will only be introduced by persons that have a legitimate interest in the disclosure. Apart from this, Article 834a of the Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering (the Dutch Code of Civil Procedure) states that only those who have a legitimate interest may ask to inspect, copy or extract from other digital or non-digital documents.

³⁷ For instance see this case about a publication in a newspaper in which a plastic surgeon was accused of performing breast enlargements on prostitutes while only communicating and agreeing about the aimed size of the breasts with their pimp: Plaintiff v Het Parool B.V. [2009] Rechtbank Amsterdam published online <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBAMS:2009:BI0904>> [2009] [Dutch]. See also about the alleged unlawfulness of allegations made in a tv-show: Plaintiff v Endelmoel Nederland Mediagroep B.V. and others [2015] Rechtbank Midden-Nederland NJF 2015 [2015] 451 [Dutch].

³⁸ Pretium BV v Wegener Media BV [2013] Rechtbank Overijssel [2013] Prg. 2013 [2013] 291 [Dutch].

³⁹ ibid.

⁴⁰ Van Heest/ de Limburger B.V. (n 35).

⁴¹ Audax Publishing B.V. v X [2004] Gerechtshof Amsterdam NJF 2004 [2014] 565 [Dutch].

Concerning criminal law, the Supreme Court has decided that it is up to the Public Prosecutor to motivate the judge that the application of coercive measures against journalists answers to the demands of proportionality and subsidiarity with regard to the different interests at stake.⁴² In that context, it should be stated that it has not proven to be sufficient for the Prosecutor to simply put forward that the police and the public prosecutor will act or have acted in a prudent and reasonable manner. Instead, it needs to be explicitly motivated why there is an absolute necessity and proportionality with respect to the applicable legitimate interest(s).⁴³

2. Journalists should be informed by the competent authorities of their right not to disclose information identifying a source, as well as of the limits of this right before a disclosure is requested.

It remains unclear whether competent authorities inform journalists of their right not to disclose information before a disclosure is requested. The Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists do not contain such an obligation. In addition, analysis of Dutch procedural law has not indicated that such obligation exists.

3. Sanctions against journalists for not disclosing information identifying a source should only be imposed by judicial authorities during court proceedings which allow for a hearing of the journalists concerned in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention.

Under criminal law, a journalist in the capacity of a witness who is upon request of the investigative judge and does not disclose information identifying a source will run the risk of being detained.⁴⁴ The detention has to be reported to the court by the investigative judge within 24 hours, unless the detainee has already been released.⁴⁵ The court will, after hearing the witness and within 48 hours after the detainment has started, decide whether the witness will be detained for longer. Apart from this, not showing up as a witness qualifies as a criminal offence under Article 192 Sv. The regular criminal procedures as laid down in the Sv will apply when prosecution is based on this Article. These procedures allow for different ways a suspected journalist can be heard.⁴⁶

Under civil law, a journalist in the capacity of witness will also run the risk of being detained when, upon request, information leading to a source is not disclosed.⁴⁷ The law prescribes that, upon request of the interested party, the court may impose this sanction when it is of the ⁴² Rejection of appeal Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2003] Hoge Raad NS 2003 [2003] 221, para 188 [Dutch].

⁴³ See in this context: Dismissal of complaint from Uitgeversmaatschappij De Telegraaf B.V. [2008] Hoge Raad NS 2008 [2008] 149, para 452 [Dutch].

⁴⁴ Article 221 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁴⁵ Article 221(2) Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁴⁶ See for instance Article 311(4) of the Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure, which decides that, under penalty of the procedure being invalid, the accused should always have the last word.

⁴⁷ Article 173 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure.

opinion that this is justified by the interest of finding the truth.⁴⁸ In addition, Article 178 of the Burgerlijk Wetboek also mentions the sanction of compensation of damages. As Article 6 ECHR has direct effect in the Netherlands, sanctions may only be imposed after a fair hearing.

Apart from testifying as a witness, a journalist could also be asked to disclose sources in the capacity of defendant in a civil proceeding. In that context, the Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering (the Dutch Code of Civil Procedure) states that, as a general principle, the court should give both parties the opportunity to expression their opinion, to explain them and to comment on each other's views and all documents or other information that have been brought into the proceedings.⁴⁹ In case the disclosure of sources is requested, the standard dagvaardingsprocedure (summons procedure) will be applicable.⁵⁰

4. Journalists should have the right to have the imposition of a sanction, for not disclosing their information identifying a source, reviewed by another judicial authority.

Under criminal law, an appeal is possible against a conviction for not showing up as a witness.⁵¹ Under civil law, it is possible to lodge an appeal against the decision of a lower judge to reveal sources in cases that might have a value or interest of more than 1750 Euro.⁵²

5. Where journalists respond to a request or order to disclose information identifying a source, the competent authorities should consider applying measures to limit the extent of the disclosure, for example by excluding the public from the disclosure with due respect to Article 6 of the Convention, where relevant, and by themselves respecting the confidentiality of such a disclosure.

Under criminal law, should a journalist testify in the capacity of witness, it can be decided that the hearing will not be held in public.⁵³ Under certain circumstances, also the parties themselves may be excluded.⁵⁴ Under civil law, as a principle, hearings are open to the public. Upon request, however, the court may decide otherwise.⁵⁵ The Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists emphasizes that if journalistic material is seized, it should be ensured that it is handed over in the least intrusive manner. Also, the journalist will have to be given the opportunity to first copy the seized materials and the original materials should be handed back to ⁴⁸ Article 173 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure.

⁴⁹ Article 19 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure.

⁵⁰ This (standard) procedural form should be distinguished from a petitions process, which is only applicable in case the law demands so (Article 261 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure).

⁵¹ Article 404 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure. For Supreme Court litigation, see Article 427 of the Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁵² Article 332 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure. For Supreme Court litigation, see Title 11 of the Dutch Code of Civil Procedure and Articles 78, 79, 80a and 91 of the Judicial Organisation Act.

⁵³ Article 187d Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁵⁴ Article 178 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁵⁵ Article 27 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure.

the journalist as soon as possible. Finally, it should be mentioned that a significant part of the Dutch judgments are published on the websites of the courts. The courts have adopted guidelines for the anonymisation of these judgments.⁵⁶

6.7. Principle 6: Interception of Communication, Surveillance and Judicial Search and Seizure

Principle 6 of Recommendation No (2000) 7 prescribes that (a) certain measures should not be applied if their purpose is, under the terms of the other principles, to circumvent the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source. It provides that, (b) where police or judicial authorities have properly obtained information identifying a source by any of the actions referred to under (a), although this might not have been the purpose of these actions, measures should be taken to prevent subsequent use of this information as evidence before courts, unless disclosure is justified under Principle 3.

a. The following measures should not be applied if their purpose is to circumvent the right of journalists, under the terms of these principles, not to disclose information identifying a source:

- (i) interception orders or actions concerning communication or correspondence of journalists or their employers,
- (ii) surveillance orders or actions concerning journalists, their contacts or their employers, or
- (iii) search or seizure orders or actions concerning the private or business premises, belongings or correspondence of journalists or their employers or personal data related to their professional work.

Due to the absence of coercion, the interception of communication and surveillance orders are not qualified as a coercive measure under Dutch law but as special methods of detection.⁵⁷ The Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists will therefore not apply. However, in order to intercept communication, the Public Prosecutor will have to ask the investigative judge for permission. This judge will assess the lawfulness of the measure.⁵⁸ In case of systematic surveillance of a journalist, the law does not prescribe prior authorisation of an independent judge. Instead, only the consent of the public prosecutor is required.⁵⁹

Search or seizure actions will qualify as coercive measures. The Instructions for the use of coercive measures against journalists emphasise that, in light of the Convention and the ECtHR

⁵⁶ This guideline can be found at: 'Anonimiseringsrichtlijnen' (2015) <<https://www.rechtspraak.nl/Uitspraken-en-nieuws/Uitspraken/Paginas/Anonimiseringsrichtlijnen.aspx>> accessed 05 May 2016 [Dutch].

⁵⁷ Paul Mevis, Capita Strafrecht: een thematische inleiding (6th edn, Ars Aequi Libri 2009) 291 [Dutch].

⁵⁸ Articles 126m, 126t and 126zg of the Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

⁵⁹ Articles 126g and 126o Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure.

case law, the use of coercive measures should be restricted to situations in which the use of a certain measure is the only reasonable and effective manner to investigate and prevent serious offences. In that context, it concerns those offences that could seriously harm or endanger the life, safety or health of people. In principle, that could, for instance, be the case when a person, if not arrested, would commit new serious offences, or when, explosives would be located to prevent an imminent terrorist attack.⁶⁰ If the Prosecutor would, despite the above, still want to demand the search or seizure of journalistic belongings, he will have to submit a warrant to the investigative judge asking for permission.⁶¹ The investigative judge will then assess the lawfulness of the seizure in light of Article 10 ECHR.

b. Where information identifying a source has been properly obtained by police or judicial authorities by any of the above actions, although this might not have been the purpose of these actions, measures should be taken to prevent the subsequent use of this information as evidence before courts, unless the disclosure would be justified under Principle 3.

Article 359a Sv regulates what should happen in case of irreparable procedural defects by the public prosecutor. This Article stipulates that in case of, for instance, unlawfully obtained evidence, the court may decide that (i) the penalty will be reduced, (ii) the improperly obtained evidence will not be taken into account or that (iii) the prosecution will be inadmissible. Case law of the Supreme Court has developed several instructions regarding which of these consequences, will have to be applied under different circumstances.⁶² It should be noted that the sanction referred to under (ii) will be best suitable to answer the demand under Principle 6 of the Recommendation. Analysis of the Dutch case law shows that a judge could be expected to opt for this sanction in case of improperly obtained evidence, that would infringe the journalistic right of non-disclosure. This is due to the fact that the Supreme Court has ruled that this sanction can be imposed in cases when a far-reaching infringement of an important rule or principle of criminal law has occurred and when the exclusion of evidence might be deemed necessary as a means to prevent similar future procedural irregularities. Case-law shows that a breach of professional legal privilege has been qualified as such in the past.⁶³

⁶⁰ Instruction for the use of coercive measures against journalists, chapter 2 2012 (Aanwijzing toepassing dwangmiddelen tegen journalisten).

⁶¹ ibid, chapter 3. See also: Article 105 Dutch Code of Criminal Proceeding.

⁶² Rejection of Appeal Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2004] Hoge Raad NS 2004 [2004] 146 [Dutch]. See also: Overrule of decision Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2013] Hoge Raad NS 2013 [2013] 139 [Dutch].

⁶³ See for instance: Pronunciation 8722 [1996] Hoge Raad NJ 1999 578 [Dutch] in which the evidence based on a telephone call between a suspect and a lawyer was excluded from the proceedings. See also Overrule of decision 02157/06 [2007] Hoge Raad NJ 2008 [2007] 374 [Dutch], in which the minutes of a hearing were excluded because they disclosed information about a telephone conversation between the suspect and a doctor. See in this context also: TELE2 Nederland B.V. v Defendant [2010] Rechtbank Haarlem published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBHAA:2010:BO9358>> [2010] [Dutch] and Q.Q. and others v Beheer B.V. and others [2015] Rechtbank Den Haag JOR 2015 [2015] 339 [Dutch] in which evidence

6.8. Principle 7: Protection Against Self-Incrimination

The final principle of Recommendation No R (2000) 7 demands that the aforementioned principles shall not in any way limit national laws on the protection against self-incrimination in criminal proceedings, and that journalists should, as far as these laws apply, enjoy such protection with regard to the disclosure of information identifying a source. There are no known cases in which a suspected journalist was obliged to reveal sources, thereby limiting national laws on the protection against self-incrimination in criminal proceedings. Neither the current law nor the legislative proposals give any cause to suspect that this would be the case.

6.9. Conclusions

It has been analysed to which extent the Dutch law and procedures are in line with the principles of Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The findings suggest that, for the most part, the limits of non-disclosure seem to be in line with the analysed principles of the Recommendation. Generally, the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information.

7. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the following principle should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

The case-law of the ECtHR has clarified under what circumstances disclosure of journalistic sources is or not possible and how the different applicable interests should be balanced. Apart from this, Principle 3 of Recommendation No R (2000) 7 identifies what the limits to the right of non-disclosure should be.

The Principles in Recommendation No R (2000) 7 are not directly implemented in any Dutch legislation. The criteria under which the interest in disclosure can outweigh the interest in non-disclosure therefore have been assessed and applied in case law, where they have been defined by the Dutch courts.

originating from illegally tapping the phone of a journalist by an intelligence service was qualified as 'fruit of the poisonous tree' and was therefore excluded.

This chapter will assess whether the application of the right of non-disclosure in Dutch case-law respects these ECHR standards. First, the general approach applied by the Dutch Courts when assessing the necessity of a disclosure will be explained. Then, a selection of case-law, that does not or could possibly not comply with the ECHR standards, will be considered.

As mentioned before, the protection of journalistic sources under Dutch law is strongly interlinked with international law. That is why, when assessing an interference with the right of non-disclosure of journalistic sources, Dutch courts apply the same test as contained in Article 10 ECHR and refer to case-law of the ECtHR to support their judgments.

There are three criteria contained in this test. The first requirement entails the interference to be prescribed by law. Secondly, the interference should be aimed at protecting certain values.⁶⁴ Third, the interference must be necessary in a democratic society. This necessity test includes a decision on the principle of proportionality of the interference. The interference should be proportional to the means used to reach the aim. The Supreme Court has stated in the Zipschijf case that, in principle, the Public Prosecutors should prove that the application of restraints against journalists fulfills the requirements of proportionality and subsidiarity.⁶⁵ In Observer and Guardian v the United Kingdom, the ECtHR stated that ‘the adjective “necessary”, within the meaning of Article 10(2) ECHR implies the existence of a “pressing social need”’.⁶⁶ More specifically in cases where the disclosure of journalistic sources is ordered, the ECtHR has considered that this cannot be compatible with Article 10 ECHR unless justified by an overriding requirement of the public interest.⁶⁷ Lastly, the court must assess if the principle of subsidiarity has been adhered to. The question that the court must ask is whether the interference is relevant and sufficient to achieve its aim.

8. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

8.1. Compliance with ECHR Standards: Selection of Case-Law

⁶⁴ Such as national security, territorial integrity, public safety, prevention of disorder or crime, protection of health, morals, reputation or rights of others, preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, and maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

⁶⁵ Rejection of appeal 01022/01 B [2003] Hoge Raad NJ 2004 [2003] 188 [Dutch].

⁶⁶ Observer and Guardian v the United Kingdom (1991) Series A no 216.

⁶⁷ Goodwin (n 2).

As the Dutch courts balance the different interests in a equivalent way to the ECtHR, the short conclusion could be that this approach provides a sufficient framework to comply with the standards set out in ECtHR case-law and demanded by Principle 3 of Recommendation No R (2000) 7. However, such a short conclusion would not acknowledge the difficulties that have proven to exist. That is why it will now be analysed whether the application and outcome of the balancing act has been in line with the case-law of the ECtHR and Principle 3 of the Recommendation.

Due to the scope of this report, it is not possible to enumerate and describe all available case-law concerning the right of non-disclosure of sources.⁶⁸ Therefore, only the following case-law will be identified and described:

- (i) Dutch case-law that has proven not to be in line with the standards of the Convention pursuant to a later judgment by the ECtHR, and;
- (ii) a selection of national cases in which the parties have not lodged an appeal with the ECtHR but of which it can be nevertheless questioned to what extent the courts' considerations comply with ECtHR case-law.

This selection will make it possible to give an insight in some of the possible difficulties that exist or missteps that have occurred in the past while balancing the different interests in light of the ECHR standards.

8.2. Dutch Violations of Article 10: ECtHR Cases

In three ECtHR judgments, it was made clear that the application and the outcome of the balancing act as performed by the Dutch courts was not in line with Article 10(2) of the Convention. A closer look at the facts and the different ways the national courts and the ECtHR have balanced the various interests is provided in the following.

8.2.1. Voskuil

In the case of Voskuil,⁶⁹ a journalist had published two articles on a criminal investigation regarding arms trafficking. In these articles, an unnamed police officer was quoted saying that the police abused their powers during the investigation and later made up a story about how they found the weapons. During the appeal proceedings in the case against the suspects, Voskuil had to appear as a witness. Upon request to reveal his source, he denied to do so by invoking his right of non-disclosure of journalistic sources (as it had, at that time, already been acknowledged by the Supreme Court). However, the Court of Appeal was of the opinion that if the statements quoted in the article written by Voskuil were right, this would seriously affect the outcome of the case and the integrity of the police. For that reason, the Court ruled that the interest of the accused and the integrity of the authorities outweighed the interest of not having to disclose journalistic sources. Nevertheless, Voskuil remained silent. That is why, in order to make him speak, the Court ordered the immediate detention of Voskuil. Seventeen days later, during another hearing, he was released. Upon release, he lodged an appeal against the Netherlands with the ECtHR. The Strasbourg Court found that there had been an interference with the protection granted to journalists under Article 10 of the Convention.⁷⁰ It then assessed whether this interference was 'necessary in a democratic society'. In that context, the Netherlands claimed that the detention was necessary for two reasons: (i) to secure a fair trial for the accused and (ii) to guard the integrity of the police.⁷¹ Although the ECtHR acknowledged the importance of both of these interests in general, it ruled that these were insufficient as valid reasons in the case at hand. The first reason was lacking, as, during a later stage of the national proceedings, it had become clear that the evidence that Voskuil would possibly had been able to supply was replaceable by evidence of other witnesses. With regard to the second reason, the integrity of the police, the Court emphasised that the use of improper methods by public authorities is precisely the kind of issue which the public is entitled to be informed about in a democratic society. Above all, the Court was struck by the length of the detention:

⁶⁸ Depending on the chosen selection criteria, there are approximately 30 - 40 cases in the past fifteen years that are relevant.

⁶⁹ Voskuil (n 10).

Whatever the consequences might have been for the source, the Court is struck by the lengths to which the Netherlands authorities were prepared to go to learn his or her identity. Such far-reaching measures cannot but discourage persons who have true and accurate information relating to wrongdoing of the kind here at issue from coming forward and sharing their knowledge with the press in future cases.⁷²

For these reasons, the Court was of the opinion that, the Government's interest in knowing the identity of the source could not override the interest of Voskuil in not disclosing his sources. Thus, a violation of Article 10 of the Convention was found.⁷³

8.2.2. Sanoma

In Sanoma, the ECtHR found an infringement of Article 10.⁷⁴ The case concerned a police raid in 2002 at the editorial offices of Autoweek, one of the magazines published by Sanoma. During this raid, the police demanded seizure of certain photos that contained images of participants to an illegal street race. As these photos were taken by a journalist of Autoweek under the strict condition that the participants would remain anonymous, Sanoma at first denied to hand over the pictures. The police detectives and the public prosecutors then threatened to detain one of the ⁷⁰ Voskuil (n 10) para 49.

⁷¹ Voskuil (n 10) para 54.

⁷² Voskuil (n 10) para 71.

⁷³ Voskuil (n 10) para 74.

⁷⁴ Sanoma (n 12).

editors of the magazine, to seal and search the whole of the company's premises for the weekend or longer and to remove all computers. Finally, under protest, Sanoma then decided to surrender the photographs to the public prosecutor. Two weeks later, Sanoma lodged a complaint before Dutch courts, seeking the lift of the seizure, restitution of the photographs, an order to destroy copies of the photographs and an injunction preventing the police and prosecuting department from making use of the information obtained through the photographs. The regional court only granted the request to lift the seizure and to return the photographs to Sanoma as the interest of the investigation did not oppose this. Although the regional court did consider that Article 10 of the Convention includes the freedom to gather news, which deserves protection, it also stated that this interest could be outweighed by another interest warranting priority. In the underlying case, it found that the interest of criminal investigation outweighed the right to freely gather news. An important reason for this was that the investigation at issue did not concern the illegal street race, but an investigation into other serious offences in which the underlying pictures could play a role. As other investigations in the context of these latter offences had led to nothing, the regional court found that authorities had complied with the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity. Subsequently, an appeal lodged with the Supreme Court by Sanoma was inadmissible due to a lack of interest. The Sv did not provide for a possibility to obtain a declaratory ruling that the seizure or the use of a seized item was unlawful once returned.

During the proceedings before the ECtHR, the Dutch Government insisted that the above did not implicate an interference with Article 10 of the Convention.⁷⁵ In short, the government contested that an agreement concerning the anonymity of the photographed persons had been made at all. Would there nonetheless be a source deserving protection, the agreement of confidentiality could only relate to the street race, whereas the order demanding the photographs had been given in the context of the investigation of an entire different and more serious crime. The ECtHR decided differently. It found that it is not required to put forward evidence of the existence of a confidentiality agreement.⁷⁶ In addition, it had already found in another case that the fact that a disclosure order had not been enforced could not prevent the Court from finding that there had been an interference.⁷⁷ In that context, while a search or seizure did not take place in the present case (only a compulsory handover), the Court emphasised that a chilling effect would arise whenever journalists assist in the identification of anonymous sources.⁷⁸ In conclusion, the ECtHR found that there was an interference.⁷⁹

⁷⁵ Sanoma (n 12) paras 33, 54 and 55.

⁷⁶ Sanoma (n 12) 64.

⁷⁷ Financial Times Ltd and Others v the United Kingdom App no 821/03 (ECtHR, 15 December 2009).

⁷⁸ ibid para 71. While it is true that no search or seizure took place in the present case, the Court emphasises that a chilling effect will arise wherever journalists are seen to assist in the identification of anonymous sources (mutatis mutandis, Financial Times Ltd and Others (n 77) para 70).

⁷⁹ Financial Times Ltd and Others (n 77) para 72.

It then assessed whether this interference was provided by law (as demanded by Article 10(2) of the Convention). In that context – in line with settled case-law – the ECtHR also assessed the quality of the law. The ECtHR ruled that the quality of the Dutch law was deficient in that there was no procedure attended by adequate legal safeguards for the applicant company in order to enable an independent assessment as to whether the interest of the criminal investigation overrode the public interest in the protection of journalistic sources. Other than was provided by Dutch law, an assessment by a judge prior to the search and seizure that may lead to disclosure of sources had to be provided, as an assessment after a search or seizure had taken place would undermine the very essence of the right to confidentiality:

Although the public prosecutor, like any public official, is bound by requirements of basic integrity, in terms of procedure he or she is a “party” defending interests potentially incompatible with journalistic source protection and can hardly be seen as objective and impartial so as to make the necessary assessment of the various competing interests.⁸⁰

Thus, as the interference was not prescribed by (a qualitative) law, a violation of Article 10 of the Convention was found.⁸¹

8.2.3. Telegraaf

In the Telegraaf Media c.s. case⁸², the Supreme Court balanced the interest in the disclosure and the interest in non-disclosure with, in particular, regard for the possibilities concerning reasonable alternative measures.⁸³ The case concerned an order for the newspaper De Telegraaf to surrender documents to the State, which could identify journalistic sources. The documents were leaked by an employee of the AIVD. Furthermore, the public prosecutor had used phone-tapping and computer data as evidence to convict the source. The Court of Appeal had stated that no law forbids the use of intelligence to ascertain someone’s identity. The Supreme Court balanced the interests at stake and ruled that there was no violation of human rights, because the conviction was necessary in light of national security. However, the ECtHR had a different view. It concluded that these practices can have a chilling effect on sources’ willingness to come forward with information, finding in particular that the relevant law in the Netherlands had not provided appropriate safeguards in respect of the powers of surveillance used against them, with a view to discovering their journalistic sources. The need to identify the secret services official(s) who had supplied the secret documents to the applicants had not justified the order to surrender documents. The ECtHR concluded that this goal could have been attained by using less far-reaching and invasive measures. For instance, the substance of the document could have been carefully examined for more information regarding the source and internal access to the ⁸⁰ Financial Times Ltd and Others (n 77) para 93.

⁸¹ Financial Times Ltd and Others (n 77) para 100.

⁸² Telegraaf (n 14).

⁸³ Telegraaf (n 14).

documents could be monitored to see who could have obtained and leaked the documents. Secondly, the government contended that the documents should be handed over, in order to prevent the information from falling into the wrong hands. However, it is highly unlikely that this measure would still have the desired effect, as the documents had been circulating for quite a while. Moreover, the AIVD could have ordered that the documents be destroyed – it was not necessary to demand that they return to the AIVD. The ECtHR concluded that there were no ‘relevant and sufficient reasons’ to justify a violation of the applicant’s rights under Article 10 ECHR.

8.3. Other Case-Law

Some national cases relating to the protection of journalistic sources have not reached the ECtHR. Yet, it can be doubted whether the (outcome of the) balancing act performed by the Dutch courts in some of these cases has been in line with the case law of the ECtHR. The three cases discussed below, could be considered questionable in the light of the ECtHR case-law.

8.3.1. Karin Bloemen/Audax

In 2004, a Dutch magazine was ordered to disclose its source in a case concerning the publication of paparazzi pictures of a topless Dutch celebrity.⁸⁴ Despite the fact that the magazine invoked its right of protection of sources, the deciding court was of the opinion that disclosure was necessary to prohibit possible future infringements of the right to privacy of the celebrity. The court of appeal later confirmed this judgment.⁸⁵ A controversial consideration that led the court to decide to demand disclosure of the source had to do with the (alleged) low level of newsworthiness of the publication.⁸⁶

On appeal, Audax contested the relevance of this consideration by referring to the ECtHR Goodwin judgment in which the ECtHR has considered that ‘a source may provide information of little value one day and of great value the next’.⁸⁷ This could indicate that the newsworthiness of the supplied information/photos is irrelevant for the answer to the question to what extent a source can enjoy protection. However, without any further clarification, the Court of Appeal ruled that this does not apply to someone who, with the aim of making profit, secretly makes pictures of (naked) visitors of a hotel.⁸⁸

⁸⁴ Plaintiff v Audax Publishing B.V. [2003] Rechtbank Amsterdam published online <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBAMS:2003:AL8451>> [2003].

⁸⁵ Audax Publishing B.V. (n 41).

⁸⁶ ibid para 14.

⁸⁷ Goodwin (n 2) para 37.

⁸⁸ Audax Publishing B.V. (n 86) para 4.15.

The extent to which these aforementioned factors should be relevant can be questioned. The reason for this is that it is questionable whether one may expect of sources that they (always) have complete insight on the newsworthiness of the information they supply. In addition, it should be noted that the newsworthiness of information is for an important part influenced by the final form of the publication and the time that the final publication is published. However, sources usually do not exercise any (extensive) control on the final form and time of the publication. Under these circumstances, attribution of relevance to the newsworthiness of the final publication could lead to a chilling effect on potential sources and would therefore contradict ECtHR case-law.

8.3.2. Van Heest / De Limburger

A second judgment is not so much suspected of granting insufficient protection to the non-disclosure right, but, instead, overprotecting it. This – in some eyes⁸⁹ – unnecessarily broad protection could violate the right to a fair trial and/or the right to privacy of others.

The case concerned alleged unlawful allegations in a newspaper (De Limburger). In an article in the newspaper, it was written that neighbours of a certain politician had described the politician as a 'psychological terrorist'. In appeal, the court focused on the question whether these allegations actually had been made. In order to substantiate the truth of the allegations made in the publication, the newspaper asked one of the attendees of a meeting in the neighbourhood in question to testify. This witness then confirmed that neighbours had made statements as described in the publication at that meeting. Subsequently, the plaintiff asked the witness about the identity of these persons. The newspaper then objected and demanded that the witness would not have to answer this question, as this could lead to the identification of journalistic sources. The examining judge accepted the complaint made by the newspaper and prevented the witness from answering this question. In that context, the judge considered that, under the circumstances of the case, the protection granted by Article 10 of the Convention to the newspaper had to prevail above the right to a fair process and the right to privacy of the plaintiff. If he would not prevent the witness from answering, this would most certainly lead to the identification of journalistic sources, which could have a chilling effect on potential, future sources. The examining judge found that there were no sufficient reasons to make such an interference with Article 10 of the Convention necessary.⁹⁰

What is interesting about this case is that the testifying witness did not invoke the right of non-disclosure himself. In addition, the witness had no professional relationship with the journalist. The judge solely prevented him from answering because he, the source and the journalist had been at the same meeting at the same time. Scholars have emphasised that this is a very broad interpretation of the right of non-disclosure. It has been advocated that this outcome could infringe the right to a fair trial or the right to privacy of others. Korthals Altes, for instance, mentioned that it looked like the court(s) were of the opinion that the source of information of a journalist may not become known at all. In his eyes, they missed the fact that what actually matters is that journalists may not be forced to reveal their sources.⁹¹ The reason therefore is that this would have a chilling effect on possible, future sources. In the underlying case, however, it is questionable to what extent a chilling effect would actually occur. It can be put forward that it is unlikely that the answer of the witness would have caused a chilling effect on future sources. The reason for this is that it would be clear that 'real' future sources could be able to count on protection, whereas the 'source' in this case was only a (unknowing) attendee of a meeting on which a journalist had later based a publication. Under those circumstances, disclosure would not jeopardize the free flow of information and granting 'unnecessary' protection could therefore (possibly) infringe the plaintiff's right to a fair trial and/or privacy as protected by the Convention.

⁸⁹ Korthals Altes, Comment nr 12 on Van Heest/de Limburger B.V. (Mediaforum 2013).

⁹⁰ ibid para 3.3.4

8.3.3. AIVD source

A third and final questionable ruling concerned the prosecution of an employee of the AIVD who had leaked important state secret documents to a newspaper.⁹² In this case, the employee could not rely on journalistic source protection as the Supreme Court seemed to be of the opinion that the main goal of the right of non-disclosure is not so much to protect the source, but to protect the journalist. If the journalist would be forced to reveal his or her sources, these sources would feel less inclined to come forward with their information and it would severely hamper the functioning of that journalist. It can be doubted whether the focus on the journalist is correct. After all, Article 10 of the Convention is not so much about the protection of journalists as such, but primarily about the vital importance of maintaining a free flow of information within a democratic society. Already in its Goodwin judgment, the ECtHR has held that the rationale behind protection of journalistic sources is that sources must not be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest.⁹³ The focus on the journalist, rather than the effect on potential, future sources fail to recognize that rationale. However, it should also be mentioned that others have argued that the judgment is correct. Therefore, it can be concluded that there does not seem to exist any consensus concerning this judgment.⁹⁴

8.4. Conclusions

⁹¹ Altes (n 90)

⁹² Korthals Altes, Comment nr 16 on Van Heest/de Limburger B.V. (Mediaforum 2013).

⁹³ Goodwin (n 2).

⁹⁴ Korthals Altes, Comment nr 16 on case 13/01003 (Mediaforum 2015).

This Chapter has assessed whether the boundaries of the right of non-disclosure in the Netherlands are in line with ECtHR case law and the demands of principle 3 of Recommendation No 2000 (7). As the Dutch courts assess the lawfulness of an interference with the right of non-disclosure in a way equivalent to the ECtHR, it can be concluded that, in principle, the Dutch law provides a sufficient framework to balance the different interests and to comply with the ECHR standards. Nevertheless, several cases have shown that the existence of this framework does not mean that the outcome of the Dutch balancing act will always comply with Article 10 of the Convention. To illustrate this, a selection of case law was made. It was shown that in the past ten years, the ECtHR has ruled three times that the balancing act as performed by the Dutch courts led to an infringement of Article 10 of the Convention. In addition, three cases that could potentially not be in line with ECHR standards have been identified.

9. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

In order to identify journalists' sources of information, secret services dispose over a variety of competences. The execution of these competences is subjected to certain requirements. National legislation gives information of the competences as well as the criteria for its use. Therefore the focus will first be on national legislation and national case law. Afterwards, the quality of this legislation will be assessed based on criteria set by the ECtHR in a number of important cases.

9.1. Wiv: Competences & Application Criteria

The Wiv provides competences to the AIVD in paragraph 3.2.2 of chapter 3. These are:

Article 20(1) Wiv	conduct surveillance relating to the action of persons and objects with the aid of observation and registration instruments
Article 21(1) Wiv	deploy persons under cover of an assumed identity or capacity who are charged with the collection in a directed way information relating to persons and organisations that can be relevant to the performance of the tasks of the service

Article 22(1) Wiv	conduct a search of enclosed spaces, closed objects and to conduct an investigation of objects aimed at establishing a person's identity
Article 23(1) Wiv	open letters and other consignments without the consent of the sender or the addressee
Article 24(1) Wiv	enter an automated work which also includes the powers to penetrate any security and to introduce technical devices to undo the encryption of data stored or processed in the automated work
Article 25(1) Wiv	tap, receive, record and monitor any form of conversation, telecommunication or data transfer by means of an automated work
Article 26(1) Wiv	receive and record non-cable-bound telecommunication originating from or intended for other countries, on the basis of a technical characteristic to monitor the communication. This includes the power to undo the encryption of the telecommunication
Article 27(1) Wiv	receive and record non-specific non-cable-bound telecommunication. This includes the power to undo the encryption of the telecommunication
Article 28(1) Wiv	turn to providers of public telecommunication networks and public telecommunication services with the request to furnish information on a user and telecommunication traffic relating to this user
Article 29(1) Wiv	turn to providers of public telecommunication networks and public telecommunication services with the request to furnish information relating to the name, address, postcode, place of residence and type of service relating to a user of telecommunication

Article 30(1) Wiv	access any place as long as it is reasonably necessary for the execution of the competences in Articles 20, 22, 24 and 25

The Wiv subjects the application of these competences to a number of requirements. In subsection 2 of Articles 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30 Wiv it is stated that the competences laid down in these paragraphs do not require a permission of the relevant minister or the head of the service on behalf of the minister, in the sense of Article 19(1) Wiv. On the contrary, the second limb of Articles 20, 22 and 25 Wiv explicitly requires a written permission by the responsible minister to the head of the service in advance to execute these particular competences.

The requirement to receive permission of a higher instance (or not) in advance is just one requirement which is imposed on national level by the Wiv. It can be stated that this requirement can be applied rather easily in practice: either a permission needs to be given or not. But the Wiv also imposes other requirements which proper application is less obvious.

Firstly, Article 6(2)(a) Wiv states that the AIVD has the tasks to conduct investigation regarding organisations and persons who give cause for serious suspicion that they are a danger to the democratic legal system or the security of other vital interests of the state. Furthermore, according to (c), it has to promote measures to protect these interests. This Article forms the baseline. Any measure, based on the Wiv, which the AIVD wants to carry out needs to be in line with the tasks mentioned in Article 6(2). To guarantee this the responsible minister is obliged to report the activities of the AIVD to both chambers of the national parliament (Article 8 Wiv).

Article 6 Wiv clarifies that the AIVD cannot use its competences with levity. The person (or organization) has to be suspected of a crime which forms a serious danger to democracy or other state-interests. In theory, every crime can form a danger to the state. In practice it can be stated, that a certain level of seriousness is necessary to fulfill this requirement (e. g. terrorism, drug-trafficking etc.).

Secondly, Article 12(1) Wiv authorises the AIVD to process information. This processing of data only takes place to achieve a certain goal and only if necessary for a proper execution of this act or the Wet veiligheidsonderzoeken (the Dutch Security Investigation Act) (subsection 2), which entails specific rules with regard to the manner how safety investigations have to be conducted. Furthermore, the processing needs to take place in accordance with the law and with proper and due care (subsection 3).

Thirdly, Article 13 Wiv states that the processing of personal data through the AIVD can among others only be conducted with regards to people, who give rise to the serious suspicion for being a danger to the democratic legal system or to the security or other vital interests of the state (a).

Fourthly, Article 18 Wiv refers back to Article 6(2)(a) and makes clear that any measure based on this Act can only be carried out for the security of the democratic society or other important state interests.

Lastly, Articles 31 and 32 should be mentioned. Article 31 Wiv states that the execution of one of the competences is only permitted, if the intended collection of data cannot take place by consulting publicly accessible sources of information or sources of information for which the service has been granted a right to inspect the information contained in said sources (subsection 1). Furthermore, it is stated that only the competence is executed which, based on the circumstances of the case, causes least harm to the person involved (subsection 2) and that there is no execution at all, if it causes disproportionate harm in comparison with the intended objective of the action (subsection 3). Subsection 4 states that the execution of a power must be proportionate to the intended objective of the action. Article 32 Wiv finally states that the execution of a power will be immediately terminated if the objective to which the power was exercised has been accomplished, or exercising of a less far-reaching power is sufficient. The question whether these requirements are fulfilled in a particular case is often difficult to answer and depends on the facts of the case. Therefore it should be clear what the different terms entail and how they have to be applied in practice. This concerns the quality of the law which will be accessed by the application of criteria set in case law of the ECtHR.

9.2. ECtHR: Quality of the National Legislation

The ECtHR has tested the quality of national legislation in different cases. In the following the accessibility, precision, foreseeability and clarity of the Dutch legislation will be examined based on ECHR norms which have been set in four important cases in the field of data protection and in the light of recommendations given in the report ‘Ten standards for oversight and transparency of national intelligence services’ published by the Institute of Information Law of the University of Amsterdam.⁹⁵ In all cases, the applicant alleged a violation of Article 8 ECHR which entails the right to private life and allows interference only if it is in accordance with the law, necessary in a democratic society and (among others) in the interest of the national security or public safety.

9.2.1. Accessibility

The case Shimovolos v Russia concerned the registration of a human rights activist in a ‘surveillance database’, which gathered information about his movements. The ECtHR held that the database in which the name had been registered had been created on the basis of a ministerial order which had not been published and was not accessible to the public. People could not find out why individuals were registered, for how long information about them was being kept, what type of information it considered, how the information was stored, how it was used and who had control over it.⁹⁶ In this case the ECtHR set out criteria to assess the accessibility of a

⁹⁵ Sarah Eskens et al, Ten standards for oversight and transparency of national intelligence services (University of Amsterdam, Institute for Information Law 2015).

⁹⁶ Shimovolos v Russia App no 30194/09 (ECtHR, 21 June 2011) para 69.

‘surveillance database’. Although the Wiv is a statutory law (and therefore differs from a ‘database’) the Institute of Information and Law has addressed the case Shimovolos v Russia in its report, stating that also statute law should indicate the procedures on secret surveillance and data collection.⁹⁷ The Wiv and the included competences can be openly accessed by the public. It can be assumed that the national law meets the criteria of accessibility.

9.2.2. Precision

In Rotaru v Romania, the applicant alleged that it was impossible to refute, what he claimed to be false information, in a file on him kept by the Romanian Intelligence Service. In 1948, he was sentenced to imprisonment for having expressed criticism of the communist regime. In this case, no provision defined the kind of information that could be recorded, the categories of people against whom surveillance measures could be taken, the circumstances in which such measures could be taken, the applicable procedure, the age of the held information or the length of time for which it could be kept. Furthermore, there existed no explicit provision concerning the persons authorised to consult the files, the procedure to be followed or the use that could be made of the obtained information. Therefore, the Court considered that the national law did not indicate with reasonable clarity the scope and manner of discretion conferred on the public authorities.⁹⁸ With regard to the Wiv, it is fair to say that the legislative norms and procedure set out in this act are sufficiently precise. People are enabled to understand what precisely the law entails and what they can expect, which leads to the next point: foreseeability.

9.2.3. Foreseeability

In Malone v UK, the applicant was charged with several offences. He complained about the interception of his postal and telephone communications. The ECtHR held that the quality of the law, does not have to be such that an individual should be enabled to foresee when his communications are likely to be intercepted so that he can adapt his conduct accordingly. But the law must be sufficiently clear to give citizens in general an adequate indication as to the circumstances in which and the conditions on which public authorities are empowered to resort to this interference of the right to respect for private life.⁹⁹ This case established that the powers of secret surveillance and data collection should be transparent.¹⁰⁰ Article 6 of the Wiv states that the AIVD is competent to conduct surveillance measures with regards to people or organisations which have the following characteristics: through their activities they give cause to the serious suspicion that they are a danger to the continued existence of the democratic legal system, or to the security of other vital interests of the state. To be able to foresee the ⁹⁷ Eskens (n 96) 28.

⁹⁸ Rodica Mihaela Rotaru v Romania App no 28341/95 (ECtHR, 4 May 2000) para. 61.

⁹⁹ Malone v the United Kingdom (1984) Series A no 82, para 67.

¹⁰⁰ Eskens (n 96) p 27.

application of these measures the person concerned needs to know when he or she is under a serious suspicion. The term 'serious suspicion' is a higher requirement than just an indication, which is, according to Article 126Zd Sv, required to enable the police to conduct surveillance measures against suspected terrorists.¹⁰¹ This bridges the gap to the next point.

9.2.4. Clarity of Legislative Norms

Kruslin v France concerned telephone tapping in a murder case. The court stated that tapping and other forms of interception of telephone conversations represent a serious interference with private life and correspondence and must accordingly be based on a 'law' that is particularly precise. It is essential to have clear and detailed rules on the subject.¹⁰² In its report, the Institute of Information Law has set out standards which are similar to the ones mentioned above. The eighth norm states that Intelligence services and their supervising bodies should provide layered transparency, meaning that the individual concerned should be informed and that there is an adequate level of openness about intelligence activities. The ninth guideline states that individuals should be able to receive and access information about surveillance – this includes clear legislation and access to information about surveillance, which must provide for a framework for oversight and support of public scrutiny.¹⁰³ It is of utmost importance to examine how the AIVD exercises its competences in practice. Based on the cases of the ECtHR and the guidelines of the report, one can state that the Wiv can, in theory, be regarded to be in line with these requirements. Nevertheless, recent national developments draw a different picture.

9.3. National Development

Supreme Court in the De Telegraaf-case, had to answer whether evidence, which were obtained illegally from a journalist can still be used against a source of the same journalist – in other words: can a journalist's source itself invoke the journalist's right of protection of sources (Article 10 ECHR)?

The Supreme Court stated, and thereby confirmed the judgement of the Dutch Appeal Court (Gerechtshof), that the right of the protection of sources does not apply to the employee of the AIVD and that he, based on his function, was obliged to keep certain information secret. That certain surveillance measures were regarded as disproportionate was not an extraordinary circumstance which can justify the leaking by the employee.¹⁰⁴ This case limits the right of protection of journalistic sources and widens the scope of the competences stated in the Wiv. It deals with illegally obtained information through a surveillance measure by the AIVD, which ¹⁰¹ Aleid Wolfsen, Terrorismebestrijding en de rechtsstaat in Arjen van Witteloostuijn (ed), Veiligheid, tot welke prijs? (S&D 2007) 51 [Dutch].

¹⁰² Kruslin v France (1990) Series A no 176-A, para 33.

¹⁰³ Eskens (n 96) ii.

¹⁰⁴ Telegraaf (n 14) para 27.

nevertheless was used in an investigation. The court distinguished between the journalist and his source. While the journalist is protected, his source does not enjoy the same protection. Even if information has been obtained illegally with regard to the journalist, it can still be used against the source. It is possible that higher interests of the state prevent a journalistic source from relying on Article 10 ECHR. This widens the scope of the application of measures imposed based on the Wiv.

Other developments on the national level head for another direction (one can argue that this is an effort to strengthen the protection of journalistic sources again after the Telegraaf case). As already mentioned earlier in this report, the application of the Wiv to protect journalistic sources issued in December 2015 explicitly refers to the competences given to the AIVD in paragraph 3.2.2 Wiv in Article 2(b) Toepassing Wiv. According to Article 3(1) Toepassing Wiv the minister has to ask an independent committee for advice before he or the chief of the service give permission to the execution of a competence from paragraph 3.2.2 Wiv. According to Article 3(2) Toepassing Wiv the committee reviews the case based on the law and if it provides a depreciative advice, the minister or the chief of the service are obliged to decline the requested permission.

9.4. Conclusions

The Wiv guarantees the AIVD a wide range of competences. The act itself is in line with the requirements of the ECHR and can be regarded as accessible, precise, foreseeable and it includes clear legislative norms. The Telegraaf-case has broadened the competences of the AIVD with regards to journalistic sources. The application of the Wiv to protect journalistic sources can be regarded as an effort to again set limitations to the competences of the AIVD.

10. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

Since March 2007, the Netherlands are party to the Convention on Cybercrime (CCC), drawn up by the Council of Europe. The Conventions lists a number of cybercrimes and states in article 13 that the parties should enact national rules to punish these offences. Therefore, amongst others, the CCC requires its parties to adopt measures to empower its competent authorities to search or access a computer system and data stored therein (article 19).

The Netherlands has given its authorities a number computer-related investigatory powers (also in order to fulfill the requirements of the CCC). Generally, a frequently used threshold for the application of investigatory powers is that the suspected crime allows pre-trial detention (article 67, para. 1 under a) and b) Sn). This is the case with most cybercrimes and it can be stated, that the whole range of traditional investigatory powers can be used, including several specific computer-related investigation techniques.¹⁰⁵

Since January 2006 a judge can order someone to provide data, if these data had a certain relationship to the crime or the suspect.¹⁰⁶ Article 126nc Sv gives any investigating officer in case of a crime the competence to order identifying data (e.g. name, address etc.), article 126nd Sv gives the public prosecutor in cases for which pre-trial detention the competence to order other data (including future data) and article 126nf Sv allows the judge in cases of a pre-trial detention crime that seriously infringes the rule of law to order sensitive data (e.g. health, sexual orientation, religion). As required by the CCC, article 126ni Sv enables the public prosecutor in case of pre-trial detention crimes and those who seriously infringe the rule of law to order the preservation of data which is particularly vulnerable to loss or change.¹⁰⁷

These orders can generally be given to people who process the data in a professional capacity, and, only with regards to the last two categories, also for personal use – with journalists falling within the first category of people. Suspects cannot be asked to provide data. According to article 126nh Sv the people targeted by the order can be forced to decrypt encrypted data.¹⁰⁸

11. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

11.1. Introduction

This chapter examines the protection of whistle-blowers, specifically by considering legal provisions shielding journalistic sources. It will be demonstrated whether there exists explicit protection for whistle blowers under law protecting journalistic sources and whether there is another practice protecting whistle-blowers. It will also be examined whether there exists legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers.

11.2. Current Legislation

105 Kooops B.-J, 'Cybercrime Legislation in the Netherlands' [2010] Electronic Journal of Comparative Law, vol. 14.3; 16.

106 ibid 16.

107 ibid 17.

108 ibid 17.

11.2.1. Absence of General Legislative Protection and the Advice Centre for Whistle-blowers

Presently, there is no general legislation protecting whistle-blowers in the Netherlands directed at journalistic sources or otherwise. However, it is important to highlight the draft introduced by several Dutch opposition parties in 2012: 'Huis voor de Klokkenluiders' ("House for the whistle-blowers" or "House"). This bill would seek to create legislative means to report misconduct, by enabling the investigation of such practices and to improve protection for whistle-blowers.¹⁰⁹

Until this draft enters into force a stopgap has been created under the 'Whistle-blower Advice and Referral Commission Temporary Decree' as a (temporary) measure. This takes the form of an Advice Centre for Whistle-blowers. The Dutch Ministry of Interior and Kingdom Relations has put this institution in place.¹¹⁰ It is an independent organisation that advises and supports workers in the private and public sector on reporting concerns about wrongdoing. Its services are confidential and free of charge.

Under Article 3 of the Temporary Decree, the Advice Centre must, on request, provide information, advice, and offer support with possible follow-up steps to anyone who suspects malpractices detrimental to the public interest.¹¹¹ This applies to information obtained by this person from businesses or organisations where that person has worked or such entities of which that person has obtained knowledge through his/her work. Furthermore, the Advice Centre is tasked with identifying trends and patterns from this information that cannot be traced back to an individual and to communicate its findings to the relevant organisations. Also the Advice Centre must provide general information about dealing with suspected abuses. It is interesting to note that the implicit scope of the term 'whistle-blower' is thereby confined to persons who obtain information detrimental to the public interest through his or her work. Persons who obtain information through other means are therefore not included in the task of the Advice Centre.

The Advice Centre will cease to exist on July 1 2016, unless the Temporary Decree is renewed.¹¹² This has occurred before, due to the delayed parliamentary process of the 'Huis voor de ¹⁰⁹ Bill proposed by Van Raak, Fokke, Koşer Kaya, Segers, Thieme, Klein en Voortman on the establishment of a House for whistle-blowers [Kamerstukken II, 2012-13, 33258, no 2 and no 3, 1-2]. This was later amended several times, most notably by special senatorial legislative procedure (nouvelle). To the latter see: New bill by Van Raak, Fokke, Koşer Kaya, Segers, Thieme, Klein en Voortman on the establishment of a House for whistle-blowers [Kamerstukken I, 2014-15, 34105, no A].

¹¹⁰ Decision of 27 September 2011 regarding the constitution of the Commissie advies- en verwijspunt klokkenluiden [Tijdelijk besluit Commissie advies- en verwijspunt klokkenluiden Staatsblad 2011/427]

¹¹¹ ibid 7. However, the legislator refers for further information to the Dutch Labour Foundation's statement on malpractices discussed in paragraph 9.2.3.

¹¹² Decree of May 22, 2015, amending the Temporary Commission Decision advisory and referral point on whistleblowing and the Decree governing bodies WNo and WOB in connection with change of the date of Klokkenluiders' draft law. However, as the latter has been approved by the legislator, a further renewal of the former is not to be expected.

11.2.2. Protection for Specific Public Sectors

Apart from the general assistance offered to whistle blowers by the Advice Centre, there exist specific safeguards for civil servants. Governmental employers have since 2003 been obligated to arrange for the safe reporting of suspicions of misconduct under Article 125 quinquies, paragraph 1, section f and paragraph 2 of the Central and Local Government Personnel Act.

11.2.2.1. CENTRAL GOVERNMENT ORGANS, POLICE AND MILITARY

This obligation has led the Central Dutch government, Police, and the Military to issue Decrees that introduced safeguards for civil servants working for these organisations.¹¹³ The explanatory memoranda to these decrees explain that reliability and integrity are indispensable for a properly functioning government. Misconduct detracts from this and should be prevented and where applicable must be ended. In order to do so the Decrees provide a number of measures that apply to civil servants that work or previously worked at the mentioned governmental bodies. This includes employees under civil¹¹⁴ and/or temporary contract.¹¹⁵

A suspicion of misconduct is defined by Article 1, paragraph 1e of the Decrees as: a suspicion on reasonable grounds of (1) an infringement of legal or policy rules; (2) a danger for public health, security, or the environment; or (3) the improper acting or failing to act, that constitutes a danger for the functioning of the public service.

In order to report suspected malpractice, potential whistle blowers must, in principle, report the relevant facts internally, unless this cannot be reasonably expected of him/her or is contrary to the public interest. There is a specific whistle-blower complaints body for the public sector, the Onderzoeksraad Integriteit Overheid (Council on Integrity in the public sector). This body investigates whether an internal report of suspected misconduct was justified and whether proper procedures were adhered to. If this cannot be reasonably expected, the whistle-blower can report the facts to an external entity proportional to the situation. The Advice Centre is seen as the route most expiration of the Temporary Commission Decision counseling and referral point whistleblowing [Staatsblad 2015/202].

¹¹³ Article 1(1)e Notification of suspected wrongdoing by Government and Police [Staatsblad 2009/572]; Article 126g

Report Decision suspected wrongdoing at the Ministry of Defence [Staatsblad 2010/706].

¹¹⁴ Dutch civil servant employment contracts (for the moment remain to) have special status in the Netherlands. However, there exists a proposal that aims to change this for most civil servants. See for current wording: Initiative Bill by Van Weyenberg and Keijzer on the Act of normalization of legal officials [Kamerstukken I, 32 550, nr A].

¹¹⁵ Staatsblad 2010/706 (n 111) 10.

suited to report governmental misconduct by civil servants. Reporting to the media is seen as a last resort. This is reflected by the absence of any mentioning of reporting to external bodies not appointed by the government body. If the malpractice persists despite repeated reports a situation may arise in which the employee will be justified to contact the media in that case.¹¹⁶

11.2.2.2. LOCAL AUTHORITIES: PROVINCES, MUNICIPALITIES, AND WATER BOARDS

The Vereniging Nederlandse Gemeenten (Association of Netherlands Municipalities), Unie van Waterschappen (The Dutch Water Authorities) and the Interprovinciaal Overleg (Association of Provinces of the Netherlands)¹¹⁷ have all drafted their own model regulations to protect whistle-blowers and to guarantee the possibility to safely report suspected misconduct.¹¹⁸ Their members must make provisions for protecting whistle-blowers. To this end, they can make use of the model, but are not obliged to do so.

These regulations to a large extent mirror the Decrees at the national level. Confidentiality safeguards are put in place by protecting the identity of the whistle-blower.¹¹⁹ Whistle-blowers are required to have reasonable grounds for their suspicions, and are obliged to report the potential misconduct internally first. To the latter, the model regulations indicate that internal reports can be made to officially appointed confidential contact persons, or the external independent committee appointed by the competent authority.¹²⁰ The regulations do not indicate the possibility for whistle-blowers to report suspected misconduct to parties other than entities officially appointed by government bodies.

11.2.3. Scant Protection in the Private Sector

The Dutch Corporate Governance Code (de Code Tabaksblat) states in paragraph II.1.7 that publicly listed companies are obliged to provide a mechanism that allows employees to report “alleged irregularities of a general, operational and financial nature within the company to the chairman of the management board or to an official designated by him, without jeopardising their legal position.” These arrangements for whistle-blowers shall be posted on the company’s

¹¹⁶ Dutch response to the Call for Submissions on the Protection of Sources and Whistle-blowers by the UN Special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, David Kaye. Digital source: <www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Opinion/Protection/Netherlands.docx> accessed 6 April 2016.

¹¹⁷ The associations for respectively Dutch Municipalities, Waterboards, and Provincial Authorities.

¹¹⁸ VNO, Modified Example Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse in 2013 [Gewijzigde Voorbeeldregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand 2013]; UvW, Model Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse and / or Regional Water Integrity Violation [Modelregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand en/of Integriteitschending Waterschappen].

¹¹⁹ Article 2 Voorbeeldregeling VNG; Article 16 Modelregeling UvW; Article 11 Procedureregeling IPO.

¹²⁰ See Article 1g Voorbeeldregeling VNG; Article 1e Modelregeling UvW; and Article 1 and 4 Procedureregeling IPO.

website. Furthermore, sector specific regulations exist where similar obligations are set out for banks, investment firms, and accountancy organisations.¹²¹

Beyond this, no general legislative obligation exists to protect whistle blowers in the private sector. Labour unions, together with the Dutch Labour Foundation, have set out a “Statement concerning methods for dealing with malpractices in companies”.¹²² This has been adopted by several companies. Apart from these self-regulatory instruments, the “Huis voor de Klokkenluiders” proposal would lay down a general requirement to adopt whistle-blower protection for all companies employing more than fifty persons.

11.2.4. A Legislative Look to the Future: The ‘Huis voor de Klokkenluiders’ Draft Law

The Netherlands is one of a few European states that are momentarily actively pursuing legislative protection for whistle-blowers.¹²³ After an unsuccessful earlier attempt to regulate protection of whistleblowing,¹²⁴ seven parliamentarians¹²⁵ initiated the procedure for a private members bill¹²⁶ to provide more comprehensive protection for whistle-blowers.¹²⁷ To do so, it would aim at providing conditions for reporting misconduct within organisations by enabling investigation and furnishing whistle-blowers with better protection.

To achieve this goal the parliamentarians wish to establish a House for the Whistle-blowers. This institution is to conduct investigations into suspicions of societal misconduct (‘maatschappelijke misstanden’) and will make recommendations to resolve problems. The explanatory memorandum to the proposal¹²⁸ states that the definition of such conduct should be based on the Dutch Labour Foundation’s statement on malpractices and the Decrees relating to central government organs and the police.¹²⁹ Therefore the term should include harm to the public interest in cases where there is: 1) infringement of a legal act; 2) danger to public health, 3) safety of persons, 4)

¹²¹ ‘Adviespunt Klokkenluiders’ (2013) <<https://www.adviespuntklokkenluiders.nl/bescherming/>> accessed 05 May 2016.

¹²² English version available at: <http://www.stvda.nl/en/~/_media/files/stvda/talen/engels/2012/20120829_en.ashx> accessed 05 May 2016.

¹²³ Paul Stephenson and Michael Levi, Principes van klokkenluiden: de benadering van de Raad van Europa (Bomm Lemma 2013) 94-95 [Dutch].

¹²⁴ Kamerstukken II, 2003/04, 28990, nr 2.

¹²⁵ Six members of the opposition (Van Raak (SP), Koşer Kaya (D66), Voortman (GroenLinks), Segers (ChristenUnie), Thieme (PvdD), and Klein (independent)). The Bill was co-drafted by MP Fokke (PvdA) representing the ruling Dutch Labour Party.

¹²⁶ Kamerstukken II 34105 (n 106) nr 2.

¹²⁷ Dutch MP’s can take the initiative in drafting legislation. Although not unheard of the usual procedure is to leave the initiative to the cabinet.

¹²⁸ Kamerstukken II 33258 (n 106) nr 3, 7.

¹²⁹ Respectively discussed in paragraphs 7.2.3 and 7.2.2.1.

the environment, or 5) the proper functioning of the public service as result of careless misconduct or failure to act.

When asked, the House will advise and support the person or entity seeking to report the misconduct. The House shall reside under the legal power of the Dutch National Ombudsperson, but is open to reports from both public and private sectors. It will report its findings yearly.¹³⁰ The House will consist of an Advisory department and an Investigating department.¹³¹ The Advisory department gives information to potential whistle-blowers and aids in the transfer of information to the relevant public watchdog.¹³² Information can be given before or after the suspicion has been reported internally.¹³³ Furthermore, the Advisory department gives general advice to the public about dealing with misconduct.¹³⁴ The Investigations department can investigate both public and private organisations.¹³⁵ In each case the department publishes a report of the investigation. The organisation receives a draft four weeks in advance of the publication to allow for the organisation to declare whether certain information is sensitive to the internal workings of the organisation.¹³⁶

The proposal does not give an explicit definition of the word whistle-blower but states that: 'employees who suspect societal misconduct can report to the House for the Whistle-blowers.'¹³⁷ Their protection would be set out in a single phrase. Article 18 would state that the Dutch civil code would have to be adapted to include an article stating: 'The employer may not disadvantage the employee in response to reporting – in good faith and conform procedure - a suspicion of misconduct [...] during or after the processing this complaint by the employer or the organisation charged with this task.'¹³⁸ This would include taking disciplinary steps, withholding raises in pay or promotions, and/or termination of employment contracts. Reporting in good faith includes – as is practice under the current protection scheme – first reporting the suspicions internally before reporting them to the House. This principle is equally important in order to conform to 'procedure.' In order to have done so, civil servants are expected to have conducted themselves carefully (both procedurally and in substance). For privately employed persons this norm corresponds to the procedures of the Statement concerning methods for dealing with malpractices in companies, referenced above. For further interpretation of the 'good faith'

¹³⁰ Article 17c.

¹³¹ Article 3a(1).

¹³² Article 3a(2), section a, b and c.

¹³³ Kamerstukken II 34105 (n 106) nr 3, 19-20.

¹³⁴ Article 3a(2), section c.

¹³⁵ However, the House has more far-reaching investigatory competences in case of suspected public malfeasances.

¹³⁶ This has the disadvantage that the reaction to this declaration is published in the final report. This leads to the possibility of extra focus on the content to which a denied request pertains. See thereto: Marjolijn Lips and Vonne Laan, Verplichte introductie klokkenluidersregeling en rechtsbescherming klokkenluider (Van Doorne 2016) [Dutch].

¹³⁷ Kamerstukken II 33258 (n 106) nr 3, 3.

¹³⁸ Literal translation by the author as no official English version is currently available.

criterion the legislator refers to jurisprudence, in particular the case-law of the ECtHR regarding Article 10 ECHR.¹³⁹

Under the new draft, provisions would be included to set out admissibility criteria for complaints to the House. In regard to the conformity to procedure, the proposed bill places emphasis on the internal procedure. Article 6(1) subsection d) of the draft states that if the organisation has 'properly' dealt with the internal complaint, the complaint is not admissible for subsequent procedures at the House. Only when it cannot be expected of the whistle blower to follow the internal procedure, a direct complaint to the House can be made.¹⁴⁰

Also, this bill would ensure that every organisation with fifty or more employees implements internal regulations to enable whistle-blowers. Such regulations must state which suspicions of misconduct can be reported, to whom such reports can be made, and what procedural steps must be adhered to. The organisation is obligated to deal with complaints confidentially. Also, organisations must provide opportunity for employees to consult an advisor. The regulations must further state how the organisation will report back to the complainant about the reported suspicions.¹⁴¹ The Dutch Senate unanimously passed the Bill on March 1 2016.¹⁴² At the time in which this contribution is being written, the entry into force of the new law was yet to be determined by Royal Decree.

The bill encountered quite substantial criticism and was amended several times before being adopted by the Dutch House of Representatives in December 2013. In its early drafts, the House had greater competences to conduct investigations into suspected misconduct. However, in order to respond to the parliamentary criticism, the House was changed in an entity that primarily refers complaints it receives to relevant public watchdogs. Some (parliamentary) critics see this change as a marginalisation of the House's role. If the House shall only function as a service-hatch for delivering complaints to existing public watchdogs, critics asked what added value the establishment of the House retains.¹⁴³ Academic literature reflects an appreciation for the efforts made to strengthen the position of whistle-blowers. However, it also reflects apprehension against the quick succession of different pieces of legislation and bodies that should protect or advice potential whistle-blowers.

¹³⁹ Kamerstukken II (n 132).

¹⁴⁰ Article 4(2).

¹⁴¹ Lips (n 135).

¹⁴² Voting results [Stemmingen] 1 March 2016, nr 21.

<https://www.eerstekamer.nl/stenogramdeel/20160301/huis_voor_klokkenluiders_novelle> accessed 05 May 2016.

¹⁴³ Albert Verdam, 'Wetsvoorstel Huis voor klokkenluiders: van melding aan Huis, naar melding aan toezichthouders' [2016] Tijdschrift voor Arbeid en Onderneming 1 [Dutch] 3-4.

11.3. Judicial Practice in the Netherlands and Compliance to the ECtHR Case-Law

11.3.1. Direct Protection

In recent years, the ECtHR clarified much in regard to whistle-blowers rights in Europe.¹⁴⁴ However, Dutch judicial practice on whistle-blowers remains varied. In most cases, courts acknowledge that Article 10 ECHR is at issue.¹⁴⁵ A case from 2014 a Rotterdam judge in preliminary relief proceedings can serve as a clear example thereof. The court assessed whether several factors from the Guja case (reporting, public interest, authenticity of information, potential damage, effect of making the information public) were satisfied.¹⁴⁶ The court subsequently ruled that the whistle-blower had satisfied these criteria and declared that the termination of the employee's labour contract should be annulled based on its contravention of Article 10, paragraph 2 ECHR.

This application of the ECHR (case) law by the Dutch judiciary should not be seen as surprising: Articles 93 and 94 of the Dutch Constitution compel the application of international norms in the Dutch legal system when the norms may be binding on all persons by virtue of their contents. Statutory regulations in force within the Netherlands shall not be applicable if in conflict with provisions of treaties or of resolutions by international institutions that are binding on all persons.¹⁴⁷ However, there are cases where Dutch courts do not mention the rights of whistle-blowers under Article 10 ECHR,¹⁴⁸ or even use the word 'whistle-blower' explicitly.¹⁴⁹ A clear line can therefore not yet be discovered and despite the fact that (lower) courts generally acknowledge this dimension related to the rights of whistle-blowers, parties in Dutch whistle-

¹⁴⁴ Fuentes Bobo v Spain App no 39293/98 (ECtHR, 29 February 2008); Guja v Moldova App no 14277/04 (ECtHR, 12 February 2008); Heinisch v Germany App no 28274/08 (ECtHR, 21 July 2011).

¹⁴⁵ Jens van den Brink and Emiel Jurgens, 'Bescherming van klokkenluiders onder artikel 10 EVRM' [2015] NJCM Bulletin 1 [Dutch] 14.

¹⁴⁶ Plaintiff v the Mayor of the City of Rotterdam [2014] Rechtbank Rotterdam TAR 2014 [2014] 57 [Dutch] para 22 et seq.

¹⁴⁷ For official English version see: <<https://www.government.nl/documents/regulations/2012/10/18/the-constitution-of-the-kingdom-of-the-netherlands-2008>> accessed 05 May 2016.

¹⁴⁸ Case 316844 / HA ZA 05-1541[2007] Rechtbank Amsterdam RF 2007 [2007] 18 [Dutch]; Case 12-6673 AW [2013] Centrale Raad van Beroep NJB 2013 [2013] 2630 [Dutch]; Quirijns v TGB [2012] Hoge Raad NJB 2012 [2012] 2254 [Dutch].

¹⁴⁹ Case 127383 / HA ZA 06-1498[2008] Rechtbank Zwolle-Lelystad published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBZLY:2008:BD2201>> [2008] [Dutch]; Case 200.010.214/01 [2010] Gerechtshof Arnhem published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:GHARN:2010:BN1847>> [2010] [Dutch]. This judgment was subsequently confirmed by the Dutch Supreme Court in Case 10/04884 [2012] Hoge Raad NJB 2012 [2012] 1220 [Dutch].

blower cases do not raise the issue of (constitutional) human rights.¹⁵⁰ Such cases then are often not fought along the lines of human rights protection.

Moreover, when human rights norms are used in judicial proceedings in final instance, the Supreme Court does not seem to weigh these aspects.¹⁵¹ The Dutch Supreme Court prefers to consider the issue in light of Article 7:611 of the Civil Code. In 2012 the Supreme Court ruled on the matter in the case *Quirijns v. TGB*¹⁵², in which an employee resigned from his position at the Theodoor Gillissen Bank because of misconduct by others at the bank. Before resigning, he informed a client of the bank, the bank's stakeholder and the public (financial) watchdog AFM. The Supreme Court made clear that the basic premise in Article 7:611 of the Civil Code entails that employees must in principle act discretely and loyally towards their employers. In the context of whistleblowing, internal reporting (or reporting in a form that is least damaging to the employer) is the norm. This principle extends to situations where the employee is convinced that misconduct exists within the organisation. Derogation from this could only occur where a legislative basis justifies revealing the information or when the suspected misconduct concerns leading figures in the organisation.¹⁵³ Thus, the Supreme Court follows the continuing trend in Dutch legislation on whistle-blowers regarding the importance of internal reporting. The Supreme Court, moreover, only examined Article 7:611 of the Civil Code, thereby not considering the case-law of the ECtHR.¹⁵⁴ Some commentators note that the Court itself thereby neglects its own criteria, set out in the case-law mentioned above.¹⁵⁵ However, it can be argued that the Supreme Court at least used parts of the case law by Strasbourg Court to give substance to Article 7:611 of the Civil Code. After all, the ECtHR also makes explicit reference to the employee's duty of loyalty, reserve and discretion to their employer and the importance of using the most discreet means of remedying the wrongdoing. However, by only making (implicit) reference to these aspect of the ECtHR's interpretation in Guja, the Supreme Court neglects the other factors of the ECtHR-balancing test. Thereby it did not completely clarify the legal position of Dutch whistle-blowers, nor did it fully – if at all – align its position with Strasbourg.¹⁵⁶ ¹⁵⁰ Franck van Uden, 'Klokkenluiden: verder van huis met het Huis (1)' [2013] ArbeidsRecht 18 [Dutch].

¹⁵¹ Meijer v De Schelde [2000] Hoge Raad NJ 2000 [2005] 430 [Dutch]; Greenpeace v Kotte [1995] Rechtsbank Amsterdam JAR 1995 [1995] 208 [Dutch].

¹⁵² Quirijns v TGB (n 147).

¹⁵³ Franck van Uden, 'Klokkenluiden: tour d'horizon,' in: Jan Brabers et al (eds), Vereniging van Handelsrecht, Preadvies 2015: Klokkenluiders in perspectief (Uitgeverij Paris 2015) [Dutch] 24.

¹⁵⁴ Case note by Inge de Laat regarding Quirijns v TGB (n 147).

¹⁵⁵ Franck van Uden (n 152) 24.

¹⁵⁶ ibid.

11.3.2. Indirect Protection

In regard to the ECtHR's case-law on the indirect protection of journalistic sources¹⁵⁷, the Dutch courts have followed the ECtHR and examined whether there was a public interest at stake that could override a journalist's right to protect its sources. In one case, the court implicitly followed the case law of the Strasbourg court by attaching special importance to the broadcaster's role as a public watchdog and the public's right to receive information.¹⁵⁸ Not only lower courts are of the opinion that indirect rights are enjoyed by whistle-blowers under Article 10 ECHR. The Dutch Supreme Court recently followed¹⁵⁹ the opinion by its Advocate-General Spronken.¹⁶⁰ The A.G. had made plain that protection of journalistic sources ex Article 10 ECHR should be applied broader than just protecting journalists from revealing their sources.

11.4. Implementation of Recommendation CM/Rec(2014)

In 2014, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted the Recommendation CM/Rec(2014). The Committee recommended 'that member States 'have in place a normative, institutional and judicial framework to protect individuals who, in the context of their work-based relationship, report or disclose information on threats or harm to the public interest.' In the appendix, the Committee included 'a series of principles to guide member States when reviewing their national laws or when introducing legislation and regulations or making amendments as may be necessary and appropriate in the context of their legal systems.' It is interesting to verify to what extent these principles are complied with by Dutch legislation, taking into account the proposal discussed earlier. Where the relation between Dutch law and specific factors of the recommendation is not discussed, compliance can be presumed.¹⁶¹

Heading II of the Recommendation relates to personal scope. The Committee refers to the work-based relationship, stating that no distinction should be made between paid and unpaid work. The Committee refers also to information that was gathered during the process of recruitment of employees. Applicable Dutch law do not make explicit provisions for these aspects, except in regard to (ex-)employees. Under Heading III, the Recommendation revolves around restrictions and exceptions which 'should be no more than necessary' of the rights of persons to report or disclose information in the public interest. Dutch practice by the legislator and the judiciary strongly emphasises the need to report internally and external communication is ¹⁵⁷ Nagla v Latvia App no 73469/10 (ECtHR, 16 July 2013) para 97; Tillack v Belgium App no 20477/05 (ECtHR 27 november 2007) para 53; Goodwin (n 2) para 39.

¹⁵⁸ Rejection of Appeal Ryanair LTD. V Katholieke Radio Omroep [2015] Gerechtshof Amsterdam NJF 2015 [2015] 372 [Dutch] paras 3.2, 3.14. and 3.17.

¹⁵⁹ Case The Netherlands v Defendant [2014] Hoge Raad published at <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:HR:2014:1777>> [2014] [Dutch].

¹⁶⁰ Opinion AG Spronken, 6 September 2014, The Netherlands v Defendant.

¹⁶¹ Or, where relevant, no applicable provisions exist that restrict freedoms referred to by the Recommendation.

seen as the very last resort. Depending on the interpretation of the Recommendation,¹⁶² this emphasis placed on internal reporting could be seen as derogating from Heading III to a certain extent. The duties mentioned in Heading VII of the Recommendation that relate to 'Protection against retaliation' have no explicit basis in Dutch law. However, the more general protection clause under Article 18 of the 'Huis voor de Klokkenluiders' bill can be considered to include such safeguards, as does the direct application of Article 10 ECHR.

11.5. Conclusions

By establishing the House for the Whistle-blowers, the Dutch Legislator has made protection of persons who wish to report misconduct more explicit. Also, more resources have been committed to the investigation and advice where suspicions of misconduct exist. General application by Dutch judges of ECtHR case-law regarding the direct protection of whistle-blowers under Article 10 ECHR cannot yet be established, also because parties often do not raise the issue themselves. However, it is possible (especially in lower courts) to see a convergence of case law towards a more consistent application of the criteria set out by the ECtHR. It remains to be seen whether the Supreme Court will apply the ECtHR's balancing test for direct protection of whistle-blowers under Article 10 ECHR to a fuller extent in future cases.

12. Summary

In this contribution, the applicable law and relevant developments relating to the protection of journalistic sources in the Netherlands have been described. With respect to the legal safeguards, it appears that there is no current legislation in place but there are two pending legislative proposals – Article 218a sv and Wiv. In order to remedy this, the government decided to provide a temporary mechanism for the Wiv. The term 'journalist' has not been defined yet in legal terms, but it turns out that the proposed scopes of the two legislative proposals differ, which has been subject of considerable debate.

Despite the lack of legislation defining the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources, the findings suggest that, for the most part, the limits of non-disclosure seem to be in line with the analysed principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. Generally, the authorities search for and apply alternative measures, which are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information. In principle, the Dutch law provides a sufficient framework to balance the different interests and to comply with the ECtHR standards. When assessing an interference with the right of non-disclosure of journalistic sources, Dutch courts apply the same test as contained in Article 10 ECHR and refer to case-law of the ECtHR. Nevertheless, several cases have shown that the existence of this framework does not mean that the outcome of the balancing act by the national courts will always comply with Article 10 of the Convention. In the past ten years, the ECtHR has ruled three times that the balance struck by the Dutch courts led to infringements of Article 10 ECHR and several other cases that could potentially not be in line with Article 10 ECHR and its interpretation by the Strasbourg court have been identified.

¹⁶² NB: point 24 of the Recommendation explicitly allows for the requirement to take into account the need for internal reporting schemes.

With regard to the use of electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, the AIVD derives a wide range of competences from the Wiv. In the light of the relevant case law of the ECtHR it can be stated that this act fulfils the requirements of accessibility, precision, and foreseeability, as well as that it includes legislative norms which can be labelled as clear and understandable. In the course of the Telegraaf case, the competences of the AIVD have been expanded further with regard to journalistic sources. However, the application of the Wiv to protect journalistic sources can be regarded as a counter-effort to set limitations to the competences of the AIVD.

Regarding whistle-blowers, steps have been taken to provide more explicit protection. Most recently this has taken the form of a law establishing the House for the Whistle-blowers. The institute will aid and advise whistle blowers in reporting societal misconduct and investigate alleged misdeeds. Self-regulation has regressed in the Netherlands in recent years. A number of sizable news outlets have renounced the authority of the Netherlands Press Council. Self regulatory bodies have thereby gained a more indirect impact on the protection of the rights of journalists, for instance as a credited source for defining concepts important to the judiciary.

13. Annex I: Self-Regulatory Mechanisms in the Netherlands

13.1. Dutch Institutes Furthering the Interests of Journalists

There are essentially two Dutch bodies that impact self-regulation of Dutch journalists. Firstly, the Netherlands Society of Chief Editors is a professional association. However it is not an interest group that formally represents all Dutch editorial boards. This, states the Society, would go against the independent position of these organisations. The Society presently has over one hundred members. In 2008 the Society of Chief Editors published the “Code voor de Journalistiek” (Code for Journalism). Its members are not in any way bound by the document. Its purpose is solely as a starting point for debate. It can nonetheless be seen as an expression of the views of the organisation. Concerning the protection of journalistic sources it states: *The journalist protects the sources to whom he has pledged confidentiality. [...] The journalist who bases himself on anonymous sources, must make plausible that the sources are reliable, the information could not be obtained in another way, and must have been verified – as well as is possible – from another source.*¹⁶³ Thus, the Society makes clear that the protection of sources is justified, but certain conditions need to be fulfilled by journalists wishing to protect the identity of their sources.

¹⁶³ Translation by the author, no official translation available. Code of journalists <<http://www.genootschapvanhoofdredacteuren.nl/het-genootschap/code-voor-de-journalistiek/>> accessed 06 May 2016.

The second institution, more pertinent to the present discussion, is the Netherlands Press Council. Article 3 of the Articles of Association of the Foundation of the Press Council state that the Press Council is charged with the examination of complaints against violations of good journalistic practice. The Council was established by the reorganization of the Dutch Federation of Journalists in 1960. This reorganization entailed a changing of competences of the newly formed Press Council. The Council could now hear complaints against journalists that were not affiliated with the Press Council. This was not possible before. However, this extension of the scope of action of the Council also led to the loss of the previous competence of the Federation to impose sanctions on journalists. Presently the Press Council can still only express its disapproval of journalistic conduct.¹⁶⁴ The Press Council is composed of a Chairperson, three vice-persons who are jurists and not journalists, a minimum of ten members who are journalists, and a minimum of ten members that are not journalists.¹⁶⁵ The Council is competent to adjudicate complaints about journalistic conduct. This is defined as: 'a journalist's acts or omissions while exercising his occupation' as well as 'acts or omissions in the context of journalistic activities by someone who contributes regularly and against payment to the editorial content of mass media without being a journalist'.¹⁶⁶ The term journalist is in Article 4(2) of the Articles of association of the Council defined as: 'anyone who makes it their prime occupation, either as employee or on freelance basis, to work on the editorial supervision or editorial composition of mass media.' The article subsequently provides a non-exhaustive list containing examples of both print and digital media.

Every person that can be considered as directly involved in a case of journalistic (mal)practice can complain to the Press Council. This allows persons or entities that claim to have been harmed by a publication based on anonymous sources to bring claim against the authors. The Press Council does not examine whether the journalistic conduct conforms to Dutch legal statutes, it only judges whether 'limits of what is socially accepted in terms of journalistic responsibility have been transgressed.' A claim for damages bases on legal provisions concerning for instance wrongful act/publication or cases alleging defamation or libel can only be brought before the a court. The Council can also give advisory opinions when it finds that matters of principle warrant this procedure without an individual complaint being lodged.¹⁶⁷

The Press Council bases its examination whether limits have been transgressed on its Guidelines.¹⁶⁸ In regard to the protection of journalistic sources the Guidelines state: 'In

¹⁶⁴ Daphne Koene, 'Press Councils in Western Europe' (AMB 2008) 27 et seq.

¹⁶⁵ Article 5(1) of the Articles of association of the Foundation of the Dutch Press Council.

¹⁶⁶ Koene (n 163) 30.

¹⁶⁷ Article 3(1) of the Articles of association of the Foundation of the Dutch Press Council.

¹⁶⁸ Guidelines of the Netherlands Press Council (English version: <<https://www.rvdj.nl/uploads/fckconnector/f60f0e13-cfde-43b7-9ea3-d3d49e012c78>> accessed 06 May 2016.

principle, sources are referred to in the publications. Publications must hide the identity of sources to whom the journalists have promised confidentiality, and of sources with regard to whom they knew or could have known that they have given them information on the assumption that they would not disclose their identities.' Also indirectly relevant information to the present discussion is included in the chapter on privacy. Thereto, the Guidelines state: 'A publication must not infringe the privacy of persons more than is reasonably necessary within the framework of the report. An intrusion of privacy will be careless if this is not reasonably proportionate to the social interest of the publication.' There are several aspects of the Press Council that have attracted criticism over the years. The fact that the Council can hear cases concerning persons who are not affiliated to it can cause paradoxical situations. The Council can for instance judge the conduct of individuals to be in violation of the Guidelines. However, the persons involved can regard themselves not to be journalists in the first place and will therefore likely be merely surprised but not in the least concerned that they will reportedly have acted in contravention of the rules set by the Council. Furthermore, several media platforms – notably the largest Dutch newspaper 'De Telegraaf' – have withdrawn its recognition of the Council. Although complaints continue to be brought against these media and their journalists, this journalistic organization no longer appear at hearings by the Council and no longer put up a defence. Such actions can be seen as erosion of the Council's authoritative position.¹⁶⁹

13.2. Conclusions

We can conclude that Dutch self-regulation of the journalist's profession has somewhat fallen into disfavour in recent years. Moreover, there are no possibilities for the imposition of punitive measures, which can be expected to lower the effectiveness of these mechanisms. From the previous explanations it has become clear that in the Netherlands self-regulatory mechanisms are free standing private instruments. These instruments are aimed at policing the morals and standards of the journalist's profession. Influence on legal safeguards can take place in an indirect way. As was for instance stated in previous Chapters, the Dutch Association of Journalists and the Counsel for Journalism influence the definition of the term journalist.

¹⁶⁹ Kamerstukken II (n 15) nr 3, 11.

14. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

14.1. Legislation

- Amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure laying down the law on protection of sources for free news (source protection in criminal matters) [Kamerstuk 34032, nr 8]
- Amendments to the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002 in connection with the establishment of an independent binding test (which aims to identify their sources) prior to the use of special powers against journalists [Kamerstukken 2014/2015, 34027, nr 3]
- Amendments to the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002 in connection with the establishment of an independent binding test (which aims to identify their sources) prior to the use of special powers against journalists, which aims to identify their sources [Kamerstukken 2014-2015 34027 nr 3]
- Council of State Advice W04.13.0151/I 2013 [Advies van de Raad van State]
- Decision of 27 September 2011 regarding the constitution of the Commissie advies- en verwijspunt klokkenluiden [Tijdelijk besluit Commissie advies- en verwijspunt klokkenluiden Staatsblad 2011/427]
- Decree of May 22, 2015, amending the Temporary Commission Decision advisory and referral point on whistleblowing and the Decree governing bodies WNo and WOB in connection with change of the date of expiration of the Temporary Commission Decision counseling and referral point whistleblowing [Staatsblad 2015/202]
- Explanatory Memorandum [Wijziging van het Wetboek van Strafvordering tot vastlegging van het recht op bronbescherming van vrije nieuwsgaring (bronbescherming in strafzaken)]
- Kamerstukken II, 2003/04, 28990, nr 2
- Letter from the Ministry of the Interior and Kingdom Relations [Kamerstukken II 2012–2013, 30977, nr 49]
- Letter from the Ministry of the Interior and Kingdom Relations [Kamerstukken 2015/2016, 29279, nr 292]
- Letter of the Minister of Security and Justice [Kamerstukken II 2007/08, 31200 VI, nr 92]; General Consultation [Kamerstukken II 2007/08, 31, 200 VI, nr 104, 7]
- Letter repealing the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the protection of journalistic sources (disclosure of information) [Kamerstukken II 2004/05, 23133, nr 9]
- New bill by Van Raak, Fokke, Koşer Kaya, Segers, Thieme, Klein en Voortman on the establishment of a House for whistle-blowers [Kamerstukken I, 2014-15, 34105, no A]
- Notification of suspected wrongdoing by Government and Police [Staatsblad 2009/572]
- Report Decision suspected wrongdoing at the Ministry of Defence [Staatsblad 2010/706]
- UvW, Model Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse and / or Regional Water Integrity Violation [Modelregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand en/of Integriteitschending Waterschappen]

- VNO, Modified Example Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse in 2013 [Gewijzigde Voorbeeldregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand 2013]

14.2. Case Law

14.2.1. English titles

- Christine Goodwin v United Kingdom [1966] ECHR 2002-VI
- Financial Times Ltd and Others v the United Kingdom App no 821/03 (ECtHR, 15 December 2009)
- Fuentes Bobo v Spain App no 39293/98 (ECtHR, 29 February 2008)
- Guja v Moldova App no 14277/04 (ECtHR, 12 February 2008)
- Heinisch v Germany App no 28274/08 (ECtHR, 21 July 2011)
- Kruslin v France (1990) Series A no 176-A
- Malone v the United Kingdom (1984) Series A no 82
- Observer and Guardian v the United Kingdom (1991) Series A no 216
- Rodica Mihaela Rotaru v Romania App no 28341/95 (ECtHR, 4 May 2000)
- Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010)
- Shimovolos v Russia App no 30194/09 (ECtHR, 21 June 2011)
- Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v the Netherlands App no 39315/06 (ECtHR, 22 November 2012)
- Voskuil v the Netherlands App no 64752/01 (ECtHR, 22 November 2007)

14.2.2. Dutch titles

- Audax Publishing B.V. v X [2004] Gerechtshof Amsterdam NJF 2004 [2014] 565
- Case 10/04884 [2012] Hoge Raad NJB 2012 [2012] 1220
- Case 12-6673 AW [2013] Centrale Raad van Beroep NJB 2013 [2013] 2630
- Case 127383 / HA ZA 06-1498[2008] Rechtbank Zwolle-Lelystad published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBZLY:2008:BD2201>> [2008]
- Case 200.010.214/01 [2010] Gerechtshof Arnhem published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:GHARN:2010:BN1847>> [2010]
- Case 316844 / HA ZA 05-1541[2007] Rechtbank Amsterdam RF 2007 [2007] 18
- Greenpeace v Kotte [1995] Rechtsbank Amsterdam JAR 1995 [1995] 208
- KGB-affaire [1977] Hoge Raad NJ 399 [1978]
- Meijer v De Schelde [2000] Hoge Raad NJ 2000 [2005] 430
- Omroepvereniging Bunch v Pretium Telecom BV [2011] Rechtbank's-Gravenhage, published online on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBSGR:2011:BU3512>> [2011]

- Overrule of decision 02157/06 [2007] Hoge Raad NJ 2008 [2007] 374
- Overrule of decision Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2013] Hoge Raad NS 2013 [2013] 139
- Plaintiff v Audax Publishing B.V. [2003] Rechtbank Amsterdam published online <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBAMS:2003:AL8451>> [2003]
- Plaintiff v Endelmoel Nederland Mediagroep B.V. and others [2015] Rechtbank Midden-Nederland NJF 2015 [2015] 451 Pretium BV v Wegener Media BV [2013] Rechtbank Overijssel [2013] Prg. 2013 [2013] 291
- Plaintiff v Het Parool B.V. [2009] Rechtbank Amsterdam published online <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBAMS:2009:BI0904>> [2009]
- Plaintiff v Stichting Betaald Voetbal S.V. Top Oss and others [2006] Gerechtshof's Hertogenbosch NJF 2006 [2006] 475
- Plaintiff v the Mayor of the City of Rotterdam [2014] Rechtbank Rotterdam TAR 2014 [2014] 57
- Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2003] Hoge Raad NS 2003 [2003] 221
- Pronunciation 8722 [1996] Hoge Raad NJ 1999 578
- Q.Q. and others v Bebeer B.V. and others [2015] Rechtbank Den Haag JOR 2015 [2015] 339
- Quirijns v TGB [2012] Hoge Raad NJB 2012 [2012] 2254
- Rejection of appeal 01022/01 B [2003] Hoge Raad NJ 2004 [2003] 188
- Rejection of Appeal Plaintiff v the Netherlands [2004] Hoge Raad NS 2004 [2004] 146
- TELE2 Nederland B.V. v Defendant [2010] Rechtbank Haarlem published on <<http://uitspraken.rechtspraak.nl/inziendocument?id=ECLI:NL:RBHAA:2010:BO9358>> [2010]
- Uitgeversmaatschappij De Telegraaf B.V. [2008] Hoge Raad NS 2008 [2008] 149
- Van den Biggelaar v Dobmen & Langenberg [1996] Hoge Raad NJ 1996 [1996] 578
- Van Heest v De Limburger [2013] Hoge Raad NJB 2013 [2013] 561

14.3. Books and articles

14.3.1. English titles

- Eskens S et al, Ten standards for oversight and transparency of national intelligence services (University of Amsterdam, Institute for Information Law 2015)

14.3.2. Dutch titles

- Lips M and Laan V, Verplichte introductie klokkenluidersregeling en rechtsbescherming klokkenluiders (Van Doorne 2016)
- Mevis P, Capita Strafrecht: een thematische inleiding (6th edn, Ars Aequi Libri 2009) 291
- Schuijt G, Bronbescherming en het journalistieke verschoningsrecht in Schuijt G, Vrijheid van nieuwsgaring (Boom Juridische Uitgevers 2006)

- Stephenson P and Levi M, Principes van klokkenluiden: de benadering van de Raad van Europa (Bomm Lemma 2013)
- van Uden F, 'Klokkenluiden: tour d'horizon,' in: Brabers J et al (eds), Vereniging van Handelsrecht, Preadvies 2015: Klokkenluiders in perspectief (Uitgeverij Paris 2015)
- Koops B.-J., 'Cybercrime Legislation in the Netherlands' [2010] Electronic Journal of Comparative Law, vol. 14.3
- van den Brink J and Jurgens E, 'Bescherming van klokkenluiders onder artikel 10 EVRM' [2015] NJCM Bulletin 1
- van Uden F, 'Klokkenluiden: verder van huis met het Huis (1)' [2013] ArbeidsRecht 18
- Verdam A, 'Wetsvoorstel Huis voor klokkenluiders: van melding aan Huis, naar melding aan toezichthouders' [2016] Tijdschrift voor Arbeid en Onderneming 1
- Wolfsen A, 'Terrorismebestrijding en de rechtsstaat in van Witteloostuijn A, (ed), Veiligheid, tot welke prijs? (S&D 2007) 51

14.4. Internet sources

- 'Adviespunt Klokkenluiders' (2013)
<<https://www.adviespuntklokkenluiders.nl/bescherming/>>
- Bruning T, 'Onderwerp: bijdrage NVJ inzake rondetafelbijeenkomst wetsvoorstel bronbescherming' (December 2014)
<https://www.nvj.nl/uploads/bestanden/bijdrage_nvj_rondetafel_wetsvoorstel_bronbescherming_dec_2014.pdf>
- Dutch response to the Call for Submissions on the Protection of Sources and Whistle-blowers by the UN Special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, David Kaye. Digital source:
<www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Opinion/Protection/Netherlands.docx>

14.5. Other sources

- Altes K, Comment nr 12 on Van Heest/de Limburger B.V. (Mediaforum 2013)
- --, Comment nr 16 on case 13/01003 (Mediaforum 2015)
- --, Comment nr 16 on Van Heest/de Limburger B.V. (Mediaforum 2013)
- Advice W03.13.0152/II of the Council of State
- Bill proposed by Van Raak, Fokke, Koşer Kaya, Segers, Thieme, Klein en Voortman on the establishment of a House for whistle-blowers [Kamerstukken II, 2012-13, 33258, no 2 and no 3, 1-2]
- Case note by Inge de Laat regarding the case of Quirijns v TGB
- Guidelines of the Netherlands Press Council 2015
- Initiative Bill by Van Weyenberg and Keijzer on the Act of normalization of legal officials [Kamerstukken I, 32 550, nr A]
- Instruction for the use of coercive measures against journalists, chapter 2 2012 (Aanwijzing toepassing dwangmiddelen tegen journalisten)

- Temporary scheme on the application of special powers (determined by the Law on the Intelligence and Security 2002) of lawyers and journalists [Tijdelijke Regeling van de Ministers van Binnenlandse Zaken en Koninkrijksrelaties en van Defensie van 16 December 2015]
- Voting results [Stemmingen] 1 March 2016, nr 21

15. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Artikel 93 Nederlandse Grondwet Bepalingen van verdragen en van besluiten van volkenrechtelijke organisaties, die naar haar inhoud een ieder kunnen verbinden, hebben verbindende kracht nadat zij zijn bekendgemaakt.	Article 93 Dutch Constitution Provisions of treaties and of resolutions by international institutions which may be binding to all persons by virtue of their contents shall become binding after they have been published.
Artikel 94 Nederlandse Grondwet Binnen het Koninkrijk geldende wettelijke voorschriften vinden geen toepassing, indien deze toepassing niet verenigbaar is met een ieder verbindende bepalingen van verdragen en van besluiten van volkenrechtelijke organisaties.	Article 94 Dutch Constitution Statutory regulations in force within the Kingdom shall not be applicable if such application is in conflict with provisions of treaties or of resolutions by international institutions that are binding to all persons.
Artikel 3 Statuten Stichting Raad voor de Journalistiek 1. De door de Stichting in te stellen Raad heeft tot taak om in de bij hem aanhangig gemaakte zaken betreffende journalistieke gedragingen te beoordelen of de grenzen zijn overschreden van hetgeen, gelet op de eisen van journalistieke verantwoordelijkheid, maatschappelijk aanvaardbaar is. De Raad kan tevens uit eigen hoofde uitspraken doen ter zake van het vorenstaande, indien zich naar zijn oordeel principiële vraagstukken voordoen.	Article 3 Statutes Foundation Press Council* 1. The Council appointed by the Foundation has the task to review the cases presented to them concerning journalistic practices in terms of whether the limits have been exceeded, which, given the demands of journalistic responsibility, are socially acceptable. The Council may also in their own right make statements relating to the foregoing, in the event it considers the issues to be fundamental. 2. A case can be brought before the Council

2. Een zaak kan bij de Raad aanhangig worden gemaakt door indiening van een klaagschrift door een ter beoordeling van de Raad rechtstreeks belanghebbende. 3. De Raad heeft tevens tot taak het bemiddelend optreden tussen burgers en instanties enerzijds en publiciteitsmedia anderzijds in daarvoor in aanmerking komende gevallen. 4. De aan de Stichting deelnemende organisaties kunnen de Raad verzoeken een uitspraak te doen omtrent zaken met een algemene strekking en die van principieel belang zijn. De organisatie wordt in dat geval beschouwd als rechtstreeks belanghebbende. 5. De Raad zal voorts datgene verrichten wat hem verder bij deze statuten of bij reglement wordt opgedragen.	by submitting a written complaint by a direct interest in the discretion of the Board. 3. The Council also has the task to mediate between citizens and authorities on the one hand and the other publicity media in the other hand, in the appropriate cases. 4. The organizations participating in the Foundation may request the Council to decide on matters of a general nature and which are of fundamental importance. The organization is considered in this case as directly concerned. 5. The Council will also conduct that which is instructed to it through its statutes or regulations.
Artikel 4(2) Statuten Stichting Raad voor de Journalistiek 2. Voor de toepassing van deze statuten en de reglementen van de Raad wordt onder journalist verstaan: degene die, hetzij in dienstverband, hetzij als zelfstandige, er zijn hoofdberoep van maakt mede te werken aan de redactionele leiding of redactionele samenstelling van publiciteitsmedia, waaronder: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • een dagblad, nieuwsblad, huis-aan-huisblad of tijdschrift voor zover de inhoud daarvan bestaat uit nieuws, foto's en andere illustraties, verslagen of artikelen; • een persbureau, voor zover de productie 	Article 4(2) Statutes Foundation Press Council* 2. For the purposes of these statutes and the regulations of the Council, journalist shall mean: the person who, whether in employment or self-employment, makes it their main profession contributing to the editorial line or editorial composition of publicity media, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • a newspaper, news magazine, house-to-house newspaper or magazine to the extent that its content consists of news, photos and other illustrations, reports or articles; • a news agency, provided their production

daarvan bestaat uit nieuws, foto's en andere illustraties, verslagen of artikelen bestemd voor dagbladen, nieuwsbladen, huis-aan-huisbladen, tijdschriften, radio, televisie, film, teletext of viewdata; <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • programma's die worden verspreid door radio of televisie, voor zover deze bestaan uit nieuws, reportages, beschouwingen of rubrieken van informatieve aard; • films, beeld-, geluids- en ampexbanden, voor zover deze nieuws verschaffen, een documentair karakter dragen of dienstbaar zijn aan rubrieken van informatieve aard; (...)	consists of news, photos and other illustrations, reports or articles for newspapers, news magazines, house-to-house newspapers, magazines, radio, television, film, teletext or viewdata; <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • programs that are distributed by radio or television, to the extent that they consist of news, reports, views or columns of an informative nature; • film, videotapes, audiotapes and tracks, insofar as these provide news, consist of a documentary nature or serve sections of an informative nature; (...)
Artikel 5(1) Statuten Stichting Raad voor de Journalistiek 1. De Raad zal als volgt zijn samengesteld: een voorzitter en ten hoogste drie plaatsvervangend voorzitters, die jurist en geen journalist zijn, én ten minste tien leden die journalist zijn én ten minste tien leden die geen journalist zijn.	Article 5(1) Statutes Foundation Press Council* 1. The Council shall be composed as follows: a president and up to three Deputy Presidents who are lawyers and not journalists, and at least ten members who are journalist and at least ten members who are not journalists.
Artikel 3:303 Burgerlijk Wetboek Zonder voldoende belang komt niemand een rechtsvordering toe	Article 3:303 Dutch Civil Code Without sufficient interest no one has a right of action.
Artikel 192 Sv 1. Hij die, wettelijk als getuige, als deskundige of als tolk opgeroepen, opzettelijk niet voldoet aan enige wettelijke	Article 192 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. Any person who has been legally summoned to appear as a witness, as an

verplichting die hij als zodanig te vervullen heeft, wordt gestraft: 1°. in strafzaken met gevangenisstraf van ten hoogste zes maanden of geldboete van de derde categorie; 2°. in andere zaken met gevangenisstraf van ten hoogste vier maanden of geldboete van de tweede categorie. 2. Hij die na de totstandkoming van een afspraak met de officier van justitie ingevolge artikel 226h, derde lid, of artikel 226k, eerste lid, van het Wetboek van Strafvordering wettelijk als getuige opgeroepen, opzettelijk niet voldoet aan zijn verplichting te verklaren, wordt gestraft met gevangenisstraf van ten hoogste een jaar of geldboete van de vijfde categorie. 3. Het bepaalde in het vorige lid van dit artikel is niet van toepassing op de partij in een burgerlijke procedure die, wanneer zij als getuige wordt gehoord, weigert op de haar gestelde vragen te antwoorden.	expert witness or as an interpreter, and intentionally fails to fulfill any statutory obligation which they have to in such capacity, shall be liable to: 1°. in criminal cases with a term of imprisonment of a maximum of six months or a fine of the third category; 2°. in all other criminal cases with a term of imprisonment of a maximum of four months or a fine of the second category. 2. Any person who, after having come to an agreement with the public prosecutor under section 226h(3) or section 226k(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is legally summoned to appear as a witness, and intentionally fails to fulfill any obligation which they have to in such capacity, shall be liable to a term of imprisonment of a maximum of one year or a fine of the fifth category. 3. The provisions of the preceding subsection of this section shall not apply to a party in civil proceedings who, when examined as a witness, refuses to answer the questions put to them.
Artikel 221 Sv 1. Indien de getuige bij zijn verhoor zonder wettigen grond weigert op de gestelde vragen te antwoorden of de van hem gevorderde verklaring, eed of belofte af te leggen, beveelt de rechter-commissaris, zoo dit in het belang van het onderzoek dringend noodzakelijk is, hetzij ambtshalve, hetzij op de vordering van den officier van justitie of	Article 221 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. If the witness, when being questioned, refuses without any legal grounds to answer the questions or to make an oath or affidavit regarding their statements, the examining magistrate shall order, if such action is urgently necessary, either ex officio or by demand of the public prosecutor or the

op het verzoek van den verdachte, dat de getuige in gijzeling zal worden gesteld totdat de rechtbank daaromtrent zal hebben beslist. 2. De rechter-commissaris doet binnen vier en twintig uren nadat de gijzeling is aangevangen, verslag aan de rechtbank, tenzij de getuige reeds eerder uit de gijzeling mocht zijn ontslagen. De rechtbank beveelt binnen tweemaal vier en twintig uren daarna, na verhoor van den getuige, dat deze in gijzeling zal worden gehouden of daaruit zal worden ontslagen.	suspect, that the witness be detained until the District Court has decided thereon. 2. The examining magistrate shall submit a report to the District Court within twenty-four hours after said detention has commenced, unless the witness could have been released earlier. The District Court shall order within two times twenty-four hours thereafter, after the questioning of the witness, that they will be held in detention or will be released.
Artikel 311 (4) Sv 4. Aan de verdachte wordt op straffe van nietigheid het recht gelaten om het laatst te spreken.	Article 311 (4) Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 4. The defendant shall be permitted to make the last statement, under penalty of nullity.
Artikel 173 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering 1. Indien een getuige weigert zijn verklaring af te leggen, kan de rechter op verzoek van de belanghebbende partij bevelen, dat hij op kosten van die partij in gijzeling zal worden gesteld totdat hij aan zijn verplichting zal hebben voldaan, met dien verstande dat de gijzeling ten hoogste een jaar kan duren. Deze bepaling is niet van toepassing als het een partij betreft die als getuige wordt gehoord. 2. De rechter beveelt de gijzeling slechts indien naar zijn oordeel het belang van de waarheidsvinding toepassing van die maatregel rechtvaardigt. 3. De rechter die de gijzeling heeft bevolen,	Article 173 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* 1. If a witness refuses to testify, the judge may order, upon the request of an interested party, that the witness is detained at the expense of the interested party until they comply with the obligation, subject to the proviso that the detainment lasts up to a year. This provision is not applicable when it concerns a party being heard as a witness. 2. The judge shall order the detainment only if in their opinion the interest of ascertaining the truth justifies application of this measure. 3. The judge that ordered the detainment shall terminate it ex officio or upon request of the detainee, if in the judge's opinion the continuation of the detainment is no longer

beëindigt ambtshalve of op verzoek van de gegijzelde de gijzeling indien voortzetting ervan naar zijn oordeel niet meer door het belang dat met toepassing van de dwangmaatregel werd gediend, wordt gerechtvaardigd.	justified by the interest that was served by application of the coercive measure.
Artikel 19 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering De rechter stelt partijen over en weer in de gelegenheid hun standpunten naar voren te brengen en toe te lichten en zich uit te laten over elkaars standpunten en over alle bescheiden en andere gegevens die in de procedure ter kennis van de rechter zijn gebracht, een en ander tenzij uit de wet anders voortvloeit. Bij zijn beslissing baseert de rechter zijn oordeel, ten nadele van een der partijen, niet op bescheiden of andere gegevens waarover die partij zich niet voldoende heeft kunnen uitlaten.	Article 19 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* The judge shall offer the parties reciprocally the opportunity to present their arguments and to clarify, to react to each other's arguments and all other documents and other data that was brought to the attention of the judge in the procedure, unless the law dictates otherwise. The judge will not base his or her decision contained in the judgment on documents or other data concerning which one of the parties was not able to sufficiently express an opinion, to the detriment of one of the parties.
Artikel 261 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering 1. Voor zover uit de wet niet anders voortvloeit, is deze titel van toepassing op alle zaken die met een verzoekschrift moeten worden ingeleid, alsmede op zaken waarin de rechter ambtshalve een beschikking geeft. 2. Met een verzoekschrift worden ingeleid de zaken ten aanzien waarvan dit uit de wet voortvloeit.	Article 261 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* 1. Unless the law provides otherwise, this title is applicable to all proceedings that are brought with an application, as well as matters in which the judge decides of its own motion. 2. The proceedings that have to be brought with an application are provided by law.
Artikel 404 Sv 1 Tegen de vonnissen betreffende	Article 404 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure

misdriven, door de rechtbank als einduitspraak of in de loop van het onderzoek ter terechtzitting gegeven, staat hoger beroep open voor de officier van justitie bij het gerecht dat het vonnis heeft gewezen, en voor de verdachte die niet van de gehele telastlegging is vrijgesproken. 2 Tegen de vonnissen betreffende overtredingen, door de rechtbank als einduitspraak of in de loop van het onderzoek gegeven, staat hoger beroep open voor de officier van justitie bij het gerecht dat het vonnis heeft gewezen, en voor de verdachte die niet van de gehele telastlegging is vrijgesproken, tenzij terzake in de einduitspraak: a. met toepassing van artikel 9a van het Wetboek van Strafrecht geen straf of maatregel werd opgelegd, of b. geen andere straf of maatregel werd opgelegd dan een geldboete tot een maximum – of, wanneer bij het vonnis twee of meer geldboetes werden opgelegd, geldboetes tot een gezamenlijk maximum – van € 50. 3 In afwijking van het tweede lid staat voor de verdachte hoger beroep open tegen een bij verstek gewezen vonnis als bedoeld in het tweede lid, onder a en b, indien de dagvaarding of oproeping om op de terechtzitting in eerste aanleg te verschijnen of de aanzegging of oproeping voor de nadere terechtzitting aan de verdachte niet in persoon is gedaan of betekend en zich geen andere omstandigheid heeft voorgedaan waaruit voortvloeit dat de dag van de terechtzitting of van de nadere terechtzitting de verdachte tevoren bekend was. De vorige zin is niet van toepassing in geval de dagvaarding of oproeping binnen zes weken	1. Appeal may be filed against judgments concerning serious offences, rendered by the District Court as final judgment or in the course of the hearing, by the public prosecutor with the court which rendered the judgment, and by the defendant who was not acquitted of the entire indictment. 2. Appeal may be filed against judgments concerning minor offences, rendered by the District Court as final judgment or in the course of the hearing, by the public prosecutor with the court which rendered the judgment, and by the defendant who was not acquitted of the entire indictment, unless in this regard in the final judgment: a. under application of section 9a of the Criminal Code, a punishment or measure was not imposed, or b. no other punishment or measure was imposed than a fine up to a maximum – or, where two or more fines were imposed in the judgment, fines up to a joint maximum – of € 50. 3. In derogation of subsection (2), the defendant may file an appeal against a judgment rendered in absentia as referred to in subsection (2)(a) and (b), if the summons or notice to appear at the court session of the court of first instance or the notice to appear at the court session at a later date was not given to or served on the defendant in person and no other circumstance has occurred from which it follows that the date of the court session or of the court session at a later date was known to the defendant beforehand. The preceding sentence shall not apply in the event that the summons or appearance notice was lawfully served on the defendant in accordance with section 588a within six weeks after the defendant filed an
---	---

nadat door de verdachte op de voet van artikel 257e verzet is gedaan, rechtsgeldig aan de verdachte is betekend met inachtneming van artikel 588a. 4 Tegen de in het tweede lid, onder a en b, bedoelde vonnissen waartegen geen hoger beroep openstaat, staat evenmin beroep in cassatie open, tenzij zij een overtreding betreffen van een verordening van een provincie, een gemeente, een waterschap of een met toepassing van de Wet gemeenschappelijke regelingen ingesteld openbaar lichaam. 5 Zijn in eerste aanleg strafbare feiten gevoegd aan het oordeel van de rechtbank onderworpen, dan kan de verdachte alleen hoger beroep instellen van die gevoegde zaken waarin hij niet van de gehele telastlegging is vrijgesproken.	objection to the judgment in absentia under the terms of section 257e. 4. The judgments, referred to in subsection (2)(a) and (b), which are not open to appeal, shall not be open to appeal in cassation either, unless in the case of a violation of a bye-law of a province, a municipality, a water control authority, or a public body established under application of the Joint Regulations Act [Wet Gemeenschappelijke Regelingen]. 5. If at the court of first instance criminal offences have been tried jointly by the District Court, then the defendant may only file an appeal in regard of those joint cases in which he was not acquitted of the entire indictment.
Artikel 427 Sv 1. Tegen de arresten van de gerechtshoven, als uitspraak gegeven, betreffende misdrijven staat beroep in cassatie open voor het openbaar ministerie bij het gerecht dat de uitspraak heeft gedaan, en de verdachte. 2. Tegen arresten van de gerechtshoven, als uitspraak gegeven, betreffende overtredingen staat beroep in cassatie open voor het openbaar ministerie bij het gerecht dat het arrest heeft gewezen, en de verdachte, tenzij terzake in de einduitspraak: a. met toepassing van artikel 9a van het Wetboek van Strafrecht geen straf of maatregel werd opgelegd, of b. geen andere straf of maatregel werd	Article 427 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. Appeal in cassation may be filed against judgments concerning serious offences pronounced by the Courts of Appeal by the Public Prosecution Service attached to the court which rendered the judgment, and by the defendant. 2. Appeal may be filed against judgments concerning minor offences, pronounced by the Courts of Appeal by the Public Prosecution Service attached to the court which rendered the judgment, and by the defendant, unless in this regard in the final judgment: a. under application of section 9a of the Criminal Code, a punishment or measure was

opgelegd dan een geldboete tot een maximum – of, wanneer bij het arrest twee of meer geldboetes werden opgelegd, geldboetes tot een gezamenlijk maximum – van EUR 250. 3. Tegen de arresten, bedoeld in het tweede lid, onder a en b, staat niettemin beroep in cassatie open indien zij een overtreding betreffen van een verordening van een provincie, een gemeente, een waterschap of een met toepassing van de Wet gemeenschappelijke regelingen ingesteld openbaar lichaam. 4. Hoger beroep schorst de rechtsgevolgen van beroep in cassatie; indien in de lagere aanleg een uitspraak wordt gegeven over een of meer van de vragen, bedoeld in de artikelen 351 en 352 vervalt het ingestelde beroep in cassatie.	not imposed, or b. no other punishment or measure was imposed than a fine up to a maximum – or, where two or more fines were imposed in the judgment, fines up to a joint maximum – of EUR 250. 3. Appeal in cassation may nevertheless be filed against the judgments, referred to in subsection (2)(a) and (b), in the case of a violation of a bye-law of a province, a municipality, a water control authority, or a public body established under application of the Joint Regulations Act. 4. Appeal shall suspend the legal effects of appeal in cassation; if a judgment is rendered on one or more of the questions, referred to in sections 351 and section 352, by the lower court, the appeal in cassation filed shall be cancelled.
Artikel 332 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering 1. Partijen kunnen van een in eerste aanleg gewezen vonnis in hoger beroep komen, tenzij de vordering waarover de rechter in eerste aanleg had te beslissen niet meer beloopt dan € 1750 of, in geval van een vordering van onbepaalde waarde, er duidelijke aanwijzingen bestaan dat de vordering geen hogere waarde vertegenwoordigt dan € 1750, een en ander tenzij de wet anders bepaalt. Voor de toepassing van de eerste zin wordt de tot aan de dag van dagvaarding in eerste aanleg verschenen rente bij de vordering inbegrepen.	Article 332 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* 1. Parties can appeal a judgment delivered at first instance, unless the claim upon which the judge at first instance has decided does not amount to more than € 1750, or, in a case that the claim is of unlimited worth, there are clear indications that the claim does not represent a value of more than € 1750, all of which is subject to provisions in the law that dictate otherwise. Regarding the application of the first sentence, the interest accrued up until the day of summons at first instance is included in the claim.

Artikel 78 Wet op de rechterlijke organisatie

1. De Hoge Raad neemt kennis van het beroep in cassatie tegen de handelingen, arresten, vonnissen en beschikkingen van de gerechtshoven en de rechtbanken, ingesteld hetzij door een partij, hetzij «in het belang der wet» door de procureur-generaal bij de Hoge Raad.

2. Het eerste lid is niet van toepassing op de handelingen en uitspraken van de rechtbanken in zaken waarvan zij als bestuursrechter kennis nemen.

3. Het eerste lid is voorts niet van toepassing ten aanzien van de handelingen en beslissingen van de rechtbanken en van het gerechtshof Arnhem-Leeuwarden in zaken met betrekking tot de Wet administratiefrechtelijke handhaving verkeersvoorschriften en in zaken betreffende bestuurlijke boeten opgelegd op grond van artikel 154b van de Gemeentewet, met dien verstande dat de Hoge Raad wel kennis neemt van de eis tot «cassatie in het belang der wet» door de procureur-generaal.

4. De Hoge Raad neemt kennis van het beroep in cassatie tegen uitspraken van de bestuursrechter voorzover dit bij wet is bepaald.

5. De Hoge Raad neemt kennis van het beroep in cassatie ingesteld «in het belang der wet» tegen uitspraken van de Raad voor strafrechtstoepassing en jeugdbescherming, bedoeld in artikel 32 van de Instellingswet Raad voor strafrechtstoepassing en jeugdbescherming.

Article 78 Judicial Organisation Act

1. The Supreme Court takes cognizance of appeals in cassation against the acts, judgments and orders of the courts of appeal and the district courts instituted either by a party or, in the interests of the uniform application of the law, by the procurator general at the Supreme Court.

2. Paragraph 1 does not apply to the acts and rulings of the district courts in cases of which they take cognizance as administrative courts.

3. Paragraph 1 does not apply to acts and decisions either of the district courts or of the court of appeal in Leeuwarden in cases concerning the Traffic Regulations (Administrative Enforcement) Act, and in cases concerning administrative fines based on Article 154b of the Municipalities Act, subject to the proviso that the Supreme Court will take cognizance of an application by the procurator general for cassation in the interests of the uniform application of the law.

4. The Supreme Court takes cognizance of appeals in cassation against rulings of the administrative courts in so far as this is provided for by statute.

5. The Supreme Court takes cognizance of appeals in cassation against ruling of the Council for application of criminal law and protection of youth, referred to in Article 32 of the Act establishing the Council for application of criminal law and protection of youth.

6. A party may not institute an appeal in cassation if another ordinary legal remedy is

6. Een partij kan geen beroep in cassatie instellen indien voor haar een ander gewoon rechtsmiddel openstaat of heeft opengestaan. 7. Cassatie «in het belang der wet» kan niet worden ingesteld indien voor partijen een gewoon rechtsmiddel openstaat en brengt geen nadeel toe aan de rechten door partijen verkregen.	or was available to him. 7. Appeal in cassation may not be instituted in the interests of the uniform application of the law if an ordinary legal remedy is available to the parties. Such appeal does not prejudice the rights obtained by the parties.
Artikel 79 Wet op de rechterlijke organisatie 1. De Hoge Raad vernietigt handelingen, arresten, vonnissen en beschikkingen: a. wegens verzuim van vormen voorzover de niet-inachtneming daarvan uitdrukkelijk met nietigheid is bedreigd of zodanige nietigheid voortvloeit uit de aard van de niet in acht genomen vorm; b. wegens schending van het recht met uitzondering van het recht van vreemde staten. 2. Feiten waaruit het gelden of niet gelden van een regel van gewoonterecht wordt afgeleid, worden voorzover zij bewijs behoeven, alleen op grond van de bestreden beslissing als vaststaande aangenomen.	Article 79 Judicial Organisation Act 1. The Supreme Court sets aside acts, judgments and orders: a) on account of a procedural defect in so far as nullity is the express consequence of such defect or such nullity results from the nature of the procedural defect; b) on account of an infringement of the law, with the exception of the law of foreign states. 2. Facts from which the applicability or otherwise of a rule of customary law is inferred are assumed, in so far as they require proof, to have been established only on the basis of the disputed decision.
Artikel 80a Wet op de rechterlijke organisatie 1. De Hoge Raad kan, gehoord de procureur-generaal, het beroep in cassatie niet-ontvankelijk verklaren wanneer de aangevoerde klachten geen behandeling in	Article 80a Judicial Organisation Act* 1 The Supreme Court may, upon hearing the procurator general, declare the appeal in cassation inadmissible, if the claims that were brought do not justify a hearing in cassation, either because the party that filed the appeal

cassatie rechtvaardigen, omdat de partij die het cassatieberoep instelt klaarblijkelijk onvoldoende belang heeft bij het cassatieberoep of omdat de klachten klaarblijkelijk niet tot cassatie kunnen leiden. 2. De Hoge Raad neemt een beslissing als bedoeld in het eerste lid niet dan nadat de Hoge Raad kennis heeft genomen van: a. de dagvaarding of het verzoekschrift, bedoeld in artikel 407 onderscheidenlijk artikel 426a van het Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering, en de conclusie van antwoord of het verweerschrift, bedoeld in artikel 411 onderscheidenlijk artikel 426b, derde lid, van dat Wetboek, voor zover ingediend; b. de schriftuur, houdende de middelen van cassatie, bedoeld in artikel 437 van het Wetboek van Strafvordering; dan wel c. het beroepschrift waarbij beroep in cassatie wordt ingesteld, bedoeld in artikel 28 van de Algemene wet inzake rijksbelastingen, en het verweerschrift, bedoeld in artikel 29b, van die wet, voor zover ingediend. 3. Het beroep in cassatie wordt behandeld en beslist door drie leden van een meervoudige kamer, van wie een als voorzitter optreedt. 4. Indien de Hoge Raad toepassing geeft aan het eerste lid, kan hij zich bij de vermelding van de gronden van zijn beslissing beperken tot dit oordeel.	in cassation clearly has insufficient interest in the appeal in cassation or because the claims clearly cannot lead to cassation. 2. The Supreme Court takes a decision, referred to in the first section, but not before the Supreme Court has taken recognizance of: a. The summons or application, referred to in Article 407 and Article 426a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the statement of defence, referred to in Article 411 or Article 426b, third section, of the Code of Civil Procedure, insofar as it was submitted; b. The document containing the grounds for cassation, referred to in Article 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure; or c. the notice of appeal, with which the appeal in cassation is instituted, referred to in Article 28 of the State Taxes Act, and the statement of defence, referred to in Article 29b of that Act, insofar as it was submitted. 3. The appeal in cassation is handled and decided upon by three members of the multiple judge division, of whom one will act as President. 4. In the case that the Supreme Court applies the first section, it may limit its reasoning to this judgment when stating the grounds for its decision.
Artikel 91 Wet op de rechterlijke organisatie	Article 91 Judicial Organisation Act

1. De Raad is belast met: a. de voorbereiding van de begroting voor de Raad en de gerechten gezamenlijk; b. de toekenning van budgetten ten laste van de rijksbegroting aan de gerechten; c. de ondersteuning van de bedrijfsvoering bij de gerechten; d. het toezicht op de uitvoering van de begroting door de gerechten; e. het toezicht op de bedrijfsvoering bij de gerechten; f. landelijke activiteiten op het gebied van werving, selectie, aanstelling, benoeming en opleiding van het personeel bij de gerechten. 2. Ter uitvoering van de in het eerste lid, onder c en e, genoemde taken is de zorg van de Raad in het bijzonder gericht op: a. automatisering en bestuurlijke informatievoorziening; b. huisvesting en beveiliging; c. de kwaliteit van de bestuurlijke en organisatorische werkwijze van de gerechten; d. personeelsaangelegenheden; e. overige materiële voorzieningen.	1. The Council is responsible for: a) preparing the budget for the Council and the courts jointly; b) allocating budgets from the central government budget to the courts; c) supporting operations at the courts; d) supervising the implementation of the budget by the courts; e) supervising operations at the courts; f) nationwide activities relating to the recruitment, selection, appointment and training of court staff. 2. In performing the duties referred to in paragraph 1 (c) and (e), the Council must concentrate in particular on: a) information systems and the provision of management information; b) accommodation and security; c) the quality of the administrative and organisational procedure of the courts; d) personnel matters; e) other facilities.
Artikel 187d Sv	Article 187d Dutch Code of Criminal

1. De rechter-commissaris kan hetzij ambtshalve, hetzij op de vordering van de officier van justitie of het verzoek van de verdachte of diens raadsman of de getuige beletten dat antwoorden op vragen betreffende een bepaald gegeven ter kennis komen van de officier van justitie, de verdachte en diens raadsman, indien er geground vermoeden bestaat dat door de openbaarmaking van dit gegeven:

a. de getuige ernstige overlast zal ondervinden of in de uitoefening van zijn ambt of beroep ernstig zal worden belemmerd,

b. een zwaarwegend opsporingsbelang wordt geschaad, of

c. het belang van de staatsveiligheid wordt geschaad.

2. De rechter-commissaris maakt in zijn proces-verbaal melding van de redenen waarom het bepaalde in het eerste lid toepassing heeft gevonden.

3. De rechter-commissaris neemt de maatregelen die redelijkerwijs nodig zijn om onthulling van een gegeven als in het eerste lid bedoeld, te voorkomen. Hij is daartoe bevoegd gegevens in processtukken onvermeld te laten.

4. Ingeval de rechter-commissaris belet dat een antwoord ter kennis komt van de officier van justitie, de verdachte of diens raadsman, doet hij in het proces-verbaal opnemen dat de gestelde vraag is beantwoord.

5. Hoger beroep of beroep in cassatie is tegen een beslissing op grond van het eerste

Procedure

1. The examining magistrate may, either ex officio or on application of the public prosecutor or the suspect or his defence counsel or the witness, prevent the public prosecutor, the suspect and his defence counsel from learning of the answers to questions concerning certain information, if there are justified reasons to assume that disclosure of this information:

a. will cause serious inconvenience to the witness or seriously hinder him in the performance of his office or profession,

b. will prejudice a compelling investigative interest, or

c. will prejudice the interest of state security.

2. The examining magistrate shall note the reasons for application of the provisions of subsection (1) in his official record.

3. The examining magistrate shall take the measures that are reasonably necessary to prevent disclosure of information as referred to in subsection (1). To that end, he may omit to mention information in the case documents.

4. In the event that the examining magistrate prevents the public prosecutor, the suspect or his defence counsel from learning of an answer, he shall state in the official record that the question posed has been answered.

5. A decision taken under subsection (1) shall not be open to appeal or appeal in cassation.

lid niet toegelaten.
Artikel 178 Sv Indien bij afwezigheid van den officier van justitie gedurende het onderzoek eenig strafbaar feit wordt begaan, doet de rechter-commissaris daarvan een proces-verbaal opmaken en dat toekomen aan het bevoegde openbaar ministerie. Hij kan tevens, in de gevallen en op de gronden in de artikelen 67 en 67a vermeld, ambtshalve een bevel van bewaring tegen den verdachte uitvaardigen. De bepalingen van de tweede afdeling van den Vierden Titel van het Eerste Boek zijn dan van toepassing.	Article 178 Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure If, in the absence of the public prosecutor, any criminal offence is committed during the investigation, the examining magistrate shall prepare an official record thereof and forward said record to the competent Public Prosecution Service. He may also, in the cases and on the grounds stated in sections 67 and 67a, issue ex officio a detention order against the suspect. The provisions of Chapter Two of Part Four of Book One shall apply.
Artikel 27 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering 1. De terechtzitting is openbaar. De rechter kan evenwel gehele of gedeeltelijke behandeling met gesloten deuren of slechts met toelating van bepaalde personen bevelen: a.in het belang van de openbare orde of de goede zeden, b.in het belang van de veiligheid van de Staat, c.indien de belangen van minderjarigen of de eerbiediging van de persoonlijke levenssfeer van partijen dit eisen, of d.indien openbaarheid het belang van een goede rechtspleging ernstig zou schaden.	Article 27 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* 1. The court session is open to the public. The judge may order a hearing in closed session, partially or wholly, or with admission of only certain persons: a. in the interest of public order or public morality, b. in the interest of state security, c. if the interests of minors or the respect for the right to family life of parties compel it, or d. if public access would severely damage the interest of administration of justice. 2. In the case that someone disturbs the order at a hearing, the judge may order to

2. Indien iemand op een terechtzitting de orde verstoort, kan de rechter hem laten verwijderen	have that person removed.
Artikel 353 Wetboek van Burgerlijke Rechtsvordering 1. Voor zover uit deze titel dan wel uit een andere wettelijke regeling niet anders voortvloeit, is de tweede titel in hoger beroep van overeenkomstige toepassing, met dien verstande dat partijen slechts bij advocaat kunnen procederen, dat artikel 131 niet van toepassing is en dat geen eis in reconventie kan worden ingesteld. 2. Niettemin is artikel 224 niet anders van toepassing dan behoudens de navolgende bepalingen: De oorspronkelijke gedaagde, eischer wordende in hoger beroep, is niet gehouden tot de in dat artikel bedoelde zekerheidstelling. De gedaagde in hoger beroep is daartoe evenmin gehouden, zelfs niet bij het instellen van incidenteel beroep. De in eersten aanleg gestelde zekerheid blijft ook verbonden voor de kosten van hoger beroep. De zekerheidstelling wordt gevorderd vóór alle weren van regten.	Article 353 Dutch Code of Civil Procedure* 1. Insofar as it is not provided by this chapter or another legislative regulation, the second chapter also applies on appeal, subject to the proviso that the parties can only litigate with legal representation, that Article 131 does not apply and that no counterclaims can be brought. 2. Nevertheless, Article 224 only applies notwithstanding the following provisions: The original defendant, becoming a claimant on appeal, is not required to provide the security referred to in that Article. De defendant on appeal is also not required to provide that security, not even when bringing an interim action on appeal. The security provided at first instance will be bound for the costs of the appeal. The security is required for all defences.
Artikel 126m Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, dat gezien zijn aard of de samenhang met andere door de verdachte begane misdrijven een ernstige inbreuk op de rechtsorde oplevert, kan de officier van justitie, indien het onderzoek dit dringend vordert, aan een opsporingsambtenaar bevelen dat met een	Article 126m Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence as defined in section 67(1), which serious offence in view of its nature or the relation to other serious offences committed by the suspect constitutes a serious breach of law and order, the public prosecutor may, if urgently required by the investigation, order

technisch hulpmiddel niet voor het publiek bestemde communicatie die plaatsvindt met gebruikmaking van de diensten van een aanbieder van een communicatiedienst, wordt opgenomen. 2. Het bevel is schriftelijk en vermeldt: a. het misdrijf en indien bekend de naam of anders een zo nauwkeurig mogelijke aanduiding van de verdachte; b. de feiten of omstandigheden waaruit blijkt dat de voorwaarden, bedoeld in het eerste lid, zijn vervuld; c. zo mogelijk het nummer of een andere aanduiding waarmee de individuele gebruiker van de communicatiedienst wordt geïdentificeerd alsmede, voor zover bekend, de naam en het adres van de gebruiker; d. de geldigheidsduur van het bevel; e. een aanduiding van de aard van het technisch hulpmiddel of de technische hulpmiddelen waarmee de communicatie wordt opgenomen. 3. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op communicatie die plaatsvindt via een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of met gebruikmaking van een openbare telecommunicatiedienst in de zin van de Telecommunicatiewet, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – het bevel ten uitvoer gelegd met medewerking van de aanbieder van het openbare telecommunicatienetwerk of de openbare telecommunicatiedienst en gaat het bevel vergezeld van de vordering van de officier van justitie aan de aanbieder om	an investigating officer to record by means of a technical device non-public communications which are conducted by use of the services of a provider of a communication service. 2. The warrant shall be in writing and shall state: a. the serious offence and if known, the name or otherwise the most precise description possible of the suspect; b. the facts or circumstances which show that the conditions, referred to in subsection (1), have been met; c. where possible, the number or another indication by means of which the individual user of the communication service is identified as well as, insofar as is known, the name and the address of the user; d. the term of validity of the warrant; e. a description of the nature of the technical device or the technical devices by means of which the communications are recorded. 3. If the warrant relates to communications which are conducted through a public telecommunication network or by use of a public telecommunication service within the meaning of the Telecommunications Act, the warrant shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be executed with the assistance of the provider of the public telecommunication network or the public telecommunication service and the warrant shall be accompanied by the request for assistance from the public prosecutor to the
---	--

medewerking te verlenen. 4. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op andere communicatie dan bedoeld in het derde lid, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – de aanbieder in de gelegenheid gesteld medewerking te verlenen bij de tenuitvoerlegging van het bevel. 5. Het bevel, bedoeld in het eerste lid, kan slechts worden gegeven na schriftelijke machtiging, op vordering van de officier van justitie te verlenen door de rechter-commissaris. Artikel 126l, vijfde tot en met achtste lid, is van overeenkomstige toepassing. 6. Voor zover het belang van het onderzoek dit bepaaldelijk vordert, kan indien toepassing is gegeven aan het eerste lid tot degene van wie redelijkerwijs kan worden vermoed dat hij kennis draagt van de wijze van versleuteling van de communicatie, de vordering worden gericht medewerking te verlenen aan het ontsleutelen van de gegevens door hetzij deze kennis ter beschikking te stellen, hetzij de versleuteling ongedaan te maken. 7. De in het zesde lid bedoelde vordering wordt niet gericht tot de verdachte. 8. Op de in het zesde lid bedoelde vordering zijn artikel 96a, derde lid, en artikel 126l, vierde, zesde en zevende lid, van overeenkomstige toepassing. 9. Bij of krachtens algemene maatregel van bestuur kunnen regels worden gesteld over de wijze waarop het in het eerste lid bedoelde bevel en de in het derde en zesde lid bedoelde vorderingen kunnen worden gegeven en over de wijze waarop daaraan	provider. 4. If the warrant relates to communications other than the communications referred to in subsection (3), the provider shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be given the opportunity to assist in the execution of the warrant. 5. The warrant, referred to in subsection (1), may only be issued following written authorisation to be granted by the examining magistrate on application of the public prosecutor. Section 126l(5) to (8) inclusive shall apply mutatis mutandis. 6. Insofar as is specifically required in the interest of the investigation, the person, who may be reasonably presumed to have knowledge of the manner of encryption of the communications, may be requested, if subsection (1) is applied, to assist in decrypting the data by either providing this knowledge, or undoing the encryption. 7. The request referred to in subsection (6) shall not be directed to the suspect. 8. Section 96a(3) and section 126l(4), (6) and (7) shall apply mutatis mutandis to the request referred to in subsection (6). 9. Rules pertaining to the manner in which the order referred to in subsection (1) and the requests referred to in subsections (3) and (6) may be given and the manner of compliance with such requests shall be set by Governmental Decree.
--	---

wordt voldaan.
Artikel 126t Sv 1. In een geval als bedoeld in artikel 126o, eerste lid, kan de officier van justitie, indien het onderzoek dit dringend vordert, aan een opsporingsambtenaar bevelen dat met een technisch hulpmiddel niet voor het publiek bestemde communicatie die plaatsvindt met gebruikmaking van de diensten van een aanbieder van een communicatiedienst in de zin van artikel 126la, en waaraan een persoon deelneemt ten aanzien van wie uit feiten of omstandigheden een redelijk vermoeden voortvloeit dat deze betrokken is bij het in het georganiseerd verband beramen of plegen van misdrijven, wordt opgenomen. 2. Het bevel is schriftelijk en vermeldt: a. een omschrijving van het georganiseerd verband; b. de feiten en omstandigheden waaruit blijkt dat de voorwaarden, bedoeld in het eerste lid, zijn vervuld; c. zo mogelijk het nummer waarmee de individuele gebruiker van de communicatiedienst wordt geïdentificeerd alsmede, voor zover bekend, de naam en het adres van de gebruiker; d. de naam van de persoon, genoemd in het eerste lid, wanneer deze niet de houder is;	Article 126t Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In a case as referred to in section 126o(1), the public prosecutor may, if urgently required in the interest of the investigation, order an investigating officer to record by means of a technical device non-public communications which are conducted by use of the services of a provider of a communication service within the meaning of section 126la and in which one of the participants is a person in regard of whom facts or circumstances give rise to the reasonable suspicion that he is involved in the planning or commission of serious offences by an organised group. 2. The warrant shall be in writing and shall state: a. a description of the organised group; b. the facts and circumstances which show that the conditions, referred to in subsection (1), have been met; c. where possible, the number by means of which the individual user of the communication service is identified as well as, insofar as is known, the name and the address of the user; d. the name of the person, referred to in subsection (1), if this person is not the account holder;

e. de geldigheidsduur van het bevel; en f. een aanduiding van de aard van het technisch hulpmiddel of de technische hulpmiddelen waarmee de communicatie wordt opgenomen. 3. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op communicatie die plaatsvindt via een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of met gebruikmaking van een openbare telecommunicatiedienst in de zin van de Telecommunicatiewet, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – het bevel ten uitvoer gelegd met medewerking van de aanbieder van het openbare telecommunicatienetwerk of de openbare telecommunicatiedienst en gaat het bevel vergezeld van een vordering aan de aanbieder om medewerking te verlenen. 4. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op andere communicatie dan bedoeld in het derde lid, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – de aanbieder in de gelegenheid gesteld medewerking te verlenen bij de tenuitvoerlegging van het bevel. 5. Het bevel, bedoeld in het eerste lid, kan slechts worden gegeven na schriftelijke machtiging, op vordering van de officier van justitie te verlenen door de rechter-commissaris. Artikel 126s, vijfde tot en met achtste lid, is van overeenkomstige toepassing. 6. Voor zover het belang van het onderzoek dit bepaaldelijk vordert, kan bij of terstond na de toepassing van het eerste lid tot degene van wie redelijkerwijs kan worden vermoed dat hij kennis draagt van de wijze van versleuteling van de communicatie, de	e. the term of validity of the warrant; f. a description of the nature of the technical device or the technical devices by means of which the communications are recorded. 3. If the warrant relates to communications which are conducted through a public telecommunication network or by use of a public telecommunication service within the meaning of the Telecommunications Act, the warrant shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be executed with the assistance of the provider of the public telecommunication network or the public telecommunication service and the warrant shall be accompanied by a request for assistance from the public prosecutor to the provider. 4. If the warrant relates to communications other than the communications referred to in subsection (3), the provider shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be given the opportunity to assist in the execution of the warrant. 5. The warrant, referred to in subsection (1), may only be issued following written authorisation to be granted by the examining magistrate on application of the public prosecutor. Section 126s(5) to (8) inclusive shall apply mutatis mutandis. 6. Insofar as is specifically required in the interest of the investigation, the person who may be reasonably presumed to have knowledge of the manner of encryption of the communications may, in or immediately after the application of subsection (1), be requested to assist in decrypting the data by either providing this knowledge, or undoing
--	--

vordering worden gericht medewerking te verlenen aan het ontsleutelen van de gegevens door hetzij deze kennis ter beschikking te stellen, hetzij de versleuteling ongedaan te maken. 7. De in het zesde lid bedoelde vordering wordt niet gericht tot de verdachte. 8. Op de in het zesde lid bedoelde vordering zijn artikel 96a, derde lid, en artikel 126s, vierde, zesde en zevende lid, van overeenkomstige toepassing. 9. Bij of krachtens algemene maatregel van bestuur kunnen regels worden gesteld over de wijze waarop het in het eerste lid bedoelde bevel en de in het derde en zesde lid bedoelde vorderingen worden gegeven en over de wijze waarop daaraan wordt voldaan.	the encryption. 7. The request referred to in subsection (6) shall not be directed to the suspect. 8. Section 96a(3) and section 126s(4), (6) and (7) shall apply mutatis mutandis to the request referred to in subsection (6). 9. Rules pertaining to the manner in which the warrant referred to in subsection (1) and the requests referred to in subsections (3) and (6) will be given and the manner of compliance with such requests shall be set by Governmental Decree.
Artikel 126zg Sv 1. In geval van aanwijzingen van een terroristisch misdrijf kan de officier van justitie, indien het onderzoek dit dringend vordert, aan een opsporingsambtenaar bevelen dat met een technisch hulpmiddel niet voor het publiek bestemde communicatie die plaatsvindt met gebruikmaking van diensten van een aanbieder van een communicatie in de zin van artikel 126la, wordt opgenomen. 2. Het bevel vermeldt, behalve de gegevens, bedoeld in artikel 126za, tevens: a.zo mogelijk het nummer of een andere aanduiding waarmee de individuele gebruiker van de communicatiedienst wordt geïdentificeerd alsmede, voor zover bekend,	Article 126zg Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of indications of a terrorist offence, the public prosecutor may, if urgently required by the investigation, order an investigating officer to record by means of a technical device non-public communications which are conducted by use of the services of a provider of a communication service within the meaning of section 126la. 2. The warrant shall also state in addition to the information referred to in section 126za: a. where possible, the number or another indication by means of which the individual user of the communication service is identified as well as, insofar as is known, the

de naam en het adres van de gebruiker; b. de geldigheidsduur van het bevel; en c. een aanduiding van de aard van het technisch hulpmiddel of de technische hulpmiddelen waarmee de communicatie wordt opgenomen. 3. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op communicatie die plaatsvindt via een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of met gebruikmaking van een openbare telecommunicatiedienst in de zin van de Telecommunicatiewet, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – het bevel ten uitvoer gelegd met medewerking van de aanbieder van het openbare telecommunicatienetwerk of de openbare telecommunicatiedienst en gaat het bevel vergezeld van een vordering van de officier van justitie aan de aanbieder om medewerking te verlenen. 4. Indien het bevel betrekking heeft op andere communicatie dan bedoeld in het derde lid, wordt – tenzij zulks niet mogelijk is of het belang van strafvordering zich daartegen verzet – de aanbieder in de gelegenheid gesteld medewerking te verlenen bij de tenuitvoerlegging van het bevel. 5. Artikel 126m, vijfde tot en met negende lid, is van overeenkomstige toepassing.	name and the address of the user; b. the term of validity of the warrant; and c. a description of the nature of the technical device or the technical devices by means of which the communications are recorded. 3. If the warrant relates to communications which are conducted through a public telecommunication network or by use of a public telecommunication service within the meaning of the Telecommunications Act, the warrant shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be executed with the assistance of the provider of the public telecommunication network or the public telecommunication service and the warrant shall be accompanied by a request for assistance from the public prosecutor to the provider. 4. If the warrant relates to communications other than the communications referred to in subsection (3), the provider shall – unless such is impossible or is not permitted in the interest of the criminal proceedings – be given the opportunity to assist in the execution of the warrant. 5. Section (5) to (9) of article 126m shall be applicable mutatis mutandis.
Artikel 126g Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf, kan de officier van justitie in het belang van het onderzoek bevelen dat een	Article 126g Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence, the public prosecutor may, in the

opsporingsambtenaar stelselmatig een persoon volgt of stelselmatig diens aanwezigheid of gedrag waarneemt. 2. Indien de verdenking een misdrijf betreft als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, dat gezien zijn aard of de samenhang met andere door de verdachte begane misdrijven een ernstige inbreuk op de rechtsorde oplevert, kan de officier van justitie in het belang van het onderzoek bepalen dat ter uitvoering van het bevel een besloten plaats, niet zijnde een woning, wordt betreden zonder toestemming van de rechthebbende. 3. De officier van justitie kan bepalen dat ter uitvoering van het bevel een technisch hulpmiddel wordt aangewend, voor zover daarmee geen vertrouwelijke communicatie wordt opgenomen. Een technisch hulpmiddel wordt niet op een persoon bevestigd, tenzij met diens toestemming. 4. Het bevel wordt gegeven voor een periode van ten hoogste drie maanden. Het kan telkens voor een termijn van ten hoogste drie maanden worden verlengd. 5. Het bevel tot observatie is schriftelijk en vermeldt: a. het misdrijf en indien bekend de naam of anders een zo nauwkeurig mogelijke aanduiding van de verdachte; b. de feiten of omstandigheden waaruit blijkt dat de voorwaarden, bedoeld in het eerste lid, zijn vervuld; c. de naam of een zo nauwkeurig mogelijke aanduiding van de in het eerste lid bedoelde persoon;	interest of the investigation, order an investigating officer to systematically follow a person or systematically observe his movements or behaviour. 2. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence as defined in article 67(1), which in view of its nature or the relation to other serious offences committed by the suspect constitutes a serious breach of law and order, the public prosecutor may determine, in the interest of the investigation, that an enclosed place, not being a dwelling, will be entered without the consent of the person entitled to use the premises, for the purpose of executing the warrant. 3. The public prosecutor may determine that a technical device will be used for the purpose of executing the warrant, insofar as no confidential information is recorded by means of that device. A technical device shall not be attached to a person, unless with his consent. 4. The warrant shall be issued for a period of maximum three months. It may be extended each time for a period of maximum three months. 5. The surveillance warrant shall be in writing and shall state: a. the serious offence and if known, the name or otherwise the most precise description possible of the suspect; b. the facts or circumstances which show that the conditions, referred to in subsection (1), have been met; c. the name or the most precise description possible of the person referred to in
---	---

d. bij toepassing van het tweede lid, de feiten of omstandigheden waaruit blijkt dat de voorwaarden, bedoeld in dat lid, zijn vervuld, alsmede de plaats die zal worden betreden; e. de wijze waarop aan het bevel uitvoering wordt gegeven, en f. de geldigheidsduur van het bevel. 6. Bij dringende noodzaak kan het bevel mondeling worden gegeven. De officier van justitie stelt in dat geval het bevel binnen drie dagen op schrift. 7. Zodra niet meer wordt voldaan aan de voorwaarden, bedoeld in het eerste lid, bepaalt de officier van justitie dat de uitvoering van het bevel wordt beëindigd. 8. Het bevel kan schriftelijk en met redenen omkleed worden gewijzigd, aangevuld, verlengd of beëindigd. Bij dringende noodzaak kan de beslissing mondeling worden gegeven. De officier van justitie stelt deze in dat geval binnen drie dagen op schrift. 9. Een bevel als bedoeld in het eerste lid kan ook worden gegeven aan een persoon in de openbare dienst van een vreemde staat. Bij algemene maatregel van bestuur kunnen eisen worden gesteld aan deze personen. Het tweede tot en met achtste lid zijn van overeenkomstige toepassing.	subsection (1); d. in the application of subsection (2), the facts or circumstances which show that the conditions, referred to in that subsection, have been met, as well as the place to be entered; e. the manner in which the warrant will be executed, and f. the term of validity of the warrant. 6. In the case of urgent necessity, the warrant may be issued verbally. In that case the public prosecutor shall put the warrant in writing within three days. 7. As soon as the conditions referred to in subsection (1) are no longer met, the public prosecutor shall determine that the execution of the warrant has ended. 8. The warrant may be amended, supplemented, extended or terminated in writing and stating reasons. In the case of urgent necessity, the decision may be given verbally. In that case the public prosecutor shall put this decision in writing within three days. 9. A warrant as referred to in subsection (1) may also be issued to a person in the public service of a foreign state. Requirements may be set for these persons by Governmental Decree. Subsections (2) to (8) inclusive shall apply mutatis mutandis.
Artikel 126o Wetboek van Strafvordering 1. Indien uit feiten of omstandigheden een	Article 126o Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure

redelijk vermoeden voortvloeit dat in georganiseerd verband misdrijven als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, worden beraamd of gepleegd die gezien hun aard of de samenhang met andere misdrijven die in dat georganiseerd verband worden beraamd of gepleegd een ernstige inbreuk op de rechtsorde opleveren, kan de officier van justitie in het belang van het onderzoek bevelen dat een opsporingsambtenaar stelselmatig een persoon volgt of stelselmatig diens aanwezigheid of gedrag waarneemt.

2. De officier van justitie kan in het belang van het onderzoek bepalen dat ter uitvoering van het bevel een besloten plaats, niet zijnde een woning, wordt betreden zonder toestemming van de rechthebbende.

3. De officier van justitie kan bepalen dat ter uitvoering van het bevel een technisch hulpmiddel wordt aangewend, voor zover daarmee geen vertrouwelijke communicatie wordt opgenomen. Een technisch hulpmiddel wordt niet op een persoon bevestigd, tenzij met diens toestemming.

4. Het bevel tot observatie is schriftelijk en vermeldt:

a. een omschrijving van het georganiseerd verband;

b. de feiten of omstandigheden waaruit blijkt dat de voorwaarden, bedoeld in het eerste lid, zijn vervuld;

c. de naam of een zo nauwkeurig mogelijke omschrijving van de persoon, bedoeld in het eerste lid;

d. bij toepassing van het tweede lid, de plaats

1. If facts or circumstances give rise to the reasonable suspicion that serious offences as defined in section 67(1) are being planned or committed by an organised group, which serious offences in view of their nature or the relation to other serious offences that are being planned or committed by an organised group constitute a serious breach of law and order, the public prosecutor may, in the interest of the investigation, order an investigating officer to systematically follow a person or systematically observe his movements or behaviour.

2. The public prosecutor may, in the interest of the investigation, determine that an enclosed place, not being a dwelling, will be entered without the consent of the person entitled to use the premises for the purpose of executing the warrant.

3. The public prosecutor may determine that a technical device will be used for the purpose of executing the warrant, insofar as no confidential information is recorded by means of that device. A technical device shall not be attached to a person, unless with his consent.

4. The surveillance warrant shall be in writing and shall state:

a. a description of the organised group;

b. the facts or circumstances which show that the conditions, referred to in subsection (1), have been met;

c. the name or the most precise description possible of the person referred to in subsection (1);

d. in the application of subsection (2), the

die zal worden betreden; e. de wijze waarop aan het bevel uitvoering wordt gegeven, en f. de geldigheidsduur van het bevel. 5. Artikel 126g, vierde en zesde tot en met achtste lid, is van overeenkomstige toepassing. 6. Een bevel als bedoeld in het eerste lid kan ook worden gegeven aan een persoon in de openbare dienst van een vreemde staat. Bij algemene maatregel van bestuur kunnen eisen worden gesteld aan deze personen. Het tweede tot en met vijfde lid zijn van overeenkomstige toepassing.	place to be entered; e. the manner in which the warrant will be executed, and f. the term of validity of the warrant. 5. Section 126g(4) to (6) inclusive and (8) shall apply mutatis mutandis. 6. A warrant as referred to in subsection (1) may also be issued to a person in the public service of a foreign state. Requirements may be set for these persons by Governmental Decree. Subsections (2) to (5) inclusive shall apply mutatis mutandis.
Artikel 359a Sv 1. De rechtbank kan, indien blijkt dat bij het voorbereidend onderzoek vormen zijn verzuimd die niet meer kunnen worden hersteld en de rechtsgevolgen hiervan niet uit de wet blijken, bepalen dat: a. de hoogte van de straf in verhouding tot de ernst van het verzuim, zal worden verlaagd, indien het door het verzuim veroorzaakte nadeel langs deze weg kan worden gecompenseerd; b. de resultaten van het onderzoek die door het verzuim zijn verkregen, niet mogen bijdragen aan het bewijs van het telastegelegde feit; c. het openbaar ministerie niet ontvankelijk is, indien door het verzuim geen sprake kan	Article 359a Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. The District Court may, if it appears that procedural requirements were not complied with during the preliminary investigation which can no longer be remedied and the law does not provide for the legal consequences thereof, determine that: a. the length of the sentence shall be reduced in proportion to the gravity of the non-compliance with procedural requirements, if the harm or prejudice caused can be compensated in this manner; b. the results obtained from the investigation, in which there was a failure to comply with procedural requirements, may not be used as evidence of the offence as charged in the

zijn van een behandeling van de zaak die aan de beginselen van een behoorlijke procesorde voldoet. 2. Bij de toepassing van het eerste lid, houdt de rechtbank rekening met het belang dat het geschonden voorschrift dient, de ernst van het verzuim en het nadeel dat daardoor wordt veroorzaakt. 3. Het vonnis bevat de beslissingen vermeld in het eerste lid. Deze zijn met redenen omkleed.	indictment; c. there is a bar to the prosecution, if as a result of the procedural error or omission there cannot be said to be a trial of the case which meets the principles of due process. 2. In the application of subsection(1), the District Court shall take into account the interest served by the violated rule, the gravity of the procedural error or omission and the harm or prejudice caused as a result of said error or omission. 3. The judgment shall contain the decisions referred to in subsection (1). Said decisions shall be reasoned.
Artikel 6 (2, a, c) Wiv (...) 2. De Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst heeft in het belang van de nationale veiligheid tot taak: a. het verrichten van onderzoek met betrekking tot organisaties en personen die door de doelen die zij nastreven, dan wel door hun activiteiten aanleiding geven tot het ernstige vermoeden dat zij een gevaar vormen voor het voortbestaan van de democratische rechtsorde, dan wel voor de veiligheid of voor andere gewichtige belangen van de staat; (...) c. het bevorderen van maatregelen ter bescherming van de onder a genoemde belangen, waaronder begrepen maatregelen	Article 6 (2, a, c) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) (...) 2. In the interest of national security the General Intelligence and Security Service has the following tasks: a. conducting investigations regarding organisations that, and persons who, because of the objectives they pursue, or through their activities give cause for serious suspicion that they are a danger to the continued existence of the democratic legal system, or to the security or other vital interests of the state; (...) c. promoting measures for the protection of the interests referred to under a, including measures for the protection of information

ter beveiliging van gegevens waarvan de geheimhouding door de nationale veiligheid wordt geboden en van die onderdelen van de overheidsdienst en van het bedrijfsleven die naar het oordeel van Onze ter zake verantwoordelijke Ministers van vitaal belang zijn voor de instandhouding van het maatschappelijk leven; (...)	that is to remain secret for reasons of national security, and information pertaining to those parts of the public service and business community that in the opinion of the relevant Ministers are of vital importance for the continued existence of the social order; (...)
Artikel 8 (1) Wiv 1. Onze betrokken Ministers brengen jaarlijks voor 1 mei gelijktijdig aan beide kamers der Staten- Generaal een openbaar verslag uit van de wijze waarop de Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst en de Militaire Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst hun taken in het afgelopen kalenderjaar hebben verricht.	Article 8 (1) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. Once a year, before 1 May, the relevant Ministers will publicly report simultaneously to the two Chambers of the States General on the way in which the General Intelligence and Security Service and the Defence Intelligence and Security Service have carried out their tasks over the past calendar year.
Artikel 12 (1) (2) (3) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het verwerken van gegevens met inachtneming van de eisen die daaraan bij of krachtens deze wet of de Wet veiligheidsonderzoeken zijn gesteld. 2. De verwerking van gegevens vindt slechts plaats voor een bepaald doel en slechts voor zover dat noodzakelijk is voor een goede uitvoering van deze wet of de Wet veiligheidsonderzoeken.	Article 12 (1) (2) (3) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to process information with due observance of the requirements set by or in accordance with this Act or by or in accordance with the Security Investigations Act. 2. Processing information takes place exclusively for a specific purpose and only in so far as necessary for the proper implementation of this Act or the Security

3. De verwerking van gegevens geschiedt in overeenstemming met de wet en op behoorlijke en zorgvuldige wijze.	Investigations Act. 3. Processing information takes place in accordance with the law and with proper and due care.
Artikel 13 (1, a) Wiv 1. De verwerking van persoonsgegevens door de Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst kan slechts betrekking hebben op personen: a. die aanleiding geven tot het ernstige vermoeden dat zij een gevaar vormen voor de democratische rechtsorde, dan wel voor de veiligheid of voor andere gewichtige belangen van de staat; (...)	Article 13 (1, a) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The General Intelligence and Security Service may only process personal data relating to persons: a. who give cause to serious suspicion for being a danger to the democratic legal system, or to the security or other vital interests of the state; (...)
Artikel 18 Wiv Een bevoegdheid als bedoeld in deze paragraaf mag slechts worden uitgeoefend, voor zover dat noodzakelijk is voor de goede uitvoering van de taken, bedoeld in artikel 6, tweede lid, onder a en d, en de taken, bedoeld in artikel 7, tweede lid, onder a, c, en e.	Article 18 Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) A power as referred to in this paragraph may only be exercised in so far as necessary for a proper performance of the tasks as referred to in Article 6, second paragraph, under a and d, and the tasks as referred to in Article 7, second paragraph, under a, c, and e.
Artikel 20 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot: a. het observeren en in het kader daarvan	Article 20 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to:

vastleggen van gegevens betreffende gedragingen van natuurlijke personen of gegevens betreffende zaken, al dan niet met behulp van observatie- en registratiemiddelen; b. het volgen en in het kader daarvan vastleggen van gegevens betreffende natuurlijke personen of zaken, al dan niet met behulp van volgmiddelen, plaatsbepalingsapparatuur en registratiemiddelen. 2. De toepassing van observatie- en registratiemiddelen als bedoeld in het eerste lid, onder a, alsmede het aanbrengen van volgmiddelen, plaatsbepalingsapparatuur en registratiemiddelen als bedoeld in het eerste lid, onder b, door de Militaire Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst is, voor zover het gaat om de toepassing dan wel het aanbrengen daarvan in besloten plaatsen die niet in gebruik zijn van het Ministerie van Defensie slechts toegestaan, indien de toestemming daarvoor is verleend in overeenstemming met Onze Minister van Binnenlandse Zaken en Koninkrijksrelaties dan wel, voor zover van toepassing, het hoofd van de Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst.	a. conduct surveillance and within this context record information relating to the actions of natural persons or information relating to objects, whether or not with the aid of observation and registration instruments; b. trace and within this context record information relating to natural persons or information relating to objects, whether or not with the aid of tracing instruments, location positioning equipment and registration instruments. 2. Using observation and registration instruments as referred to in the first paragraph, under a, and installing tracing instruments, location positioning equipment and registration instruments as referred to in the first paragraph under b by the Defence Intelligence and Security Service is only permitted, in so far as this concerns the use or installation of such instruments or equipment in enclosed spaces not in use by the Ministry of Defence, if permission therefore is granted in accordance with the Minister of the Interior and Kingdom Relations or, in so far as applicable, the head of the General Intelligence and Security Service.
Artikel 21 (1) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot: a. de inzet van natuurlijke personen, al dan niet onder dekmantel van een aangenomen identiteit of hoedanigheid, die onder verantwoordelijkheid en onder instructie van een dienst zijn belast met: 1°. het gericht gegevens verzamelen	Article 21 (1) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to: a. deploy natural persons, whether or not under cover of an assumed identity or capacity, who, under the responsibility and on the instruction of a service, are charged with: 1°. collecting in a directed way

omtrent personen en organisaties die voor de taakuitvoering van een dienst van belang kunnen zijn; 2°. het bevorderen of het treffen van maatregelen ter bescherming van door een dienst te behartigen belangen. b. het oprichten en de inzet van rechtspersonen ter ondersteuning van operationele activiteiten.	information relating to persons and organisations that can be relevant to the performance of the tasks of a service; 2°. promoting or taking measures to protect the interests attended to by a service. b. setting up and using legal entities in support of operational activities.
Artikel 22 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het, al dan niet met behulp van een technisch hulpmiddel: a. doorzoeken van besloten plaatsen; b. doorzoeken van gesloten voorwerpen; c. verrichten van onderzoek aan voorwerpen gericht op het vaststellen van de identiteit van een persoon. 2. De uitoefening van de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in het eerste lid, door de Militaire Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst buiten plaatsen in gebruik van het Ministerie van Defensie, is slechts toegestaan indien de toestemming daarvoor is verleend in overeenstemming met Onze Minister van Binnenlandse Zaken en Koninkrijksrelaties dan wel, voor zover van toepassing, het hoofd van de Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst.	Article 22 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised, with or without the aid of a technical instrument: a. to conduct a search of enclosed spaces; b. to search closed objects; c. conduct an investigation of objects aimed at establishing a person's identity. 2. The execution of the power referred to in the first paragraph by the Defence Intelligence and Security Service outside of places in use by the Ministry of Defence, is only permitted if permission therefore is granted in accordance with the Minister of the Interior and Kingdom Relations or, in so far as applicable, the head of the General Intelligence and Security Service.

Artikel 23 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het openen van brieven en andere geadresseerde zendingen, zonder goedvinden van de afzender of de geadresseerde, indien de rechtbank te Den Haag daartoe, op verzoek van het hoofd van de dienst, een last heeft afgegeven. 2. Voor de uitoefening van de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in het eerste lid, is geen toestemming vereist als bedoeld in artikel 19.	Article 23 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to open letters and other consignments without the consent of the sender or the addressee, provided the District Court at The Hague, on the request of the head of the service, has given a mandate to do so. 2. For the execution of the power as referred to in the first paragraph, no permission as referred to in Article 19 is required.
Artikel 24 (1) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het al dan niet met gebruikmaking van technische hulpmiddelen, valse signalen, valse sleutels of valse hoedanigheid, binnendringen in een geautomatiseerd werk. Tot de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in de eerste volzin, behoort tevens de bevoegdheid: a. tot het doorbreken van enige beveiliging; b. tot het aanbrengen van technische voorzieningen teneinde versleuteling van gegevens opgeslagen of verwerkt in het geautomatiseerde werk ongedaan te maken; c. de gegevens opgeslagen of verwerkt in het geautomatiseerde werk over te nemen.	Article 24 (1) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised, whether or not using technical instruments, false signals, false keys or false identities, to enter an automated work. The powers referred to in the first sentence, also include the power: a. to penetrate any security; b. to introduce technical devices to undo the encryption of data stored or processed in the automated work; c. to copy the data stored or processed in the automated work.
Artikel 25 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het met een technisch hulpmiddel gericht aftappen,	Article 25 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised, with the aid of

ontvangen, opnemen en afluisteren van elke vorm van gesprek, telecommunicatie of gegevensoverdracht door middel van een geautomatiseerd werk, ongeacht waar een en ander plaatsvindt. Tot de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in de eerste volzin, behoort tevens de bevoegdheid om versleuteling van de gesprekken, telecommunicatie of gegevensoverdracht ongedaan te maken. 2. De in het eerste lid bedoelde bevoegdheid mag slechts worden uitgeoefend, indien door Onze betrokken Minister daarvoor op een daartoe strekkend verzoek toestemming is verleend aan het hoofd van de dienst.	a technical device, to tap, receive, record and monitor in a directed way any form of conversation, telecommunication or data transfer by means of an automated work, irrespective of where this takes place. The powers referred to in the first sentence include the power to undo the encryption of the conversations, telecommunication or data transfer. 2. The power referred to in the first paragraph may only be exercised if a request to that effect has been granted to the head of the service.
Artikel 26 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het met een technisch hulpmiddel ontvangen en opnemen van niet – kabelgebonden telecommunicatie die zijn oorsprong of bestemming in andere landen heeft, aan de hand van een technisch kenmerk ter verkenning van de communicatie. De diensten zijn bevoegd om van daarbij ontvangen gegevens kennis te nemen. Tot de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in de eerste volzin, behoort tevens de bevoegdheid om versleuteling van de telecommunicatie ongedaan te maken. 2. Voor de uitoefening van de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in het eerste lid, is geen toestemming vereist als bedoeld in artikel 19.	Article 26 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised, with the aid of a technical device, to receive and record non-cable-bound telecommunication originating from or intended for other countries, on the basis of a technical characteristic to monitor the communication. The services are authorised to take cognisance of the information received in this context. The powers as referred to in the first sentence include the power to undo the encryption of the telecommunication. 2. For exercising the power as referred to in the first paragraph, no permission as referred to in Article 19 is required.
Artikel 27 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd tot het met een technisch hulpmiddel ongericht ontvangen en opnemen van niet-kabelgebonden	Article 27 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised, with the aid of a technical device, to receive and record non-

telecommunicatie. Tot de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in de eerste volzin, behoort tevens de bevoegdheid om versleuteling van de telecommunicatie ongedaan te maken. 2. Voor de uitoefening van de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in het eerste lid, is geen toestemming vereist als bedoeld in artikel 19.	specific non-cable-bound telecommunication. The powers as referred to in the first sentence include the power to undo the encryption of the telecommunication. 2. For exercising the power as referred to in the first paragraph, no permission as referred to in article 19 is required.
Artikel 28 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd zich te wenden tot de aanbieders van openbare telecommunicatienetwerken en openbare telecommunicatiediensten in de zin van de Telecommunicatiewet met het verzoek gegevens te verstrekken over een gebruiker en het telecommunicatieverkeer met betrekking tot die gebruiker. Het verzoek kan slechts betrekking hebben op gegevens die bij algemene maatregel van bestuur zijn aangewezen en kan zowel gegevens betreffen die ten tijde van het verzoek zijn verwerkt als gegevens die na het tijdstip van het verzoek worden verwerkt. 2. Onder een gebruiker van telecommunicatie wordt in dit artikel verstaan de natuurlijke persoon of rechtspersoon die met de aanbieder een overeenkomst is aangegaan met betrekking tot het gebruik van een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of de levering van een openbare telecommunicatiedienst, alsmede de natuurlijke persoon of rechtspersoon die daadwerkelijk gebruik maakt van een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of een openbare telecommunicatiedienst.	Article 28 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to turn to providers of public telecommunication networks and public telecommunication services in the sense of the Telecommunication Act with the request to furnish information on a user and telecommunication traffic relating to this user. The request can only relate to information that has been designated by order in council. It can concern information that has been processed at the date of the request as well as information that will be processed after the date of the request. 2. In this article ‘user of telecommunication’ is understood to mean the natural person or legal entity who has concluded an agreement with the provider relating to the use of public telecommunication network or the provision of a public telecommunication service, as well as the natural person or legal entity who actively uses a public telecommunication network or a public telecommunication service.

Artikel 29 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten zijn bevoegd zich te wenden tot de aanbieders van openbare telecommunicatienetwerken en openbare telecommunicatiediensten in de zin van de Telecommunicatiewet met het verzoek gegevens te verstrekken terzake van naam, adres, postcode, woonplaats, nummer en soort dienst van een gebruiker van telecommunicatie. 2. Onder een gebruiker van telecommunicatie wordt in dit artikel verstaan de natuurlijke persoon of rechtspersoon die met de aanbieder een overeenkomst is aangegaan met betrekking tot het gebruik van een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of de levering van een openbare telecommunicatiedienst, alsmede de natuurlijke persoon of rechtspersoon die daadwerkelijk gebruik maakt van een openbaar telecommunicatienetwerk of een openbare telecommunicatiedienst.	Article 29 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services are authorised to turn to providers of public telecommunication networks and public telecommunication services in the sense of the Telecommunication Act with the request to furnish information relating to the name, address, postcode, place of residence and type of service relating to a user of telecommunication. 2. In this article ‘user of telecommunication’ is understood to mean a natural person or legal entity who has entered into an agreement with the provider with regard to the use of public telecommunication network or the provision of a public telecommunication service, as well as a natural person or legal entity who actively uses a public telecommunication network or public telecommunication service.
Artikel 30 (1) (2) Wiv 1. De diensten hebben toegang tot elke plaats, voor zover dat redelijkerwijs nodig is om: a. observatie- en registratiemiddelen als bedoeld in artikel 20, eerste lid, onder a, aan te brengen; b. volgmiddelen, plaatsbepalingsapparatuur en registratiemiddelen als bedoeld in artikel	Article 30 (1) (2) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. The services have access to all places in so far as this is in reasonableness necessary: a. to install observation and registration instruments as referred to in Article 20, first paragraph, under a; b. to install tracing instruments, location positioning equipment and registration

20, eerste lid, onder b, aan te brengen; c. de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in artikel 22, eerste lid, onder a, uit te oefenen; d. de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in artikel 24, uit te oefenen; e. de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in artikel 25, uit te oefenen; f. met betrekking tot de aldaar aanwezige telecommunicatie-apparatuur de gegevens te verzamelen die noodzakelijk zijn om de bevoegdheid, waarvoor overeenkomstig artikel 25, zesde lid, toestemming is verleend, uit te kunnen oefenen. 2. Voor de uitoefening van de bevoegdheid, bedoeld in het eerste lid, is geen toestemming vereist als bedoeld in artikel 19.	instruments as referred to in Article 20, first paragraph, under b; c. to exercise the power as referred to in Article 22, first paragraph, under a; d. to exercise the power as referred to in Article 24; e. to exercise the power as referred to in Article 25; f. to collect as regards the telecommunication equipment present the information necessary in order to exercise the power for which permission has been granted in accordance with Article 25, sixth paragraph. 2. For the execution of the power as referred to in the first paragraph, first sentence, no permission as referred to in Article 19 is required.
Artikel 31 (1) (2) (3) (4) Wiv 1. De uitoefening van een bevoegdheid als bedoeld in deze paragraaf is slechts geoorloofd, indien de daarmee beoogde verzameling van gegevens niet of niet tijdig kan geschieden door raadpleging van voor een ieder toegankelijke informatiebronnen of van informatiebronnen waarvoor aan de dienst een recht op kennisneming van de aldaar berustende gegevens is verleend. 2. Indien is besloten tot het verzamelen van gegevens door uitoefening van een of meer bevoegdheden als bedoeld in deze paragraaf, wordt slechts die bevoegdheid uitgeoefend, die gelet op de omstandigheden van het geval, waaronder de ernst van de bedreiging	Article 31 (1) (2) (3) (4) Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) 1. Exercising the power as referred to in this section is permitted only if the intended collection of information cannot take place or cannot take place in time by consulting publicly accessible sources of information or sources of information for which the service has been granted a right to inspect the information contained in said sources. 2. If it has been decided to collect information by exercising one or more powers as referred to in this paragraph, only that power will be exercised that in view of the circumstances of the case, including the seriousness of the threat to the interests

van de door een dienst te beschermen belangen, mede in vergelijking met andere beschikbare bevoegdheden voor de betrokkene het minste nadeel oplevert. 3. De uitoefening van een bevoegdheid blijft achterwege, indien de uitoefening ervan voor betrokkene een onevenredig nadeel in vergelijking met het daarbij na te streven doel oplevert. 4. De uitoefening van een bevoegdheid dient evenredig te zijn aan het daarmee beoogde doel.	protected by a service, also in comparison with other available powers, will cause least harm to the person involved. 3. A power will not be exercised if the execution of said power will result in disproportionate harm to the person involved in comparison with the intended objective of the action. 4. The execution of a power must be proportionate to the intended objective of the action.
Artikel 32 Wiv De uitoefening van een bevoegdheid als bedoeld in deze paragraaf wordt onmiddellijk gestaakt, indien het doel waartoe de bevoegdheid is uitgeoefend is bereikt dan wel met de uitoefening van een minder ingrijpende bevoegdheid kan worden volstaan.	Article 32 Wiv (Intelligence and Security Service Act 2002) Exercising a power as referred to in this paragraph will be immediately terminated if the objective to which the power was exercised has been accomplished, or exercising a less far-reaching power would suffice.
Artikel 126Zd Sv 1. In geval van aanwijzingen van een terroristisch misdrijf is de opsporingsambtenaar, bij bevel daartoe van de officier van justitie, bevoegd in het belang van het onderzoek: (...)	Article 126Zd Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In case of an indication of a terrorist crime has the criminal investigator, by order of the public prosecutor and if necessary for the investigation, the competences to: (...)
Artikel 67 (1) (a) (b) Sv 1. Een bevel tot voorlopige hechtenis kan	Article 67 (1) (a) (b) Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure

worden gegeven in geval van verdenking van: a) een misdrijf waarop naar de wettelijke omschrijving een gevangenisstraf van vier jaren of meer is gesteld; b) een der misdrijven omschreven in de artikelen 132 , 138a , 138ab , 138b , 139c , 139d, eerste en tweede lid , 141a , 137c, tweede lid , 137d, tweede lid , 137e, tweede lid , 137g, tweede lid , 151 , 184a , 254a , 248d , 248e , 272 , 284, eerste lid , 285, eerste lid , 285b , 285c , 300, eerste lid , 321 , 323a , 326c, tweede lid , 350 , 350a , 350c , 350d 351 , 395 , 417bis en 420quater van het Wetboek van Strafrecht; (...)	1. A pre-trial detention order may be issued on the basis of suspicion of: a) a serious offence which carries a statutory term of imprisonment of at least four years; b) any of the serious offences defined in sections 132, 138a, 138ab, 138b, 139c, 139d(1) and (2),141a, 161sexies(1)(1°) and (2),137c (2), 137d(2), 137e(2), 137g(2), 184a, 254a, 248d, 248e,285(1), 285b, 300(1), 321, 323a,326c(2), 350, 350a, 351, 395, 417bis and 420quater of the Criminal Code; (...)
Artikel 3 Tijdelijk besluit Commissie advies- en verwijspunt klokkenluiden De taak van de Commissie is: a. op verzoek informatie en advies geven over en ondersteuning bieden bij mogelijke vervolgstappen aan degene die een vermoeden heeft van een mogelijke misstand die raakt aan het algemeen belang bij: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – het bedrijf of de organisatie waar hij werkt of heeft gewerkt; of – een ander bedrijf of een andere organisatie indien hij door zijn werkzaamheden kennis heeft gekregen van de mogelijke misstand. b. niet tot een persoon te herleiden ontwikkelingen en patronen die zijn af te	Article 3 Whistle blower Advice and Referral Commission Temporary Decree The task of the Commission is a. to provide information and advice when requested on and offer support with possible follow-up steps to anyone who suspects abuses detrimental to the public interest in: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – a business or organisation where he works or has worked; or – any other business or organisation if he has obtained knowledge of the possible abuses through his work; b. to identify from the information available to it by virtue of its task as referred to at a)

leiden uit de informatie die de Commissie heeft op grond van haar taak, bedoeld in onderdeel a, mededelen aan organisaties voor wie deze informatie relevant is; c. algemene voorlichting geven over het omgaan met een vermoeden van een mogelijke misstand.	trends and patterns that cannot be traced back to an individual and to communicate its findings to the relevant organisations; cc to provide general information about dealing with suspected abuses.
Artikel 125quinquies Ambtenarenwet 1. Voor zover deze onderwerpen niet bij of krachtens de wet zijn geregeld, worden voor de ambtenaren, door of vanwege het rijk aangesteld, bij of krachtens algemene maatregel van bestuur voorschriften vastgesteld betreffende: a. de verplichte aflegging van de eed of belofte door de ambtenaar bij zijn aanstelling; b. de melding en de registratie van nevenwerkzaamheden die de belangen van de dienst voor zover deze in verband staan met de functievervulling, kunnen raken; c. de openbaarmaking van de krachtens onderdeel b geregistreerde nevenwerkzaamheden van ambtenaren aangesteld in een functie waarvoor ter bescherming van de integriteit van de openbare dienst openbaarmaking van nevenwerkzaamheden noodzakelijk is; d. het verbieden van nevenwerkzaamheden waardoor de goede vervulling van de functie of de goede functionering van de openbare dienst, voor zover deze in verband staat met de functievervulling, niet in redelijkheid zou	Article 125quinquies Central and Local Government Personnel Act 1. To the extent that these matters are not regulated by or under the law, are the officials appointed by or on behalf of the rich, by or pursuant to general administrative rules governing: a. mandatory authenticity of the oath or affirmation by the official at his appointment.; b. notification and registration of ancillary activities that the interests of the service in so far in connection to get the job performance; c. disclosure under section b registered outside activities of officials appointed to a position for which to protect the integrity of the public service disclosure of ancillary activities is necessary; d. the banning of outside activities so that the proper performance of the function or the proper functioning of the public service, to the extent that this is related to job performance would not be reasonably assured; e. the declaration of financial interests or the possession of and transactions in securities

zijn verzekerd; e. de melding van financiële belangen respectievelijk van het bezit van en transacties in effecten, die de belangen van de dienst voor zover deze in verband staan met de functievervulling, kunnen raken voor ambtenaren aangesteld in een functie waaraan in het bijzonder het risico van financiële belangenverstrengeling of het risico van oneigenlijk gebruik van koersgevoelige informatie verbonden is; f. een procedure voor het omgaan met bij een ambtenaar levende vermoedens van misstanden binnen de organisatie waar hij werkzaam is. 2. Het bevoegd gezag van provincies, gemeenten en waterschappen stelt voor de ambtenaren door of vanwege deze lichamen aangesteld, onder gelijk voorbehoud voorschriften vast omtrent de onderwerpen, genoemd in het eerste lid. Als ambtenaar aangesteld door of vanwege een waterschap wordt aangemerkt hij die is aangesteld door het in het reglement van die instelling daartoe aangewezen gezag teneinde in dienst van het waterschap werkzaam te zijn. 3. De ambtenaar die te goeder trouw de bij hem levende vermoedens van misstanden meldt volgens de procedure, bedoeld in het eerste lid onder f, zal als gevolg van het melden van die vermoedens geen nadelige gevolgen voor zijn rechtspositie ondervinden tijdens en na het volgen van die procedure.	that the service of the interests insofar as these in connection to get the job performance appointed officials in a position which in particular the risk of financial interest or risk of improper use of inside information is linked; whether. a procedure for dealing with a civil servant living suspicions of wrongdoing within the organization where he works. 2. The competent authority of provinces, municipalities and water suggests the officials appointed by or on behalf of these entities, under identical reservation rules on the matters mentioned in the first paragraph. An official appointed by or on behalf of a water board shall he deemed appointed by the rules of that institution designated authority in order to be employed by the water board. 3. Official who in good faith report to him living suspicions of misconduct in accordance with the procedure referred to in paragraph f, is due to report such suspicions are not adversely affect his status during and after following that procedure.
Artikel 1(1)(e) Besluit melden vermoeden van misstand bij Rijk en Politie	Article 1(1)(e) Notification of suspected wrongdoing by Government and Police*

1. In dit besluit wordt verstaan onder: (...) e. vermoeden van een misstand: een op redelijke gronden gebaseerd vermoeden van: 1° een schending van wettelijke voorschriften of beleidsregels; 2° een gevaar voor de gezondheid, de veiligheid of het milieu; 3° een onbehoorlijke wijze van handelen of nalaten, die een gevaar vormt voor het goed functioneren van de openbare dienst; bij de organisatie waarin de melder werkt of heeft gewerkt of bij een andere organisatie indien hij uit hoofde van zijn ambtenaarschap met die organisatie in aanraking is gekomen en kennis heeft gekregen van de misstand; (...)	1. This Decree shall apply in case of: (...) e. suspected irregularity: a suspicion based on reasonable grounds: 1° a violation of laws or policies; 2° a danger to the health, safety or the environment; 3° an improper manner by act or omission that constitutes a threat to the proper functioning of the public service; the organization in which the detector is working or has worked or with another organization if it has been exposed by virtue of his civil service with that organization and became aware of the wrongdoing; (...)
Artikel 126g (c) Besluit melden vermoeden van misstand bij Defensie In deze paragraaf wordt verstaan onder: (...) c. vermoeden van een misstand: een op redelijke gronden gebaseerd vermoeden van: 1° een schending van wettelijke	Article 126g (c) Notification of suspected wrongdoing by the Ministry of Defence* In this section the term: (...) c. suspicion of misconduct: a reasonable suspicion of: 1 ° a violation of laws or policies;

voorschriften of beleidsregels; 2° een gevaar voor de gezondheid, de veiligheid of het milieu; 3° een onbehoorlijke wijze van handelen of nalaten, die een gevaar vormt voor het goed functioneren van de openbare dienst; bij het Ministerie van Defensie, of bij een andere organisatie indien de militair uit hoofde van zijn ambtenaarschap met die organisatie in aanraking is gekomen en kennis heeft gekregen van de misstand; (...)	2 ° a danger to the health, safety or the environment; 3.° an improper manner of acts or omissions that endanger ensuring the proper functioning of the public service; by the Ministry of Defense, or another organization if the military under his civil service with that organization has been exposed and has knowledge of the misconduct; (...)
Artikel 2 Bescherming van de melder 1. Een ieder die betrokken is bij de behandeling van een melding maakt de identiteit van de melder niet bekend zonder zijn instemming, dat zijn in ieder geval de leidinggevende, de vertrouwenspersoon en het externe meldpunt. 2. De ambtenaar zal als gevolg van de melding van een vermoeden van een misstand geen nadelige gevolgen ondervinden voor zijn rechtspositie. Onder nadelige gevolgen worden in ieder geval verstaan: a. het verlenen van ongevraagd ontslag; b. het niet verlengen van een aanstelling voor bepaalde tijd; c. het niet omzetten van een aanstelling voor	Article 2 Protection of the reporter* 1. Everyone who is involved in the treatment of a message does not reveal the identity of the messenger without his consent, which in any case the supervisor, the counselor and the external hotline. 2. The official, as a result of the reporting of suspected wrongdoing not adversely affected by his legal situation. Under adverse consequences in any case: a. provision of unsolicited dismissal; b. non-renewal of a contract for a specific period; c. it does not convert an appointment for a certain time in a permanent job;

bepaalde tijd in een vaste aanstelling; d. de opgelegde benoeming in een andere functie; e. het treffen van disciplinaire maatregelen; f. het onthouden van salarisverhoging, incidentele beloning of toekenning van vergoedingen; g. het onthouden van promotiekansen; h. het afwijzen van een verlofaanvraag, voor zover dit redelijkerwijs verband houdt met de door de melder gedane melding van een vermoeden van een misstand. 3. Het bevoegd gezag draagt er zorg voor dat de melder ook anderszins bij de uitoefening van zijn functie geen nadelige gevolgen van de melding ondervindt. 4. Het bepaalde in lid 2 en 3 van dit artikel geldt ook voor de ambtenaar die te goeder trouw een vermoeden van een misstand in een andere organisatie dan die van [GEMEENTE OF ORGANISATIE INVULLEN], volgens de in die organisatie geldende regels, bij die organisatie heeft gemeld. De bescherming geldt alleen als de ambtenaar: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – uit hoofde van zijn functie met die andere organisatie samenwerkt of heeft samengewerkt; – uit hoofde van zijn functie kennis heeft verkregen van de vermoede misstand; – het vermoeden van de misstand tijdig bij zijn leidinggevende heeft gemeld; 	d. imposed appointment to another post; e. taking disciplinary action; f. the withholding of salary increase, incidental reward or payment of the compensation; g. remembering promotion; h. the rejection of a request for leave, as far as is reasonably related to the expenditure report of a suspicion of wrongdoing by the detector. 3. The competent authority shall ensure that the detector also otherwise is not affected by the notification in the exercise of his functions. 4. The provisions of paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Article shall also apply to officials who in good faith suspected misconduct in an organization other than that of [CITY OR ORGANIZATION INSERT], in accordance with the rules in force in that organization, in which organization has reported. The protection applies only if the officer: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – by virtue of his duties with that other organization works or has worked; – by virtue of his office has obtained knowledge of the alleged wrongdoing; – the presumption of wrongdoing timely reported to his supervisor; – has adhered to the agreements in respect of those reporting to him or her are made by
--	--

– zich heeft gehouden aan de afspraken die ter zake van deze melding met hem of haar zijn gemaakt door het bevoegd gezag. 5. De ambtenaar heeft recht op juridische bijstand wanneer hij als gevolg van het te goede trouw melden van een vermoeden van een misstand nadelige gevolgen ondervindt in zijn rechtspositie, tijdens en/of na het volgen van deze regeling. Deze juridische bijstand wordt gefinancierd door [GEMEENTE OF ORGANISATIE INVULLEN].	the competent authority. 5. Civil servants are entitled to legal aid when it due to the reporting of suspected wrongdoing detrimental effects are having good faith in its legal position, during and / or after following those rules. This legal aid is funded by [MUNICIPALITY OR ORGANIZATION INSERT].
Artikel 1(c) (g) Regeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand 1. In deze regeling wordt verstaan onder: (...) a. vermoeden van een misstand: een vermoeden van <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – schending van wettelijke voorschriften of beleidsregels; – een gevaar voor de gezondheid, de veiligheid of het milieu; – een onbehoorlijke wijze van functioneren die een gevaar vormt voor het goed functioneren van de openbare dienst; (...) g. extern meldpunt: een externe commissie of persoon die als zodanig door het bevoegd gezag is aangewezen of de Onderzoeksraad	Article Article 1(c) and (g) Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse 1. This regulation shall apply to: (...) c. suspected irregularity: a suspicion of <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – breach of regulations or policies; – endangerment of health, safety or the environment; – an improper mode of operation which poses a threat to the proper functioning of the public service; (...) g. external hotline: an external committee or person designated as such by the competent authority or the Research Council Public Integrity (OIO).

Integriteit Overheid (OIO).	(...)
Artikel 1(e) Modelregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand en/of Integriteitschending In deze regeling wordt verstaan onder: (...) e. Vermoeden van een misstand en/of integriteitschending: een op redelijke gronden gebaseerd vermoeden met betrekking tot de waterschapsorganisatie waar de ambtenaar werkzaam is omtrent: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • een strafbaar feit • een schending van regelgeving of beleidsregels • het misleiden van justitie • een gevaar voor de volksgezondheid, de veiligheid of het milieu • het bewust achterhouden van informatie over deze feiten • misbruik van positie • misbruik van bevoegdheden 	Article 1(e) Model Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse and / or Integrity Violation* In these rules shall apply: (...) e. Suspicion of wrongdoing and / or breach of integrity: a reasonable grounds based conjecture regarding the water board organization in which the official operates about: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • an offense • a violation of legislation or policy • misleading justice • a danger to public health, safety or the environment • knowingly withholding information about such facts • abuse of position • abuse of power • conflict of interest

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • belangenverstrengeling • lekken van vertrouwelijke informatie • misbruik van informatie (...)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • leaks of confidential information • abuse of information (...)
Artikel 16 Modelregeling Melding Vermoeden Misstand en/of Integriteitschending 1. De medewerker zal als gevolg van de melding van een vermoeden van een misstand en/of integriteitschending geen nadelige gevolgen ondervinden voor zijn rechtspositie. Onder nadelige gevolgen worden in ieder geval verstaan besluiten tot: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. het verlenen van ongevraagd ontslag; b. het niet verlengen van een aanstelling voor bepaalde tijd; c. het niet omzetten van een aanstelling voor bepaalde tijd in een vaste aanstelling; d. de toegekende benoeming in een andere functie; e. het treffen van disciplinaire maatregelen; f. het onthouden van salarisverhoging, incidentele beloning of toekenning van vergoedingen; g. het onthouden van promotiekansen; 	Article 16 Model Rules on Reporting Suspected Abuse and / or Integrity Violation* 1. The employee shall as a result of the reporting of suspected abuse and / or breach of integrity not adversely affected by his legal situation. under adverse implications are understood in any case decide to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. the provision of unsolicited dismissal; b. non-renewal of a contract for a specific period; c. it does not convert an appointment for a certain time in a permanent job; d. the allocated appointment to another post; e. taking disciplinary action; f. the withholding of salary increase, incidental reward or award fees; g. remembering promotion;

h. het afwijzen van een verlofaanvraag; i. voor zover deze besluiten worden genomen vanwege de door de ambtenaar gedane melding van een vermoeden van een misstand en/of integriteitschending. 2. Het dagelijks bestuur draagt er zorg voor dat de melder ook anderszins bij de uitoefening van zijn functie geen nadelige gevolgen van de melding ondervindt. 3. Het bepaalde in lid 1 en 2 van dit artikel geldt ook voor de medewerker die te goeder trouw een vermoeden van een misstand en/of integriteitschending meldt in een andere organisatie dan die van het waterschap, volgens een bij die organisatie geldende regeling. De bescherming geldt alleen als de medewerker: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – uit hoofde van zijn functie met die andere organisatie samenwerkt of heeft samengewerkt; – uit hoofde van zijn functie kennis heeft verkregen van de vermoede misstand; – het vermoeden van de misstand tijdig bij zijn leidinggevende heeft gemeld; – zich heeft gehouden aan de afspraken die ter zake van deze melding met hem of haar zijn gemaakt door het dagelijks bestuur. 	h. the rejection of a request for leave; i. where these decisions are taken because of the disclosure made by the officer suspected of misconduct and / or integrity violation. 2. The Executive Board shall ensure that the detector also otherwise in the performance of his function is not affected by the notification. 3. Paragraph 1 and 2 of this article also applies to the employee who in good faith a suspicion of misconduct and / or integrity violations reported in an organization other than the water board, in accordance with rules applicable to that organization. The protection applies only if the employee: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – by virtue of his position with another organization which cooperates or has collaboration; – by virtue of his office has obtained knowledge of the alleged wrongdoing; – the presumption of wrongdoing timely reported to his supervisor; – has adhered to the agreements relating to this message with him or her made by the Executive Board.
Artikel 1(1)(a) Regeling procedure en bescherming bij melding van	Article 1(1)(a) Regulation procedure and protection in case of reporting of

vermoedens van een misstand 1. In deze regeling wordt verstaan onder: a. vermoeden van een misstand: een vermoeden van: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – schending van wettelijke voorschriften of beleidsregels; – een gevaar voor de gezondheid, de veiligheid of het milieu; – een onbehoorlijke wijze van functioneren die een gevaar vormt voor het goed functioneren van de openbare dienst; (...)	suspected wrongdoing* 1. In this regulation the following will be defined: a. suspected irregularity: a suspicion of: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – breach of regulations or policies; – endangering public health, public safety or the environment; – an improper way of operation which poses a threat to the proper functioning of the public service; (...)
Artikel 4 Regeling procedure en bescherming bij melding van vermoedens van een misstand 1. Binnen acht weken na de melding van een vermoeden van een misstand in de provinciale organisatie stellen gedeputeerde staten de ambtenaar of, in voorkomend geval, de vertrouwenspersoon, alsmede de persoon of personen op wie de melding betrekking heeft, schriftelijk en gemotiveerd in kennis van de bevindingen van het onderzoek, van hun oordeel daarover en van de eventuele consequenties die zij daaraan verbinden. 2. De in het eerste lid genoemde termijn van acht weken kan met maximaal vier weken worden verlengd. De ambtenaar of, in voorkomend geval, de vertrouwenspersoon, alsmede de persoon of personen op wie de melding betrekking heeft, worden daarvan	Article 4 Regulation procedure and protection in the reporting of suspected wrongdoing* 1. Within eight weeks of the reporting of suspected wrongdoing in the provincial organization notify the provincial executive officials or, where appropriate, the counselor and the person or persons to whom the report relates, in writing and motivated of the findings of the investigation, their judgment thereon and the possible consequences that they impose. 2. The eight-week period mentioned in the first paragraph may be extended by up to four weeks. The official or, where appropriate, the counselor and the person or persons who are the subject of the notification, shall be informed in writing.

schriftelijk in kennis gesteld.
Artikel 13 Regeling procedure en bescherming bij melding van vermoedens van een misstand 1. Onder nadelige gevolgen als bedoeld in artikel 125 quinquies, derde lid, van de Ambtenarenwet worden in ieder geval verstaan besluiten ten aanzien van de ambtenaar die strekken tot: a. het verlenen van ongevraagd ontslag; b. het niet verlengen van een aanstelling voor bepaalde tijd; c. het niet omzetten van een aanstelling voor bepaalde tijd in een aanstelling voor onbepaalde tijd; d. de opgelegde benoeming in een andere functie; e. het treffen van ordemaatregelen, schorsing en disciplinaire straffen als bedoeld in hoofdstuk G van de CAP; f. het onthouden van een salarisverhoging, van een incidentele beloning voor prestaties of ex-tra inzet en van toelagen, uitkeringen of vergoedingen als bedoeld in hoofdstuk C van de CAP; g. het onthouden van promotiekansen en h. het afwijzen van een verlofaanvraag, voor zover dit besluit wordt genomen vanwege een door de ambtenaar gedane	Article 13 Regulation procedure and protection in the reporting of suspected wrongdoing* 1. Under adverse effects referred to in Article 125quinquies, third paragraph, of the Civil Servants act at least includes decisions regarding the official who seek: a. grant unsolicited dismissal; b. non-renewal of a contract for a specific period; c. it does not convert an appointment for a certain time in a permanent contract; d. imposed appointment to another post; e. taking disciplinary measures, suspension and disciplinary penalties referred to in section G of the CAP; f. memorizing a salary increase, an occasional reward for performance or ex-tra effort and grants, benefits or allowances provided for in Section C of the CAP; g. the withholding of promotion and h. rejecting a leave application, provided that this decision is taken due to the official report made-over in accordance with this scheme. 2. The provincial executive shall ensure that the official also otherwise is not affected by the performance of his duties of the report

melding over-eenkomstig deze regeling. 2. Gedeputeerde staten dragen ervoor zorg dat de ambtenaar ook anderszins bij de uitoefening van zijn functie geen nadelige gevolgen ondervindt van de door hem gedane melding overeen-komstig deze regeling. 3. Het bepaalde in het eerste en tweede lid is van overeenkomstige toepassing op de ambtenaar die te goeder trouw een vermoeden van een misstand in een andere dan de provinciale organisatie volgens de in die organisatie geldende regels bij die organisatie heeft gemeld. De be-scherming geldt slechts als de ambtenaar a. uit hoofde van zijn functie met die organisatie samenwerkt of heeft samengewerkt; b. uit hoofde van zijn functie kennis heeft gekregen van de misstand die wordt vermoed; c. het vermoeden van de misstand in die andere organisatie tijdig vooraf bij zijn leidinggevende heeft gemeld, en d. zich heeft gehouden aan de afspraken die de provincie met hem heeft gemaakt en de aan-wijzingen die de provincie hem heeft gegeven ter zake van eventuele melding van de ver-moede misstand.	made by him and correspondingly this scheme. 3. The provisions in the first and second paragraph shall also apply to officials who in good faith has reported a suspicion of misconduct in other than the provincial organization under the rules of the organization applicable in the organization. The be-protection applies only if a civil servant a. by virtue of his position with that organization works or has worked; b. by virtue of his office was aware of the abuse which is suspected; c. suspicion of misconduct in that other organization in a timely manner has previously reported to his supervisor, and d. has complied with the agreements made by the province to him and the on changes to the county gave him in respect of any mention of the far-weary wrongdoing.
Best practice bepalingen II.1.7 De Nederlandse Corporate Governance Code Het bestuur draagt er zorg voor dat werknemers zonder gevaar voor hun rechtspositie de mogelijkheid hebben aan de voorzitter van het bestuur of aan een door hem aangewezen functionaris te rapporteren	Best practice provisions II.1.7 Dutch Corporate Governance Code The management board shall ensure that employees have the possibility of reporting alleged irregularities of a general, operational and financial nature within the company to the chairman of the management board or to an official designated by him, without

over vermeende onregelmatigheden binnen de vennootschap van algemene, operationele en financiële aard. Vermeende onregelmatigheden die het functioneren van bestuurders betreffen worden gerapporteerd aan de voorzitter van de raad van commissarissen. Deze klokkenluidersregeling wordt op de website van de vennootschap geplaatst.	jeopardising their legal position. Alleged irregularities concerning the functioning of management board members shall be reported to the chairman of the supervisory board. The arrangements for whistle-blowers shall be posted on the company's website.
Artikel 3a(1) (2) Wet Huis voor klokkenluiders 1. Het Huis kent een afdeling advies en een afdeling onderzoek. 2. De afdeling advies heeft tot taak: a. het informeren, adviseren en ondersteunen van een werknemer over de te ondernemen stappen inzake het vermoeden van een misstand; b. het verwijzen naar bestuursorganen of diensten die zijn belast met de opsporing van strafbare feiten of met het toezicht op de naleving van het bepaalde bij of krachtens enig wettelijk voorschrift of een andere bevoegde instantie waar het vermoeden van een misstand kan worden gemeld, en c. het geven van algemene voorlichting over het omgaan met een vermoeden van een misstand. 3. De afdeling onderzoek heeft tot taak: a. het beoordelen of het verzoekschrift ontvankelijk is met inachtneming van de voorwaarden, bedoeld in artikel 6, eerste lid;	Article 3a(1) and (2) Law on the House for whistle blowers* 1. The House has a advice department and research department. 2. The advisory department shall: a. inform, advise and support the employee on the steps to be taken on the suspicion of wrongdoing; b. referring to administrative bodies or departments responsible for the detection of criminal offenses or for supervising compliance with the provisions under or pursuant to any statutory provision or other competent authority where the suspected misconduct can be reported, and c. providing general information on dealing with suspected abuse. 3. The investigation department shall: a. judging whether the application is admissible subject to the conditions referred to in Article 6, first paragraph; (...)

(...)
Artikel 6(1)(d) Wet Huis voor klokkenluiders (...) d. het vermoeden van de misstand ter beoordeling staat van bestuursorganen of diensten die zijn belast met de opsporing van strafbare feiten of met het toezicht op de naleving van het bepaalde bij of krachtens enig wettelijk voorschrift of een andere daartoe bevoegde instantie waar het vermoeden van een misstand kan worden gemeld en het bestuursorgaan, de dienst of de andere daartoe bevoegde instantie het vermoeden van een misstand naar behoren behandelt of heeft behandeld; (...)	Article 6(1)(d) Law on the House for whistle blowers* (...) d. suspected of wrongdoing to assess condition of governing bodies or services responsible for the investigation of criminal offenses or for supervising compliance with the provisions under or pursuant to any statutory provision or any other competent authority where the suspicion of wrongdoing reported and the administrative authority, agency or other authorized body suspected of misconduct properly treat or have treated; (...)
Artikel 17c Wet Huis voor klokkenluiders Het Huis zendt jaarlijks aan beide kamers der Staten-Generaal een overzicht van de aanbevelingen van het Huis en van de wijze waarop aan de aanbevelingen vervolg is gegeven.	Article 17c Law on the House for whistle blowers* The House held annually to both Houses of Parliament a summary of the recommendations of the House and of the manner in which it is given to the follow-up recommendations.
Artikel 18 Wet Huis voor klokkenluiders Na artikel 658b van Boek 7 van het Burgerlijk Wetboek wordt een artikel ingevoegd, luidende:	Article 18 Law on the House for whistle blowers* After Article 658b of Book 7 of the Civil Code, an article is inserted, reading:

Artikel 658c De werkgever mag de werknemer niet benadelen als gevolg van het te goeder trouw en naar behoren melden van een vermoeden van een misstand als bedoeld in artikel 1, onderdeel d, van de Wet Huis voor klokkenluiders tijdens en na de behandeling van deze melding bij de werkgever of de daartoe bevoegde instantie.	Article 658c The employer may not discriminate against an employee because of the good faith and duly reporting suspected misconduct as defined in section 1 d of the Law House for whistle-blowers during and after the treatment of this notification to the employer or the competent authority.
Artikel 7:611 Burgerlijk Wetboek De werkgever en de werknemer zijn verplicht zich als een goed werkgever en een goed werknemer te gedragen.	Article 7:611 Dutch Civil Code The employer and the employee must behave as befits a reasonable and fair employer and a reasonable and fair employee.
Artikel 126nc Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf kan de opsporingsambtenaar in het belang van het onderzoek van degene die daarvoor redelijkerwijs in aanmerking komt en die anders dan ten behoeve van persoonlijk gebruik gegevens verwerkt, vorderen bepaalde opgeslagen of vastgelegde identificerende gegevens van een persoon te verstrekken. 2. Onder identificerende gegevens wordt verstaan: a) naam, adres, woonplaats en postadres; b) geboortedatum en geslacht; c) administratieve kenmerken; d) in geval van een rechtspersoon, in plaats van de gegevens, bedoeld onder a en b: naam, adres, postadres, rechtsvorm en	Article 126nc Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence, the investigating officer may, in the interest of the investigation, request the person, who may be reasonably considered to be the appropriate person for that purpose and who processes data other than for personal use, to provide specific stored or recorded identifying data of a person. 2. Identifying data shall mean: a) name, address, town and postal address; b) date of birth and sex; c) administrative characteristics; d) in the case of a legal person, instead of the details referred to in (a) and (b): name, address, postal address, legal form and

vestigingsplaats. (...)	registered office. (...)
Artikel 126nc Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf kan de opsporingsambtenaar in het belang van het onderzoek van degene die daarvoor redelijkerwijs in aanmerking komt en die anders dan ten behoeve van persoonlijk gebruik gegevens verwerkt, vorderen bepaalde opgeslagen of vastgelegde identificerende gegevens van een persoon te verstrekken. 2. Onder identificerende gegevens wordt verstaan: a) naam, adres, woonplaats en postadres; b) geboortedatum en geslacht; c) administratieve kenmerken; d) in geval van een rechtspersoon, in plaats van de gegevens, bedoeld onder a en b: naam, adres, postadres, rechtsvorm en vestigingsplaats. (...)	Article 126nc Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence, the investigating officer may, in the interest of the investigation, request the person, who may be reasonably considered to be the appropriate person for that purpose and who processes data other than for personal use, to provide specific stored or recorded identifying data of a person. 2. Identifying data shall mean: a) name, address, town and postal address; b) date of birth and sex; c) administrative characteristics; d) in the case of a legal person, instead of the details referred to in (a) and (b): name, address, postal address, legal form and registered office. (...)
Artikel 126nd Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, kan de officier van justitie in het belang van het onderzoek van degene van wie redelijkerwijs	Article 126nd Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence as defined in section 67(1), th

kan worden vermoed dat hij toegang heeft tot bepaalde opgeslagen of vastgelegde gegevens, vorderen deze gegevens te verstrekken. 2. Een vordering als bedoeld in het eerste lid kan niet worden gericht tot de verdachte. Artikel 96a, derde lid, is van overeenkomstige toepassing. De vordering kan niet betrekking hebben op persoonsgegevens betreffende iemands godsdienst of levensovertuiging, ras, politieke gezindheid, gezondheid, seksuele leven of lidmaatschap van een vakvereniging. (...)	e public prosecutor may, in the interest of the investigation, request the person, who may be reasonably presumed to have access to specific stored or recorded data, to provide this data. 2. A request, as referred to in subsection (1), may not be directed to the suspect. Section 96a(3) shall apply mutatis mutandis. The request may not relate to personal data concerning a person's religion or life principles, race, political persuasion, health, sex life or membership of a trade union. (...)
Artikel 126nf Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, dat gezien zijn aard of de samenhang met andere door de verdachte begane misdrijven een ernstige inbreuk op de rechtsorde oplevert, kan de officier van justitie, indien het belang van het onderzoek dit dringend vordert, van degene van wie redelijkerwijs kan worden vermoed dat hij toegang heeft tot gegevens als bedoeld in artikel 126nd, tweede lid, derde volzin, deze gegevens vorderen. (...)	Article 126nf Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence as defined in section 67(1), which serious offence in view of its nature or the relation to other serious offences committed by the suspect constitutes a serious breach of law and order, the public prosecutor may, if urgently required in the interest of the investigation, request the person, who may be reasonably presumed to have access to the data referred to in section 126nd(2, third sentence), to provide said data. (...)
Artikel 126nh Sv 1. De officier van justitie kan, indien het	Article 126nh Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure

belang van het onderzoek dit vordert, bij of terstond na de toepassing van artikel 126nd, eerste lid, 126ne, eerste of derde lid, of 126nf, eerste lid, degene van wie redelijkerwijs kan worden vermoed dat hij kennis draagt van de wijze van versleuteling van de in deze artikelen bedoelde gegevens, bevelen medewerking te verlenen aan het ontsleutelen van de gegevens door de versleuteling ongedaan te maken, dan wel deze kennis ter beschikking te stellen. (...)	1. The public prosecutor may, if required in the interest of the investigation, in or immediately after the application of section 126nd(1), 126ne(1) or (3), or 126nf(1), order the person who may be reasonably presumed to have knowledge of the manner of encryption of the data referred to in these sections to assist in decrypting the data by either undoing the encryption, or providing this knowledge. (...)
Artikel 126ni Sv 1. In geval van verdenking van een misdrijf als omschreven in artikel 67, eerste lid, dat gezien zijn aard of de samenhang met andere door de verdachte begane misdrijven een ernstige inbreuk op de rechtsorde oplevert, kan de officier van justitie, indien het belang van het onderzoek dit dringend vordert, van degene van wie redelijkerwijs kan worden vermoed dat hij toegang heeft tot bepaalde gegevens die ten tijde van de vordering zijn opgeslagen in een geautomatiseerd werk en waarvan redelijkerwijs kan worden aangenomen dat zij in het bijzonder vatbaar zijn voor verlies of wijziging, vorderen dat deze gegevens gedurende een periode van ten hoogste negentig dagen worden bewaard en beschikbaar gehouden. De vordering kan niet worden gericht tot de verdachte. (...)	Article 126ni Dutch Code of Criminal Procedure 1. In the case of suspicion of a serious offence as defined in section 67(1), which se rious offence in view of its nature or the relation to other serious offences committed by the suspect constitutes a serious breach of law and order, the public prosecutor may, if urgently required in the interest of the investigation, request the person who may be reasonably presumed to have access to specific data which at the time of the request is stored in a computerised device or system and which may be reasonably presumed to be particularly susceptible to loss or change, to store this data and keep it available for a period of maximum ninety days. The order may not be directed to the suspect. (...)

* Non-official translations.

ELSA NORWAY

Contributors

National Coordinator

Asbjørn Tobiassen Øi

National Academic Coordinator

Ronni Fawaz Knudsen

National Researchers

Julianne Thunes Vangsnes

Cilje Marie Stray

Ellen Xylander Skaug

Marius Mikkjel Kjølstad

Hana Temsamani

1. Introduction

Before we answer any of the questions a short introduction to Norwegian legal method is in our view appropriate as it differs from the legal method you might find outside of Europe's most northern countries.

Norwegian provisions normally have a brief and concise wording that is suited to have a wide meaning. The content of the wording is traditionally determined and established by the provision's preparatory works, case-law, international legal obligations, legal customs etc.

Case-law has a fundamentally important role in interpreting and establishing the meaning of the words in the provisions. It is therefore essential to explore case law when explaining the provisions that regulate the protection of journalistic sources in Norwegian legislation. It is the Norwegian Supreme Court's responsibility to ensure clarification of the law's meaning and to ensure legal development. The Supreme Court's decisions are therefore a far weightier legal source than subordinate court's decisions.

2. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

2.1. The content of Norwegian provisions of law

Norwegian legislation does not contain protection for the right of the journalist in particular, but it does provide protection for the press' right not to disclose their sources in general. Journalistic sources are included in this protection. There are provisions in both constitutional law and criminal procedural law that provide protection of this right, and there is also rules and guidelines for the press in The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press.

2.2. The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press

The Norwegian press follows a self-imposed code that regulates ethics and guidelines for the Press' work and role in the society. The code is enacted by The Norwegian Press Association, and it applies to printed press, radio, television and online publications.

In the code's section 3.5 it is stated that the name of a person who has provided information on a confidential basis shall not be divulged, unless the person concerned has explicitly given consent.¹ This protection of a source is absolute and there is a complaints commission to enforce the rules. This commission is called the Norwegian Press Complaints Commission, and individuals, companies and organisations may file complaints if a journalist breaks the code by disclosing the name of a source against this person's will.

¹ The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press 3.5.

Not only does the code protect the right not to disclose journalistic sources, but it also provides possibilities of sanctions towards journalists and other press agents that do not respect it.

2.3. Constitutional law

The right to freedom of expression is anchored in the Norwegian constitution, "Grunnloven" § 100. The constitution's wording is interpreted in light of the social development and the essence § 100 is that it states that there is a right to freedom of expression. The constitution's wording has a very wide extent, and it is as mentioned tradition in the legal system that the content of the Norwegian legislation is determined and established by case law.

The constitution's § 100 states in its first paragraph that there is a right to freedom of expression. In the next five paragraphs it concretizes this right and in which situations the right is to be restricted. In the second paragraph it is explicit stated that no one can be held legally responsible for having communicated or received information, ideas or messages, unless it is justifiable when held up against the considerations behind the right to freedom of expression. It also states that legal responsibility should be prescribed by law.

The paragraph does not give a specific expression of the right for journalists to not disclose their source of information, but this is a right that can be interpreted into the wording. The phrase stating no one can be held legally responsible for having communicated or received information may also work as a legal basis to argue that the press have a right not to disclose their source of information, since the press can't be held legally responsible for receiving or communicating this information. The freedom of the press is a part of the freedom of speech, anchored in the constitution. As mentioned above, Norwegian laws have a very wide and extensive wording, but how it is to be understood is determined through interpretations. It may be necessary to examine case-law to understand the meaning behind the words.

2.4. Criminal law

When it comes to criminal law, the rights for the journalists not to disclose their source of information, is specifically expressed. Initially, there is an obligation to testify for someone that is summoned to testify for the court. This obligation is stated by the criminal procedure act ("straffeprosessloven") § 108.²

However, if a journalist is summoned as a witness, the right to remain silent is enshrined in the criminal procedure act § 125.

² Lov om rettergangsmåten i straffesaker (1981) § 108

2.4.1. The right to remain silent

The provision in § 125 states that the editor of a printed publication may refuse to answer questions regarding the identity of an author of an article or message in a publication, or the source to information in it.³ The same applies for questions regarding the identity of a source for other information entrusted in the editor to use in their work.

The right to refuse to answer these questions also applies to others that have received knowledge of the author's or source's identity through their work for the same publisher, editorial, press agency or printing house.

In the Norwegian hierarchy of legal sources, the provisions in the law is the weightiest legislation. Initially, the main rule is therefore that journalists have a right to remain silent when asked questions regarding the sources of their information.

However, the third paragraph in the criminal procedure act § 125 regulates exceptions from this right. These exceptions will be in part 2; provisions that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his or her sources.

2.4.2. Status as charged

Another situation that provides a journalist with the right to refuse to disclose his or her sources is where a journalist is charged with accusations of defamation. The same right applies to editors. In Norwegian criminal law, the status as charged in a crime gives the right to remain silent and not answer any questions. This is expressed in the criminal procedure act § 90.

If the charges are against someone other than an editor or journalist, the provision in § 125 states that there is a right for editors of printed publications to be exempt from the duty to testify against this person in criminal cases. The editor may refuse to answer questions about who has written an article or message or who has been a journalistic source or given information about it. In Norwegian criminal law, an editor is understood as a person who decides the content of a printed publication. This definition is found in the criminal law, "straffeloven" § 270. The same applies for questions regarding sources to information entrusted in the editor for usage in the editor's business. The right to exempt also covers others that have acquired knowledge of these sources through their work for publishers, editorial offices, press agencies or printing houses.

2.4.3. Case-law

The Norwegian Supreme Court considers the extent of the right to not answer questions about an author's identity in the decision "Runestein-dommen" (2010)⁴. The case concerned an order to disclose evidence, and the main question was if the publisher of an online newspaper could refuse to disclose its evidence with reference to the protection of sources in the criminal procedure act § 125.

³ Lov om rettergangsmåten i straffesaker (1981) § 125

⁴ Rt-2010-1381

The local police had ordered the online newspaper to disclose an anonymous author of a post on the online newspaper's webpage. The post contained a claim that the author illegally kept and sold a stone that was considered a cultural heritage.

The police demanded that the newspaper disclosed the IP-address and user details of the author. They argued that the protection of sources derived by § 125 did not cover the author's post because it could be viewed as a sales ad.

The Supreme Court disagreed with the police, and pointed out that the post could not be compared with a sales ad. This was because the main content was criticism of the legislation and regulations regarding private individuals' discovery of cultural heritage monuments. The court concluded that the post was covered by the protection from § 125.

The next issue the court had to consider was whether the case could be covered by the exception in the third paragraph in § 125. This exception prohibits protection of sources in particular cases. The assignment will return to this part of the decision in part 2.2.3.

3. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

3.1. Law

In Norwegian law, not disclosing a journalistic source is formulated as a right for the journalists, but not a duty. There are not any provisions of law that clearly states a duty of confidentiality or imposes legal responsibility for breaking the duty of confidentiality.

The criminal act § 268 contains a provision that makes an editor legally responsible for the contents of published material. The law states that publishing confidential information is punishable, but the actions need to violate other provisions of law to be affected by the provision. Since there is no law that specifically states that a journalist has a duty not to disclose his or her sources, this specific action would not be punishable in light of the criminal act.

3.2. The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press

The fact that Norwegian law does not contain provisions that prohibits a journalist from disclosing sources, that does not mean that they are free to do so. As explained in the previous question, the Norwegian press follows a self-imposed code of ethics for the Press' work and role in the society.

The previous question also explained how this code contains a guideline in section 3.5 that says that the name of a person who has provided information on a confidential basis shall not be divulged, unless the person concerned has explicitly given consent.

3.3. Sanctions

The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press is absolute, and it is very unusual for the press to violate the code. As mentioned the Norwegian Press Complaints Commission enforces the provisions of the code. However, violations are not imposed with fines or other punishments. The sanctions are strictly restricted to reprimands and may be damaging to the professional reputation of the journalist or editor. A public apology to the people affected by the violation may also be ordered.

The reason that there are not more intrusive sanctions is that it has not been regarded necessary as most journalists have great respect for the Code of Ethics. Still, there is an ongoing discussion whether the Norwegian Press Complaints Commission should have authority to impose fines as a sanction to violations of the code. The main argument against this is that legal provisions and the ethical guidelines should be kept separated, and it needs to be decided by the “Storting”, the Norwegian parliament, and prescribed by law if fines are going to be imposed.

4. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it, in your view, a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

4.1. Introduction

In the national legislation, the protection of journalistic sources is found in the two central Procedure Acts, the Norwegian Dispute Act for civil cases and the Norwegian Criminal Procedure Act for criminal cases. In the following, the sources will be presented, regarding only the definition of what the provisions aim to protect. Leaving out the following paragraphs, which explains the procedure when the Court decides to order the evidence presented, or the source revealed. This will be presented under Question 4.

4.2. National legislation

4.2.1. The Norwegian Criminal Procedure Act, Article 125

From the Norwegian Criminal Procedure Act (1981), Article 125, first and second paragraph:
“The editor of a printed publication may refuse to answer questions concerning the identity of the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to questions concerning who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work.

Other persons who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work for the publishers, editors, press agency or printers in question have the same right as the editor.”

4.2.2. The Norwegian Dispute Act, Article 22-11

The Norwegian Dispute Act (2005) article 22-11, includes a parallel provision for civil cases.

Article 22-11 Exemption from the duty to provide evidence for the mass media – protection of sources.

“The editor of a printed publication may refuse to provide access to evidence about who is the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to evidence about who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work. Other persons who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work for the publishers, editors, press agency or printing office in question have the same right as the editor.”

4.3. Terms in use in the legislation

4.3.1. The term “editor”

The “editor of a printed publication” is mentioned in both provisions. The ordinary meaning of the terms, therefore gives the editor of any newspaper, magazine, publication in paper or on the Internet these rights. The provision in both the Criminal Procedure Act and the Dispute Act are clear about the right not to disclose sources in the editor’s publication.

As the second sentence states, this right is also for information “that has been confided to the editor for use in his work”. According to the preparatory works (NOU 1969:3 page 207) of the Criminal Procedure Act, this sentence was added due to a request from the Norwegian Press Association. They wanted the protection to be not only for the “printed publication”, but also for the information the editor or journalists have before the publication is “printed”.

4.3.2. The term “other persons”

According to the second paragraph in Article 125 and the last sentence in Article 22-11, the right is not only for the editor. The Criminal Procedure Act and the Dispute Act also includes “Other persons” who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work. According to the paragraphs, they have the “same right as the editor”.

These “other persons” are not defined in any further way, but the provision lists the ways persons can be affected, through their work for “the publishers, editors, press agency or printers”. The provisions therefore do not attempt to define what a “journalist” is, but they have a knowledge-based rule that gives protection for those who work as journalists, and also other people who work in the press.

It is therefore not dependent whether or not a person works as a journalist, but if they have “acquired knowledge ... through their work”. This gives journalists working for or with a “printed publication” clear protection.

4.3.3. The term “printed publication”

To illustrate the meaning of a “printed publication” in the sense of the provision in the Article 125 of the Criminal Procedure Act, is a decision from the Supreme Court about whether or not this also includes a published book.

In the decision found in Rt. 1992 s. 39 “Edderkoppen” (The spider), two journalists had published a book about the Norwegian Surveillance Service. The Control unit of the Surveillance Service confronted the authors and wanted them to reveal their sources. They refused, claiming it was under the protection of journalistic sources, and protected by the elder Civil Procedure Law (from 1915), Section 209a (Now Section 125 in the Criminal Procedure Act).

The Supreme Court deliberated on whether the Section 209a only would apply for the editor of a paper or magazine. As the ordinary meaning given to the terms of the provision appeared to only apply for the editor, the wording presumes to not give that opportunity. But the Supreme Court extended the reach of the protection given by this article due to development of the press. On page 48 in the verdict justice Lødrup says the following: “I find it natural to understand this so that it is the very journalistic work that should be protected. It should, therefore, not be essential if the journalist in the specific case can be said to have acted on behalf of a newsroom. This provision should in my opinion be understood in such a way as that the individual press employee is given an independent right to protect their sources.” The court concluded that the journalist had the right not to reveal their sources.

According to this decision, the protection is not only for “printed publications” but also for a book, in this case. The interpretation was beyond the natural meaning of the term in Section 209a, but the book “Edderkoppen” and the authors were in a special position, according to the Supreme Court. As they are two journalists who are also authors, their book can be viewed as another way to present what would else be an article in a printed publication. Therefore, the interpretation of this decision cannot be that all books are under this protection. But it is a clear statement that authors, who feel the need to protect their sources when they are speaking up about critical conditions in the society, have the right to do so.

A later decision, which also gives insight to the Supreme Court’s interpretation the extent of what the provision applies for, is found in Rt. 2010 s. 1381. A man published a commentary on an article at an Internet debate forum, claiming he had found a rare rune stone. The Supreme Court found that posts from readers on the debate forum linked to articles on websites such as this one, had the same protection of sources, as the website was under an editor’s control and responsibility. In this case, an editor, or his deputy, was constantly supervising the posts, and therefore they can be viewed as under an editor’s responsibility.

The earlier “Edderkoppen” case is mentioned in paragraph 20, as Judge Normann writes, “the assessment of Section 125 must be secured in a long-term perspective, according to Rt. 1992 s.

39". With this, he means that the reach of the provision is constantly developing, and when assessed, must be viewed in this "long-term perspective". Now, therefore, it would be natural to include Internet pages where the content is journalistic. This decision shows that the reach of the protection is beyond "printed" publications in hard copy, but also applies for pages on the Internet.

5. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

5.1. Introduction

In the following, the paragraph of Section 125 in the Criminal Procedure Act will be presented, as it is parallel to the one in the Dispute Act. The Norwegian legal method will also be presented shortly, when it comes to how the law is interpreted by judges, and implemented. After that, an explanation of how the media is self-regulatory combined with the legal safeguards will be given.

5.2. Legal safeguards

5.2.1. Presentation of the legal safeguards

The main legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources are the two mentioned Sections in the Criminal Procedure Act (1981) and the Dispute Act (2005).

In the Criminal Procedure Act, Section 125, the third and fourth paragraph explains how the procedure is to be followed in court. It shows that the demand for any order of disclosure is to be reviewed by the court, an independent judicial body.

Section 125, third-fifth paragraph:

"When important social interests indicate that the information should be given and it is of substantial significance for the clarification of the case, the court may, however, on an overall evaluation order the witness to reveal the name. If the author or source has revealed matters that it was socially important to disclose, the witness may be ordered to reveal the name only when this is found to be particularly necessary.

When an answer is given, the court may decide that it shall only be given to the court and the parties at a sitting in camera and under an order to observe a duty of secrecy.

The provisions of this section apply correspondingly to any director or employee of any broadcasting agency."

5.2.2. Relevant terms of the legal safeguards

The court must first determine whether "important social interests" indicates that the "information should be given", and it must also be "of substantial significance for the clarification of the case". This means that the court first has to find out if the information is sufficiently relevant to the. It also has to be of “important social interests”, indicating a threshold for the court to order the disclosure of the source.

If these terms are fulfilled, the court “may” order the witness to reveal the name, after an “overall evaluation”. As the section is formulated, it is up to the court to make the evaluation. They have to decide which interests are more important in the case presented to them, the protection of sources or the social interests.

5.2.3. The legal safeguards in the context of legal method

Any further information about how to decide this is not found in the provisions, but the preparatory works and the rulings of the Supreme Court on the matter are other legal sources that weigh in. In accordance with Norwegian legal method, the ordinary meaning given to the terms of the provisions will always be the starting point. But as Norwegian provisions often are written in a short, and sometimes ambiguous, way the judges have to go through more legal sources than just the provision itself to find the legal rule.

In this case, preparatory work and former rulings from the Supreme Court are good sources to look at, as they are more in depth and more precise than the short provisions. This will help judges to define the right enshrined in the provision. They use said legal sources combined with the terms in the provision, to find the legal rule, on how to implement the legal safeguards.

5.3. Self-regulatory mechanisms

5.3.1. Overview

The legal safeguards are combined with self-regulatory mechanisms. There are two main bodies, which are non-governmental, that regulate the press. They receive complaints from the people and make statements. They also have breaching parties edit their work so it is in accordance with the bodies' own rules. The main body is the Norwegian Press Association and their Norwegian Press Complaints Commission. There is also a Broadcasting Council (Kringkastingsrådet), which is an advisory board of the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation (“NRK”).

Other relevant organisations are the Norwegian Union of Journalists, and the Association of the Norwegian Editors, which have their own “Rights and duties of the editor”-declaration.

5.3.2. The Norwegian Press Association

The Norwegian Press Association has its own Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press (Vær varsom-plakaten), which applies to printed press, TV, radio and internet publications. This includes “The Role of the Press in the society”, hereunder “Integrity and credibility”, “Journalistic Conduct and Relations with the Sources”, and “Publication rules”.

The Code of Ethics is written in a clear and precise way, stating in Section 1.1 that freedom of speech, information and press are the basic elements of a democracy. From there it gives thorough and precise information about the responsibilities of an editor, on advertisement, choice of sources, when and how to protect sources and rules for publishing different kinds of information.

The Norwegian Press Complaints Commission is the complaints commission of the Norwegian Press Association. Their vision is to watch over, and promote the standard stated in the Code of Ethics. They assess complaints and publicly publish their reports. They received 500 complaints in 2015, and confirmed 65 cases as breaches of their ethics code.

This is an example of how the press is self-regulatory, as the press itself controls and gives statements about what is in breach with good journalistic work. The party in breach of the ethics code must publish a clearly visible statement in their own “media”.

5.3.3. How legal safeguards and self-regulatory mechanisms combine

The legal safeguards combine well with the self-regulatory mechanisms. The reason is that the legal safeguards in the Dispute Act (2005) are only activated when someone is sued. The legal safeguards in the Criminal Procedure Act (1981) are only activated when someone is charged with a criminal offence.

In other cases, the Press Complaints Commission receive complaints about possible breaches to the press' own Code of Ethics. The same is for the Broadcasting Council. Therefore, the press is self-regulatory when it's held outside of the court.

6. In the respective national legislation, are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000)7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

6.1 Introduction

This chapter provides a comparative study of the Norwegian legislation in light of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Committee of ministers of the Council of Europe with regards to the limits of source protection.

The Recommendation No R (2000) 7 (hereinafter the “Recommendation”) reinforces and supplements the principles established by the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter “ECtHR”) in its judgment Goodwin v. the United Kingdom (hereinafter Goodwin).⁵ The judgment forms a precedent for the interpretation of Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter the “Convention” or “ECHR”).

“Protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom....Having regard to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention, unless it is justifiable by an overriding requirement in the public interest”, cf. Goodwin.⁶

This quotation makes clear that Article 10, devoted to “Freedom of expression”, protects the right of journalists not to disclose their sources⁷, and that this protection is not absolute.⁸

6.2 Principle 3 (Limits to the right of non-disclosure)

Principle 3 of the Recommendation requires that the right of non-disclosure “must not be subject to other restrictions than those mentioned in Article 10 paragraph 2 of the Convention.” Accordingly, the authorities may validly interfere with the right to freedom of expression, if the interference is prescribed by law and is necessary in a democratic society for the legitimate aim pursued.⁹ Article 10 paragraph 2 lists the legitimate aims. Among them: Prevention of disorder or crime; protection of the rights of others.¹⁰ Hence, paragraph 2 “shapes the framework for balancing the freedom of expression as a fundamental human right with other human rights and freedoms.”¹¹

Principle 3 b. of the Recommendation outlines a series of “checks and criteria” which must be considered in the balancing test.¹² In example: disclosure should not be deemed necessary unless it can be convincingly established that reasonable alternative measures do not exist or have been exhausted and that the legitimate interest in disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest. A disclosure may only be ordered if circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature, and the necessity of the disclosure responds to a pressing social need.¹³ Competent authorities shall pay particular regard to the importance of the right of non-disclosure and the pre-eminence given to it in the case-law of

⁵ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section I, para. 4.

⁶ ECtHR Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, 27 March 1996 (17488/90), para. 39.

⁷ Rt. 2013-1290 section 25.

⁸ Dirk Voorhoof. The protection of journalistic sources: Recent developments and actual changes, section 1 and 2.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Article 10, para. 2

¹¹ Dirk Voorhoof, The protection of journalistic sources: Recent developments and actual changes (2002), section 1 and 2.

¹² Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 26.

¹³ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Principle 3.

ECtHR when balancing these rights, and may only order a disclosure if there exists an overriding requirement in the public interest, cf. Goodwin.¹⁴

The Recommendation states that member states enjoy a certain margin of appreciation in assessing the pressing social need.¹⁵ In other words, the ECtHR must take into account cultural, ideological or legal differences between the member states when evaluating whether a breach of the convention has taken place.¹⁶ This national margin of appreciation is in the case of source protection “circumscribed by the interest of a democratic society in ensuring and maintaining a free press”, cf. Goodwin, section 40. In this respect, the Recommendation provides a European consensus and “a basis for common European minimum standards concerning the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information”.¹⁷ The Recommendation does not prevent member States from introducing a higher protection of the sources in their legislation.¹⁸ The object in the following is to examine if the level of protection in the Norwegian legislation is in line with the Recommendation as outlined above.

6.3. Norwegian legislation

6.3.1. Source protection

Source protection is secured under The Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraphs 1 and 2 for criminal cases and under the Dispute act section 22-11 paragraphs 1 and 3 for civil cases.¹⁹ The general rule is that journalists are not obliged to disclose their confidential journalistic sources. The provisions states that the editor and other media workers may refuse to provide access to evidence about the identity of their sources.^{20 21} This means that in circumstances where evidence can identify confidential journalistic sources, journalists are exempted from the otherwise civic duty of providing evidence before the court.²² The right of non-disclosure is furthermore shielded under the Constitution of Norway section 100, devoted to freedom of ¹⁴ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Principle 3 and Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 28.

¹⁵ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Principle 3.b.

¹⁶ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), page 39.

¹⁷ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section I para. 4-5.

¹⁸ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section I para. 7.

¹⁹ References in this paper will be made with the wordings of The Dispute Act 22-11. The Criminal Procedure Act 125, is identical in substance.

²⁰ The Dispute Act, section 22-11, para.1. “The editor of a printed publication may refuse to provide access to evidence about who is the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to evidence about who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work”.

²¹ The provisions protect confidential sources in both publicised and unpublicised material, and governs both court orders of disclosure and force measures like judicial search and seizure cf. Rt. 2015-1022 section 67. Both the name of a source and information that can lead to identification of the source are protected, cf. Rt-1995-1166. Hence not all information from the source is protected cf. NOU 2009:15, p. 332.

²² The duty to witness and give evidence in court is regulated by the Criminal Procedure Act section 108 and the Dispute Act section 24-1.

expression²³; and protected under Article 10 of the ECHR, incorporated into the Norwegian legislation in 1999. The Convention will in circumstances of conflict, precede other Norwegian jurisdiction with exception of the Lex superior Constitution of Norway.²⁴ The Code of Ethics of the Norwegian press states an absolute protection of confidential sources.²⁵ The judicial system does not give this absolute right. Source protection can be limited under certain conditions.

6.3.2. Limits of source protection

Exemption from source protection is regulated by the Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraph 3 and the Dispute Act section 22-11 paragraph 2;

“If important public interests require that evidence [...] is presented and it is of considerable importance to the clarification of the case, the court may nevertheless, based on an overall assessment, order the evidence to be presented or the source to be revealed. If the author or source has discovered circumstances that it is in the public interest to publicise, such an order may only be made if it is particularly necessary for the name to be publicised.”²⁶

6.3.2.1. First term, “important public interests”

The first sentence establishes the general rule and poses two basic terms. Firstly, disclosure must be required by “important public interests”. According to the preparatory work, the term “public interest” does not only refer to the vital interests of the public and of the state, but also to general and social interests of the society.²⁷ In many cases, the public might have an interest in protecting the rights of others,²⁸ like every individual’s right to a private life, peace, reputation and honour. The preparatory work refers in this respect in particular to the rights provided in Article 8 of the Convention and in Article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.²⁹ The limits of non-disclosure will subsequently be dependent on whether the “public interest” in the given case is found to have sufficient weight.³⁰

6.3.2.2. Second term, “clarification of the case”

²³ Subsequent to the Constitutional revision in 2004.

²⁴ Act relating to the strengthening of the status of human rights in Norwegian law [The Human Rights Act] section 3.

²⁵ Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press adopted by the Norwegian Press Association June 13. 2015. 3.4. Section 3.5 “Do not divulge the name of a person who has provided information on a confidential basis, unless consent has been explicitly given by the person concerned”.

²⁶ The Dispute Act section 22-11 para.2

²⁷ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 24 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok, 2009, p.110.

²⁸ Cf. ECHR Article 10 para. 2 “the protection of the reputation or rights of others”.

²⁹ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 24.

³⁰ Ibid.

Secondly, disclosure must be “of considerable importance to the clarification of the case”. According to the preparatory work this is intended as an absolute condition for requiring the name of sources.³¹ This means that if “the same public interests can be adequately preserved in another way than by exemption from mass media’s source protection”, like through alternative investigation measures in criminal cases, a disclosure-order cannot be imposed.³² In the case of Rt. 2002-489 the term was considered fulfilled although no investigation was undertaken prior to the disclosure-order. This ruling has received criticism on this point.³³ The Supreme Court has later affirmed, in several rulings, the absoluteness of the term regarding alternative measures. In Rt. 2004-1400 section 41, the Supreme Court stated that there was no doubt the term was met; “SEFO [The Special Police Investigation Commission] has carried out a number of interrogations and has also attempted other measures, without bringing the investigation closer to a clarification.” In Rt. 2013-1290 section 24, the term was met based on the fact that the police investigation stood deadlocked. The term was also met in Rt. 2010-1381 section 50. The judge pronounced: “I can hardly see that it exists alternative and practically feasible steps of investigation”. In sum, the limits of non-disclosure will be dependent on which other sources of information that exist to clarify the case.³⁴

“If both terms [required by “important public interests” and “considerable importance to the clarification of the case”] are fulfilled, the court may after a concrete assessment make an exemption from the source protection.³⁵ Reference can here be made to the correlating standards of the Recommendation Principle 3: A disclosure can only be ordered if it can be convincingly established that “the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure...”, and that “reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted...”.

6.3.3. “The overall assessment”

The direct effect of the ECHR in Norwegian jurisdiction entails an obligation for the Supreme Court of Norway to secure source protection in accordance with the case-law of the ECtHR³⁶ with particular regard to the Goodwin- case;³⁷ and interpret the Norwegian provisions narrowly in light of Article 10 of ECHR.³⁸ This is also asserted in case-law. “If the basic terms in Section 125, third paragraph, to make an exemption from the protection of sources are fulfilled, the various interests must be weighed, and the assessment must be made in accordance with Article 10 of ECHR and ECtHR’s practice...the key aspect is that the protection of sources can only be

³¹ Ibid.

³² Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 119.

³³ Ibid p. 120.

³⁴ Ibid p. 119.

³⁵ Rt. 2010-1381 section 49.

³⁶ Dirk Voorhoof, The protection of journalistic sources: Recent developments and actual changes (2002), section 3.

³⁷ Cf. Rt. 2004-1400 section 46.

³⁸ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 126.

waived if there is an “overriding requirement in the public interest”, cf. Rt. 2015-1022 section 67. Consequently, the “overall assessment” correlates to the balancing test of the ECtHR.

In line with the Recommendation, the Supreme Court pays particular regard to the importance of the right of non-disclosure. “The essential public interest the source protection provisions aim to protect is media’s dissemination of news and free dissemination of opinions. This must therefore be the starting point of the evaluation after the third paragraph”, cf. Rt. 2010-1381 section 52. In the evaluation, the court weighs the various interests against the interest of source protection. Factors of importance in the weighing are set out in the preparatory work and in case-law. Depending on the case in question, the court shall give special consideration to the chilling effect of a disclosure-order, the nature of the case, the extent to which the information has public interest, the seriousness of the matter or crime in question, considerations that speak for an efficient prosecution of a crime.³⁹

The Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraph 3 and The Dispute Act section 22-11 paragraph 2, introduces a special rule in sentence two:

“If the author or source has discovered circumstances that it is in the public interest to publicise, such an order may only be made if it is particularly necessary for the name to be publicised.”

This special rule has not yet been applied by the Supreme Court.⁴⁰ The general rule of sentence one, examined above, has so far proved sufficient to determine the limits of non-disclosure. The intention of the special rule is to further strengthen source protection for information that it is in the public interest to publicise; typically, the watchdog journalism that exposes information of public interest, like misuse of public authority.⁴¹ The special rule is dependent on the fulfilment of all the terms in the general rule.⁴² It is held in the preparatory work and case-law that for information “it is in the public interest to publicise”, whether balancing the rights after the general rule or the special rule, “the protection of sources to a large extent is absolute. Otherwise it must exist “an overriding requirement in the public interest” in order for sources to be waived, cf. Rt. 2010-1381 section 61, cf. Rt. 2004-1400 section 46, cf. Rt. 2015-1022 section 67. Where the information is of no public interest, the threshold for waiving sources is lower.⁴³ If the court is left in serious doubt, subsequent to evaluating any of the terms, the ruling shall fall out in favour of source protection, in line with the principles behind ensuring a free press in a democratic society.⁴⁴

6.4. Case-law

³⁹ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 25 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.128-129.

⁴⁰ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.121.

⁴¹ NOU 1988:2 p.20

⁴² Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.121.

⁴³ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 24.

⁴⁴ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 25 also cited in Rt. 2010-1381 section 56 and Rt. 2015-1022 section 42.

Case-law has developed and established the limits of source protection in Norway. In particular, four cases have contributed to establishing the current limits of non-disclosure in Norwegian legislation in line with the case-law of ECtHR and the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. These four rulings of the Supreme Court all make a clear foundation for their overall assessment in the Goodwin case; and pay particular regard “to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society”⁴⁵, cf. Rt. 2013-1290 section 25 (police confidentiality, police corruption), Rt. 2010-1381 section 58 (criminal offence), Rt. 2004-1400 section 43 (police confidentiality), Rt. 2015-1022 section 67 (major crime). The rulings, furthermore, pay particular regard to “the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom”⁴⁶ and the pre-eminence given to non-disclosure in the case-law of ECtHR, cf. Goodwin, cf. the Recommendation principle 3. Two of the four cases will be presented in the following.

6.4.1. Rt. 2015-1286, The Rolfsen case

Concerning protection of sources in unpublished documentary film material about the ISIS-network; seizure by the PST (Police Secret Service) in unpublished film material of Norwegian film maker Ulrik Imtiaz Rolfsen.

6.4.1.1. Conflicting interests

The prevention of major crime, namely recruitment of fighters to the Islamic State (ISIS) terrorist network weighed against protection of journalistic sources.

6.4.1.2. Court assessment

The Supreme Court made a direct reference to the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 and its list of examples of “major crimes”. It confirmed that crimes under anti-terror legislation fall within this list, and that there could be a reason to make an exemption from source protection. The documentary film gave insight into the ISIS terrorist network and hence was “at the heart of investigative journalism”, cf. section 70. The project was made possible only because of the trust between the filmmaker and the source. The sources had withdrawn subsequent to the seizure, and the court assumed that “effective protection of sources is vital to achieving the film...On this basis an especially strong need to protect sources exist” cf. section 70-71, cf. the chilling effect. The Supreme Court furthermore held that “considerations relating to investigation of such a serious matter also carry great weight”, cf. section 71. The criteria of “important public interest” was fulfilled. The court found it hard to see that the condition “of vital significance to the clarification of the case” was fulfilled.

⁴⁵ ECtHR Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, 27 March 1996 (17488/90), para. 39.

⁴⁶ Ibid.

6.4.1.3. Ruling

The court unanimously ruled that the seizure was to be set aside. The ruling illustrates that the threshold for waiving sources is remarkably high. The interest of counter-terrorism investigation was not sufficient to outweigh the interest of non-disclosure. It is presumed in the preparatory work, that the terms of the overall assessment in general must be heaved in times of crisis, public state of emergency and in times of war.⁴⁷ This ruling shows, contrary to this presumption, that freedom of expression was not sacrificed in 2015 – a time when the world had declared war against terror.

6.4.2. Rt. 2013-1290, The Brennpunkt case

The news desk of NRK Brennpunkt, an investigative journalism show on NRK TV, was offered to buy secret documents from the criminal investigation of the case of Anders Behring Breivik⁴⁸. The documents were leaked from someone within the police to the source who offered it to the desk. NRK Brennpunkt declined the offer. The Norwegian Bureau for the Investigation of Police Affairs filed a motion of disclosure of the source, directed at the managing editor of the desk.

6.4.2.1. Conflicting interests

Revelation of police corruption and breach of police confidentiality weighed against protection of journalistic sources.

6.4.2.2. Court assessment

The terms of “important public interest” and “of considerable importance to the clarification of the case” were both met. The court made a direct reference to the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 and its list of examples of “major crimes” that possibly can justify source disclosure; the examples being murder, manslaughter, severe bodily injury, crimes against national security or serious organised crime.⁴⁹ The court declared that “police corruption” and “breach of confidentiality” were not mentioned, and stated that even though the list just cites examples, “it still provides an indication as to where the bar normally should be set...the activities of concern to the investigation of the case are less serious than the examples cited”, cf. section 32. Accordingly, the interests of revealing police corruption and confidentiality breach, although given considerable weight, did not outweigh source protection, “on the basis of the strict terms that apply to making exemptions from source protection”, cf. section 36. The court ⁴⁷Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-1998) p. 27.

⁴⁸ Anders Behring Breivik, the perpetrator of the 2011 Norway attacks.

⁴⁹ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 40.

underlined that the case had raised “a difficult question of balancing, where two important objectives stand against each other”, cf. ibid. In the concrete assessment great emphasis was placed on the potential chilling effect of a disclosure, and weight was given to the fact that the journalist had refused the offer to buy the documents. The court also found it unlikely that the source, upon a disclosure, would reveal the name of the leaking police officer and stated: “the more certain it is that the name of the source will lead to clarification, the bigger the reason would be to make exemption from the protection of sources”, cf. section 33.

6.4.1.3. Ruling

The court unanimously ruled on non-disclosure. The ruling affirms the high threshold for accepting sources to be waived, and illustrates how the Supreme Court of Norway accentuates the Recommendation, the Explanatory Memorandum and ECtHR case-law in its assessments. The Supreme Court gave weight to arguments concerning prevention of police corruption and confidentiality breach, but did not refer to the possible legitimate aim of “preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence” of Article 10 paragraph 2 of the Convention⁵⁰. The assessment of the court was grounded solely on the narrower list of possibly legitimate aims as set forth in the Explanatory Memorandum. This furthermore illustrates that the Supreme Court makes direct use of the Explanatory Memorandum and its recommendations for a narrow interpretation of Article 10 of the Convention in relation to protection of confidential journalistic sources.⁵¹ Cf. chapter 6.

6.5. History:

The right to protection of journalistic sources was formally implemented in Norwegian legislation in 1951. The formal legislation was revised in 1973, 1981, 1985⁵², 1999 and 2005⁵³, and has been substantially strengthened since 1951.⁵⁴ Since then there has been more than 60 separate cases before the courts with regard to the limits of source protection.⁵⁵ Rarely have journalists been imposed with a court order to reveal their confidential sources. Never has a journalist responded to a court order of disclosure.⁵⁶ This has resulted in two weeks of prison for one editor, cf. Rt. 1953-127.⁵⁷ Fines of 20 000 NOK (2120 EUR) were imposed in Rt. 1987-910 and Rt. 1996-1164 under the Courts of Justice Act section 206. “Where a witness refuses to give evidence or give affirmation and provides no grounds or provides only those grounds that are

⁵⁰ Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Article 10, para. 2

⁵¹ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 37.

⁵² Revision into force in 1986.

⁵³ Revision into force in 2008.

⁵⁴ Cf. revision of the legislation in Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 63-67.

⁵⁵ List of source protection cases in Norway 1951-2009, in Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 50-53. List of source protection cases in Norway 2012-2015, collected by the Association of Norwegian Editors. 2009-2012, search in lovdata.no.

⁵⁶ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 54.

⁵⁷ Sentenced under section 189 of the Criminal Procedure Act of 1887. LOV 1887-07-01-5. (Repealed.)

dismissed by a legally enforceable ruling” the witness may be penalised by fines.⁵⁸ In 2012, a Norwegian journalist of the newspaper Dagens Næringsliv, was penalised with a fine of 30 000 NOK (3240 EUR). The case is known as the “known-source-case”, and concerns a matter where the source of the journalist was known and subject to criminal charges. The journalist refused to “give evidence” while in court as a witness in his criminal trial, and claimed source protection under the Criminal Procedure Act section 125. The Supreme Court stated, with reference to the preparatory work and case-law, that the source protection provisions govern confidential sources, not sources already known. Section 125 was found not to be applicable in the case. The case is brought into the ECtHR, where it is waiting to be processed.⁵⁹

6.4. Conclusion

The figures above and the low number of court orders of disclosure confirms that the Supreme Court of Norway pay particular regard to the importance of the right of non-disclosure. Case-law and preparatory work show that the threshold for requiring source disclosure in relation to The Criminal Procedure Act and The Dispute Act is high, and that the legislation is in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. It might even be proposed that in the case of Rt. 2015-1286 (Rolfsen), the Supreme Court has outlined a higher level of protection. With this case it is evident that exemptions from source protection today, is limited to exceptional circumstances and cases of a significantly grave nature we have yet to see.

7. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

As the above chapter has illustrated, exemptions from the right to source protection are rarely accepted under the Norwegian law.⁶⁰ This does not exclude the police authorities from requesting disclosure or instigating force measures in their search for valuable information in relation to criminal cases. With the gap between the judicial limits of source protection and the absolute source protection advocated by the journalists, cases are tried before the national courts.

⁵⁸ Courts of Justice act section 206.

⁵⁹ Article “Få fellende dommer”, publicised 2013.09.26 in Journalisten.

⁶⁰ Cf. Rt. 2010-1381 section 63.

As described in depth in chapter 5, exemptions from non-disclosure are regulated by the Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraph 3 and the Dispute Act section 22-11 paragraph 2. If it is required by “important public interests” and if it is of “considerable importance to the clarification of the case”, the court may, based on an overall assessment “order the evidence to be presented or the source to be revealed”.⁶¹

As we have seen in chapter 5, “important public interests” refers to information that contains not only the vital public interests of the state, but also more general social interests⁶². In many cases there will be a public interest in protecting individual rights, like the right to a private life.⁶³ Decisive is, if the “public interest” in each case can outweigh the considerations that in the same case speaks in favour of source protection.⁶⁴ Consequently there is not a clear border between the assessment of this term and the overall assessment.⁶⁵

The Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 states that “a disclosure should only be justified if and after other means or sources have been unsuccessfully exhausted by the parties to a disclosure proceeding”.⁶⁶ In reference to the Goodwin-case, in which a restriction on the dissemination of the information sufficiently protected the interests at stake, the Explanatory Memorandum holds that if that is the case, the additional disclosure of the source will not be justified. The term “of considerable importance to the clarification of the case” of the Norwegian provision, corresponds to this principle.⁶⁷ Exemption from source protection cannot be made without its fulfilment. Case practice illustrating the interpretation of the term in line with the Memorandum is presented in chapter 5, cf. Rt. 2004-1400 section 41, Rt. 2013-1290 section 24, cf. Rt. 2010-1381 section 50.

In the Rolfesen case, Rt. 2015-1286, the court found it hard to see that this term was met, and proceeded to the overall assessment without further conclusions. The court stated: “Since in my view access to the seizure must be refused in any circumstances in accordance with the overall evaluation that must be made pursuant to Section 125, third paragraph, first sentence, I do not find it necessary to further consider the Court of Appeal’s assessment of the significance of the seized material as evidence”, cf. section 66. This suggests that the Supreme Court with this ruling wanted to draw up clear lines for the limits of source protection when faced with ISIS-terrorism - a “major crime” that possibly could justify disclosure according to Article 10 of the Convention, the Recommendation and its appendix as well as the Norwegian provisions. It could have been sufficient for the Supreme Court to point to the non-fulfilment of the term “of considerable importance to the clarification of the case” in order to resolve the case.

⁶¹ The Dispute Act section 22-11 para.2. Identical in substance to The Criminal Procedure Act section 125 para. 3.

⁶² Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 24 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.110.

⁶³ Ibid.

⁶⁴ Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98) p. 24.

⁶⁵ Rt. 2010-1381 section 53

⁶⁶ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 32

⁶⁷ Cf. Rt. 2004-1400 section 41, Rt. 2013-1290 section 24, cf. Rt.2010-1381 section. Cf. Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98) p. 26 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.119-121.

The question after this is which aims can constitute legitimate interest that possibly can outweigh non-disclosure. The assessment must be carried out in line with ECHR article 10 and ECtHR case-law.⁶⁸ A disclosure can only be ordered if there exists an “overriding requirement in the public interest”⁶⁹ and if the circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature.⁷⁰ “In sum, limitations on the confidentiality of journalistic sources call for the most careful scrutiny by the Court” cf. Goodwin section 40, cf. Rt. 2013-1290 section 26.⁷¹ This quotation suggests a narrow interpretation of the legitimate aims listed in Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention. This is confirmed in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation which states that paragraph 2 has to be interpreted narrowly in accordance with the jurisprudence of the ECtHR.⁷² The working group of the Recommendation and its Explanatory Memorandum has with reference to Article 10 paragraph 2, identified in particular three categories of aims under which the interest in the disclosure possibly can outweigh the public interest in the non-disclosure.⁷³ These are, where the disclosure is necessary for “the protection of human life, the prevention of major crime or the defence in the course of legal proceedings of a person who is accused or convicted of having committed a serious crime”.⁷⁴ Other grounds were by the working group “deemed to be prima facie insufficient to justify a disclosure, though such disclosure might be justified depending on all the circumstances”.⁷⁵

The case of Rt. 2013-1290 (Brennpunkt) supports this narrow interpretation, and The Supreme Court follows the guidance of the Explanatory Memorandum, cf. chapter 5. In this case, the court did not retrieve “police corruption” or “breach of police confidentiality” under the example list of “major crimes” presented in the Explanatory Memorandum. The interests were identified as less serious than the examples listed, and to fall outside of the term “major crime”. They were, after a concrete overall assessment, deemed to be of insufficient weight to justify disclosure. Cf. chapter 5 for a full presentation of this case.

Also in the above mentioned case of Rolfsen, Rt. 2015-1286, the court supported the narrow interpretation of Article 10, and referred to the “Major Crime”-list of the Explanatory Memorandum as presented in Rt. 2013-1290. The Supreme Court stated that crimes under the anti-terror legislation fall within this list. The Supreme Court drew up new lines; the interest in preventing recruitment to the ISIS terrorist network was not sufficient to outweigh non-⁶⁸ Rt. 2015-1286 section 67, Rt. 2013-1290 section 25.

⁶⁹ ECtHR Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, 27 March 1996 (17488/90), para. 39, Rt. 2015-1286 section 67, Rt. 2013-1290 section 25.

⁷⁰ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Principle 3.

⁷¹ Repeated in several judgements by the ECtHR, like Tillack v Belgium, cf. Financial Times Ltd. V The United Kingdom.

⁷² Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 37.

⁷³ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 37-41, “subject to meeting the criteria set out in the Recommendation principle 3b” (para. 37).

⁷⁴ Ibid.

⁷⁵ Ibid.

disclosure. The ruling has been recognised worldwide, and illustrates that even when evaluating within a category of aims under which the interests legitimately could have justified disclosure, source protection prevails. Cf. chapter 5 for a full presentation of this case.

Protection of human life, prevention of major crimes and prevention of the conviction of innocent people, are also in the preparatory work of the Norwegian legislation identified as legitimate aims that may justify exemptions from the protection of sources.⁷⁶ These aims all have in common that an order of disclosure already follows from the General Civil Penal Code sections 287, 196 and 226; respectively (1) the duty to help someone in danger⁷⁷; (2) the duty to prevent criminal offences⁷⁸ like murder, severe bodily harm, crime that threaten national security, organized crime; (3) the duty to provide information in order to prevent the conviction and sentencing of an innocent⁷⁹.⁸⁰ As stated in the Explanatory Memorandum there might be situations beyond these, depending on all the circumstances, that possibly can justify disclosure.⁸¹

In one of the national cases that has resulted in a court order of disclosure, Rt.1986-1245, it is held in the preparatory work that the ruling would have been the same under current law⁸²; and in judicial theory that the ECtHR would have accepted an exemption to source protection in such a case,⁸³ due to the circumstances of the case. The reason for disclosure was a serious breach of patient-hospital confidentiality in a matter of great privacy. In a front page article about heart-transplantation, the newspaper identified, against the will of the parents, a 16-year-old boy, dead in a car accident, whose heart had been transplanted. In the court's view the information was so detailed that it could only have derived from an employee at the hospital. The Supreme Court found that the identity of the boy had no public interest; and that the confidentiality breach was exceptionally grave in that it concerned a private situation where the parents had just been faced with the death of their son and the big decision of donating his heart. The interest in pursuing a serious breach of confidentiality under these circumstances outweighed the right to source protection. The editor and journalist of the newspaper Bergensavisen were imposed to respond to a request of disclosure.⁸⁴ The editor was later sentenced to a fine of 20 000 NOK (2120 Euro) for not responding to the request.⁸⁵

The preparatory work furthermore states that an order of disclosure should be imposed where a crime is supposedly committed with the goal of getting media attention and the circumstances

⁷⁶ Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 27 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 129.

⁷⁷ Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 26 and Ibid.

⁷⁸ Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 27 and Ibid.

⁷⁹ Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 26 and Ibid.

⁸⁰ The General Civil Penal Code sections, 287, 196, 226.

⁸¹ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 37.

⁸² Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 26

⁸³ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 114.

⁸⁴ Rt.1986-1245

⁸⁵ Rt-1987-910

suggests that the source himself is the offender or is used as a mean by the offender.⁸⁶ As to civil cases, the preparatory work holds paternity cases as an example of cases where the public interests at stake can outweigh press freedom.⁸⁷ It is however presumed that the terms of disclosure rarely will be fulfilled in civil cases.⁸⁸

In conclusion, if the two basic terms of The Criminal Procedure Act 125 paragraph 3 and the Dispute Act 22-11 paragraph 2, are fulfilled, the court may, based on an overall assessment, order the evidence to be presented or the source to be revealed⁸⁹. This assessment is based on a wide balancing of interests.⁹⁰

“In cases of doubt which may be decided by the courts...serious doubt” shall result in source protection.⁹¹ The nature of the case, the potential chilling effect of a disclosure-order, the seriousness of a potential crime, considerations that speaks for an efficient pursuing and prosecution of such a crime, and the extent to which the information has public interest, are all matters to be considered in the overall assessment.⁹²

When the information is in the public interest to publicise, the threshold for waiving sources is at its highest.⁹³ “If sources, frightened of exposure and reprisal, decide not to talk, there will not only be less news, but the news which is published will be less reliable”⁹⁴. Without source protection journalistic sources may dry up, cf. the chilling effect.⁹⁵ It is nevertheless made room under the law for the cases in which the circumstances are so sufficiently vital and serious, that they possibly can justify source disclosure.

In line with the recommended narrow interpretation of Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention, it can be proposed that the legitimacy of an interest, when it comes to source protection, as a general rule should be established with reference to the grounds from one of the three categories of aims recognised in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 and in the Norwegian preparatory work;⁹⁶ unless “disclosure can be justified depending on all the circumstances”.⁹⁷ It is within this narrow sphere we can find the criteria under which the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure.

⁸⁶ Ot.prp.nr. 55 (1997-98) p. 27.

⁸⁷ Ot.prp.nr. 55 (1997-98) p.29.

⁸⁸ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p. 127, cf. Ot.prp.nr. 55 (1997-98) p.29.

⁸⁹ The Dispute Act 22-11 section 2.

⁹⁰ Rt. 2004-1400 section 38.

⁹¹ Ot.prp.nr. 55 (1997-98) p. 25.

⁹² Ot.prp.nr 55 (1997-98), p. 25 and Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern en lærebok (2009), p.128-129.

⁹³ NOU 1988:2 p.20 and Rt. 2010-1381section 61, Rt. 2004-1400 section 46, Rt. 2015-1022 section 67.

⁹⁴G. Robertson and A. Nicol in Dirk Voorhoof. The protection of journalistic sources: Recent developments and actual changes, section 1.

⁹⁵ Dirk Voorhoof. The protection of journalistic sources: Recent developments and actual changes, section 1.

⁹⁶ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 25 and 37 and Ot.prp. nr. 55 (1997-98) page 27.

⁹⁷ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (00) 7, section II, para. 37

If disclosure is justified and ordered, the court may impose confidentiality during the hearing. This is regulated by the Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraph 4 and the Dispute Act section 22-12 paragraph 2. The provisions are identical in substance, and states that “if evidence is presented pursuant to an order of the court, the court may impose a duty of confidentiality and decide that oral hearing of the evidence shall be held in camera”.⁹⁸ The provisions correspond to principle 5.e of the Recommendation, but has not yet been applied by the Norwegian court.⁹⁹ This can be seen in light of the absolute source protection guaranteed by journalists under the code of ethics of the press; journalists do not comply with court orders of disclosure and maintain source protection in conflict with the law.

8. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

To answer the question, the following cases from the Norwegian Supreme Court will be described and analysed in light of relevant case law from the ECtHR: Rt. 1992 s. 39 (Edderkoppen), Rt. 2002 s. 489 (Forsikringsbedrageri), Rt. 2004 s. 1400 (Dørvakt), Rt. 2010 s. 1381 (DinSide), and Rt. 2013 s. 1290 (Brennpunkt).

The examination will focus on how the Supreme Court balances the different interests at stake when deciding whether a journalist has to reveal his source or not.

8.1. Rt. 1992 s. 39 (Edderkoppen)

At the relevant time, Section 209a of The Dispute Act¹ allowed the courts to impose on a journalist an obligation to reveal his sources if the disclosure was of “particular importance” to the case. The courts should according to the section among other relevant factors take into consideration the nature of the case and the significance of the testimony for the case.

The Supreme Court emphasized that protection of sources is the main rule, and that the question thus would have to be whether there were strong enough reasons to depart from this rule. The Court further stressed that although protection of sources enshrines a basic value in a democracy, so do the society’s interest in finding out if the security services have carried out surveillance measures for political purposes and breached their duty not to disclose secret information.

In their assessment of these principles to the facts, the Court held that investigative journalism towards governmental institutions is the core area of protection of sources. Thus, it had to be shown significant consideration to the protection element [of the rules]. The Court stressed the need for a long time perspective, and argued that a strong source protection in the long run would lead to more revelations of sizable conduct. The Court concluded that the journalists did not have to reveal their sources to the parliamentary body.

⁹⁸ Dispute Act section 22-12 para. 2.

⁹⁹ Ina Lindahl, Massemedienes kildevern, 2009, page 32.

Although the judgment was passed four years before Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, the judgment can clearly be considered to be in line with relevant case law from the ECtHR. Compared to both Goodwin and Financial Times Ltd. and others vs. The United Kingdom, the competing interests – controlling misuse by the security agencies – were stronger in the Edderkoppen case. Still the Supreme Court judged in favour of source protection, giving decisive weight to the long-term perspective and the potential chilling effect an order for disclosure would have for future sources.

8.2. Rt. 2002 s. 489 (Forsikringsbedrageri)

In the Forsikringsbedrageri (insurance fraud) case, a Norwegian journalist had made a news story about insurance swindle. The news story revealed that A, a female celebrity, was reported to the police for swindle. A's identity was not revealed in the reportage. A later on filed a report to the bureau responsible for investigating police affairs, claiming that servicemen in the police had breached their duty of confidentiality. When testifying, the journalist refused to disclose his source regarding the information that A had been reported to the police.

The Criminal Procedure Act¹ Section 125 states that an order to disclose journalistic sources can only be given when "important public interests" call for a disclosure and it is of "considerable importance" to the clarification of the case. If these cumulative conditions are established, the court will have to make an overall assessment to decide whether a disclosure order should be imposed or not.

The Supreme Court shortly held that finding out whether police officers have breached their duty not to disclose confidential information or not, amounts to an "important public interest". This is clearly in line with ECHR article 10, which allows for restrictions on the right to freedom of expression "for the prevention of [...] crime" or "for the protection of the reputation or rights of others".

Regarding the probability that there actually had been a disclosure of confidential information from the police, the Court argued that as long as investigation was carried out, this was sufficient. As far as we can see the ECtHR has not explicitly addressed this question in its case law. But in Financial Times it was sufficient that a disclosure "might enable [Interbrew] to ascertain the identity of the proper defendant to a breach of confidence action". Thus, it seems that the Supreme Court's view is in line with ECtHR case law on this matter.

The Court also found that a disclosure order would be of "particular importance" for the [oppklaring] of the case, even though the police had not carried out any alternative investigation measures. The Court found that this was criticisable, but argued that such an investigation would require examination of a considerable amount of people, and that experience shows that such examinations seldom lead to a revelation of the guilty person.

This assessment is in itself questionable, taking into consideration firstly the need for an interference with Article 10 to be “necessary in a democratic society” and secondly Principle 3 of the Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, which states that a disclosure order should not be deemed necessary unless it can be “convincingly established” that “reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted”. However, the Supreme Court’s following overall assessment shows that these views are reflected in the judgment in a satisfying way.¹

In the overall assessment, the Supreme Court [nemlig] emphasized that the government could carry out alternative, albeit less effective, investigative steps. Preventing disclosure of confidential information could also be done by working to change attitudes inside the police. Another important fact was that A’s name had not been mentioned in the news story, and this weighted heavily in favour of keeping the source secret.

The Court concluded that a disclosure order could not be imposed.

8.3. Rt. 2004 s. 1400 (Dørvakt)

In the Dørvakt case, two journalists had written a series of articles where they revealed that many bouncers in Bergen were convicted for crimes of violence. The bureau responsible for investigating police affairs started an investigation to find out if police officers had breached their duty of confidentiality. The journalists refused to disclose their sources.

In the overall assessment, the Supreme Court started by referring to the preparatory works and Goodwin (para 42-46). Their interpretation of Goodwin was that in cases where the information given by the source is of public interest, the protection of the source will be more or less of an absolute character. But also outside this core area, considerable and important counter interests have to be established to impose an order to disclose the source.

In the Court’s view, the parts of the article in dispute that contained information about eavesdropping and other details from the police investigation of the bouncers, were not of public interest. Leaking information about such extraordinary and sensitive investigative measures was also considered grave, and this indicated a strong interest in sentencing the person leaking the information (para 50).

On the other hand, the leaks had not harmed the investigation (para 49). And more important, the article was part of an investigative and critical coverage revealing both a connection between bouncers and criminal groups but also how the police remained passive. The reportages were thus in the core area of freedom of speech, where the protection of sources, according to the Supreme Court, should be more or less of an absolute character. Here, the Court also compared the facts to Goodwin (para 51), where the ECtHR put great emphasis on the protection of the source even though the leaked information could not be considered of public interest.

Also in this case the Court concluded that a disclosure order could not be imposed.

8.4. Rt. 2010 s. 1381 (DinSide)

In the DinSide case a person – using the nick name “Finneren” – had claimed in a comment on the webpage DinSide.no that he had kept and sold a runestone. According to Norwegian legislation protecting cultural monuments this is punishable. The owner of the webpage refused to reveal the IP address and other information about “Finneren” to the police.

The Supreme Court emphasized – with reference to both the Edderkoppen case and Goodwin – the need for a long time perspective, and the potential chilling effect an extensive use of disclosure orders could have. Even though the source claimed that he had committed a crime, and information about who “Finneren” was could reveal where the runestone was located, the Court concluded that a disclosure order could not be imposed.

8.5. Rt. 2013 s. 1290 (Brennpunkt)

In their overall assessment, the Supreme Court took as a starting point (para 29) that if a police officer actually stood behind the offer, he would have been guilty of an attempt to break his duty not to disclose confidential information as well as [grov] corruption. The latter would also be the case for the source. However, the Court emphasized (para 30), with reference to Financial Times para 63, that the rules protecting sources are not given out of consideration for the specific source or other specific individuals. On the contrary, the rules are justified by the public’s interest in imparting information from the press. The Court further underlined that according to both Tillack v. Belgium and Financial Times, it is not decisive that the source has acted illegally or blameworthy. Such conduct will however be an important factor in the assessment.

The Court continued by arguing (para 31) that it is of high importance to uncover and punish leaks of police documents. Otherwise the public’s trust in the police could be seriously harmed, and witnesses could be more reluctant to testify. On the other side they noticed (para 32) that the Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 mentions “prevention of major crime” as a possible justification for the disclosure of a source. As examples of “major crime”, “murder, manslaughter, severe bodily injury, crimes against national security, or serious organised crime” are mentioned. The Court argued that even though the list is non-exhaustive, it indicates that the crimes committed must be of a certain seriousness to justify a disclosure order. In the Court’s view, the potential crimes in this case were less serious than the listed examples.

Another relevant factor was that it was highly doubtful whether a disclosure would lead the Bureau to catch the police officer leaking the documents. The Court stated (para 33) on a general basis that the higher the probability is that a disclosure will lead to solve the case, the more it will weigh in favour of departing from the main rule of source protection.

The fact that NRK had refused the source’s offer on ethical grounds was not considered relevant (para 34). In the Court’s view such an assessment would jeopardise the principle of a long time perspective, and it could have a “chilling effect”. They argued that potential sources would not be able to understand the distinction, and that they could get the impression that they were running a risk when contacting the press with information. The Court further mentioned (para 35) that NRK had avoided contributing to corruption, and as long as the press follows such a line, this will in itself be an effective measure against such crimes.

The Court thus concluded that NRK could not be ordered to disclose the source.

8.6. Rt. 2015 s. 1286 (Rolfsen)

In the Rolfsen case¹, the question for the Supreme Court was whether the PST could maintain the seizure pursuant to Section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Act, which – as will be shown under question 8 – refers to the duty to testify and thus the overall assessment pursuant to Section 125. In the overall assessment, the Court took as a starting point that crimes under anti-terror legislation fall within the list of serious crimes in the Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7. On the other hand, the Court noted that sources revealing information in such cases might be of particularly great danger if their identity were to be known.

It further emphasized that the film project was at the heart of investigative journalism. It assumed that an effective protection of sources was of vital importance for the making of the film, and noted that some of the sources had withdrawn from the project due to the police search.

The court further pointed to the fact that the police had a number of investigative methods available, and that it was doubtful how valuable the information would be. For example, B's journey to Syria was prevented when the search was carried out.

The prosecuting authority had stated that the journalist D did not exercise the required distance and objectivity. The basis for this claim was a phone conversation between D and one of the sources, where the former tried to calm down the latter by assuring that compromising statements would be removed. The Court acknowledged, with reference to Telegraaf Media v. The Netherlands and Stichting Ostade Blade v. The Netherlands, that it is of significance to the overall assessment whether the journalist has shown the required objectivity or not. But they disagreed that the concrete conversation indicated that the journalist had acted blameworthy.

The Court would neither put weight to the fact that the sources were charged in the case. The Court thus concluded that the seizure had to be set aside.

8.7 Summary

To sum up, our impression is that the Supreme Court when carrying out the balancing exercise follows the principles laid down by ECtHR. Especially in the Edderkoppen, Dørvakt and Brennpunkt cases, the competing interests were weightier than in both Goodwin and Financial Times. Still the Supreme Court gave more importance to an effective source protection.

The Court has also underlined i) the need for a long time perspective, ii) that an effective source protection is in the public's interest, and that a limited protection could have a chilling effect on potential sources, and iii) that it is not decisive whether the source or other individuals have acted illegally or blameworthy. Thus, the relevant factors from ECtHR are applied in the balancing exercise.

9. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

To answer the question, we will give a brief overview of the criteria for search and seizure actions, interception of communication and covert audio surveillance laid down in The Criminal Procedure Act and The Police Act.

9.1. General overview

In Norwegian law, there is no general prohibition of investigative measures conducted with the view to reveal the identity of a source.¹ The use of police coercive measures is regulated by The Criminal Procedure Act¹ and The Police Act.¹

9.2. The general principle of proportionality

Pursuant to Section 170a of The Criminal Procedure Act, coercive measures can only be conducted when there is "sufficient reason" to do so. Such measures can however not be conducted if it, in view of "the nature of the case and other circumstances" would be considered a "disproportionate intervention". The provision is to be applied in accordance with the obligations laid down in the ECHR.¹ In cases regarding coercive measures that could reveal journalistic sources, the interest of protecting sources will have to be taken into consideration when deciding whether the measure is disproportionate or not.^{1 1}

9.3. Searches

The conditions for conducting searches are laid down in Chapter 15 of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Pursuant to the first subsection of Section 192, a search of someone's place can be conducted when the person is "with just cause suspected" of an act punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment, and the aim of the search is to arrest the person, or to look for evidence or other objects that can be seized or on which a charge may be created. Such searches can be conducted at any other person's premises when

1) the act has been committed or the suspect arrested there

- 2) the suspect has been there under pursuit when caught in the act or on finding fresh clues, or
- 3) there are otherwise special grounds to assume that the suspect can be arrested, or that there may be found evidence or objects that may be seized or on which a charge may be created.

If the suspicion relates to an act punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment for a term of eight years or more, a search may be made of all buildings or premises in a specified area if there are “grounds to assume” that the offender may be hiding in the area, or that evidence or objects liable to seizure may be found there, cf. Section 194.

Pursuant to the first subsection of Section 195, a search of a person can be conducted if he is “with just cause” suspected of an act punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment, and there are “grounds to assume” that it may lead to the discovery of evidence or of objects that may be seized or on which a charge may be created. For searches of other persons than the suspect, the suspicion has to relate to an act punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, and when “special circumstances” indicate that the search should be conducted, cf. second subsection.

When it comes to the procedural safeguards, Section 197 demands that a search may only be made pursuant to a court decision, unless the concerned person has given a written consent. From this main rule, there is however an exception in the second subsection for cases where “delay entails any risk”. In such instances, the prosecution authority can issue the search warrant. But if the urgent search is conducted at “an editorial office or the like”, it has to be the public prosecutor who issues the warrant. The warrant can in addition only be issued if it is “probable” that the investigation will be “substantially impaired” by waiting for a court decision.

Section 198 gives a police officer the competence to make a search without a warrant from the public prosecutor when it is “strong suspicion” of an act punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, and there is an “imminent risk” that the purpose of the search otherwise will be thwarted. The provision does however not apply searches of “an editorial office or the like”.

According to the preparatory works¹, the wording “the like” in Section 197 and 198 includes a journalists’ home office. But it is acknowledged that the assessment of what constitutes a home office can be difficult, especially when bearing in mind that Section 197 and 198 concern cases of urgency. The preparatory works emphasizes that it has to be a specified working place with distinctive marks showing that the place is used for journalistic work.

To sum up, the rules allowing for searches are accessible, and must be considered sufficiently clear and precise. There has to be a suspicion of a criminal offence, which reduces the risk for arbitrariness. And more important, the main rule calling for a search warrant from the court constitutes a satisfactory procedural safeguard.

Regarding searches conducted by a police officer without a warrant, and which unintentionally turn out to be a journalist’s home office, cf. Section 198, such safeguards will not exist. However, these cases will be utterly rare. And as long as the journalist makes sure to make it visible that his working desk is a place used for journalistic work, the place will be protected against a search without a warrant.

9.4. Disclosure orders and seizure

The conditions for giving a forced disclosure order or seizing objects are laid down in Chapter 16 of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Pursuant to Section 210, the court may order the possessor to surrender objects that are deemed to be significant as evidence if he is bound to testify in the case. Thus, the conditions laid down in Section 125 have to be established to issue a forced disclosure order regarding source revealing material. By establishing such a connection, the legislator has made sure that the protection of sources is not circumvented by the authorities. This is in line with Principle 6 litra a of Recommendation No. R (2000) 7.

Pursuant to the second subsection of Section 210, the prosecution authority can issue the order if a delay entails “a risk that the investigation will be impaired”. In legal theory, Ragna Aarli has argued that this provision is not applicable, due to Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. The Netherlands.¹ In Sanoma, a disclosure order was not approved by an independent organ, and the ECtHR concluded that this amounted to a violation of Article 10. Since the Criminal Procedure Act is to be applied in conformity with international law, cf. Section 4, we agree with Aarli on this point. However, it is of utter importance in this field that the law provides sufficiently clear norms and procedural safeguards. Even though a subsequent judicial review can show that a disclosure order not approved by an independent organ amounts to a violation of Article 10, this will be poor consolation for the media.¹ This was also emphasized by the ECtHR in Telegraaf Media v. The Netherlands.¹ It can thus be argued that Section 210 should be changed to make it in line with Article 10.

When it comes to seizure of documents or other objects, this cannot be carried out if the possessor can refuse to testify about the content of the object, cf. Section 204. Also these cases will rely on an assessment pursuant to Section 125, and thus the provision is in line with Principle 6 paragraph a of the Recommendation.

If the possessor is not obliged to testify, a seizure order has to be given by the court, cf. the third subsection of Section 205.¹ The police can however seize the documents for the purpose of bringing the question of seizure to the court, but will then have to seal the documents in a closed envelope in the presence of a representative of the possessor.¹

The criteria for ordering disclosure or seizing objects must be considered sufficiently clear and precise, as they are linked to the provisions regarding the duty to testify. And – maybe with an exception for Section 210 – satisfactory procedural safeguards are established.

9.5. Communication control – interception of communication and covert audio surveillance

The conditions for use of communication control are laid down in Chapter 16a and 16b of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Pursuant to Section 216 a, the court may make an order permitting the police to carry out communication surveillance when any person is “with just cause” suspected of an act or attempt at an act

- a) that is punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment for a term of 10 years or more, or
- b) that contravenes sections 121, 123, 125, 126, 127 cf. 123, 128 first sentence, 129, 136 a, 231, 332 cf. 231, 335 cf. 231, 337 cf. 231 or 340 cf. 231, or that contravenes Section 5 of the Act relating to the control of the export of strategic goods, services and technology, etc.¹

The surveillance can be conducted towards telephones, computers etc. that the suspect possesses or which it may be assumed that he will use.

Pursuant to the first subsection of Section 216 c, a permission to carry out communication control may only be given if it must be assumed that such audio surveillance or control will be of “substantial significance” for the clarification of the case and that such clarification will otherwise be made “substantially more difficult”. If the controlled telephone belongs to an editor or a journalist, permission for communication control may only be given if there are “special grounds” for doing so, cf. second subsection. This higher threshold is however not applicable if the editor or journalist is himself suspected in the case.

If there is a “great risk” that the investigation will be impaired by delay, an order from the prosecution authority may take the place of a court order, cf. Section 216 d. The decision shall as soon as possible, and not later than 24 hours after the control has begun, be submitted to the court for approval. But if the time-limit ends at a time outside the court’s ordinary office hours, the time-limit is extended until the court reopens.

When it comes to covert audio surveillance, this can only be conducted when a person is “with just cause” suspected of committing an act or attempt at an act that contravenes

- a) sections 131 or 133, of the Penal Code¹
- b) sections 232, second paragraph, 275 or 328, cf. section 79 paragraph c, of the Penal Code¹, or
- c) sections 275 cf. 157 or 275 cf. 159, of the Penal Code¹

Also in these cases it must be assumed that such audio surveillance will be of “substantial significance” for the clarification of the case and that such clarification will otherwise be made “substantially more difficult”. Audio surveillance of an editorial office or the like where an editor or a journalist is having work related conversations, permission for communication control may only be given if there are “special grounds” for doing so. This higher threshold is however not applicable if the editor or journalist is himself suspected in the case.

It is the court that issues the order, but in those special instances mentioned in Section 216 d, an order from the prosecution authority may take the place of a court order.

9.6. Use of coercive measures to avert or prevent serious crimes

The criteria for use of coercive measures to avert serious crimes are laid down in Section 222 d. Since the provision is long and complex, we will provide it in its entirety:

The court may make an order permitting the police to use as part of the process of investigation such coercive measures as are referred to in chapters 15, 15 a, 16, 16 a and 16 b when there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is going to commit an act that contravenes

- a) sections 131 or 134, of the Penal Code,
- b) sections 232, second paragraph, 274 or 328, cf. section 79 paragraph c, of the Penal Code, or
- c) sections 275, cf. 157 or 275, cf. 159, of the Penal Code

Such permission may also be granted to the Police Security Service when there is reason to believe that any person is going to commit an act that contravenes

- a) Sections 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 123, 126, 128 first sentence, 129, 133, 135, 136-a or 142, of the Penal Code,
- b) Section 5 of the Act relating to the control of the export of strategic goods, services and technology, etc.
- c) Sections 139, 140, 192, 194, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 355, 356, 357 or 358 of the Penal Code and that is committed for the purpose of sabotage, or
- d) sections 251, 253, 254, 263, 273 or 275 of the Penal Code and that is directed against members of the Royal Family, the Storting (parliament), the Government, the Supreme Court or representatives of equivalent bodies in other states.

Permission may only be granted if it must be assumed that intervention will provide information of substantial significance for making it possible to avert the act and that such averting will otherwise be impeded to a substantial degree. Permission to use such coercive measures as are referred to in sections 200 a, 202 x, 216 a and 216 m may only be granted when special reasons so warrant. Permission may only be granted to the Police Security Service to carry out covert audio surveillance, cf. section 216 m, when there is reason to believe that any person is going to commit an act that contravenes sections 90, 91, 91 a, 147 a, 152 a or 153 a of the Penal Code.

If delay entails a great risk that it will not be possible to prevent an act referred to in the first or second paragraph, an order from the prosecuting authority may be substituted for a court order. Any such decision shall be submitted to a court for approval as soon as possible, and not later than 24 hours after the coercive measure has been applied. As far as possible, the decision shall be in writing and shall state what the case concerns and the purpose of using the coercive measures. An oral decision shall be written down as soon as possible. Section 216 d, first paragraph, third to fifth sentences, and second paragraph shall apply correspondingly.

The provisions of chapters 15, 15 a, 16, 16 a and 16 b shall apply correspondingly in so far as they are appropriate. The provisions of sections 216 i, 242 and 242 a apply to all use of coercive measures pursuant to this section.

When it comes to coercive measures aimed at preventing serious crimes, the criteria are laid that in Section 17 d of the Police Act. It reads:

The court may make an order permitting the Police Security Service to use as part of its preventive activity such coercive measures as are referred to in sections 200, 200 a, 202 c, 208 a, 210 a, 211, 212, 216 a, 216 b, or 216 m of the Criminal Procedure Act if it is reason to investigate whether any person is preparing an act that contravenes

- a) sections 131, 133 or 134, of the Penal Code,
- b) sections 121 to 126, of the Penal Code, or
- c) sections, 251, 253, 254, 256, 263, 273, 274 or 275 of the Penal Code and that is directed against members of the Royal Family, the Storting (parliament), the Government, the Supreme Court or representatives of equivalent bodies in other states.

Permission may only be granted if it must be assumed that intervention will provide information of substantial significance for making it possible to prevent the act, that such prevention will otherwise be impeded to a substantial degree, and that the intervention does not appear as disproportionate, taking into consideration the nature of the case and other circumstances. Permission to use such coercive measures as are referred to in sections 200 a, 202 a, 216 a, and 216 m may only be granted when special reasons so warrant. Permission to search someone's private home may not be granted pursuant to this provision.

If delay entails a great risk that it will not be possible to prevent an act referred to in first paragraph, paragraph c, an order from the chief or the assistant chief of the Police Security Service may be substituted for a court order, except from such covert audio surveillance as referred to in Section 216 m of the Criminal Procedure Act. Any such decision shall be submitted to a court for approval as soon as possible, and not later than 24 hours after the coercive measure has been applied. As far as possible, the decision shall be in writing and shall state what the case concerns and the purpose of using the coercive measures. An oral decision shall be written down as soon as possible. Section 216 d, first paragraph, third to fifth sentences, and second paragraph shall apply correspondingly.

The chief or the assistant chief of the Police Security Service may on the same conditions as referred to in the first paragraph cf. the second paragraph permit use of coercive measures as referred to in sections 202 b and 216 l of the Criminal Procedure Act.

While it is not possible in this setting to go into all of the details, we would like to highlight certain points regarding the criteria for use of communication control:

Firstly, there are no rules protecting journalistic sources from unintended disclosure, i.e. where the communication control is not directed towards a journalist. This does however not, as the ECtHR pointed out in *Weber and Savaria v. Germany*¹, in itself amount to a violation of Article 10.

Secondly, The Criminal Procedure Act and the Police Act open up for communication control to investigate, avert or prevent a lot of different criminal acts. These provisions are of varied precision. An example is the fifth subsection of Section 131 of the Penal Act, which states that any person “who has an intent” to complete an act of terrorism, and who undertakes actions that “facilitate and points towards” the completion, will be sentenced for attempt. As Section 131 of the Penal Act does not specify which actions that are prohibited, the decisive question will be whether the person has an intent to complete the terror act. When combining this with Section 17 of the Police Act, which entails the Police Security Service to use communication control to “investigate whether any person is preparing” for such preparations, the result is a very vague norm. As a scholar has put it, this combination gives the Police Security Service a “carte blanche to monitor broad segments of the Norwegian people”.¹ Another lawyer has argued that this regime could have a chilling effect on potential sources, and that the actual protection of sources is to a great extent illusive.¹

Thirdly, the need for a court’s decision to conduct communication control constitutes an important procedural safeguard. But as shown, there are exceptions from this main rule in cases of urgency. And even though the measures shall be submitted to a court for approval, we would again like to stress that such review post factum will be poor consolation for the media.

10. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

The Norwegian press are obligated to protecting their sources in accordance with the Ethical Code of Practice for the Press (printed press, radio, television and net publications)¹⁰⁰, which is a regulation adopted by the Norwegian Press Association. Section 3.4 reads as following:

«Protect the sources of the press. The protection of sources is a basic principle in a free society and is a prerequisite for the ability of the press to fulfil its duties towards society and ensure the access to essential information.»

The Association of Norwegian Editors¹⁰¹ have addressed the importance of use of encryption in order to protect their sources. The technology site of the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation (NRK), *NRKbeta*¹⁰² was one of the first Norwegian broadcastings to use advance encryption on their news tips page. In many cases the source is unaware of the technological risk of revealing their identity when contacting the media.¹⁰³

¹⁰⁰ Adopted by the Norwegian Press Association June 13. 2015. <http://presse.no/pfu/etiske-regler/vaer-varsom-plakaten/vvpl-engelsk/>

¹⁰¹ <http://livestream.com/accounts/3722443/events/3761505> and <http://www.dn.no/meninger/debatt/2016/04/06/2144/Medier/stopp--og-tenk>

¹⁰² <https://nrkbeta.no/about/>

¹⁰³ Anders Brenna, Digitalt Kildevern (2012) p. 27-29.

According to The Criminal Procedure Act¹⁰⁴ Section 216 a,

«The court may make an order permitting the police to carry out communications surveillance when any person is with the just cause suspected of an act or attempt at an act

- a) that is punishable pursuant to statute by imprisonment for a term of 10 years or more, or
- b) b) that contravenes sections 90, 91, 91 a, 94, cf. 90, 104 a, first paragraph, second sentence, or 104 a, second paragraph, cf. first paragraph, second sentence, or section 162 or 317, cf. 162, of the Penal Code, or that contravenes section 5 of the Act relating to control of the export of strategic goods, services and technology, etc.»

Any increase of the maximum penalty because of repletion or concurrence of felonies shall not be taken into account.

A decision permitting communications surveillance may be made even though a penalty may not be imposed by reason of the provisions of section 44 or 46 of the Penal Code. This also applies when the situation has entailed that the suspect has not manifested guilt.

Communications surveillance may consist of audio surveillance of conversations or other communications conducted to or from specific telephones or which it may be assumed he will use. Identification of communication apparatus by means of technological equipment, cf. Section 216 b, second paragraph (c), which is done by surveillance of conversations or other communications, shall also be regarded as communications surveillance.

Such permission may be given regardless of who owns or supplies the network or service that is used for the conversation or communication. The police may order the owner or supplier of the network or service to provide such assistance as is necessary for effecting the surveillance.»

The Police Law Act¹⁰⁵ section 17 d provides the Norwegian Police Security Service (PST) with an authorization to engage in communications control in purely preventive purposes.

The objective is that PST is responsible internal security, whilst the Norwegian Intelligence Service Intelligence is responsible to national external security. Act of 20 March 1998 relating to the Norwegian Intelligence Service, Section 3 reads as following:

Section 3. *The Norwegian Intelligence Service shall procure, process and analyse information regarding Norwegian interests viewed in relation to foreign states, organizations or private individuals, and in this context prepares threat analyses and intelligence assessments to the extent that this may help to safeguard important national interests (...).*¹⁰⁶

In 2006 the Norwegian Parliament established the Norwegian Surveillance and Security Services (EOS-utvalget). Their mandate is to monitor the surveillance against the public, and secure that surveillance is accordance with the human rights.¹⁰⁷

¹⁰⁴ The Criminal Procedure Act with subsequent amendments, the latest made by Act of 30 June 2006 No. 53. <http://app.uio.no/ub/ujur/oversatte-lover/data/lov-19810522-025-eng.pdf>

¹⁰⁵ The Police Act of 21 December 2005 No. 130. It is only the Police Act of 1995 which is available in English; <http://app.uio.no/ub/ujur/oversatte-lover/data/lov-19950804-053-eng.pdf>.

¹⁰⁶ Act of 20 March 1998 relating to the Norwegian Intelligence Service No. 11.

<http://app.uio.no/ub/ujur/oversatte-lover/data/lov-19980320-011-eng.pdf>

¹⁰⁷ Lov om kontroll med etterretnings-, overvåknings- og sikkerhetstjeneste (EOS-kontrollloven) LOV-1995-02-03-7 § 2.

This regulation must be interpreted in light of the fundamental right to freedom of speech, in accordance with Article 100 in the Norwegian Constitution¹⁰⁸ and Article 10 of ECHR. The ECHR is incorporated as part of the Norwegian legislation.¹⁰⁹ Article 8 ECHR regards to the right to respect for private and family life is also relevant in this issue.

According to the Personal Data Act¹¹⁰ Section 11 A on Basic requirements for the processing of personal data, the controller shall ensure that personal data which are processed are processed only when this is authorised pursuant to the law.

In 2013, the Intelligence Battalion of Northern Norway failed to meet this requirement, when they illegally processed information on nine journalists.¹¹¹ The Data Inspectorate issued a fine of NOK 75.000, - as sanction.

The Fritt Ord Foundation and one of Norway's most experienced media law attorney Jon Wessel-Aas' rapport on the freedom of press, stated that the Norwegian press is faced with challenges through the potentially chilling effect this may have on the sources willingness to use ordinary communication channels to inform of confidential information.¹¹²

In 2012 Norwegian law enforcement began investigating lawyer Sigurd Klomsæt for leaking documents concerning the 22.07 terrorist attacks to the media. Phone logs were presented as evidence during the trial to show that the lawyer had been in contact with journalists. The lawyer was found guilty of leaking the documents and lost his legal license.¹¹³

Klomsæt and The Association of Norwegian Editors argued in his appeal to the Norwegian Supreme Court that the disclosure of the transcript of telecommunications is in violation of ¹⁰⁸ Article 100 of The Constitution, as laid down on 17 May 1814 by the Constituent Assembly at Eidsvoll and subsequently amended, most recently in March 2016, reads as following:

«There shall be freedom of expression. No one may be held liable in law for having imparted or received information, ideas or messages unless this can be justified in relation to the grounds for freedom of expression, which are the seeking of truth, the promotion of democracy and the individual's freedom to form opinions. Such legal liability shall be prescribed by law. Everyone shall be free to speak their mind frankly on the administration of the State and on any other subject whatsoever. Clearly defined limitations to this right may only be imposed when particularly weighty considerations so justify in relation to the grounds for freedom of expression. Prior censorship and other preventive measures may not be applied unless so required in order to protect children and young persons from the harmful influence of moving pictures. Censorship of letters may only be imposed in institutions. Everyone has a right of access to documents of the State and municipalities and a right to follow the proceedings of the courts and democratically elected bodies. Limitations to this right may be prescribed by law to protect the privacy of the individual or for other weighty reasons. The authorities of the state shall create conditions that facilitate open and enlightened public discourse.»

¹⁰⁹ Act of 21 May 1999 no. 30 relating to the strengthening of the status of human rights in Norwegian law (The Human Rights Act).

¹¹⁰ Act of 14 April 2000 No. 31 relating to the processing of personal data (Personal Data Act).

¹¹¹ https://www.datatilsynet.no/globalassets/global/05_vedtak_saker/2014/14-00062-9-vedtak-om-overtredelsesgebyr-etterretningsbataljonen-nord-norge.pdf

¹¹² http://www.frittord.no/images/uploads/files/Pressefrihetens_kaar_JW-Aa.pdf

¹¹³ LB-2013-63938-2

journalists' rights to protection of sources in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Act section 125,¹¹⁴ and that this violates the right to privacy and freedom of expression in accordance with ECHR Article 8 and Article 10. But the Court concluded with the fact that a journalist refuses to provide source, does not preclude prosecutors from finding the source using other methods.¹¹⁵

11. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

«Whistle-blower» is defined as any person who reports or discloses information on a threat or harm to the public interest in the context of their work-based relationship, whether it be in the public or private sector.¹¹⁶ The Norwegian legislation does not provide further definition of the term. Whistle-blowers are however protected pursuant to Section 2-4 of the Working Environment Act¹¹⁷, which reads as following:

Section 2-4. Notification concerning censurable conditions at the undertaking

(1) An employee has a right to notify concerning censurable conditions at the undertaking.

(2) The employee shall follow an appropriate procedure in connection with such notification. The employee has notwithstanding the right to notify in accordance with the duty to notify or the undertaking's routines for notification. The same applies to notification to supervisory authorities or other public authorities.

(3) The employer has the burden of proof that notification has been made in breach of this provision.

The Working Environment Act regulates the statutory the employee's right of notification concerning censurable conditions at the undertaking. The law provides protection against retaliation and requires employers to develop routines and arrangements for internal notification in their establishments¹¹⁸. All establishments in the private and public sectors are covered by the legislation. The rules apply to all employees in all sorts of positions, and to all circumstances where an employee is to notify about concerning censurable conditions.¹¹⁹ This implies that the ¹¹⁴ Act relating to legal procedure in criminal cases [The Criminal Procedure Act] With subsequent amendments, the latest made by Act of 30 June 2006, Section 125 first para.:

The editor of a printed publication may refuse to answer questions concerning who is the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to questions concerning who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work.

¹¹⁵ Rt-2013-1282, para. 45.

¹¹⁶ Appendix to Recommendation CM/Rec(2014)7.

¹¹⁷ Act of 17. June 2005 No. 62 relating to working environment, working hours and employment protection, etc. (Working Environment Act) as subsequently amended, last by the Act of 14. December 2012 No. 80.

¹¹⁸ Section 3-6 of the Working Environment Act, reads as following:

«The employer shall, in connection with systematic health, environment and safety work, develop routines for internal notification or implement other measures that facilitate internal notification concerning censurable conditions at the undertaking pursuant to section 2-4, if the circumstances in the undertaking so indicate.»

¹¹⁹ Ot.prp. no. 84 (2005-2006) p.50.

act applies to all circumstances from routine discrepancy reporting to the extraordinary extent of notifying the media about corruption.

An employee is generally entitled to notify, although information enclosed about the reprehensible conditions or injuries can damage business interests. Even if the information weakens the company's reputation or lead to lower sales records for products. Employees shall not be faced with dismissal or other negative consequences as a result of their notification.

This legislation must be interpreted in light of the fundamental right to freedom of speech, in accordance with Article 100 in the Norwegian Constitution¹²⁰ and Article 10 of The European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). ECHR is incorporated as part of the Norwegian legislation.¹²¹ Employees have the right to express their opinion on matters relating to the business they work in. The right to notify concerning censurable conditions at the undertaking in accordance with Section 2-4 is an expression of the constitutional freedom of expression.

An employee is always entitled to notify the supervisory or other public authorities. Such notification is always considered to be properly and legally. Employees also have the opportunity to alert the media or otherwise make information available to the general public. In cases where internal reporting or notification to the supervisory authorities fails or is insufficient it is crucial that the employee has the opportunity to notify other channels of information. The employee must, however, take into account that this usually means greater risk than by notification through other methods.¹²²

The Parliamentary Ombudsman has expressed concern regards to the developments in the public sector¹²³, where the findings indicate that freedom of speech is weaker than one would assume given the amendments to § 100 of the Norwegian Constitution as well as the protection of whistle-blowers regulated in the Working Environment Act.

¹²⁰ Article 100 of The Constitution, as laid down on 17 May 1814 by the Constituent Assembly at Eidsvoll and subsequently amended, most recently in March 2016, reads as following:

«There shall be freedom of expression. No one may be held liable in law for having imparted or received information, ideas or messages unless this can be justified in relation to the grounds for freedom of expression, which are the seeking of truth, the promotion of democracy and the individual's freedom to form opinions. Such legal liability shall be prescribed by law. Everyone shall be free to speak their mind frankly on the administration of the State and on any other subject whatsoever. Clearly defined limitations to this right may only be imposed when particularly weighty considerations so justify in relation to the grounds for freedom of expression. Prior censorship and other preventive measures may not be applied unless so required in order to protect children and young persons from the harmful influence of moving pictures. Censorship of letters may only be imposed in institutions. Everyone has a right of access to documents of the State and municipalities and a right to follow the proceedings of the courts and democratically elected bodies. Limitations to this right may be prescribed by law to protect the privacy of the individual or for other weighty reasons. The authorities of the state shall create conditions that facilitate open and enlightened public discourse.»

¹²¹ Act of 21 May 1999 no. 30 relating to the strengthening of the status of human rights in Norwegian law (The Human Rights Act).

¹²² <http://www.arbeidstilsynet.no/binfil/download2.php?tid=92254> and <http://www.fafo.no/~fafo/images/pub/2014/20352.pdf> p.107.

¹²³ <https://www.sivilombudsmannen.no/ytringsfrihet-for-offentlig-tilsatte/undersokelse-av-eget-tiltak-offentlig-ansattes-ytringsfrihet-article4165-452.html>

Police Detective Robin Schaefer is a recent example of whistle-blower. He perceived serious shortcomings in the investigation of the eight-year-old girl's death. The case was dismissed as suicide. His superiors rejected his criticism of the investigation, and he eventually led the case to be reopened.¹²⁴

Working Environment Act does not limit the employee from notifying anonymously. Yet, duty of confidentiality and defamation may restrict the right to notify. These restrictions may relate to divulge trade secrets, personal data e.g. However, an employee's right to notify can only be restricted by law. Confidentiality agreements, instructions, regulations etc. that limits this right is therefore illegal. An employer may not restrict employees' ability to inform the media or public authorities.

Protection against retaliation in connection with notification also applies if the employee obtains information or otherwise that he or she is planning or considering notifying.¹²⁵ This may occur in circumstances where the employee is copying documents or threatens to notify the media the concerning censurable conditions are not corrected. The methods the employee is operating within shall however be legal. An employee may not, for example enter someone else e-mail account in violation of the Personal Data Act.¹²⁶

Ethical Code of Practice for the Press (printed press, radio, television and net publications)¹²⁷ is a regulation adopted by the Norwegian Press Association. Each editor and editorial staff member is required to be familiar with these ethical standards of the press, and to base their practice on this code. The ethical practice comprehends the complete journalistic process from research to publication.

«3.5. Do not divulge the name of a person who has provided information on a confidential basis, unless consent has been explicitly given by the person concerned.»

In the precedent *Goodwin v. the United Kingdom*¹²⁸ the case concerned a disclosure order imposed on a journalist requiring him to reveal the identity of a whistle-blower who provided information on a company's confidential corporate plan. There was not, in the European Court of Human Rights' view, a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the legitimate aim pursued by

¹²⁴ <http://www.bt.no/nyheter/lokalt/Etterforskeren-fryktet-Monika-8-var-drept-Sjefene-ba-ham-holde-seg-unna-saken-3195873.html>

¹²⁵ Section 2-5 of the Working Environment Act, reads as following:

«(1) Retaliation against an employee who notifies pursuant to section 2-4 is prohibited. If the employee submits information that gives reason to believe that retaliation in breach of the first sentence has taken place, it shall be assumed that such retaliation has taken place unless the employer substantiates otherwise.

(2) The first paragraph applies correspondingly in connection with retaliation against an employee who makes known that the right to notify pursuant to section 2-4 will be invoked, for example by providing information.

(3) Anyone who has been subjected to retaliation in breach of the first or second paragraph may claim compensation without regard to the fault of the employer. The compensation shall be fixed at the amount the court deems reasonable in view of the circumstances of the parties and other facts of the case. Compensation for financial loss may be claimed pursuant to the normal rules.»

¹²⁶ Act of 14 April 2000 No. 31 relating to the processing of personal data (Personal Data Act).

¹²⁷ Adopted by the Norwegian Press Association June 13. 2015. <http://presse.no/pfu/etiske-regler/vaer-varsom-plakaten/vvpl-engelsk/>

¹²⁸ Goodwin v. United Kingdom No. 17488/90

the disclosure order and the means deployed to achieve that aim and the Court ruled on a violation of his right to freedom of expression under Article 10 of the ECHR. If journalists are forced to reveal their sources the role of the press as public watchdog could be undermined due to the «chilling effect» that such disclosure would have on the free flow of information.¹²⁹

In more recent case such as *Financial Times*¹³⁰ and Autoweek,¹³¹ the Court ruled in both cases there has been a violation of Article 10, and stated in Autoweek the following;

«(...) the Court emphasises that a chilling effect will arise wherever journalists are seen to assist in the identification of anonymous sources.»¹³²

ECHR restrictive practice can be interpreted as the Court goes further to underline the importance of the long-term perspective such as the chilling effect in their assessment¹³³. This approach is a contrast to the Norwegian case Rt. 1997 p.1734 Ulovlig basehopping. Nevertheless, in the ruling Rt.2010 p. 1381 Finneren the Supreme Court of Norway emphasized the negative impact of the chilling effect and the consequences it may have on the press's watchdog role.¹³⁴

Many Norwegian scholars are of the impression that the ECHR are more attentive to the standard of the chilling effect than Norwegian courts.¹³⁵

12. Conclusion

12.1. Protection for Journalists Not to Disclose Their Source of Information

With the nature of Norwegian legislation being a part of the explanation, explicit legislation providing the specific journalist protection for non-disclosure when it comes to their sources does not exist.

The Norwegian Press Association makes sure that the Norwegian press follows their self-imposed code of ethics and responds to and investigates complaints made by the public. This is merely a self-regulating mechanism and is not considered to be legally binding.

The constitution does provide some protection through its § 100 that states the right to freedom of expression. Norwegian legal method allows for a comprehensive interpretation; thus a case can be made that the provision protects journalists from disclosing their sources.

¹²⁹ Goodwin v. United Kingdom No. 17488/90, para. 39: «Having regard to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 (art. 10) of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest.»

¹³⁰ Financial Times Ltd & Ors v United Kingdom No. 821/03

¹³¹ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands No. 38224/03

¹³² Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands No. 38224/03 para. 71.

¹³³ NOU 2011: 12 ch. 12.3.3.

¹³⁴ Rt-2010-1381 Para. 62.

¹³⁵ <http://www.klassekampen.no/article/20150729/ARTICLE/150729795>

12.2. Provisions that Prohibits the Disclosure of Sources

Provisions that prohibits the disclosure of a source does not exist in Norwegian legislation. The general rule of law on the subject is that the source is not to be disclosed but the journalist can be compelled to do so if one of the few exceptions found in The Criminal Procedure Act § 125 or The Dispute Act § 22-11 applies.

The Code of Ethics, even though not legally binding, is followed by the press. All though all sanctions that the Norwegian Press Complaints Commission have at their disposal are merely reprimands these may be damaging to the professional reputation of a journalist.

There has been a discussion on whether or not the commission should be able to impose fines on those who violates the Code of Ethics, but the general opinion is that the Code of Ethics and provisions of law should be held separately and that if fines are to be imposed the proper provisions should be decided by parliament.

12.3. Defining “Journalist” and the Scope of Source Protection

Norwegian legislation makes no attempt at defining “journalists” and the term is not really used in legislation. As the person responsible for publications, the editor has a more central role in legislation. Both The Dispute Act and The Criminal Procedure Act uses the term “editor of a printed publication” which can be interpreted as the editor of any newspaper, magazine, publication in paper or on the Internet.

That the term “printed publication” was to be given a broad meaning was established by the supreme court in Rt. 1992 s. 39 (The spider). The court states that they, with regards to the provision, “find it natural to understand this so that it is the very journalistic work that should be protected”. In the same ruling the court states that the provision must be seen in a “long-term perspective” hence also covering internet publications.

12.4. Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources

The legal safeguards are for the most part enshrined in two provisions, the Dispute Act (2005) article 22-11 and the Criminal Procedure Act, article 12. The articles state that in order to rule for disclosure the court must determine if “important social interests” indicates that the “information should be given”, and it must also be “of substantial significance for the clarification of the case”.

The legal safeguards only apply if someone is either sued or charged with a criminal offence. However, in combination with the press’ self-regulatory mechanism (the Code of Ethics and the Norwegian Press Complaints Commission) make up a system where both legal and ethical breaches are sanctioned.

12.5. National Legislation in Relation to Recommendation No R (2007)7

Source protection in Norway is enshrined in The Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraphs 1 and 2 for criminal cases and under the Dispute act section 22-11 paragraphs 1 and 3 for civil cases and states that an editors and other media workers may refuse to provide evidence about the identity of their sources. Section 100 of the constitution furthermore protects the right to source protection.

However, there are limitations to the protection of sources. These limitations are found in the Criminal Procedure Act section 125 paragraph 3 and the Dispute Act section 22-11 paragraph 2. The limits of these provisions has been further established by the Supreme Court. The cases Rt. 2015-1286 (Rolfesen) and Rt. 2013-1290 (Brennpunkt) have been crucial for the development of the rule of law on the subject.

In the Rolfesen-case the PST (Police Secret Service) had seized unpublished film material from a Norwegian film maker (Rolfesen). The material contained footage of recruited fighter for ISIS. The court ruled that the protection of journalistic could not be compromised even if it could prevent major crime.

In the Brennpunkt-case a source in the police had tried to sell secret documents from the criminal investigation of the case against the now convicted terrorist Anders Behring Breivik. The news desk who the source had made the offer to refused the offer and the Norwegian Bureau for the Investigation of Police Affairs demanded that they disclosed the source. The court ruled on non-disclosure.

12.6. Interest in Disclosure V Interest in Non-Disclosure

The assessment of which interests that can outweigh non-disclosure must be carried out in accordance with ECHR article 10 and ECtHR case law. A disclosure can only be ordered if there exists an “overriding requirement in the public interest” and if the circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature.

In the case of Rt-2013-1290 (Brennpunkt) the Supreme Court followed the guidance of the Explanatory Memorandum of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 and found that “police corruption” and “breach of police confidentiality” couldn’t be defined as “major crime” and justify disclosure.

The two basic terms of The Criminal Procedure Act 125 paragraph 3 and the Dispute Act 22-11 paragraph 2, has to be fulfilled if the court is to, based on an overall assessment, order the evidence to be presented or the source to be revealed. This assessment is based on a wide balancing of interests.

12.7. Balancing Different Interests in Light of ECtHR Case Law

The Supreme Court follows the principles laid down by ECHR when balancing different interests. Especially in the Rt-1992-39 (Edderkoppen), Rt-2004-140 (Dørvakt) and Rt-2013-1290 (Brennpunkt) cases, the competing interests were weightier than in both Goodwin and Financial Times. Still the Supreme Court gave more importance to an effective source protection.

The Court has also underlined 1) the need for a long time perspective, 2) that an effective source protection is in the public's interest, and that a limited protection could have a chilling effect on potential sources, and 3) that it is not decisive whether the source or other individuals have acted illegally or blameworthy.

12.8. Electronic Surveillance and Anti-Terrorism Law

There is not a general prohibition of investigative measures conducted to reveal the identity of a source. Section 170a of the Criminal Procedure Act states that if there is "sufficient reason" the police may use coercive methods as long as it, in view of "the nature of the case and other circumstances", would not be considered a "disproportionate intervention". The provision is to be applied in accordance with the obligations laid down by the ECHR.

12.9. Encryption and Anonymity Online

The Association of Norwegian Editors have addressed the importance of using encryption to protect sources. Many news outlets are using advanced encryption pre-emptively because many sources may not know the technological risks they are taking when contacting media.

The Criminal Procedure Act Section 216 a states that the court may authorize the police to carry out communications surveillance where a person is, with just cause, suspected of a serious offence.

The Police Law Act section 17 d provides the Norwegian Police Security Service (PST) with an authorization to engage in communications control in purely preventive purposes.

The provisions give the police leeway to gather information that may lead to solving a case. In the case Rt-2013-1282 the accused argued that the disclosure of transcripts of telecommunications was in violation of journalists' rights to protection of sources in accordance with The Criminal Procedure Act section 125. The Supreme Court stated that the fact that a journalist refuses to provide source, does not preclude prosecutors from finding the source using other methods

12.10. Whistle-Blowers

Whistle-blowers are protected pursuant to Section 2-4 of the Working Environment Act which states that employees have a "right to notify" concerning censurable conditions. The employees are protected by law against retaliation from the employer. The protection given by provision must be seen in context with the fundamental freedom of speech, protected by article 100 in the Constitution.

The Working Environment Act does not limit the employees from notifying anonymously but they may be bound by duty of confidentiality and defamation restricting the right to notify.

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Vær varsom-plakaten Etiske normer for pressen (trykt presse, radio, fjernsyn og nettpublikasjoner) Den enkelte redaktør og medarbeider har ansvar for å kjenne pressens etiske normer og plikter å legge disse til grunn for sin virksomhet. Presseetikken gjelder hele den journalistiske prosessen, fra innsamling til presentasjon av det journalistiske materialet. 1. Pressens samfunnsrolle 1.1. Ytringsfrihet, informasjonsfrihet og trykkefrihet er grunnelementer i et demokrati. En fri, uavhengig presse er blant de viktigste institusjoner i demokratiske samfunn. 1.2. Pressen ivaretar viktige oppgaver som informasjon, debatt og samfunnskritikk. Pressen har et spesielt ansvar for at ulike syn kommer til uttrykk. 1.3. Pressen skal verne om ytringsfriheten, trykkefriheten og offentlighetsprinsippet. Den kan ikke gi etter for press fra noen som vil hindre åpen debatt, fri informasjonsformidling og fri adgang til kildene. Avtaler om eksklusiv formidling av arrangementer skal ikke være til hinder for fri	Code of Ethics of the Norwegian Press Ethical Code of Practice for the Press (printed press, radio, television and net publications). Adopted by the Norwegian Press Association June 13. 2015. Each editor and editorial staff member is required to be familiar with these ethical standards of the press, and to base their practice on this code. The ethical practice comprehends the complete journalistic process from research to publication. 1. The Role of the Press in Society 2.1. Freedom of Speech, Freedom of Information and Freedom of the Press are basic elements of a democracy. A free, independent press is among the most important institutions in a democratic society. 2.2. The press has important functions in that it carries information, debates and critical comments on current affairs. The press is particularly responsible for allowing different views to be expressed. 2.3. The press shall protect the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press and the principle of access to official documents. It cannot yield to any pressure from anybody who might want to prevent open debates, the free flow of information and free access to sources. Agreements concerning exclusive event reporting shall not preclude

nyhetsformidling. 1.4. Det er pressens rett å informere om det som skjer i samfunnet og avdekke kritikkverdige forhold. Det er pressens plikt å sette et kritisk søkelys på hvordan mediene selv fyller sin samfunnsrolle. 1.5. Det er pressens oppgave å beskytte enkeltmennesker og grupper mot overgrep eller forsømmelser fra offentlige myndigheter og institusjoner, private foretak eller andre. 2. Integritet og troverdighet 2.1 Den ansvarlige redaktør har det personlige og fulle ansvar for mediets innhold og avgjør med endelig virkning spørsmål om redaksjonelt innhold, finansiering, presentasjon og publisering. Redaktøren skal opptre fritt og uavhengig overfor personer eller grupper som av ideologiske, økonomiske eller andre grunner vil øve innflytelse på det redaksjonelle innholdet. Redaktøren skal verne om redaksjonens produksjon av fri og uavhengig journalistikk. 2.2 Redaktøren og den enkelte redaksjonelle medarbeider skal verne om sin uavhengighet, integritet og troverdighet. Unngå dobbeltroller, verv, oppdrag eller bindinger som kan skape interessekonflikter eller føre til spekulasjoner om inhabilitet. 2.3 Vis åpenhet om bakenforliggende forhold som kan være relevante for publikums oppfatning av det journalistiske innholdet. 2.4. Redaksjonelle medarbeidere må ikke utnytte sin stilling til å oppnå private fordeler, herunder motta penger, varer eller tjenester, som kan oppfattes å være kompensasjon fra	independent news reporting. 2.4. It is the right of the press to carry information on what goes on in society and to uncover and disclose matters, which ought to be subjected to criticism. It is a press obligation to shed critical light on how media themselves exercise their role. 1.5. It is the task of the press to protect individuals and groups against injustices or neglect, committed by public authorities and institutions, private enterprises, or others. 2. Integrity and credibility 2.1 The responsible editor carries personal and full responsibility for the contents of the media and has the final decision in any questions regarding editorial content, financing, presentation and publication. The editor shall act freely and independently towards any persons or groups who – for ideological, economic or other reasons – might want to exercise an influence over the editorial content. The editor shall safeguard the editorial staff's production of free and independent journalism. 2.2 The editor and the individual editorial staff member must protect their independence, integrity and credibility. Avoid dual roles, positions, commissions or commitments that create conflicts of interest connected to or leading to speculations of disqualification. 2.3 Be open on matters that could be relevant for how the public perceive the journalistic content. 2.4 Members of the editorial staff must not exploit their position in order to achieve
---	---

utenforstående for redaksjonelle ytelser. 2.5. En redaksjonell medarbeider kan ikke pålegges å gjøre noe som strider mot egen overbevisning. 2.6. Svekk aldri det klare skillet mellom journalistikk og reklame. Det skal være åpenbart for publikum hva som er kommersielt innhold. Skillet skal være tydelig også ved lenking eller andre koblinger. Avvis kommersielt innhold som kan forveksles med det enkelte mediums journalistiske presentasjon. 2.7 Journalistisk omtale av produkter, tjenester, merkenavn og kommersielle interesser, også mediets egne, skal være journalistisk motivert og ikke fremstå som reklame. Oppretthold et klart skille mellom markedsaktiviteter og redaksjonelt arbeid. Gi aldri tilsagn om journalistiske motytelser for reklame. Unngå ukritisk videreformidling av PR-stoff. 2.8 Skjult reklame er uforenlig med god presseskikk. Kommersielle interesser skal ikke ha innflytelse på journalistisk virksomhet, innhold eller presentasjon. Hvis redaksjonelt stoff er sponset, eller et program har produktplasseringer, skal dette være åpenbart for publikum. Sponsing skal alltid være tydelig merket. Sponsing eller produktplassering i nyhets- og aktualitetsjournalistikk eller journalistikk rettet mot barn, er uforenlig med god presseskikk. Direkte utgifter til journalistisk virksomhet skal som hovedregel betales av redaksjonen selv. Ved unntak skal publikum gjøres tydelig oppmerksom på hva som er finansiert av utenforstående interesser. 2.9 Redaksjonelle medarbeidere må ikke motta pålegg om oppdrag fra andre enn den	personal gain, including receiving money, goods or services, that can be perceived as compensation from outsiders for editorial benefits. 2.5 A member of the editorial staff cannot be ordered to do anything that is contrary to his or her convictions. 2.6 Never undermine the clear distinction between editorial copy and advertisements. It must be obvious to the public what is deemed to be commercial content. The distinction must be obvious also when using web links and other connective means. Decline any commercial content that can be confused with the individual medium's journalistic presentation. 2.7. Editorial mention of products, services, brand names and commercial interests, including the media's own, must be motivated by editorial considerations and must not appear as an advertisement. Maintain an obvious distinction between marketing activities and editorial work. Turn down any offers of journalistic favours in return for advertisements. Avoid indiscriminate reproduction of PR material. 2.8 Hidden advertising is incompatible with good press practice. Commercial interests must not influence journalistic activities, content or presentation. If the editorial material is sponsored, or a programme has product placements, this must be obvious to the public. Sponsorship must always be clearly marked. Sponsorship or product placement in news or current affairs journalism or journalism directed at children is incompatible with good press practice. Direct expenses for journalistic activities must in the main be paid by the editorial department itself. In the event of an
---	---

redaksjonelle ledelsen. 3. Journalistisk atferd og forholdet til kildene 3.1. Kilden for informasjon skal som hovedregel identifiseres, med mindre det kommer i konflikt med kildevernet eller hensynet til tredjeperson. 3.2. Vær kritisk i valg av kilder, og kontroller at opplysninger som gis er korrekte. Det er god presseskikk å tilstrebe bredde og relevans i valg av kilder. Vær spesielt aktsom ved behandling av informasjon fra anonyme kilder, informasjon fra kilder som tilbyr eksklusivitet, og informasjon som er gitt fra kilder mot betaling. 3.3. Det er god presseskikk å gjøre premissene klare i intervjusituasjoner og ellers overfor kilder og kontakter. Avtale om eventuell sitatsjekk bør inngås i forkant av intervjuet, og det bør gjøres klart hva avtalen omfatter og hvilke tidsfrister som gjelder. Redaksjonen selv avgjør hva som endelig publiseres. 3.4. Vern om pressens kilder. Kildevernet er et grunnleggende prinsipp i et fritt samfunn og er en forutsetning for at pressen skal kunne fylle sin samfunnsoppgave og sikre tilgangen på vesentlig informasjon. 3.5. Oppgi ikke navn på kilde for opplysninger som er gitt i fortrolighet, hvis dette ikke er uttrykkelig avtalt med	exception, the audience must be made aware of what is financed by external interests. 2.9 Members of the editorial staff must not accept assignments from anyone other than editorial management. 3. Journalistic Conduct and Relations with the Sources 3.1. The source of information must, as a rule, be identified, unless this conflicts with source protection or consideration for a third party. 3.2. Be critical in the choice of sources, and make sure that the information provided is correct. It is good press practice to aim for diversity and relevance in the choice of sources. If anonymous sources are used, or the publication is offered exclusivity, especially stringent requirements must be imposed on the critical evaluation of the sources. Particular caution should be exercised when dealing with information from anonymous sources, information from sources offering exclusivity, and information provided from sources in return for payment. 3.3. Good press conduct requires clarification of the terms on which an interview is being carried out. This also pertains to adjacent research. Any agreement regarding quote check should be made in advance of the interview, and it should be made clear what the agreement includes and what deadlines apply. The editors decide for themselves what should finally be published. 3.4. Protect the sources of the press. The protection of sources is a basic principle in a free society and is a prerequisite for the ability of the press to fulfil its duties towards society and ensure the access to essential
---	--

vedkommende. 3.6. Av hensyn til kildene og pressens uavhengighet skal upublisert materiale som hovedregel ikke utleveres til utenforstående. 3.7. Pressen har plikt til å gjengi meningsinnholdet i det som brukes av intervjuobjektets uttalelser. Direkte sitater skal gjengis presist. 3.8. Endring av avgitte uttalelser bør begrenses til korrigerende av faktiske feil. Ingen uten redaksjonell myndighet kan gripe inn i redigering og presentasjon av redaksjonelt materiale. 3.9. Opptre hensynsfullt i den journalistiske arbeidsprosessen. Vis særlig hensyn overfor personer som ikke kan ventes å være klar over virkningen av sine uttalelser. Misbruk ikke andres følelser, uvitenhet eller sviktende dømmekraft. Husk at mennesker i sjokk eller sorg er mer sårbare enn andre. 3.10. Skjult kamera/mikrofon eller falsk identitet skal bare brukes i unntakstilfeller. Forutsetningen må være at dette er eneste mulighet til å avdekke forhold av vesentlig samfunnsmessig betydning. 3.11. Pressen skal som hovedregel ikke betale kilder og intervjuobjekter for informasjon. Vis moderasjon ved honorering for nyhetstips. Det er uforenlig med god presseskikk å ha betalingsordninger som er egnet til å friste mennesker til uberettiget å trå innenfor andres privatsfære eller gi fra seg personsensitiv informasjon.	information. 3.5. Do not divulge the name of a person who has provided information on a confidential basis, unless consent has been explicitly given by the person concerned. 3.6. In consideration of the sources and the independence of the press, unpublished material as a main rule should not be divulged to third parties. 3.7. It is the duty of the press to report the intended meaning in quotes from an interview. Direct quotes must be accurate. 3.8. Changes of a given statement should be limited to corrections of factual errors. No one without editorial authority may intervene in the editing or presentation of editorial material 3.9. Proceed tactfully in journalistic research. In particular show consideration for people who cannot be expected to be aware of the effect that their statements may have. Never abuse the emotions or feeling of other people, their ignorance or their lack of judgment. Remember that people in shock or grief are more vulnerable than others. 3.10. Hidden cameras/microphones or false identity may only be used under special circumstances. The condition must be that such a method is the only possible way to uncover cases of essential importance to society. 3.11. The press shall as a rule not pay sources or interviewees for information. Exercise moderation when paying a consideration for news tips. It is incompatible with good press practice to employ payment schemes
--	---

4. Publiseringsregler 4.1. Legg vekt på saklighet og omtanke i innhold og presentasjon. 4.2. Gjør klart hva som er faktiske opplysninger og hva som er kommentarer. 4.3. Vis respekt for menneskers egenart og identitet, privatliv, etnisitet, nasjonalitet og livssyn. Vær varsom ved bruk av begreper som kan virke stigmatiserende. Fremhev ikke personlige og private forhold når dette er saken uvedkommende. 4.4. Sørg for at overskrifter, henvisninger, inngresser og inn- og utannonseringer ikke går lenger enn det er dekning for i stoffet. Det er god presseskikk å oppgi kilden når opplysninger er hentet fra andre medier. 4.5. Unngå forhåndsdomming i kriminal- og rettsreportasje. Gjør det klart at skyldspørsmålet for en mistenkt, anmeldt, siktet eller tiltalt først er avgjort ved rettskraftig dom. Det er god presseskikk å omtale en rettskraftig avgjørelse i saker som har vært omtalt tidligere. 4.6. Ta hensyn til hvordan omtale av ulykker og kriminalsaker kan virke på ofre og pårørende. Identifiser ikke omkomne eller savnede personer uten at de nærmeste pårørende er underrettet. Vis hensyn overfor mennesker i sorg eller ubalanse. 4.7. Vær varsom med bruk av navn og bilde og andre klare identifikasjonstegn på personer	designed to tempt people, without due cause, to invade the privacy of others or to disclose sensitive personal information. 4. Publication Rules 4.1. Make a point of fairness and thoughtfulness in contents and presentation. 4.2. Make plain what is factual information and what is comment. 4.3. Always respect a person's character and identity, privacy, ethnicity, nationality and belief. Be careful when using terms that create stigmas. Never draw attention to personal or private aspects if they are irrelevant. 4.4. Make sure that headlines, introductions and leads do not go beyond what is being related in the text. It is considered good press conduct to reveal your source when the information is quoted from other media. 4.5. In particular avoid presumption of guilt in crime and court reporting. Make it evident that the question of guilt, whether relating to somebody under suspicion, reported, accused or charged, has not been decided until the sentence has legal efficacy. It is a part of good press conduct to report the final result of court proceedings, which have been reported earlier. 4.6. Always consider how reports on accidents and crime may affect the victims and next-of-kin. Do not identify victims or missing persons unless next-of-kin have been informed. Show consideration towards people in grief or at times of shock. 4.7. Be cautious in the use of names and photographs and other clear identifiers of
--	---

som omtales i forbindelse med klanderverdige eller straffbare forhold. Vis særlig varsomhet ved omtale av saker på tidlig stadium av etterforskning, i saker som gjelder unge lovovertridere, og der identifiserende omtale kan føre til urimelig belastning for tredjeperson. Identifisering må begrunnes i et berettiget informasjonsbehov. Det kan eksempelvis være berettiget å identifisere ved overhengende fare for overgrep mot forsvarsløse personer, ved alvorlige og gjentatte kriminelle handlinger, når omtales identitet eller samfunnsrolle har klar relevans for de forhold som omtales, eller der identifisering hindrer at uskyldige blir utsatt for uberettiget mistanke. 4.8. Når barn omtales, er det god presseskikk å ta hensyn til hvilke konsekvenser medieomtalen kan få for barnet. Dette gjelder også når foresatte har gitt sitt samtykke til eksponering. Barns identitet skal som hovedregel ikke røpes i familietvister, barnevernssaker eller rettssaker. 4.9. Vær varsom ved omtale av selvmord og selvmordsforsøk. Unngå omtale som ikke er nødvendig for å oppfylle allmenne informasjonsbehov. Unngå beskrivelse av metode eller andre forhold som kan bidra til å utløse flere selvmordshandlinger. 4.10. Vær varsom med bruk av bilder i annen sammenheng enn den opprinnelige. 4.11. Vern om det journalistiske fotografiets troverdighet. Bilder som brukes som dokumentasjon må ikke endres slik at de skaper et falskt inntrykk. Manipulerte bilder kan bare aksepteres som illustrasjon når det tydelig fremgår at det dreier seg om en montasje. 4.12. For bruk av bilder gjelder de samme	persons in referring to contentious or punishable matters. Special caution should be exercised when reporting cases at the early stage of investigation, cases concerning young offenders and cases in which an identifying report may place an unreasonable burden on a third party. Identification must be founded on a legitimate need for information. It may, for instance, be legitimate to identify someone where there is imminent danger of assault on defenceless individuals, in the case of serious and repeated crimes, if the identity or social position of the subject is patently relevant to the case being reported on, or where identification protects the innocent from exposure to unjustified suspicion. 4.8. Reporting on children, it is considered good press conduct to assess the implications that media focusing could cause in each case. This also pertains when the person in charge or parent, has agreed to exposure. As a general rule the identity of children should not be disclosed in reports on family disputes or cases under consideration by the childcare authorities or by the courts. 4.9. Be cautious when reporting on suicide and attempted suicide. Avoid reporting that is not necessary for meeting a general need for information. Avoid description of methods or other matters that may contribute to provoking further suicidal actions. 4.10. Exercise caution when using photos in any other context than the original. 4.11. Protect the credibility of the journalistic photograph. Photos used as documentation must not be altered in a way that creates a false impression. Manipulated photos can only be accepted as illustrations if it is evident that it in actual fact is a picture collage.
---	---

aktsomhetskrav som for skriftlig og muntlig fremstilling. 4.13. Feilaktige opplysninger skal rettes og eventuelt beklages snarest mulig. 4.14. De som utsettes for sterke beskyldninger skal så vidt mulig ha adgang til samtidig imøtegåelse av faktiske opplysninger. Debatt, kritikk og nyhetsformidling må ikke hindres ved at parter ikke er villig til å uttale seg eller medvirke til debatt. 4.15. De som er blitt utsatt for angrep skal snarest mulig få adgang til tilsvaret, med mindre angrep og kritikk inngår som ledd i en løpende meningsutveksling. Ha som krav at tilsvaret er av rimelig omfang, holder seg til saken og har en anstendig form. Tilsvaret kan nektes dersom den berørte part, uten saklig grunn, har avvist tilbud om samtidig imøtegåelse i samme spørsmål. Tilsvaret og debattinnlegg skal ikke utstyres med redaksjonell, polemisk replikk. 4.16. Vær varsom med å lenke fra digitale utgaver til innhold som bryter med god presseskikk. Sørg for at lenker til andre medier eller publikasjoner er tydelig merket. Det er god presseskikk å informere brukere av interaktive tjenester om hvordan publikasjonen registrerer og eventuelt utnytter bruken av tjenestene. 4.17. Dersom redaksjonen velger ikke å forhåndsredigere digitale meningsutvekslinger, må dette bekjentgjøres på en tydelig måte for de som har adgang til disse. Redaksjonen har et selvstendig ansvar for så snart som mulig å fjerne innlegg som bryter med god presseskikk.	4.12. The use of pictures must comply with the same requirements of caution as for a written or oral presentation. 4.13. Incorrect information must be corrected and, when called for, an apology given, as soon as possible. 4.14. Those who have been subjected to strong accusations shall, if possible, have the opportunity to simultaneous reply as regards factual information. Debates, criticism and dissemination of news must not be hampered by parties being unwilling to make comments or take part in the debate. 4.15. Those who have been the subject of an attack shall have the chance to reply at the earliest opportunity, unless the attack and criticism are part of a running exchange of views. Any reply should be of reasonable length, be pertinent to the matter and seemly in its form. The reply can be refused if the party in question has rejected, without an objective reason, an offer of presenting a contemporaneous rejoinder on the same issue. Replies and contributions to the debate should not be accompanied by polemic editorial comment. 4.16. Beware that digital publication pointers and links could bring you to other electronic media that do not comply with the Ethical Code. See to it that links to other media or publications are clearly marked. It is considered good press conduct to inform the users of interactive services on how the publication registers you, and possibly exploits your use of the services. 4.17. Should the editorial staff choose not to pre-edit digital chatting, this has to be announced in a clear manner for those accessing the pages. The editorial staff has a
---	---

Ord og bilder er mektige våpen. Misbruk dem ikke!	particular responsibility, instantly to remove inserts that are not in compliance with the Ethical Code.
Straffeprosessloven § 125 Redaktøren av et trykt skrift kan nekte å svare på spørsmål om hvem som er forfatter til en artikkel eller melding i skriftet eller kilde for opplysninger i det. Det samme gjelder spørsmål om hvem som er kilde for andre opplysninger som er betrodd redaktøren til bruk i hans virksomhet. Samme rett som redaktøren har andre som har fått kjennskap til forfatteren eller kilden gjennom sitt arbeid for vedkommende forlag, redaksjon, pressebyrå eller trykkeri. Når vektige samfunnsinteresser tilsier at opplysningen gis og den er av vesentlig betydning for sakens oppklaring, kan retten etter en samlet vurdering likevel pålegge vitnet å oppgi navnet. Dersom forfatteren eller kilden har avdekket forhold som det var av samfunnsmessig betydning å få gjort kjent, kan vitnet bare når det finnes særlig påkrevd pålegges å oppgi navnet. Når svar gis, kan retten beslutte at det bare skal gis til retten og partene i møte for lukkede dører og under pålegg om taushetsplikt.² Bestemmelsene i paragrafen her gjelder tilsvarende for kringkastingssjef og for medarbeidere i kringkasting³ eller annen	The Criminal Procedure Act § 125 The editor of a printed publication may refuse to answer questions concerning who is the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to questions concerning who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work. Other persons who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work for the publishers, editors, press agency or printers in questions have the same right as the editor. When important social interests indicate that the information should be given and it is of substantial significance for the clarification of the case, the court may, however, on an overall evaluation order the witness to reveal the name. If the author or source has revealed matters that it was socially important to disclose, the witness may be ordered to reveal the name only when this is found to be particularly necessary. When an answer is given, the court may decide that it shall only be given to the court and the parties at a sitting in camera and under an order to observe the duty of secrecy.

medievirksomhet som i hovedtrekk har samme formål som aviser og kringkasting.	The provisions of this section apply correspondingly to any director or employee of any broadcasting agency.
Twisteloven § 22-11 (1) Redaktøren av et trykt skrift kan nekte å gi tilgang til bevis om hvem som er forfatter til en artikkel eller melding i skriftet eller kilden for opplysninger i det. Det samme gjelder bevis om hvem som er kilden for andre opplysninger som er betrodd redaktøren til bruk i dennes virksomhet. (2) Når vektige samfunnsinteresser tilsier at opplysning etter første ledd gis, og det er av vesentlig betydning for sakens oppklaring, kan retten etter en samlet vurdering likevel gi pålegg om at beviset skal framlegges eller at navnet skal opplyses. Dersom forfatteren eller kilden har avdekket forhold som det var av samfunnsmessig betydning å få gjort kjent, kan slikt pålegg bare gis når det er særlig påkrevd at navnet gjøres kjent. (3) Reglene i denne paragraf gjelder tilsvarende for a) andre som har fått kjennskap til forfatteren eller kilden gjennom sitt arbeid for vedkommende forlag, redaksjon, pressebyrå eller trykkeri, og b) medarbeidere i kringkasting eller annen medievirksomhet som i hovedtrekk har	The Dispute Act § 22-11 (1) The editor of a printed publication may refuse to provide access to evidence about who is the author of an article or report in the publication or the source of any information contained in it. The same applies to evidence about who is the source of other information that has been confided to the editor for use in his work. Other persons who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work for the publishers, editors, press agency or printing office in question have the same right as the editor. (2) If important public interests require that evidence referred to in subsection (1) is presented and it is of considerable importance to the clarification of the case, the court may nevertheless, based on an overall assessment, order the evidence to be presented or the source to be revealed. If the author or source has discovered circumstances that it is in the public interest to publicise, such an order may only be made if it is particularly necessary for the name to be publicised. (3) The provisions in this section apply correspondingly to a) other persons who have acquired knowledge of the author or the source through their work for the publishers, editors, press agency or printing office in question, and b) colleagues in broadcasting or other media

samme formål som aviser og kringkasting.	undertaking that in the main has the same purpose as newspapers and broadcasting.
Grunnloven § 110 Ytringsfrihet bør finne sted.	The Constitution § 110 There shall be freedom of expression.

ELSA POLAND

Contributors

National Coordinator
Aleksandra Duda

National Academic Coordinator
Dorota Głowacka

National Researchers
Aleksandra Baranowska
Maria Honka
Maciej Kalmanowicz
Małgorzata Kosucka
Alicja Okrucieńska
Natalia Sałata
Katarzyna Smyk
Aleksandra Staromiejska
Angelika Anna Woźniak
Magdalena Zgłobica

National Linguistic Editors
Daria Leszczyńska
Natalia Rogólska

National Academic Supervisor
Dr. Dobrochna Ossowska-Salamonowicz

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information?

The Republic of Poland by the means of ratification of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms committed to ensure the protection of freedom of speech. The European Court of Human Rights through its judgments granted the press the widest scope of protection, also including the protection of journalistic sources¹. Therefore, member states were somehow obliged to provide protection also in the field. Currently, under Polish law regulations regarding this matter are contained in the Press Law (hereinafter in the Report: PL)² and in the Criminal Procedure Code (hereinafter in the Report: CPC)³.

1.1 What type of legislation provides this protection?

We cannot talk about granting any regulations the importance of constitutional rank as the Polish Constitution⁴ provides only a brief regulation regarding the press in Article 14, which introduces the principle of freedom of the press and other sources of social communication. The regulation contained in this Article is of the essence, because without the guarantee of this freedom, the media could not fulfill its primary task. Moreover, in the Article 54 every citizen is guaranteed the freedom of expression and the right to obtain and disseminate information. Paragraph 2 constitutes the prohibition of the preventive censorship, as well as the licensing of the press. More specific regulations were given the statutory character.

1.2 How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

The starting point for describing mechanisms of the protection of journalistic sources is Article 15 of the PL, which in the paragraph 1 gives each author the so-called the right to remain anonymous⁵, that is, the right to maintain the confidentiality of his or her name. A journalist can sign the press material with his or her name, pseudonym, or share it anonymously. All people in possession of any information regarding the journalists are obliged to comply with this choice.

¹Goodwin vs. UK [1996] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996 r.-II.

²Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe].

³Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego].

⁴Journal of Laws no 78 item 483 (The Constitution of the Republic of Poland of 2 April 1997) 1997 [Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 2 kwietnia 1997 r.].

⁵I. Zielinko, Tajemnica dziennikarska w prawie prasowym [2009] Prokuratura i Prawo no 2009/7-8 148 [Polish].

The right to maintain the confidentiality of journalistic source is provided in paragraph 2 of the Article mentioned above. The Polish legislator not only gives the journalist that right, but it also obliges him to maintain the confidentiality of data which might make the identification of the author of the press material possible and force him to not disclosure any information which announcement could violate the legally protected interests of third parties.

It is therefore necessary to precisely determine who can be considered a journalist. In accordance with Article 7.2.5 the journalist is a person engaged in editing, creating or preparing press materials, remaining in the employment relationship with the publisher or engaged in such activities on behalf of and under the authority of the editorial office.

Limits and prerequisites determining the qualification of the person performing this job to a group of journalists are not clearly defined⁶. In the light of the applicable regulation a group of journalists consists of two categories of people – those employed under an employment contract or those connected with the editorial office by another legal relationship, which is a derivative of authorization for editing, creating or preparing press material. People who create texts for publication, but remain unrelated to the editorial team are, according to the law, excluded from this profession. Therefore, the regulation defines a journalist as a person whose status is granted by the editorial office.⁷

The journalist has a duty to maintain the confidentiality of every personally identifiable information about author or informant. It will be therefore any data allowing the direct or indirect (for example, through the identification number if the entity has access to the registry) recognition of following persons: the author of the press material, letter to the editorial office or of other material of this nature. This apply also to refraining from disclosure of any identification data of other people providing the information published or submitted for publication - but only if they reserved the right to non-disclosure of the data. There is no regulations relating to form of this reservation therefore it should be interpreted in accordance with the Civil Code.⁸ It means that the declaration of intent may be expressed by any behavior of that person which manifests his intention sufficiently. Moreover, to non-disclosure is subject all information, if its disclosure might violate the third parties' interests protected by law. All of this data is covered by the so-called "journalist's privilege". Its scope extends also to employees in editorial offices, press publishing houses and other organizational units.

The PL does not specify the nature or type of data that is subject to the non-disclosure rule. Jurisprudence explains that the concept of "all the data" should be understood as the personal data according to the Act on Personal Data Protection⁹. If all conditions are met, as data should be considered:

⁶E. Ferenc-Skrzydello, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (4th edn, Legalis 2013) 89 [Polish].

⁷T. Kononiuk, B. Michalski, Problemy prawne zawodu dziennikarskiego (Elipsa 1998) 47 [Polish].

⁸The Journal of Laws no 16 item 93 (The Civil Code of April 23 1964) 1964 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 23 kwietnia 1964 r. Kodeks cywilny].

⁹The Journal of Laws no 133 item 883 (The Act on the Protection of Personal Data of August 29 1997) 1997

- information (each),
- about an individual,
- the individual person must be identified or his or her identity can be recognised indirectly.¹⁰

The conditions for exemption from a journalist's privilege are governed by Article 16 of the PL. A journalist and other entities, which are subject to the journalist's privilege, are exempt from it in a case when the author or a person passing the material protected by the privilege agrees to the disclose his or her name or the material itself, as well as when the information, press material, letter to the editorial office or other material of this nature concerns one of the most serious crimes referred to in Article 240 of the Criminal Code (hereinafter in the Report: CC)¹¹. This provision contains a closed list of crimes, for example: mass assassination; the use of unacceptable methods or means of warfare; violation of international law, murder; hostage taking; terrorist offenses.

In the event when information, press material, letter to the editorial office or other material of this nature concerns an offense referred to in Article 240 of the CC, the person subject to the confidentiality is exempted from by the virtue of law, but then another duty is in force – the obligation to immediately provide this information to law enforcement authorities. This mechanism, however, can be initiated only if the information is reliable¹².

Moreover, Article 180.2 of the CPC contains regulation limiting the journalist's privilege – allowing hearing of a person subject to confidentiality as to the facts latent every time when all of the following conditions are fulfilled jointly: it is necessary for the sake of justice and circumstances cannot be established on the basis of another evidence. At the same time, the concept of good interest of justice should be understood as the need to establish objective truth, but only if it is not possible to determine it otherwise¹³. The exemption from journalist's privilege may only be granted by the court at the request of the prosecutor. The Constitutional Court ruled that this provision is in compliance with the Constitution of the Republic of Poland¹⁴.

The legislator, however, stipulated that the hearing of the journalist cannot concern any circumstances indicating the authorship press material, letter to the editorial office, other material of this nature or allowing establishing the identity of the sources of information, if the [Ustawa z dnia 29 sierpnia 1997 r. o ochronie danych osobowych].

¹⁰J. Barta, P. Fajgielski, R. Markiewicz, Ochrona danych osobowych (LEX 2015 no 10222) [Polish].

¹¹Journal of Laws no 88 item 553 (The Criminal Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks karny]. The text of Article 16 of the Press Law indicates Article 254 of the Criminal Code, however, since the publication of the law has there was an amendment to the Criminal Code, which has never been included in the amendment above. Therefore, the text of this Article shall be, in fact, referred to Article 240 of the Criminal Code of 1997, which contains the amended provision of the same matter.

¹²M. Brzozowska-Pasięka, M. Olszyński, J. Pasięka, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (LexisNexis 2013) 116 [Polish].

¹³Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court OSNKW 2003 no 1-2 item 6 [Polish].

¹⁴Decision SK 64/03 [2004] The Constitutional Tribunal OTK Series A 2004 no 10 item 107 [Polish].

right to non-disclosure has been reserved. Thus, the absolute protection of sources has been introduced, and courts are not allowed to interfere with it. However, if the information concerns the crimes contrary to Article 240.2 of the CC mentioned above, protection of sources does not apply.

Attention should also be paid to the practice of requesting telecommunications data of journalists, such as billing or IP addresses, or even texts messages from administrators of these data, such as mobile operators. On the basis of this information, while examining journalists' contacts, it is possible to establish the identity of their interlocutors. Such activities can be perceived as a workaround of the guarantee of journalist's privilege, however there are some discrepancies in jurisprudence opinions¹⁵. Moreover, the Supreme Audit Office after the inspections ordered by the President of the Constitutional Court concerning the obtaining and processing data from billings, made some recommendations regarding the introduction of solutions that will create additional guarantees for those whose professions are professions of "public trust", for example by making obtaining data dependent on the consent of the court or other independent body¹⁶.

Polish legislation does not provide any special restrictions regarding the use of wiretapping in relation to journalists, the legislator failed to introduce any regulations concerning this matter. The use of phone tapping with regard to the journalists is generally acceptable on general basis¹⁷. It results in the creation of the field to commit violations in the protection of journalist's privilege. Regardless of critical evaluation of the lack of specific regulations in this field, sources other than documents are not subject to any kind of protection, despite their helpfulness in determining the data covered by the journalist's privilege, which is one of the most protected secrets in the Polish legal system. This seems to be at least an oversight of the legislator, demanding its response in order to prevent potential breaches and to ensure a greater level of protection of journalistic sources.

This issue should be also considering in terms on European Court of Human Rights case law. The Court in his judgment in the case of *Tillack v. Belgium*¹⁸ ruled that that the press plays an essential role in a democratic society and that the protection of journalistic sources was a basic condition for press freedom. The Court also repeatedly confirmed this statement in other cases like *Financial Times Ltd & Others v. United Kingdom*¹⁹ or *Fressoz and Roire v. France*²⁰ and every time it was emphasized how crucial that matter is.

¹⁵B. Kosmus, G. Kuczyński (ed), Pravo Prasowe. Komentarz (2nd edn, C.H. Beck 2013) 95 [Polish].

¹⁶ NIK na temat billingów <<https://www.nik.gov.pl/aktualnosci/bezpieczenstwo/nik-na-temat-billingow.html>> accessed 20 February 2016 [Polish].

¹⁷G. Musialik, Dopuszczalność stosowania podsłuchu telekomunikacyjnego w stosunku do osób zobowiązanych do zachowania tajemnicy zawodowej na gruncie Kodeksu postępowania karnego z 1997 roku [1998] Palestra 1998/11-12 86 [Polish].

¹⁸*Tillack v. UK* [2007] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2007.

¹⁹*Financial Times and Others v. UK* [2009] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2009.

2. Is there in domestic law a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

The journalistic secrecy is one of the substantial guarantees of the freedom of press and a legal guarantee of trust and intimacy in the press relationships between a journalist and an author of the press material²¹. It has been implemented in the PL not as a journalist's right, but his obligation²². The goal of this regulation is both to protect people providing confidential information to media and to ensure the press' control function.

The regulation of the journalistic privilege is situated in the CPC²³ in the section dedicated to an inadmissible evidence due to its connection with the obligation to give testimony in the criminal procedure²⁴. A journalist has a right to refuse to testify on the circumstances to which this obligation refers unless he is released from the duty to professional confidentiality by the competent court. The inadmissible evidence itself is defined in the Polish legal system as a norm that prohibits examining evidence to the court in specified situations or as a norm that impose restraints in obtaining evidence²⁵. The obligation of the professional confidentiality concerns a professional who obtained relevant information in connection with the performance of his professional duties²⁶. The protection of sources is also regulated in the PL²⁷ (hereinafter: PL) which provides its definition, its material and personal scope as well as exceptions from this rule²⁸. Article 15 and Article 16 of this Act are the fundamental legal basis of the aforementioned guarantee whereas the provisions of the CPC constitute lex specialis in this matter²⁹.

The material scope includes all the data allowing to identify an author of a material release, letter to the editor or other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data. These categories include all information that may lead to the identification of their source, i.e. name or personal data. Confidential information e.g. a place of residence or wealth concerning a person who is already known by his name is not protected by the journalistic secrecy³⁰. Similarly, the ²⁰Fressoz and Roire v. France [1999] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1999.

²¹J. Bafia, Dziennikarska tajemnica zawodowa, [1988] Prasa Polska no 2 8 [Polish]

²²I. Dobosz, Prawo i etyka w zawodzie dziennikarza (Wolters Kluwer SA 2008) 66 [Polish].

²³Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego].

²⁴E. Kosowska-Korniak, Prawnoprocesowe aspekty tajemnicy dziennikarskiej [2014] Prokuratura i Prawo 2014 150 [Polish].

²⁵M. Cieślak, Zagadnienia dowodowe w procesie karnym (Wydawnictwo Prawnicze 1955) 264 [Polish].

²⁶E. Kosowska-Korniak, Prawnoprocesowe aspekty... [2014] Prokuratura i Prawo 2014 158 [Polish].

²⁷Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe].

²⁸E. Kosowska-Korniak, Prawnoprocesowe aspekty... [2014] Prokuratura i Prawo 2014 150 [Polish].

²⁹Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court LEX no 20707 [Polish].

³⁰J. Sieńczyło-Chlabicz (ed), Prawo mediów (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 163 [Polish].

data of an informant whose identity is public is also not protected, i.e. a journalist cannot refuse to disclose a hiding place of a fugitive to investigative authorities³¹.

Once an informant reserves his identity, a journalist cannot disclose any information with which he could be identified. Each and every person collaborating with a journalist has a right to declare to stay anonymous³². According to Article 60 of the Civil Code³³ every act of an individual that sufficiently reveals his will constitutes to such a declaration that cannot be assumed, but it shall arise from a prominent statement of a person concerned³⁴.

Furthermore, the material scope of the journalistic privilege shall also include information disclosure of which could infringe third parties' interests protected by law. Also, not only an informant is protected, but also the circumstances possessed by a journalist that could infringe third parties' interests when published³⁵.

Reservation of identity by personal sources of information creates an obligation to protect informant's anonymity that is imposed on journalists, especially on editors and editors-in-chief. This obligation, by the virtue of Article 15.3 of the PL, concerns not only journalists but all people that are employed in editor's offices, press publishing houses or any other press organizational units. Consequently, it equally concerns technical support staff – secretaries, archivists, IT workers, as well as service workers such as cleaners, office-boys or doormen³⁶. However, although the professional confidentiality is expected from all the people mentioned above, the law grants only journalists with an absolute protection of source that results in an inadmissibility of evidence³⁷. Additionally, according to Article 16.3 a journalist shall inform an editor-in-chief about facts that are subject to professional confidentiality. The editor-in-chief is equally obligated to secrecy³⁸.

The exceptions from the journalistic secrecy in respect to the protection of journalistic sources are regulated in Article 16 of the PL and Article 180 of the CPC. Two situations are mentioned in the PL: 1) an author agrees to the disclosure of his identity, 2) the information or material concerns the crime expressed in Article 240 of the CC³⁹.

The first exception is an informant's consent expressed in any way including an electronic statement. A personal source of information that reserved its anonymity may waive the right to ³¹M. Zaremba, Prawo prasowe: ujęcie praktyczne (DIFIN 2007) 38 [Polish].

³²M. Brzozowska-Pasieka, M. Olszyński, J. Pasieka, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (LexisNexis 2013) 252 [Polish].

³³Journal of Laws no 16 item 93 (The Civil Code of April 23 1964) 1964 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 23 Kwietnia 1964 r. Kodeks cywilny].

³⁴Verdict I ACa447/97 [1997] The Court of Appeal not published [Polish].

³⁵E. Kosowska-Korniak, Prawnoprocesowe aspekty... [2014] Prokuratura i Prawo 2014 157 [Polish].

³⁶Verdict II SA/Wa 1570/08 [2009] The Provincial Administrative Court in Warsaw LEX no 519829 [Polish].

³⁷M. Brzozowska-Pasieka, M. Olszyński, J. Pasieka, Prawo prasowe... (LexisNexis 2013) 256 [Polish].

³⁸J. Sięńczyło-Chlabicz, Prawo mediów (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 164 [Polish].

³⁹Journal of Laws no 88 item 553 (The Criminal Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks karny].

keep his identity confidential and disclose it to the unlimited number of people or other entities as well as to the court and the prosecutor⁴⁰.

Article 16 of the PL also provides that a journalist is excused from the duty to professional confidentiality when the material acquired from an informant concerns the acts expressed in Article 240 of the CC. This article refers to the most serious crimes, i.e. the acts of terrorism. A journalist, analogically to every other person possessing the knowledge about a punishable preparation, attempt or commission of such an act, is obligated to promptly notify the investigative authorities. The right to refuse to testify or the possibility to release from the duty of professional confidentiality does not apply in these cases⁴¹. Lack of notification about a crime mentioned in Article 240 of the CC is a crime itself punishable by the terms of imprisonment, the maximum being no more than 3 years. In case of less serious crimes there is only a social responsibility to notify the investigative authorities. The essence of the ratio legis of this solution is to gather relevant information from a journalist about the most serious crimes. After learning that a crime mentioned in Article 240, a journalist has a duty to share that information with competent authorities without any delay⁴². Article 16 of the PL repeals the duty to professional confidentiality by virtue of law.

In the contrary to Article 16 of the PL which automatically exempts a journalist from secrecy, Article 180 CPC implements this possibility only by the court's decision and only after two conditions are jointly met: 1) the release is absolutely necessary for the interests of justice that is for establishing the objective truth⁴³, 2) no other evidence can verify the circumstances in question. The evidence is crucial to solve a case when there exists no possibility to establish facts with currently available means of proof and when at the same time all of the accessible sources of evidence are exhausted⁴⁴.

However, this does not concern the data enabling identification of people who give information that were published or are to be published if those people reserved confidentiality of the data (with an exception of the crimes from Article 240.1 of the CC). Here the journalistic privilege is absolute. Lack of this protection could discourage the informants from helping the media to transfer to the society information⁴⁵. Admittedly, there exists an absolute prohibition of releasing from professional confidentiality, however, according to the Supreme Court it doesn't mean that journalists cannot be examined on this matter once he himself waves the journalistic privilege, wants to testify and decides to breach his duties⁴⁶. The doctrine questions however the decision of the Supreme Court not being convinced that a journalist should be able to wave his privilege.

⁴⁰Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court LEX no 20707 [Polish].

⁴¹Ibidem.

⁴²Verdict II AKa 155/11 [2011] The Court of Appeal in Katowice LEX no 1129774 [Polish].

⁴³Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX no 145151 [Polish].

⁴⁴Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court LEX no 20707 [Polish].

⁴⁵J. Sobczak, Tajemnica dziennikarska [2005] Studia Medioznawcze 2005 no 1 19 [Polish].

⁴⁶Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX no 145151 [Polish].

Moreover, in such cases a journalist risks being punished on the basis of non-performance of the duty to protect the source.

Journalists can be held liable on the basis of the PL provisions (Article 49 of the PL) in case of disclosure of a secret or an infringement of the personal rights. Confidentiality of sources is not only a journalist's right but also his obligation which when breached results in a crime punishable with a restriction of personal liberty or a fine⁴⁷. The fine may amount from PLN 100 to PLN 1,080,000. Choosing a sanction the court takes under consideration defendant's income, his personal and family situation, his economic relationships and earning capabilities. The personal liberty limitation can be granted for the period varying from one month to two years and can consist in community service or in an obligation not to move from the current place of residence or any other place indicated by the court.

The legal basis for a journalist's liability for the breach of secrecy can be also found in Article 266.1 of the CC which states that everyone who against the law or against an accepted obligation reveals or uses an information which he collected in the connection with his position or in the course of exercising his professional duties, his public, social, economic or scientific activity is subject to a fine, limitation of personal liberty or imprisonment up to two years. He can also risk a lawsuit for an violation of personal rights on the basis of Article 23-24 of the Civil Code.

The state law is compliant with European regulations. The doctrine claims that the standard of protection of journalistic secrecy is even higher⁴⁸. Polish provisions implement an absolute prohibition of an exemption from the duty to professional confidentiality in case of all the data allowing identification of an author of a material release, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing an information published or submitted for publication⁴⁹ except the situations from Article 16.3 of the PL.

3. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists' sources extended to anyone else?

An attempt to define who a journalist is was taken by the representatives of the sciences, such as social communication, political science, sociology and economics. Also the Polish legislature has tried to systematise this matter. However, doubts have not been dispelled even by the definition contained in Article 7.2.5 of the PL. According to this Article: “A journalist is a person engaged in editing, creating or preparing press materials, remaining in the employment relationship with the publisher or engaged in such activities on behalf of and under the authority of the editorial office"⁵⁰. In practice, the above definition raises reservations justified in many aspects. The first of them may be the need for a general amendment to the act. This need stems primarily from the development of new technologies, trends in communication, and the advantage of online media over the written press, and subsequently radio and television.

⁴⁷M. Zaremba, Prawo prasowe. Ujęcie praktyczne (DIFIN 2007) 37 [Polish].

⁴⁸W. Sokolewicz, Prasa i Konstytucja (Wolters Kluwer SA 2011) 123 [Polish].

⁴⁹Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX no 145151 [Polish].

The new media are replacing the traditional way of communication, so the question arises whether it is necessary to register websites in the Court by their authors (for example popular bloggers), if such website meets the formal criteria of the press (so it is updated at least once a year and includes press material for example of informational nature).⁵⁰ The above definition is a sort of a closed list. The legislator made a clear enumeration. Thus, the definition which has existed in Polish law for over 32 year is difficult to expand. The fact that the Act states that a "journalist" is person remaining in an employment relationship with the editorial office is also controversial. The increasingly popular way to establish a legal relationship is conclude civil contracts with journalists in the form of contracts for services, contracts for specific works or so-called self-employment. In these cases is no employment relationship because under the Polish law these contracts are not employment contracts. This issue is regulated by the Act of 26 June 1974 - Labour Code (Journal of Laws 1974 No. 24, item. 141, as amended).

Article 22 states that:

Paragraph 1. By establishing an employment relationship, an employee undertakes to perform work of a specified type for the benefit of an employer and under his supervision, in a place and at the times specified by the employer; the employer undertakes to employ the employee in return for remuneration.

Paragraph 1¹. Employment under the conditions specified in § 1 is considered employment on the basis of an employment relationship, regardless of the name of the contract concluded between the parties.

Paragraph 1². Employment contracts cannot be replaced with a civil law contract where the conditions of the performance of work specified in § 1 remain intact.

Therefore, the legislature strongly denies that persons who have concluded an agreement under civil law (contract for services or for specific works) with the editorial office remain in the employment relationship. Is the party to such an agreement, who performs exactly the same tasks every day such as creating press materials as a person remaining with the editorial office in the employment relationship a journalist? In the face of the law, the only difference is the agreement concluded with the editorial office because in fact, these two people perform exactly the same job and this is the reason why both of them are called "journalist" in common parlance.

⁵⁰Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] and Journal of Laws no 46 item 275 (Regulation of the Minister of Justice of 9 July 1990) 1990 [Obwieszczenie Marszałka Sejmu Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 16 marca 2010 r. w sprawie ogłoszenia jednolitego tekstu ustawy - Kodeks wykroczeń].

Doubts in the interpretation of the legal definition of the term "journalist" may also arise from the words: "engaged in such activities on behalf of and under the authority of the editorial office" because this provision may seem to be too general. The publication of letters from readers by some editorial offices also needs specific. If a reader writes a piece of text, delivers it to the editorial office and this text is then published shall it be tantamount to the fact that the reader fully is somehow a journalist? Therefore it is another issue that the legislator should take into account during any attempt to amend the PL.

Later, the PL defines the duties of a journalist, which determines the way of performing his work.

Article 10.1. The journalist's job is to serve the society and the state. The journalist has a duty to act in accordance with professional ethics and rules of social coexistence, within the limits prescribed by law.

2. The journalist, under the employment relationship, is obliged to carry out the general program line specified in the statute or the regulations of the editorial office in which he is employed.

3. The journalist's actions contrary to the paragraph 2 is a breach of employee's obligations.

Article 12.1. A journalist is obliged to:

- 1) Take special care and reliability during collection and use of press materials, especially to check the compliance with the truth of received messages or identification of their source,
- 2) Protect the personal interests and also the interests of bona fide whistle-blowers and others who trusted him,
- 3) Ensure the use of a proper language and avoid using profanity.

12.2. The journalist is not allowed to carry out concealed advertising activities involving obtaining personal or financial benefit from the person or other entity interested in advertising.

The PL in addition to the responsibilities of the journalist, also regulates professional prohibitions. For acting to the detriment of the informant or the editorial office, or failure to comply with their obligations journalists can be held liable both civilly and criminally if the journalist disclose information covered journalist's privilege or preserves and spread the image and personal data of third parties without their consent.

Article 13.1. It is forbidden to publish in the press the opinion as to the outcome of the judicial proceedings before the judgment in the first instance is given.

2. It is forbidden to publish in the press personal information and image of people against whom preliminary proceedings or prosecution are conducted as well as personal data and the image of witnesses, victims and injured unless they agree to it.

Such an approach to the journalist's duties also is somehow limiting. Every profession should be of course closed within the framework and have the rights and obligations determined. However, it must be noted that the Act provides far more prohibitions than orders for a person carrying out the profession of a journalist.

The scope of protection of other media actors is not so high due to Polish PL. For example the PL does not protect freelance journalists, who are self employed. The protection of other media actors should be higher, so their work and their rights will be covered with protection better.

Summing up, the statutory definition of a journalist is incomplete and it seems a bit outdated. A rational legislator should therefore also go with the times and constantly amend the legislation so as to somehow keep up to date with progressive fast-paced changes in communications and media trends. In the age of the Internet, the fastest and most reliable medium in the opinion of the majority of society are the new media. Furthermore, it would be a good practice of the legislator if the employment status of a journalist was regulated. Hence, either the civil contracts concluded by journalists should be taken into consideration in the definition or editorial offices should be obliged by law to hire journalists on the basics of employment contracts in private and in public media. Only then can we talk about the logical solutions and life-sized law.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

Under Polish law the protection of journalistic sources is provided in both Polish indigenous law - the Constitution of the Republic of Poland (hereinafter: Constitution) and statutes, and also in the mechanisms of the European Union law, which are implemented into the national system or used directly. These solutions provide control and protection from the outside - guaranteed by the state bodies, as well as within the internal structures, using so-called self-regulatory mechanisms.

At the level of the European Union law, the basic form of the protection is provided in the Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights⁵¹ (hereinafter: ECHR, ratified by Poland on 19 January 1993), which states the freedom of expression:

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

⁵¹ Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms: http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_POL.pdf [access: 24.02.2016].

The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

The European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter: the Court) has repeatedly indicated that the Article 10 of the ECHR protects not only the content and substance of ideas or information but also the way in which they are communicated.⁵² Under the Court's case law, the press enjoys the widest possible protection, which also extends to the confidentiality of journalists' sources of information. A similar view seems to be shared by representatives of the Polish doctrine, for example Marek Antoni Nowicki, the President of the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights, in the commentary to that Article: *"The judgments of the Convention's bodies provide sufficient grounds for the conclusion that the protection resulting from Article 10 of the Convention extends to all kinds of statements expressing opinions, ideas or information, regardless of their content, and way of communicating, especially of a political nature, and on matters of public concern."*⁵³

Ireneusz C. Kamiński in an article published in the Quarterly of Human Rights of 2014 states that: *"The Court not only almost always ruled a violation of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, but it did it also unanimously. Exceptionally, when the national authorities will present very convincing arguments, it is decided in favor of the state."*⁵⁴ As it can be noticed on the basis of the European law and jurisprudence, the protection of the secrecy should be treated as a very important right, and withdrawal from it should be marginal, and certainly not pursuing the interests of the state bodies.

The case law of the Court has a very large impact on legislation and jurisprudence of the courts of the Member States, including Polish, and it provides guidance in the development of individual solutions and reforms in the field of PL and the protection of journalistic sources.

The main conclusion resulting from the above article may be that as a general rule the repeal of the journalistic privilege is unacceptable. It is allowed only in exceptional cases strictly defined by law, and in particular procedure.

The journalistic privilege is also provided in the Constitution. The freedom of press belongs to the goods protected by this Act, but it is not expressed in its provisions explicitly, however it results from Chapter II, in particular from Article 54.1, according to which: "Everyone shall have the freedom to express their opinions and to acquire and disseminate information," as well as from Article 49

⁵² Complaint Remuszko against Poland (No 1562/10): <http://www.hfhrpol.waw.pl/obserwatorium/images/Remuszko%20Amicus%20ETPC.pdf> [access: 3.03.2016].

⁵³ Wokół Konwencji Europejskiej. Komentarz do Europejskiej Konwencji Praw Człowieka, VII. edition; LEX/el., 2015; No 487388.

⁵⁴ The Press Law of January 28 1984 [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. prawo prasowe]; Dziennik Ustaw [Journal of Law] No 5 item 24 as amended.

"The freedom and privacy of communication is granted. Their restriction may be imposed only in cases specified in the Act and in the manner specified therein."

The most detailed regulations regarding the protection of journalistic privilege under Polish law were, however, placed in the statutes, i.e., the PL⁵⁵, the CC⁵⁶ and the CPC.⁵⁷

Under the Polish PL the protection of the journalistic privilege is treated in a slightly different way than in the meaning of the ECHR or even the Constitution. Article 15 of the PL provides that:

1. The author of the press material has the right to maintain the confidentiality of his name.
2. The journalist has a duty to maintain the confidentiality of:
 - 1) the data enabling the identification of an author of the press material, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data,
 - 2) any information disclosure of which could infringe third parties' interests protected by law
3. The duty referred to in paragraph 2 also applies to other employees in editorial offices, publishing houses and other press organizational units.

First of all, the paragraph 2 of the above Article should be considered. According to its provisions, the protection of journalistic sources is not a privilege of a journalist, but his statutory duty. This provision extends the protection not only to a journalist, but also to a person providing information and his interests. Article 16 of the PL also plays a very important role:

1. A journalist is exempted from the journalistic privilege, as referred to in Article 15.2, if the information, press material, letter to the editorial office or other material of this nature concerns an offense referred to in Article 254 of the CC or the author or the person transferring such material to the journalist's information only agrees to the disclosure of her name or the material.
2. The exemption referred to in paragraph 1 also applies to other employees in editorial offices, publishing houses and other organizational units.
3. The Chief Editor should be informed to the essential extent about facts that are subject to the journalistic privilege; information or other material entrusted to him may be disclose only in cases specified in paragraph 1.

⁵⁵ Ireneusz C. Kamiński, Ochrona dziennikarskich źródeł - drzwi bardzo wąsko uchylone, Kwartalnik o Prawach Człowieka, 2014, no 3, p. 14-19.

⁵⁶ The CC of June 6 1997 [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks karny]; Dziennik Ustaw [Journals of Laws] 2015 items 396, 541, 1549, 1707, 1855; Dziennik Ustaw [Journal of Laws] No 88 item 553 as amended.

⁵⁷ The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997 [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego] Dziennik Ustaw [Journals of Laws] No 88; items 21, 290, 396, 1185, 1186, 1334, 1788, 1855, 2281.

In the paragraph 1 the legislator refers to the catalog of offences listed in the CC, that a journalist should disclose. Due to the absence of appropriate amendments, the PL refers to Article 254 of the CC, but now a catalog of offences which exempts a journalist from the journalistic privilege is contained in Article 240 of the CC.

The above provision of the CC provides that a journalist is responsible for the failure to inform about the preparations for the heaviest crimes under the Polish law referred to in Articles: Article 118 (acts with the purpose of extermination), 118a (mass attack on people), 120-124 (usage of means of mass extermination), 127 (coup d'état - an act of depriving the Republic of Poland of its independence, of detaching a portion of its territory or of using force to overthrow its constitutional system), 128 (usage of force to remove a constitutional authority of the Republic of Poland), 130 (espionage), 134 (attack on the President of the Republic of Poland), 140 (terrorist attack), 148 (homicide), 163 (causing an event that endangers the life or health of many people, or property to a significant extent), 166 (piracy in sea or airspace), 189 (illegal imprisonment), 252 (taking a hostage) or acts of terrorism. This provision, however, shows that in these particular cases, a journalist not only has the right to notify investigative authorities, but it is also his duty. Moreover, for lack of such notification a journalist is criminally liable – the maximum penalty is imprisonment for up to 3 years.

The special nature of the exemption from the journalistic privilege is emphasized also by the provisions of the CPC. According to Article 180.3 among other journalists have the right to refuse to testify regarding the privilege associated with their duties. The prosecutor or the court may, however, in exceptional cases, exempt the journalist from the obligation of confidentiality. This provision raises a lot of controversy in practice and is considered (among others in positions of non-governmental organizations dealing with the protection of human rights) as a basis for abuses and groundless compelling of the journalists to reveal sources of information. Additional protection is also provided in paragraph 2 of the above Article, according to which additional premises for exemption from the journalistic privilege is the necessity to obtain information for the sake of justice and the fact that this circumstance is not possible to determine by any other evidence. According to the paragraph 3 this exemption cannot apply to data allowing the disclosure of the "informant" if he has reserved his anonymity. The paragraph 3 is not used in cases referred to in Article 240.1 of the CC. Refusal to disclose information by a journalist does not exclude his responsibility for the crime he committed by publishing information.

Each decision by the Court gives the journalist the right to appeal. It can be performed on a regular basis and the Polish Law does not provide any special rules regarding appeal due to protection of journalistic sources. The second instance is the Court of Appeal. If the formal premises are fulfilled, the possibility of a cassation complaint to the Supreme Court is possible after exploiting the legal possibilities in all instances. The right to complaint to Constitutional Tribunal also can be performed, if the courts decision is based on a regulation assumed to be against the Polish Constitution.

In conclusion, the protection of journalistic sources in Poland, resulting from the ECHR, and the Constitution guarantees a wide range of protection, both the journalist and his informant. These acts emphasize how important goods are the freedom of expression and the ability to express it, without exposing to negative consequences. The legislator assumes that it is of the essence to proportionally balance this good with other overriding values, which results in a catalog of circumstances and prerequisites, excluding the obligation of journalistic privilege.

Regarding the implementation of laws concerning the issues raised earlier, the general principles and sources of law in Poland should be referred to. The ultimate act of law in Poland is the Constitution which is a direct source of the principle of protection of journalistic privilege. The Constitution states that its provisions should be applied directly. Moreover, the acts, which are the sources of universally binding law must be consistent with the Constitution and introduce more detailed legislative solutions in the field of the protection. Also, its restriction is allowed only within the limits of the constitutional provisions. Apart from these source, a very important for the Polish legislation are directly applicable European Union Regulations and Directives, binding the State itself, that is obliged to implement solutions, which usually takes place just under a statutory legislation. The judgments of the European Court of Human Rights whose rulings are also an important clue for the state bodies should not be ignored as well. This institution is providing the possibility of defending their rights in terms of protection of journalistic sources for Polish citizens.

In an independent way, the institution of Ombudsman appears to be useful in the matters of protection of journalistic sources. In a morally or legally unclear situations, he can act on behalf of the journalist and perform such actions as legislative initiative, complaint or at least a statement. He can also act as one of the parts in the lawsuit.

The extremely important role played by the protection of sources of information is emphasized in the Polish legislation, among others, by a strictly defined catalog of cases and the procedures according to which it may be limited. For that reason, the self-regulatory mechanisms whereby people under the protection may require it through internal mechanisms provided for in the structures is small. Much more important competences were be entrusted to the state authorities state and judiciary system. There are, however some cases in which the self-regulatory mechanisms were used, but its nature is rather subsidiary to the public mechanisms.

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

5.1. Polish regulation of non-disclosure of journalistic sources

5.1.1. The Polish Constitution

Grounds of the principle of non-disclosure of journalistic sources can we found in Article 14 of The Polish Constitution⁵⁸ which is introduces the principle of freedom of the press and other sources of social communication. This principle is extended in Article 54 of The Polish Constitution⁵⁹. According to this provision is introduces freedom of expression, and the acquisition and dissemination of information. Whereas is prohibited preventive censorship of the mass media.

5.1.2. The Press Law

The Article 15 of the PL⁶⁰ regulates the institution of the duty of confidentiality journalism in general, specifying its content and scope, which does not include the circumstances referred to in Article 16 of the PL.

5.1.3. The Code of Criminal Procedure

The limits of the principle of non-disclosure of journalistic sources sets Article 180.3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as CCP)⁶¹. This regulation suffers restrictions in accordance with Article 180.4 of the CCP, if the information relates to offenses referred to in Article 240.1 of the CC (hereinafter: CC)⁶². Regulation contained in Article 180.3 of the CCP complements and narrows the application of the procedure for exemption from the professional secrecy stated in the Article 180.2 of the CCP according to the journalist's privilege⁶³. It is assumed that the provisions concerning the possibility of exemption from the journalist's privilege constitute a relative prohibition of evidence, which after fulfilling the conditions specified in the CCP allows presenting certain source of evidence in court, despite the exclusion of the admissibility of its application in the process⁶⁴.

⁵⁸Journal of Laws no 78 item 483 (The Constitution of the Republic of Poland of 2 April 1997) 1997 [Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 2 kwietnia 1997 r.].

⁵⁹W. Skrzydło, Komentarz do art. 14 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej [w:] W. Skrzydło, Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej. Komentarz (Wolters Kluwer SA 2013) [Polish].

⁶⁰Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe].

5.2. Relations between the regulations from the Press Law and the Criminal Procedure Code

The various relations between the journalist's privilege and the regulations from the PL Act have become a contentious issue inside the society. Being in this situation The Supreme Court ruled that regulations of the CCP must be interpreted as lex specialis due to the Article 15 of the PL⁶⁵. It should be noted that the provisions of the CCP fragmentary regulate the issues and apply journalist permissions to refuse their testimony as to the circumstances covered by the secret of journalism⁶⁶. Although this view has been developed by the Supreme Court under the previous regime of the criminal proceedings, it has not lost on the news and was confirmed by the resolution of the Supreme Court of 22 of November 2002⁶⁷. According to this ruling the prohibition of Article 180 paragraph 3 of the CCP specifies the content of the journalist's privilege referred to in Article 15 of the PL and is unconditional. Contrary to the view expressed in the decision of the Supreme Court of 15 December 2004⁶⁸ this absolute nature should be treated as a failure to questioning by the court reporter in the field of non-disclosure of information sources despite not invoke by him on the journalist's privilege and its willingness to disclose⁶⁹. It is crucial to highlight that the journalist is not a dispatcher of the information which enables identification of the source entrusted to him but its depositary⁷⁰ which obliges him to keep the secrecy under the threat of criminal sanction from Article 266.1 of the CC⁷¹.

⁶¹Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego].

⁶²Journal of Laws no 88 item 553 (The Criminal Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks karny].

⁶³M. Rusinek, Tajemnica zawodowa i jej ochrona w polskim procesie karnym (Wolters Kluwer SA 2007) 108 [Polish].

⁶⁴Z. Kwiatkowski, Zakazy dowodowe w procesie karnym (Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego 2001) 81 [Polish].

⁶⁵Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court Legalis no 28402 [Polish].

⁶⁶Ibidem.

⁶⁷Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish].

⁶⁸Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX Legalis no 67737 [Polish].

⁶⁹T. Grzegorzczak, J. Tylman, Polskie postępowanie karne (LexisNexis 2014) 470 [Polish].

⁷⁰A. Bojańczyk, Karnoprosowe znaczenie zgody dziennikarza na składanie zeznań co do okoliczności objętych tajemnicą zawodową (wokół postanowienia Sądu Najwyższego z 15 grudnia 2004 r.) [2005] Palestra 2005 no 9-10 30 [Polish].

5.3. Procedures of the limits of non-disclosure of journalistic sources.

5.3.1. Council of Europe's regulations

According to the Principle 3 of the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7⁷² the limits of non-disclosure of journalistic sources must comply with the restrictions from Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms⁷³. Moreover, this disclosure may be due to the parent interest public and in the absence of the existence of alternative sources of evidence. In respect to these requirements the national legislature is free to create their own regulations which should be applied at all stages of any proceedings where the right of non-disclosure might be invoked.

5.3.2. The limits of non-disclosure of journalistic sources based on the CCP.

Under Article 180.2 of the CCP the decision to exempt the right of non-disclosure of journalistic sources, at any stage of the proceedings the court shall subject for the sake of justice and the lack of any possibility to establish the facts which are relevant to the issue of privileged journalism on the basis of other evidence. The only body authorised to examine whether an exemption from the obligation of maintain the journalist's privilege is the court. Other authorities must make a request to the court.

Legislator in case of journalists in opposition to other professions who are entitled to profession secrecy protection narrows the scope for exemption from the non-disclosure of the information. Such an exemption cannot involve the disclosure of personally identifiable 's press release, letter to the editor or other material of this nature, as well as the identification of the persons providing the information published or submitted for publication, if these people have reserved non-disclosure the above data (art. 180 § 3 of the CCP)⁷⁴. This provision provides both protection of the right to anonymity (for example the author's right not to disclose his name), as well as sources of information and at the same time confirms a norm in Article 15.2.1 of the PL⁷⁵. On the other hand, the diversification of the letters in the enumeration placed in the before mentioned article should be understood equally the letters which weren't mentioned to be ⁷¹D. Szumilo-Kulczycka, Glosa do postanowienia SN z 15 grudnia 2004 r. III KK 278/04 [2005] Państwo i Prawo 2005 no 12 123 [Polish].

⁷²Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information <https://search.coe.int/cm/Pages/result_details.aspx?ObjectID=09000016805e2fd2> accessed 1 May 2016.

⁷³European Convention on Human Rights <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_ENG.pdf> accessed 1 May 2016.

⁷⁴T. Grzegorzczuk, Komentarz do art. 180 Kodeksu postępowania karnego [w:] T. Grzegorzczuk Kodeks postępowania karnego. Tom I. Artykuły 1-467 (LEX el. 2014) [Polish].

⁷⁵Z. Kwiatkowski, Zakazy dowodowe w procesie karnym (Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego 2001) 163 [Polish].

published. Otherwise, they should be treated as text submitted for publication which disposition is contained in a specific Article 7.2.4 of the PL where there is legal definition of press material⁷⁶.

According to the Article 180.4 of the CCP the journalist can be released from the duty of confidentiality according to the scope from Article 180.3 of the CCP. This one applies to the information on criminal offences enlisted in the Article 240.1 of the CC in respect of which there is a legal obligation to notify⁷⁷. Ratio legis of this rule is to provide opportunity to maintain from journalist information on most serious crimes⁷⁸. It applies to crimes specified in Articles 118, 118a, 120-124, 127, 128, 130, 134, 140, 148, 163, 166, 189, 252 of CC, that means: the crime of genocide; mass assassination; the use of weapons of mass destruction; production and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction ; a war crime ; inhumane treatment of civilian; forced service in enemy armed forces; attack on the independence and territorial integrity, as well as the existence and functioning of the constitutional order of the Republic of Poland; the attack on the constitutional authorities of the Republic of Poland ; espionage for foreign intelligence ; assassination of the President of the Republic of Poland; the attack on a unit of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Poland; murder; bring an event that threatens the life or health of many persons or property in large sizes; take control of the ship or aircraft; unlawful deprivation of human freedom ; or take hostages. It also applies to terrorist crimes, which defines Article 115 § 20 CC. as an offense punishable by imprisonment of a maximum of at least 5 years, committed to: serious intimidation of many people; forcing public authority of Republic of Poland or any other state or the authority of an international organization to take or refrain from certain actions; cause serious disturbances in the system or the economy of the Republic of Poland , another state or an international organization , as well as threats to commit such an act .

The use of the term “journalist” in Article 180.3 and 180.4 of the CCP provides the conclusion that the possibility of limiting the scope of the exemption from the obligation to maintain confidentiality does not apply to other employees in the editorial office, publishing press release, press organizational unit which have an access to protected information. Thus, a distinction is made on the secrecy of "journalism" and "journalist"⁷⁹. It has a crucial meaning from the point of view of admissibility to exempt from the obligation of secrecy and it means that in the case of other persons, the principle of non-disclosure of journalists' sources is not subject to an absolute prohibition of proof and they can be exempted from the secrecy in accordance with the procedure set out in Article 180.2 of the CCP.

5.3.3. The limits of non-disclosure of journalistic sources according to civil procedure

⁷⁶Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish].

⁷⁷T. Grzegorzczuk, Komentarz do art. 180 Kodeksu postępowania karnego [w:] T. Grzegorzczuk Kodeks postępowania karnego. Tom I. Artykuły 1-467 (LEX el. 2014) [Polish].

⁷⁸J. Sieńczyło-Chlabicz (ed), Prawo ... (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 154 [Polish].

⁷⁹*Ibidem*.

On the margins should be added that in Polish civil procedure even the court cannot exempt journalist from keeping the secrecy⁸⁰. In accordance to the Article 261.2⁸¹ of the code of Civil Procedure the journalist who is a witness at the same time may refuse to answer to the question, if the testimony would be combined with a substantial violation of professional secrecy.

5.4. Conclusion

The analysis of Polish regulation applying to the principle of non-disclosure of journalistic sources substantially corresponds to the standards developed in Recommendation No. R (2000) 7. In the field of criminal procedure must be noted that the possibility of exemption the reporter from the obligation of secrecy regarding sources of information is excluded by the court. This absolute prohibition of evidence suffers one exception, when the information relates to offenses of a unique specification for which there is a legal obligation to inform. It is possible to assume that this principle is limited in exceptional circumstances such as a special public interest in the prosecution and prevention of serious crimes. It is absolute to highlight that this principle accuses only to the journalist. Nevertheless, the other people who have the access to the sources of information in relation with their workplace might be exempt from the secrecy of journalism in this field in accordance with the Article 180.2 of the CCP. And in the case of civil procedure it can be assumed that there is a ban on unlimited disclose of journalistic sources.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

According to current regulation, the confidentiality of journalistic sources is not only a professional privilege but also an obligation regulated by the national law. It includes all the data enabling the identification of an author of a press material, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing an information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data, and also any information disclosure of which could infringe third parties' interests protected by law⁸². This obligation concerns not only journalists but all people that are employed in editorial offices, publishing houses or any other press organizational units. The breach of journalistic confidentiality is punishable with a restriction of personal liberty or a fine⁸³.

⁸⁰Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish].

⁸¹Journal of Laws no 16 item 93 (The Civil Code of April 23 1964) 1964 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 23 Kwietnia 1964 r. Kodeks cywilny].

The Polish law foresees a couple of situations in which the disclosure of sources is allowed or ordered. Firstly, a journalist may be released from confidentiality by the very person that provided information. An author of the material or a person providing information to the editor may consent for a disclosure of their name or the sources aforementioned.

Secondly, the PL restricts the application of the journalistic privilege in respect of an editor-in-chief. It introduces an obligation to inform him to the essential extent about facts that are subject to professional confidentiality. Editor-in-chief is a person who is competent to make a decision about the whole activity of the editor's office. His legal responsibility for publication was specifically regulated because of the informant's right to stay anonymous and the complexity of the editor's office structure which engages a numerous number of employees and positions compromising the determination of a person who met the criteria of a prohibited act⁸⁴. Consequently, journalists are obligated to disclose to the editor-in-chief information to the essential extent even if they are subject to journalistic confidentiality.

The PL in the Article. 16.1 exempts a journalist from the confidentiality of sources in case of acquiring information about the crimes listed in the art. 240 of the CC⁸⁵ (hereinafter: CC). The provision introduces the criminal liability of persons who having credible information about punishable preparation, attempt or commission of an act listed below do not immediately notify an investigative authority. The catalog of those acts includes:

- acts with the purpose of extermination (art. 118 of the CC)
- mass attack on people (art. 118a of the CC)
- usage of means of mass extermination (art. 120 of the CC)
- manufacturing, amassing, purchasing, trading in, storing, transporting or dispatching a means of mass extermination (art 121 of the CC)
- impermissible attacks and means of warfare (art. 122 of the CC)
- homicide or causing a grievous bodily harm on prisoners of war or civilians (art. 123 of the CC)
- other violations of the international law against prisoners of war or civilians (art. 124 of the CC)

⁸²Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] Article 15.2.

⁸³Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] Article 49.2.

⁸⁴J. Barta, R. Markiewicz, A. Matlak (ed) Prawo mediów (LexisNexis 2005) 710 [Polish].

⁸⁵The Press Law was not amended together with the Criminal Code amendment and the today's provision refers to the previous Code. This issue is currently regulated with Article 240 of the Criminal Code.

- coup d'état (an act of depriving the Republic of Poland of its independence, of detaching a portion of its territory or of using force to overthrow its constitutional system) (art. 127 of the CC)
- usage of force to remove the constitutional authority of the Republic of Poland (art. 128 of the CC)
- espionage (taking part in the activities of a foreign intelligence services against the Republic of Poland (art. 130 of the CC)
- attack on the President of the Republic of Poland (art. 134 of the CC)
- terrorist attack (art. 140 of the CC)
- homicide (art. 148 of the CC)
- causing an event that endangers the life or health of many people, or property to a significant extent (art. 163 of the CC)
- piracy on sea or in airspace (art. 166. of the CC)
- illegal imprisonment (art. 189 of the CC)
- taking a hostage (art. 252 of the CC)
- acts of a terrorism

The obligation to disclose the source in the cases listed above is not subject to any kind of a decision but comes automatically, and is justified by the reasonable public interest. It should be indicated that Article 240.2 of the CC revokes the punishability of non-disclosure in two situations. The first one applies when there is sufficient ground to assume that the competent authorities know about a criminal act that is being prepared, attempted or was committed. The second one applies when a journalist prevented committing a crime. The structure of this regulation allows restricting the exemption of the journalistic confidentiality from application to its essential minimum.

Derogations from the protection of sources can also be found in the Article 180 of the CPC. The provision emphasizes that the persons who are bound to professional secrecy may be interrogated on the confidential information only if it is absolutely necessary for the interests of justice and no other evidence can be used to determine the truth in respect of the facts in question. The structure of this regulation reflects the principles expressed in the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, particularly principles 3 (Limits to the right of non-disclosure) 4 (Alternative evidence to journalists' sources) and 5 (Conditions concerning disclosures). The rule of protection of sources authorises journalists to refuse to testify on facts that are the subject matter of this obligation. The court may however exempt them from the confidentiality for the interests of justice and unless specific acts do not stipulate otherwise. The court's decision may be appealed against.

The exemption from the professional secrecy cannot concern the data allowing an identification of an author of a press material, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing an information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data (this rule does not apply to the cases from the Article 240 of the CC aforementioned). Refusal to reveal this information does not exclude a journalist's criminal liability if the publication of the gathered information meets the criteria of a crime.

The Code of the Criminal Procedure foresees also the protection of the devices that store data subject to confidentiality that were acquired or found during a detention or a search of a disposer. According to Article 225 the authority conducting the evidentiary proceedings may confiscate the data subject to journalistic confidentiality however he is not authorised to examine them. He has a duty to deliver without any delay the documents containing protected information in a stamped package to the court or a prosecutor. Only later the decision is made whether to return the material to its original holder or to exempt the journalistic privilege. The materials acquired as a result of a confiscation are subject to inadmissibility of evidence. The information that is subject to journalistic confidentiality is also protected from the very journalist who gathered them. The jurisprudence of the Supreme Court emphasizes the imperative nature of the dictate to protect the sources and the fact that the statute introduces an obligation (not a right).

The structure of Article 15.2.1 of the PL distinctly proves that a journalist is not a disposer of the secret referred to in Article 15.2.1 of the PL who can dispose of it freely and at his own discretion, but a depository who is absolutely obligated to keep in secret any informant's personal data of which he might be aware. The informant himself is the disposer and he is entitled (but not obligated) to stipulate that a journalist should keep any data that may lead to his identification confidential. Therefore, the situation changes dramatically only from the moment when an informant does not reserve his right to stay anonymous (Article. 15.2.1 in fine of the PL). Then it is the journalist – following a prominent consent of an informant – who becomes a disposer of that data. However, it should be emphasized that in such cases the data itself cease to be protected with the journalistic confidentiality⁸⁶.

Furthermore, it also should be noted that the journalistic privilege refers to persons who provide information. By 'information' one should understand statements of facts, generalizations, hypothesis, analysis. Within the meaning of the statute, purely subjective opinions, invectives or threats are not included in this definition. The personal data of an informant whose identity is already public does not fall within the Act as well. For instance, one cannot refuse to give the investigative authorities information about a place of stay of a fugitive from prison referring to journalistic privilege. It is also irrelevant whether the information were gathered legally or what was the informant's motivation⁸⁷.

Taking into consideration the above analysis, it should be concluded that Polish law and the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court pursues the all of objectives of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The journalistic secrecy and the protection of journalistic sources constitute an obligation from which the exemption is possible by operation of law in strictly-defined cases that are justified with a specific interest. The catalogue consists of the most serious crimes that can be prevented thanks to this regulation. In other cases the court may decide to revoke the confidentiality rule if the interest of justice so requires and only if there is no alternative and reasonable means to acquire the information in question. Legal protection of the sources in the Polish legal system fulfills the standards and requirements set in the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

⁸⁶Decision II KK 184/05 [2005] The Supreme Court LEX no 163969 [Polish].

⁸⁷M. Zaremba, Prawo prasowe. Ujęcie praktyczne (DIFIN 2007) 27 [Polish].

7. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

In the Polish legal system the journalistic secrecy is regulated in the PL in Article 15 and Article 16. The protection of the journalistic sources' identity is legitimised by freedom of press protected with Article 14 and Article 54.1 of the Constitution of the Republic of Poland. The provisions relevant in this matter are also located in the CPC in Article 180.2 to 180.5 that regulate the exemption from the journalistic secrecy⁸⁸. Under these rules there comes a problem of the interpretation of the word 'a journalist' in relation to the personal scope of the regulation. The legal definition determined in Article 7 of the PL states that 'a journalist is a person who edits, creates or prepares a press material being employed in the editor's office or pursuing such an activity for and under authorization of the editor's office'. In her commentary⁸⁹ Mrs Ewa Ferenc-Szydelko explains that such an interpretation of this provision regulates the status of a journalist in an extensive way and thus expands the protection provided by the journalistic confidentiality.

The European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter: the Court) on numerous occasions⁹⁰ emphasized the importance of Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights (hereinafter: ECHR) granting the journalists with the broadest possible scope of protection. The examples of such a protection are as follows:

- Voskuil v. Holland – this case concerns a journalist who exercised the journalistic privilege trying not to reveal the personal data of his informants after his article about investigation on gun trafficking was published. The journalist was detained for over two weeks. In this case the Court pronounced a violation of Article 5 and Article 10 of the ECHR.
- Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and others v. Holland – In this case the plaintiffs were dictated to transfer to the national authorities the documents that could reveal the identity of sources. Two journalists were put under surveillance. The Court emphasized the importance of the protection of sources for the society and the fact that the confidentiality of data may supposedly have a positive effect on potential informants. The judges pronounced also a violation of Article 8 and Article 10 of the ECHR.

⁸⁸A. Sakowicz (ed), Kodeks postępowania karnego: komentarz (6th edn, LEX 2015) [Polish].

⁸⁹E. Ferenc-Skrzydłko, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish].

⁹⁰*Factsheet - Protection of Journalistic Sources*

<http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf> accessed 26 February 2016.

- Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg - this case revolved around a search conducted in order to uncover a journalist's source. The Court stated that, such action (unproductive or not) is a more drastic measure than an order to divulge the source's identity. The Court held that there has been a violation of Article 10 of the Convention with respect to the first applicant and a violation of Article 8 of the Convention regarding the second applicant.
- Financial Times Ltd and Others v. The United Kingdom - Due to the Court's verdict in this case there had been a violation of Article 10 of the Convention. The applicants' right to freedom of expression was violated due to a court disclosure order in 2001 obliging them to provide documents for the purpose of identifying an anonymous journalistic source, whereas the company obtained the order based on insufficient interests.

In the Polish legal system the resolution of the Supreme Court of 19 January 1995 (reference number: I KZP 15/94) is of a great significance for the journalistic privilege⁹¹. In this ruling the judges stressed the possibility to exempt⁹² a witness from the journalistic secrecy but only if his testimony is absolutely necessary to make a decision and there is no other possibility to acquire relevant information. Such exemption may only occur in the case of absence of reasonable alternative measures. It played a crucial role in the development of the journalistic privilege. In relation to this decision remains another one issued by the Supreme Court on 24 April 2010 (reference number: WZ 36/10) which states that 'the information a journalist acquired from a spokesperson of the government administration for a purpose of publication in a press article are not protected with the journalistic confidentiality regulated in Article 15.2 of the PL'⁹³. The Supreme Court ruled in favor of a complaint on the exemption from the journalistic secrecy that was lodged by a journalist whose information was needed in the preparatory proceedings. The Supreme Court decided that the information in question was not subject to the journalistic privilege, hence it would be unfounded to exempt it.

The protection of journalistic privilege was also a matter of the Constitutional Tribunal's (hereinafter: the Tribunal) verdict of 30 July 2014 (reference number: K 23/11)⁹⁴. The Tribunal emphasized that a specific protection of the sources is essential to media to function as a guard of democracy and pluralism. The Tribunal also pointed that generally it is not possible to abstractly describe the relationship between the protection of the journalistic secrecy and the interest of justice. It is also worth to mention prof. Jacek Sobczak who in his commentary⁹⁵ to the PL presents the view that the scope of protection of journalistic secrecy is broader than the scope of protection of the medical secrecy or the legal profession privilege and refers to its ⁹¹E. Ferenc-Skrzydello, Pravo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish].

⁹² Stanowisko Helsińskiej Fundacji Praw Człowieka w sprawie poszanowania gwarancji tajemnicy dziennikarskiej <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2014/06/HFPC_stanowisko_19062014_FNL.pdf> accessed 26 February 2016 [Polish].

⁹³E. Ferenc-Skrzydello, Pravo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish].

⁹⁴ Informacja prawna o wyroku Trybunału Konstytucyjnego z dnia 30 lipca 2014 r. (K 23/11) dotyczącym kontroli operacyjnej stosowanej przez służby policyjne i ochrony państwa <http://www.senat.gov.pl/gfx/senat/userfiles/public/k8/komisje/2015/ku/infopraw/k_23_11_inf.pdf> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].

⁹⁵J. Sobczak, Pravo prasowe. Komentarz (Legalis 2008) [Polish].

imperative character in respect of Article 180.3 of the CPC. Also decision issued in the recent case of a journalist against the Central Anticorruption Bureau (hereinafter: CAB) follow the case law of the Court⁹⁶. The plaintiff sued the CAB for the breach of the information autonomy rule, illegal interference in the privacy of communication, violation of freedom of expression and of freedom of press through circumvention of the guarantees originating from the journalistic privilege. The Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights (hereinafter: HFHR) joined the legal proceedings submitting a statement about the violation of Article 8 and Article 10 of the Convention. The Regional Court in Warsaw in its ruling of 22 May 2012 responded favorably to the claim dismissing it only partially, and ordered CAB to remove all the gathered data about the plaintiff and to apologise him in 3 newspapers. According to Dorota Głowacka, who is a representative of the HFHR in this case, 'the verdict has a precedent character: it is the first time when a court set restrictive limits to the possibility of using telecommunication billings by the intelligence agencies that have the broadest access.'⁹⁷. The appeal lodged by the CAB was dismissed as a whole.

The *Goodwin v. the United Kingdom*⁹⁸ is the key case for the journalistic secrecy protection. A journalist (the plaintiff) challenged an order to disclose the identity of his source of information concerning insolvency plans of Tetra Company. According to the Court the order to disclose the information was disproportional to its purpose what constitutes a violation of Article 10 of the Convention. Furthermore, the Court pointed the priority of freedom of speech in the case in question 'therefore, it should be recalled that the interest of democratic society in securing a free press outweigh considerations taken into account by the Convention institutions for control purposes pursuant to Article 10.2, when comparing competing interests in the case'. Comparing the conclusions in this case with the law application by the Polish courts, the Supreme Court's resolution of 22 November 2002 (reference number: I KZP 26/02) should be analyzed⁹⁹. The case considers a crime of Article 212.1 of the CC that is defamation. An article was signed with a pen name of a journalist what forced the District Court to demand disclosure of his personal data from the editor. The editor appealed against this decision and eventually the case was investigated by the Supreme Court. The Regional Court argued for the disclosure as applying the confidentiality data rule of Article 180.3 of the CPC would result, in its opinion, in 'total impunity of persons who publish in the press under pseudonyms and commit a crime under Article 212.2 of the CPC'. The Supreme Court took an opposite position ruling that: 'the prohibition to exempt a journalist from confidentiality of the data allowing identification of an ⁹⁸ I.C. Kamiński, Ograniczenia swobody wypowiedzi dopuszczalne w Europejskiej Konwencji Praw Człowieka: analiza krytyczna LEX 2010) [Polish].

⁹⁶ Rozpoczął się proces red. Bogdana Wróblewskiego przeciwko CBA <http://www.obserwatorium.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=4074:rozpocz-si-proces-red-bogdana-wroblewskiego-przeciwko-cba&catid=40:zkraju&Itemid=34> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].

⁹⁷ Pozyskiwanie billingów naruszyło dobra osobiste dziennikarza. CBA przegrało proces z red. Bogdanem Wróblewskim <http://www.obserwatorium.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=4203:-pozyskiwanie-billingow-naruszylo-dobra-osobiste-dziennikarza-cba-przegrao-proces-z-red-bogdanem-wroblewskim&catid=40:zkraju&Itemid=34> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].

⁹⁹ A. Gerecka-Żolyńska, Glosa do uchwały Sądu Najwyższego z dnia 22 listopada 2002 r., I KZP 26/02 [2004] OSP LEX [Polish].

author of a press material, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing an information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data, regulated in Article 180.3 of the CPC specifies the meaning of journalistic secrecy introduced with Article 15 of the PL. The prohibition is absolute and cannot be violated with an application of Article 2.1 and Article 9 of the CPC⁹. Thus, the Supreme Court acknowledges the right to journalistic secrecy. The judges also concluded that the legislator places the freedom of press above the interests of justice.

Interesting results come from the comparison of the Court's verdict in Nordisk Film & TV A/S against Denmark with the Supreme Court's resolution of 19 January 1995 (reference number: I KZP 15/94) and the Supreme Court's decision of 15 December 2004 (reference number: III KK 278/04)¹⁰⁰. The Court dismissed a claim of a journalist who didn't want to hand to the authorities the records gathered when he penetrated a pedophile organization under cover. The Court emphasized that such a claim is not legitimate and that the disclosure of information in this case is proportional to the value of purpose the national authorities aimed to achieve, that is prevention of serious crime and sexual abuse of minors. The aforementioned resolution of the Supreme Court implied that there exist circumstances that can justify an exemption from journalistic secrecy¹⁰¹. It should be presumed that the Court's case should fall under such a circumstance. On the other hand, the decision III KK 278/04 allows a journalist to breach the secrecy when the court has no measures to exempt him from confidentiality given an absolute prohibition of Article 180.3 of the CPC. This way the Supreme Court left for a journalist a window open for situations when an intervention of the authorities is necessary.

Given the reflections above, it should be concluded that the Polish courts properly apply the European Court of Human Rights jurisprudence. Analyzing the case law mentioned in this report one can spot that more emphasis is put on protection of the journalistic secrecy, and in broader sense freedom of press or freedom of expression, than on protection of the state's interests or the individualised interests of the opposing party. At the same time, the jurisprudence does not grant the journalistic privilege an absolute protection (except from the information listed in Article 180.3 CPC where the confidentiality should be absolute) and leaves a possibility of exemption or justified breach by a journalist himself. Here the last judgment should be mentioned – the Supreme Court's verdict of 18 September 2015 (reference number: I CSK 724/14) where it was explicitly underlined that the journalistic privilege protects the informants not a journalist's individual interest which is a proper interpretation of this regulation's purposes. Taking into consideration all the elements analyzed, it should be concluded that the Polish courts grant the journalistic secrecy a broad scope of protection, they develop in this direction and at the same time they keep objectively rational, balanced and proportional approach which is in compliant to the Recommendation No R (96) 4 and the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

¹⁰⁰Gabriel-Węglowski, Glosa do postanowienia SN z dnia 15 grudnia 2004 r., III KK 278/04 [2009] OSP LEX [Polish].

¹⁰¹E. Ferenc-Skrzydłko, Pravo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish]. See also W. Lis (ed), Status prawny dziennikarza (LEX 2014) [Polish].

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

The main purpose of the reporter's privilege has been is to enable protection of informants from whom the journalists have acquired indispensable information. Regarding the reporter's privilege, Article 180 of the CPC is of the utmost importance as it accords the possibility to interrogate a journalist. Article 15 and Article 16 of the PL shall also be taken into consideration. The source and constitutional guarantees of above mentioned Articles are to be found in the Constitution of the Republic of Poland - Article 14 states the freedom of the press and Article 54(1) guarantees the freedom of expression.¹⁰²

CPC's regulations define conditions of interrogation legality and thus the conditions of disclosure of the informant's identity. On that topic, opinion issued by Polish Supreme Court¹⁰³ is the prevailing one. It states that the reporter's privilege is subject to an absolute evidentiary prohibition as to the possibility of disclosing the source or handing over a letter to the editor, with the exception of the cases enumerated in Article 240 of the CC, mentioned earlier in point 6 of this Report. PL recognises the reporter's privilege even broader imposing the obligation not only to keep in secrecy data enabling identification of press material's author, but also a letter to the editor or a different material which possesses such trades. Moreover, it extends this obligation to employees working in editorial offices, publishing houses or press units^{104 105}. However, none of these paragraphs sheds light upon enquiry activities or operational activities carried out on or towards persons that might be bound by the reporter's privilege. What is more, aforementioned regulations will not be found in any of the quoted legislation or in the „anti-terrorist law” simply because the Polish law does not define nor envisage such specialistic regulations. Its potential material scope is to be found in numerous, individual acts such as the Law on Police or the Law on Central Anti Corruption Bureau. The issue of criteria and the application of existing laws towards journalists remain mainly a matter of doctrine as well as the jurisprudence. Nevertheless, it should be underlined that certain regulations not only do not protect the journalist, but also pose a threat to the protection of his source (for example the easiness of acquiring phone bills). To sum up, in the Polish law there is no specific guarantees ¹⁰²W. Sokolewicz, Uwagi do wybranych zagadnień praw jednostki [w:] Kędzia Z Rost A (ed), Współczesne wyzwania wobec praw człowieka w świetle polskiego prawa konstytucyjnego (Wydawnictwo Naukowe UAM 2009) 309 [Polish].

¹⁰³Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish] and an approving gloss A. Gerecka-Żołyńska, OSP 2004 no 1 item 5 [Polish].

¹⁰⁴E. Ferenc-Skrzydelko, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish].

¹⁰⁵J. Sobczak Prawo prasowe. Komentarz (Legalis 2008) [Polish].

protecting informants. Moreover, there is a lack of complex control schemes over operational activities directed towards journalists which manifests inter alia in the prior control deficiency in regards to bugging a journalist.

On the grounds of recent changes in the criminal procedure¹⁰⁶ we are obliged to avail ourselves of the line of reasoning expressed before the amendment. Also, it shall be noted that an amendment on the Law on Police came into force 7 February 2016, which alters (once more) rules relating to certain operational activities. Aforementioned modification was widely contested by the Polish Ombudsman¹⁰⁷, the National Council of Judiciary in Poland, the District Chamber of Legal Advisors and Non-Governmental organizations¹⁰⁸ like the Amnesty International¹⁰⁹ or the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights¹¹⁰. This opposition stems from the passage that if in the course of the operational control, the information subject to the reporter's privilege has been acquired, it is up to the court to decide whether that information is admissible or not and if it can be used in the investigation. What is more, only prosecutor's office will have the power to bring an interlocutory appeal. The catalogue of people authorised to acknowledge the justness of the reporter's privilege was also contested. Doubts are also raised by the issue of providing data first to the case-leading prosecutor and then to the court¹¹¹.

In the absence of distinct regulations, criteria that allow the collection of evidence against journalists do not differ significantly from general regulations. Aforementioned Article 240 of the CC treats the reporter's privilege as if it did not exist, as it enumerates crimes that must be reported to the authorities no matter the notifier's status¹¹². It catalogues serious crimes such as homicide or coup d'état. A maiori ad minus, if the reporter's privilege does not apply to the journalist's interrogation, under no circumstances can it be applicable to enquiry activities or operational activities.

The list specified in the Article 240 of the CC is narrowed down. In the event of any other breach of law, general criminal proceedings rules and specific rules must apply. One of the law-¹⁰⁶For example amendments that entered into force 1/07/2015r. (Dz.U.2013.1247 and Dz.U.2015.396).

¹⁰⁷ Do MC oraz GIODO ws. dostępu służb do danych internetowych w projekcie ustawy o Policji <<https://www.rpo.gov.pl/content/do-mc-oraz-giodo-ws-dostepu-sluzb-do-danych-internetowych-w-projekcie-ustawy-o-policji>> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish] and Do Marszałka Sejmu i Marszałka Senatu ws. projektu ustawy o Policji <<https://www.rpo.gov.pl/pl/content/do-marszalka-sejmu-i-marszalka-senatu-ws-projektu-ustawy-o-policji>> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].

¹⁰⁸ Apel NGOśóv do Sejmu o ochronę prawa do prywatności <https://amnesty.org.pl/no_cache/aktualnosci/strona/article/8725.html> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].

¹⁰⁹ Polska: Zmiany w ustawie o policji rażąco naruszają prawa człowieka <https://amnesty.org.pl/no_cache/aktualnosci/strona/article/8739.html> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].

¹¹⁰ Uwagi Helsińskiej Fundacji Praw Człowieka do poselskiego projektu ustawy o Policji oraz niektórych innych ustaw (druk sejmowy nr 154) <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/HFPC_opinia_ustawa_o_policji_30122015.pdf> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].

¹¹¹ Written Comments by the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights 9 February 2016 <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2016/02/Amicus_Bureau_of_Investigative_Journalism_pko_Wielkiej_Brytanii.pdf> accessed 06 March 2016.

¹¹²J. Skorupka (ed), Kodeks Postępowania Karnego. Komentarz (19th edn, C.H. Beck 2015) [Polish] and Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish].

regulated activities is the search and the property seizure described in the chapter 25 of the CPC. Upon a written prosecutor's or court's request¹¹³, property that might act as evidence or that is subject to seizure shall be surrendered¹¹⁴. If a person does not comply with the claim on the voluntary basis, a search warrant might be issued and by order of the court, a prosecutor can conduct the search or by order of the court or a prosecutor, the police can conduct the search. The organ entitled to conduct the search must be explicitly designated in the competent authority order¹¹⁵. However, if a searchee declares that the document found is of a protected content (and reporter's privilege is one of those), such a document is being transferred to the prosecutor (according to the respectful legislation) or the court without being read¹¹⁶, to confirm its protection. Aforementioned statement must refer to a specific document.¹¹⁷ This restriction is not applicable when the proprietor of a document or information is a suspect or when he is either the recipient or author of personal nature writing¹¹⁸. It is acknowledged, that if the fragile nature of the information is being learned by the body that conducted the seizure after having acquainted with the information, the order of transferring the document to the prosecutor or the court is still in force¹¹⁹.

Article 218 of the CPC obliges offices, institutions, entities active in the field of postal service or telecommunication service, custom offices, transport entities and undertakings to give out a parcel, correspondence or data only on prosecutor's or court's demand. An analogous regulation is to be found in the Article 19 of the Law on Police that covers preliminary activities undertaken by police with the aim of prevention, detection, determination of perpetrators, as well as obstention and consolidation of the evidence that relate to charges that are publicly prosecuted or relate to an intentional crime when other measures have been proved ineffective or unsuitable. The so called „operational activities” comprise of correspondence and parcel content monitoring, the application of technical measures enabling a clandestine acquisition of information, evidence and its recording (in particular the content of phone conversations and different information transmitted via telecommunication's network). It is a non-public activity that might be authorised only in certain cases that have been enumerated by the law¹²⁰. This kind of a control is ordained by a district court within its territorial jurisdiction upon National Police Chief's written motion that can be filed only after having obtained National Chief Prosecutor's written consent.¹²¹ ¹¹³In urgent cases, also the police or other authorized unit.

¹¹⁴Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego] Article 217.

¹¹⁵B. Augustyniak, K. Eichstaedt, M. Kurowski, D. Świecki (ed), Kodeks postępowania karnego. Komentarz (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 730 [Polish].

¹¹⁶Grzegorzczuk J. Tylman, Polskie postępowanie karne (LexisNexis 2014) 540 [Polish].

¹¹⁷M. Rusinek, Tajemnica zawodowa i jej ochrona w polskim procesie karnym (Wolters Kluwer SA 2007) [Polish].

¹¹⁸P. Kruszyński, M. Błoński, M. Zbrojewska, Dowody i postępowanie dowodowe w procesie karnym (C.H. Beck 2015) 224 [Polish].

¹¹⁹M. Rusinek, Tajemnica zawodowa ... (Wolters Kluwer SA 2007) [Polish].

¹²⁰Journal of Laws no 30 item 179 (The Act on Police Law of the 6 April 1990) 1990 [Ustawa z dnia 6 kwietnia 1990 r. o Policji] Article 19 (1-1-8).

¹²¹B. Opaliński, M. Rogalski, P. Szustakiewicz (ed), Ustawa o Policji. Komentarz (Legalis 2015) [Polish].

None of these regulations contain specific mechanisms of handling correspondence nor they mention the reporter's privilege. The issuance of journalists' phone bills is being widely commented on by the doctrine. For years, it has been established that due to the possibility of tracking down the informant, disclosing such data in the course of proceedings is impermissible¹²². A phone bill is perceived to be a document that is protected by the reporter's privilege, thereby it is under protection of the Article 226¹²³ and the Article 180 of the CPC¹²⁵. This thesis was also affirmed by the Warsaw District Court in the sentence issued on 26 April 2013¹²⁶. Despite explicit remarks made by the Constitutional Tribunal¹²⁷ and once declared intentions of the legislator, the new Law on Police does not include a passage that would state that courts shall give the consent for acquiring phone bills of people covered by the reporter's privilege. Moreover, the law includes provisions that facilitate the access to data from internet service providers. It was highlighted and criticized by the the Chamber of Press Publishers who pointed out that these regulations allow to monitor on-going journalist's work giving no effect to provisions included in the PL or Article 180.3 of the CPC¹²⁸. What is more, even the reporter himself may not be aware that he is being investigated, thereby he cannot take any action in order to protect his information's source¹²⁹.

Different matter is the conversation's control and consolidation. Again, no distinct provision considering journalists will be found, yet general regulations that tackle this matter are per se restrictive. Bugging is acceptable only in the stage of preliminary activities and in relation to crimes enumerated in the Article 237.3 of the CPC¹³⁰. A decision on enabling this procedure is issued by the court in a decree on prosecutor's request where he outlines the objective and subjective scope of control¹³¹. It must serve to detect and obtain evidence valuable to an on-going proceeding or it must act as a deterrent to committing a new crime. In court's decision the ¹²²M. Rusinek, Tajemnica zawodowa ... (Wolters Kluwer SA 2007) [Polish].

¹²³Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego] Article 226.

¹²⁴ Kontrola bilingów w świetle gwarancji chroniących osobowe źródła informacji dziennikarskiej <<http://www.obserwatorium.org/images/biuletyn%20nr%2024%20www.pdf>> accessed 6 March 2016 [Polish].

¹²⁵Ibidem

¹²⁶Decision I ACa 1002/12 [2013] The Supreme Court Legalis no 1048905 [Polish].

¹²⁷Decision K 23/11 [2014] The Constitutional Tribunal Journal of Laws no 2014 item 1055 [Polish].

¹²⁸ Stanowisko Izby Wydawców Prasy w sprawie projektu nowelizacji ustawy o Policji i niektórych innych ustaw <http://www.iwp.pl/pliki/Stanowisko_IWP_ws_nowelizacji_ustawy_o_policji.pdf> accessed 6 March 2016 [Polish].

¹²⁹ Written Comments by the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights 9 February 2016 <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2016/02/Amicus_Bureau_of_Investigative_Journalism_pko_Wielkiej_Brytanii.pdf> accessed 06 March 2016.

¹³⁰ P. Kruszyński, M. Błoński, M. Zbrojewska Dowody i postępowanie ... (C.H. Beck 2015) 191 [Polish].

¹³¹In case of exceeding those, for example by detecting a different crime enumerated in the catalogue or detecting a person that committed the crime that is being under investigation but is not encompassed by the control, it is possible to file a motion for permission of the use of information acquired through bugging in the criminal proceedings.

qualification of the act, a person, data carrier, indication of time¹³² for which the bug can be set and a justification with the analysis of bugging aim must be indicated. It seems that if the information covered by the reporter's privilege is being divulged with no such intention, as a side effect to a proceeding not related to the reporter's privilege matter, introducing further restrictions would be unjustified. On the other hand, if the motion that is filed with the court states that the aim of the control is to track the identity of an informant, it appears to be essential to exempt the controlled entity from the obligation of professional secrecy. Since the reporter's privilege is considered to be peremptory, conduct of such a control shall be impermissible¹³³. The list of measures that can be applied to a journalist with the aim of exposing its informant is somehow reduced. Unfortunately, provisions concerning this matter are scattered in at least a dozen or so law regulations, usually they are not outright enough, which makes them less transparent and accessible. Provisions itself, when they happen to have a separated passage concerning the reporter's privilege are formulated in a specific way not necessarily understandable for a person with no legal background. Moreover, required criteria are most commonly formal ones. If a different than formal type of basis appears (for example uselessness of different means) it is within court's discretionary decision how to react on it. Nevertheless, both doctrine and judicature have a preference to giving the reporter's privilege a sound status and stretching it onto various elements even in case of no such direct regulation (so was at least until now). The effect of latest amendment cannot be predicted. However, it is certain that it vests in the police and different units more privileges not respecting the Polish Constitutional Tribunal's recommendations on protecting rights of individuals.

9. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

Polish legislation does not provide specific regulations concerning the encryption of journalists' personal data and protection of its information sources in the context of internet publications. However, journalists and their informants are protected from disclosing above mentioned information on the account of the reporter's privilege. Regulations referring to the reporter's privilege limit or - in case of the right to anonymity - exclude the possibility to divulge author's personal data.

Discreet check in the form of inter alia collecting technology data is carried out with the aim of prevention, detection, perpetrator's determination, as well as obtention and consolidation of evidence of the crime committed intentionally. Above mentioned crime is to be initiated by public prosecution for example in case of organizing children's adoption with the aim of achieving benefits, president's assassination or IT data damage¹³⁴.

¹³²The maximum of 3 months, with the possibility of prolongation for the next 3 months, for the same person - (temporal scope). P. Kruszyński, M. Błoński, M. Zbrojewska - Dowody i postępowanie...(C.H. Beck 2015) 203 [Polish].

¹³³B. Augustyniak, K. Eichstaedt, M. Kurowski, D. Świecki (ed), Kodeks postępowania karnego. Komentarz (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 763 [Polish].

On the grounds of the Article 15.1 of the PL, the article's author is entitled to keep his personal data in secret. That means that the journalist can either use a nickname or remain anonymous. Aforementioned entitlement results also from the Article 47 and the Article 51 of the Constitution of the Republic of Poland.

Article 47 of the Polish Constitution stipulates that everybody has the right to the protection of his private life, family life, honor and reputation and the right to make decisions concerning his private life. According to this rule, the Constitution by defining such elements as „protection of the privacy”, creates an obligation towards public authorities to refrain from interfering in these life domains and guarantees suitable protection against every activity that could infringe upon aforementioned regulation. This right, however is not absolute¹³⁵. The Constitutional Tribunal explicitly determined that „The right to privacy, as well as other rights and liberties do not have an absolute dimension and by the sake of it they can be subject to limitations. These limitations shall however comply with constitutional requirements. They must be supported by different constitutional norms, principles or values. The limitation's degree shall remain in proportion to interests' significance. Due to the proportionality principle it is indispensable to compare the protected good with the sacrificed good and to orchestrate colliding interests”¹³⁶. The European Court of Human Rights has a very similar outlook on this matter. According to its judgment, restriction of the right to privacy protection stated in the Article 8 of the ECHR is necessary in a democratic country to safeguard the state and the public security as well as the economic prosperity of the country, the protection of the national order and the prevention of disorder, the protection of health and morality, as well as the protection of rights and freedoms of other people.” It states that „the notion of necessity means that state's interference corresponds to the urgent social need and (...) is proportional to the legally legitimate aim, that has to be achieved”¹³⁷.

Article 51 of the Polish Constitution specifies the right to the personal data protection. Pursuant to its provisions, nobody can be obliged by any other mean but the law to disclose his personal information and the public authorities cannot obtain, collect and share information on its citizens other than necessary in a democratic country. Additionally, everybody is entitled an access to official documents and datasets that concern him and has the right to request information's rectification and information's cancelation when incorrect, incomplete or collected in violation of the law. What needs to be underlined is the fact that the rules and the mode of ¹³⁴Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] Article 5 [Polish].

¹³⁵B. Banaszak, Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej. Komentarz, (C.H.Beck 2012) 298 [Polish].

¹³⁶Decision K 23/11 [2014] The Constitutional Tribunal LEX 34599 [Polish].

¹³⁷Haase vs. Germany [2004] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions, 11057/02

information's collection and transmission are determined by law¹³⁸. One of the Constitutional Tribunal's judgments states that aforementioned article of the Polish Constitution strongly emphasizes the protection of an individual against public authorities due to the fact that the subject obliged to execute the law set in this Article is the public authority itself¹³⁹.

Article 180(3) of the CPC constitutes the right to anonymity. According to the regulation, journalist's exemption from a professional secrecy cannot refer to data that will enable the identification of publication's author if the author himself has reserved the right not to disclose this information. Aforementioned ban is of an absolute character and cannot be violated or altered via the application of different provisions¹⁴⁰. Thereby, the court cannot request the journalist to disclose data that will enable to track down the informant. The ban to divulge personal data applies also to aforementioned data administrator and all others in possession of author's any personal data¹⁴¹. To be able to invoke this law, the author must explicitly express the desire to remain anonymous because aforementioned law is not a presumable law. As a manifestation of such a will, the author may sign the article using a nickname. It shall be underlined, that according to the Polish Supreme Court's sentence, the identity protection right encompasses not only journalists, but also authors of press materials no matter if the material is categorised as a publication or not¹⁴².

In accordance with the Police Law act's amendment that entered into force 7 February 2016, materials that might contain information protected by the reporter's privilege (that applies also to data on informants) collected by the police and other services as a result of a discreet check is transferred by the Prosecutor's Office to the court. The court may lift the reporter's privilege when such an action is necessary for the justice system and the fact in question cannot be determined on the grounds of different evidence. Thereby, information concerning journalists' sources collected by surveillance methods shall be used in court only in particular cases. Exemption from the reporter's privilege is possible only when journalist's hearing on classified information is essential to solve a criminal case. This necessity means the exhaustion of different evidence methods and inability to determine facts by means of different evidence methods¹⁴³. Also, the Article 168a of the CPC is of a vital value as it prohibits conducting and using evidence acquired by committing an offense in court.

Newly adopted regulations on surveillance in Poland arouse a wave of controversy in both legal and reporter's environment. According to many lawyers, recent amendments grant too much leeway to the authorities regarding telecommunication's and internet's control. It may act as a real threat to the freedom of expression since on the grounds of new regulations the police and ¹³⁸Journal of Laws no 78 item 483 (The Constitution of the Republic of Poland of 2 April 1997) 1997 [Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 2 kwietnia 1997 r.] Article 51.

¹³⁹Decision K 19/01 [2002], The Constitutional Tribunal LEX 52918 [Polish].

¹⁴⁰Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court OSNKW 2003 no 1-2 item 6 [Polish].

¹⁴¹Decision II SA/Wa 1570/08 [2009], The Provincial Administrative Court in Warsaw LEX no 519829 [Polish].

¹⁴²Decision II SA/Wa 1488/09 [2010], The Provincial Administrative Court in Warsaw LEX no 619970 [Polish].

¹⁴³Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court LEX no 20707 [Polish]

other services do not have to file an enquiry with the internet service provider to receive data that they need. However, these concerns cannot be confirmed until the provisions are applied in practice for a longer period of time.

10. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

According to the Article 5 of the PL, „every citizen, in compliance with the rule on the freedom of speech and the right to criticism, may provide information to the press. Nobody can be exposed to harm or allegation on account of communicating information to the press if he has acted within the legal framework”¹⁴⁴. This provision is based on the rule of the freedom of expression that is stated in the Article 54 of the Constitution of the Republic of Poland and in the Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter CPHRFF). Although CPHRFF refers to the freedom of expression as well as receiving and transmitting - also beyond the borders - information, the European Court of Human Rights derived from it a wider meaning inter alia directly connected with the media's functioning.¹⁴⁵

Despite the lack of a legal definition, the doctrine provides a description that an informant is a citizen that provides information to a journalist. He is a, so called, source of information¹⁴⁶. Moreover, a whole catalogue of persons that are not informants was set by the judicature (intermediaries or messengers).

It is worth noting, that the definition of a whistle-blower established in the Recommendation of the Council of Europe Ministers' Committee (reference number: CM/Rec (2014)7) differs from the definition of an informant set in the Polish PL which might cause certain interpretative complications. However, the Polish law does not have a definition of the aforementioned whistle-blower or the employee-informant. Transparency International underlines that a term „whistle-blower” applies not only to a full-time employee, but also to anybody who is in possession of an inside knowledge related to functioning of the entity - a consultant, a person hired on the grounds of the civil law, an intern, a volunteer, or a former employee¹⁴⁷.

¹⁴⁴Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] Article 5.

¹⁴⁵W. Sokolewicz, Prasa i Konstytucja (Wolters Kluwer SA 2011) 20 [Polish].

¹⁴⁶M. Zaremba, Tajemnica zawodowa dziennikarza a jego odpowiedzialność prawną, a gdzie miejsce wydania? [2003] Studia Medioznawcze 28 [Polish].

¹⁴⁷Kobylińska, M. Folta, Sygnaliści - ludzie, którzy nie potrafią milczeć. Doświadczenia osób ujawniających nieprawidłowości w instytucjach i firmach w Polsce (Fundacja Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2015) 7 [Polish].

It is obvious that a whistle-blower can become a source of journalistic information when he takes a decision to notify the press about irregularities occurring in the workplace (only if this data is perceived as confidential information). Hence, whistle-blowers and informants do not enjoy the same scope of protection, that is why a stark separation between these two groups shall be made.

Information is a statement about facts or different declarations like generalizations, hypothesis, analysis or facts' evaluations. That being said, opinions of a purely subjective character are not information (the Supreme Court's ruling of 20 October 2005; case reference number: IIKK184/05).¹⁴⁸ Also the difference between whistle-blowers' and informants' actions should be taken into consideration. The former approaches journalists directly and reporter's main aim is to pass this news to the public. The latter often notifies company's control authorities or trade unions but that of course does not exclude the possibility of divulging it to the mass media for example on a personal blog.

The main fear that whistle-blowers face is a situation of retaliation, mobbing or even position degradation or termination of employment contract due to the breach of professional secrecy. Persons reporting irregularities fall into supervisor's or employer's disfavor as it may draw the unwanted attention towards the company. That is why it is of an essential value to create mechanisms that will allow to protect individuals who report wrongdoings that occur in the workplace. Some crucial provisions according to this kind of situations are stated in chapter IIa of Polish Labour Code¹⁴⁹.

In the Polish law system there is no singular act that would holistically regulate the matter of „irregularities in a workplace” signalization and protection related to this issue¹⁵⁰. Some legal protection tools are regulated in the Key Witness Act, the CPC (incognito witness)¹⁵¹ or in the Personal Data Protection Act.¹⁵²

It is to be underlined, that certain scope of whistle-blower's protection is to be found in the Polish Labour Code. It is stated in beforementioned Chapter IIa which respects to the equal treatment in employment. But what acts on its disadvantage is that it applies only to employees with an employment contract which totals only to 70% of workers in Poland. The remaining 30% are people hired under the civil law regulations and are not subject to Labour Law's provisions. As a result, international standards on whistle-blower's protection are not being complied with. In Poland many complaints against an employer are being filed in with the court to recognise the termination of employment as unfounded. The judge is allowed to examine ¹⁴⁸M. Zaremba, Pravo prasowe- ujęcie praktyczne (DIFIN 2007) 38 [Polish].

¹⁴⁹Journals of Laws no 24 item 141 (The Labour Code of June 26 1974) 1974 [Ustawa z dnia 26 czerwca 1974 r. Kodeks pracy].

¹⁵⁰A. Wojciechowska- Nowak, Ochrona sygnalistów w Polsce. Stan obecny i rekomendacje zmian (Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2012) 9 [Polish].

¹⁵¹Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego].

¹⁵²Journal of Laws no 133 item 883 (The Act on the Protection of Personal Data of August 29 1997) 1997 [Ustawa z dnia 29 sierpnia 1997 r. o ochronie danych osobowych].

reasons for contract termination but only those that are included in the notice of termination¹⁵³. That solution was supposed to protect employee against presenting new reasons by the employer. However, it triggered a situation where notices of termination do not include real reasons for the contract termination and the court cannot investigate whether the real reason for employer's dismissal was of a different nature. It is a pernicious obstacle for the whistle-blower's protection because it leads to covering a real reason for the contract termination in a way that it becomes impossible to bring it up to the court's attention.

A vital aspect of a whistle-blower's protection is that according to the 1729 Resolution of the Council of Europe, point 6.1.1 he must act in good faith. The obligation to protect whistle-blowers who act in good faith results directly from the Article 12.1.2 of the PL. In legal proceedings, the employee must prove the authenticity of facts revealed in case the employer brings up disloyalty charge. Polish judges consider that regulation as a hindrance and not as an element of whistle-blower's protection, because they (the whistle-blowers) could seek to acquire evidence in a dishonest and illegal manner. In the judge's opinion „if regulations allowing to assume and not dwell upon the topic that he acted in good faith and his base was solid not fictitious or caused by excessive imagination existed - then yes. However, we do not have such regulations”¹⁵⁴. Whistle-blowers that decide to divulge information about the workplace irregularities via media can use as a protection mechanism the possibility of not revealing their personal data. Then, the whistle-blower will enjoy the guarantees that result from the Article 12 and 14 of the PL. A journalist cannot bypass this regulation and it is only the informant that can exempt him from his reporter's privilege. In the event of legal proceedings the journalist can call on the informants to come forth, but he cannot force him to do that¹⁵⁵. Both parties are bonded by mutual trust and also both parties are the administrators of the information provided. The exemption from the reporter's privilege may happen by the virtue of law (statutory exemption)¹⁵⁶. The only exception is when the identity of an informant can be revealed without his explicit consent is a situation when the information divulged relates to the occurrence that bears the characteristics of the Article 240 of the CC.

One of the fundamental and the most important sort of the journalistic privilege is the secret of informant's identity. The Article 12.1 of the PL explicitly states the protection of the, so called, informants. It stipulates that a journalist is obliged to protect: „(...)2. personal rights and moreover interest of informants and other people that put confidence in him and act in good faith¹⁵⁷”. The protection of informants is intertwined with the journalistic privilege, however aforementioned provision steps forward and orders to protect all kind of informant's interests (material and non-material) when he confided in a journalist¹⁵⁸. The Article 15.2.1 of the PL

¹⁵³Wojciechowska A. Wojciechowska- Nowak, Ochrona sygnalistów ... (Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2012) 11 [Polish].

¹⁵⁴A. Wojciechowska- Nowak, Ochrona sygnalistów ... (Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2012) 12 [Polish]

¹⁵⁵I. Dobosz, Prawo prasowe. Podręcznik (Wolters Kluwer SA 2011) 229 [Polish].

¹⁵⁶J. Sińczycło- Chłabicz, Prawo mediów (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) 167 [Polish].

¹⁵⁷Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe] Article 12 [Polish].

¹⁵⁸I. Dobosz, Prawo i etyka w zawodzie dziennikarza (Wolters Kluwer SA 2008) 63 [Polish].

points out a journalist's obligation to keep in secret the data that might enable inter alia the informant's identification. Moreover, an informant can exercise his right to authorise the publication until it has been published.

What is more, a criminal responsibility (either a fine or a prison sentence) is previewed for obstructing or suppressing press criticism. Regulation found in the Article 44.1 of the PL has a wide scope of application, it applies not only to journalists but (at the same time) to their informants. Every entity that suppresses press critics fall within the scope of such liability, which means that this Article relates not only to individuals, but also to state authorities and enterprises.

In the ECHR case law, guarantees resulting from the Article 10.1 of the Convention are being underlined and the case of Wojtas - Kaleta vs. Poland confirms this warranty. The plaintiff, who was a journalist, was accused by her employee of breaching the TVP rules and as a consequence, was reprimanded for criticizing in an open letter TVP's activities. The Tribunal judged the breach of the Article 10 of the Convention and that aforementioned provision is applicable to a working place and also civil servants are entitled to make use of it. Thereby, it shall be assumed that the reporter's privilege under the Convention is a protected value within the frame of the freedom of information's transmission¹⁵⁹.

To sum up, the Polish legislation does not fulfill Strasbourg's standards when it comes down to whistle-blower's protection. A partial regulation concerning whistle-blower's legal situation is to be found in several acts, however there is no single act that would serve as a basis to start legal proceedings on the grounds of infringements in the work place. The only just and admissible mechanism to fight phenomena of corruption and breach of workers' rights is filing a complaint with the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg invoking the breach of provision 10 on the freedom of information's transmission of the Convention. In the event when the whistle-blower decides to disclose the classified information to the media, he becomes a journalistic source of information and is protected by the PL regulations. It needs to be noted that the Polish Ombudsman Adam Bodnar together with Adam Płoszka stated that: „In Poland, despite numerous exhortations from the part of NGOs (especially the Batory's foundation) no law on protecting workers who, in public interest, disclose irregularities in their work place was passed. Politicians do not seem to notice that whistle-blower's protection brings no expenses but benefits. This approach is best pictured by many international entities that adopt internal procedures that allow the functioning of whistle-blowers”¹⁶⁰.

On the other hand, informant's situation is radically different due to the protection privileges he is accorded under the Polish PL. No state authority, except the court, is entitled to coerce journalist into divulging informant's identity, if that would mean the possibility of exposing him to damage. In Poland, the journalistic privilege in respect to a personal source of information is peremptory (which means that no authority is authorised to exempt a journalist from this professional secrecy).

¹⁵⁹I. Dobosz, Prawo i etyka... (Wolters Kluwer SA 2008) 74 [Polish].

¹⁶⁰*Europa uczy się ochrony sygnalistów dzięki Snowdenowi* <<https://wszystkoconajwazniejsze.pl/adam-bodnar-adam-ploszka-europa-uczy-sie-ochrony-sygnalistow-dzieki-snowdenowi/>> accessed 6 March 2016 [Polish].

11. Conclusion

Having considered all of the above it seems relevant to point out the most important remarks. Although the Polish Constitution which is the most important piece of legislation does not directly regulate the issue of protection of journalists' sources, it is clear beyond doubt that the other statutory acts provide such protection. It is regulated primarily in the Press Law and in the Criminal Procedure Code. It should be noted, however, that none of these acts gives a legal definition of journalistic sources, which is intended treatment of the legislature. With no such regulation the protection provided in the statutory acts may be subject to a wide range of entities, without limitation to journalists only. Due to the fact that the legal disclosure of the journalists' sources of information by a journalist without possibility to hold him accountable covers only a narrow range of situations it should be recognised that under Polish law journalist's privilege seems to be the rule rather than the exception. An exemption the privilege can be performed by the court of law at the request of the prosecutor, which further strengthens the protection of journalists. It is also worth mentioning that the powers conferred on the authorities of the state and the judiciary effectively displaces the self-regulatory mechanisms, giving them the marginal and subsidiary importance.

Having regard to all of the report it should be stated that under the standards provided by the European Union law are maintained in the Polish law, and in case of particular aspects it is safe to say that they far exceed them, especially in the field of protection of journalist's privilege. Therefore, the requirements stated in both the Recommendation No R (96) 4 and Recommendation No R (2000) 7 are met.

Also in the light of the decisions of the European Court of Human Rights the decisions of Polish courts of law are in no way inferior to the jurisdiction of other European countries.

On the other hand, however, it should be noted that in the Polish legal system operate some oversight, because in spite of the regulations mentioned above is still possible to breach the journalist's privilege, for example through the use of wiretapping regarding a journalist. Another problem may be the fact that provisions of law regarding protection of journalists' sources are located in several legal acts, which can be difficult for a person who is not a lawyer.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- Journal of Laws no 5 item 24 (The Act on the Press Law of January 28 1984) 1984 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 26 stycznia 1984 r. Prawo prasowe].
- Journal of Laws no 16 item 93 (The Civil Code of April 23 1964) 1964 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 23 Kwietnia 1964 r. Kodeks cywilny].
- Journals of Laws no 24 item 141 (The Labour Code of June 26 1974) 1974 [Ustawa z dnia 26 czerwca 1974 r. Kodeks pracy].
- Journal of Laws no 30 item 179 (The Act on Police Law of the 6 April 1990) 1990 [Ustawa z dnia 6 kwietnia 1990 r. o Policji]
- Journal of Laws no 46 item 275 (Regulation of the Minister of Justice of 9 July 1990) 1990 [Obwieszczenie Marszałka Sejmu Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 16 marca 2010 r. w sprawie ogłoszenia jednolitego tekstu ustawy - Kodeks wykroczeń].
- Journal of Laws no 78 item 483 (The Constitution of the Republic of Poland of 2 April 1997) 1997 [Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej z dnia 2 kwietnia 1997 r.].
- Journal of Laws no 88 item 553 (The Criminal Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks karny].
- Journal of Laws no 89 item 555 (The Criminal Procedure Code of June 6 1997) 1997 as amended [Ustawa z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. Kodeks postępowania karnego].
- Journal of Laws no 133 item 883 (The Act on the Protection of Personal Data of August 29 1997) 1997
- [Ustawa z dnia 29 sierpnia 1997 r. o ochronie danych osobowych]

12.2. Case Law

- Decision I ACa 1002/12 [2013] The Supreme Court Legalis no 1048905 [Polish].
- Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court Legalis no 28402 [Polish].
- Decision I KZP 15/94 [1994] The Supreme Court LEX no 20707 [Polish].
- Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court Legalis no 55320 [Polish].
- Decision I KZP 26/02 [2002] The Supreme Court OSNKW 2003 no 1-2 item 6 [Polish].
- Decision II KK 184/05 [2005] The Supreme Court [Polish].
- Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX Legalis no 67737 [Polish].
- Decision III KK 278/04 [2004] The Supreme Court LEX no 145151 [Polish].
- Decision K 19/01 [2002] The Constitutional Tribunal [Polish].
- Decision K 23/11 [2014] The Constitutional Tribunal Journal of Laws no 2014 item 1055 [Polish].

- Decision K 24/98 [1998] The Constitutional Tribunal Monitor Polski no 37 item 518 [Polish].
- Decision SK 64/03 [2004] The Constitutional Tribunal OTK Series A 2004 no 10 item 107 [Polish].
- Financial Times and Others v. UK [2009] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2009.
- Fressoz and Roire v. France [1999] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1999.
- Goodwin vs. UK [1996] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996 r.-II.
- Haase vs. Germany [2004] The European Court of Human Rights.
- Tillack v. UK [2007] The European Court of Human Rights Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2007.
- Verdict I ACa447/97 [1997] The Court of Appeal not published [Polish].
- Verdict II AKa 155/11 [2011] The Court of Appeal in Katowice LEX no 1129774 [Polish].
- Verdict II SA/Wa 1488/09 [2010] The Provincial Administrative Court in Warsaw [Polish].
- Verdict II SA/Wa 1570/08 [2009] The Provincial Administrative Court in Warsaw LEX no 519829 [Polish].

12.3. Books and articles

- Augustyniak B Eichstaedt K Kurowski M Świecki D (ed), Kodeks postępowania karnego. Komentarz (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) [Polish].
- Banaszak B, Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej. Komentarz (C.H. Beck 2012) [Polish].
- Barta J. Markiewicz R. Matlak A. (ed), Prawo mediów (LexisNexis 2005) [Polish].
- Barta J Fajgielski P Markiewicz R, Ochrona danych osobowych [2015] LEX [Polish].
- Brzozowska-Pasieka M Olszyński M Pasieka J, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (LexisNexis 2013) [Polish].
- Cieślak M, Zagadnienia dowodowe w procesie karnym (Wydawnictwo Prawnicze 1955) [Polish].
- Dobosz I, Prawo i etyka w zawodzie dziennikarza (Wolters Kluwer SA 2008) [Polish].
- Dobosz I, Prawo prasowe. Podręcznik (Wolters Kluwer SA 2011) [Polish].
- Ferenc-Skrzydello E, Prawo prasowe: komentarz (Legalis 2013) [Polish].
- Grzegorzczak T, Kodeks postępowania karnego. Tom I. Artykuły 1-467 (LEX/el. 2014) [Polish].
- Grzegorzczak T Tylman J, Polskie postępowanie karne (LexisNexis 2014) [Polish].
- Kamiński I.C, Ograniczenia swobody wypowiedzi dopuszczalne w Europejskiej Konwencji Praw Człowieka: analiza krytyczna (LEX 2010) [Polish].

- Kędzia Z Rost A (ed), Współczesne wyzwania wobec praw człowieka w świetle polskiego prawa konstytucyjnego (Wydawnictwo Naukowe UAM 2009) [Polish].
- Kobylińska A Folta M, Sygnaliści - ludzie, którzy nie potrafią milczeć. Doświadczenia osób ujawniających nieprawidłowości w instytucjach i firmach w Polsce (Fundacja Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2015) [Polish].
- Kononiuk T Michalski B, Problemy prawne zawodu dziennikarskiego (Elipsa 1998) [Polish].
- Kosmus B Kuczyński G(ed), Prawo Prasowe. Komentarz (C.H. Beck 2013) [Polish].
- Kruszyński P Błoński M Zbrojewska M, Dowody i postępowanie dowodowe w procesie karnym (C.H. Beck 2015) [Polish].
- Kwiatkowski Z, Zakazy dowodowe w procesie karnym (Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego 2001) [Polish].
- Lis W (ed), Status prawny dziennikarza (LEX 2014) [Polish].
- Nowicki M, Wokół Konwencji Europejskiej. Komentarz do Europejskiej Konwencji Praw Człowieka [2015] LEX [Polish].
- Opaliński B Rogalski M Szustakiewicz P (ed), Ustawa o Policji. Komentarz (Legalis 2015) [Polish].
- Rusinek M, Tajemnica zawodowa i jej ochrona w polskim procesie karnym (Wolters Kluwer SA 2007)[Polish].
- Sakowicz A (ed), Kodeks postępowania karnego: komentarz (LEX 2015) [Polish].
- Sieńczyło-Chlabicz J (ed), Prawo mediów (Wolters Kluwer SA 2015) [Polish].
- Skorupka J (ed), Kodeks Postępowania Karnego. Komentarz (C.H. Beck 2015) [Polish].
- Skrzydło W, Konstytucja Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej. Komentarz (Wolters Kluwer SA 2013) [Polish].
- Sobczak J, Prawo prasowe. Komentarz (Legalis 2008) [Polish].
- Sokolewicz W, Prasa i Konstytucja (Wolters Kluwer SA 2011) [Polish].
- Wojciechowska-Nowak A, Ochrona sygnalistów w Polsce. Stan obecny i rekomendacje zmian (Instytut Spraw Publicznych 2012) [Polish].
- Zaremba M, Prawo prasowe. Ujęcie praktyczne (DIFIN 2007) [Polish].
- Bafia J, Dziennikarska tajemnica zawodowa [1988] Prasa Polska [Polish].
- Bojańczyk A, Karnoprocesowe znaczenie zgody dziennikarza na składanie zeznań co do okoliczności objętych tajemnicą zawodową [2005] Palestra [Polish].
- Gabriel-Węglowski M, Glosa do postanowienia SN z dnia 15 grudnia 2004 r., III KK 278/04 [2009] OSP LEX [Polish].
- Gerecka-Żołyńska A, Glosa do uchwały Sądu Najwyższego z dnia 22 listopada 2002 r., I KZP 26/02 [2004] OSP LEX [Polish].
- Kamiński I, Ochrona dziennikarskich źródeł - drzwi bardzo wąsko uchylone [2014] Kwartalnik o Prawach Człowieka [Polish].
- Kosowska-Korniak E, Prawno-procesowe aspekty tajemnicy dziennikarskiej [2014] Prokuratura i Prawo [Polish].
- Musialik G, Dopuszczalność stosowania podsłuchu telekomunikacyjnego w stosunku do osób zobowiązanych do zachowania tajemnicy zawodowej na gruncie Kodeksu postępowania karnego z 1997 roku [1998] Palestra [Polish].

- Sobczak J, Tajemnica dziennikarska [2005] Studia Medioznawcze [Polish].
- Szumiło-Kulczycka D, Glosa do postanowienia SN z dnia 15 grudnia 2004 r., III KK 278/04 [2005] Państwo i Prawo [Polish].
- Zaremba M, Tajemnica zawodowa dziennikarza a jego odpowiedzialność prawna [2003] Studia Medioznawcze [Polish].
- Zielinko I, Tajemnica dziennikarska w prawie prasowym [2009] Prokuratura i Prawo [Polish].

12.4. Internet sources

- Apel NGOsów do Sejmu o ochronę prawa do prywatności <https://amnesty.org.pl/no_cache/aktualnosci/strona/article/8725.html> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].
- Complaint Remuszko against Poland <<http://www.hfhrpol.waw.pl/obserwatorium/images/Remuszko%20Amicus%20ETPC.pdf>> accessed 3 March 2016.
- Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_POL.pdf> accessed 24 February 2016.
- Do Marszałka Sejmu i Marszałka Senatu ws. projektu ustawy o Policji <<https://www.rpo.gov.pl/pl/content/do-marszalka-sejmu-i-marszalka-senatu-ws-projektu-ustawy-o-policji>> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].
- Do MC oraz GIODO ws. dostępu służb do danych internetowych w projekcie ustawy o Policji <<https://www.rpo.gov.pl/content/do-mc-oraz-giodo-ws-dostepu-sluzb-do-danych-internetowych-w-projekcie-ustawy-o-policji>> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].
- Europa uczy się ochrony sygnalistów dzięki Snowdenowi <<https://wszystkoconajwazniejsze.pl/adam-bodnar-adam-ploszka-europa-uczy-sie-ochrony-sygnalistow-dzieki-snowdenowi/>> accessed 6 March 2016 [Polish].
- European Convention on Human Rights <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_ENG.pdf> accessed 1 May 2016.
- Factsheet - Protection of Journalistic Sources <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf> accessed 26 February 2016.
- Informacja prawna o wyroku Trybunału Konstytucyjnego z dnia 30 lipca 2014 r. (K 23/11) dotyczącym kontroli operacyjnej stosowanej przez służby policyjne i ochrony państwa <http://www.senat.gov.pl/gfx/senat/userfiles/_public/k8/komisje/2015/ku/infopraw/k_23_11_inf.pdf> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].
- Kontrola bilingów w świetle gwarancji chroniących osobowe źródła informacji dziennikarskiej <<http://www.obserwatorium.org/images/biuletyn%20nr%2024%20www.pdf>> accessed 6 March 2016 [Polish].
- NIK na temat billingów <<https://www.nik.gov.pl/aktualnosci/bezpieczenstwo/nik-na-> temat-billingow.html> accessed 20 February 2016 [Polish].

- Polska: Zmiany w ustawie o policji rażąco naruszają prawa człowieka <https://amnesty.org.pl/no_cache/aktualnosci/strona/article/8739.html> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].
- Pozyskiwanie billingów naruszyło dobra osobiste dziennikarza. CBA przegrało proces z red. Bogdanem Wróblewskim <http://www.obserwatorium.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=4203:-pozyskiwanie-billingow-naruszylo-dobra-osobiste-dziennikarza-cba-przegrao-proces-z-red-bogdanem-wroblewskim&catid=40:zkraju&Itemid=34> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information <https://search.coe.int/cm/Pages/result_details.aspx?ObjectID=09000016805e2fd2> accessed 1 May 2016.
- Rozpoczął się proces red. Bogdana Wróblewskiego przeciwko CBA <http://www.obserwatorium.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=4074:rozpocz-si-proces-red-bogdana-wroblewskiego-przeciwko-cba&catid=40:zkraju&Itemid=34> accessed 06 March 2016 [Polish].
- Stanowisko Helsińskiej Fundacji Praw Człowieka w sprawie poszanowania gwarancji tajemnicy dziennikarskiej <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2014/06/HFPC_stanowisko_19062014_FNL.pdf> accessed 26 February 2016 [Polish].
- Stanowisko Izby Wydawców Prasy w sprawie projektu nowelizacji ustawy o Policji i niektórych innych ustaw <http://www.iwp.pl/pliki/Stalowisko_IWP_ws_nowelizacji_ustawy_o_policji.pdf> accessed 6 march 2016 [Polish].
- Uwagi Helsińskiej Fundacji Praw Człowieka do poselskiego projektu ustawy o Policji oraz niektórych innych ustaw (druk sejmowy nr 154) <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/HFPC_opinia_ustawa_o_policji_30122015.pdf> accessed 1 February 2016 [Polish].
- Written Comments by the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights 9 February 2016 <http://www.hfhr.pl/wp-content/uploads/2016/02/Amicus_Bureau_of_Investigative_Journalism_pko_Wielkiej_Brytanii.pdf> accessed 06 March 2016.

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Artykuł 14 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej Rzeczpospolita Polska zapewnia wolność prasy i innych środków społecznego przekazu.	Article 14 of the Constitution of Republic of Poland The Republic of Poland shall ensure freedom of the press and other means of social communication.
Artykuł 47 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej Każdy ma prawo do ochrony prawnej życia prywatnego, rodzinnego, czci i dobrego imienia oraz do decydowania o swoim życiu osobistym.	Article 47 of the Constitution of Republic of Poland Everyone shall have the right to legal protection of his private and family life, of his honour and good reputation and to make decisions about his personal life.
Artykuł 49 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej Zapewnia się wolność i ochronę tajemnicy komunikowania się. Ich ograniczenie może nastąpić jedynie w przypadkach określonych w ustawie i w sposób w niej określony.	Article 49 of the Constitution of Republic of Poland The freedom and privacy of communication is granted. Their restriction may be imposed only in cases specified in the Act and in the manner specified therein
Artykuł 51 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej	Article 51 of the Constitution of Republic of Poland

1. Nikt nie może być obowiązany inaczej niż na podstawie ustawy do ujawniania informacji dotyczących jego osoby. 2. Władze publiczne nie mogą pozyskiwać, gromadzić i udostępniać innych informacji o obywatelach niż niezbędne w demokratycznym państwie prawnym. 3. Każdy ma prawo dostępu do dotyczących go urzędowych dokumentów i zbiorów danych. Ograniczenie tego prawa może określić ustawa. 4. Każdy ma prawo do żądania sprostowania oraz usunięcia informacji nieprawdziwych, niepełnych lub zebranych w sposób sprzeczny z ustawą. 5. Zasady i tryb gromadzenia oraz udostępniania informacji określa ustawa. Artykuł 54 Konstytucji Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej. 1. Każdemu zapewnia się wolność wyrażania swoich poglądów oraz pozyskiwania i rozpowszechniania informacji. 2. Cenzura prewencyjna środków społecznego przekazu oraz koncesjonowanie prasy są zakazane. Ustawa może wprowadzić obowiązek uprzedniego uzyskania koncesji na prowadzenie stacji radiowej lub	1. No one may be obliged, except on the basis of statute, to disclose information concerning his person. 2. Public authorities shall not acquire, collect nor make accessible information on citizens other than that which is necessary in a democratic state ruled by law. 3. Everyone shall have a right of access to official documents and data collections concerning himself. Limitations upon such rights may be established by statute. 4. Everyone shall have the right to demand the correction or deletion of untrue or incomplete information, or information acquired by means contrary to statute. 5. Principles and procedures for collection of and access to information shall be specified by statute. Article 54 of the Constitution of Republic of Poland 1. The freedom to express opinions, to acquire and to disseminate information shall be ensured to everyone. 2. Preventive censorship of the means of social communication and the licensing of the press shall be prohibited. Statutes may require the receipt of a permit for the operation of a radio or television station. telewizyjnej.
---	--

Artykuł 5 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

1. Każdy obywatel, zgodnie z zasadą wolności słowa i prawem do krytyki, może udzielać informacji prasie.

2. Nikt nie może być narażony na uszczerbek lub zarzut z powodu udzielenia informacji prasie, jeżeli działał w granicach prawem dozwolonych.

Artykuł 7 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

2. W rozumieniu ustawy:

4) materiałem prasowym jest każdy opublikowany lub przekazany do opublikowania w prasie tekst albo obraz o charakterze informacyjnym, publicystycznym, dokumentalnym lub innym, niezależnie od środków przekazu, rodzaju, formy, przeznaczenia czy autorstwa,

5) dziennikarzem jest osoba zajmująca się redagowaniem, tworzeniem lub przygotowywaniem materiałów prasowych, pozostająca w stosunku pracy z redakcją albo zajmująca się taką działalnością na rzecz i z upoważnienia redakcji.

Article 5 of the Press Law

1. Every citizen, in compliance with the rule on the freedom of speech and the right to criticism, may provide information to the press.

2. Nobody can be exposed to harm or allegation on account of communicating information to the press if he has acted within the legal framework

Article 7 of the Press Law

2. For the purposes of the Act:

4) press material is any published or submitted for publication in the press text or image of informative, journalistic, documentary or otherwise, regardless of the media, the type, form, or by destination,

5) The journalist is a person engaged in editing, creating or preparing press materials, remaining in the employment relationship with the publisher or engaged in such activities on behalf of and under the authority of the editorial office.

Artykuł 10 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

1. Zadaniem dziennikarza jest służba społeczeństwu i państwu. Dziennikarz ma obowiązek działania zgodnie z etyką zawodową i zasadami współżycia społecznego, w granicach określonych przepisami prawa.

2. Dziennikarz, w ramach stosunku pracy, ma obowiązek realizowania ustalonej w statucie lub regulaminie redakcji, w której jest zatrudniony, ogólnej linii programowej tej redakcji.

3. Działalność dziennikarza sprzeczna z ust. 2 stanowi naruszenie obowiązku pracowniczego.

Artykuł 12 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

1. Dziennikarz jest obowiązany:

1) zachować szczególną staranność i rzetelność przy zbieraniu i wykorzystaniu materiałów prasowych, zwłaszcza sprawdzić zgodność z prawdą uzyskanych wiadomości lub podać ich źródło,

2) chronić dobra osobiste, a ponadto interesy działających w dobrej wierze informatorów i innych osób, które okazują mu zaufanie,

3) dbać o poprawność języka i unikać używania wulgaryzmów.

2. Dziennikarzowi nie wolno prowadzić

Article 10 of the Press Law

1. The journalist's job is to serve the society and the state. The journalist has a duty to act in accordance with professional ethics and rules of social coexistence, within the limits prescribed by law.

2. The journalist, under the employment relationship, is obliged to carry out the general program line specified in the statute or the regulations of the editorial office in which he is employed.

3. The journalist's actions contrary to the paragraph 2 is a breach of employee's obligations.

Article 12 of the Press Law

1. A journalist is obliged to:

1) Take special care and reliability during collection and use of press materials, especially to check the compliance with the truth of received messages or identification of their source,

2) Protect the personal interests and also the interests of bona fide whistle-blowers and others who trusted him,

3) Ensure the use of a proper language and avoid using profanity.

ukrytej działalności reklamowej wiążącej się z uzyskaniem korzyści majątkowej bądź osobistej od osoby lub jednostki organizacyjnej zainteresowanej reklamą.

Artykuł 13 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

1. Nie wolno wypowiadać w prasie opinii co do rozstrzygnięcia w postępowaniu sądowym przed wydaniem orzeczenia w I instancji.

2. Nie wolno publikować w prasie danych osobowych i wizerunku osób, przeciwko którym toczy się postępowanie przygotowawcze lub sądowe, jak również danych osobowych i wizerunku świadków, pokrzywdzonych i poszkodowanych, chyba że osoby te wyrażą na to zgodę.

Artykuł 14 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe

1. Publikowanie lub rozpowszechnianie w inny sposób informacji utrwalonych za pomocą zapisów fonicznych i wizualnych wymaga zgody osób udzielających informacji.

2. Dziennikarz nie może odmówić osobie udzielającej informacji autoryzacji dosłownie cytowanej wypowiedzi, o ile nie była ona uprzednio publikowana.

3. Osoba udzielająca informacji może z ważnych powodów społecznych lub osobistych zastrzec termin i zakres jej opublikowania.

4. Udzielenia informacji nie można

2. The journalist is not allowed to carry out concealed advertising activities involving obtaining personal or financial benefit from the person or other entity interested in advertising.

Article 13 of the Press Law

1. It is forbidden to publish in the press the opinion as to the outcome of the judicial proceedings before the judgment in the first instance is given.

2. It is forbidden to publish in the press personal information and image of people against whom preliminary proceedings or prosecution are conducted as well as personal data and the image of witnesses, victims and injured unless they agree to it.

Article 14 of the Press Law

1. Publishing or spreading in any way information preserved by using audio and visual records requires the consent of the persons providing information.

2. A journalist cannot refuse to authorize the person providing the information cited verbatim statements, as long as it was not previously published.

3. The person providing the information may reserve the term and the scope of publication

uzależniać, z zastrzeżeniem wynikającym z ust. 2, od sposobu jej skomentowania lub uzgodnienia tekstu wypowiedzi dziennikarskiej. 5. Dziennikarz nie może opublikować informacji, jeżeli osoba udzielająca jej zastrzegła to ze względu na tajemnicę zawodową. 6. Nie wolno bez zgody osoby zainteresowanej publikować informacji oraz danych dotyczących prywatnej sfery życia, chyba że wiąże się to bezpośrednio z działalnością publiczną danej osoby. Artykuł 15 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe 1. Autorowi materiału prasowego przysługuje prawo zachowania w tajemnicy swego nazwiska. 2. Dziennikarz ma obowiązek zachowania w tajemnicy: 1) danych umożliwiających identyfikację autora materiału prasowego, listu do redakcji lub innego materiału o tym charakterze, jak również innych osób udzielających informacji opublikowanych albo przekazanych do opublikowania, jeżeli osoby te zastrzegły nieujawnianie powyższych	from important social or personal reasons. 4. Issuance of information should not be dependent, subject to point 2, on the way it was commented or agreed text of journalistic expression. 5. The journalist cannot publish information if the person giving it has reserved it because of professional secrecy. 6. It is forbidden to publish information and data relating to the private sphere of life, unless it is connected directly to the public activity of a person without the consent of the interested person. Article 15 of the Press Law 1. The author of the press material has the right to maintain the confidentiality of his name. 2. The journalist has a duty to maintain the confidentiality of: 1) the data enabling the identification of an author of the press material, letter to the editor or any other material of this nature, as well as other persons providing information published or submitted for publication if they have decided not to disclose such data,
---	---

danych, 2) wszelkich informacji, których ujawnienie mogłoby naruszać chronione prawem interesy osób trzecich. 3. Obowiązek, o którym mowa w ust. 2, dotyczy również innych osób zatrudnionych w redakcjach, wydawnictwach prasowych i innych prasowych jednostkach organizacyjnych. Artykuł 16 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe 1. Dziennikarz jest zwolniony od zachowania tajemnicy zawodowej, o której mowa w art. 15 ust. 2, w razie gdy informacja, materiał prasowy, list do redakcji lub inny materiał o tym charakterze dotyczy przestępstwa określonego w art. 254 Kodeksu karnego albo autor lub osoba przekazująca taki materiał wyłącznie do wiadomości dziennikarza wyrazi zgodę na ujawnienie jej nazwiska lub tego materiału. 2. Zwolnienie, o którym mowa w ust. 1, dotyczy również innych osób zatrudnionych w redakcjach, wydawnictwach prasowych i innych prasowych jednostkach organizacyjnych. 3. Redaktor naczelny powinien być w niezbędnych granicach poinformowany o sprawach związanych z tajemnicą zawodową dziennikarza; powierzoną mu informację albo inny materiał może ujawnić jedynie w	2) any information disclosure of which could infringe third parties' interests protected by law 3. The duty referred to in paragraph 2 also applies to other employees in editorial offices, publishing houses and other press organisational units. Article 16 of the Press Law 1. A journalist is exempted from the journalistic privilege, as referred to in Article 15.2, if the information, press material, letter to the editorial office or other material of this nature concerns an offense referred to in Article 254 of the CC or the author or the person transferring such material to the journalist's information only agrees to the disclosure of her name or the material. 2. The exemption referred to in paragraph 1 also applies to other employees in editorial offices, publishing houses and other organisational units. 3. The Chief Editor should be informed to the essential extent about facts that are subject to the journalistic privilege;
---	--

wypadkach określonych w ust. 1. Artykuł 44 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe 1.Kto utrudnia lub tłumi krytykę prasową - podlega grzywnie albo karze ograniczenia wolności. Artykuł 49 Ustawy Prawo Prasowe Kto narusza przepisy art. 3, 11 ust. 2, art. 14, 15 ust. 2 i art. 27 - podlega grzywnie albo karze ograniczenia wolności. Artykuł 115 Kodeksu Karnego § 20. Przepęstwem o charakterze terrorystycznym jest czyn zabroniony zagrożony karą pozbawienia wolności, której górna granica wynosi co najmniej 5 lat, popełniony w celu: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) poważnego zastraszenia wielu osób,2) zmuszenia organu władzy publicznej Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej lub innego państwa albo organu organizacji międzynarodowej do podjęcia lub zaniechania określonych czynności,3) wywołania poważnych zakłóceń w ustroju lub gospodarce Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej, innego państwa lub organizacji	information or other material entrusted to him may be disclose only in cases specified in paragraph 1. Article 44 of the Press Law 1. Who impedes or suppresses press criticism is subject to a fine or imprisonment. Article 49 of the Press Law Whoever violates the provisions of art. 3, 11. 2., 14, 15. 2 and art. 27 is subject to a fine or imprisonment. Article 115 of the Criminal Code § 20. An offense of a terrorist is an offense punishable by imprisonment of a maximum of at least 5 years, committed to: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) serious intimidation of many people,2) to compel public authority Polish Republic or any other state or the authority of an international organization to perform or abstain from certain activities,3) calls serious disturbances in the system or the economy of the Republic of Polish, another state or an international organization - as well as threats to commit such an act.
--	---

międzynarodowej - a także groźba popełnienia takiego czynu.

Artykuł 240 Kodeksu Karnego

§ 1. Kto, mając wiarygodną wiadomość o karalnym przygotowaniu albo usiłowaniu lub dokonaniu czynu zabronionego określonego w art. 118, 118a, 120-124, 127, 128, 130, 134, 140, 148, 163, 166, 189, 252 lub przestępstwa o charakterze terrorystycznym, nie zawiadamia niezwłocznie organu powołanego do ścigania przestępstw, podlega karze pozbawienia wolności do lat 3.

§ 2. Nie popełnia przestępstwa określonego w § 1, kto zaniechał zawiadomienia, mając dostateczną podstawę do przypuszczenia, że wymieniony w § 1 organ wie o przygotowywanym, usiłowanym lub dokonanym czynie zabronionym; nie popełnia przestępstwa również ten, kto zapobiegł popełnieniu przygotowywanego lub usiłowanego czynu zabronionego określonego w § 1.

§ 3. Nie podlega karze, kto zaniechał zawiadomienia z obawy przed odpowiedzialnością karną grożącą jemu samemu lub jego najbliższemu.

Artykuł 266 Kodeksu Karnego

§ 1. Kto, wbrew przepisom ustawy lub przyjętemu na siebie zobowiązaniu, ujawnia

Article 240 of the Criminal Code

§ 1. Whoever, having reliable information concerning a punishable preparation or attempt, or commission of a prohibited act specified in Article 118, 118a, 120-124, 127, 128, 130, 134, 140, 148, 163, 166, 189 252 or a terrorist offense, does not promptly inform an agency responsible for prosecuting such offences shall be subject to the penalty of deprivation of liberty for up to 3 years.

§ 2. Whoever abstained from informing, having sufficient knowledge to assume that an agency competent to prosecute knew of the prohibited act specified in § 1, planned, attempted or committed, shall be deemed to have not committed an offence specified in § 1; whoever prevented the commission of a prepared or attempted prohibited act shall also be deemed to have not committed an offence specified in § 1.

15

§ 3. Whoever abstained from informing because of fear of a penal liability threatening himself or his next of kin, shall also not be subject to penalty.

Article 266 of the Criminal Code

§ 1. Whoever, in violation of the law or obligation he has undertaken, discloses or uses information with which he has become lub wykorzystuje informację, z którą zapoznał się w związku z pełnioną funkcją, wykonywaną pracą, działalnością publiczną, społeczną, gospodarczą lub naukową, podlega grzywnie, karze ograniczenia wolności albo pozbawienia wolności do lat 2.

§ 2. Funkcjonariusz publiczny, który ujawnia osobie nieuprawnionej informację niejawną o klauzuli "zastrzeżone" lub "poufne" lub informację, którą uzyskał w związku z wykonywaniem czynności służbowych, a której ujawnienie może narazić na szkodę prawnie chroniony interes, podlega karze pozbawienia wolności do lat 3.

§ 3. Ściganie przestępstwa określonego w § 1 następuje na wniosek pokrzywdzonego.

Artykuł 168a Kodeksu Postępowania Karnego

Dowodu nie można uznać za niedopuszczalny wyłącznie na tej podstawie, że został uzyskany z naruszeniem przepisów postępowania lub za pomocą czynu zabronionego, o którym mowa w art. 1 § 1 Kodeksu karnego, chyba że dowód został uzyskany w związku z pełnieniem przez funkcjonariusza publicznego obowiązków służbowych, w wyniku: zabójstwa, umyślnego spowodowania uszczerbku na zdrowiu lub pozbawienia wolności.

Artykuł 180 Kodeksu Postępowania Karnego

§ 1. Osoby obowiązane do zachowania w tajemnicy informacji niejawnych o klauzuli acquainted with in connection with the function or work performed, or public, community, economic or scientific activity pursued shall be subject to a fine, the penalty of restriction of liberty or the penalty of deprivation of liberty for up to 2 years.

§ 2. A public official who discloses to an unauthorised person information which is an official secret or information with which he has become acquainted in the performance of his official duties and whose disclosure can endanger a legally protected interest shall be subject to the penalty of deprivation of liberty for up to 3 years.

§ 3. The prosecution of the offence specified in § 1 shall occur on a motion of the injured person.

Article 168a Criminal Procedure Code

Evidence cannot be considered inadmissible solely on the ground that it was obtained in violation of the rules of procedure or by means of an offense referred to in Article 1 § 1 of the Criminal Code, unless the evidence has been obtained in connection with the performance of duties by a public official, as a result of: murder, willful causing bodily injury or imprisonment.

Article 180 Criminal Procedure Code

§ 1. Persons obligated to preserve an official secret, or secrets connected with their tajności "zastrzeżone" lub "poufne" lub tajemnicy związanej z wykonywaniem zawodu lub funkcji mogą odmówić zeznać co do okoliczności, na które rozciąga się ten obowiązek, chyba że sąd lub prokurator dla dobra wymiaru sprawiedliwości zwolni te osoby od obowiązku zachowania tajemnicy, jeżeli ustawy szczególne nie stanowią inaczej. Na postanowienie w tym przedmiocie przysługuje zażalenie.

§ 2. Osoby obowiązane do zachowania tajemnicy notarialnej, adwokackiej, radcy prawnego, doradcy podatkowego, lekarskiej, dziennikarskiej lub statystycznej mogą być przesłuchiwane co do faktów objętych tą tajemnicą tylko wtedy, gdy jest to niezbędne dla dobra wymiaru sprawiedliwości, a okoliczność nie może być ustalona na podstawie innego dowodu. W postępowaniu przygotowawczym w przedmiocie przesłuchania lub zezwolenia na przesłuchanie decyduje sąd, na posiedzeniu bez udziału stron, w terminie nie dłuższym niż 7 dni od daty doręczenia wniosku prokuratora. Na postanowienie sądu przysługuje zażalenie.

§ 3. Zwolnienie dziennikarza od obowiązku zachowania tajemnicy nie może dotyczyć danych umożliwiających identyfikację autora materiału prasowego, listu do redakcji lub innego materiału o tym charakterze, jak również identyfikację osób udzielających informacji opublikowanych lub przekazanych do opublikowania, jeżeli osoby te zastrzegły nieujawnianie powyższych danych.

§ 4. Przepisu § 3 nie stosuje się, jeżeli informacja dotyczy przestępstwa, o którym mowa w art. 240 § 1 Kodeksu karnego.

§ 5. Odmowa przez dziennikarza ujawnienia danych, o których mowa w § 3, nie uchyla profession or office may refuse to testify as to the facts to which this obligation extends, unless they have been released by the court or the state prosecutor from the obligation to preserve such a secret for the sake of the interests of justice, unless the specific acts provide otherwise. This order shall be subject to interlocutory appeal.

§ 2. Persons obligated to preserve secrets such as lawyers, physicians or journalists, may be examined as to the facts covered by these secrets, only when it is necessary for the sake of the interest of justice, and the facts cannot be established on the basis of other evidence. The court shall decide on examination or permission for examination during the hearing without parties presence within no longer than 7 days from the date of receipt of prosecutors motion. This order of the court shall be subject to interlocutory appeal.

§ 3. Releasing a journalist from the obligation to preserve a secret may not concern data enabling identification of the author of press material, letter to the editorial office or other material of the same nature, as well as identification of persons imparting information published or passed to be published, if these persons reserved the right to keep the data secret.

§ 4. The provision of § 3 shall not apply, if the information regards the offence referred to in Article 240 § 1 of the Criminal Code.

§ 5. The refusal of a journalist to disclose the jego odpowiedzialności za przestępstwo, którego dopuścił się publikując informację.

Artykuł 218 Kodeksu Postępowania Karnego

§ 1. Urzędy, instytucje i podmioty prowadzące działalność w dziedzinie poczty lub działalność telekomunikacyjną, urzędy celne oraz instytucje i przedsiębiorstwa transportowe obowiązane są wydać sądowi lub prokuratorowi, na żądanie zawarte w postanowieniu, korespondencję i przesyłki oraz dane, o których mowa w art. 180c i 180d ustawy z dnia 16 lipca 2004 r. – Prawo telekomunikacyjne (Dz. U. Nr 171, poz. 1800, z późn. zm.), jeżeli mają znaczenie dla toczącego się postępowania. Tylko sąd lub prokurator mają prawo je otwierać lub zarządzić ich otwarcie.

2. Postanowienie, o którym mowa w § 1, doręcza się adresatom korespondencji oraz abonentowi telefonu lub nadawcy, którego wykaz połączeń lub innych przekazów informacji został wydany. Doręczenie postanowienia może być odroczone na czas oznaczony, niezbędny ze względu na dobro sprawy, lecz nie później niż do czasu prawomocnego zakończenia postępowania.

§ 3. Pozbawioną znaczenia dla postępowania karnego korespondencję i przesyłki należy niezwłocznie zwrócić właściwym urzędowi, instytucjom lub przedsiębiorstwom wymienionym w § 1.

data referred to in § 3, shall not exempt him from liability for an offence he committed by publishing information.

Article 218 of the Criminal Procedure Code

§ 1. Offices, institutions and entities operating in post and telecommunications fields, customs houses, and transportation institutions and companies, shall be obligated to surrender to the court or state prosecutor upon demand included in their order, any correspondence, transmissions and data referred to in Article 180c and 180d of the Act of 16 July 2004. - Telecommunications Law (Journal of Law No 171, item. 1800, as amended.) significant to the pending proceedings. Only the court and a state prosecutor shall be entitled to inspect them or to order their inspection.

§ 2. The order referred to in § 1, shall be delivered to the addressees of the correspondence and telephone subscriber or broadcaster, whose list of calls or other communications information was released.

The announcement of the order may be adjourned for a prescribed period, necessary to promote the proper conduct of the case but not later than until the final conclusion of the proceedings.

§ 3 Correspondence and transmissions irrelevant to the criminal proceedings should be returned to the appropriate offices, institutions or companies as set forth in § 1, without delay.

Artykuł 225 Kodeksu Postępowania Karnego

§ 1. Jeżeli kierownik instytucji państwowej lub samorządowej albo też osoba, u której dokonano zatrzymania rzeczy lub u której przeprowadza się przeszukanie, oświadczy, że wydane lub znalezione przy przeszukaniu pismo lub inny dokument zawiera informacje niejawne lub wiadomości objęte tajemnicą zawodową lub inną tajemnicą prawnie chronioną albo ma charakter osobisty, organ przeprowadzający czynność przekazuje niezwłocznie pismo lub inny dokument bez jego odczytania prokuratorowi lub sądowi w opieczętowanym opakowaniu.

§ 2. Tryb wskazany w § 1 nie obowiązuje w stosunku do pism lub innych dokumentów, które zawierają informacje niejawne o klauzuli "zastrzeżone" lub "poufne" albo dotyczą tajemnicy zawodowej lub innej tajemnicy prawnie chronionej, jeżeli ich posiadaczem jest osoba podejrzana o popełnienie przestępstwa, ani w stosunku do pism lub innych dokumentów o charakterze osobistym, których jest ona posiadaczem, autorem lub adresatem.

§ 3. Jeżeli obrońca lub inna osoba, od której żąda się wydania rzeczy lub u której dokonuje się przeszukania, oświadczy, że wydane lub znalezione w toku przeszukania pisma lub inne dokumenty obejmują okoliczności związane z wykonywaniem funkcji obrońcy, organ dokonujący czynności pozostawia te dokumenty wymienionej osobie bez zapoznawania się z ich treścią lub wyglądem. Jeżeli jednak oświadczenie osoby nie będącej obrońcą budzi wątpliwości, organ dokonujący czynności przekazuje te dokumenty z zachowaniem rygorów

Article 225 of the Criminal Procedure Code

§ 1. If the head of a State or local government institution subject to search or the person from whom objects have been seized, or whose premises are searched, declares that a writing or other document surrendered or discovered during the search, contains information relating to State, official, professional or other secrets protected by law, or that this information is of a personal nature, those conducting the search shall immediately transmit such writing or other document without prior reading, to the state prosecutor or the court, in a sealed container.

§ 2. The procedure described in § 1 shall not apply to writings and other documents relating to official, professional or other secrets protected by law if they are in the possession of a person suspected of an offence, nor to writings and other document of a personal nature of which such person is an owner, author or addressee.

§ 3. If a defence counsel or other person of whom surrendering objects is demanded, or whose premises are searched, declares that writings or other documents discovered in the course of a search, relate to facts connected with the performance of the function of the defence counsel, the agency conducting the actions shall leave these documents with such person, without ascertaining their contents or appearance. When the declaration of a person not being a defence counsel gives rise to doubts, the agency conducting the actions shall transmit określonych w § 1 sądowi, który po zapoznaniu się z dokumentami zwraca je w całości lub w części, z zachowaniem rygorów określonych w § 1, osobie, od której je zabrano, albo wydaje postanowienie o ich zatrzymaniu dla celów postępowania.

§ 4. Wydaną, odebraną lub znaną w toku przeszukania dokumentację psychiatryczną organ przeprowadzający czynność przekazuje, z zachowaniem rygorów określonych w § 1, sądowi lub prokuratorowi.

Artykuł 237 Kodeksu Postępowania Karnego

§ 3. Kontrola i utrwalanie treści rozmów telefonicznych są dopuszczalne tylko wtedy, gdy toczące się postępowanie lub uzasadniona obawa popełnienia nowego przestępstwa dotyczą:

- 1) zabójstwa,
- 2) narażenia na niebezpieczeństwo powszechne lub spowodowania katastrofy,
- 3) handlu ludźmi,
- 4) uprowadzenia osoby,
- 5) wymuszania okupu,
- 6) uprowadzenia statku powietrznego lub

the documents, in accordance with the requirements set forth in § 1 to the court. Having acquainted itself with the documents, the court shall return them all or in part, in accordance with requirements set forth in § 1, to the person from whom they were taken, or issue an order for their seizure for the purposes of the proceedings.

§ 4. The psychiatric records delivered, received or found during a search the authority carrying out the operation shall, under conditions referred to in § 1, pass to the court or the prosecutor.

Article 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code

§ 3. The surveillance and recording of the content of telephone conversations is allowed only when proceedings are pending or a justified concern exists, about the possibility of a new offence being committed regarding:

- 1) homicide,
- 2) causing a danger to the public or causing a catastrophe,
- 3) trade in humans or white slavery,
- 4) the abduction of a person,
- 5) the demanding of a ransom,

wodnego, 7) rozboju, kradzieży rozbójniczej lub wymuszenia rozbójniczego, 8) zamachu na niepodległość lub integralność państwa, 9) zamachu na konstytucyjny ustrój państwa lub jego naczelné organy, albo na jednostkę Sił Zbrojnych Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej, 10) szpiegostwa lub ujawnienia informacji niejawnych o klauzuli tajności "tajne" lub "ściśle tajne"; 11) gromadzenia broni, materiałów wybuchowych lub radioaktywnych, 12) fałszowania oraz obrotu fałszywymi pieniędzmi, środkami lub instrumentami płatniczymi albo zbywalnymi dokumentami uprawniającymi do otrzymania sumy pieniężnej, towaru, ładunku albo wygranej rzeczowej albo zawierającymi obowiązek wpłaty kapitału, odsetek, udziału w zyskach lub stwierdzenie uczestnictwa w spółce, 13) wytwarzania, przetwarzania, obrotu i przemytu środków odurzających, prekursorów, środków zastępczych lub substancji psychotropowych, 14) zorganizowanej grupy przestępczej, 15) mienia znacznej wartości, 16) użycia przemocy lub groźby bezprawnej	6) the highjacking of an aircraft or a ship, 7) robbery or robbery with violence, 8) the attempt against the sovereignty or independence of the State, 9) the attempt against the constitutional order of the State or on its supreme agencies, or against a unit of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Poland, 10) spying or disclosing a State secret, 11) amassing weapons, explosives or radioactive materials, 12) the forging of money, 13) the drug trafficking, 14) organised crime group, 15) property of significant value, 16) the use of violence or unlawful threats in
--	--

w związku z postępowaniem karnym, 17) łapownictwa i płatnej protekcji, 18) stręczycielstwa, kuplerstwa i sutenerstwa, 19) przestępstw określonych w rozdziale XVI ustawy z dnia 6 czerwca 1997 r. - Kodeks karny (Dz.U. Nr 88, poz. 553, z późn. zm.) oraz w art. 5-8 Rzymskiego Statutu Międzynarodowego Trybunału Karnego, sporządzonego w Rzymie dnia 17 lipca 1998 r. (Dz.U. z 2003 r. Nr 78, poz. 708), zwanego dalej "Statutem". Artykuł 23 Kodeksu Cywilnego Dobra osobiste człowieka, jak w szczególności zdrowie, wolność, cześć, swoboda sumienia, nazwisko lub pseudonim, wizerunek, tajemnica korespondencji, nietykalność mieszkania, twórczość naukowa, artystyczna, wynalazcza i racjonalizatorska, pozostają pod ochroną prawa cywilnego niezależnie od ochrony przewidzianej w innych przepisach. Artykuł 24 Kodeksu Cywilnego § 1. Ten, czyje dobro osobiste zostaje zagrożone cudzym działaniem, może żądać zaniechania tego działania, chyba że nie jest ono bezprawne. W razie dokonanego naruszenia może on także żądać, ażeby osoba, która dopuściła się naruszenia, dopełniła czynności potrzebnych do	connection with criminal proceedings. 17) bribery and accepting bribes, 18) pimping and prostitution, 19) the offenses referred to in Chapter XVI of the Act of 6 June 1997. - Criminal Code (Journal of Laws No. 88, item. 553, as amended) and in art. 5-8 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, signed in Rome on 17 July 1998. (Journal of Laws of 2003. No. 78, pos. 708), hereinafter the "Statute". Article 23 of the Civil Code The personal interests of a human being, in particular health, freedom, dignity, freedom of conscience, name or pseudonym, image, privacy of correspondence, inviolability of home, and scientific, artistic, inventive or improvement achievements are protected by civil law, independently of protection under other regulations Article 24 of the Civil Code § 1. Any person whose personal interests are threatened by another person's actions may demand that the actions be ceased unless they are not unlawful. In the case of infringement he may also demand that the
--	---

usunięcia jego skutków, w szczególności ażeby złożyła oświadczenie odpowiedniej treści i w odpowiedniej formie. Na zasadach przewidzianych w kodeksie może on również żądać zadośćuczynienia pieniężnego lub zapłaty odpowiedniej sumy pieniężnej na wskazany cel społeczny.

§ 2. Jeżeli wskutek naruszenia dobra osobistego została wyrządzona szkoda majątkowa, poszkodowany może żądać jej naprawienia na zasadach ogólnych.

§ 3. Przepisy powyższe nie uchybiają uprawnieniom przewidzianym w innych przepisach, w szczególności w prawie autorskim oraz w prawie wynalazczym.

Artykuł 60 Kodeksu Cywilnego

Z zastrzeżeniem wyjątków w ustawie przewidzianych, wola osoby dokonującej czynności prawnej może być wyrażona przez każde zachowanie się tej osoby, które ujawnia jej wolę w sposób dostateczny, w tym również przez ujawnienie tej woli w postaci elektronicznej (oświadczenie woli).

Artykuł 22 Kodeksu Pracy

§ 1. Przez nawiązanie stosunku pracy pracownik zobowiązuje się do wykonywania pracy określonego rodzaju na rzecz pracodawcy i pod jego kierownictwem oraz w miejscu i czasie wyznaczonym przez pracodawcę, a pracodawca - do zatrudniania person committing the infringement perform the actions necessary to remove its effects, in particular that the person make a declaration of the appropriate form and substance. On the terms provided for in this Code, he may also demand monetary recompense or that an appropriate amount of money be paid to a specific public cause.

§ 2. If, as a result of infringement of a personal interest, financial damage is caused, the aggrieved party may demand that the damage be remedied in accordance with general principles.

§ 3. The above provisions do not prejudice any rights provided by other regulations, in particular by copyright law and the law on inventions.

Article 60 of the Civil Code

Subject to the exceptions provided for in the law, the intention of a person performing a legal act may be expressed by any behavior of that person which manifests his intention sufficiently, including the intent being expressed in electronic form (declaration of intent).

Article 22 of the Labour Code

§ 1. By establishing an employment relationship, an employee undertakes to perform work of a specified type for the benefit of an employer and under his supervision, in a place and at the times specified by the employer; the employer pracownika za wynagrodzeniem.

§ 1¹. Zatrudnienie w warunkach określonych w § 1 jest zatrudnieniem na podstawie stosunku pracy, bez względu na nazwę zawartej przez strony umowy.

§ 1². Nie jest dopuszczalne zastąpienie umowy o pracę umową cywilnoprawną przy zachowaniu warunków wykonywania pracy, określonych w § 1.

Artykuł 10 Europejskiej Konwencji Praw Człowieka

1. Każdy ma prawo do wolności wyrażania opinii. Prawo to obejmuje wolność posiadania poglądów oraz otrzymywania i przekazywania informacji i idei bez ingerencji władz publicznych i bez względu na granice państwowe. Niniejszy przepis nie wyklucza prawa Państw do poddania procedurze zezwoleń przedsiębiorstw radiowych, telewizyjnych lub kinematograficznych.

Artykuł 261 Kodeksu Postępowania Cywilnego

§ 2. Świadek może odmówić odpowiedzi na zadane mu pytanie, jeżeli zeznanie mogłoby narazić jego lub jego bliskich, wymienionych w paragrafie poprzedzającym, na odpowiedzialność karną, hańbę lub dotkliwą i bezpośrednią szkodę majątkową albo jeżeli zeznanie miałoby być połączone z undertakes to employ the employee in return for remuneration.

§ 1¹. Employment under the conditions specified in § 1 is considered employment on the basis of an employment relationship, regardless of the name of the contract concluded between the parties.

§ 1². Employment contracts cannot be replaced with a civil law contract where the conditions of the performance of work specified in § 1 remain intact.

Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

Article 261 of the Civil Procedure Code

§ 2. A witness may refuse to answer to the question if the testimony could expose him or his relatives, listed in paragraph above, to criminal liability, disgrace or severe and direct property damage, or if the testimony would be connected with violation of substantial

pogwałceniem istotnej tajemnicy zawodowej. Duchowny może odmówić zeznań co do faktów powierzonych mu na spowiedzi.	professional secrecy. The priest can refuse to testify as to the facts entrusted to him during the confession.
---	---

ELSA PORTUGAL

Contributors

National Coordinator

João Pedro Guimarães

National Academic Coordinator

Alberto Arons de Carvalho

National Researchers

Ana Ruiz

João Pedro Martins

Leonor Catela

Mafalda Guimarães

Miguel Mota Delgado

Nádia Reis

Paulo Ferreira

Victor Hugo

National Linguistic Editor

Sara Alexandre

National Academic Supervisor

João Pedro Figueiredo

INTRODUCTION

The Portuguese approach to the protection of journalistic sources is best understood when the country's recent history is taken into consideration. In fact, Portugal experienced over four decades of dictatorship where freedom of expression, as well as many other facets of individual freedom, was heavily repressed, with obvious impact in the way press and journalists in general conducted their work. The Estado Novo, or the New State, as the dictatorship was named, not only developed an efficient propaganda machine, but also controlled the news released by the press through censorship commissions, excluding all subjects harmful to the regime and preventing them from reaching public domain.

It is of no wonder that the collapse of the authoritarian regime in the mid-seventies gave birth to a democratic state keen on making sure that its people would have the freedom to think, speak and write their own minds, while simultaneously developing an intricate legal and constitutional system solid enough to provide protection to those freedoms as well as human dignity in general. The following report exposes how both legal and constitutional Portuguese laws protect journalistic sources.

1. Does the National Legislation Provide (Explicit or Otherwise) Protection of the Right of the Journalists Not to Disclose Their Source of Information? What Type of Legislation Provides This Protection? How Exactly is This Protection Construed in National Law?

That protection begins at the highest level in the Portuguese legal system, in the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, with article 38 stating that “freedom of press is guaranteed” [38(1)], while disclosing that freedom of press implies, among other things, “that journalists have the right, as laid down by law, of access to sources of information, and to the protection of professional independence and secrecy” [38(2, b)]. This protection is supported by article 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which states in its clause 1 that “the religion or religious confession ministers and the attorneys, doctors, journalists, members of credit institutions and all other persons to whom the law allows or imposes secrecy may exempt themselves from testifying on facts covered by secrecy”. However, said article doesn't completely rule out those professionals from testifying on such facts, since clause 3 stipulates that “a higher jurisdiction than the court where the exemption has been invoked or - where the exemption has been argued before the Supreme Court of Justice - the plenary of criminal sections, may decide that the witness will testify regardless of professional secrecy whenever justified, according to the principle of prevailing interest considering, in particular, the need for evidence in order to clarify the truth, the gravity of the crime and the need to protect legal assets. Intervention is ordered by the judge, ex officio or upon request”. As such, something which happens in many other aspects of the Portuguese Law, the principle of prevalence of the public interest serves as a limitation of the protection of professional secrecy in criminal procedures.

Professional secrecy is, as demonstrated, undetachable from the rightful exercise of journalism, as well as many other professional areas. However, the concept of professional secrecy has a wide range of connotations; in Portugal it is the duty of every professional association to develop and fixate the content of such concept for their respective field of activity. To decide whether something is covered by professional secrecy, the question to be asked is whether the person acquired such knowledge due to their professional activity; should the answer be affirmative, then those facts are indeed covered by the constitutional and legal provisions displayed above.

The special regulation on press and journalists comprehends, but is not limited to, three very important diplomas: the Press Law (Law no. 2/99m of 13 January 1999), the Journalist's Statute (Law no. 1/99, of 13 January 1999) and the Journalists' Code of Ethics. The latter provides an important element to the subject of our research, since it states that "identification of one's sources is essential for a journalist. They must not reveal, not even in court, their confidential sources except in cases where the journalist has been used by their source in order to channel false information. Opinions shall always be kept clearly separate."

The extent of the legal protection given to journalists regarding the non-disclosure of their sources of information in Portugal, can be portrayed as a consequence of the protection of professional secrecy since it is one of the most important parts of the work of a journalist. Additionally, the fact that freedom of press stands strong as one of the banners of our comprehension of a modern state, with its due feature in the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, provides the frame of reference from which the Portuguese law shapes, both directly and sometimes as a side effect, the ruling of cases by the country's judicial system.

Taking everything into consideration, it's important to disclose what does fall under the scope of this legal protection and provide, or at least contribute to, a definition of "journalistic source". Portuguese case-law, as well as advisory opinions from the Office of the Chief Public Prosecutor of the Republic, has been important contributors to this task: the latter issued, in 1995, an advisory opinion (no. PGRP00000760) which stated that "the concept of information source comprehends not only the people, as authors of statements, opinions and judgments issued to a journalist, but also files and journalistic archives, be it in written support, sound or image". More recently, in 2009, the Supreme Court of Justice, in case no. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1, stated that "the right to not disclose journalistic sources can be defined as the ability the journalist has to not identify his/her informants, when vowed to respect their confidentiality, and to decline granting access to the supports that might reveal such identity. Such right is intricately related to the exercise of an active journalistic investigation, which implies the right to professional secrecy, that is, the absence of obligation of revealing the sources of news, wherever they come from, (...), without the fear of being sanctioned, by any means, for not revealing who shared with them such information". A teleological interpretation of what is said above can thus be translated into a concept of "journalistic source" that ranges from people to files, documents, archives, and any other means of information that support the exercise of journalism by the professional in question.

2. Is There, in Domestic Law, a Provision That Prohibits a Journalist From Disclosing His/Her Sources? How Exactly Is This Prohibition Construed In National Law? What is The Sanction?

One information (...) assumes a trust and loyal relation between the informant and the journalist. It requires compliance with certain rules. As a general rule, the journalist shall maintain the sources' identity confidentiality.

Castanheira, J. P.

The Constitution of the Portuguese Republic (CRP) is the most important source of law of the Portuguese legal system: it is the primary source of legal production, which, as Santos Justo refers, positively and negatively determines the hierarchically lower sources. Its rules are binding: as article 3, n^o3 from the CRP states, constitutional laws should be respected by the legislator, as well as the judge and any other public entities.

According to article 37, n^o1 from the 1976's CRP, freedom of expression and information is guaranteed to all citizens: "Everyone has the right to freely express and divulge their thoughts in words, images or by any other means, as well as the right to inform others, inform themselves and be informed without hindrance or discrimination." Number 3 of the aforementioned article typifies that "Infractions committed in the exercise of the profession are subject to the general principles of the criminal law or the law governing administrative offences".

The media assume a preponderant role in affecting freedom of expression and creativity. However, it is imperative to guarantee the journalists' right to search and diffuse to the public "not only to 'information' or 'ideas' that are favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference, but also to those that offend, shock or disturb the State or any sector of the population".¹

In Goodwin vs United Kingdom, the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) considered the journalistic sources protection as "one of the cornerstones of press freedom". Otherwise, those sources could be compelled to not inform the public, breaking the triad "source, journalist, society".

With this, journalists' professional secrecy can be defined as the right to not disclose the identities of their sources. From this emerges a legal and deontological obligation to keep secret regarding their origin. Its importance can be highlighted by the way it has been included in several international sources, such as article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, Report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education of the Parliamentary Assembly (2010) on the protection of journalists' sources.

¹ Paragraph 49 of the judgment Handyside vs United Kingdom (5493/72), ECtHR, 1976.

According to the Council of Europe case-law, the journalists' right to professional secrecy should not be seen as an absolute right; it can only be restricted to prevent, not repress, or even for major crimes.

The views on this issue have evolved throughout the years. In 1982, article 38.º, n.º 2, b) was seen as recognising an absolute right. However, in 1987, with the Code of Criminal Procedure (CCP) coming into force, article 135 admitted the possibility of a court demanded testimony where journalists would disclose their sources. Since then, many changes were made to liken it to the regulation of the Council of Europe.

On its number 2, the CCP article typifies that professional secrecy only occurs when the facts are known in the act of the profession. The following number refers that this right can be restricted under two circumstances: i) when there are no other ways to reveal the truth; ii) when the court sentence can lead to three or more years of imprisonment due to unlawful and gross negligence. Number 4 states that a judicial decision can only be taken before the representative organism of the profession in appreciation is listened.

According to number 6 of the Portuguese Journalists' Code of Ethics, the right to secrecy has been transformed into a duty. However, the Journalist's Statute, in article 14 (1) a), refers that journalists have the duty to inform readers with rigour and impartiality, abstaining from sensationalism and clearly demarcating facts from opinions.

Regarding the aforementioned, two exceptions are made when using the right to secrecy: i) The journalist is morally disobliged to keep silence about the identity's source or to respect commitments made when the information is given to have illegitimate benefits or to convey false information. ii) Whenever it results in a violation of the secret of justice.

2.1. Sanction When a Journalist Reveals His/Her Sources

The Portuguese Penal Code, in article 195 (Breach of secrecy), states that "Who, without consent, reveals secrets that others have been privy to because of their condition, occupation, employment, profession or art is punishable with imprisonment up to 1 year or with a fine up to 240 days." The Journalist's Statute also establishes fines for violation of its disposal, fine which are applied by ERC, Entidade Reguladora para a Comunicação Social, or the Regulation Entity for Social Communication (infractions of the articles 8 to 12) and CCPJ, Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista, or the Professional Journalist Commission.

The Journalist's Statute, however, says in number 1 of article 11, that "without prejudice to the provisions established in penal procedure law, journalists are not required to reveal their information sources, and their silence is not liable to any direct or indirect sanction". Number 3 of the aforementioned article refers that, "In the event that a journalist is ordered to reveal his sources under the terms of criminal procedure law, the court must specify the scope of the facts upon which the journalist is obliged to give evidence."

Even though journalists can benefit from this right, they shall always use as a fundamental criteria the sources identification (article 14 (1) f) of Journalist's Statute). Only this guarantees the information's credibility, dismissing the risks of its manipulation.

3. Who is a “Journalist” According to the National Legislation? Is it in Your View a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources? What is the Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors? Is the Protection of Journalists’ Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

According to article 1 of the Estatuto do Jornalista, Lei nº1/99, de 13 de Janeiro, (Journalist's Statute, Law nº1/99, January 13) a journalist is considered to be anyone who, as their main, permanent and gainful occupation, exercises editorial functions of research, collection, selection and treatment of facts, news or opinions via texts, images or sounds, intended for exposure, for informational purposes, via the press, a news agency, radio, television or via any other electronic means of dissemination. To add to this, number 2 of the same article clarifies the definition, stating that: “It is not journalism the performance of the duties referred to in the preceding paragraph when performed in the service of publications to primarily promote activities, products, services or entities of commercial or industrial nature.” Therefore, an agent that exercises these promotional activities cannot be considered a ‘journalist’ proprio sensu.

Pursuant to article 2 of the above mentioned law, citizens over 18 years old or in full use of their civil rights may be journalists.

The law continues to clarify this definition, namely by specifying that citizens who, regardless of whether or not they effectively pursue the profession, have performed journalistic activities as their main, permanent and gainful occupation for a continuous period of 10 years, or for 15 years on an interrupted basis, are also considered to be journalists, provided that they request and keep updated their respective professional license. [Article 1(3)].

Furthermore, the Statute goes on to further narrow the use of the term ‘journalist’, when it renders the pursuit of this profession incompatible with the performance of functions that can be grouped into three specific areas: of commercial nature (advertising, marketing, public relations...), institutional nature (military, police...), and political nature (sovereign bodies holders or other political office, executive positions in local government body). This incompatibility is not exactly a departure from the concept of ‘journalist’; a journalist who performs an incompatible function with the journalistic activity does not automatically cease to be a journalist, but they do suffer consequences for such a conduct. They have to cease all journalistic activity for the duration of twelve months (article 21(2), c) of the Journalist's Statute), as well as hand in their respective professional license to the Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista (Journalist Professional Committee). On top of this, the practice constitutes an administrative offence that, in addition to a fine of € 200 to € 5000, may be the object of additional penalty of disqualification from the practice of the profession for a period of 12 months, taking into account the severity and the agent's fault (article 20 (2) of Journalist’s Statute).

Finally, the Statute determines that in order to pursue the journalistic profession, individuals must hold the respective professional license, issued only after the completion of a mandatory internship. (Articles 4 and 5).

According to national legislation, the definition of 'journalist' fits in the broader definition proposed by Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 – of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information – which defines the term 'journalist' as any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication. The adopted definition of the term 'journalist' is, obviously, interconnected with the protection of journalistic sources – in other words, it's a prerequisite for granting that protection.

According to article 6/ c) of the same law, clarified by article 11, the professional secrecy guarantee is considered one of the journalists' fundamental rights. It is, above all, a constitutional imperative according to article 38/ 2/ b) of the Constituição da República Portuguesa (Constitution of the Portuguese Republic).

The journalists' professional secrecy does not concern the content of the information but rather the right not to disclose sources of information.²

Without prejudice to criminal procedure law, journalists are not only not required to disclose their sources of information, but their silence is also not subjected to any penalty. [Article 11(1)].³

Additionally, journalists shall be informed in advance, by the judicial authorities by which they are called to testify, about the content and extent of the right to non-disclosure of information sources, under penalty of the testimonies' nullity. [Article 11(2)].⁴

The right of journalists not to disclose sources of information and not be punished for it allows and builds a special relationship of trust between the journalist and the source of information. It is, therefore, not only an essential element to the practice of journalism, but also a prerequisite to ensure freedom of information.⁵

² As mentioned in the opinion of the Advisory Council of the Attorney General of the Republic, approved on February 22, 1996, "the concept of source of information includes not only people (as authors of statements, opinions and judgments), as well as documents, privileged sources of information, and any kind of information collected (including audio-visual recordings and written material). 'Source of information', in a broad sense, includes any and every object (thing), situation or event (of any kind or nature, such as an accident, a spectacle, a public demonstration, etc.) which give the journalist any type of information (written, audio or visual)." Thusly is concluded in the opinion that "the concept of source of information covers not only the origin, which can be human or not, but also the device itself in which it is poured, stored or archived." In short, the right to confidentiality, as well as give the holder the right not to reveal the persons' identity who provided information also includes non-availability of informational materials or the revelation of how the information was collected (cfr. ERC Deliberation 14/DR-I/2008, January 30).

³ Article 11(1) of the Estatuto do Jornalista, Lei n°1/99, de 13 de Janeiro (Journalist Statute, Law n°1/99, January 13).

⁴ Article 11(2) of the Estatuto do Jornalista, Lei n°1/99, de 13 de Janeiro (Journalist Statute, Law n°1/99, January 13).

⁵ Cfr. MARIA MANUEL BASTOS e NEUZA LOPES, Comentário à Lei de Imprensa e ao Estatuto do Jornalista, 1ª ed., Coimbra Editora, 2011, p. 231.

As Jónatas Machado⁶ highlights, the journalists' professional secrecy regarding sources of information begun as a deontological imperative of pragmatic nature, however today it is a principle of legal and constitutional nature able to ensure freedom of information and press – particularly important at a time when information journalism expands.

Several international instruments recognise the importance of journalists' professional secrecy, namely: i) the 1994 European Parliament Resolution on the Confidentiality of Journalists' sources, ii) the Resolution on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights, (adopted at the 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy – Prague, December 1994), and iii) the Council of Europe Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information.

The importance of confidentiality is also recognised by the article 14/ 2/ a) of the Estatuto do Jornalista (Journalist's Statute) and n°6 of the Código Deontológico do Jornalista (Journalist's Conduct Code) which sets the protection of confidentiality of information sources as a journalist's duty.⁷

This protection was (and remains) originally intended for journalists working for the traditional mass media (eg. newspapers, broadcasters). However, some have argued that there is no reason to limit such protection to these individuals and then apply a different regime to those working professionally in the collection and dissemination of information via new means of communication such as the Internet. In spite of this, Portuguese legislation has not changed its conservative position.

This being said, member States may find it difficult to define the characteristics of the professional work of journalists who exclusively use these new means of communication, in order to justify the same protection, due to the development of new professions in this area. Regarding this debate, the Entidade Reguladora para a Comunicação Social, (Regulatory Entity for Media), henceforth ERC, issued a deliberation (n° 202-2015) on New Media and the redefinition of the concept of 'órgão de comunicação social' (media actor). Although this decision concerns regulatory purposes, it gives us some guidelines on the notion (still not unanimously accepted) adopted for 'media actor'.

The Recommendation CM/Rec (2011) 7 (of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on a new notion of media) gives us a broad notion of media⁸, which points to:

⁶ Cfr. JÓNATAS MACHADO, Liberdade de expressão, Dimensões constitucionais da esfera pública no sistema social, in Stvdia Ivridica, n° 65, do BFDUC, Coimbra, 2002, p. 579.

⁷ Cfr. MARIA MANUEL BASTOS e NEUZA LOPES, op. cit., p. 233.

⁸ Which encompasses all actors involved in the production and dissemination, to potentially large numbers of people, of content (for example information, analysis, comment, opinion, education, culture, art and entertainment in text, audio, visual, audio-visual or other form) and applications which are designed to facilitate interactive mass communication (for example social networks) or other content-based large-scale interactive experiences (for example online games), while retaining (in all these cases) editorial control or oversight of the contents.

- A new reality, with new and traditional actors, which requires a media concept that suits a fluid and multidimensional reality;
- The need for all the actors, new and traditional, to support a framework that clearly establishes their rights and duties.

Thus, taking into account and based on the Recommendation (2011) 7, ERC proposes the following decisive criteria for the definition of new media:

- a) Produces, aggregates or disseminates media content;
- b) Submits the content to editorial control and treatment a priori;
- c) Intends to act as a media actor;
- d) Reaches and spreads to a potential audience;
- e) Respects professional standards;
- f) Is a service with economic consideration;
- g) Is under Portuguese Jurisdiction;
- h) There's continuity/permanence of the project.

In light of the exposed, it can be said that media actors are the outlets who pursue a social communication activity, present themselves as a service, show respect for the standards of the profession, have an expansive vocation and provide content subjected to editorial treatment and organised as a coherent whole.

In a media organisation the existence of a priori editorial control is imperative. It may also be exercised a posteriori, cumulatively, but the second will not be sufficient to fulfil the requirements. Within these, we highlight that news-oriented media should be subjected to stricter rules because of how important both the dissemination of information and the public interest are.⁹

4. What Are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How Are the Laws Implemented? How Are the Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

4.1 What Are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources?

4.1.1 Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources during Criminal Trial

Article 11(1) of the Portuguese Statute of the Journalist (“SoJ”) (Estatuto do Jornalista) generally refers to the situations in Portuguese criminal procedure law where journalists can be ⁹ ERC Deliberation 202/2015 (OUT), August 12 2015: New Media – On a redefinition of the concept of ‘órgão de comunicação social’ (media actor), p. 65.

judicially ordered to disclose their sources.^{10 11} In concreto, Article 11(1) SoJ refers to Article 135 of the Portuguese Criminal Procedure Code (“PCPC”) (Código de Processo Penal) titled ‘Professional Secrecy’.¹² Article 135 CPC regulates the procedural issue of escusa de segredo profissional (exception of professional secrecy) /quebra de sigilo profissional (disclosure of professional secrecy) by which, verified certain conditions, a journalist may be excused from (issue of escusa de segredo profissional) or ordered to (issue of quebra de sigilo profissional) testify on facts covered by professional secrecy, including sources.¹³

The issue of escusa de segredo profissional/quebra de sigilo profissional develops in the following manner¹⁴: a. Request to be excused [135(1) PCPC]; b. Necessary inquiries by the competent judicial authority on the legitimacy of the request, including audition of the profession’s representative body [135(2) and (4) PCPC]; c. Decision by the judge on the legitimacy of the request: i) The judge declares the illegitimacy of the request and orders the deposition [135(2) PCPC], or ii) The judge declares the legitimacy of the request and refers ex officio to the appellate court the decision on the question of the justification of the request [135(3) PCPC]; Decision by the higher court on the justification of the request: i) The court declares the request unjustified and orders the deposition [135(3) PCPC], or ii) the court declares the request justified.

Hence, the issue of escusa de segredo profissional/quebra de sigilo profissional is divided into two stages:¹⁵ i) the stage related to the question on the legitimacy of the request, regulated by article 135(2) PCPC, and ii) the stage related to the question on the justification of the request, regulated by article 135(3) PCPC. Only the court before which the request was made is competent to decide on the legitimacy of request [135(2) PCPC]. Only the appellate court to whom the request was made is competent to decide on the justification of the request [135(3) PCPC]. If the request is

¹⁰ The disclosure of journalistic sources can only take place during criminal procedure, Neuza Lopes and Maria Manuel Bastos, Comentário à Lei da Imprensa e ao Estatuto do Jornalista (Coimbra Editora 2011) [Portuguese] [Lopes/Bastos], 229-240.

¹¹ Article 178(5) of the Portuguese Constitution (“CRP”) establishes that investigative parliamentary commissions (“IPC”) enjoy all powers of investigations attributed to judicial authorities. IPC’s cannot, however, exercise the judicial function [Article 114 CRP]. Considering that the acts of inquiry aimed at asserting the legitimacy of the request, provided in Article 135(2) CRP, are not materially jurisdictional, both the Procuradoria Geral da República (“PGR”) (Attorney General) and the Alta Autoridade para a Comunicação Social (“AACS”) (High Authority for the Media) have agreed that these commissions may proceed with the necessary inquiries and, if they find the request illegitimate, order the deposition [Article 135(2) PCPC], Advisory Opinion of the PGR n.º 56/94; Deliberation of the AACS June 26 1996. More controversial is the question of the application of Article 135(3) PCPC to the activity of the IPC, specifically as to whether these commissions may refer to a higher court the decision on the justification of the request. The AACS distanced itself from the PGR, considering that these commissions could not refer this judgement to a different organ of sovereignty, inserted outside of its functional chain; Deliberation of the AACS June 26 1996.

¹² Even if this provision applies generically to the disclosure professional secrets, journalists are expressly discriminated among an exemplifying list of professions featured in article 135(1) PCPC.

¹³ Lopes/Bastos 229-240; Paulo Pinto de Albuquerque, Comentário ao Código de Processo Penal à Luz da Constituição da República Portuguesa e da Convenção Europeia dos Direitos do Homem (Universidade Católica, Lisboa 2011) [Portuguese] [Pinto de Albuquerque], 376-391.

¹⁴ Pinto de Albuquerque, 377.

¹⁵ The incident of quebra de sigilo profissional will have one stage only if the party requesting to be excused does not appeal after the court’s judgement on the illegitimacy of the request.

made before the Supremo Tribunal de Justiça, only the pleno das secções criminais is competent to decide on the justification of the request [135(3) PCPC].

4.1.2 The Legitimacy of the Request

According to article 135(2) PCPC, if the judicial authority before which the issue of escusa de segredo profissional is brought has reasonable doubts about the legitimacy of the request, it should proceed with the necessary inquiries and, if it finds the request illegitimate, order, or ask the court to order, the deposition. According to article 135(4), the profession's representative body must be heard before the judgement on the legitimacy of the request.¹⁶

The judgement on the legitimacy of the request focuses on certain preliminary formal requirements, in the absence of which a judge may order the deposition without the need for a judgment on the substance (the justification) of the request.¹⁷ These requirements are aimed at determining whether or not the facts are covered by professional secrecy.¹⁸ The request is illegitimate in the following cases:¹⁹ a. the applicant i) does not practice journalism professionally, i.e. regularly, or ii) does not fulfil the prescribed legal requirements for the practice of journalism;²⁰ b. the facts were not known in the context of the applicant's professional activity;²¹ c. the law does not provide the applicant with the right to professional secrecy;²² d. the specific requirements fixed in the professional statutes are not met.²³

4.1.3 The Justification of the Request

The judgment on the justification of the request is the moment where the substance of the request is considered.²⁴ In the wording of article 135(3) PCPC, the competent judicial body determines whether the breach of professional secrecy is justified. If the breach of professional secrecy is ¹⁶ This rule is understood due to the profession's representative body special position in verifying certain facts necessary for the judgement on the legitimacy of the request, namely if the applicant meets the specific requirements fixed in the professional statutes, Pinto de Albuquerque, 381. In Portugal, for the purposes of Article 135(2) PCPC, the profession's representative body in the context of journalism is the Sindicato dos Jornalistas. Indeed, since the Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista ("CCPJ") (Commission of the Journalist Professional Card does not have representative functions, Article 3 of the Regulation of the Journalist Professional Card [Regulamento da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista], it should be heard the journalists union with the biggest representation, in this case the Sindicato dos Jornalistas (Journalist' Union). This reading is in accordance with Article 11(6) SoJ, which refers to the journalists union with the biggest representation the representative functions, setting aside the CCPJ, Lopes/Bastos, 236.

¹⁷ Pinto de Albuquerque, 379.

¹⁸ Lopes/Bastos, 234.

¹⁹ Pinto de Albuquerque, 378.

²⁰ Pinto de Albuquerque, 378-379.

²¹ Pinto de Albuquerque, 379; Oporto Court of Appeal judgement of July 7 2010].

²² Pinto de Albuquerque, 379.

²³ Idem.

²⁴ Portuguese Constitutional Court judgement n. 7/87 [1987].

justified the request is, accordingly, unjustified and the competent judicial body may order the deposition with breach of professional secrecy (issue of quebra do sigilo profissional).

Article 135(3) PCPC determines that the breach of professional secrecy must be justified according to the principle of prevalence of the preponderant interest,²⁵ fixing three elements to densify this norm: i) the indispensability of the deposition for the determination of the truth; ii) the necessity of protection of legal goods; iii) the seriousness of the crime.

4.1.3.1 The Indispensability of the Deposition for the Determination of the Truth

The element of indispensability of the deposition for the determination of the truth means that the determination of the truth is irreversibly harmed if the journalist does not testify on the facts covered by professional secrecy²⁶ and, correspondingly, the determination of the truth cannot be achieved through other means, i.e. there are no alternative ways to determine the truth other than the breach of professional secrecy.²⁷

4.1.3.2 The Necessity of Protection of Legal Goods

The element of necessity of protection of legal goods corresponds to a pressing social need of disclosure of information covered by professional secrecy, according to the interpretation of article 8 ECtHR provided by the ECtHR in *Sunday Times v. United Kingdom*²⁸ and by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe in Recommendation N.º R (2000) 7.²⁹ Consequently, the breach of professional secrecy should not be ordered in the case of particular crimes, with the possible exception of particular crimes with notorious social impact.³⁰ Moreover, there is no pressing social need of breach of professional secrecy where there is founded reasons to believe that there may be cause for exemption of responsibility or termination of the criminal procedure.³¹

4.1.3.3 The Seriousness of the Crime

The seriousness of the crime must be determined in abstract and in concreto. In abstract, the concept of serious crime should be interpreted in accordance with article 187(1)(a) PCPC, i.e. crimes with a maximum sentence of more than three years.³² This means that the competent

²⁵ Frederico de Lacerda da Costa Pinto, “A Atividade Jornalística à Luz da Jurisprudência Penal” in eds Carlos Blanco de Morais, Maria Luísa Duarte and Raquel Alexandra Brízida Castro Media, Direito e Democracia (Almedina 2014) [Portuguese] 268-273.

²⁶ Oporto Court of Appeal Judgement of July 5 2006 [2006].

²⁷ Pinto de Albuquerque, 379.

²⁸ Sunday Times v. United Kingdom, ECtHR

²⁹ Recommendation n.º R (2000) 7; Pinto de Albuquerque, 379.

³⁰ Pinto de Albuquerque, 380.

³¹ Idem.

³² Given the material similitude of the protection of the right to privacy operated by article 187 PCPC with the protection of the right to professional secrecy operated by article 135 PCPC, Pinto de Albuquerque considers that the judicial authority should not order the deposition in case of crimes with a limited maximum of three years. This minimum abstract corresponds with the requisite of sufficiently vital and serious nature of the circumstances that justify the breach of professional secrecy, as interpreted by the ECtHR in Goodwin v. United Kingdom.³³ In concreto, and even if the crime meets the standard set in article 187(1)(a) ex vi article 135(3), the seriousness of the crime must be determined in the context of the concrete circumstances in which the crime occurred.³⁴ This in concreto assessment does not take place however, by demand of the law, in the case of crimes de denúncia obrigatória pela testemunha chamada a depor (crimes of mandatory complaint by the witness called to testify)³⁵. In these crimes the judgement on the seriousness of the crime was made ex ante by the legislator, who imposes the complaint of the crime.³⁶

4.1.4. Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources During Criminal Investigation

Article 11(6, 7, 8) SoJ establishes a special framework for the seizure of materials used by journalists in the exercise of their profession that can reveal the identity of sources. First, article 11(6) establishes that, during criminal investigation, the search in media outlets can only take place when ordered or authorised by a judge, who personally presides that operation. Before the search, the judge notifies the Journalists' Union so that this body, or its delegate, is present during the search, under the condition of confidentiality. Second, article 11(7) SoJ determines that the materials used by journalists in the exercise of their profession can only be seized during searches to media outlets, or anywhere else under the same conditions, when a warrant has been issued, in cases where the law permits the quebra de sigilo profissional. Third, article 11(8) SoJ determines that the materials obtained under the conditions established by article 11(6, 7) SoJ, which can reveal the identity of sources of information, are sealed and sent to the competent court to order the quebra de sigilo profissional, which can only allow for it to be used as proof when the quebra de sigilo profissional has been effectively ordered.

4.2. How Are the Laws Implemented?

4.2.1. Appeals

Since it terminates the issue, the judgment by the court of first instance on the illegitimacy of the request can be subject to appeal by the applicant.³⁷ On the contrary, the decision by the court of standard to interpret the concept of serious crime present in article 135 PCPC should be the one of article 187 PCPC, Pinto de Albuquerque, 380.

³³ Goodwin v. United Kingdom, ECtHR.

³⁴ This is namely to determine the presence of circumstances that may result in the reduction of the agent's culpability and, thus, do not justify the breach of professional secrecy, Pinto de Albuquerque, 380.

³⁵ These are crimes where, even if the identity of the suspect is unknown, certain persons (police officials and public officials) must make a complaint [242.º PCPC], Pinto de Albuquerque, 639-641.

³⁶ Pinto de Albuquerque, 380.

³⁷ Pinto de Albuquerque, 378.

first instance on the legitimacy of the request must refer ex officio the decision on the justification of the request to the higher court and, consequently, is not subject to appeal.³⁸

The judgment of the higher court on the justification of the request can be subject to appeal.³⁹ If the higher court is the Tribunal de Relação (TR) questions arise as to whether the judgment can be subject to appeal to the Supremo Tribunal de Justiça.⁴⁰

4.2.2 Audition of the Profession's Representative Body

4.2.2.1 Audition at the Request of the Higher Court

As it is clear from the reference of article 135(4) to article 135(3), the higher court shall proceed to the audition of the profession's representative body.⁴¹

4.2.2.2 The Nature of the Profession's Representative Body's decision

Article 135(4) determines that the profession's representative body must be heard under the terms and with the effects set out in the legislation applicable to that body. This could mean that the court is bound in its decision on both the legitimacy and the justification of the request by the profession's representative body decision.⁴² Pinto de Albuquerque considers this interpretation unconstitutional by violation of the principles of independence of the courts and of the pursuit of the real truth.⁴³ Furthermore, to this author, such interpretation would result in an inadmissible shortening of the defences' safeguards protected by articles 2, 32 and 203(1) of the Constituição da República Portuguesa and article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, as interpreted in Beaumont v. France, where it was found a violation of this provision where the court was bound by the decision of the foreign affairs minister.⁴⁴ The Portuguese courts have consistently applied this provision as to mean that the profession's representative body decision is non-binding.⁴⁵

³⁸ Idem.

³⁹ Ibidem.

⁴⁰ On the basis of article 399 PCPC, and since it consists in an appeal of the decision by the Tribunal da Relação ("TR") (Court of Appeal) on the justification of the breach of professional secrecy, Pinto de Albuquerque (Pinto de Albuquerque, 378) and the Supremo Tribunal de Justiça ("STJ") (Portuguese Supreme Court) (Portuguese Supreme Court Judgement of February 16 2005) have considered that the judgement of the of the TR can be subject to appeal to the STJ. However, this interpretation is not stable in the case law of the STJ. Indeed, against this interpretation, on the basis of the expression "em recurso" found in article 400(1)(c) PCPC cf. Portuguese Supreme Court Judgement of February 16 2005 and June 2 2010. This latter interpretation was considered in accordance with the Portuguese Constitution on the Tribunal Constitutional ("TC") (Portuguese Constitutional Court) judgments nos. 589/2005 and 673/2005.

⁴¹ Lisbon Court of Appeal judgement of September 24 2008 [2008].

⁴² Pinto de Albuquerque, 381.

⁴³ Idem.

⁴⁴ Pinto de Albuquerque, 381; Beaumont v. France, ECtHR.

⁴⁵ Portuguese Supreme Court judgment of April 21 2005 [2005]; Oporto Court of Appeal judgement of November 3 2004 [2004]; Guimarães Court of Appeal judgement of November 5 2007 [2007]; Lisbon Court of Appeal

4.3. How Are the Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

4.3.1. Self-regulatory mechanisms

In Portugal, limits to journalists' freedom to disclose their sources exist only under soft law instruments. Indeed, Point 6 of the Portuguese Journalists' Code of Ethics defines as a duty of the journalist the non-disclosure of sources, even in court. This provision contains only one exception: the circumstance under which a journalist is used by their source in order to channel false informations. In this case, the Portuguese Journalists' Code of Ethics allows the journalist to disclose its source.

Violations of the duties established under the Portuguese Journalists' Code of Ethics [Código Deontológico do Jornalista] are reviewed by the Conselho Deontológico do Sindicato dos Jornalistas (Journalists Union Ethics Council) [40(c) Statute of the Journalists Union ("SoJU")], with no further consequence resulting to the journalist who chooses to reveal its source. [40(c) SoJU].

4.3.2 Legal safeguards

Under Portuguese law, there is no legal command that prohibits journalists from disclosing their sources. There are, however, legal commands that, under exceptional circumstances, obligate journalists to do so⁴⁶.

Considering the general prohibition of disclosure of sources established under self-regulatory mechanisms⁴⁷, in certain cases, journalists will face a conflict of duties: the ethic obligation (soft law) not to disclose the source will be in conflict with legal obligation (hard law) to do so.

judgment of September 24 2008m [2008]; Évora Court of Appeal judgement of October 7 2010 [2010]; Pinto de Albuquerque, 381-382.

⁴⁶ Supra 4.1 and 4.2

⁴⁷ Supra 4.3.1

5. IN the Respective National Legislation Are the Limits of Non-disclosure of the Information in Line With the Principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What Are the Procedures Applied? Is the Disclosure Limited to Exceptional Circumstances, Taking Into Consideration Vital Public or Individual Interests at Stake? Do the Authorities First Search for and Apply Alternative Measures, Which Adequately Protect Their Respective Rights and Interests and at the Same Time are Less Intrusive With Regard to the Right of Journalists not to Disclose Information?

In order to understand whether the Portuguese system is in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, we must examine not only the substantive law, but especially the procedure law, which exposes the limits, the exceptions and the methods concerning the right of journalists not to disclose information.

Such right is directly linked to the exercise of active investigation journalism, which implies the right to professional secrecy. This means that journalists are not obliged to reveal their sources of information, whoever they may be, without the fear of sanction for not revealing those sources⁴⁸.

The protection of those sources corresponds to a right with fundamental value in democracy, constitutionally protected by article 38 of the Portuguese Constitution⁴⁹.

In Portugal, the right of journalists not to disclose information is not designed in absolute terms⁵⁰, but as a relative right, inasmuch as it allows breaches in certain situations, i.e. only in exceptional circumstances and by jurisdictional imposition, by its own initiative or by a criminal investigation entity⁵¹.

⁴⁸ As mentioned in the Legal Advice nr. 205/77, of 97.11.03 of the Republic's General Attorney Office, «a newspaper is not free if its information sources are not».

⁴⁹ The freedom of expression is directly related to the principles of democracy, as highlighted by Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, p. 91 (2006).

⁵⁰ Although the Portuguese Constitution determines that it is up to the law to restrain its scope and ensure its exercise, the truth is «the law cannot limit the right of journalists not to disclose information; it can only ensure its protection», as stated by Canotilho, J.J. Gomes and Vital Moreira, «Constituição da República Portuguesa Anotada», Vol. 1, 4th Edition, Coimbra Editora, pp. 583 ss (2007). See Constitutional Court, Judgement nr. 7/87, of 9 January 1987, DR 1st Series of 09 February 1987.

⁵¹ Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, pp. 106 ss. (2006)

In the Portuguese system, it is unanimous that professional secrecy is a moral and deontological duty, as well as a legally acknowledged right, but it is not an established judicial duty, because there is no applicable sanction upon breach of the commitment⁵².

Regarding the applicable legislation to this matter, in particular, article 135 of the Portuguese Criminal Procedure Law, article 22. of the Portuguese Press Law and article 11 of the Portuguese Journalist's Statute⁵³, «facing the hypothesis of the matter regarding the obligation of a witness' deposition in court being raised, the journalist, before a fact which he aims to remain confidential, and before invoking secrecy, must analyse if he is before a matter which could effectively be invoked as secrecy and, thereafter, analyse if he is not standing before a situation where the criminal justice's administration needs, inescapably, its testimony»⁵⁴.

Article 135 of the Portuguese Criminal Procedure Law has a binary structure⁵⁵ regarding the right of journalists not do disclose information. On the one hand, the situation provided in number 2 of the article refers to situations when the journalist invokes their right not to disclose information as an excuse to not provide a statement, leading the judicial authority to have to either i) accept the plea; or to ii) investigate the legitimacy of the excuse and, if illegitimacy is concluded, the judicial authority can order or request the court to order the provision of the statement⁵⁶. On the other hand, if the judicial authority concludes that the excuse is legitimate it can, under the number 3 of the article, initiate the procedures for a possible breach of secrecy.

With the excuse being legitimate, only the breach of secrecy may oblige the provision of the information that is being covered by the secrecy. However, the breach of secrecy imposes forethought of supremacy among the interests in conflict, which the legislator must report to a superior court.⁵⁷

⁵² Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁵³ The article 135. of the Portuguese Criminal Procedural Law applies in civil lawsuits, according with the article 417., nr. 3, al. c) and nr. 4 of the Portuguese Civil Procedure Law.

⁵⁴ Gaspar, António Henriques, «Código de Processo Penal Comentado», Coimbra, Almedina, pp. 554 ss (2014).

⁵⁵ Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, pp. 103 ss. (2006)

⁵⁶ In this situation, there is no secrecy, therefore the law does not impose the making of any judgement of weighing the interests in a way to determine which should prevail. A distinct situation is the legitimate excuse. The legitimacy of excuse necessarily results from the circumstance of the fact being under secrecy. See Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁵⁷ The breach of secrecy is of the jurisdiction of a superior court (Court of Appeal or Supreme Court of Justice). See Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 22 November 1995, Process nr. 048411. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/94fb0bb1b37d2dfa802568fc003aeacd?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

It is precisely this judgement in which number 3 of article 135 oversees the assumption of a specific incident – incident of breach of professional secrecy – to be mentioned in the court immediately superior to the one where the excuse was conducted⁵⁸.

Therefore it is necessary to carry out a practical agreement⁵⁹, which involves the analysis of the case, the interests at stake, the underlying conflict⁶⁰ and the principle of proportionality in its three aspects:

1. Necessity: The Court must analyse the effective risk of the application of the law, measuring the need to apply it towards the possible damage caused to the right of journalists not to disclose information.⁶¹

2. Appropriate/suitable: There has to be an evaluation of the set of possible measures which must be adopted in order to, without obscuring the core of the right of journalists not to disclose information, elect an ideal means of action. In this plan, based on a state of greater interest, and from the moment the breach of professional secrecy has been determined, the court must only proceed when there is an imperative public interest and if the circumstances present are sufficiently vital and of such a serious nature.⁶² Then, a set of potentially adaptable measures is selected based on the weighing of the prognoses.⁶³

See, also, Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁵⁸ The professional secrecy breach incident is a specific incident of the testimonial evidence. See Oporto's Court of Appeal, Judgment of 05 July 2006, Process nr. 0642079. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jtrp.nsf/56a6e7121657f91e80257cda00381fdf/d3389035e96b6d6c802571ab00360234?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

See, also, Coimbra's Court of Appeal, Judgment of 08 November 2006, Process nr. 1429/06. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jtrc.nsf/c3fb530030ea1c61802568d9005cd5bb/dea564d069b7436f8025722500425678?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁵⁹ In any case, the Court must act with criteria of extreme compulsory moderation and doubled caution in the weighing analysis of the value of presence.

⁶⁰ Here in confrontation: the individual citizen rights of information, the principle of freedom of press, the public interest in the investigation of the crimes, the freedom of the press, and the discovery of criminals for public peace. See Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁶¹ Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, p. 109 (2006).

⁶² Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, p. 110 (2006).

⁶³ See Lisbon's Court of Appeal, Judgment of 20 August 2002, Process nr. 0065289. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jtrl.nsf/33182fc732316039802565fa00497eec/b3cb71f0992b095580256c9f0039fe4a?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016, where the Court decided that the state's interest prevails over the professional journalist secret.

3. Forbid of excess: Within the reasonable alternatives, there must be chosen the least damaging one, as long as the material truth related to the object of the process is ensured. In any case, the chosen measure must never affect the core of the professional secrecy, damaging it from any sort of fruition.⁶⁴

The breach of secrecy is the ultimate way to directly prevent a crime or a situation of violence, and, moreover, cases in which a threat to national security is foreseen. This last circumstance demands a genuine fidelity for a purpose, and it must be sustained by evidence that the expression or information in question places a great threat to a legitimate interest of national security, in which the imposed restriction is the least restrictive means to protect the said interest.⁶⁵ Also that the restriction is compatible with the democratic principles which lead the Court to perform a balanced process, in a case-by-case basis.⁶⁶

After the decision of the court, which requires a breach of professional secrecy, the opportunity should be given to the journalist to present the motives to sustain the invoking of the secrecy⁶⁷. However, this does not happen, calling into question if our system is in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

See, also, Évora's Court of Appeal, Judgment of 15 December 2009, Process nr. 377/08.0TALGS-A.E1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jtre.nsf/134973db04f39bf2802579bf005f080b/9c0d9294b2b7435280257de100574f1c?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁶⁴ Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, pp. 120 ss (2006). See Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016.

⁶⁵ Condesso, Fernando, «Direito da Comunicação Social – Lições», Coimbra, Almedina pp. 207 ss (2007); Gaspar, António Henriques, «Código de Processo Penal Comentado», Coimbra, Almedina, p. 555 (2014).

⁶⁶ The Supreme Court of Justice, Judgement of 09 February 2011, Process nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1. <<http://www.dgsi.pt/jstj.nsf/954f0ce6ad9dd8b980256b5f003fa814/419c71a453f271a98025789600528ea9?OpenDocument>> accessed at 14 January 2016, decided that the breach of professional secrecy is essential when the right to privacy is violated before all public community.

⁶⁷ Martins, João Zenha, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, pp. 127 ss (2006).

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the Following Principles Should Be Respected When the Necessity of Disclosure is Stated: Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, Outweighing Legitimate Interest (Protection of Human Life, Prevention of a Major Crime, Defence of a Person Accused or Convicted of Having Committed a Major Crime). Under Which Criteria Can the Interest in the Disclosure Outweigh the Interest in the Non-disclosure?

Under Portuguese law, the problem arises only in the context of Criminal Law as a procedural issue of breach of professional secrecy. Undoubtedly, crimes have a social impact and represent an undeniable social concern, and for those reasons it is entirely justified that the efficiency of criminal justice has to prevail over the duty of professional secrecy.

Therefore, article 135, paragraph 3, of the Portuguese Criminal Procedure Code, provides that the court “may decide to provide testimony with professional secrecy breaking whenever this proves justified under the principle of the prevalence of major interest, particularly taking in account the indispensability of the testimony to the discovery of truth, the seriousness of the crime and the need for protection of legal interests”, a legal standard in tune with article 11, paragraph 1, of the Portuguese Statute of Journalist, which determines that “without prejudice to criminal procedural law, journalists are not required to disclose their sources of information, not in his silence subject to any sanction, direct or indirectly” (emphasis added). Concerning this rule, the Proposed Law n.º 76/X, a proposal that preceded the Law that modified the Journalist's Statute⁶⁸, suggested the rule should narrow the scope of “public interest” included in the criminal procedure rule mentioned above. Accordingly, the new article 11.º, n.º 3, of the Journalist's Statute, which did not come into force as we will see right below, should state something close to the following: “the disclosure of information sources can only be ordered by the court in accordance with the provisions of the criminal procedure law, where necessary for the investigation of serious crimes against persons, including, inter alia, crimes against life and physical integrity, as well as for the investigation of serious crimes against state security or serious cases of organised crime, since it is established that the disclosure of information is fundamental to the discovery of the truth and that their information much could hardly be obtained otherwise”⁶⁹.

⁶⁸ Which came into force by the Law n.º 1/99, January 13th

⁶⁹. As can be read in prefatory note, “thus making it necessary to circumscribe the concept of “overriding interest”, whose judicial consideration paragraph 3 of article 135 of the Criminal Procedure Code does depend, at present, the possibility of breach of professional secrecy of the journalist of the framework law of greater dignity assets in our system, such as life and physical integrity, as well as national security, and serious cases of organised crime, is reduced to just limits the margin of subjective assessment of the judge's determination, as enshrined in international texts cited above. At the same time, it is limited to those cases where the situations likely to cease materials used by journalists, initiatives that, when taking place in media organ, should always be chaired by a judge and can count on the presence of representative that professional class. It protects the material that can be seized in the course of an authorized search, so you can only access the competent court to determine the breach of secrecy and that only be

However, the President of the Portuguese Republic didn't issue the Proposed Law n ° 130/X, the draft that had incorporated that recommendation, as he vetoed the decree, backing his decision by emphasising that the rule “would allow cross interpretations, giving room for vagueness and legal insecurity in a particularly sensitive field either for the journalistic activity or for the efficiency of the criminal justice”.

Nevertheless, and following the ruling Goodwin v. United Kingdom, the international leading case concerning this matter, at the end of the day both Portuguese scholars and courts have interpreted the concept of absolute need of the statement like the recommendation mentioned above: there is an absolute need of disclosure if the testimony, the journalists themselves, hinders the finding of the truth by not giving their statement and as long as it covers crucial facts that the court can't get access otherwise, this is to say, by other legitimate mean. To some extent, the concept of absolute need is mainly connected to a pressing social need and calls for a balancing process. This is to say that there is ground for breaching the duty of secrecy due to sufficiently, vital and serious natures of social circumstances. The disclosure of information identifying the source should therefore be limited to exceptional circumstances where vital public or individual interests are at stake and can be convincingly established such as activities which may contribute to or result in such crimes as murder, manslaughter, severe bodily injury, crimes against national security, or serious organised crimes. However, both scholars and doctrine have agreed that the breach of duty of secrecy must be denied when it comes to particular crimes⁷⁰ unless the crime has a significant social impact, or when it comes to crimes with penalties that cap at three years. Furthermore, the excuse is illegitimate when: (i) the material or data show no connection with the professional secret; (ii) are concerned with information, facts or news not published or intended for publication; (iii) information obtained illicitly because if there is no right of access to information due to the law forbidding so, then the secrecy on the information thus obtained is not worthy of protection; (iv) where the source of information, gave their used as evidence in cases that fall is admitted by law”. Furthermore, “4 - Should be ordered disclosure of the sources in the preceding paragraph, the court shall specify the scope of the facts on which the journalist is obliged to give evidence. 5 - When there is place to disclosure of information sources in accordance with paragraph 3, the judge may, by order of its own motion or the journalist's request to restrict the free public assistance or the provision of testimony arises excluding advertising, getting involved in the act required the duty of secrecy on the reported facts. 6 - The information directors of media and managers or their proprietary organisation managers, as well as anyone in them performing functions may not, except with the written permission of the journalists involved, disclose their sources of information, including journalistic text files, sound or image of the company or any documents likely to disclose it. 7 - The search in the media can only be ordered or authorised by the judge, who personally chairs the diligence, previously warning the president of the union of journalists with greater representation for the same, or his delegate, may be present under confidentiality reserve. 8 - The material used by journalists in the exercise of their profession can only be seized during the searches in the media provided for in the preceding paragraph or made elsewhere by court warrant in the cases and for the purposes set out in paragraph 3. 9 - the material obtained in any of the actions set out in the preceding paragraphs that allow the identification of a source of information is sealed and forwarded to the competent court to order the disclosure of information, which can only authorise its use as evidence in the cases and terms referred to in paragraph 3”.

⁷⁰. Note: a “particular crime”, according to Portuguese law, means those crimes whose prosecution on a complaint and prosecution of the offence.

consent.

As ruled by the Portuguese Supreme Court of Justice, “the right to secrecy is not defined, in Portugal, in absolute terms, but only as a relative right, one that requires a framework which allows the legal obligation of breakage in certain situations, although exceptional in nature and by judicial imposition, on its own initiative or criminal (...) the breach of professional secrecy by decision of the superior court and the refusal of the legitimacy of decision is subject to a weighting of judgment which equates, firstly, to divide the principle of trust that is a breach of secrecy and, secondly, the prevalence of major interest represented by the fact that it breaks to be essential for the discovery of fact, the severity of crime and the need for protection of legal interests. It being understood that the operation of such requirements is cumulative, it is equally true that the law refers to vague concepts that for some, implies an analog inquiry into the meaning of the concepts employed in the teleology of the CPP [Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure]. In this speech there is the insuperable tendency to an attempt to gauge depending on their abstract penalty or legal and offended, as well as the criterion of the gravity of the crime. We believe that ultimately, what is at issue is the proportionality of the means employed - where the breach of professional secrecy - and the purposes to be achieved”⁷¹.

7. In the Light of the Case-Law of the European Court of Human Rights, How Do National Courts Apply the Respective Laws With Regard to the Right to Protect Sources? In Particular, How Do They Balance the Different Interests at Stake?

As we have seen earlier, Portuguese Law protects journalistic sources directly (via the protection of journalists' professional secrecy) and indirectly (as a dimension of the freedom of expression and freedom of press). There are cases, however, where procedure law gives the judge power to authorise the removal of the obligation of professional secrecy - mostly in the field of criminal procedure - with due accordance of the respective council of the professional association, and journalists are no exception. In 2011, the Portuguese Supreme Court of Justice (Supremo Tribunal de Justiça) denied the appeal of a judgment (no. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1) regarding the topic exposed above and sustained the decision of breaking professional sigil, stating that only then would the court be able to pursue the discovery of material truth - which, in light of the interests at stake, was taken as the prevailing interest, for that matter.

The aforementioned judgment portrays how the Portuguese courts traditionally treat press-related cases as scenarios of a collision of rights that have the same dignity in the eyes of the Constitution, taking into consideration personality rights (honour, reputation, image, privacy) on one hand and freedom of expression (and other rights connected to the press and journalists) on the other. For years, law suits based on claims related to violations of the right to privacy and honour by the press ended in heavy civil compensations on behalf of the idea that, in a scenario of collision of rights with equal constitutional value, the limit of one's extension is the essential core of the other - and in these cases, the courts usually stood by the defence of the rights related to the personality. This led to several complaints in the ECtHR that opposed the Portuguese Republic to journalists and press entities considered guilty in Portuguese courts, resulting in several condemnations for the Portuguese Republic because of what the ECtHR has seen as a direct violation of article 10 of the Convention.

⁷¹.See ac. 09/02/2011 do STJ (SANTOS CABRAL), proc. nr. 12153/09.8TDPRT-A.P1.S1 (available on www.dgsi.pt).

Recent Portuguese case law, however, seems to have adopted, if not fully, at least partially, the criteria established by the ECtHR to rule cases related to the press and freedom of expression. Indeed, it has become normal to find references to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms in Portuguese case law. Such has happened in case no. 755/13.2TVLSB.L1-7, from the Lisbon Court of Appeal - Tribunal da Relação de Lisboa - where it was stated that “Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms allows the for the exercise of freedom of expression as become the general rule”, as well as case no. 941/09.0TVLSB.L1.S1 also from the Lisbon Court of Appeal which asserted that “The European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) has stressed that the freedom of press is one of the pillars of freedom of information, and that national authorities cannot, by principle, stop journalists from investigating and collecting information of public interest and of reproducing such information, as it is inherent to the functioning of a democratic society”. The latter mentioned case also determined that “regarding the conflict between judicial secrecy and the freedom of expression and information, the ECtHR has been against restrictions to freedom of expression that aren't deemed necessary, namely when such information is already in the public domain”. These decisions showcase a trend where the application of the national law is overall more coherent with the principles crystallised in the ECtHR Case Law.

8. What are the Criteria for Using Electronic Surveillance and Anti-terrorism Laws, Which May Include Measures Such as Interceptions of Communications, Surveillance Actions and Search or Seizure Actions in Order to Identify Journalists' Sources of Information? Are the National Law Provisions Accessible, Precise, Foreseeable and Include Clear Legislative Norms in the Context of Surveillance and Anti-terrorism Provisions?

Electronic surveillance mechanisms, as understood by the Portuguese legislator⁷², consist of the observation or listening of persons, places, or activities—usually in a secretive or unobtrusive manner—with the aid of electronic devices such as cameras, microphones, tape recorders, or wire taps.

⁷² Available in English at: http://www.gddc.pt/codigos/code_criminal_procedure.html.

The goal of electronic surveillance, when used in law enforcement, is to gather evidence of a crime or to accumulate intelligence about suspected criminal activity⁷³.

This issue is extremely sensitive, for it causes a collision between an individual's fundamental rights, as protected by the Portuguese Constitution, and the State's interest in the pursuit of a criminal investigation. In truth, the use of electronic devices to keep surveillance over a person can implicate the violation of the investigated individual's right to privacy (protected by article 26 of the Portuguese Constitution) and freedom of speech (article 37 of the Portuguese Constitution), for example.

In fact, from a constitutional standpoint, what at stake when electronic surveillance mechanisms are employed is the autonomous right to privacy of a citizen's correspondence and communications, as protected by Article 34 (1) of the Portuguese Constitution. However, this legal value may only be compromised by virtue of criminal procedure law.

In view of its controversial nature, the admissibility of electronic surveillance mechanisms is subject to a number of strict criteria:

1. Exceptional nature – according to the Portuguese legal order, regardless of the type of crime in question, the violation of a fundamental right resulting from its collision with a different protected legal interest must be justified by the superior nature of the latter in relation to the former. It is noteworthy that, to this date, there have yet to occur any cases in which the respect for professional privilege is extended to journalists and the protection of their sources.
2. Principle of proportionality – in light of article 187 of the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure, the interception and tape recording of telephone conversations or communications may only be authorised during the inquiry where there are grounds for believing that this step is indispensable for the discovery of the truth or that the evidence would, by any other means, be impossible or very hard to collect. Hence, a judgement of proportionality, necessity and adequacy is in order when assessing the admissibility of the evidence gathered;
3. Principle of legality - an authorisation for the employment of electronic surveillance mechanisms must be granted by means of a reasoned and well-founded order issued by the Examining Judge and upon the request of the Public Prosecution Service, hence being subject to a high degree of formal requirements, indispensable in safeguarding the investigated individual from arbitrary incursions by the authorities;
4. Specification of a time-limit - the interception and recording of any conversations or communications are authorised, as per Portuguese criminal procedural law, for a maximum time-limit of three months, renewable for equal periods, provided that the respective requirements for admissibility have been met;

⁷³ JOSÉ MANUEL DAMIÃO DA CUNHA, O Regime Legal das Escutas Telefónicas, Algumas Breves Reflexões, Porto, 2015, pp. 6 ss.

5. Respect for professional privilege - no interception and recording of telephone conversations or communications between the defendant and his defence counsel is allowed unless the judge has reasonable grounds to believe that conversation or communication in question is the object or the constitutive element of a criminal offence;

6. The recording of conversations or communications cannot be used in the scope of any other proceedings, either on-going or to be instituted, unless exceptions are provided in special legislation.

Pertaining to the identification of journalists' sources of information, there are so far no examples of any case-law in which the use of electronic surveillance mechanisms has been employed to this end.⁷⁴

However, as per Article 126 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which concerns the inadmissibility of means of evidence obtained in violation of an individual's fundamental right to privacy through unauthorised intrusions into that individual's correspondence or telecommunication's records, the legislator has been careful to place the validity of the use of such means of evidence under the consent of the targeted individual.⁷⁵ This norm puts into place a mechanism that renders the use of those means of evidence as relatively invalid⁷⁶ – in other words, the employment of such means of evidence as the ones foreseen in Article 126 (3) is only relatively invalid. The ones set forth in Article 126, (1) and (2), however, are to be considered invalid at all times.⁷⁷

Hence, the system differentiates the regime applicable based on consent, which can be provided ex ante or ex post factum. But who is in a position to give such consent? The legitimacy depends on whom is considered as the the lawful holder of the right violated in a particular case.⁷⁸ Therefore, when a journalist is concerned, the general rule would apply: if the evidence had been collected through electronic surveillance mechanisms employed without the journalist's authorisation, their use would be relatively prohibited – for it would be possible to consent on it later on.

When that consent is lacking, legal privileges entailing secret-keeping privilege must be analysed. For example, some doctrine has stepped forward and defended that journalists should enjoy some of the privilege usually awarded to medical professionals and lawyers – as agents in the so-called “institutional relationships”. This standpoint is, to some extent, present in Article 11 of

⁷⁴ http://www.pgdlisboa.pt/leis/lei_mostra_articulado.php?artigo_id=199A0187&nid=199&tabela=leis&pagina=1&ficha=1&so_miolo=&nversao=#artigo

⁷⁵ STJ – Case no. 08P3375, 16-04-2009.

⁷⁶ STJ - Case no. 97/06.0JRLSB.S1, 04-11-2009.

⁷⁷ PAULO PINTO DE ALBUQUERQUE, Comentário do Código de Processo Penal, UCE, Dezembro 2007, p. 326.

⁷⁸ TRP – Case no. 35/08.5JAPRT.P1.

the Journalist Statute⁷⁹.

Additionally, the legislation must be foreseeable. In fact, as the European Court of Human Rights has made sure to stress in its recent case law: *“The domestic law must be sufficiently clear to give citizens an adequate indication as to the circumstances in which and the conditions on which public authorities are empowered to resort to any such measures.”*⁸⁰

Furthermore, the legal method adopted by the Portuguese legislator was extensively thorough in order to assure clarity, accessibility, precision and foreseeability of the legislation⁸¹. Article 187 of the Code of Criminal Procedure⁸² identifies all the circumstances in which the adoption of electronic surveillance mechanisms may be admissible:

1. Drug-related offences;
2. Possession of a prohibited weapon and illicit trafficking in weapons;
3. Smuggling offences;
4. Threat with the commission of a criminal offence or abuse and simulation of danger signals;
5. Escape from justice, whenever the defendant has been sentenced for a criminal offence foreseen in the preceding sub-paragraphs;
6. Illegal restraint, kidnapping and taking of hostages;
7. Offences against cultural identity and personal integrity, as provided for in Book II, Title III, of the Criminal Code and in the Criminal Law on Violations of International Humanitarian Law;
8. Offences against State security foreseen in Book II, Title V, Chapter I, of the Criminal Code - in which it is admissible to include the sensitive topic of terrorism, though there is no specific mention to it when analysing the admissibility of electronic surveillance mechanism;
9. Counterfeiting of currency or securities equivalent to currency foreseen in articles 262, 264 - to the extent that it refers to article 262 - and article 267 – to the extent that it refers to articles 262 and 264 - of the Criminal Code;

⁷⁹ Law 1/99, 1st of January, available in Portuguese at:

http://www.pgdlisboa.pt/leis/lei_busca_assunto_diploma.php?buscajur=fontes&artigo_id=&pagina=1&ficha=1&nid=136&tabela=leis&diplomas=&artigos.

⁸⁰ Case of Roman Zakharov v. Russia (application No. 47143/06) [2015] Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2015, para 229.

⁸¹ JOSÉ MANUEL DAMIÃO DA CUNHA, O Regime Legal das Escutas Telefónicas, Algumas Breves Reflexões, cit., pp. 12.

⁸² Available in English at: http://www.gddc.pt/codigos/code_criminal_procedure.html.

10. Offences covered by a convention on the safety of air or maritime navigation.⁸³

In addition, it is also required of the sitting judge in charge of the case to verify the relevance of the elements collected through the employment of electronic surveillance mechanisms, in order to guarantee that the violation of the individual's right to privacy is exclusively limited to the scope of the investigation. This criminal procedure principle means that if, by chance, a journalist's source happens to be disclosed in the midst of a recording set in place by electronic surveillance mechanisms, that information would not be admissible in Court, since it would fall outside the limited scope granted by the recording authorisation.

Hence, in a literal, positivist-oriented interpretation of the law⁸⁴, any other situations shall not be rendered admissible by the judiciary. Since the identification of journalists' sources of information was omitted, it must not be, by itself, considered as targeted by the Portuguese legislator.

As such we can conclude that there are no legal provisions that may subject journalists to be electronically surveyed in order to aid in the identification of sources.

Regarding the subject of terrorism – though not specifically detailed in the Code of Criminal Procedure, the parliamentary law n.º 52/2003, 22 of August⁸⁵ does give the reader a broader sense of what the term terrorism entails in the Portuguese legal order. However, while relevant in determining the definition of terrorist activities, this document remains silent as to any evidentiary standards.

In conclusion, the Portuguese legal system is mute regarding how to judge cases pertaining to the disclosure of journalistic sources, even when it comes to the subject terrorism.

9. Can Journalists Rely on Encryption and Anonymity Online to Protect Themselves and Their Sources Against Surveillance?

9.1. Measures Taken by Governments to Monitor the Internet

Portugal does not have any legal framework specifically regulating encryption or anonymity online.

Regardless of the fact that Portugal does not yet have any case-law concerning the journalistic right to encryption and anonymity online, it is imperative to ponder about an adjacent matter, specifically the measures taken by governments to monitor the Internet, as these may necessarily ⁸³ Available in English at: http://www.gddc.pt/codigos/code_criminal_procedure.html.

⁸⁴ CLÁUDIO LIMA RODRIGUES, Da valoração dos conhecimentos fortuitos obtidos durante a realização de uma escuta telefónica, in Verbo Jurídico, 2015, pp. 2 ss.

⁸⁵ Available in Portuguese at http://www.pgdlisboa.pt/leis/lei_mostra_articulado.php?nid=119&tabela=leis entail the unwarranted capture and retention of private communications data from ordinary citizens, as well as suspected criminals.

These concerns have become more serious as governments have increasingly attempted to push for the preservation of traffic data for longer periods, and as Internet Service Providers have begun to play a more proactive role in monitoring certain types of activity, for example copyright violation.⁸⁶

9.2. Constitutional Protection Guarantees Against Surveillance

Portuguese legislation provides several Constitutional protections against surveillance, namely the article 38 [2/b)] ensures the freedom of media press specifically by the journalistic right to professional secrecy. Nevertheless, this is not an absolute guarantee to the extent that the professional secrecy is protected "under the law". That is, not only is legislative action required to densify the right to secrecy, as this densification can legitimately condition the exercise of that right, in consideration with other constitutionally protected property.

So far, an overview upon the generic anonymity issues has been introduced, however it is required a focused assay over Constitutional online guarantees.

Regarding this specific issue, the Portuguese Constitution assures the protection of online personal data by a state independent entity – National Committee for Data Protection – as well as the applicable rules to personal data automated treatment, connection, steaming and use in article 35 (2).

The number 4 of the same Constitutional article forbids the access to personal data by others, beside the exceptions provided by law.

9.3. Limits Outlined to the Right to Encryption

At this moment, an examination across the limits outlined of the right to encryption and anonymity is required, imposed by the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure in order to ensure security.

Article 135 establishes the legal regime for the professional secrecy. Likewise the other rules already stated, article 135 (1) allows journalists to keep professional secrecy and excuse themselves to testify about the facts covered by it.

If there are doubts about the legitimacy of the excuse, the judicial authority before which the incident has taken place shall make the necessary inquiries. After these inquiries, that judicial authority may order or request the court to order the testimony if it considers the excuse illegitimate [135 (2)].

⁸⁶ https://www.un.org/en/terrorism/ctitf/pdfs/ctitf_internet_wg_2009_report.pdf

The court superior to the one where the incident has been raised, or in case the incident has been raised before the Supreme Court, the criminal sections, all together, may decide to demand testimony, breaking professional secrecy, whenever this proves justified under the principle of the prevalence of major interest, particularly in view of the indispensability of the testimony to the discovery of the truth, the seriousness of the crime and the need for protection of legal interests. The intervention is raised by the court of its own volition or at request [135 (3)].

In the cases specified under paragraphs 2 and 3, the decision of the judicial authority or court is taken, after hearing the Journalists' Union, on the terms and with the effects of the legislation applicable to that organism [135 (4)].

9.4. Cybercrime Law

The Convention on Cybercrime⁸⁷ came into force in Portugal on July 1st 2010, even though Portuguese legislation already had a legal instrument regarding specifically to online surveillance. That legislation is called Cybercrime Law (Law 109/2009, 15th September) and it implements the Council Framework Decision,⁸⁸ of February 24, on attacks against information systems, adapting to the national law the Convention of Cybercrime of the European Council.

Always complying to the Journalist's Statute and the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Portuguese Cybercrime Law allows the search in a computer system, if it becomes necessary for the production of proof, for specific and determined computer data stored in that computer system [15 (1)].

The criminal police agency may proceed with the search, without prior authorisation of the judicial authority when:

_ That authorisation is voluntarily consented by those who have the availability or control of such data, forasmuch as the consent given be documented in any way;

_ In the case of terrorism, violent or highly organised crime when there is founded evidence of the imminent commission of a crime which put at serious risk the life or safety of any person [15 (3)].

Article 16 allows the criminal police agency to apprehend computer data under the authorisation of the competent judicial authority. Nevertheless, this article must be confronted with the Journalist's Statute - which should be considered special rule and therefore, applied prevalently –

⁸⁷ <http://www.coe.int/en/web/conventions/full-list/-/conventions/treaty/185>

⁸⁸ <http://eur-lex.europa.eu/legal-content/EN/TXT/HTML/?uri=CELEX:32005F0222&from=EN>

on its article 11 (7) which establishes that the material used by journalists in the exercise of their occupation can only be seized during the searches in the media ordered or authorised by the judge, who personally presides the diligence, previously warning the president of the Journalists' Union so that they or their delegates may be present under confidentiality [11 (6)], or made under the same conditions elsewhere by court warrant in cases where it is legally permissible to break the professional secrecy.

Furthermore, the use of interception of communications is admissible in proceedings relating to crimes:

- _ Established in this law; or
- _ Committed by means of a computer system or for which it is necessary the collection of evidence in electronic form, when such crimes are established in article 187 of the Code of Criminal Procedure [18 (1)].

Nevertheless, the interception and computer data transmission log can only be authorised during the investigation, if there is reason to believe that the diligence is essential to the discovery of truth or that evidence would be otherwise impossible or very difficult to obtain, by reasoned order of the investigating judge and upon request of the accusation [18 (2)].

10. Are Whistle-Blowers Explicitly Protected Under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources? Is There Another Practice Protecting Whistle-Blowers? Is the Legislation Prohibiting Authorities and Companies from Identifying Whistle-Blowers?

In Portugal, there is no legislation that explicitly regulates whistleblowing in the context of journalism, as there is no law that specifically addresses the problem. In fact, and in contrast to what happens in other jurisdictions, notably the US and the UK, the phenomenon of whistleblowing, taken as a whole, is not subject to any explicit legal regulations in Portugal⁸⁹, something which happens in other countries such as Germany, Spain and Italy.

In fact, Portuguese law only contains a general principle of protection against unfair treatment for public officials, employees of state-owned companies and for the private sector⁹⁰ – article 4, ⁸⁹ With exception to the whistleblowing in the banking and financial sector where there are normative traces, although not worthy of the name legal rules, but merely soft law. Thus, it should be mentioned that the Resolution No. 765/2009 of the CNDP (National Commission for Data Protection) spoke about the “existence of codes of ethics in larger companies, which have consecrated the whistleblowing system in order to avoid fraudulent practices.”. In Deliberation it is assumed that in addition to private interests, there may be, “reflexively (...) the public interest to promote accountability and transparency in companies and contribute to financial security in the markets International. ” no. 1 of the Law no 19/2008 of 21 of April⁹¹: “The officials from the Public Administration and State-owned companies, as well as private sector employees who report offences they become aware of in the exercise of their functions, or because of those functions, cannot suffer any disadvantages, including non-voluntary transfer or dismissal”. However, this principle is not supported by any additional regulations or provisions⁹² and “does not explain how whistle blowers can seek redress for reprisals, what types of redress are available (beyond a job transfer), and how the anonymity of whistle blowers would be protected”⁹³.

⁹⁰ With Law no. 30/2015, of 22 of April, Portugal extended article 4. of the Law no. 19/2008 of 21 of April to also protect whistle-blowers in the private sector.

Moreover, the same article, in its number three, paragraph c), states that those employees «benefit, with the due adjustments, from the measures set forth in Law no. 93/99, of 14 of July, amended by Law no 29/2008, of 4 of July, and by Law no. 42/2010 of 3 of September, which regulates the witnesses' protection measures in criminal procedure».

In Law no. 25/2008, of 5 of June⁹⁴, we find a legal provision about the Disclosure of information protection, concerning money laundering and terrorism, which states the following: “1 - The disclosure in good faith by the entities covered by this Law, in compliance with the obligations laid down in Articles 16, 17 and 18, shall not constitute a breach of any restriction on disclosure of information, imposed by any legislative, regulatory or contractual provision, and shall not involve the persons providing it in liability of any kind. 2 - Any person, who even due to mere negligence, reveals or favours the discovery of the identity of the person that provided the information, in accordance with the articles referred to in the foregoing paragraph, shall be punishable by deprivation of liberty for a maximum of three years or by a fine”.

Nevertheless, we must consider the case law and doctrinal development without losing sight of certain international instruments.⁹⁵

Generally speaking, a whistle-blower, in the employment context, means that workers who, without it being their specific duty, denounce, internally or externally (that is to say, within the organisation to which they belong to or directly outside of the organisation), conducts of the company which amount to criminal offences, misdemeanours or perhaps simple torts or even moral or ethical misconducts.

⁹¹ Which approves anti-corruption measures.

⁹² This principle is viewed «as a weak provision, enacted in response to international pressure», as stated by Transparency International, Whistleblowing in Europe: legal protections for whistle-blowers in the EU, pp. 12 and 71 (2013), <http://www.transparency.org/whatwedo/publication/whistleblowing_in_europe_legal_protections_for_whistle-blowers_in_the_eu> accessed at 02 June 2016.

⁹³ OECD, Portugal: follow-up to the phase 3 report & recommendations, p. 6 (2015), <<https://www.oecd.org/daf/anti-bribery/Portugal-Phase-3-Written-Follow-Up-Report-ENG.pdf>> accessed 02 June 2016.

⁹⁴ Law regarding combating money laundering and the financing of terrorism.

⁹⁵ Thus, the ILO Convention No. 158 in his art. 5, c), which gives the employee the right to “make a complaint or participate in a procedure established against an employer for alleged violations of laws or regulations, or appeal to the competent administrative authorities”.

First, the protection of the whistle-blower is justified by the public interest that should prevail over the duty of secrecy and confidentiality of the employee towards the employer. This public interest is linked to weighty social reasons, namely the need to prevent or stop behaviours harmful to the general interest. It seems undisputed that the behaviours that embody crimes are covered (eg. tax crimes), although it is debatable whether the complaint of criminal trifles are also protected. Furthermore, the whistle-blower is also protected in the complaining of other situations where there is no liability under criminal law such as the administrative offences, because public or community interest is still relevant. In some cases, it may even include certain behaviours that are torts (eg. contractual defaults) or certain unethical behaviours.

Second, the whistle blower has to act in good faith, that is to say, having to believe that the information they are disseminating is true⁹⁶. The worker does not lose the protection when the information is false just because of this fact; when providing protection it is relevant to decide whether or not it was reasonable for someone placed on the employee's position to believe that the information was true. The decisive factor is that at the time of the complaint, there is a reasonably founded suspicion of the employer's unlawful conduct even though later inquiries conclude that they do not correspond to the truth. Thus, those workers who know or should know that the information is false are not protected. In Portuguese law a more pragmatic view of whistleblowing dominates, in the sense that the personal intention of the whistle-blower is irrelevant. In detail, for the guarantee of protection it's immaterial if the act is retaliation or reprisal for the employer because the protection order exists to encourage the reporting of harmful behaviours irrespective of the motivations that underpin the complaint. In contrast, Portuguese case law has already decided that "the worker is not prevented, nor violates the duty of loyalty towards the employer, to report situations to substantiate breach of legal obligations, particularly in hygiene and sanitary conditions of the workplace. However, when such a complaint is made, it is up to the worker to prove the veracity of the alleged facts; otherwise, in not doing so, they are violating duties of loyalty, respect and defence of the good name of their employer"⁹⁷.

Third, there is a preference for internal complaining, since this gives the employer an opportunity to correct their behaviour, and it is also less damaging to their image. However, it has been accepted that the worker move immediately to other forms of external reporting, for example, public bodies (police, regulatory, research, etc.) when the behaviour corresponds to a serious crime or when the internal complaints bring a serious and well-founded risk of retaliation by the employer. It is understood that an employee who intends to economically profit from the information obtained, for example, selling it to the media, will not be protected.

⁹⁶ According to Transparency International, Whistleblowing in Europe: legal protections for whistle-blowers in the EU, p.71(2013), <http://www.transparency.org/whatwedo/publication/whistleblowing_in_europe_legal_protections_for_whistle-blowers_in_the_eu> accessed at 02 June 2016, «Whistle-blowers in Portugal have extremely limited legal protections, and they can be criminally prosecuted or face civil lawsuits for defaming others».

⁹⁷ See ac. 08/10/2012 do TRP (PAULA LEAL DE CARVALHO), proc. nr. 346/11.2TTVRL.P2 (available on www.dgsi.pt).

Fourth, and this is a requirement especially designed for cases of internal complaints, the complaints should be made in a formal way. The worker must be correct and courteous in the way they complain, and not display overtones of indiscipline, by provoking or insulting others. A complaint that doesn't follow regulations can be seen as a disciplinary offence.

The protection of the whistle blower does not only grant anonymity but also and above all, protection against disciplinary action of any kind and unjust dismissal. However Portuguese Law does not state the best mechanisms to sustain the anonymity not the measures to ensure that dismissals are not unjust or cloaked. Unfortunately, the Portuguese system lacks a dedicated whistle blower protection framework.

11. Conclusion

The Portuguese Constitution explicitly provides protection of the right of journalistic sources. This highest level of protection is followed by other laws in the Portuguese system that grant the best safeguard possible for both journalists and their sources. After the collapse of Estado Novo, the 40 year long authoritarian regime, the new democratic state established the protection of fundamental rights and freedoms.

One of the matters addressed in the paper is the existence, or lack thereof, of domestic law that prohibits journalists from disclosing their sources, and any sanctions that might be associated with such prohibition. In Portugal, the journalistic right to protection of sources and professional secrecy is currently considered a relative right of the journalist; article 135 of the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure admits the possibility of criminal courts being able to demand testimonies from journalists in which they disclose their sources and information in cases where it's the only way of ascertaining the truth or when the crime in question can lead to a prison sentence longer than three years. When the violation of the secrecy is forced by the courts, the journalist suffers no consequence, otherwise they can be fined or even imprisoned (Portuguese Penal Code article 195 and Journalist's Statute articles 8 and 12).

The Portuguese legislation has also several provisions that approach and are in accordance with the broader definition of Recommendation No. R (2000) 7. The protection provided to the journalists is also extended to other media actors which enriches our legal systems of safeguarding this fundamental rights.

Regarding the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources, these come into play during criminal trials. Article 135 of the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure regulates the procedural issues of exception of professional secrecy and disclosure of professional secrecy, and determines the situations in which a journalist may be excused from or ordered to testify on facts covered by professional secrecy, including sources. This request has to be justified by the serious nature of the crime and take into consideration the indispensability of the deposition for determining the truth. According to Portuguese law, there is no legal requisite that prohibits journalist from disclosing their sources; that duty is laid out in soft law only (the Portuguese Journalists Code of Ethics and a Journalist's Statute).

Professional secrecy is a moral and deontological duty and a legally acknowledged right but there are some cases where the court can decide that there is a need to breach professional secrecy. Nevertheless, it is given the opportunity to the journalist to present the motives that sustain the invoking of the secrecy. Taking into consideration that this does not happen we should question if our system is in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

Under Portuguese law, interest in disclosure of journalistic sources outweigh the interest in nondisclosure when it comes to criminal law. Crime is a matter of social concern, its dealings a matter of public interest, and the efficiency of the criminal justice something which can prevail over professional secrecy, something laid out in article 135 of the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure. The Portuguese Supreme Court of Justice has ruled that the right to professional secrecy is not, in Portugal, defined in absolute terms, but is a relative right, one that bows to superior public interests.

The Portuguese courts have emerged from a more radical position, where the national law and the safeguard of personality rights deserved stronger protection when in conflict with freedom of expression and information, to a point where, in harmony with the Convention and the ECtHR, the prevalence of freedom of expression and information stands as a general rule, along with the protection of journalistic professional secrecy, which can only be violated if doing so is the sole way of unveiling the material truth.

In Portugal, the matter of electronic surveillance is an extremely sensitive topic, due to the fact that it causes a collision between an individual's fundamental right to privacy and the state's interest in the pursuit of a criminal investigation. The admissibility of electronic surveillance mechanisms is subject to a number of strict criteria dictated by the law and in a limited amount of situations, described in article 187 of the Portuguese Code of Criminal Procedure (the discovery of journalistic sources not amongst them). There have been so far no examples of case law in which the use of electronic surveillance mechanisms has been employed to the identification of journalists sources of information. We can conclude that there are no legal provisions that may subject journalists to be electronically surveilled in order to aid in the identification of their sources.

Encryption and anonymity online are not regulated within the Portuguese legal system. Nevertheless, the Portuguese constitution protects against surveillance.

Finally, Portugal lacks any legislation that explicitly regulates whistleblowing in the context of journalism; Portuguese law only contains a general principle of protection against unfair treatment for public officials, employees of stat-owned companies and for the private sector, but doesn't have a framework that protects whistle-blowers.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Books and articles

- MARIA MANUEL BASTOS E NEUZA LOPES, Comentário à Lei de Imprensa e ao Estatuto do Jornalista, 1ª ed., Coimbra Editora, 2011, p. 231.
- JÓNATAS MACHADO, Liberdade de expressão, Dimensões constitucionais da esfera pública no sistema social, in Studia Iuridica, nº 65, do BFDUC, Coimbra, 2002, p. 579.
- PAULO PINTO DE ALBUQUERQUE, Comentário ao Código de Processo Penal à Luz da Constituição da República Portuguesa e da Convenção Europeia dos Direitos do Homem (Universidade Católica, Lisboa 2011), 376-391.
- FREDERICO DE LACERDA DA COSTA PINTO, “A Atividade Jornalística à Luz da Jurisprudência Penal” in eds Carlos Blanco de Moraes, Maria Luísa Duarte and Raquel Alexandra BRÍZIDA CASTRO Media, Direito e Democracia (Almedina 2014) [Portuguese] 268-273.
- CANOTILHO, J.J. GOMES AND VITAL MOREIRA, «Constituição da República Portuguesa Anotada», Vol. 1, 4th Edition, Coimbra Editora, pp. 583 ss (2007).
- MARTINS, JOÃO ZENHA, «O segredo Jornalístico, a protecção das fontes de informação e o incidente processual penal de quebra de escusa de depoimento», Revista do Ministério Público, nr. 106, pp. 106 ss. (2006)
- GASPAS, ANTÓNIO HENRIQUES, «Código de Processo Penal Comentado», Coimbra, Almedina, pp. 554 ss (2014).
- CONDESSO, FERNANDO, «Direito da Comunicação Social – Lições», Coimbra, Almedina pp. 207 ss (2007); Gaspar, António Henriques, «Código de Processo Penal Comentado», Coimbra, Almedina, p. 555 (2014).
- JOSÉ MANUEL DAMIÃO DA CUNHA, O Regime Legal das Escutas Telefónicas, Algumas Breves Reflexões, Porto, 2015, pp. 6 ss.
- PAULO PINTO DE ALBUQUERQUE, Comentário do Código de Processo Penal, UCE, Dezembro 2007, p. 326.
- JOSÉ MANUEL DAMIÃO DA CUNHA, O Regime Legal das Escutas Telefónicas, Algumas Breves Reflexões, cit., pp. 12.
- CLÁUDIO LIMA RODRIGUES, Da valoração dos conhecimentos fortuitos obtidos durante a realização de uma escuta telefónica, in Verbo Jurídico, 2015, pp. 2 ss.

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Constituição da República Portuguesa, Artigo 2º: A República Portuguesa é um Estado de direito democrático, baseado na soberania popular, no pluralismo de expressão e organização política democráticas, no respeito e na garantia de efetivação dos direitos e liberdades fundamentais e na separação e interdependência de poderes, visando a realização da democracia económica, social e cultural e o aprofundamento da democracia participativa.	Constitution of the Portuguese Republic Article 2 (Democratic state based on the rule of law) The Portuguese Republic is a democratic state based on the rule of law, the sovereignty of the people, plural democratic expression and political organization, respect for and the guarantee of the effective implementation of the fundamental rights and freedoms, and the separation and interdependence of powers, with a view to achieving economic, social and cultural democracy and deepening participatory democracy.
Constituição da República Portuguesa, Artigo 3º: 1. A soberania, una e indivisível, reside no povo, que a exerce segundo as formas previstas na Constituição. 2. O Estado subordina-se à Constituição e funda-se na legalidade democrática. 3. A validade das leis e dos demais atos do Estado, das regiões autónomas, do poder local e de quaisquer outras entidades públicas depende da sua conformidade com a	Constitution of the Portuguese Republic Article 3 (Sovereignty and legality) 1. Sovereignty is single and indivisible and lies with the people, who exercise it in the forms provided for in the Constitution. 2. The state is subject to the Constitution and is based on democratic legality. 3. The validity of laws and other acts of the

Constituição.	state, the autonomous regions, local government and any other public entities is dependent on their conformity with the Constitution.
Constituição da República Portuguesa, Artigo 37º: 1. Todos têm o direito de exprimir e divulgar livremente o seu pensamento pela palavra, pela imagem ou por qualquer outro meio, bem como o direito de informar, de se informar e de ser informados, sem impedimentos nem discriminações. 2. O exercício destes direitos não pode ser impedido ou limitado por qualquer tipo ou forma de censura. 3. As infrações cometidas no exercício destes direitos ficam submetidas aos princípios gerais de direito criminal ou do ilícito de mera ordenação social, sendo a sua apreciação respetivamente da competência dos tribunais judiciais ou de entidade administrativa independente, nos termos da lei. 4. A todas as pessoas, singulares ou coletivas, é assegurado, em condições de igualdade e eficácia, o direito de resposta e de retificação, bem como o direito a indemnização pelos danos sofridos.	Constitution of the Portuguese Republic Article 37 (Freedom of expression and information) 1. Everyone has the right to freely express and divulge his thoughts in words, images or by any other means, as well as the right to inform others, inform himself and be informed without hindrance or discrimination. 2. Exercise of these rights may not be hindered or limited by any type or form of censorship. 3. Infractions committed in the exercise of these rights are subject to the general principles of the criminal law or the law governing administrative offences, and the competence to consider them shall pertain to the courts of law or an independent administrative entity respectively, as laid down by law. 4. Every natural and legal person shall be equally and effectively ensured the right of reply and to make corrections, as well as the right to compensation for damages suffered.

Constituição da República Portuguesa, Artigo 38:

1. É garantida a liberdade de imprensa.
2. A liberdade de imprensa implica:
 - a) A liberdade de expressão e criação dos jornalistas e colaboradores, bem como a intervenção dos primeiros na orientação editorial dos respetivos órgãos de comunicação social, salvo quando tiverem natureza doutrinária ou confessional;
 - b) O direito dos jornalistas, nos termos da lei, ao acesso às fontes de informação e à proteção da independência e do sigilo profissionais, bem como o direito de elegerem conselhos de redação;
 - c) O direito de fundação de jornais e de quaisquer outras publicações, independentemente de autorização administrativa, caução ou habilitação prévias.
3. A lei assegura, com carácter genérico, a divulgação da titularidade e dos meios de financiamento dos órgãos de comunicação social.
4. O Estado assegura a liberdade e a independência dos órgãos de comunicação social perante o poder político e o poder económico, impondo o princípio da especialidade das empresas titulares de órgãos de informação geral, tratando-as e apoiando-as de forma não discriminatória e impedindo a sua concentração, designadamente através de participações múltiplas ou cruzadas.
5. O Estado assegura a existência e o funcionamento de um serviço público de rádio

Constitution of the Portuguese Republic

Article 38

(Freedom of the press and the media)

1. Freedom of the press is guaranteed.
2. Freedom of the press implies:
 - a) Freedom of expression and creativity on the part of journalists and other staff, as well as journalists' freedom to take part in deciding the editorial policy of their media entity, save when the latter is doctrinal or religious in nature;
 - b) That journalists have the right, as laid down by law, of access to sources of information, and to the protection of professional independence and secrecy, as well as the right to elect editorial boards;
 - c) The right to found newspapers and any other publications, without the need for any prior administrative authorisation, bond or qualification.
3. In generic terms, the law shall ensure that the names of the owners of media entities and the means by which those entities are financed are publicised.
4. The state shall ensure the freedom and independence of media entities from political power and economic power by imposing the principle of specialisation on enterprises that own general information media entities, treating and supporting them in a non-discriminatory manner and preventing their concentration, particularly by means of multiple or

e de televisão. 6. A estrutura e o funcionamento dos meios de comunicação social do sector público devem salvaguardar a sua independência perante o Governo, a Administração e os demais poderes públicos, bem como assegurar a possibilidade de expressão e confronto das diversas correntes de opinião. 7. As estações emissoras de radiodifusão e de radiotelevisão só podem funcionar mediante licença, a conferir por concurso público, nos termos da lei.	interlocking interests. 5. The state shall ensure the existence and operation of a public radio and television service. 6. The structure and modus operandi of public sector media must safeguard their independence from the Government, the Administration and the other public authorities, and must ensure that all different currents of opinion are able to express themselves and confront one another. 7. Radio and television broadcasting stations may only operate with licences that are granted under competitive public selection processes, as laid down by law.
--	---

Constituição da República Portuguesa, Artigo 178º:

1. A Assembleia da República tem as comissões previstas no Regimento e pode constituir comissões eventuais de inquérito ou para qualquer outro fim determinado.
2. A composição das comissões corresponde à representatividade dos partidos na Assembleia da República.
3. As petições dirigidas à Assembleia são apreciadas pelas comissões ou por comissão especialmente constituída para o efeito, que poderá ouvir as demais comissões competentes em razão da matéria, em todos os casos podendo ser solicitado o depoimento de quaisquer cidadãos.
4. Sem prejuízo da sua constituição nos termos gerais, as comissões parlamentares de inquérito são obrigatoriamente constituídas sempre que tal seja requerido por um quinto dos Deputados em efetividade de funções, até ao limite de uma por Deputado e por sessão legislativa.
5. As comissões parlamentares de inquérito gozam de poderes de investigação próprios das autoridades judiciais.
6. As presidências das comissões são no conjunto repartidas pelos grupos parlamentares em proporção com o número dos seus Deputados.
7. Nas reuniões das comissões em que se discutam propostas legislativas regionais, podem participar representantes da Assembleia Legislativa da região autónoma proponente, nos

Constitution of the Portuguese Republic

Article 178 (Committees)

1. The Assembly of the Republic shall have the committees provided for in the Rules of Procedure, and may form ad hoc committees of inquiry or for any other given purpose.
2. Committees shall be composed in proportion to the number of seats each party holds in the Assembly of the Republic.
3. Petitions addressed to the Assembly shall be considered by the committees or by a committee formed especially for the purpose, which may consult the other committees with competence for the matter in question. In all cases any citizens may be asked to testify.
4. Without prejudice to their formation in accordance with the normal provisions, parliamentary committees of inquiry shall obligatorily be formed whenever a motion is made to that effect by one fifth of all the Members of the Assembly of the Republic in full exercise of their office, up to a limit of one per Member and per legislative session.
5. Parliamentary committees of inquiry have the investigative powers of the judicial authorities.
6. The chairmanships of the various committees shall be divided between the parliamentary groups in proportion to the number of Members of the Assembly of the Republic in each group.
7. Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the proposing autonomous region may participate in the committee meetings at which

termos do Regimento.	regional legislative proposals are discussed, as laid down in the Rules of Procedure.
-----------------------------	--

Código de Processo Penal, Artigo 135 – Segredo Profissional

1. Os ministros de religião ou confissão religiosa e os advogados, médicos, jornalistas, membros de instituições de crédito e as demais pessoas a quem a lei permitir ou impuser que guardem segredo podem escusar-se a depor sobre os factos por ele abrangidos.
2. Havendo dúvidas fundadas sobre a legitimidade da escusa, a autoridade judiciária perante a qual o incidente se tiver suscitado procede às averiguações necessárias. Se, após estas, concluir pela ilegitimidade da escusa, ordena, ou requer ao tribunal que ordene, a prestação do depoimento.
3. O tribunal superior àquele onde o incidente tiver sido suscitado, ou, no caso de o incidente ter sido suscitado perante o Supremo Tribunal de Justiça, o pleno das secções criminais, pode decidir da prestação de testemunho com quebra do segredo profissional sempre que esta se mostre justificada, segundo o princípio da prevalência do interesse preponderante, nomeadamente tendo em conta a imprescindibilidade do depoimento para a descoberta da verdade, a gravidade do crime e a necessidade de proteção de bens jurídicos. A intervenção é suscitada pelo juiz, oficiosamente ou a requerimento.
4. Nos casos previstos nos n.os 2 e 3, a decisão da autoridade judiciária ou do tribunal é tomada ouvido o organismo representativo da profissão relacionada com o segredo profissional em causa, nos termos e com os efeitos previstos na legislação que a esse organismo seja aplicável.
5. O disposto nos n.os 3 e 4 não se aplica ao segredo religioso.

Code of Criminal Procedure

Article 135

Professional secrecy

1. The religion or religious confession ministers and the attorneys, doctors, journalists, members of credit institutions and all other persons to whom the law allows or imposes secrecy may exempt themselves from testifying on facts covered by secrecy.
2. In the event of grounded doubts as to the legitimacy of the exemption, the judicial authority before which the exemption has been invoked makes the necessary investigations. If, after the investigation, it is found that the exemption is illegitimate, the authority shall order, or require the court to order, the witness to testify.
3. A higher jurisdiction than the court where the exemption has been invoked or - where the exemption has been argued before the Supreme Court of Justice - the plenary of criminal sections, may decide that the witness will testify regardless of professional secrecy whenever justified, according to the principle of prevailing interest considering, in particular, the need for evidence in order to clarify the truth, the gravity of the crime and the need to protect legal assets. Intervention is ordered by the judge, ex officio or upon request.
4. In cases foreseen by paragraphs 2 and 3 above, the judicial authority or court takes the decision after hearing the representative body of the profession bound by professional secrecy, under the terms and for the purposes

	of the law applying to that professional body. 5. The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 do not apply to religious secrecy.
--	---

Código de Processo Penal, Artigo 187º - Admissibilidade: 1. A interceção e a gravação de conversações ou comunicações telefónicas só podem ser autorizadas durante o inquérito, se houver razões para crer que a diligência é indispensável para a descoberta da verdade ou que a prova seria, de outra forma, impossível ou muito difícil de obter, por despacho fundamentado do juiz de instrução e mediante requerimento do Ministério Público, quanto a crimes: a) Puníveis com pena de prisão superior, no seu máximo, a 3 anos.	Code of Criminal Procedure Article 187 Admissibility 1 - Interception and tape recording of telephone conversations or communications may only be authorized during the inquiry where there are grounds for believing that this step is indispensable for the discovery of the truth or that the evidence would, by any other means, be impossible or very hard to collect. Such authorization shall be granted by means of a reasoned order issued by the Examining Judge and upon the request of the Public Prosecution Service, as regards the following criminal offences: a) Criminal offences to which a custodial sentence with a maximum limit over three years applies
Código de Processo Penal, Artigo 242º - Denúncia Obrigatória: 1. A denúncia é obrigatória, ainda que os agentes do crime não sejam conhecidos: a) Para as entidades policiais, quanto a todos os crimes de que tomarem conhecimento; b) Para os funcionários, na aceção do artigo 386.º do Código Penal, quanto a crimes de que tomarem conhecimento no exercício das suas funções e por causa delas. 2. Quando várias pessoas forem obrigadas à denúncia do mesmo crime, a sua apresentação por uma delas dispensa as restantes. 3. Quando se referir a crime cujo procedimento dependa de queixa ou de acusação particular, a	Code of Criminal Procedure Article 242 Mandatory Complaint 1. The complaint is mandatory, even if the crime agents are not known: a) for law enforcement agencies, regarding all the crimes of which they become aware; b) for employees within the meaning of Article 386 of the Penal Code, regarding the crimes of which they become aware in the exercise of

denúncia só dá lugar a instauração de inquérito se a queixa for apresentada no prazo legalmente previsto.	their duties and because of them. 2. Where several people are required to do the same criminal complaint, the submission by one exempts the remaining. 3. When referring to a crime whose procedure depends on complaint or private prosecution, the complaint only gives rise to establishment of inquiry if it is filed within the legally prescribed period.
Código de Processo Penal, Artigo 399º - Princípio Geral: É permitido recorrer dos acórdãos, das sentenças e dos despachos cuja irrecorribilidade não estiver prevista na lei.	Criminal Procedure Code Article 399 General Principle It is permitted to appeal judgements (from collective courts), the rulings (from singular courts) and orders which are not unappealable according to the law.

Código de Processo Penal, Artigo 400º - Decisões que Não Admitem Recurso: 1. Não é admissível recurso: a) De despachos de mero expediente; b) De decisões que ordenam actos dependentes da livre resolução do tribunal; c) De acórdãos proferidos, em recurso, pelas relações que não conheçam, a final, do objecto do processo; d) De acórdãos absolutórios proferidos, em recurso, pelas relações, exceto no caso de decisão condenatória em 1.ª instância em pena de prisão superior a 5 anos; e) De acórdãos proferidos, em recurso, pelas relações que apliquem pena não privativa de liberdade ou pena de prisão não superior a 5 anos; f) De acórdãos condenatórios proferidos, em recurso, pelas relações, que confirmem decisão de 1.ª instância e apliquem pena de prisão não superior a 8 anos; g) Nos demais casos previstos na lei. 2. Sem prejuízo do disposto nos artigos 427.º e 432.º, o recurso da parte da sentença relativa à indemnização civil só é admissível desde que o valor do pedido seja superior à alçada do tribunal recorrido e a decisão impugnada seja	Criminal Procedure Code Article 400 Decisions with no chance of appeal: 1. It is not admissible the appeal: a) Of mere expedient decisions; b) Of decisions ordering acts dependent on free resolution of the court; c) Of judgments given on appeal by the superior courts who do not know the matter of the process; d) Of acquittals judgments emitted on appeal, by superior courts, except in the event of conviction in 1st instance to sentence of imprisonment exceeding five years; e) Of judgments issued during appeal, by the superior courts that apply a non-custodial sentence or imprisonment not exceeding five years; f) Of condemnatory judgments delivered on appeal by the superior court, confirming a 1st instance decision and applying imprisonment not exceeding eight years; g) in other cases provided by law. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of Articles 427 and 432, the appeal of the part of the decision on the civil compensation is admissible only where the value of the order exceeds the jurisdiction of the appeal court and the
---	--

desfavorável para o recorrente em valor superior a metade desta alçada. 3. Mesmo que não seja admissível recurso quanto à matéria penal, pode ser interposto recurso da parte da sentença relativa à indemnização civil.	contested decision is unfavorable to the applicant in excess of half of this scope. 3. Even if an appeal regarding the criminal matters is not admissible, it may be brought against the part of the sentence on the civil compensation.
Código Deontológico do Jornalista, Artigo 6º: O jornalista deve usar como critério fundamental a identificação das fontes. O jornalista não deve revelar, mesmo em juízo, as suas fontes confidenciais de informação, nem desrespeitar os compromissos assumidos, exceto se o tentarem usar para canalizar informações falsas. As opiniões devem ser	Journalists' Code of Ethics Article 6 Identification of the sources is an essential criteria for the journalist. The journalist must not reveal, not even in the court, his/her confidential sources except when he/she has been abused by being given false information. Opinions shall always be attributed – separated

sempre atribuídas.	as such.
Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 1º - Definição de Jornalista: 1 - São considerados jornalistas aqueles que, como ocupação principal, permanente e remunerada, exercem com capacidade editorial funções de pesquisa, recolha, selecção e tratamento de factos, notícias ou opiniões, através de texto, imagem ou som, destinados a divulgação, com fins informativos, pela imprensa, por agência noticiosa, pela rádio, pela televisão ou por qualquer outro meio electrónico de difusão. 2 - Não constitui actividade jornalística o exercício de funções referidas no número anterior quando desempenhadas ao serviço de publicações que visem predominantemente promover actividades, produtos, serviços ou entidades de natureza comercial ou industrial. 3 - São ainda considerados jornalistas os cidadãos que, independentemente do exercício efectivo da profissão, tenham desempenhado a actividade jornalística em regime de ocupação principal, permanente e remunerada durante 10 anos seguidos ou 15 interpolados, desde que solicitem e mantenham actualizado o respectivo título profissional.	Journalist's Statute Article 1 Definition of journalists 1 - A journalist is considered to be anyone who, as their main, permanent and gainful occupation, exercises editorial functions of research, collection, selection and treatment of facts, news or opinions via texts, images or sounds, intended for divulgation, for informational purposes, via the press, a news agency, radio, television or via any other electronic means of dissemination. 2 - The pursuit of the functions referred to in the previous point, when performed for publications that predominantly aim to promote activities, products, services or entities of a commercial or industrial nature, does not constitute journalistic activity. 3 – Citizens who, independently of whether or not they effectively pursue the profession, have performed journalistic activity as their main, permanent and gainful occupation for a continuous period of 10 years, or for 15 years on an interrupted basis, are also considered to be journalists, provided that they request and keep updated their respective professional license.

Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 2º - Capacidade: Podem ser jornalistas os cidadãos maiores de 18 anos no pleno gozo dos seus direitos civis.	Journalist's Statute Article 2 Capacity Citizens over 18 years old or in full enjoyment of their civil rights may be journalists.
--	--

Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 3º - Incompatibilidades: 1 - O exercício da profissão de jornalista é incompatível com o desempenho de: a) Funções de angariação, concepção ou apresentação, através de texto, voz ou imagem, de mensagens publicitárias; b) Funções de marketing, relações públicas, assessoria de imprensa e consultoria em comunicação ou imagem, bem como de planificação, orientação e execução de estratégias comerciais; c) Funções em serviços de informação e segurança ou em qualquer organismo ou corporação policial; d) Serviço militar; e) Funções enquanto titulares de órgãos de soberania ou de outros cargos políticos, tal como identificados nas alíneas a), b), c), e) e g) do n.º 2 do artigo 1.º da Lei n.º 64/93, de 26 de Agosto, alterada pelas Leis n.os 39-B/94, de 27 de Dezembro, 28/95, de 18 de Agosto, 42/96, de 31 de Agosto, e 12/98, de 24 de Fevereiro, e enquanto deputados nas Assembleias Legislativas das Regiões Autónomas, bem como funções de assessoria, política ou técnica, a tais cargos associadas; f) Funções executivas, em regime de permanência, a tempo inteiro ou a meio tempo, em órgão autárquico. 2 - É igualmente considerada actividade publicitária incompatível com o exercício do jornalismo a participação em iniciativas que	Journalist's Statute Article 3 Incompatibilities 1 - Pursuit of the profession of journalist is incompatible with performance of: a) Functions of procurement, conception or presentation of advertising messages, via texts, voice or image; b) Functions of marketing, public relations, press advisory and communication or image consulting services, as well as planning, orientation and execution of commercial strategies; c) Functions in information and security services or in any police agency or corporation; d) Military service; e) Functions as holders of positions in sovereign bodies or other political positions, as identified in paragraphs a), b), c), e) and g) of no. 2 of article 1 of Law no. 64/93, of 26 August, as amended by Laws nos. 39-B/94, of 27 December, 28/95, of 18 August, 42/96, of 31 August, and 12/98, of 24 February, and as elected representatives in the Legislative Assemblies of the Autonomous Regions, as well as functions of political or technical advisory services associated to such positions; f) Executive functions, on a permanent basis, either full time or part time, in a local government authority.
--	--

visem divulgar produtos, serviços ou entidades através da notoriedade pessoal ou institucional do jornalista, quando aquelas não sejam determinadas por critérios exclusivamente editoriais. 3 - Não é incompatível com o exercício da profissão de jornalista o desempenho voluntário de acções não remuneradas de: a) Promoção de actividades de interesse público ou de solidariedade social; b) Promoção da actividade informativa do órgão de comunicação social para que trabalhe ou colabore. 4 - O jornalista abrangido por qualquer das incompatibilidades previstas nos n.os 1 e 2 fica impedido de exercer a respectiva actividade, devendo, antes de iniciar a actividade em causa, depositar junto da Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista o seu título de habilitação, o qual será devolvido, a requerimento do interessado, quando cessar a situação que determinou a incompatibilidade. 5 - No caso de apresentação das mensagens referidas na alínea a) do n.º 1 do presente artigo ou de participação nas iniciativas enunciadas no n.º 2, a incompatibilidade vigora por um período mínimo de três meses sobre a data da última divulgação e só se considera cessada com a exibição de prova de que está extinta a relação contratual de cedência de imagem, voz ou nome do jornalista à entidade promotora ou beneficiária da publicitação. 6 - Findo o período das incompatibilidades referidas nas alíneas a) e b) do n.º 1, o jornalista fica impedido, por um período de seis meses, de exercer a sua actividade em áreas editoriais relacionadas com a função que desempenhou,	2 - Participation in initiatives that aim to disseminate products, services or entities via the personal or institutional reputation of the journalist is also considered to constitute advertising activity, that is incompatible with the pursuit of journalism, when such participation is not determined by purely editorial criteria. 3 - Performance of the following unpaid voluntary actions is not incompatible with the pursuit of the profession of a journalist: a) Promotion of activities of public interest or charity work; b) Promotion of the informational activity of the media outlet for which the journalist works or collaborates. 4 - A journalist covered by any of the incompatibilities specified in nos. 1 and 2 is prevented from exercising the respective activity, and should, prior to commencing the activity in question, deposit his professional license with the Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista (Journalists' Professional License Committee), which will be returned at the request of the interested party, when the situation underlying the incompatibility ceases. 5 - In the case of presentation of the messages referred to in paragraph a) of no. 1 of this article or participation in the initiatives listed in no. 2, the incompatibility will remain in force for a minimum period of three months from the date of the last disclosure and will only be considered to have ceased upon exhibition of proof of the termination of the contractual relationship involving assignment of the journalist's image, voice or name to the promoter or beneficiary of the advertising
---	---

como tais reconhecidas pelo conselho de redacção do órgão de comunicação social para que trabalhe ou colabore.

initiative.

6 - At the end of the period of the incompatibilities referred to in paragraphs a) and b) of no. 1, the journalist shall be prevented, for a 6-month period, to exercise his activity in editorial areas related to the function that he performed, as recognized by the editorial board of the media outlet for which he works or collaborates.

6 - At the end of the period of the incompatibilities referred to in paragraphs a) and b) of no. 1, the journalist shall be prevented, for a 6-month period, to exercise his activity in editorial areas related to the function that he performed, as recognized by the editorial board of the media outlet for which he works or collaborates.

Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 4º - Título Profissional: 1 - É condição do exercício da profissão de jornalista a habilitação com o respectivo título, o qual é emitido e renovado pela Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista, nos termos da lei. 2 - Nenhuma empresa com actividade no domínio da comunicação social pode admitir ou manter ao seu serviço, como jornalista profissional, indivíduo que não se mostre habilitado, nos termos do número anterior, salvo se tiver requerido o título de habilitação e se encontrar a aguardar decisão.	Journalist's Statute Article 4 Professional license 1. In order to pursue the profession of journalist, it is necessary to hold the respective professional license, which shall be issued and renewed by the Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista (Journalists' Professional License Committee), under the terms of the law. 2. No company operating in the field of the media may recruit or maintain under its service, as a professional journalist, an individual who cannot display the respective qualification, under the terms of the previous point, unless that person has requested a professional license and is awaiting the respective decision.
Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 5º - Acesso à Profissão: 1. A profissão de jornalista inicia-se com um estágio obrigatório, a concluir com aproveitamento, com a duração de 24 meses, sendo reduzido a 18 meses em caso de habilitação com curso superior, ou a 12 meses em caso de licenciatura na área da comunicação social ou de habilitação com curso equivalente, reconhecido pela Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista. 2. O regime do estágio, incluindo o acompanhamento do estagiário e a respetiva avaliação, será regulado por portaria conjunta dos membros do Governo responsáveis pelas	Journalist's Statute Article 5 Access to the profession 1. The profession of a journalist begins with an obligatory internship, that must be successfully completed, of 12-month duration, in the case of someone with a BA Honours degree (licenciatura) in the area of the media or a qualification from an equivalent course, or of 18-month duration in other cases. 2. The internship regime, including the respective monitoring and evaluation of the

áreas do emprego e da comunicação social.	intern, shall be governed by a joint administrative rule to be issued by the members of the Government responsible for the areas of employment and the media.
Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 6º - Direitos: Constituem direitos fundamentais dos jornalistas: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) A liberdade de expressão e de criação; b) A liberdade de acesso às fontes de informação; c) A garantia de sigilo profissional; d) A garantia de independência; e) A participação na orientação do respetivo órgão de informação. 	Journalist's Statute Article 6 Rights The following constitute fundamental rights of journalists: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) Freedom of expression and creation; b) Freedom of access to information sources; c) Guarantee of professional secrecy; d) Guarantee of independence; e) Participation in coordination of the respective information organisation.

Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 11º - Sigilo Profissional:

1 - Sem prejuízo do disposto na lei processual penal, os jornalistas não são obrigados a revelar as suas fontes de informação, não sendo o seu silêncio passível de qualquer sanção, directa ou indirecta.

2 - As autoridades judiciárias perante as quais os jornalistas sejam chamados a depor devem informá-los previamente, sob pena de nulidade, sobre o conteúdo e a extensão do direito à não revelação das fontes de informação.

3 - No caso de ser ordenada a revelação das fontes nos termos da lei processual penal, o tribunal deve especificar o âmbito dos factos sobre os quais o jornalista está obrigado a prestar depoimento.

4 - Quando houver lugar à revelação das fontes de informação nos termos da lei processual penal, o juiz pode decidir, por despacho, oficiosamente ou a requerimento do jornalista, restringir a livre assistência do público ou que a prestação de depoimento decorra com exclusão de publicidade, ficando os intervenientes no acto obrigados ao dever de segredo sobre os factos relatados.

5 - Os directores de informação dos órgãos de comunicação social e os administradores ou gerentes das respectivas entidades proprietárias, bem como qualquer pessoa que nelas exerça funções, não podem, salvo mediante autorização escrita dos jornalistas envolvidos, divulgar as respectivas fontes de informação, incluindo os arquivos jornalísticos de texto, som ou imagem das empresas ou quaisquer

Journalist's Statute

Article 11

Professional secrecy

1 - Without prejudice to the provisions established in penal procedure law, journalists are not required to reveal their information sources, and their silence thereof is not liable to any direct or indirect sanction.

2 - The judicial authorities before which journalists are called to testify shall inform them previously, on penalty of nullity, regarding the content and extent of their right not to reveal their information sources.

3 - In the event that a journalist is ordered to reveal his sources under the terms of criminal procedure law, the court must specify the scope of the facts upon which the journalist is obliged to give evidence.

4 - When there are grounds for information sources to be revealed, under the terms of criminal procedure law, the judge may decide, by means of a dispatch, at his own initiative or at the journalist's request, to restrict the right of attendance to the general public or ensure that the testimony is provided without any public disclosure, wherein the intervening parties in the act are obliged to uphold a duty of confidentiality concerning the reported facts.

5 - Unless there is written authorisation from the journalists involved, the news editors of media outlets and the administrators or managers of the respective entities that own these outlets, as well as any person who exercises functions therein, cannot disclose the

documentos susceptíveis de as revelar. 6 - A busca em órgãos de comunicação social só pode ser ordenada ou autorizada pelo juiz, o qual preside pessoalmente à diligência, avisando previamente o presidente da organização sindical dos jornalistas com maior representatividade para que o mesmo, ou um seu delegado, possa estar presente, sob reserva de confidencialidade. 7 - O material utilizado pelos jornalistas no exercício da sua profissão só pode ser apreendido no decurso das buscas em órgãos de comunicação social previstas no número anterior ou efectuadas nas mesmas condições noutros lugares mediante mandado de juiz, nos casos em que seja legalmente admissível a quebra do sigilo profissional. 8 - O material obtido em qualquer das acções previstas nos números anteriores que permita a identificação de uma fonte de informação é selado e remetido ao tribunal competente para ordenar a quebra do sigilo, que apenas pode autorizar a sua utilização como prova quando a quebra tenha efectivamente sido ordenada.	respective information sources, including disclosure of journalistic archives constituted by text, sound or image of the companies or any other documents that may reveal these sources. 6 - A search in the premises of media outlets may only be ordered or authorised by the judge, who personally presides over the intervention, and prior notice must be provided to the chairman of the most highly representative journalists' trade union in order to ensure that he, or his delegate, may be present during the search, subject to confidentiality. 7 - The material used by the journalists in pursuit of their profession may only be seized during the searches in the premises of media outlets foreseen in the previous point or carried out elsewhere under the same conditions, by means of a search warrant issued by a judge, in cases in which it is legally permissible to breach professional secrecy. 8 - The material obtained in any of the actions specified in the previous points that makes it possible to identify a source of information shall be sealed and submitted to the court with jurisdiction in this manner, in order to order that its confidentiality shall be breached, and the court may only authorize its use as evidence when it has effectively ordered the said breach of confidentiality.
--	--

Estatuto do Jornalista, Artigo 14º - Deveres: 1 - Constitui dever fundamental dos jornalistas exercer a respectiva actividade com respeito pela ética profissional, competindo-lhes, designadamente: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) Informar com rigor e isenção, rejeitando o sensacionalismo e demarcando claramente os factos da opinião;b) Repudiar a censura ou outras formas ilegítimas de limitação da liberdade de expressão e do direito de informar, bem como divulgar as condutas atentatórias do exercício destes direitos;c) Recusar funções ou tarefas susceptíveis de comprometer a sua independência e integridade profissional;d) Respeitar a orientação e os objectivos definidos no estatuto editorial do órgão de comunicação social para que trabalhem;e) Procurar a diversificação das suas fontes de informação e ouvir as partes com interesses atendíveis nos casos de que se ocupem;f) Identificar, como regra, as suas fontes de informação, e atribuir as opiniões recolhidas aos respectivos autores. 2 - São ainda deveres dos jornalistas: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) Proteger a confidencialidade das fontes de informação na medida do exigível em cada situação, tendo em conta o disposto no artigo 11.º, excepto se os tentarem usar para obter benefícios ilegítimos ou para veicular	Journalist's Statute Article 14 Duties 1 - Journalists have the fundamental duty to exercise their respective activity in respect for professional ethics, and are specifically responsible for the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) Inform readers with rigour and impartiality, abstaining from sensationalism and clearly demarcating facts from opinions;b) Repudiate censorship or other forms of illegitimate constraint on the freedom of expression and the right to inform and disclose any form of conduct that will undermine the pursuit of these rightsc) Refuse functions or tasks that may undermine their independence and professional integrity;d) Respect the guidelines and objectives defined in the editorial statute of the media outlet for which they work;e) Seek to diversify their information sources and listen to all parties with justified interests in the matters that they deal with;f) Identify, as a general rule, their information sources, and attribute the retrieved opinions to the respective authors. 2 – Journalists also have the following duties:
---	---

informações falsas; b) Proceder à rectificação das incorrecções ou imprecisões que lhes sejam imputáveis; c) Abster-se de formular acusações sem provas e respeitar a presunção de inocência; d) Abster-se de recolher declarações ou imagens que atinjam a dignidade das pessoas através da exploração da sua vulnerabilidade psicológica, emocional ou física; e) Não tratar discriminatoriamente as pessoas, designadamente em razão da ascendência, sexo, raça, língua, território de origem, religião, convicções políticas ou ideológicas, instrução, situação económica, condição social ou orientação sexual; f) Não recolher imagens e sons com o recurso a meios não autorizados a não ser que se verifique um estado de necessidade para a segurança das pessoas envolvidas e o interesse público o justifique; g) Não identificar, directa ou indirectamente, as vítimas de crimes contra a liberdade e autodeterminação sexual, contra a honra ou contra a reserva da vida privada até à audiência de julgamento, e para além dela, se o ofendido for menor de 16 anos, bem como os menores que tiverem sido objecto de medidas tutelares sancionatórias; h) Preservar, salvo razões de incontestável interesse público, a reserva da intimidade, bem como respeitar a privacidade de acordo com a natureza do caso e a condição das pessoas; i) Identificar-se, salvo razões de manifesto interesse público, como jornalista e não encenar	a) To protect the confidentiality of the information sources to the extent that is required in each situation, taking into account the provisions established in article 11, unless these sources attempt to use such protection in order to obtain illegitimate benefits or to convey false information; b) Rectify any errors or imprecisions that may be imputed to them; c) Refrain from formulating accusations without evidence and respect the presumption of innocence; d) Refrain from collecting declarations or images that have an impact on the dignity of persons in question, through exploitation of their psychological, emotional or physical vulnerability; e) Refrain from treating people in a discriminatory manner, specifically on account of their ancestry, sex, race, language, place of origin, religion, political or ideological convictions, education, economic situation, social condition or sexual orientation; f) Refrain from collecting images and sounds through the use of unauthorised means unless this is strictly necessary in order to guarantee the safety of the persons involved and the public interest so requires; g) Refrain from directly or indirectly identifying victims of crimes against sexual self-
---	--

ou falsificar situações com o intuito de abusar da boa fé do público; j) Não utilizar ou apresentar como sua qualquer criação ou prestação alheia; l) Abster-se de participar no tratamento ou apresentação de materiais lúdicos, designadamente concursos ou passatempos, e de televotos. 3 - Sem prejuízo da responsabilidade criminal ou civil que ao caso couber nos termos gerais, a violação da componente deontológica dos deveres referidos no número anterior apenas pode dar lugar ao regime de responsabilidade disciplinar previsto na presente lei.	determination and freedom, against personal honour or against the reservation of private life until a court hearing, and beyond, if the victim is under 16 years old, as well as minors who have been subject to sanctionary guardianship measures; h) Preserve, except on grounds of incontestable public interest, a reservation of intimacy, and respect for privacy, in accordance with the nature of the case and the condition of the persons in question; i) Identify themselves as a journalist, unless there are grounds of manifest public interest, and not stage or falsify situations in order to abuse the public's good faith; j) Not use or present any other person's work or creation as his own; l) Refrain from participating in the treatment or presentation of entertainment materials, specifically competitions or quizzes, and televoting programmes. 3 - Without prejudice to any criminal or civil
--	--

liability arising in the case in question, under general terms of the law, breach of the ethical component of the duties specified in the previous point may only give rise to the disciplinary liability regime established in this law.

Estatuto do Jornalista	Journalist's Statute
Artigo 20.º Contra-ordenações 1 - Constitui contra-ordenação, punível com coima: a) De (euro) 200 a (euro) 5000, a infracção ao disposto no artigo 3.º; b) De (euro) 1000 a (euro) 7500: i) A infracção ao disposto no n.º 1 do artigo 4.º, no n.º 2 do artigo 15.º e no n.º 1 do artigo 17.º; ii) A inobservância do disposto no n.º 3 do artigo 5.º; c) De (euro) 2500 a (euro) 15 000: i) A infracção ao disposto no n.º 2 do artigo 4.º, no n.º 2 do artigo 7.º-A, no n.º 2 do artigo 7.º-B e no n.º 3 do artigo 15.º; ii) A violação dos limites impostos pelo n.º 4 do artigo 7.º-A e pelos n.os 3 e 4 do artigo 7.º-B; iii) A violação do disposto nos n.os 1 a 3 do artigo 12.º 2 - A infracção ao disposto no artigo 3.º pode ser objecto da sanção acessória de interdição do exercício da profissão por um período máximo de 12 meses, tendo em conta a sua gravidade e a culpa do agente. 3 - A negligência é punível, sendo reduzidos a	Article 20 Administrative offences 1 – The following constitute an administrative offence, punishable with a fine: a) From € 200 to € 5,000, breach of the provisions established in article 3; b) From € 1,000 to € 7,500: i) Breach of the provisions established in no. 1 of article 4, in no. 2 of article 15 and in no. 1 of article 17; ii) Failure to observe the provisions established in no. 3 of article 5; c) From € 2,500 to € 15,000: i) Breach of the provisions established in no. 2 of article 4, in no. 2 of article 7-A, in no. 2 of article 7-B and in no. 3 of article 15; ii) Breach of the limits stipulated by no. 4 of article 7-A and by nos. 3 and 4 of article 7-B; iii) Breach of the provisions established in nos. 1 a 3 of article 12 2 - Breach of the provisions established in article 3 may be subject to an additional sanction of prohibition on pursuit of the profession for a maximum period of 12 months, in light of the respective gravity and

metade os limites mínimos e máximos previstos no n.º 1. 4 - É punível a tentativa de comissão das infracções ao disposto nos n.os 1 e 2 do artigo 12.º 5 - A instrução dos processos de contra-ordenação e a aplicação de coimas por infracção aos artigos 3.º, 4.º, 5.º, 7.º-A, 7.º-B, 15.º e 17.º é da competência da Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista. 6 - A instrução dos processos das contra-ordenações e a aplicação das coimas por infracção aos artigos 8.º e 12.º é da competência da Entidade Reguladora para a Comunicação Social. 7 - O produto das coimas por infracção aos artigos 3.º, 4.º, 5.º, 7.º-A, 7.º-B, 15.º e 17.º reverte em 60 % para o Estado e em 40 % para a Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista. 8 - O produto das restantes coimas reverte integralmente para o Estado.	the degree of culpability of the agent. 3 - Negligence is punishable with the minimum and maximum limits of the fines specified in no. 1 reduced by 50%. 4 – An attempt to carry out infringements to the provisions established in nos. 1 and 2 of article 12 is also punishable. 5 – The Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista (Journalists’ Professional License Committee) is responsible for drawing up the proceedings for administrative offence and application of fines, due to breach of articles 3, 4, 5, 7-A, 7-B, 15 and 17. 6 – The Entidade Reguladora para a Comunicação Social (Regulatory Authority for the Media) is responsible for drawing up the proceedings for administrative offence and application of fines, due to breach of articles 8 and 12. 7 – Revenues from fines due to breach of articles 3, 4, 5, 7-A, 7-B, 15 and 17 shall revert 60 % to the State and 40 % to the Comissão da Carteira Profissional de Jornalista (Journalists’ Professional License Committee). 8 – Revenues from other fines will revert in full to the State.
---	---

Código Penal, Artigo 195º - Violação de Segredo: Quem, sem consentimento, revelar segredo alheio de que tenha tomado conhecimento em razão do seu estado, ofício, emprego, profissão ou arte é punido com pena de prisão até um ano ou com pena de multa até 240 dias.	Penal Code Article 195 Violation of Secrecy: Who, without consent, reveals another's secret that they became aware of because of their status, occupation, employment, profession or art is punished with imprisonment up to one year or a fine of up to 240 days.
Lei de Imprensa, Artigo 22º - Direitos dos Jornalistas: Constituem direitos fundamentais dos jornalistas, com o conteúdo e a extensão definidos na Constituição e no Estatuto do Jornalista: a) A liberdade de expressão e de criação; b) A liberdade de acesso às fontes de informação, incluindo o direito de acesso a locais públicos e respectiva protecção; c) O direito ao sigilo profissional; d) A garantia de independência e da cláusula de consciência; e) O direito de participação na orientação do respectivo órgão de informação.	Press Law Article 22 Journalists' Rights The following constitute fundamental rights of journalists, with the content and the extent defined in the Portuguese Constitution and in the Journalist's Statute: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a) Freedom of expression and creation; b) Freedom of access to information sources, including right of access to public places and respective protection; c) The right to professional secrecy; d) The guarantee of independence and the conscience clause; e) The right of participation in the coordination of the respective organ of information.

Lei do Cibercrime, Artigo 15º - Pesquisa de Dados Informáticos:

- 1 - Quando no decurso do processo se tornar necessário à produção de prova, tendo em vista a descoberta da verdade, obter dados informáticos específicos e determinados, armazenados num determinado sistema informático, a autoridade judiciária competente autoriza ou ordena por despacho que se proceda a uma pesquisa nesse sistema informático, devendo, sempre que possível, presidir à diligência.
- 2 - O despacho previsto no número anterior tem um prazo de validade máximo de 30 dias, sob pena de nulidade.
- 3 - O órgão de polícia criminal pode proceder à pesquisa, sem prévia autorização da autoridade judiciária, quando:
- a) A mesma for voluntariamente consentida por quem tiver a disponibilidade ou controlo desses dados, desde que o consentimento prestado fique, por qualquer forma, documentado;
 - b) Nos casos de terrorismo, criminalidade violenta ou altamente organizada, quando haja fundados indícios da prática iminente de crime que ponha em grave risco a vida ou a integridade de qualquer pessoa.
- 4 - Quando o órgão de polícia criminal proceder à pesquisa nos termos do número anterior:
- a) No caso previsto na alínea b), a realização da diligência é, sob pena de nulidade, imediatamente comunicada à autoridade judiciária competente e por esta apreciada em ordem à sua validação;
 - b) Em qualquer caso, é elaborado e remetido à autoridade judiciária competente o relatório previsto no artigo 253.º do Código de Processo Penal.
- 5 - Quando, no decurso de pesquisa, surgirem razões para crer que os dados procurados se encontram noutra sistema informático, ou numa parte diferente do sistema pesquisado,

Cybercrime Law

Article 15

Search of computer data

- 1 - Where, in the course of proceedings, the collection of evidence, necessary to uncover the truth, requires that specified computer data, stored in a specific computer system, are obtained, the competent judicial authority shall authorize or order the search to that computer system, overseeing such investigations whenever possible.
- 2 - The order provided for in the preceding paragraph shall be valid for a maximum period of 30 days, on pain of being deemed null and void.
- 3 - Criminal police bodies shall undertake the search, without a prior authorization from the judicial authority:
- a) Where whoever holds or controls data under consideration voluntarily consents to the search, insofar as the consent is documented in any way;
 - b) In cases of terrorism, violent or highly-organized crimes, or where there is evidence to substantiate the imminent commission of a criminal offence threatening the life or integrity of any person.
- 4 - Where criminal police bodies undertake the search pursuant to the preceding paragraph:
- a) In the situation provided for in point b), the investigation shall be promptly communicated mas que tais dados são legitimamente acessíveis a partir do sistema inicial, a pesquisa pode ser estendida mediante autorização ou ordem da autoridade competente, nos termos dos n.os 1 e 2.

6 - À pesquisa a que se refere este artigo são aplicáveis, com as necessárias adaptações, as regras de execução das buscas previstas no Código de Processo Penal e no Estatuto do Jornalista.

to the competent judicial authority, and assessed by the latter as far as the validation of the measure is concerned, on pain of being deemed null and void;

b) In any other situation, the report provided for in article 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code shall be drawn up and submitted to the competent judicial authority.

5 - Where, in the course of the search, there are grounds to believe that the data sought is stored in another computer system or part of it, and such data is lawfully accessible from the initial system, the search may be extended to the other system, by means of an authorization or order from the competent authority, pursuant to paragraphs 1 and 2.

6 – To the search referred to herein shall apply, duly adapted, the rules on execution of searches provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code and in the Journalists Statute.

Lei do Cibercrime, Artigo 16º - Apreensão de Dados Informáticos:

1 - Quando, no decurso de uma pesquisa informática ou de outro acesso legítimo a um sistema informático, forem encontrados dados ou documentos informáticos necessários à produção de prova, tendo em vista a descoberta da verdade, a autoridade judiciária competente autoriza ou ordena por despacho a apreensão dos mesmos.

2 - O órgão de polícia criminal pode efectuar apreensões, sem prévia autorização da autoridade judiciária, no decurso de pesquisa informática legitimamente ordenada e executada nos termos do artigo anterior, bem como quando haja urgência ou perigo na demora.

3 - Caso sejam apreendidos dados ou documentos informáticos cujo conteúdo seja susceptível de revelar dados pessoais ou íntimos, que possam pôr em causa a privacidade do respectivo titular ou de terceiro, sob pena de nulidade esses dados ou documentos são apresentados ao juiz, que ponderará a sua junção aos autos tendo em conta os interesses do caso concreto.

4 - As apreensões efectuadas por órgão de polícia criminal são sempre sujeitas a validação pela autoridade judiciária, no prazo máximo de 72 horas.

5 - As apreensões relativas a sistemas informáticos utilizados para o exercício da advocacia e das actividades médica e bancária estão sujeitas, com as necessárias adaptações, às regras e formalidades previstas no Código de Processo Penal e as relativas a sistemas informáticos utilizados para o exercício da profissão de jornalista estão sujeitas, com as necessárias adaptações, às regras e formalidades previstas no Estatuto do Jornalista.

6 - O regime de segredo profissional ou de funcionário e de segredo de Estado previsto no artigo 182.º do Código de Processo Penal é

Cybercrime Law

Article 16

Seizure of computer data

1 - Where, in the course of a computer system search, or of another legitimate means of access to a computer system, computer data or documents necessary to the collection of evidence, in order to uncover the truth, are found, the competent judicial authority shall authorize or order the seizure thereof.

2 - Criminal police bodies are entitled to perform seizures, without any prior authorization from the judicial authority, in the course a computer system search lawfully ordered and executed pursuant to the preceding article, or where there is urgency or danger in delay.

3 - In case of seizure of computer data or documents the contents of which may disclose personal or intimate data, thus hindering the privacy of the respective holder or of a third party, on pain of being deemed null and void such data or documents shall be submitted to the judge, who shall weight their attachment to the file, taking into account the interests of the case.

4 - Seizures carried out by criminal police bodies shall always be validated by the judicial authority, within at the most 72 hours.

5 - Seizures related to computer systems used for legal, medical and bank practises shall comply with the rules and formalities provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code, duly adapted, and those related to computer systems

aplicável com as necessárias adaptações. 7 - A apreensão de dados informáticos, consoante seja mais adequado e proporcional, tendo em conta os interesses do caso concreto, pode, nomeadamente, revestir as formas seguintes: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) Apreensão do suporte onde está instalado o sistema ou apreensão do suporte onde estão armazenados os dados informáticos, bem como dos dispositivos necessários à respectiva leitura;b) Realização de uma cópia dos dados, em suporte autónomo, que será junto ao processo;c) Preservação, por meios tecnológicos, da integridade dos dados, sem realização de cópia nem remoção dos mesmos; oud) Eliminação não reversível ou bloqueio do acesso aos dados. 8 - No caso da apreensão efectuada nos termos da alínea b) do número anterior, a cópia é efectuada em duplicado, sendo uma das cópias selada e confiada ao secretário judicial dos serviços onde o processo correr os seus termos e, se tal for tecnicamente possível, os dados apreendidos são certificados por meio de assinatura digital.	used by journalists shall comply with the rules and formalities provided for in the Journalists Statute, duly adapted. 6 - The regime governing professional, staff and State secret information, provided for in article 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code, shall apply, duly adapted. 7 - Seizure of computer data, depending on what is deemed to be most appropriate or proportional, taking into account the interests of the case, may take the following forms: <ul style="list-style-type: none">a) Seizing the computer system support equipment or the computer-data storage medium, as well as devices required to read data;b) Making a copy of those computer data, in an autonomous means of support, which shall be attached to the file;c) Maintaining by technological means the integrity of data, without copying or removing them; ord) Removing the computer data or blocking access thereto. 8 - In the situation of seizure provided for in point b) of the preceding paragraph, copies shall be made in duplicate, one of them being sealed and entrusted to the court clerk of services where the case has been brought and, where technically possible, seized data shall be certified by means of a digital signature.
---	---

Lei 19/2008 de 21 de Abril, Artigo 4º - Garantias dos Denunciantes:

- 1 - Os trabalhadores da Administração Pública e de empresas do sector empresarial do Estado, assim como os trabalhadores do sector privado, que denunciem o cometimento de infrações de que tiverem conhecimento no exercício das suas funções ou por causa delas não podem, sob qualquer forma, incluindo a transferência não voluntária ou o despedimento, ser prejudicados.
- 2 - Presume-se abusiva, até prova em contrário, a aplicação de sanção disciplinar aos trabalhadores referidos no número anterior, quando tenha lugar até um ano após a respectiva denúncia.
- 3 - Os trabalhadores referidos nos números anteriores têm direito a:
 - a) Anonimato, excepto para os investigadores, até à dedução de acusação;
 - b) Transferência a seu pedido, sem faculdade de recusa, após dedução de acusação.
 - c) Beneficiar, com as devidas adaptações, das medidas previstas na Lei n.º 93/99, de 14 de julho, que regula a aplicação de medidas para a proteção de testemunhas em processo penal, alterada pelas Leis n.os 29/2008, de 4 de julho, e 42/2010, de 3 de setembro.

Law 19/2008 of 21 April,

Article 4

Safeguards for Whistle-blowers:

- 1 - The workers of the Public Administration and of State business companies, as well as private sector workers, who report offenses of which they become aware in the exercise of their duties or because of them can not, in any form, including non-voluntary transfer or dismissal, be harmed.
- 2 - It is presumed abusive, until proven otherwise, the application of disciplinary sanctions to workers referred to in the preceding paragraph, when taking place within one year after the complaint.
- 3 - The workers referred to in the preceding paragraphs are entitled to:
 - a) Anonymity, except to the researchers, until an indictment;
 - b) Transfer to their request without the option of being refused, after an indictment.
 - c) To benefit, mutatis mutandis, of the measures provided for in Law No. 93/99 of 14 July, which regulates the implementation of measures for the protection of witnesses in criminal proceedings, as amended by Laws Nos 29/2008 of 4 July, and 42/2010 of 3 September.

ELSA ROMANIA

Contributors

National Coordinator

Luiza Zus

National Academic Coordinator

Diana Ciobanu

National Researchers

Loredana Barbu

Ioana Bucă

Cristina Ciomoș

Maria Cojocaru

Teodora Dragomir

Andrei Dumbravă

Cristina Suciu

National Linguistic Editors

Alexandra Harabagiu

National Academic Supervisor

Diana Botău

Dragoș Chilea

Maria Crăciunean

Ion Galea

Carmen Moldovan

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

1.1. Introduction. The Controversial Issue of the Protection of Journalistic Sources

'If newspapers were compelled to disclose their sources, they would soon be bereft of information which they ought to have. Their sources would dry up. Wrongdoing would not be disclosed. Charlatans could not be exposed. Unfairness would go remedied. Misdeeds in the corridors of power would never be known.'

The above stated argument of Lord Denning in the British Steen Corporation v. Granada Television Ltd is found as a method of bringing to your attention the controversial issue of the protection of journalistic sources. This case dates back to the 1980s, so it can be easily found that it is not recent issue and that it subsists in countries worldwide.

Speaking of countries, Romania is certainly one of the European states that are embracing this subject. And, not ignoring the historical side, it can be outlined, for a better understanding of what will follow, that journalism, as a powerful source of information, developed gracefully with a strong West-European influence. Its evolution crashed when, after the Second World War, communism took over the political power. As it is well known, one of the main purposes of this movement was to eliminate all forms of freedom of speech and expression, media was limited to share only its ideology and any opposite position was rapidly and entirely eradicated. At the present moment, a deep scar that the previously mentioned historical period left upon the country can still be felt, even after more than twenty-five years since the revolution. The present times seem to be like a middle point, where implementing the European directives and regulations is a must - due to the statute of member of the European Union that Romania has, but, on the other hand, internal legislation is rather insufficient and, in many cases, European recommendations are not taken into consideration because of the different influences generated by personal interest.

To the evolution of journalism itself in its many forms, can be linked the right of citizens to be informed and the right of journalists to inform with the truth - because journalism can be good or bad but, without freedom, it will always be worth nothing. Furthermore, how can journalists reveal the truth if not by searching, digging after it in every corner, hearing from different people? But, if we take a case of a murder, for instance, a person would most likely not provide certain evidence without ensuring himself that his identity will remain a secret, for the sake of himself and his family. And this is where the term of source protection comes to attention. Also known as the confidentiality of sources, its main purpose is to prohibit authorities (including the courts) from compelling a journalist to reveal the identity of an anonymous source.

1.2. National Legislation and Its Construction

Taking it gradually, the first question is: Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? The short answer is "Yes!"; However, Romanian legislation does not provide an explicit definition of journalistic sources in any of its legal texts, any such explanation for this exact term. The meaning is understood from the legislation that provides protection for sources, but there is no article that defines the terms. The more important question that has to be asked is whether these regulations are adequate enough in order to ensure the rights that journalists have. Taking the highest regulation Romania has, the Constitution (that provides the most important and imperative rules) we find that it does not offer an explicit article on the rights of a journalist not to disclose its source. Even so, it does offer a certain protection that can be understood by analyzing two important articles on the matter: article 30¹ - which ensures freedom of expression, and article 31² - which ensures the right of information and also clearly states that any censorship is prohibited and that no publication shall be suppressed. However, it is interesting how one of the paragraphs states 'The law may impose upon the mass media the obligation to make public their financing source'. This paragraph is the closest term that suggests the idea of source. From a legal perspective, a per a contrario interpretation leads to the fact that only the law has the force to reveal the financing source, and that would lead to a whole, entire protection of journalists information in other manners, such as protection of the source of information. Lex ferenda, it would be highly recommended to introduce a new paragraph where the discussed right is concretely introduced, in order to reduce the number of abuses and eliminate the confusion the lack of it causes. It is known that journalists have the right to protect the source based on the legislation provided, but there is no specific way to do it, but, indirectly, it can be linked to Criminal or Civil Law, depending from case to case.

Going one step lower on the scale of normative influence in Romania there is the new Civil Code that was published in 2011 after long disputes on how it should cover all the gaps the old Code had. Despite the effort, there is still no explicit article referring to the protection of journalists not to disclose their source of information. There are several articles on respecting human dignity and one's private life, which actually highlight what a journalist must prevent from violating (which is another person's private life) and not the journalist's professional protection.

Even lower on the power of law scale, we find different legislation that finally seem to offer a concrete answer to the question. Law n. 544/2011 (regarding the right of access to information) subscribes to the above mentioned regulation; it refers to personal rights and freedom of expression, but has no explicit content on source protection.

Taking a look at the 504/2002 regulation referring to broadcasting, in the 7th article we find the most explicit article Romanian legislation provides on this subject:

Article 7

¹ Article 30 of the Constitution of Romania:

(1) Freedom of expression of thought, opinions, faith and freedom of creation of any kind, spoken, written, through images, sounds or other means of public communication, are inviolable.

(2) Any kind of censorship is forbidden.

² Article 31 of the Constitution of Romania:

(1) A person's right to have access to any information that is of public interest cannot be restricted.

- (1) Confidentiality of information sources used in the design or development of news, shows or other elements of program services is guaranteed by law.
- (2) Any journalist (...) is free not to disclose information that could identify the source of information obtained directly linked to his professional activity.
- (3) It is considered information that could identify a source the following:
 - a) name and personal data as well as voice or image of a source;
 - b) factual circumstances of acquiring information by journalist;
 - c) the unpublished information provided by the journalist's source;
 - d) personal data of the journalist or radio speaker related work to obtain information disseminated.
- (4) The confidentiality of information sources obliges in return, responsibility for the accuracy of the information provided.
- (5) Persons who, through their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information that could identify a source by gathering, editorial treating or publishing such information will benefit of the same protection as journalists.
- (6) Disclosure of information sources can only be ordered by courts if this is necessary for the protection of national security or public order, and to the extent that such disclosure is necessary for solving the case facing the court when:
 - a) there does not exist or have been exhausted the alternatives to disclosure of similar effect;
 - b) the legitimate interest of disclosure exceeds the legitimate interest of non-disclosure.³

The article is precise, concrete and it provides the protection needed for journalists. The above comments on the need of such a regulation are satisfied in the document adopted by the Romanian Parliament in 2002. Even so, it would be preferable that this right is introduced in the Constitution of Romania, so that it would be respected as an imperative rule, not just as a result of the principle that states that if there is a special regulation, it shall except from the general rule and be applied thoroughly.

In the same positive spirit, there are two more regulations, which are more similar to a practical version offered for the professionals. Firstly, there is the Unified Code of Ethics which precisely presents in Article 15 that the journalist has the obligation of keeping the source confidential if they request so, and also if the disclosure of the source's identity can endanger its' life, physical and mental integrity or work. Furthermore, in the next paragraph, it is once again underlined that secrecy and protection of confidential sources is equally a right and an obligation of the journalist. Secondly, the Judiciary Superior Council elaborated a guide regarding the perspective of judges upon the subject with examples of situations when such an intrusion is permitted in the name of law, relevant European legislation, all of it in order to unify the practice of the courts.

The list of Romanian legislation that provides this type of protection has ended. Of course, comparing it to other modern legislation or the European directions, there is still more to be added for it to be perfected. Without taking into consideration that, as it was outlined several times, there is a need of taking the regulation to a higher scale in order to provide safety among citizens, there are actually methods of ensuring that the right exists, it is recognized by the state and it must be applied. From that point comes the need of knowledge, the urge to be sure that one can ask for his right to be respected and that the state will respect that right, and, in the end, that is the purpose of this project, the expansion on knowledge in order to protect the human being.

³ Personal translation of Article 7 from Law n. 504/2002.

2. Is there in domestic law a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

2.1. Introduction

Romanian legislation encounters a severe gap in this matter, this being the reason why this prohibition is not mentioned in a clear disposition in the national order. Under those circumstances, in order to state this prohibition, several instruments of national and international origin have to be taken into consideration when recreating this prohibition in the national order. The New Civil Code recognizes freedom of speech as one of the fundamental rights, which indicates that the Romanian legislator considered it was vitally important to protect it, therefore it was described separately in Article 70: 'Everybody has the right to express himself freely'.⁴

Also, Romanian law is strongly bound to the European Court of Human Right's (hereinafter "ECHR") decisions, therefore the following article applies to the Romanian legislation too: Article 10 paragraph (1) states that 'Everyone has the right to freedom of expression'. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontier. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises. As it is obvious even at a simple glance, even in article 10 the Freedom of Speech is not an absolute right - it has its restrictions in order not to harm the exercise of the other rights.

This limit does not contradict to norms of the Convention because, as it is written in Article 10 paragraph (2):

'The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary'.

⁴ Personal translation of Article 70 from the New Romanian Civil Code.

This sensible line suggests that there are cases in which the source who has given the information cannot be disclosed as it may cause unwanted consequences on private life. This idea may be a compromise between the right of freedom of speech which empowers publishing important information and the right to protect private life, therefore free movement of information will be guaranteed in order to protect public interest.

2.2. Romania Between Treaties and Internal Law

2.2.1. International Vision of this Freedom and Its Effects in Romanian Law

Moreover, there are several restrictions mentioned in international law that have to be applied first in case there is any conflict between the Treaty and national legislation. This principle is mentioned in the Romanian Constitution in the 3rd paragraph of Article 11. Therefore, Treaties and Decisions of European Court of Human Rights are regarded as mandatory for national legislation.

Several international documents guarantee different rights to journalists among which there is the prohibition of disclosing their sources.

In this case, there is a Recommendation which was written regarding the problem of the confidentiality of the sources, more precisely R (2000) 7 which was adopted on 8 March 2000 in order to suggest the states to use all of their means protect the confidentiality of the sources of journalists. This recommendation prohibits disclosing of the sources which journalists use in order to provide with information and also institutes limitations to this right, conditions which are necessary in order to disclose a source, limitations of surveillance and perquisitions and also defence against self-accusation.

R (2000) 7 is the result of a well-known case which was solved a few years ago, Goodwin v. United Kingdom, where the Court decided on the conviction of the United Kingdom because of the means which were used against the journalist in order to disclose his sources. As it was said above, ECHR decisions are mandatory for European states, as well as Romania, and provide all the necessary guidelines in the proper approach of the human rights.

In the above mentioned case, the Court states the fact that the confidentiality of sources is one of the cornerstones of the freedom of press. The absence of this interdiction can cause fear to those who want to share information with the journalists and therefore leaving him helpless when it comes to informing people on issues concerning them. In those hypothetical conditions, the press cannot efficiently play its role of a watchdog of a modern democracy. Taking into consideration the importance of protection of the confidentiality of the sources and the negative effects which can be caused to the freedom of expression, The Court considers that this interference can be done only in extremely restrictive conditions.⁵

⁵ Radu Chiriță, Conventia Europeana a Drepturilor Omului (2nd edn, CH Beck 2008) 346 [Romanian].

Also, the Court reiterates this principle in a recent case, Roemen and Schmit v. Luxemburg. In this case, the Court states the fact that organizing perquisitions in order to clearly determine the source which has offered information is a serious interference in the freedom of expression and it can only be caused in exceptional circumstances.⁶

2.2.2. The Accepted Limits

This freedom of expression is not absolute though, it is emphasized the fact that there can be mainly two types of limitations. On the one hand there is the general interest of the population - which can be national security, prevention of a crime, protection of ethics and health, for instance. On the other hand, limitations can also have a private nature, so they could defend a person's dignity, for example.

Also, after reading the dispositions of the Convention, it can be said that not only the freedom is not limitless, but it also has two severe conditions which have to be respected in order to protect the journalist from judicial responsibility.

Therefore, the Convention mentions that the exercise of this freedom implies the following:

- obligations and responsibility,
- restrictions can be done only by law because of the importance of this freedom, so it can easily be observed that the state maintains a little part of its' power in order to protect the general interest so the information won't have a harmful effect for the people who can be influenced by it.
- the interference has to be mentioned in a legal text in a clear manner, to be necessary in a democratic state, to regard a legitimate purpose.⁷

2.3. The Approach of the National Law in the Light of International Circumstances

Romania has a particularly interesting position regarding this matter because of the legislative gap which it has encountered recently. Generally speaking, the freedom of expression in Romania is protected by the Constitution in Article 30, but the journalists' activity is protected only indirectly by (8) of the same article.

One of the best problems regarding this topic is that there is no clear definition of this type of activity in the national legislation. This fact causes serious problems when it comes to drawing the margins of its limitations. Besides this, the major problem is that the Law of Press n. 3/1974 does not produce any effects because of the Constitutional Court's practice which stated that currently this law is revoked, it cannot have any effects in the national order.

Even though the law itself was present in the national legislative order in a period of time when journalism was not protected as it has to be now, Article 63 mentioned the 'privilege of confidentiality' which was regarded as a professional secret, and the law itself guaranteed a protection for the journalist's activity which demonstrates that this law, regardless of its age, is superior to the current national instruments which only vaguely regard this topic.⁸

⁶ ibid 347.

⁷ Corneliu Birsan, Conventia Europeana a Drepturilor Omului. Comentariu pe Articole (2nd edn, CH Beck 2006) 750 [Romanian].

Therefore, the gap created by The Constitutional Court was not filled, not even by now, with a law that could consistently guarantee the prohibition of disclosing sources, Romanian legislation being by far one of the few countries in Europe which does not have a similar disposition in national order.

It should be also underlined the fact that in the actual version of Criminal Code Art 304 punishes the disclosure of confidential information, it states the following: Disclosure of information classified as service secret or not public (1) The unlawful disclosure of information classified as service secret, or which is not for the general public, by the person aware thereof owing to their professional responsibilities, if it affects the interests or the activity of a person, shall be punishable by no less than 3 months and no more than 3 years of imprisonment, or by a fine. Therefore the sanction exists regarding confidential information in general without any reference to the confidentiality of the sources. Also, another place where this idea is vaguely mentioned is the Romanian Labour Code art 247 it states that (1) The employer shall have disciplinary powers, i.e. the right to take, according to the law, disciplinary measures against its employees whenever it finds them liable of disciplinary offences. (2) A disciplinary offence is related to the work, consisting of a wilful action or lack of action of the employee, breaking the legal provisions, the rules of procedure, the individual employment contract or the applicable collective labour agreement, legal instructions and directions of the management. , but there is no clear provision which would include the journalist's sources in the category of confidential information which has to be protected. In any other parts of code there is no clear definition of confidential information or what it should regard. Therefore labour code institutes only general guidelines without any other explanations.

2.4. Conclusions

On the one side, Currently, Romania is one of the few states which is mostly helpless when it comes to protecting journalists' sources because of its lack of legislation on the issue, a fact which is not compatible with the EU principles in the area. On the other side, the lack of dispositions, which show the guidelines regarding this profession, and the way it has to be executed can cause disparity from the journalists side, who could eventually commit abuses because of the fact that law doesn't provide clear rules which have to be respected.

Therefore, in this context, Romania needs a new law that would include all of those aspects in order to solve most of the potential problems which might occur because of this real void in legislation.

⁸ Carmen Moldovan, 'Succinte consideratii referitoare la privilegiul confidentialitatii surselor de informare ale ziaristilor in reglementarea legala a unor state si in jurisprudenta CEDO' [2012] Revista Dreptul n. 3/2012 181-194 [Romanian].

3. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

3.1. Definition and Interpretation

There is no legal definition given to the term “journalist”, but the Journalists Code of Conduct adopted by the Media Organizations Convention in 2009 provides one.

According to this Code, a journalist is:

‘A person that handles the collecting, photographing, recording, writing, editing or publishing information regarding local events, national, international, of public interest, with the purpose of publicly spreading this information, earning his living in a considerable proportion from this activity.’⁹

Since there is no legal definition given to the term “journalist”, when interpreting the law we shall refer to the common meaning of the term, a person specialized in journalistic activities (according to the explanatory dictionary of the Romanian language). With this interpretation, the definition of a journalist is flexible enough to include several categories of activities that shall be given protection by the law.

3.2. The Protection of Other Media Actors

The legal framework offers protection not only to journalists but to other media actors as well. Articles 7 and 8 of Law n. 504/2002 (the Broadcasting Law) provide the norms that offer this legal protection.

According to the 2nd paragraph of Article 7, any journalist or media developer is free from disclosing data that can lead to the identification of the source of the information obtained in relation to his professional activity.

For the purpose of this law, a program shall be considered a group of moving images, with or without sound, that constitutes a whole which can be identifiable through its title, content, form or author, within a grid or a catalogue composed by a media supplier, having the form and the content of television services or having a comparable form and content to these.

This protection extends to other people that, through their professional relations with journalists, gain knowledge capable of identifying a source through collecting, editing or publishing this information.

⁹ Carmen Maria Andronache, ‘Codul Deontologic al Jurnalistului, Elaborat de conventia Organizatiilor Media’ (The Journalists Code of Conduct adopted by the Media Organizations Convention, 7 July 2010) <<http://www.paginademedia.ro/2010/05/codul-deontologic-al-jurnalistului-elaborat-de-conventia-organizatiilor-de-media/>> accessed 28 April 2016 [Romanian].

Article 8 grants further protection provided by the public authorities for journalists in case they are under a pressure or threat that can restrain or prevent them from freely exercising their profession. The same protection is also granted to the headquarters of radio transmitters.

Furthermore, it is stated that this protection of the headquarters cannot become a pretext to restrain or prevent the free exercise of the profession.

According to article 7 of the Law of author rights (Law n. 8 from 1996), the protection given by author rights can be extended to works such as journalistic articles, dramatic operas, photographic, cinematographic and other audio-visual pieces of work.

Under the same law, protection is granted not only to the author, the creator of the piece of work. The director is also an author, and if the producer includes an express clause in the contract between him and the director, he can also be considered an author under this law.

This law, under article 113, also gives protection to the radio and television organisms for the programs that they develop and distribute.

3.3. Access to Public Information

Law n. 544/2001 provides a special section dedicated to the access of mass media to public information.

Access to public information for mass media actors is guaranteed by this law which is also binding public authorities to give accreditation to journalists and mass media actors without any discrimination within two days of request.

The law also binds the public authorities to inform all mass media actors of the press conferences they will hold and other public actions, as well as allow all accredited journalists the access to these activities.

In return, mass media actors and journalists are not obliged to publish information given by the public authorities during these events.

3.4. Scope of the Protection and Conclusions

The protection of journalists and other media actors aims to balance the freedom of expression of the journalists and other actors, the public's right to information and other public interests such as national security, public safety and other individual rights. It is an important issue, especially in the current national climate and international context, in which these rights are bound to find themselves in conflict more than ever. It is the legislator's duty to assure that the necessary balance is maintained, adjusting the mechanism to each national situation and needs.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

4.1. Protection of Journalists Against Being Forced to Disclose Their Sources

The protection of journalistic sources represents one of the basic conditions for press freedom's existence in a democratic society. Freedom of press implies unrestricted flow of information from journalists to citizens and, just as important, from citizens to journalists. Thus there is a double exchange based on the need to provide information on matters of public interest.

There have also been many national and international instruments adopted by states for better protection of journalistic sources. In Romania, Article 30 of the Constitution states that 'Freedom of expression of thoughts, opinions, or beliefs, and freedom of any creation, by words, in writing, in pictures, by sounds or other means of communication in public are inviolable'. Principles regarding freedom of expression have also been stated in the Civil Code: Article 70 - 'any person has the right to freedom of expression'.

Although no case has been brought to the Constitutional Court regarding the protection of journalistic sources based on Article 30 of the Constitution (thus, there is no jurisprudence), the European Court of Human Rights has held in Goodwin v. United Kingdom, a case from 1996, that 'Protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom' and

'If journalists are forced to reveal their sources the role of the press as public watchdog could be seriously undermined because of the chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest'

Thus, it is possible to use the same arguments in defending the need of protecting journalistic sources based on the Romanian Constitution, of which Article 30, line 1 has the same content as Article 10 line 1 from the Human Rights Act.

There is also the Broadcasting Law n. 504/2002, of which article 7 line 1 states explicitly that 'The confidential nature of the information sources used in conceiving or issuing news, shows or other elements of program services is warranted by this Law'. But, of course, there are exceptions comprised in the Law where journalistic sources may be disclosed, just as the European Court of Human Rights has stated in its decisions:

'The disclosure of an information source may be ordered by law courts insofar it is necessary in order to protect national safety or public order and insofar such disclosure is necessary to solve a case judged at a law court when:

- a) alternative measures of similar effect, to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted;
- b) the legitimate interest for disclosure exceeds the legitimate interest for non-disclosure.'¹⁰

¹⁰ Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark [2005] European Court of Human Rights [English].

A journalist may be forced to disclose his sources only through the judiciary system, the judge being the one who can order him to do so. The journalist can be cited as a witness in an ongoing trial and can be asked to divulge his sources by the prosecutor, otherwise he can be charged with false testimony (again, by the prosecutor), an offence. This case concerning the journalist specifically will be brought in front of the judge, who will give a solution considering Article 7 of the Broadcasting Law and the European Court's of Human Rights Jurisprudence.

If the judge orders the disclosure, any information can be revealed in what is called the Council Room, which means that only the judges, the prosecutors and anyone working on the case will hear the information, as well as the persons involved in the case (defendants, witnesses, interpreters, experts, but only if necessary for them to hear the disclosed information). There are in the Romanian Criminal Code some provisions which forbid passing on not only of disclosed information done by a journalist, but any sensible information connected to the case whatsoever. The penalty is prison, but it can also be a fine if the person who passes on the information is not a magistrate or a public servant (police officer, for example).

A journalist may challenge a judge's decision by appeal, according to the Criminal Procedure Code (Article 408 from the Criminal Procedure Code: sentences may be challenged by appeal, unless the law says otherwise; there's no impediment written anywhere else). The journalist also has the right to not self-incriminate, a right provided by Article 118 from the Criminal Procedure Code, which states expressis verbis that the witness's declaration cannot be used against him. Also, Article 83 from the same code states that the defendant can refuse to give any declarations during the trial, without suffering any consequences, which is also meant to prevent self-incrimination.

The right to be heard is enshrined in the Criminal Procedure Code as a principle in Article 10. Self-regulatory mechanisms have no application whatsoever in the above proceedings. The self-regulatory mechanisms are rules to which parties abide by signing a contract.

4.2. Self-regulatory Mechanisms

For the protection of journalistic sources against the disclosure by the journalists themselves to be assured, a Deontological Code has been created, which acts as a self-regulatory mechanism, implemented by the specialized bodies of each signing party to the Code. The Code was adopted within the Convenția Organizațiilor de Media din România (Convention of Media Organizations from Romania) on 24 October 2009. Those specialized bodies function as ethics commission under different names, or they are the boards of the different professional associations which can, based on their statute, be able to provide the sanction for breaking the provision. The sanctions range from a warning notice to small percentages of the journalist's wage taken as fines, even dissolution of the labor contract.

If a journalist wants to disclose his sources, from a legal standpoint there are no sanctions for his actions. But there is a provision (Article 2.3.1.) in the Deontological Code which states that 'The journalist has the obligation not to disclose his sources when they ask for their anonymity to be kept, or those sources for which their disclosure may put their life, their physical integrity or their job in jeopardy', thus, journalists can be sanctioned by the ethics board based on the Deontological Code, so, they may have to ask the ethics board if they are allowed to disclose their sources.

Considering all of the above, it can be stated that there are minimum safeguards of journalistic sources in Romanian Law and they can be invoked in a Court of Law to provide a decent protection of the journalistic sources.

During the last year a trend has been noticed for citing national security for the purpose of issuing interception mandates by the highest Romanian court. This may actually be an infringement on the right to not disclose journalistic sources, as the possibility of forcing a journalist to reveal his source is bypassed through this method.¹¹ In the first 9 months of 2015, 224 mandates per month have been issued, and all of them have been accomplished through RIS (Romanian Information Service). This type of mandate offers lawful access not only to the person's phone, but also to every other phone which contains the phone number of the person the mandate is addressed to.

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

5.1. National Legislation and the principle of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7

The principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information¹² are brought under the regulation in different national legislations, such as Law number 8/1996 published in the Official Gazette of Romania¹³ n. 60/26 March 1996 regarding copyrights and other rights connected in Article 91, Law n. 504/2002 published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 534/22 July 2002 regarding the audio and video materials published to the public audience in Article 7, and Law n. 19/2003 published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 34/22

¹¹ George Tarata, Alex Puiu, 'Cifra oficiala: ora si mandatul' (The Official Figure: the Hour and the Mandate, 11 October 2015) <http://www.luju.ro/institutii/servicii-secrete/cifra-oficiala-ora-si-mandatul-in-primele-9-luni-din-2015-inalta-curte-a-emis-2-020-de-mandate-de-interceptare-pe-siguranta-nationala-adica-224-pe-luna-judecatorii-iccj-semneaza-cate-10-mandate-in-fiecare-zi-lucratoare-media-este-identica-cu-cea-din-2014-> accessed 28 February 2016 [Romanian].

¹² - Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 8 March 2000 at the 701st meeting of the Ministries' Deputies.

¹³ - Translated from Monitorul Oficial R.A. (The Gazette). The Gazette provides information to the population regarding promulgated bills, presidential decrees, governmental ordinances and other major legal acts.

January 2003 regarding the establishment and functioning of the National News Agency – ROMPRES.¹⁴

The limits of non-disclosure of the information are stated in the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 (Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 8 March 2000 at the 701st meeting of the Ministers' Deputies) in Principle 3 "Limits of the right of non-disclosure" of the presented document.

In the Romanian legislation the principle is highlighted in Article 7, paragraph 6 of Law n. 504/2002 stating:

"The disclosure of a source of information may be ruled by the courts only if this measure is necessary for the defence of the national security or the public order, but also in those cases in which this disclosure is highly necessary for solving an on-going trial in case that:

a) There are no reasonable alternative measures of disclosure with similar effect or they have been exhausted; or

b) The legitimate interest of disclosure outweighs the legitimate interest of non-disclosure.'

Having in mind the paragraph mentioned above, the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 are in line with the Romanian legislation, because the elements of the limitation of this right are strictly mentioned and taken into consideration. The legislator is nominating "a competent authority of the member state" represented by the national courts. They have the role to determine if the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure or if the disclosure is highly necessary for a vital and serious cause. The judges have some limitation in ordering the disclosure, the one stated in paragraphs 6.a) and 6.b) of the Article 7 of Law n. 504/2002 that are in accordance with the one stated by paragraph b) of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

5.2. The Applied Procedures and Exceptional Circumstances

The disclosure of the sources of information is limited within the national legislation of Romania. The cases in which the disclosure of sources are to be sentenced by the courts, has to be done only if the disclosure is necessary in protecting the national security or for the public order, and for the judge/s to reach a decision in an on-going case in which the disclosure is highly necessary for solving the case. This hypothesis regulates only two situations, referred to when there are no other alternative sources in the disclosure with similar effect, or they have been exhausted and the situation in which the legitimate interest in the disclosure outweighs the legitimate interest of non-disclosure.¹⁵

The confidentiality of the sources of information of the expert personnel is assured by the regulation of Law n. 19/2003 regarding the establishment and functionality of the National Agency of Press – AGERPRES. The disclosure of sources can only be the subject of the judges' decisions and the action for exposing the sources must be initiated based on solid grounds, such as the public interest.¹⁶ Thus, the procedure is stated in two articles, as below:

¹⁴ - Firstly named AGERPRES (in 1889), followed by the name ROMPRES established in 1990 and returning to the previous name in July 2008 according to the amendment of the Law n. 19/2003 in 2008.

¹⁵Law n. 504 (Broadcasting Law) 2002 [Legea audiovizualului].

Article 10 of Law n. 19/2003 regarding the establishment and functioning of the National News Agency - AGERPRES - "The confidentiality of the sources of information for the specialized personnel is assured by the presented Law. The disclosure of their sources, motivated by a public interest, may be ordered only by a final decision reached by the national courts."

Article 91 of Law n. 8/1996 published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 60/26 March 1996 regarding copyrights and other connected rights - "(1) The editor or the producer, at the author's request, is forced to keep the secret of the sources of information used for the work created and not to publish documents referring to that.

(2) The disclosure of the secret is permitted only by the approval of the person that gave the information or by a final and irrevocable sentence reach by the national courts."¹⁷

5.3. Alternative Measures. ECHR Jurisprudence. Important ECHR Cases Concerning Romania

The jurisprudence of the national courts did not register any case in which their main action was to prove their overpower of forcing the journalists to disclose their sources of information. Thus, Romania doesn't have any jurisprudence in this regard.

The European Court of Human Rights highlighted, more than once, that Article 10 of the Convention is protecting not only the substance and the content of the information and ideas that the journalists are providing, but also the means that they are using for transmitting them. The jurisprudence of the Court offers an underestimated protection especially for the confidentiality of the journalists' sources. Thus, in the case Goodwin v. The United Kingdom, the Court states that the protection of the journalists' sources is one of the fundamental rocks of the freedom of press and that the absence of this kind of protection might discourage the journalists' sources from providing the necessary information in order to serve the public interests. Therefore, the press may be incapable of playing its' essential role as "the watchdog" and the capacity of the role of journalists in the society may be decreased. A binding disclosure may not be in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention besides the case that involves a superior public interest.

There are many cases brought to the European Court of Human Rights that show that the journalists were forced to disclose their sources, such as Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and others v. the Low Countries, Nagla v. Latvia, Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Low Countries, Financial Times Ltd and others v. the United Kingdom, Voskuil v. the Low Countries, Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark, Goodwin v. the UK. There are also cases in which the inquisition at the journalist's domicile or at the work place of journalists were brought by the judges as a method of ¹⁶Law n. 19 (regarding the establishment and functioning of the National News Agency AGERPRES) 2003 [privind organizarea si functionarea Agentiei Nationale de Presa AGERPRES].

¹⁷Translated from Monitorul Oficial R.A. (The Gazette) in Romanian.

serving the public interest; these were discovered by the Court as a violation of Article 10 of the Convention, such as Ivashchenko v. Russia, Ressiot and others v. France, Martin and others v. Belgium, etc. In all of these cases, the general idea that is approaching all of them is the abuse of power that the government uses, in general, for different purposes. The two most significant cases for Romania in the jurisprudence of the Court connected to Article 10 of the Convention in terms of disclosing the press sources are a part of a more complex case. In both of the cases, Stângu and Scutelnicu v. Romania and Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania, the Court is uncertain of the plaintiff's argument according to which they did not present evidence to support their statements for protecting their sources. Consequently, the Court states that the plaintiffs' obligation to ensure a solid factual base of the statement does not involve, under any circumstances, the obligation of disclosing the name of the people that contributed to the information needed for the creation of the article. Moreover, in Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania, the elements that were brought to the judges' attention did not conclude during the entire penal procedure against the claimant that the report of the Court of Accounts (which was the main document that the claimants founded their claim) represented a confidential document which may have caused a real conviction and that it might have called upon a sanction to both the claimants, or their sources.¹⁸

In this regard, the Court states that the claimant shall not affirm that the national courts applied a wrongful sentence, because they gave nothing to the national courts in order to decide if the cause that they were pleading was or was not over the limits of the admissible critics.

In the Stângu and Scutelnicu v. Romania case, the claimants declared that, under the statement of professional secrecy, they found it impossible to enclose to the dossier the elements that might have proven the relevance and the truthfulness of their article, but the Court states that the obligation of the claimant of presenting a factual and solid base for their disputable statements does not imply the obligation of disclosing the name of their sources under any circumstances, as in the former case stated above.

¹⁸ Cumpăna and Mazăre v. Romania [2004] European Court of Human Rights, para 27 [English].

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the Following Principles Should Be Respected When the Necessity of Disclosure Is Stated: Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, Outweighing Legitimate Interest (Protection of Human Life, Prevention of Major Crime, Defence of a Person Accused or Convicted of Having Committed a Major Crime). Under which Criteria Can the Interest in the Disclosure Outweigh the Interest in the Non-disclosure?

6.1. Introduction

The Romanian Broadcasting Law n. 504/2002 states that the confidentiality of journalistic sources used in conceiving or issuing news broadcasts and other elements of program services is guaranteed by law. Therefore, any journalist or program is free not to disclose information that could identify the source of information obtained directly connected with his professional activity. The confidentiality of journalistic sources obliges the journalist in return to 'assume responsibility for the accuracy of the information provided'.¹⁹

The aforementioned National provision states that:

'The disclosure of an information source may be ordered by the court only if necessary to protect national security or public order, and to the extent that such disclosure is necessary to resolve the case before the court when either there is no alternative measures have been exhausted or disclosure of similar effect or the legitimate interest of disclosure exceeds the legitimate interest of non-disclosure.'²⁰

Although the Romanian legislator has transposed the aforementioned condition of a necessary outweigh of legitimate interest of disclosure over the legitimate interest of non-disclosure, it has not enlisted the criteria the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 offers for the appreciation of whether 'the disclosure of information identifying a source should be deemed necessary' or not, specifically:

- an overriding requirement of the need for disclosure is proved,
- the circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature,
- the necessity of the disclosure is identified as responding to a pressing social need, and
- member states enjoy a certain margin of appreciation in assessing this need, but this margin goes hand in hand with the supervision by the European Court of Human Rights.'²¹

¹⁹ Law n. 504 (Broadcasting Law) 2002, article 7 para 4 [Legea Audiovizualului].

²⁰ Law n. 504 (Broadcasting Law) 2002, Article 7 para 6 [Legea Audiovizualului].

²¹ Recommendation No R (2000) 7, Principle 3 b.

Therefore, as the Romanian legislation does not expressly mention any criteria in appreciating the necessity of the disclosure, in case of litigation, the Court is enabled to appreciate whether the interest of disclosure exceeds the interest of non-disclosure or not. Of course, although having a certain margin of appreciation, judges must not subject the right of the journalist to non-disclosure to any other restrictions than those mentioned in Article 10, paragraph 2 of the ECHR. The criteria behind this margin of appreciation can be found in Article 53 of the Romanian Constitution that states the following:

“The exercise of certain rights or freedoms may only be restricted by law, and only if necessary, as the case may be, for the defence of national security, of public order, health, or morals, of the citizens' rights and freedoms; conducting a criminal investigation; preventing the consequences of a natural calamity, disaster, or an extremely severe catastrophe. Such restriction shall only be ordered if necessary in a democratic society. The measure shall be proportional to the situation having caused it, applied without discrimination, and without infringing on the existence of such right or freedom.”²²

6.2. Romanian Provisions Regarding the Interest on Disclosure

Analyzing the aforementioned provision, one can easily reach the conclusion that the condition of necessity of the disclosure can only be analyzed in close relation with the condition of proportionality of the disclosure. In the Decision of the Constitutional Court n. 279/2015²³, the Court states that in the analysis of the proportionality of a certain measure, the purpose sought by the lawmaker must be taken into consideration and whether this purpose is legitimate or not. The just equilibrium between the public and private interest has to be reached, and the Court is the only entity enabled to appreciate this equilibrium. Furthermore, the Romanian Constitutional Court Decision n. 461/2014²⁴ states that the retention and storage of personal data have to be expressly permitted by the law and, additionally, the entity which disposes the measure has to provide sufficient guarantees concerning the access to and utilization of the data. What is more, the measure has to respect the exigencies of non-discrimination and not affect the mere existence of the right or freedom in question.

Regarding the necessary and adequate character, the Romanian Constitutional Court has repeatedly stated that a measure has to be adapted to its legitimate purpose and it has to fulfill its requirements and be necessary in a democratic society. Moreover, the measure of restriction of one's liberties has to be exceptional, in other words, there must be no other available measures for the purpose to be attained.

²² Personal translation of Article 53 from Constitutia Romaniei (The Constitution of Romania).

²³ Decision n. 279 (Regarding the Exception of Unconstitutionality of Article 52 para 1b of Law n. 53/2003 - Labor Code) 2015 [Referitoare la excepția de neconstituționalitate a dispozițiilor art.52 alin.(1) lit.b) din Legea nr.53/2003 – Codul muncii].

²⁴ Decision n. 461 (Admitting the Objection of Unconstitutionality of the Law Amending the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 111/2011 on Electronic Communications) 2015 [asupra admiterii obiecției de neconstituționalitate a dispozițiilor Legii pentru modificarea și completarea Ordonanței de urgență a Guvernului nr. 111/2011 privind comunicațiile electronice].

Furthermore, not only the public interest can override the interest for non-disclosure, but also a legitimate private interest, as it is defined by the Law n. 554/2004 as the possibility to claim a conduct, in consideration of the realization of a subjective right of freedom. In the Goodwin v. the United Kingdom case, there was a disproportion between the disclosure of the source and the value of the private interest that was affected. Applying the per a contrario principle, one may come to the conclusion that had the interest of the society been of a significant value, there would have been the possibility for the Court to maintain the decision of the national Court that constrained the journalist to disclose his source.

6.3. Conclusions

To sum it up, as there are no expressly mentioned criteria in the Romanian legislation for weighing the opposite interests of disclosure and non-disclosure, the judge has to appreciate the prevailing interest relying on jurisprudential sources in order to interpret the concept of necessity, analyzed in close relation with that of proportionality. However, there are authors that give examples of cases when the interest of disclosure prevails:²⁵

- when the source in question is a fugitive or on the lookout for executing a penalty;
- when the source willingly determines the journalist to commit an infraction, for example, the disclosure of a state secret;
- when the protection of the source would be the equivalent of committing the infractions of Failure to report (Article 266 of the Romanian Criminal Code)²⁶, The omission to notify the judicial bodies (Article 267 of the Romanian Criminal Code)²⁷, Aiding and abetting a perpetrator (Article 269 of the Romanian Criminal Code)²⁸.

²⁵ 'Protectia surselor de informatii si principiile acesteia' (The Protection of Journalistic Sources and its' Principles) <<http://www.rasfoiesc.com/business/marketing/comunicare/Protectia-surselor-de-informat55.php>> accessed 4 May 2016 [Romanian]

²⁶ ART. 266 (Failure to report), Romanian Criminal Code

(1) The act of the individual who, becoming aware of the commission of an offense against human life or which resulted in the death of an individual, as provided by criminal law, does not notify the authorities immediately, shall be punishable by no less than 6 months and no more than 2 years of imprisonment or by a fine.

(2) Failure to report shall not be punishable when committed by a family member.

(3) A person who, before the commencement of criminal action against an individual for the commission of the offense that was not reported, notifies the relevant authorities concerning such offense or who, even after commencement of the criminal action, has facilitated the criminal action against the perpetrator or the other persons involved in the commission of the offense, shall not be punishable.

²⁷ ART. 267 (Omission to notify the judicial bodies) ibid

(1) The act of a public servant who, becoming aware of the commission of an offense criminalized by law in connection with the service where they work, omits to immediately notify the criminal investigation body, shall be punishable by no less than 3 months and no more than 3 years of imprisonment or by a fine.

(2) If the act is committed with basic intent, the penalty shall consist of no less than 3 months and no more than 1 years of imprisonment or a fine.

²⁸ ART. 269 (Aiding and abetting a perpetrator) ibid

7. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

7.1. Introduction. National Legislation. Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights

Romania ratified the European Convention on Human Rights on 20 June 1994. Since this moment, the European Court of Human Rights has played an important role in the protection of human rights. Also, through its convictions, the European Court has had a great influence on the matter of decriminalisation of the insult and the defamation from the previous Criminal Code.

In Romania, the most important law that protects the freedom of expression is the Constitution. Besides this, there is the Civil Code, where the freedom of expression is mentioned in a few articles, and also other related laws such as Law n. 544/2001 regarding the free access to public interest information and Law n. 504/2002 (the Broadcasting Law).

The right to freedom of expression is one of the rights protected by the European Convention on Human Rights in Article 10. It is not only important in its own right, but it also plays a central part in the protection of other rights under the Convention.²⁹

This involves a lot of interdependent elements such as: the freedom to hold opinions, the freedom to impart and receive information, the freedom of the press and so on. They are equally protected and they should be limited only in exceptional circumstances. The interference in the freedom of expression is allowed only when it goes against other rights that are protected in the Convention. In this case, the Court strikes a balance in order to establish the pre-eminence of one right over the other.³⁰ There are three requirements for the legitimate interference with the exercise of freedom of expression: the interference is prescribed by the law, the interference aims to protect one or more interests or values of great importance and the interference is necessary in a democratic society.

(1) The act of aiding and abetting a perpetrator, for the purposes of preventing or hindering the investigation in a criminal case, criminal liability, serving a sentence or a custodial sentence shall be punishable by no less than 1 and no more than 5 years of imprisonment or by a fine.

(2) The penalty for the individual who has aided and abetted the perpetrator may not exceed the penalty provided by the law for the offense committed by the perpetrator.

3) Aiding and abetting committed by a family member shall not be punishable.

²⁹ Monica Macovei, 'A guide to the implementation of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights' <<http://www.echr.coe.int/LibraryDocs/DG2/HRHAND/DG2-EN-HRHAND-02%282004%29.pdf/>> accessed 2 April 2016.

³⁰ ibid.

To balance the interests at stake, the Court has its own classification in which the affirmations are divided in two: judgements of value and factual information. While the opinions are viewpoints or personal assessments of an event or situation and are not susceptible of being proven true or false, the underlying facts on which the opinion is based might be capable of being proven true or false.³¹ These are important criteria on which the Court bases its decisions on whether there is a violation of the freedom of expression or not.

7.2. Case Law of the European Court of Human Rights Regarding Romania's Convictions on Freedom of Expression

During the time, Romania did not have a lot of convictions regarding the protection of journalists and the freedom of expression, but there were some of great importance in our legislation such as: Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania, published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 501, 14 June 2005; Morar v. Romania, published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 141, 14 February 2016 and Dalban v. Romania, published in the Official Gazette of Romania n. 277, 20 June 2000. Dalban v. Romania will be presented in the next paragraph, being the case that emphasises the protection of journalists the most.

7.2.1. Case Law Dalban v. Romania

Case law Dalban v. Romania is one of the most important in our national legislation because it led to the decriminalisation of the insult and the defamation from the previous Criminal Code.

In this case law, Ionel Dalban, a journalist who ran a local weekly magazine called Cronica Romașcană, published in 1992 and in 1993 some investigations regarding frauds committed by the chief executive of a State-owned agricultural company, FASTROM of Roman (previously known as the Roman LAS or State farm). He was sentenced to suspended prison, had to pay damages and he was also banned from practising his profession for an indefinite period. Considering the fact that Ionel Dalban died, his wife, Elena Dalban, notified the European Court of Human Rights, claiming that her husband's right to freedom of expression was violated. The Court unanimously decided that there was indeed a violation of Article 10 of the Convention and that the State is to pay the applicant's widow a non-pecuniary damage. The Court based its conviction on the following:

'One factor of particular importance for the Court's determination of the present case is therefore the essential function the press fulfils in a democratic society. Although the press must not overstep certain bounds, in particular in respect of the reputation and rights of others and the need to prevent the disclosure of confidential information, its duty is, nevertheless, to impart – in a manner consistent with its obligations and responsibilities – information and ideas on all matters of public interest. In addition, the Court is mindful of the fact that journalistic freedom also covers possible recourse to a degree of exaggeration, or even provocation. In cases such as the present one, the national margin of appreciation is circumscribed by the interest of democratic society in enabling the press to exercise its rightful role of “public watchdog” in imparting information of serious public. It would be unacceptable for a journalist to be debarred from expressing critical value judgments unless he or she could prove their truth’.³²

³¹ ibid.

7.3. Relevant National Jurisprudence and Conclusions

Romanian jurisprudence also has some interesting cases regarding the freedom of expression. One of them was the case of a Senate candidate who complained about the defaming affirmations made during a TV show. The Romanian Court considered that the information regarding his candidature was a topic of general interest and therefore his request was dismissed. The Court motivated its decision based on Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights and its jurisprudence.

In another case law, the Romanian Court decided in favour of the plaintiff, a police officer who complained about some personal details, including a letter regarding her marriage that was published in a newspaper. The Court considered that publishing the article and the letter was not a matter of general interest and therefore the freedom of expression should be limited. The newspaper’s owners had to pay non-pecuniary damages, but the Court made sure they were proportional with the injury so that the journalists were not discouraged to publish certain details about public figures in the future. When analysing the freedom of expression, one must take into consideration that the Convention also protects another right in Article 8: a right to respect for one’s private and family life, his home and his correspondence. In a democratic society, such as the one we live in, all the rights from the Convention must be equally protected and one must know how to mark the limits between the two.

To sum up, all these convictions Romania has faced throughout the last decades have something in common: they all had a major impact on our national legislation because they led to the decriminalisation of the insult and the defamation in 2006, which was a very controversial topic. This can only be good for the journalists, as they cannot be held responsible for every affirmation they make or for every personal detail they publish. Before this, it was easier for the people to bring criminal charges for minor offences against journalists who were simply doing their job. The decriminalisation of the insult and the defamation comes as a greater protection to the journalists’ rights. It can be said that the protection the journalists are benefiting from now is wider and more secure and therefore the freedom of expression can only be limited in exceptional circumstances. In 2007, the Romanian Constitutional Court decided that the law that decriminalised the insult and the defamation was not constitutional. It was considered that people are free to express themselves but they must not use this freedom to act in bad faith and violate the rights of others. Over the time, there have been a lot of disputes whether to apply the law or the Constitutional Court decision. All of these ended with the actual Criminal Code, where the insult and the defamation are no longer incriminated. There are still a lot of people who do not agree with this decision, considering that the freedom of expression is compatible with the incrimination of the insult and the defamation, but the legislator balanced the interests at stake and decided that they need to stay repealed.

³² Dalban v. Romania [1999] European Court of Human Rights, The Official Gazette of Romania n. 277 [2000] [English].

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

8.1. History and Current Legal Provisions

The current Criminal Procedure Code provides more rigorous legal norms, defining the concept of technical surveillance and qualifying it.

Technical surveillance includes electronic surveillance and it may be granted by the Judge of Rights and Liberties or the prosecutor, provided several conditions described in Article 139 of the Criminal Procedure Code are fulfilled:

Firstly, there must be a reasonable suspicion that a person is preparing or has already committed one of the crimes that are listed under the second paragraph of the same article. These crimes include crimes against national safety regulated by the Criminal Code and other National Laws, trafficking, drug trafficking, arm trafficking, terrorism acts, money laundering, counterfeiting, blackmail, rape, deprivation of liberty, tax evasion, corruption, crimes against the financial interest of the European Union, and other crimes for which the law regulates a 5 year jail sentence or more.

This reasonable suspicion was considered a subjective matter, it cannot be quantified, it differs from one person to another and, as a result, it was criticized and considered inadequate for procedural norms that are uninterpretable through their essence.

Secondly, given the particularities of the case, the importance of the information or the evidence that shall be obtained or the gravity of the crime, the measure has to be proportional to the limitation of the fundamental rights. This condition does not create difficulties in interpretation.

Lastly, the evidence should not be able to be obtained in any other way or their obtaining should imply great difficulties that would harm the inquiry or there should be a danger for the safety of the people or of some valuable goods. This reference to valuable goods, without any criteria indicated in the norms was deemed able of leading to a differentiated jurisprudence.

This new Criminal Procedure Code entered to force in 2014, bringing out of force the previous one.

Our previous Criminal Procedure Code has been the cause of several convictions for Romania at the European Court of Human Rights.

The previous Criminal Procedure Code has brought several convictions against Romania for not meeting the required criteria, especially the foreseeability one and the existence of clear legislative norms.

In cases *Raducu v. Romania*³³, *Calmanovici v. Romania*³⁴ and *Dumitru Popescu v. Romania*³⁵, the Court has stated repeatedly that the legal provisions present in the old Criminal Procedure Code, prior to the modifications brought by Law n. 281/2003, are incompatible with the minimum degree of protection that Article 8 of the European Human Rights Convention aims at.

The Court acknowledges that Law n. 281/2003 has brought many changes in the method of regulation, bringing several guarantees regarding the interception, transcription, archiving and destruction of data gathered from personal communications.

But, even after these changes in legislation, Romania has been convicted by the European Court of Human Rights for lacking adequate guarantees in the field of private life with regards to technical surveillance.³⁶

With regards to the technical surveillance and especially cell phones tapping, the Court has constantly concluded that an a priori control or an a posteriori control by a judge or another independent authority of the authorization issued by the prosecutor is lacking in the previous Criminal and Criminal Procedure Code.

The new Criminal Procedure Code aimed at eliminating the flaws of the old one, by making the legislation more accessible, more foreseeable and more predictable.

Considering the fact that the law is considerably new, there is little or no case law regarding the predictability, accessibility, foreseeability and clarity of the norms.

8.2. Special Legislation

Special legislation that includes the Law regarding the Romanian Information Services, a state organized service specialized in the field of Romania's national safety information and a part of the national defence system, working under direct supervision of the Supreme Defence Council, ³³ Raducu v. Romania [2009] European Court of Human Rights [English].

³⁴ Calmanovici v. Romania [2008] European Court of Human Rights [English].

³⁵ Dumitru Popescu v. Romania [2007] European Court of Human Rights [English].

³⁶ Ulariu v. Romania [2013] European Court of Human Rights [English].

n. 14/1992 and the Law regarding Romanian National Security n. 51/1991 allow the usage of technical surveillance under certain conditions and procedures regulated within these laws.

Article 10 of Law n. 14/1992 allows the Romanian Information Service to take the necessary actions specific for the gathering of the necessary information in case that there is a national security threat. These actions can be restrictive for some of the fundamental rights that a person has.

Prior to the entering into force of Law n. 255/2013, there was no method of control of these activities, no approval of these warrants by any judges, an aspect that has led to the conviction of the Romanian state in many cases.

For example, even after these legal changes, the European Court of Human Rights has stated:

‘The possibility to notify the commissions of defence and public order of the two chambers of the Parliament cannot compensate for the lack of any a priori or a posteriori control of the surveillance by an independent and impartial authority. As it is regulated now, the legislative power’s control seems more theoretical and lacking any practical effects for individuals. Furthermore, the law does not provide any sanctions or measures that the parliamentary commissions can take in case that they find any breaches of the law in the actions taken by the authorities that authorized the interceptions.’ (Case Dumitru Popescu v. Romania, 27 April 2007³⁷)

Article 3 of Law n. 51/1991 contains an exhaustive enumeration of what constitutes a threat to the Romanian national safety. Article 13 of the same law prescribes the course of action that Romanian authorities can take in order to obtain the required information. This includes physical surveillance, obtaining data generated or processed by electronic communications public providers and any technical surveillance needed.

In the same case, Dumitru Popescu v. Romania, the Court has established that technical surveillance can still be authorized by means of this law that has not been taken out of force yet, thus reinforcing the conclusion that this law does not contain clear legislative norms and enough guarantees against arbitrary.

8.3. Doctrinary Analysis

According to both jurisprudence and doctrine, in order for a limitation to be in accordance with the Convention, it must fulfill several conditions.

Firstly, it has to be regulated by a national law, this in turn implying two other criteria: the law must be both accessible and predictable. The accessibility condition is fulfilled by the Romanian national law, as many authors conclude, but the predictability condition may pose several issues.

³⁷ Dumitru Popescu v. Romania [2007] European Court of Human Rights [English].

According to Corneliu Birsan, a renowned Romanian author, the predictability of the law implies that it is written with sufficient precision to allow the citizen to adjust his social conduct and to foresee within reasonable conditions the consequences of a certain conduct.³⁸

He also states that even though an absolute predictability of the law is practically impossible, due to the necessity of the law to adapt to social circumstances and changes, this level is to be desired by the legislator in his endeavors.

A second condition that the national law must meet is the pursuing of a legitimate aim through its restrictions. Even though the list of crimes for which the electronic surveillance can be granted has grown with the new Code, considering the nature of these crimes, this condition will usually be fulfilled by the measure, considering the social interest it will most likely fulfill.

Another criteria is that the necessity of the limitation has to be a democratic solution. This being one of the most volatile conditions, it is likely that it will cause some difficulties in the future application of the law. This condition is also one that caused many conviction of the Romanian state for the previous Criminal Code.

The last criteria is the proportionality of the measure with its aim. This condition assures the minimization of the dissuasive effect the measure has on journalists and other media actors as well as allows the state to take the necessary actions. This condition has led to the conviction of Romania in *Cumpana and Mazare v. Romania*³⁹ for the fact that the two journalists accused of publishing a defamatory article were sentenced to jail as well as had their license revoked, never being permitted to profess in the journalistic domain forth - these sanctions were considered by the Court as being excessive.

With regards to the new Criminal Procedure Code, despite the fact that there are no recent convictions against Romania on the basis of illegal technical surveillance, many authors have already analyzed the content of the provisions with regard to the standards imposed by European legislation and jurisprudence. The new code may have resolved most of the irregularities sanctioned in the past by the European Court of Human Rights, but some aspects need a greater clarification and implementation.

According to Gheorghită Mateuț:

“The simple possibility that the discussions between an attorney and his client can be intercepted constitutes a violation of the right of private life and the right to a secret correspondence, but also the right to a defence, as a main component of the right to a fair trial. We believe that Article 139 (4) from the Criminal Procedure Code does not provide sufficient warrantees, as it does not eliminate the risk of prejudice suffered by the party that has had his discussion with his attorney intercepted, discussions that may contain ³⁸ Corneliu Birsan, Convenția Europeană a Drepturilor Omului. Comentariu pe Articole (2nd edn, CH Beck 2006) 674 [Romanian].

³⁹ Cumpana and Mazare v. Romania [2004] European Court of Human Rights [English].

information regarding the object of the criminal procedures, being able to lead the judiciary organs to the obtaining of new evidence by other probatory means.⁴⁰

Apart from these concerns regarding the predictability of the law, another issue was raised regarding the competence of the Romanian Information Service to emit technical surveillance warrants.

Such an extension in the material competence of the Romanian Information Service in the exclusive attributions of the courts and in the act of justice in general, exceeds the lines of a democratic society, representing an infringement of the democratic values consecrated by the European Court of Human Rights.⁴¹

9. Can Journalists Rely on Encryption and Anonymity Online to Protect Themselves and Their Sources Against Surveillance?

9.1. Introduction

The Romanian National Law makes no reference towards the illegality of data encryption. Therefore, in normal circumstances, journalists may protect themselves or their sources using both data encryption and online anonymity. However, in the case of reasonable suspicion in relation to the preparation or commission of certain offenses defined by the Romanian law, the issue of the equilibrium between the public and private interest can be put up to discussion, as mentioned below.

9.2. Journalists' Protection Against Surveillance

Firstly, as far as electronic surveillance is concerned, the Romanian National law does not offer journalists special protection in virtue of their profession. Therefore, the relevant general laws apply to the same extent to journalists as well as all other persons.

As there is no specific regulation in the Romanian legislation, the general principles of law apply. Hence, Article 8 of the ECHR is applicable.

In the Keegan v. Ireland decision⁴², the Court states that the essential object of Article 8 (art. 8) is to protect the individual against arbitrary action by the public authorities. Regard must be had to the fair balance that has to be struck between the competing interests of the individual and of the community as a whole; [...] the State enjoys a certain margin of appreciation [in appreciating this balance]. The principle is reiterated in the subsequent case law of the ECHR (e.g.: *Kroon and others vs. Netherlands*⁴³).

⁴⁰ Gheorghita Mateut, 'Garantarea secretului profesional al avocatului in lumina noului Cod de procedura penala' in 'Avocatura in Romania – 150 de ani in linia intai a luptei pentru Drept' (Hamangiu 2015) [Romanian].

⁴¹ Doru Ioan Cristescu, Victor Catalin Enescu, 'Puncte de vedere privind administrarea si expertizarea probelor multimedia' (Points of View Regarding the Administration and the Expertise of Multimedia Evidence, 4 March 2014) <<http://www.juridice.ro/312158/puncte-de-vedere-privind-administrarea-si-expertizarea-probelor-multimedia.html/>> accessed 28 April 2016.

⁴² Keegan v. Ireland [1994] European Court of Human Rights [English].

Therefore, although both data encryption and Internet anonymity are both legal in the Romanian judiciary system, the public interest of identifying suspects and outlining the circumstances of criminal actions prevails over the journalist's private interest. In such cases, it is the state's prerogative to analyze the proportionality and necessity of disposing the measure of electronic surveillance. Moreover, Article 142 of the Romanian Criminal Procedure Code states that data resulted from electronic surveillance measures may be used also in other criminal case if they contain eloquent and useful data or information regarding the preparation or commission of another crime of those set forth.

More importantly, according to Article 154 of the Romanian Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecutor supervising or conducting the criminal investigation may order immediate preservation of computer data, including of data referring to information traffic, that were stored by means of a computer system and that is in the possession or under the control of a provider of public electronic communication networks or of a provider of electronic communication services intended for the public, in the event that there is a danger that such data may be lost or altered. If the aforementioned preserved computer data is classified, regardless of the fact that there may not be any connection with the object of the criminal investigation in question, the information resulted from the preservation must be kept confidential.⁴⁴ However, the prosecution body has the right to access and analyze the classified information.⁴⁵ A minori ad major, even if a piece of information is encrypted, regardless of its source, the prosecution body can access it, analyze it and use it as evidence in criminal trial.

9.3. Conclusions

To sum up, it is legal for journalists to use data encryption and anonymity online, but these measures of precaution will not be effective when conducted upon data that are investigated in a criminal trial.

⁴³ Kroon and others v. Netherlands [1994] European Court of Human Rights [English].

⁴⁴ Nicolae Volonciu, Andreea Simona Uzlaeu, 'Noul Cod de Procedura Penala Comentat' (Bucuresti, Hamangiu 2014) [Romanian].

⁴⁵ Dec. n. 140 (for judges' and Supreme Court assistant magistrates' access to classified information) 2014 [Hotararea CSM pentru aprobarea Regulamentului privind accesul judecatorilor, procurorilor si magistratilor asistenti ai ICCJ la informatii clasificate]

10.Are whistle blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

10.1. Introduction

The risk of corruption is significantly increasing in environments where the reporting of any kind of information or activity that is illegal, unethical is not supported or protected. Employees from public or private sectors are the first that have access to information related to their workplace and practices, but unfortunately, due to this fact, they may be the subject of intimidation, harassment or even violence by their fellow colleagues or superiors. Whistleblower protection is therefore important to encourage the reporting of misconduct, fraud and corruption and can also be an effective tool.

10.2. Protection at International Level

First of all, whistleblower protection has been recognized by all major international instruments concerning corruption, among which we can mention: The 1998 OECD Recommendation on Improving Ethical Conduct in the Public Service including the Principles for Managing Ethics in the Public Service and the 2003 OECD Recommendation on Guidelines for Managing Conflict of Interest in the Public Service, The 2009 Recommendation of the OECD Council for Further Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions. Furthermore, the Council of Europe has developed a legal instrument on protecting individuals: Recommendation CM/Rec\(2014\)7 on the protection of whistleblowers.

10.3. Protection at National Level

As far as Romania is concerned, there is a specific law on whistleblowing protection since 2004: Law n. 571/2004. Romania was the first country in the continental legislative system to have a comprehensive whistleblower protection act. Regarding this fact, we have to mention here that this law covers only the personnel from the public sector. The initiative in adopting the legislation to protect whistleblowers appeared as a result of an advocacy campaign as part of a larger project meant to improve integrity in the public sector. According to the Romanian Whistleblower's Law, a whistleblower is

‘the person making a notice in good faith concerning any fact involving a violation of law, of professional deontology or of principles of a good administration, of efficiency, effectiveness, economic efficiency and transparency and which is employed in one of the public authorities and institutions within the central public administration, local public administration, in the apparatus of the Parliament, the work apparatus of the Presidential Administration, the work apparatus of the Government, autonomous administrative authorities, cultural public institutions, education, health and social assistance fields, national companies, national and local interest public corporations, as well as to national state capital companies’

Although in theory Law n. 571/2004 covers a plethora of disclosure activities, in practice the implementation suffers, as public servants have no knowledge of it most of the time, and public institutions prove to be reluctant in applying its provisions.⁴⁶ There is also a mentality issue: whistleblowers are seen as violating the principle of conformity and treated as outcasts, traitors.

We have to mention that, regarding the private sector, private companies can adopt their own rules through internal regulations. In other words, whistleblowers from the private sector are protected in a lesser degree, but they may still be able to enter the Witness Protection Program, falling under the provisions of Law n. 682/2002. Thus, their personal information is protected, including their identity.

In Article 7 of Law n. 571/2004 it is stated that the whistleblower's identity must be protected if the person making a disclosure does so against his or her hierarchical superior.

In conclusion, from the legal point of view, whistle blowers are protected by laws and the judicial system, but they nevertheless fear the public opprobrium and even harassment. This may come from a lack of understanding the law and poor awareness of their rights.

11. Conclusion

Answering the first question of the report meant delivering a scientific document that included a relevant introduction for the whole research. Taking this into consideration, the report can be divided into the introductory part which includes a short resume of the evolution in time of the subject, then going on to international influences and national facts from past until present. The theoretical part includes an analysis of all national legislation that provides protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information.

Romanian legislation does not provide a clear disposition which would state the prohibition of disclosing journalists sources due to the fact that Constitutional Court stated the fact that Law of Press 3/1974 is currently repealed. Taking into consideration the fact that this was the only national instrument which stated this prohibition, in order to "recreate" this prohibition in the national order courts it is necessary to use international law before a new law on the matter is adopted.

A journalist is a person that handles the collecting, photographing, recording, writing, editing or publishing information regarding local events, national, international, of public interest, with the purpose of publicly spreading this information, earning his living in a considerable proportion from this activity. This definition is quite open to interpretation, its content being not restricted.

The protection that is given to journalists is also provided for the headquarters of radio transmitters and other entities.

⁴⁶ Report on whistleblowing in Romania, Transparency International Romania.

It can be stated that there are minimum safeguards of journalistic sources in Romanian Law and they can be invoked in a Court of Law to provide a decent protection of the journalistic sources, starting with European legal safeguards and going all the way to the Deontological Code adopted by the media organizations.

The principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information are brought under the regulation in different national legislation. The limits of the right of non-disclosure are well developed and in line with the principle number 3 of the Recommendation, where the competent authority to give judgment on whether the disclosure of the sources of information is the only solution in a particular case or not, is in the hands of the national courts.

As there are no expressly mentioned criteria in the Romanian legislation for weighing the opposite interests of disclosure and non-disclosure, the judge has to appreciate the prevailing interest relying on jurisprudential sources in order to interpret the concept of necessity, analyzed in close relation with that of proportionality

The answer for question 7 was based on the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights and how our national legislation has changed during the years. More cases were mentioned, but only the most important one was analysed: Dalban v. Romania. The conclusion to it was that there has been a violation of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. This case law played an important role and was the source of great changes in our national legislation.

Also, a brief presentation of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights was made. In the end, some relevant national jurisprudence and some conclusions about the protection of journalists were displayed.

The criteria for using electronic surveillance are reasonable suspicion that the persona is preparing or has already committed one of several crimes, the importance of the information or the evidence that shall be obtained or the gravity of the crime and the impossibility to obtain the information in any other ways or the obtaining should prove extremely difficult. The previous Criminal Procedura Code has brought many convictions against Romania at the European Court of Human Rights, but the new Criminal Procedure Code has brought many improvements.

There is no caseload for this new legislation, but specialists conclude the new provisions are a great improvement.

As for whether or not journalists can rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance is concerned, it is legal for journalists to use data encryption and anonymity online, but these measures of precaution will not be effective when conducted upon data that are investigated in a criminal trial

From the legal point of view whistle blowers are protected by laws and the judicial system, but they nevertheless fear the public opprobrium and even harassment. This may come from a lack of understanding the law and poor awareness of their rights.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- The Constitution of Romania 1991 [Constitutia României] (amended and completed by Law n. 429/2003 on the revision of the Constitution of Romania).
- Law n. 8 (Regarding Copyrights and Other Connected Rights) 1996 [privind dreptul de autor si drepturile conexe].
- Law n. 504 (The Broadcasting Law, Regarding the Audio and Video Materials Published to the Public Audience) 2002 [Legea Audiovizualului].
- Law n. 19 (Regarding the Establishment and Functioning of the National News Agency AGERPRES) 2003 [privind organizarea si functionarea Agentiei Nationale de Presa AGERPRES].
- Law n. 571 (Regarding the Protection of the Personnel Belonging to Public Authorities, Public Institutes and Other Entities Who Report Breaches of the Law) 2004 [privind protectia personalului din autoritățile publice, instituțiile publice și din alte unități care semnalează încălcări ale legii].
- Law n. 286 (Regarding the Romanian Criminal Code) 2009 [Legea privind Codul Penal].
- Law n. 287 (Regarding the Civil Code of Romania) 2009 [Legea privind Codul Civil].
- Law n. 135 (Regarding the Romanian Criminal Procedure Code) 2010 [Legea privind Codul de Procedură Penală al României].
- The Unified Ethics Code 2009 [Codul Deontologic Unificat].
- Decision n. 140 (for judges' and Supreme Court Assistant Magistrates' Access to Classified Information) 2014 [Hotararea CSM pentru aprobarea Regulamentului privind accesul judecatorilor, procurorilor si magistratilor asistenti ai ICCJ la informatii clasificate].
- Decision n. 279 (Regarding the Exception of Unconstitutionality of Article 52 para 1b of Law n. 53/2003 – Labor Code) 2015 [Referitoare la exceptia de neconstitucionalitate a dispozitiilor art. 52 alin. (1) lit. b) din Legea 53/2003 – Codul Muncii].
- Decision n. 461 (Admitting the Objection of Unconstitutionality of the Law Amending the Government's Emergency Ordinance n. 111/2011 on Electronic Communications) 2015 [Asupra admiterii obiectiei de neconstitucionalitate a dispozitiilor Legii pentru modificarea si completarea Ordonantei de urgenta a Guvernului nr. 111/2011 privind comunicatiile electronice].
- Recommendation C(98)70/FINAL of the Council of the OECD (on Improving Ethical Conduct in the Public Service including the Principles for Managing Ethics in the Public Service) 1998.
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers (to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information) 2000.
- Recommendation of the Council of the OECD (on Guidelines for Managing Conflict of Interest in the Public Service) 2003.
- Recommendation C(2009)64 of the Council of the OECD (for Further Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions) 2009.

- Recommendation 1950 of The Parliamentary Assembly of the COE (on the Protection of Journalistic Sources) 2011.

12.2. Case Law

- Keegan v. Ireland [1994] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Kroon and others v. the Netherlands [1994] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Dalban v. Romania [1999] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Cumpana and Mazare v. Romania [2004] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark [2005] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Stângu and Scutelnicu v. Romania [2006] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Dumitru Popescu v. Romania [2007] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Calmanovici v. Romania [2008] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Raducu v. Romania [2009] the European Court of Human Rights [English].
- Ulariu v. Romania [2013] the European Court of Human Rights [English].

12.3. Books and articles

- Chiriță R, Conventia Europeană a Drepturilor Omului (2nd edn, CH Beck 2008) [Romanian].
- Macovei M, Dăgăliță A and Mihai D, Ghid juridic pentru ziaristi (3rd edn, ActiveWatch 2009) [Romanian].
- Bîrsan C, Conventia Europeană a Drepturilor Omului. Comentariu pe articole (2nd edn, CH Beck 2010) 674 [Romanian].
- Volonciu N and others, Noul Cod de Procedura Penală Comentat (Bucuresti, Hamangiu 2014) [Romanian].
- Mateut G, Avocatura in Romania – 150 de ani in linia intai a luptei pentru Drept - Garantarea secretului profesional al avocatului in lumina noului Cod de procedura penala (Hamangiu 2015) [Romanian].
- Moldovan C, Succinte consideratii referitoare la privilegiul confidentialitatii surselor de informare ale ziaristilor in reglementarea legala a unor state si in jurisprudenta CEDO [2012] Revista Dreptul n. 3/2012 181-194 [Romanian].
- Transparency International Romania, 'Whistleblowing: Implementing Provisions Regarding Whistleblower Protection. Monitoring Report at the Level of the Local public Administration'

12.4. Internet Sources

- The whistle blower's website <<http://www.avertizori.ro>> accessed 13 March 2016 [Romanian].
- 'Case of Dalban v. Romania'

<http://www.iidh.ed.cr/comunidades/libertadexpresion/docs/le_europeo/dalban%20vs%20romania%201999.htm> accessed 6 March 2016.

- ‘Cumpana si Mazare contra Romania’
< <http://jurisprudencedo.com/Cumpana-si-Mazare-contr-Romania-Libertatea-presei-Informatii-false-Sanctiuni-cu-inchisoarea-Proportionalitate.html/>> accessed 6 March 2016 [Romanian].
- Global Freedom of Expression Columbia University, ‘Morar v. Romania – Case Analysis’ < <https://globalfreedomofexpression.columbia.edu/cases/morar-v-romania/>> accessed 6 March 2016.
- Lumea Juridica, ‘Morar v. Romania’ (7 July 2015) <<http://juri.ro/morar-vs-romania-condamnarea-unui-jurnalist-pentru-publicarea-unor-articole-de-larg-interes-public-atrage-o-incalcare-a-libertatii-de-exprimare-informarea-cetatenilor-despre-strategiile-electorale-si-profilul-candidatilor-la-alegerile-prezidentiale-implic>> accessed 7 March 2016 [Romanian].
- Civil Sentence n. 6240 (2014) <<http://rolii.ro/hotarari/56b20270d27f2d5513970432/>> accessed 27 February 2016 [Romanian].
- Civil Sentence n. 1887 (2015) <<http://rolii.ro/hotarari/56b68528bdfd0c14b9ec026b/>> accessed 27 February 2016 [Romanian].
- Council of Europe, ‘Press release 062(2011)’ <<http://bit.ly/24qf8u6>> accessed 11 April 2016.
- Internal Newspaper <www.adevarul.ro> accessed 11 March 2016 [Romanian].
- European Court of Human Rights, ‘Fisă tematică - Protectia surselor jurnalistice’ (Topic Sheet: The protection of journalistic sources, April 2013) <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ROM.pdf> accessed 9 April 2016 [Romanian].
- Andronache CM, ‘Codul Deontologic al Jurnalistului, Elaborat de conventia Organizatiilor Media’ (The Journalists Code of Conduct adopted by the Media Organizations Convention, 7 July 2010) <<http://www.paginademedia.ro/2010/05/codul-deontologic-al-jurnalistului-elaborat-de-conventia-organizatiilor-de-media>> accessed 28 April 2016 [Romanian].
- Cristescu DI and Enescu VC, ‘Puncte de vedere privind administrarea si expertizarea probelor multimedia’ (Points of View Regarding the Administration and the Expertise of Multimedia Evidence, 4 March 2014) <<http://www.juridice.ro/312158/puncte-de-vedere-privind-administrarea-si-expertizarea-probelor-multimedia.html>> accessed 28 April 2016 [Romanian].
- Tarata G and Puiu A, ‘Cifra oficiala: ora si mandatul’ (The Official Figure: the Hour and the Mandate, 11 October 2015) <<http://www.luju.ro/institutii/servicii-secrete/cifra-oficiala-ora-si-mandatul-in-primele-9-luni-din-2015-inalta-curte-a-emis-2-020-de-mandate-de-interceptare-pe-siguranta-nationala-adica-224-pe-luna-judecatorii-iccj-semneaza-cate-10-mandate-in-fiecare-zi-lucratoare-media-este-identica-cu-cea-din-2014/>> accessed 28 February 2016 [Romanian].

- 'Protectia surselor de informatii si principiile acesteia' (The Protection of the Sources of Information and Its Principles) <<http://www.rasfoiesc.com/business/marketing/comunicare/Protectia-surselor-de-informat55.php>> accessed 4 May 2016 [Romanian].
- Macovei M, 'A guide to the implementation of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights' <<http://www.echr.coe.int/LibraryDocs/DG2/HRHAND/DG2-EN-HRHAND-02%282004%29.pdf/>> accessed 2 April 2016 [Romanian]

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Art. 11 Constitutia Romaniei (1) Statul român se obligă să îndeplinească întocmai și cu bună-credință obligațiile ce-i revin din tratatele la care este parte. (2) Tratatelor ratificate de Parlament, potrivit legii, fac parte din dreptul intern. (3) În cazul în care un tratat la care România urmează să devină parte cuprinde dispoziții contrare Constituției, ratificarea lui poate avea loc numai după revizuirea Constituției.	Art. 11 of the Constitution of Romania (1) The Romanian State pledges to fulfil as such and in good faith its obligations as deriving from the treaties it is a party to. (2) Treaties ratified by Parliament, according to the law, are part of national law. (3) If a treaty Romania is to become a party to comprises provisions contrary to the Constitution, its ratification shall only take place after the revision of the Constitution.
Art. 30 Constitutia Romaniei (1) Libertatea de exprimare a gândurilor, a opiniilor sau a credințelor și libertatea creațiilor de orice fel, prin viu grai, prin scris, prin imagini, prin sunete sau prin alte mijloace de comunicare în public, sunt inviolabile. (2) Cenzura de orice fel este interzisă. (3) Libertatea presei implică și libertatea de a înființa publicații. (4) Nici o publicație nu poate fi suprimată. (5) Legea poate impune mijloacelor de comunicare în masă obligația de a face publică sursa finanțării. (6) Libertatea de exprimare nu poate prejudicia demnitatea, onoarea, viața particulară a persoanei și nici dreptul la propria imagine. (7) Sunt interzise de lege defăimarea țării și a națiunii, îndemnul la război de agresiune, la ură națională, rasială, de clasă sau religioasă, incitarea la discriminare, la separatism teritorial sau la violență publică, precum și manifestările obscene, contrare bunelor moravuri.	Art. 30 of the Constitution of Romania (1) Freedom of expression of thoughts, opinions, or beliefs, and freedom of any creation, by words, in writing, in pictures, by sounds or other means of communication in public are inviolable. (2) Any censorship shall be prohibited. (3) Freedom of the press also involves the free setting up of publications. (4) No publication shall be suppressed. (5) The law may impose upon the mass media the obligation to make public their financing source. (6) Freedom of expression shall not be prejudicial to the dignity, honour, privacy of a person, and to the right to one's own image. (7) Any defamation of the country and the nation, any instigation to a war of aggression, to national, racial, class or religious hatred, any incitement to discrimination, territorial separatism, or public violence, as well as any obscene conduct contrary to morality shall be prohibited by law. (8) Civil liability for any information or creation made public falls upon the publisher or producer, the author, the producer of the artistic performance, the owner of the copying facilities, radio or television station,

(8) Răspunderea civilă pentru informația sau pentru creația adusă la cunoștință publică revine editorului sau realizatorului, autorului, organizatorului manifestării artistice, proprietarului mijlocului de multiplicare, al postului de radio sau de televiziune, în condițiile legii. Delictele de presă se stabilesc prin lege.	under the terms laid down by law. Indictable offences of the press shall be established by law.
Art. 31 Constituția României (1) Dreptul persoanei de a avea acces la orice informație de interes public nu poate fi îngrădit. (2) Autoritățile publice, potrivit competențelor ce le revin, sunt obligate să asigure informarea corectă a cetățenilor asupra treburilor publice și asupra problemelor de interes personal. (3) Dreptul la informație nu trebuie să prejudicieze măsurile de protecție a tinerilor sau securitatea națională. (4) Mijloacele de informare în masă, publice și private, sunt obligate să asigure informarea corectă a opiniei publice. (5) Serviciile publice de radio și de televiziune sunt autonome. Ele trebuie să garanteze grupurilor sociale și politice importante exercitarea dreptului la antenă. Organizarea acestor servicii și controlul parlamentar asupra activității lor se reglementează prin lege organică.	Art. 31 of the Constitution of Romania (1) A person's right of access to any information of public interest shall not be restricted. (2) The public authorities, according to their competence, shall be bound to provide correct information to the citizens in public affairs and matters of personal interest. (3) The right to information shall not be prejudicial to the measures of protection of young people or national security. (4) Public and private media shall be bound to provide correct information to the public opinion. (5) Public radio and television services shall be autonomous. They must guarantee any important social and political group the exercise of the right to broadcasting time. The organization of these services and the parliamentary control over their activity shall be regulated by an organic law.
Art. 53 Constituția României (1) Exercițiul unor drepturi sau al unor libertăți poate fi restrâns numai prin lege și numai dacă se impune, după caz, pentru: apărarea securității naționale, a ordinii, a sănătății ori a moralei publice, a drepturilor și a libertăților cetățenilor; desfășurarea instrucției penale; prevenirea consecințelor unei calamități naturale, ale unui dezastru ori ale unui sinistru deosebit de grav. (2) Restrângerea poate fi dispusă numai dacă	Art. 53 of the Constitution of Romania The exercise of certain rights or freedoms can only be restricted by law, and only if necessary, as the case may be, for the defence of national security, of public order, health, or morals, of the citizens' rights and freedoms; conducting a criminal investigation; preventing the consequences of a natural calamity, disaster, or an extremely severe catastrophe. Such restriction shall only be ordered if necessary in a democratic society. The measure shall be proportional to the situation that has caused

este necesară într-o societate democratică. Măsura trebuie să fie proporțională cu situația care a determinat-o, să fie aplicată în mod nediscriminatoriu și fără a aduce atingere existenței dreptului sau a libertății.	it and it shall be applied without discrimination, and without infringing on the existence of such right or freedom.
Art. 63, Legea nr. 3/1974 Organele de presa nu sînt obligate sa dezvaluie celor vizati sursele de informație pe baza cărora au elaborat materialele difuzate, sursele nedezvaluite constituind secret profesional.	Art. 63 of the Law n. 3/1974 The media bodies may not be compelled to divulge to those who are targeted the sources of information upon which they created the broadcasted materials, the sources being part of professional secrecy.
Art. 7, Legea nr. 8/1996 Constituie obiect al dreptului de autor operele originale de creație intelectuală în domeniul literar, artistic sau științific, oricare ar fi modalitatea de creație, modul sau forma de exprimare și independent de valoarea și destinația lor, cum sunt: a) scrierile literare și publicistice, conferințele, predicile, pledoariile, prelegerile și orice alte opere scrise sau orale, precum și programele pentru calculator; b) operele științifice, scrise sau orale, cum ar fi: comunicările, studiile, cursurile universitare, manualele școlare, proiectele și documentațiile științifice; c) compozițiile muzicale cu sau fără text; d) operele dramatice, dramatico-muzicale, operele coregrafice și pantomimele; e) operele cinematografice, precum și orice alte opere audiovizuale; f) operele fotografice, precum și orice alte opere exprimate printr-un procedeu analog fotografiei; g) operele de artă grafică sau plastică, cum ar fi: operele de sculptură, pictură, gravură, litografie, arta monumentală, scenografie, tapiserie, ceramică, plastica sticlei și a metalului, desene, design, precum și alte opere de artă aplicată produselor destinate unei utilizări practice; h) operele de arhitectură, inclusiv planșele,	Art. 7 of the Law n. 8/1996 The subject matter of copyright shall be original works of intellectual creation in the literary, artistic, or scientific field, regardless of their manner of creation, specific form or mode of expression and independently of their merit and purpose, such as: (a) literary and journalistic writings, lectures, sermons, pleadings, addresses and any other written or oral works, and also computer programs; (b) scientific works, written or oral, such as presentations, studies, university textbooks, school textbooks and scientific projects and documentation; (c) musical compositions with or without words; (d) dramatic and dramatico-musical works, choreographic and mimed works; (e) cinematographic works and any other audiovisual works; (f) photographic works and any other works expressed by a process analogous to photography; (g) works of three-dimensional art such as: works of sculpture, painting, drawing, engraving, lithography, monumental art, stage design, tapestry, ceramics, glass and metal shaping, and also works of art applied to products intended for practical use; (h) works of architecture, including sketches, scale models and the graphic work that constitutes an architectural project;

machetele și lucrările grafice ce formează proiectele de arhitectură; i) lucrările plastice, hărțile și desenele din domeniul topografiei, geografiei și științei în general.	(i) three-dimensional works, maps and drawings in the field of topography, geography and science in general.
Art. 91, Legea nr. 8/1996 (1) Editorul sau producătorul, la cererea autorului, este obligat să păstreze secretul surselor de informații folosite în opere și să nu publice documentele referitoare la acestea. (2) Dezvăluirea secretului este permisă cu consimțământul persoanei care l-a încredințat sau în baza unei hotărâri judecătorești, definitive și irevocabile.	Art. 91 of the Law n. 8/1996 (1) At the author's request, the publisher or producer shall be obliged to preserve the secrecy of the information sources used in the works and to abstain from publishing documents referring thereto. (2) The lifting of the secrecy shall be permitted with the consent of the person who has requested it or on the basis of a final and irrevocable judgment.
Art. 113, Legea nr. 8/1996 Organismele de radiodifuziune și de televiziune au dreptul patrimonial exclusiv de a autoriza sau de a interzice, cu obligația pentru cel autorizat de a menționa numele organismelor, următoarele: a) fixarea propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune; b) reproducerea prin orice mijloc și sub orice formă a propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune fixate pe orice fel de suport, indiferent dacă au fost transmise prin fir sau fără fir, inclusiv prin cablu sau satelit; c) distribuirea propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune fixate pe orice fel de suport; d) importul, în vederea comercializării pe piața internă, a propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune fixate pe orice fel de suport; e) retransmiterea sau reemiterea propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune prin mijloace fără fir, prin fir, prin cablu, prin satelit sau prin orice alt procedeu similar,	Art. 113 of the Law n. 8/1996 Radio and television broadcasting organizations shall have the exclusive economic right to authorize or to prohibit the following, subject to the authorized person's obligation to mention the name of the organizations: (a) the fixing of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs; (b) reproduction, in whole or in part, direct or indirect, temporary or permanent, by any means and under any form, of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs fixed on any kind of physical medium, regardless whether transmitted by wire or wireless, including by cable or satellite; (c) the distribution of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs fixed on any kind of physical medium; (d) the import for trading on domestic market of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs fixed on any kind of physical medium; (e) the retransmission or reemission of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs by wireless means, by wire, by cable, by satellite or by any other

precum și prin orice alt mod de comunicare către public, inclusiv retransmiterea pe Internet; f) comunicarea publică a propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune în locuri accesibile publicului, cu plata intrării; g) Închirierea propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune, fixate pe orice tip de suport; h) Împrumutul propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune fixate pe orice fel de suport; i) punerea la dispoziția publicului a propriilor emisiuni și servicii de programe de radiodifuziune sau de televiziune fixate pe orice fel de suport, indiferent dacă au fost emise prin fir sau fără fir, inclusiv prin cablu sau satelit, astfel încât să poată fi accesate în orice loc și în orice moment ales, în mod individual, de către public.	similar proceeding, as well as by any other mode of communication to the public, including retransmission through Internet; (f) the communication to the public of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs in places accessible to the public, against payment of an admission charge; (g) the rental of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs, fixed on any kind of physical medium; (h) the lending of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs, fixed on any kind of physical medium; (i) the making available to the public of their own broadcasts and services of radio or television programs, fixed on any kind of physical medium, regardless whether emitted by wire or wireless, including by cable or satellite, so that members of the public may access them from a place and at a time individually chosen by them.
Art. 3, Legea nr. 51/1991 Constituie amenințări la adresa securității naționale a României următoarele: a) planurile și acțiunile care vizează suprimarea sau știrbirea suveranității, unității, independenței sau indivizibilității statului român; b) acțiunile care au ca scop, direct sau indirect, provocarea de război contra țării sau de război civil, înlesnirea ocupației militare străine, aservirea față de o putere străină ori ajutorarea unei puteri sau organizații străine de a săvârși oricare din aceste fapte; c) trădarea prin ajutorarea inamicului; d) acțiunile armate sau orice alte acțiuni violente care urmăresc slăbirea puterii de stat; e) spionajul, transmiterea secretelor de stat unei puteri sau organizații străine ori	Art. 3 of the Law n. 51/2001 The following are considered threats to Romania's national security: a) the projects and actions aiming at the suppression or at the prejudice of the sovereignty, unity, independence or indivizibility of the Romanian state; b) the actions having as purpose, directly or indirectly, the provocation of a war against the country, or of a civil war, facilitating foreign military occupation, subjugation to a foreign power, or aiding a foreign power or organization to commit any of these deeds; c) treason by helping the enemy; d) the military or any other violent actions aiming at the weakening of the state power; e) espionage, transference of state secrets to a foreign power or organization, or to their agents, illegal procurement and holding of state secret documents or data with a view to transferring them to a foreign power or

agenților acestora, procurarea ori deținerea ilegală de documente sau date secrete de stat, în vederea transmiterii lor unei puteri sau organizații străine ori agenților acestora sau în orice alt scop neautorizat de lege, precum și divulgarea secretelor de stat sau neglijența în păstrarea acestora;

f) subminarea, sabotajul sau orice alte acțiuni care au ca scop înlăturarea prin forță a instituțiilor democratice ale statului ori care aduc atingere gravă drepturilor și libertăților fundamentale ale cetățenilor români sau pot aduce atingere capacității de apărare ori altor asemenea interese ale țării, precum și actele de distrugere, degradare ori aducere în stare de neîntrebuințare a structurilor necesare bunei desfășurări a vieții social-economice sau apărării naționale;

g) acțiunile prin care se atentează la viața, integritatea fizică sau sănătatea persoanelor care îndeplinesc funcții importante în stat ori a reprezentanților altor state sau ai organizațiilor internaționale, a căror protecție trebuie să fie asigurată pe timpul șederii în România, potrivit legii, tratatelor și convențiilor încheiate, precum și practicii internaționale;

h) inițierea, organizarea, săvârșirea sau sprijinirea în orice mod a acțiunilor totalitariste sau extremiste de sorginte comunistă, fascistă, legionară sau de orice altă natură, rasiste, antisemite, revizioniste, separatiste care pot pune în pericol sub orice formă unitatea și integritatea teritorială a României, precum și incitarea la fapte ce pot periclita ordinea statului de drept;

i) actele teroriste, precum și inițierea sau organization, or to their agents, or with any other end, unauthorized by law, as well as disclosure of state secrets, or negligence in their preserving;

f) undermining, sabotage or any other actions that have as purpose the removal by force of the democratic institutions of the state or that gravely harm the fundamental rights and freedoms of Romanian citizens, or may damage the defence capacity, or other similar interests of the country, as well as the acts of destruction, degradation or bringing in an unusable state the structures necessary to the good development of social and economic life, or to the national defence;

g) the actions by which an attempt is made on the life, physical integrity or the health of the persons holding important positions in the state, or of the representatives of other states, or of international organizations, whose protection must be ensured during their sojourn in Romania, in accordance with the law, the treaties and agreements concluded, as well as with the international practice;

h) the initiation, organization, perpetration, or the supporting in any way of the totalitarian or extremist actions of a communist, fascist, iron guardist, or of any other origin, of the racial, anti-Semitic, revisionist, separatist actions that can endanger in any way the unity and territorial integrity of Romania, as well as the instigation to deeds that can put in danger the order of the state governed by the rule of law;

i) the terrorist acts, as well as the initiation or the supporting in any way of any activities whose purpose is the perpetration of such deeds;

j) the attempts committed by any means upon a community;

k) the stealing of armament, ammunition, explosive or radioactive, toxic or biological materials from the units authorized to hold them, smuggling with these materials, the

sprijinirea în orice mod a oricăror activități al căror scop îl constituie săvârșirea de asemenea fapte; j) atentatele contra unei colectivități, săvârșite prin orice mijloace; k) sustragerea de armament, muniție, materii explozive sau radioactive, toxice sau biologice din unitățile autorizate să le dețină, contrabanda cu acestea, producerea, deținerea, înstrăinarea, transportul sau folosirea lor în alte condiții decât cele prevăzute de lege, precum și portul de armament sau muniție, fără drept, dacă prin acestea se pune în pericol securitatea națională; l) inițierea sau constituirea de organizații sau grupări ori aderarea sau sprijinirea sub orice formă a acestora, în scopul desfășurării vreunora din activitățile enumerate la lit. a)-k), precum și desfășurarea în secret de asemenea activități de către organizații sau grupări constituite potrivit legii. m) orice acțiuni sau inacțiuni care lezează interesele economice strategice ale României, cele care au ca efect periclitarea, gestionarea ilegală, degradarea ori distrugerea resurselor naturale, fondurilor forestier, cinegetic și piscicol, apelor și altor asemenea resurse, precum și monopolizarea ori blocarea accesului la acestea, cu consecințe la nivel național sau regional.	manufacturing, holding, alienation, transport or their utilization in other conditions than those provided by the law, as well as the illegal bearing of armament and ammunition, if by these deeds national security is exposed to danger; l) the initiation or constitution of organizations or groups, adhering to them, or their supporting in any way, with a view to carrying out one of the activities mentioned under the paragraphs a) to k), as well as the carrying out in secrecy of such activities by organizations or groups constituted according to the law. m) any action or inaction which injure the strategic economic interests of Romania, the ones that have as an effect the endangering, illegal management, the damage or destruction of the natural resources, the forrest, hunting and fishing funds, the waters and other such resources, as well as monopolizing or blocking the access to them, which may lead to consequences at national or international level.
Art. 13, Legea nr. 51/1991 În situațiile prevăzute la art. 3 organele cu atribuții în domeniul securității naționale pot, în condițiile legii privind organizarea și funcționarea acestora: a) să solicite și să obțină obiecte, înscrisuri sau relații oficiale de la autorități sau instituții	Art. 13 of the Law n. 51/2001 In the cases stipulated under Article 3, the authorities with competence in national security can, in justified cases regarding their organisation and functioning: a) request and obtain objects, documents or official relations from the public authorities or public institution, or they can request them from a legal entity or a natural person;

publice, respectiv să solicite de la persoane juridice de drept privat ori de la persoane fizice; b) să consulte specialiști ori experți; c) să primească sesizări sau note de relații; d) să fixeze unele momente operative prin fotografiere, filmare sau prin alte mijloace tehnice ori să efectueze constatări personale cu privire la activități publice desfășurate în locuri publice, dacă această activitate este efectuată ocazional; e) să solicite obținerea datelor generate sau prelucrate de către furnizorii de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori furnizorii de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului, altele decât conținutul acestora, și reținute de către aceștia potrivit legii; f) să efectueze activități specifice culegerii de informații care presupun restrângerea exercițiului unor drepturi sau libertăți fundamentale ale omului desfășurate cu respectarea prevederilor legale.	b) consult specialists or experts; c) receive notices; d) fix some operative moments by photographing, filming or by any other technical means, or to make individual observations regarding public activities carried out in public places, if that activity is carried out on an occasional basis; e) request obtaining the data generated or processed by the providers of public electronic communication network or by the may require obtaining data generated or processed by providers of public electronic communications networks or providers of the communication services for the public, others than their content, and retained by them under the law; f) may undertake specific activities that involve collecting information that require the restriction of some fundamental human rights and freedoms conducted under the law.
Art. 7, Legea nr. 504/2002 (1) Caracterul confidențial al surselor de informare utilizate în conceperea sau elaborarea de știri, de emisiuni sau de alte elemente ale serviciilor de programe este garantat de prezenta lege. (2) Orice jurnalist sau realizator de programe este liber să nu dezvăluie date de natura să identifice sursa informațiilor obținute în legătura directă cu activitatea sa profesională. (3) Se considera date de natura sa identifice o sursa următoarele: a) numele și datele personale, precum și vocea sau imaginea unei surse; b) circumstanțele concrete ale obținerii informațiilor de către jurnalist; c) partea nepublicată a informației furnizate de sursa jurnalistului; d) datele cu caracter personal ale jurnalistului sau radiodifuzorului, legate de activitatea	Art. 7 of the Law n. 504/2002 (1) Confidentiality of the sources of information used in the design or development of news, shows or other elements of program services is guaranteed by law. (2) Any journalist (...) is free not to disclose information that could identify the source of information obtained directly linked to his professional activity. (3) It is considered information that could identify a source the following: a) name and personal data as well as voice or image of a source; b) factual circumstances of acquiring information by journalist; c) the unpublished information provided by the journalist's source; d) personal data of the journalist or radio speaker related work to obtain information disseminated.

pentru obținerea informațiilor difuzate. (4) Confidențialitatea surselor de informare obliga, în schimb, la asumarea răspunderii pentru corectitudinea informațiilor furnizate. (5) Persoanele care, prin efectul relațiilor lor profesionale cu jurnaliștii, iau cunoștința de informații de natura să identifice o sursă prin colectarea, tratarea editorială sau publicarea acestor informații, beneficiază de aceeași protecție ca jurnaliștii. (6) Dezvăluirea unei surse de informare poate fi dispusă de instanțele judecătorești numai dacă aceasta este necesară pentru apărarea siguranței naționale sau a ordinii publice, precum și în măsura în care aceasta dezvăluire este necesară pentru soluționarea cauzei aflate în fața instanței judecătorești, atunci când: a) nu exista sau au fost epuizate măsuri alternative la divulgare cu efect similar; b) interesul legitim al divulgării depășește interesul legitim al nedivulgării.	(4) The confidentiality of information sources obliges in return, responsibility for the accuracy of the information provided. (5) Persons who, through their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information that could identify a source by gathering, editorial treating or publishing such information will benefit of the same protection as journalists. (6) Disclosure of information sources can only be ordered by courts if this is necessary for the protection of national security or public order, and to the extent that such disclosure is necessary for solving the case facing the court when: a) there does not exist or have been exhausted the alternatives to disclosure of similar effect; b) the legitimate interest of disclosure exceeds the legitimate interest of non-disclosure.
Art. 8, Legea nr. 504/2002 (1) Autoritățile publice abilitate asigura, la cerere: a) protecția jurnaliștilor în cazul în care aceștia sunt supuși unor presiuni sau amenințări de natura să împiedice ori să restrângă în mod efectiv libera exercitare a profesiei lor; b) protecția sediilor și a localurilor radiodifuzorilor, în cazul în care acestea sunt supuse unor amenințări de natura să împiedice sau să afecteze libera desfășurare a activității lor. (2) Protecția jurnaliștilor și a sediilor sau a localurilor radiodifuzorilor, în condițiile alin. (1), nu trebuie să devină pretext pentru a	Art. 8 of the Law n. 504/2002 (1) Authorized public authorities shall ensure upon request: a) journalists' protection in case they are subject to pressures or threats that could effectively impede or restrict the free exertion of their profession; b) the protection of the head quarters and offices of the radio-broadcasters in case they are subject to threats that could impede or affect the free development of their activity. (2) The protection of journalists and of headquarters or offices of radio-broadcasters in the terms of paragraph (1) may not become a pretext to prevent or restrict the free exertion of their profession or activity.

Împiedica sau a restrânge libera exercitare a profesiei ori a activității acestora.
Art. 91. Legea nr. 504/2002 (1) Constituie contravenție nerespectarea de către furnizorii sau distribuitorii de servicii a dispozițiilor prezentei legi prevăzute la art. 22 alin. (1), art. 24 alin. (1) și (2), art. 26¹ alin. (1), art. 31 alin. (1), (3), (4) și (5), art. 39¹ și art. 48, precum și ale deciziilor având caracter normativ emise de Consiliu. (2) În cazurile prevăzute la alin. (1) Consiliul va emite o somație conținând condiții și termene precise de intrare în legalitate. (3) În cazul în care furnizorul sau distribuitorul de servicii nu intră în legalitate în termenul și în condițiile stabilite prin somație ori încalcă din nou aceste prevederi, se aplică o amendă contravențională de la 5.000 lei la 100.000 lei.	Art. 91 of the Law n. 504/2002 1) The infringement by radio-broadcasters or service distributors of the provisions of this Law, mentioned in art. 22 paragraph (1), art.24 paragraphs (1) and (2), art.26¹ paragraph (1), art. 31 paragraphs (1), (3), (4) and (5), art. 39¹ și art. 48 and of the decisions representing regulation norms issued by the Council, shall be considered offences. 2) In cases stipulated in paragraph (1), the Council shall issue a writ including the conditions and terms for abiding by the law. 3) If the radio-broadcaster or the service distributor does not abide by the law within the terms and under the conditions established in the summons or if he infringes again these provisions, a civil penalty from 5,000 lei to 100,000 lei shall be applied.
Art. 10, Legea nr. 19/2003 Caracterul confidențial al surselor de informare a personalului de specialitate este garantat prin prezenta lege. Dezvăluirea acestor surse, motivată prin existența unui interes public, poate fi făcută numai în baza unei hotărâri judecătorești.	Art. 10 of the Law n. 19/2003 The confidential nature of the information sources of specialized personnel is guaranteed through the present law. Disclosure of those sources, motivated by public interest, can be made only based on a judicial decision.
Art. 7, Legea nr. 571/2004 (1) În fața comisiei de disciplină sau a altor organe similare, avertizorii beneficiază de protecție după cum urmează: a) avertizorii în interes public beneficiază de prezumția de bună-credință, în condițiile art. 4 lit. h), până la proba contrară; b) la cererea avertizorului cercetat disciplinar ca urmare a unui act de avertizare, comisiile de disciplină sau alte organisme similare din cadrul autorităților publice, instituțiilor	Art. 7 of the Law n. 571/2004 (1) Before the disciplinary committee or other similar bodies, whistleblowers benefit from protection as follows: a) public interest whistleblowers benefit from the presumption of goodfaith, under the conditions of art. 4 subsection h), until proven otherwise; b) upon the request of the whistleblower under disciplinary investigation following a whistleblowing act, disciplinary committees or other similar bodies within the public authorities, public institutions or other

publice sau al altor unități prevăzute la art. 2 au obligația de a invita presa și un reprezentant al sindicatului sau al asociației profesionale. Anunțul se face prin comunicat pe pagina de Internet a autorității publice, instituției publice sau a unității bugetare, cu cel puțin 3 zile lucrătoare înainte de ședința, sub sancțiunea nulității raportului și a sancțiunii disciplinare aplicate. (2) În situația în care cel reclamat prin avertizarea în interes public este șef ierarhic, direct sau indirect, ori are atribuții de control, inspecție și evaluare a avertizorului, comisia de disciplină sau alt organism similar va asigura protecția avertizorului, ascunzându-i identitatea.	establishments stipulated by art. 2, shall invite the press and a representative of the trade union or of the professional association. The announcement shall be made in the form of a release on the webpage of the public authority, public institution or budgetary establishment, at least 3 working days before the date of the meeting, otherwise the report and the disciplinary sanction applied can be declared null. (2) In case the person incriminated by the public interest whistleblowing is the direct or indirect superior, has control or inspection and evaluation responsibilities over the whistleblower, the disciplinary committee or other similar body shall ensure the protection of the whistleblower by hiding his/her identity.
Art. 226 Cod Penal Violarea vieții private (1) Atingerea adusă vieții private, fără drept, prin fotografierea, captarea sau înregistrarea de imagini, ascultarea cu mijloace tehnice sau înregistrarea audio a unei persoane aflate într-o locuință sau încăpere ori dependența fiind de aceasta sau a unei convorbiri private se pedepsește cu închisoare de la o lună la 6 luni sau cu amendă. (2) Divulgarea, difuzarea, prezentarea sau transmiterea, fără drept, a sunetelor, convorbirilor ori a imaginilor prevăzute în alin. (1), către o altă persoană sau către public, se pedepsește cu închisoare de la 3 luni la 2 ani sau cu amendă. (3) Acțiunea penală se pune în mișcare la plângerea prealabilă a persoanei vătămate. (4) Nu constituie infracțiune fapta săvârșită: a) de către cel care a participat la întâlnirea	Art. 226 of the Criminal Code Violation of privacy (1) The unlawful violation of privacy, by photographing, capturing or recording images, by listening using technical means or by recording audio of an individual, in a house or room or outbuilding related to them or to a private conversation shall be punishable by no less than 1 month and no more than 6 months of imprisonment or by a fine. (2) The unlawful disclosure, dissemination, presentation or transmission of sounds, conversations or images set out in par. (1) to another person or to the general public shall be punishable by no less than 3 months and no more than 2 years of imprisonment or by a fine. (3) Criminal action shall be initiated based on a prior complaint filed by the victim. (4) The following do not constitute offenses: a) the act committed by the individual who attended the meeting with the victim during which the sounds and conversations were recorded and photos were taken, if there is a legitimate interest; b) if the victim has acted with the explicit

cu persoana vătămată în cadrul căreia au fost surprinse sunetele, convorbirile sau imaginile, dacă justifică un interes legitim; b) dacă persoana vătămată a acționat explicit cu intenția de a fi văzută ori auzită de făptuitor; c) dacă făptuitorul surprinde săvârșirea unei infracțiuni sau contribuie la dovedirea săvârșirii unei infracțiuni; d) dacă surprinde fapte de interes public, care au semnificație pentru viața comunității și a căror divulgare prezintă avantaje publice mai mari decât prejudiciul produs persoanei vătămate. (5) Plasarea, fără drept, de mijloace tehnice de înregistrare audio sau video, în scopul săvârșirii faptelor prevăzute în alin. (1) și alin. (2), se pedepsește cu închisoarea de la unu la 5 ani.	intention to be seen or heard by the perpetrator; c) if the perpetrator has records of the commission of an offense or helps prove that an offense was committed; d) if public-interest acts are recorded, which are meaningful to the life of the community and whose disclosure has public advantages that outweigh the damage to the victim. (5) Unlawfully installing technical means for audio or video recording, in order to commit the acts set out in par. (1) and par. (2), shall be punishable by no less than 1 and no more than 5 years of imprisonment.
Art. 267 Cod Penal Omisiunea sesizării (1) Funcționarul public care, luând cunoștință de săvârșirea unei fapte prevăzute de legea penală în legătură cu serviciul în cadrul căruia își îndeplinește sarcinile, omite sesizarea de îndată a organelor de urmărire penală se pedepsește cu închisoare de la 3 luni la 3 ani sau cu amendă. (2) Când fapta este săvârșită din culpă, pedeapsa este închisoarea de la 3 luni la un an sau amendă.	Art. 267 of the Criminal Code Omission to notify the judicial bodies (1) The act of a public servant who, becoming aware of the commission of an offense criminalized by law in connection with the service where they work, omits to immediately notify the criminal investigation body, shall be punishable by no less than 3 months and no more than 3 years of imprisonment or by a fine. (2) If the act is committed with basic intent, the penalty shall consist of no less than 3 months and no more than 1 years of imprisonment or a fine.
Art. 269 Cod Penal Favorizarea făptuitorului (1) Ajutorul dat făptuitorului în scopul împiedicării sau îngreunării cercetărilor într-o cauză penală, tragerii la răspundere penală,	Art. 269 of the Criminal Code Aiding and abetting a perpetrator (1) The act of aiding and abetting a perpetrator, for the purposes of preventing or hindering the investigation in a criminal case, criminal liability, serving a sentence or a

executării unei pedepse sau măsuri privative de libertate se pedepsește cu închisoare de la unu la 5 ani sau cu amendă. (2) Pedepsa aplicată favorizatorului nu poate fi mai mare decât pedeapsa prevăzută de lege pentru fapta săvârșită de autor. (3) Favorizarea săvârșită de un membru de familie nu se pedepsește.	custodial sentence shall be punishable by no less than 1 and no more than 5 years of imprisonment or by a fine. (2) The penalty for the individual who has aided and abetted the perpetrator may not exceed the penalty provided by the law for the offense committed by the perpetrator. 3) Aiding and abetting committed by a family member shall not be punishable.
Art. 10 Codul de Procedura Penală Dreptul la apărare (1) Părțile și subiecții procesuali principali au dreptul de a se apăra ei înșiși sau de a fi asistați de avocat. (2) Părțile, subiecții procesuali principali și avocatul au dreptul să beneficieze de timpul și înlesnirile necesare pregătirii apărării. (3) Suspectul are dreptul de a fi informat de îndată și înainte de a fi ascultat despre fapta pentru care se efectuează urmărirea penală și încadrarea juridică a acesteia. Inculpatul are dreptul de a fi informat de îndată despre fapta pentru care s-a pus în mișcare acțiunea penală împotriva lui și încadrarea juridică a acesteia. (4) Înainte de a fi ascultați, suspectului și inculpatului trebuie să li se pună în vedere că au dreptul de a nu face nicio declarație. (5) Organele judiciare au obligația de a asigura exercitarea deplină și efectivă a dreptului la apărare de către părți și subiecții procesuali principali în tot cursul procesului penal. (6) Dreptul la apărare trebuie exercitat cu bună-credință, potrivit scopului pentru care a fost recunoscut de lege.	Art. 10 of the Criminal Procedure Code Right to defense (1) The parties and main subjects in the proceedings have the right to defend themselves or be assisted by a counsel. (2) The parties, main subjects on the proceedings and the counsel have the right to be given the time and facilitations needed for preparing a defense. (3) The suspect has the right to be informed immediately, and before being interviewed, of the offense the criminal investigation is looking into and the charge for that offense. The defendant has the right to be informed immediately of the offense the prosecution against them has started for, and the charges for that offense. (4) Before being interviewed the suspect and defendant must be informed that they have the right to make no statements whatsoever. (5) The judicial bodies are under an obligation to ensure full and effective exercise by the parties and main subjects in the proceedings of their right to defense throughout the criminal proceedings. (6) The right to defense shall be exercised in good faith, according to the goal for which the law recognizes it.
Art. 83 Codul de Procedura Penală Drepturile inculpatului	Art. 83 of the Criminal Procedure Code Rights of defendants

În cursul procesului penal, inculpatul are următoarele drepturi: a) dreptul de a nu da nicio declarație pe parcursul procesului penal, atrăgându-i-se atenția că dacă refuză să dea declarații nu va suferi nicio consecință defavorabilă, iar dacă va da declarații acestea vor putea fi folosite ca mijloace de probă împotriva sa; a¹) dreptul de a fi informat cu privire la fapta pentru care este cercetat și încadrarea juridică a acesteia; b) dreptul de a consulta dosarul, în condițiile legii; c) dreptul de a avea un avocat ales, iar dacă nu își desemnează unul, în cazurile de asistență obligatorie, dreptul de a i se desemna un avocat din oficiu; d) dreptul de a propune administrarea de probe în condițiile prevăzute de lege, de a ridica excepții și de a pune concluzii; e) dreptul de a formula orice alte cereri ce țin de soluționarea laturii penale și civile a cauzei; f) dreptul de a beneficia în mod gratuit de un interpret atunci când nu înțelege, nu se exprimă bine sau nu poate comunica în limba română; g) dreptul de a apela la un mediator, în cazurile permise de lege; g¹) dreptul de a fi informat cu privire la drepturile sale; h) alte drepturi prevăzute de lege.	During the course of criminal proceedings, a defendant has the following rights: a) not to give any statements during criminal proceedings, and their attention shall be drawn to the fact that their refusal to make any statements shall not cause them to suffer any unfavorable consequences, and that any statement they do make may be used as evidence against them; a¹) to be informed of the act for which they are under investigation and the charges against them; b) to consult the case file, under the law; c) to have a retained counsel and, if they cannot afford one, in cases of mandatory legal assistance the right to have a court-appointed counsel; d) to propose production of evidence under the terms set by law, to raise objections and to argue in court; e) to file any other applications related to the settlement of the criminal and civil part of the case; f) to an interpreter free of charge, when they cannot understand, cannot express themselves properly or cannot communicate in the Romanian language; g) to use a mediator, in cases permitted by law; g¹) to be informed of their rights; h) other rights set by law.
Art. 118 Codul de Procedura Penala Dreptul martorului de a nu se acuza Declarația de martor dată de o persoană care, în aceeași cauză, anterior declarației a avut sau, ulterior, a dobândit calitatea de suspect	Art. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code Right of witnesses to avoid self-incrimination A witness statement given by a person who had the capacity as suspect or defendant before such testimony or subsequently acquired the capacity of suspect or defendant in the same case, may not be used against

ori inculpat nu poate fi folosită împotriva sa. Organele judiciare au obligația să menționeze, cu ocazia consemnării declarației, calitatea procesuală anterioară.	them. At the moment when they record the statement, judicial bodies are under an obligation to mention their previous capacity.
Art. 139 Codul de Procedura Penală Supravegherea tehnică (1) Supravegherea tehnică se dispune de judecătorul de drepturi și libertăți atunci când sunt îndeplinite cumulativ următoarele condiții: a) există o suspiciune rezonabilă cu privire la pregătirea sau săvârșirea unei infracțiuni dintre cele prevăzute la alin. (2); b) măsura să fie proporțională cu restrângerea drepturilor și libertăților fundamentale, date fiind particularitățile cauzei, importanța informațiilor ori a probelor ce urmează a fi obținute sau gravitatea infracțiunii; c) probele nu ar putea fi obținute în alt mod sau obținerea lor ar presupune dificultăți deosebite ce ar prejudicia ancheta ori există un pericol pentru siguranța persoanelor sau a unor bunuri de valoare. (2) Supravegherea tehnică se poate dispune în cazul infracțiunilor contra securității naționale prevăzute de Codul penal și de legi speciale, precum și în cazul infracțiunilor de trafic de droguri, de trafic de arme, de trafic de persoane, acte de terorism, de spălare a banilor, de falsificare de monede ori alte valori, de falsificare de instrumente de plată electronică, contra patrimoniului, de șantaj, de viol, de lipsire de libertate, de evaziune fiscală, în cazul infracțiunilor de corupție și al infracțiunilor asimilate infracțiunilor de corupție, infracțiunilor împotriva intereselor financiare ale Uniunii Europene, al infracțiunilor care se săvârșesc prin sisteme	Art. 139 of the Criminal Procedure Code Electronic surveillance (1) Electronic surveillance is ordered by the Judge for Rights and Liberties when the following requirements are cumulatively met: a) there is a reasonable suspicion in relation to the preparation or commission of one of the offenses listed under par. (2); b) such measure is proportional to the restriction of fundamental rights and freedoms, considering the particularities of the case, the importance of information or evidence that are to be obtained or the seriousness of the offense; c) evidence could not be obtained in any other way or its obtaining implies special difficulties that would harm the investigation, or there is a threat for the safety of persons or of valuable goods. (2) Electronic surveillance may be ordered in case of offenses against national security stipulated by the Criminal Code and by special laws, as well as in case of drug trafficking, weapons trafficking, trafficking in human beings, acts of terrorism, money laundering, counterfeiting of currency or securities, counterfeiting electronic payment instruments, offenses against property, blackmail, rape, deprivation of freedom, tax evasion, corruption offenses and offenses assimilated to corruption, offenses against the European Union's financial interests, offenses committed by means of computer systems or electronic communication devices, or in case of other offenses in respect of which the law sets forth a penalty of no less than 5 years of imprisonment. (3) The recordings set forth by this chapter, done by the parties or by other persons, represent evidence when they concern their own conversations or communications with

informatică sau mijloace de comunicații electronice ori în cazul altor infracțiuni pentru care legea prevede pedeapsa închisorii de 5 ani sau mai mare. (3) Înregistrările prevăzute în prezentul capitol, efectuate de părți sau de alte persoane, constituie mijloace de probă când privesc propriile convorbiri sau comunicări pe care le-au purtat cu terții. Orice alte înregistrări pot constitui mijloace de probă dacă nu sunt interzise de lege. (4) Raportul dintre avocat și persoana pe care o asistă sau o reprezintă nu poate forma obiectul supravegherii tehnice decât dacă există date că avocatul săvârșește ori pregătește săvârșirea unei infracțiuni dintre cele prevăzute la alin. (2). Dacă pe parcursul sau după executarea măsurii rezultă că activitățile de supraveghere tehnică au vizat și raporturile dintre avocat și suspectul ori inculpatul pe care acesta îl apără, probele obținute nu pot fi folosite în cadrul niciunui proces penal, urmând a fi distruse, de îndată, de către procuror. Judecătorul care a dispus măsura este informat, de îndată, de către procuror. Atunci când apreciază necesar, judecătorul dispune informarea avocatului.	third parties. Any other recordings may constitute evidence unless prohibited by law. (4) The relationship between a counsel and a person assisted or represented by them may be subject to electronic surveillance only when there is information that the counsel perpetrates or prepares the commission of any of the offenses listed under par.(2). If during or after the performance of such measure it results that the activities of electronic surveillance also targeted the relations between the counsel and the suspect or defendant defended by the former, the evidence obtained this way may not be used in a criminal proceeding, and shall be destroyed forthwith by the prosecutor. The judge having ordered such measure shall be informed forthwith by the prosecutor. When deemed necessary, the judge may order the information of the counsel.
Art. 142 Codul de Procedura Penală Punerea în executare a mandatului de supraveghere tehnică (1) Procurorul pune în executare supravegherea tehnică ori poate dispune ca aceasta să fie efectuată de organul de cercetare penală sau de lucrători specializați din cadrul poliției. (2) Furnizorii de rețele publice de	Art. 142 of the Criminal Procedure Code Enforcement of electronic surveillance warrants (1) The prosecutor shall enforce an electronic surveillance measure or may order that this be enforced by criminal investigation bodies or by specialized employees of the law enforcement bodies. (2) Providers of public electronic communication networks or providers of electronic communication services intended

comunicații electronice sau furnizorii de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului sau de orice tip de comunicare ori de servicii financiare sunt obligați să colaboreze cu procurorul, organele de cercetare penală sau lucrătorii specializați din cadrul poliției, în limitele competențelor acestora, pentru punerea în executare a mandatului de supraveghere tehnică.

(3) Persoanele care sunt chemate să dea concurs tehnic la executarea măsurilor de supraveghere au obligația să păstreze secretul operațiunii efectuate, sub sancțiunea legii penale.

(4) Procurorul are obligația de a înceta imediat supravegherea tehnică înainte de expirarea duratei mandatului dacă nu mai există temeiurile care au justificat măsura, informând de îndată despre aceasta judecătorul care a emis mandatul.

(5) Datele rezultate din măsurile de supraveghere tehnică pot fi folosite și în altă cauză penală dacă din cuprinsul acestora rezultă date sau informații concludente și utile privitoare la pregătirea ori săvârșirea unei alte infracțiuni dintre cele prevăzute la art. 139 alin. (2).

(6) Datele rezultate din măsurile de supraveghere care nu privesc fapta ce formează obiectul cercetării sau care nu contribuie la identificarea ori localizarea persoanelor, dacă nu sunt folosite în alte cauze penale potrivit alin. (5), se arhivează la sediul parchetului, în locuri speciale, cu asigurarea confidențialității. Din oficiu sau la solicitarea părților, judecătorul ori completul investit poate solicita datele sigilate dacă există noi probe din care rezultă că totuși o parte dintre acestea privesc fapta ce for the public or of communication or financial services are under an obligation to cooperate with the criminal investigation bodies, the authorities listed under par. (1), within the limits of their authority, for the enforcement of electronic surveillance warrants.

(3) Persons who are called to provide technical support for the enforcement of surveillance measures are under an obligation to keep secrecy in respect of the performed operation, under penalties set by the criminal law.

(4) The prosecutor is under an obligation to cease electronic surveillance forthwith before expiry of the warrant term if the reasons justifying such measure no longer exist, by immediately informing the judge having issued the warrant.

(5) Data resulted from electronic surveillance measures may be used also in other criminal case if they contain eloquent and useful data or information regarding the preparation or commission of another crime of those set forth by Art. 139 par. (2).

(6) Data resulted from surveillance measures that do not concern the act subject to investigation or that do not contribute to the identification or locating of persons, if such are not used in other criminal cases as per par. (5), shall be archived at the premises of the prosecutors' office, in special places, by ensuring their confidentiality. Ex officio or upon request by the parties, the vested judge or judicial panel may request the sealed data if there is new evidence from which it results that part of these concern an act subject to investigation. One year after the final settlement of a case, these are destroyed by the prosecutor, who shall prepare a report in this sense.

formează obiectul cercetării. După un an de la soluționarea definitivă a cauzei, acestea sunt distruse de către procuror, care întocmește un proces-verbal în acest sens.
Art. 154 Codul de Procedura Penală Conservarea datelor informatice (1) Dacă există o suspiciune rezonabilă cu privire la pregătirea sau săvârșirea unei infracțiuni, în scopul străngerii de probe ori identificării făptuitorului, suspectului sau a inculpatului, procurorul care supraveghează sau efectuează urmărirea penală poate dispune conservarea imediată a anumitor date informatice, inclusiv a datelor referitoare la traficul informațional, care au fost stocate prin intermediul unui sistem informatic și care se află în posesia sau sub controlul unui furnizor de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori unui furnizor de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului, în cazul în care există pericolul pierderii sau modificării acestora. (2) Conservarea se dispune de procuror, din oficiu sau la cererea organului de cercetare penală, pe o durată de maximum 60 de zile, prin ordonanță care trebuie să cuprindă, în afara mențiunilor prevăzute la art. 286 alin. (2): furnizorii de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori furnizorii de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului în posesia cărora se află datele informatice ori care le au sub control, numele făptuitorului, suspectului sau inculpatului, dacă este cunoscut, descrierea datelor ce trebuie conservate, motivarea îndeplinirii condițiilor prevăzute la alin. (1), durata pentru care a fost emisă, menționarea obligației persoanei sau furnizorilor de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori furnizorilor de servicii de comunicații	Art. 154 of the Criminal Procedure Code Preservation of computer data (1) If there is a reasonable suspicion in relation to the preparation or commission of an offense, for the purpose of collecting evidence or of identifying a perpetrator, suspect or defendant, the prosecutor supervising or conducting the criminal investigation may order immediate preservation of computer data, including of data referring to information traffic, that were stored by means of a computer system and that is in the possession or under the control of a provider of public electronic communication networks or of a provider of electronic communication services intended for the public, in the event that there is a danger that such data may be lost or altered. (2) Such preservation is ordered by the prosecutor, ex officio or upon request by criminal investigation bodies, for a term of maximum 60 days, through an order that has to contain, in addition to the mentions set by Art. 286 par. (2), the following: the providers of public electronic communication networks or the providers of electronic communication services intended for the public in whose possession or under whose control such computer data is, the name of the perpetrator, suspect or defendant, if known, a description of the data that have to be preserved, a justification for the fulfillment of the requirements set by par. (1), the time interval for which this was issued, the obligation of the person or of providers of public electronic communication networks or of providers of electronic communication services intended for the public to immediately preserve the indicated computer data and to maintain their integrity, under confidentiality terms.

electronice destinate publicului de a conserva imediat datele informatice indicate și de a le menține integritatea, în condiții de confidențialitate.

(3) Măsura conservării poate fi prelungită, pentru motive temeinic justificate, de procuror, o singură dată, pe o durată de maximum 30 de zile.

(4) Ordonanța procurorului se transmite, de îndată, oricărui furnizor de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori furnizor de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului în posesia căruia se află datele prevăzute la alin. (1) ori care le are sub control, acesta fiind obligat să le conserve imediat, în condiții de confidențialitate.

(5) În cazul în care datele referitoare la traficul informațional se află în posesia mai multor furnizori de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori furnizori de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului, furnizorul în posesia sau sub controlul căruia se află datele informatice are obligația de a pune, de îndată, la dispoziția organului de urmărire penală informațiile necesare identificării celorlalți furnizori, în vederea cunoașterii tuturor elementelor din lanțul de comunicare folosit.

(6) În termenul prevăzut la alin. (2) și (3), procurorul care supraveghează sau efectuează urmărirea penală poate, cu autorizarea prealabilă a judecătorului de drepturi și libertăți, să solicite unui furnizor de rețele publice de comunicații electronice ori unui furnizor de servicii de comunicații electronice destinate publicului transmiterea datelor conservate potrivit legii ori poate dispune ridicarea acestei măsuri. Dispozițiile art. 170 alin. (2¹)-(2⁵), alin. (4) și (5) și ale art.

(3) The measure of preservation can be extended by the prosecutor, only once, for well-grounded reasons, for a term of maximum 30 days.

(4) A prosecutorial order is transmitted forthwith to any provider of public electronic communication networks or provider of electronic communication services intended for the public holding the data specified under par. (1) or having control on such data, and the latter are under an obligation to preserve it immediately, under confidentiality terms.

(5) If data referring to information traffic is held by several providers of public electronic communication networks or providers of electronic communication services intended for the public, a provider holding or controlling the computer data is under an obligation to provide the criminal investigation bodies forthwith with the information necessary for the identification of other providers, in order to enable them to learn of all elements of the used communication chain.

(6) Within the term set under par. (2) and (3), the prosecutor supervising or conducting the criminal investigation, based on a prior authorization from the Judge for Rights and Liberties, may request a provider of public electronic communication networks or a provider of electronic communication services intended for the public to transmit the data preserved under the law or may order cancellation of such measure. The stipulations of Art. 170 par. (2¹)-(2⁵), par. (4) and (5) and of Art. 171 shall apply accordingly.

(7) The Judge for Rights and Liberties shall rule on requests transmitted by criminal investigation bodies regarding the transmission of data within 48 hours, through a reasoned court resolution, in chambers.

(8) Before completion of the criminal investigation, the prosecutor is under an

171 se aplică în mod corespunzător. (7) Judecătorul de drepturi și libertăți se pronunță în termen de 48 de ore cu privire la solicitarea organelor de urmărire penală de transmitere a datelor, prin încheiere motivată, în camera de consiliu. (8) Până la terminarea urmăririi penale, procurorul este obligat să încunoștințeze, în scris, persoanele față de care se efectuează urmărirea penală și ale căror date au fost conservate.	obligation to inform in writing the persons against whom the criminal investigation is conducted and whose data were preserved.
Art. 408 Codul de Procedura Penală Hotărârile supuse apelului (1) Sentințele pot fi atacate cu apel, dacă legea nu prevede altfel. (2) Încheierile pot fi atacate cu apel numai odată cu sentința, cu excepția cazurilor când, potrivit legii, pot fi atacate separat cu apel. (3) Apelul declarat împotriva sentinței se socotește făcut și împotriva încheierilor.	Art. 408 of the Criminal Procedure Code Court rulings subject to appeal (1) Sentences may be challenged by an appeal, unless the law stipulates otherwise. (2) Court resolutions may be challenged by an appeal only jointly with the sentence, except for the situations when, according to the law, they may be challenged by appeal separately. (3) The appeal filed against the sentence shall be deemed as filed against the court resolutions as well.
Art. 2.3.1 Codul Deontologic Jurnalistul are obligația de a păstra confidențialitatea acelor surse care solicită să își păstreze anonimatul sau a acelor surse a căror dezvăluire le poate pune în pericol viața, integritatea fizică și psihică sau locul de muncă.	Art. 2.3.1 of the Deontological Code The journalist has the obligation not to disclose his sources when they ask for their anonymity to be kept, or those sources for which their disclosure may put their life, their physical integrity or their job in jeopardy.
Art. 15 of the the Unified Code of Ethics 15.1. Jurnalistul are obligația de a păstra confidențialitatea surselor în cazul în care acestea solicită acest lucru, dar și în cazul în care dezvăluirea identității surselor le poate pune în pericol viața, integritatea fizică și psihică sau locul de muncă. 15.2. Protecția secretului profesional și a	Art. 15 of the the Unified Code of Ethics 15.1 A journalist has the responsibility to maintain the confidentiality of those sources that demand it, or of those sources whose life, physical or mental integrity or workplace could be in jeopardy if their identity were revealed. 15.2 The protection of the professional secrets and of confidentiality is a right, as well as an obligation.

confidențialității surselor este în egală măsură un drept și o obligație al jurnalistului.
Art. 70 Noul Cod Civil Dreptul la libera exprimare (1) Orice persoană are dreptul la libera exprimare. (2) Exercițarea acestui drept nu poate fi restrânsă decât în cazurile și limitele prevăzute la art. 75.	Art. 70 of the the New Civil Code Freedom of speech (1) Every person has the right to freedom of speech. (2) The exercise of this right cannot be restricted, with the exceptions of cases and limits stated in art. 75.
Art. 75 Noul Cod Civil Limite (1) Nu constituie o încălcare a drepturilor prevăzute în această secțiune atingerile care sunt permise de lege sau de convențiile și pactele internaționale privitoare la drepturile omului la care România este parte. (2) Exercițarea drepturilor și libertăților constituționale cu bună-credință și cu respectarea pactelor și convențiilor internaționale la care România este parte nu constituie o încălcare a drepturilor prevăzute în prezenta secțiune.	Art. 75 of the the New Civil Code Limits (1) It does not constitute a breach of the rights provided in this section prejudices that are permitted by law or international conventions and covenants on human rights to which Romania is a party. (2) Exercise of constitutional rights and freedoms in good faith and in compliance with the covenants and conventions to which Romania is part does not constitute a violation of the rights provided for in this section.

ELSA RUSSIA

Contributors

National Coordinator

Alfiya Sailaubayeva

National Academic Coordinator

Ekaterina Baliuk

National Researchers

Lusine Arutiunian

Elena Buiantueva

Vera Ivanova

Ilya Kletkin

Anastasia Pronina

Ksenia Soloveva

Alexandra Tsareva

National Linguistic Editors

Artem Ryzhov

National Technical Editors

Artem Ryzhov

National Academic Supervisor

Ksenia Shestakova

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

1.1. International obligations of the Russian Federation as an essential part of its national legal system

Human rights are applied in the Russian Federation directly. According to Article 15(4) of the Constitution [“Constitution”] the universally recognised norms of international law and international treaties of the Russian Federation are component part of its national legal system. In the event when rules established by law contradict to international treaty, the latter shall be applied.¹ Further, according to the Article 17 of the Russian Constitution the recognition and guarantees shall be provided for the rights and freedoms of man and citizen according to the universally recognised principles and norms of international law and according to the present Constitution. Relevant international law rules will include:

- Universal declaration of human rights, reflecting to large extent customary rules Articles 12 and 19 [reference is needed],
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [“ICCPR”], in particular Articles 17 and 19 on private correspondence and on the freedom of expression correspondingly.²
- European Convention on Human Rights [“ECHR”].³ Interpreting the ECHR in 1994, the 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy adopted resolution N 2 which confirmed the need to keep journalistic source of information in secret.⁴ Moreover, the Council of Europe in its Recommendation N 7 followed the similar logic.⁵ Although these international obligations are not effectively implemented into the national legislation they foreordain further development of legislation of the Russian Federation. The implementation of the ECHR in Russia will be fully reviewed in the Q. 7 of this report.

¹ Constitution of the Russian Federation (adopted by nation-wide voting 12.12.1993) (as amended by Laws of the Russian Federation about Amendments to Constitution of the Russian Federation 30.12.2008 N 6-FKZ, 30.12.2008 N 7-FKZ, 05.02.2014 N 2-FKZ, 21.07.2014 N 11-FKZ, ConsultantPlus, [“Constitution”], Art.15(4)

² International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 16.12.1966, 999 UNTS 171 [“ICCPR”], Art.17, 19

³ European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 04.11.1950, ETS 5; 213 UNTS 221 [“ECHR”], Art.10

⁴ Resolution N 2, 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy, Principles 3, 7.

⁵ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, 08.03.2000, Council of Europe

1.2. Protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information at national level

The Russian Federation has the federative structure of the legislative system. There is a hierarchy of the laws. On the top of the hierarchy is the Constitution of the Russian Federation (the question about its balance with the international treaties of Russia is reviews in Q.1.1, 7.1) followed by federal laws and the laws of the Russian Federation (issued before the adoption of the Constitution) Laws of the entities of the Russian Federation are at the next hierarchical level. The latter has not been adopted with regard to the protection of journalistic sources.

The basic law which protects the rights of the journalists is the Law on Mass Media which was the subject to the Ruling of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation On the practice of courts' application of the law On Mass Media⁶. It stipulates no definition of the source of information, it is also not explicitly provided in the court practice, but one can deduce from the text of Article 41 of the Law on Mass Media⁷ and from the Ruling mentioned above, that the source of information is a person who possesses information or evidence of the relevant facts. It is further developed in the other federal laws and the Code of the Professional Ethics which establishes specific rules in this regards.

1.2.1. Federal level

The protection is first of all grounded on the Article 23(2) of the Constitutions, establishing that each person has a right to privacy of correspondence, of telephone conversations, postal, telegraph and other messages where limitations of this right shall be allowed only by court decision.⁸ Further, Article 29(4) of the Constitution explicitly underlines right to freely look for, receive, transmit, produce and distribute information by any legal way.⁹ The Law On Mass Media develops constitutional provisions in its Article 41 emphasizing right of the journalists to keep their source of information in secret as following:

- Publisher is prohibited to disclose in its publications information that was given to it by a person under the condition of keeping it secret;
- Publisher shall keep the source of information in confidence and shall not indicate the person who has provided such information with notice of non-disclosure of his/her

⁶ Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 2010 (ed. 09.02.2012) on the practice of courts' application of the Law On Mass Media N 16, ConsultantPlus [“Ruling N 16”]

⁷ Law of the Russian Federation On Mass Media 1991 (ed. 05.04.2016) N 2124-1, ConsultantPlus, [“Law On Mass Media”], Art.41

⁸ Constitution, Art.23(2)

⁹ Ibid, Art.29(4)

name, except for the case when such request is issued by a court in connection to the case under consideration.¹⁰

Drafting this Article, the legislator most likely intended to protect informers from possible danger that direct mentioning of their name in the media might bring. The same obligation is provided in Article 49 of the Law On Mass Media that establishes requirement not to impart such type of information to other people without the consent of its owner.¹¹

Even in the criminal cases the confidentiality of the source of information will be preserved: according to Article 144(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, a publisher is entitled not to disclose the source of information to a prosecutor or detective verifying the reliability of the report of a crime in case when it was communicated to him or her under the condition of anonymity.¹²

However, the Law On Mass Media provides an exception to these rules. Its Article 41 emphasizes that the source of information could be disclosed if this information was requested by the court to decide the legal case.¹³ The Supreme Court in its recommendation on the interpretation of the Law On Mass Media acknowledges the fact that personal data of the person, who provided the edition with information under condition to stay anonymous constitute secret protected by the law.¹⁴ Despite the lack of the respective judicial practice, there is a possibility for a state to protect the source of information by establishing criminal proceedings to be held in *in camera*¹⁵ so not to endanger the informer's identity.

Further there are different types of information that are under the protection of the Russian Federation such as state, commercial, bank secrets, confidential personal data, etc. which is prohibited to be disclosed as well. This conclusion proves the responsibility for minor criminal offences namely for the disclosure of these types of information established by a separate federal law – the Code of Administrative Offences of the Russian Federation – in Article 13.14¹⁶. To the best knowledge of the drafters of the present report, this Article has never been applied to the disclosure of the journalistic sources but there is enough potential for this article to be applied in case a journalist would have an access to such information while performing his or her professional duties leading to its disclosure. The disclosure of different types of information will be fully reviewed in Q.10.2.

¹⁰ Law On Mass Media, Art.41

¹¹ Law On Mass Media, Art.49

¹² Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 30.03.2016) N 174-FZ, ConsultantPlus [“Code of Criminal Procedure”], Art. 144(2)

¹³ Law on Mass Media, Art.41

¹⁴ Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 2010 (ed. 09.02.2012) On the practice of courts' application of the law On Mass Media N 16, ConsultantPlus [“Ruling N 16”]

¹⁵ Code of Criminal Procedure, Art. 241(2)(1)

¹⁶ Code of Administrative Offences of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 26.04.2016) N 195-FZ, ConsultantPlus [“Code of Administrative Offences”], Art.13.14(1)

1.2.2. Code of Professional Ethics

The right of journalists to keep their source of information in secret is also enshrined in the code of professional conduct, namely in the Code of Professional Ethics of Russian Journalist. It reiterates that no-one can force the journalist to disclose its source including legal entities and law-enforcement agencies.¹⁷ The right to the anonymity might be overcome only in exceptional cases when there is a suspicion that the source of information consciously misrepresented the actual facts or when the disclosure of the source of information might be the only way to avoid the serious and imminent loss for individuals.

This Code of Professional Ethics is an act of a non-governmental non-political public organization named the Union of Journalists and the breach of the rules contained in this Code does not entail any legal responsibility for a journalist. However, he or she might be sanctioned by the organization or expelled from it¹⁸.

Therefore, despite the Russian laws provide numerous means of protection of the journalists' right not to disclose their source of information, the legal framework is not explicit in both wording and practical application.

2. Is there in domestic law a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

2.1. Prohibition to disclose journalistic sources

Under Article 51 of the Constitution no-one shall be obliged to give incriminating evidence against husband or wife and close relatives the range of whom is determined by the federal law. The federal law may envisage other cases of absolution from the obligation to testify.¹⁹

This "other case" might be found under Article 49 of the Law On Mass Media that obliges journalists to preserve the confidential character of information and (or) its source.²⁰ Thus, journalists can refuse to testify before the court about the content of the confidential information and its sources. According to the Russian Supreme Court personal data of an individual who has communicated information on condition that his name would be kept secret

¹⁷ Code of Ethics of Russian Journalist, Union of Journalists of the Russian Federation 1994 ["Code of Ethics"], para. 9

¹⁸ The Statute of the Union of Journalist, Art. 4 (12) Available at: http://www.ruj.ru/_about/charter_russian_public_organization_quot_russian_union_of_journalists_39.php constitutes the secret specifically protected by law.²¹ Most likely the Supreme Court meant the Law on Mass Media.

¹⁹ Constitution, Art.51

²⁰ Law On Mass Media, Art.49

The only exception to the general confidentiality rule provided in Article 41 of the Law On Mass Media when the court has requested this information with regard to the particular proceedings. The court can exercise this power only when all other means of proving are exhausted and the public interest in disclosure of the source of information definitely outweighs the public interest in keeping it secret.²² At the same time the court order to disclose the information could be appealed by the parties to the proceedings.

At first glance, the Criminal Procedure Code contradicts to the Law on Mass Media as it in Article 56 does not specifically mention journalists while listing those who are explicitly exempted from the duty to testify in court. As it was explained in the answer to Q.1 there is a distinction made between the Laws and the Federal Laws. According to the article 55 of the Russian Constitution human rights may only be limited by federal laws, and not the laws. Consequently, also according to Article 51 of the Constitution as described above no one shall be obliged to give incriminating evidence, husband or wife and close relatives the range of whom is determined by the federal law. The federal law may envisage other cases of absolution from the obligation to testify. Notably, Article 56 of the Code of Criminal Procedure mentions specific categories of persons who cannot be interrogated (lawyers, priests, etc.),²³ but journalists are outside the scope of this privilege. Article 55 of the Constitution establishes that the rights may be only limited by a federal law. Being literally interpreted Article 55 of the Constitution concludes that while the Law On Mass Media is not the federal law it cannot establish any exceptions from the duty to testify before the court. Therefore, the Law On Mass Media and Article 51 are not in the contradiction and journalists are not exempted from the duty to testify before the courts unless journalists performs their rights under Article 51 not to give incriminating evidence.

2.2. Sanction imposed for disclosure of journalistic sources

Although the Russian legislation does not have any direct provisions regarding responsibility of journalists for disclosure of their sources, there is the guidance in Article 56 of the Law On Mass Media which states that violation of this law entails responsibility in accordance with the Russian law.²⁴ Thus, the LRG refers to the legislation which provides administrative, civil, criminal and disciplinary liability for journalists who had committed offences in question.

²¹ Ruling N 16

²² Ruling N 16

²³ Code of Criminal Procedure, Art.56(3)

²⁴ Law On Mass Media, Art.56

2.2.1. Administrative responsibility

In accordance with the Constitution administrative legislation is jointly developed by the Russian Federation and its territorial subjects. However, there are no examples of the entities of the Russian Federation laying down the administrative legislation concerning liability for breach of journalists' secrecy. Thus, one refers to the federal legislation and specifically Article 13.14 of the Code of Administrative Offences which provides liability for the disclosure of information of limited access.²⁵ This norm stipulates the special character of both the subject and the information. The subject of this offence is a person, including journalists, who has access to information due to professional or official activity. The information that fall under this provision is defined as the disclosed information of limited access established by law in case the disclosure of such information is not criminally punishable. The analysis of sparse cases shows that a person is brought to responsibility for this very offence if only he simultaneously breaks other legal provisions related to the disclosure of information of limited access. For example, in one case a journalist was punished for the disclosure of source in the form of publishing materials from closed plenary session of the legislative (representative) body of the territorial subject of the Russian Federation.²⁶ It is worth noting that law prohibits publication of such information but the disclosure of the source itself is not punishable.

2.2.2. Criminal responsibility

Criminal Code clearly states responsibility for the unlawful access and (or) dissemination of information about a person's private life.²⁷ Still it is difficult to establish relation between journalists' secrecy and the information about someone's private life (in the terminology of the Criminal Code, this information is the same as personal data). So it might be concluded that personal data of a journalistic source is protected by Criminal Code and the journalist disclosed personal data of his or her journalistic source whose will was to remain anonymous shall be criminally responsible.

2.2.3. Civil liability

Violation of journalists' secrecy can cause both moral and material damages to the source of information which was revealed in mass media as well as to the editorial board, in particular

²⁵ Code of Administrative Offences, Art.13.14(1)

²⁶ Resolution of the regional court of the Kaliningrad 12.08.2014 on a case N4-Ar-378/2014

²⁷ Criminal Code of the Russian Federation 1996 (ed. 29.06.2009) N 63-FZ, ConsultantPlus ["Criminal Code"], Art.137

when a journalist is hired by the editorial board and acts on behalf of it. Since civil liability is meant for compensation for violated rights, it constitutes the best option to recover damages.²⁸

2.2.4. Disciplinary responsibility

If a journalist is employed he or she could be disciplinary punished for the disclosure of his or her sources in accordance with Chapter 30 of Labour Code of the Russian Federation.²⁹ However, there are reasonable doubts whether this mean is effective, for instance, if the editorial board forced a journalist to disclose his or her sources. Moreover, a journalist cannot be brought to disciplinary responsibility on the initiative of a third party. The decision whether to punish an employee depends on the will of the employer, and an injured party has no ability to influence this process.

In conclusion, violation of professional secrecy entails civil or disciplinary responsibility. Administrative or criminal liability is only possible if a certain act is provided by the Code of Administrative Offences or the Criminal Code.

3. Who is “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

3.1. Broad definition of “journalist” in legislation of the Russian Federation

Under Article 2 of the Law On Mass Media journalist is a person who:

- edits, creates, collects or prepares messages and materials;
- carries out mentioned activities for the editorial of registered media;
- is associated with the editorial board of registered media by labour or other contractual relations or is engaged in such activities for the editorial on its authorization.³⁰

²⁸ Civil Code of the Russian Federation 1994 N 51-FZ, ConsultantPlus [“Civil Code”], Chapter 59

²⁹ Labour Code of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 30.12.2015) N 197-FZ, ConsultantPlus [“Labour Code”], Chapter 30

³⁰ Law On Mass Media, Art.2

In addition, according to the Law On Mass Media, professional accreditation or membership in journalistic organization is unnecessary for obtaining the status of the journalist, which is in compliance with European standards.³¹

At first glance, this definition is rather broad since the journalist is defined by indicating their possible activities and the relations with the editorial board. Thus, editors fall under the specified definition of a journalist, while in accordance with Recommendation no R (2000) 7 editors are not related to journalists³².

However, even with this rather broad definition, there are situations that negatively affect the protection of journalistic sources.

For instance, based on the definition of a journalist provided in Russian legislation, journalist is obliged to work exclusively for editorial board of registered media. However, Article 12 of the Law On Mass Media establishes the list of cases when the registration of a media is not required.³³ Taking into account literal interpretation of the term «journalist», if a person works for unregistered media, he or she will not be considered journalist and will not have journalist's rights and obligations, including rights in the sphere of protection of journalistic sources. Moreover, according to the definition of a journalist given in Recommendation no R (2000) 7, journalist works via any media; registration requirements are not mentioned. Therefore, in our opinion, the term «journalist» in the Russian legislation should be interpreted broadly, i.e. persons who carry out their activities via unregistered media when the registration of a media is not required should be classified as journalists too. Otherwise, rights of persons working for an unregistered media may be significantly limited.

Excluding this provision, the definition of journalist provided in the Law On Mass Media is sufficient for the purposes of the protection of journalistic sources.

3.2. Protection of “bloggers” as other media actors

Among other media actors involved in dealing with information, the present report focuses on bloggers and individuals keeping their own websites, etc.³⁴

³¹ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation no R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information §13

³² According to the Appendix to Recommendation no R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information the journalist provides only the collection and dissemination of information. In this regard, in §13 of the explanatory Memorandum of the same document it is mentioned that the protection of journalistic sources, in addition to journalists, should be extended to editors.

³³ Law On Mass Media, Art.12

³⁴ In particular, such persons are mentioned in §14 of recommendations of the Report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education of the Parliamentary Assembly (2010) on the protection of journalistic' sources

In 2014, Russian legislation on legal status of bloggers appeared.³⁵ In accordance with Article 10.2 of Federal Law On information, information technologies and about information protection a blogger is the owner of a website and (or) site pages on the Internet that contain publicly available information which is accessed during the day by more than three thousand users of the Internet.³⁶ Consequently, even those who have a publicly available page on a social network and over three thousand subscribers should be considered bloggers.

Under Article 10.2 of the above-mentioned Federal Law bloggers are obliged:

- not to allow the website or website page on the Internet to be used for the purpose of committing the acts punishable under a criminal law, disclosing the information classified as state or another specifically law-protected secret;
- not to allow the dissemination of information about the private life of a citizen in breach of the civil legislation;
- to observe the provisions of the legislation of the Russian Federation that regulate the procedure for disseminating mass information;
- to observe the rights and lawful interests of citizens and organisations, for instance the honour, dignity and business reputation of citizens as well as the business reputation of organisations.³⁷

Even more importantly, under this Article the bloggers have certain rights such as:

- to freely search, receive, transmit and disseminate information by any method in accordance with the legislation of the Russian Federation;
- to set out on his their website or website page on the Internet his their personal judgements and assessment with an indication of his name or pseudonym;
- to place or allow the placement on his their website or website page on the Internet texts and/or other materials of other users of the Internet, unless the placement of such texts and/or other materials contravenes the legislation of the Russian Federation.³⁸

However, unlike journalists, bloggers do not enjoy the right to protect their sources of information. The Committee on Culture, Science and Education of the Parliamentary Assembly confirms in its Report (2010) that a variety of states do not extend journalists' professional

³⁵ Federal Law On amendments to the Federal law On information, information technologies and about information protection" and certain legislative acts of the Russian Federation on streamlining the exchange of information via information and telecommunication networks" 2014 (ed. 21.07.2014) N 97-FZ, ConsultantPlus

³⁶ Federal Law On information, information technologies and on information protection 2006 (ed. 13.07.2015) N 149-FZ, ConsultantPlus, Art.10.2

³⁷ Ibid

³⁸ Ibid

privilege to other media actors like individuals with their own website or web blog. Therefore, non-journalists cannot benefit from the right of journalists not to reveal their sources.³⁹

3.3. Is the protection of journalists' sources extended to anyone else?

According to Article 52 of the Law On Mass Media other persons who have the status of a journalist are:

- staff of the editorial board which is engaged in editing, creation, collection or preparation of messages and materials for newspapers with large circulation and other media whose products are disseminated exclusively within one enterprise (association), organization, institutions (corporate media) and;
- authors who are not related to the editorial board by labour or other contractual relations but are recognised by it as its freelance authors or correspondents when performing editorial's assignments.⁴⁰

As for the first category, the present report acknowledges that Article 12 of the Law On Mass Media provides that in some cases registration of the media is not required.⁴¹ Since there are no grounds for the exemption from registration for a corporate media, it is subject to registration in the general procedure. In this regard, persons who are engaged in editing, creation, collection or preparation of messages and materials, and are full-time employees of the editorial board of registered media fall within the definition of journalists. Therefore, they have professional status of journalist even without specific reference to Article 52 of the Law On Mass Media.

Accordingly, provisions of Article 52 are relevant only in cases when a corporate media is not subject to registration (for example, if the periodical print publication has a circulation of less than one thousand copies).⁴² Thus, under literal interpretation of the above mentioned term "journalist" the editorial staff of the corporate media will not be considered journalists and will not have the rights and duties of a journalist. Article 52 of the Law On Mass Media, in its turn, improves this situation. However, the implementation of the broad interpretation of the term "journalist" makes provisions of Article 52 of the Law On Mass Media unnecessary.

As for the second category, it is unclear how the authors or correspondents may execute the instructions of editorial board without having any labour or other contractual relations.⁴³ Thus,

³⁹ Recommendations of the Report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education of the Parliamentary Assembly (2010) on the protection of journalistic' sources, §14

⁴⁰ Law On Mass Media, Art.52

⁴¹ Ibid, Art.12

⁴² Law On Mass Media, Art.12

⁴³ D. Bakhareva, Legal regulation of work of freelance correspondents of the print media, Labour Law, 2008, N 6, 69-72. Available at: <http://www.center-bereg.ru/h1455.html>

the freelance authors or correspondents are journalists by implication of the Law On Mass Media.

Moreover, protection of journalistic sources also covers the editorial board. As previously stated, Article 41 of the Law On Mass Media prohibits editorial board from revealing the source of information that was provided on condition that the source will be confidential. Otherwise, the editorial board shall bear responsibility. Only the court can request this information as necessary to decide a particular case. Accordingly, the protection of journalistic sources covers the editorial. Importantly, national legislation does not extend the protection of journalistic sources to employees of editorial board other than journalists. It is worth mentioning that above considered list of cases when the protection of journalistic sources covers persons other than journalists is exhaustive. Other situations in Russian legislation are not envisaged.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources?

4.1. Legal Guarantees

4.1.1. Constitutional guarantees

First of all, basic legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources are derived from the Constitution. They are provided in the table below:

Relevant Article	Description
Article 46	Everyone is guaranteed judicial protection of their rights and freedoms coupled with the right to appeal decisions of state and local authorities, public associations and officials. On top of that, if national remedies are exhausted, everyone can apply to the international human rights bodies according to international treaties of the Russian Federation.
Article 23 (2)	Right to privacy of correspondence, telephone conversations, postal, telegraph and other messages. Although it is not an absolute right, limitations may be imposed only by a court decision.

Article 29	Protection of the freedom of expression together with prohibition of the incitement to social, racial, national or religious hatred. No one may be forced to express his views and convictions or to reject them. Censorship shall be banned.
Article 19	All people shall be equal before the law and court. The State shall guarantee the equality of rights and freedoms of man and citizen, regardless of sex, race, nationality, language, origin, property and official status, place of residence, religion, convictions, membership of public associations, and also of other circumstances.
Article 22	Everyone shall have the right to freedom and personal immunity. Arrest, detention and remanding in custody shall be allowed only by court decision. Without the court's decision a person may not be detained for a term more than 48 hours.
Article 45	The Russian Federation ensures the protection of the rights and freedoms by all means not prohibited by law.
Articles 48-53	Guarantees for journalists in a kind of legal proceedings such as right to legal aid, principles of assumption of innocence, non bis in idem, right not to testify against himself, rights protection against abuses of power, right to claim for the compensation of damages in case of such abuses.

4.1.2. Guarantees provided by the Criminal Code

Apart from the Constitution, legal safeguards are further reflected in the Criminal Code. According to Article 144 of the Criminal Code,⁴⁴ obstruction of the lawful professional activity of journalists by compelling them to give out information or to refuse to give it out is punishable. The term obstruction is mentioned in Article 58 of the Law On Mass Media which defines the infringement of the freedom of mass media as the obstruction of the lawful activities of the founders, editors, publishers, distributors of mass media products and journalists in any form by citizens, government officials and organizations, public associations, including forcing the journalist to disseminate or refuse to disseminate information.⁴⁵

⁴⁴ Criminal Code, Art.144(1)

Moreover, the right to a fair trial is also a guarantee for a fair punishment. A request to disclose information must be made in a form of an interlocutory judgment. Interlocutory judgments are aimed at getting procedural information and use a mechanism request - response. In the Russian Federation a right to be heard is given to all defendants in criminal cases, no matter journalists or not, which is prescribed by Article 47 of the Code of Criminal procedure. Oral requests are not valid. Hence, as an interlocutory judgment it can be appealed⁴⁶. The procedure of appeal is similar for all judgments and prescribed by Chapter 45.1 of the Code of Criminal procedure.

4.2. How are the laws implemented?

Despite the lack of case law on the subject, the crucial point is how a victim could file a complaint to a judicial or a quasi-judicial body about unauthorised disclosure of confidential information by either a journalist or an editorial board.

As a general rule, a person either goes directly to the court or to the federal executive body authorised to supervise the implementation of federal legislation on mass media (Federal Service for Supervision in the Sphere of Telecom, Information Technologies and Mass Communications, also known as Roskomnadzor). Moreover, a complaint could be filed to a Prosecutor's Office which is in charge of supervision over the execution of laws by certain subjects and ensuring supremacy of both the Constitution and the federal legislation with the primary aim to protect human rights and freedoms as well as the interests of the Russian Federation, its territorial subjects and municipal units.

In the present report, a special attention is given to the procedure for filing a complaint to the above-named bodies, which is provided in a table below:

⁴⁵ Law On Mass Media, Art.58

⁴⁶ Mass Media Defense Centre, The right of a journalist not to disclose the source of information, at: http://www.mmdc.ru/consulting/common/pravo_zhurnalista_ne_raskryvat_svoj_istochnik_informacii

	Judicial body (court)	Roskomnadzor/Prosecutor's Office
Period for consideration of a complaint	2 months according to Civil Procedural Code	30 days according to the Federal Law On the order of consideration of citizens' appeals ⁴⁷
Competence/final decision	Judicial decision which is binding upon parties to the dispute	Initiates legal proceedings
Possibility to appeal the decision	To a higher court within a month according to Article 321 of Civil Procedural Code	To a court within 3 years since the violation of rights according to Articles 196 and 200 of Civil Procedural Code

4.3. How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

Currently, mostly the state regulation ensures the freedom of speech in the Russian Federation. However, self-regulatory mechanisms being extra measure support this regulation. One of these mechanisms is the Code of Ethics that contains the principles of the professional ethics. This Code is binding on majority of journalists who are the members of the Union of Journalists of the Russian Federation because its observance is a precondition for the membership in this Union.⁴⁸ At the same time, the highly qualified scholars express concerns that journalists' ethical standards are not very effective in practice.⁴⁹

⁴⁷ Federal Law On the order of consideration of citizens' appeals 2006 (ed. 03.11.2015) N 59-FZ, ConsultantPlus

⁴⁸ Code of Ethics

⁴⁹ Abov E. On the issue of professional standards in the Russian press. Available at: <http://www.presscouncil.ru/index.php/teoriya-i-praktika/knigi-i-stati/305-o-probleme-professionalnykh-standartov-v-rossijskoj-presse>

Notably, acts of self-regulation charge journalist with a duty to keep secret the name of the person who provided information in confidence. This obligation not only arises from the Code of Ethics, but was also embodied in the draft of the Standard on Media Ethics of 2015. It should be mentioned that the provisions of Principle 4 of the Standard appear to the authors of this report to be a matter of concern. It is stated there that the professional association or the professional organization which the journalist is associated with shall determine the level of protection of the confidential source of information which is acceptable to these association or organization, whereas aforementioned entities are not subject to the prohibition against the disclosure of information. This document was drafted by the Public Collegium for Press Complaints (Russian NGO which deals with the complaints against the press) and considered as the set of fundamental professional principles, norms and rules of conduct for journalists and the editorial board. It is also meant to help solve disputes, both ethical and concerning human rights.⁵⁰

In this regard, it is interesting to take a closer look at the Public Collegium for Press Complaints as a self-regulating and a civil society organization which unites not only the members of the media community but also the members of the media audience. Since its founding in May 2005, the Collegium settled more than 100 media disputes.⁵¹ It won international recognition and became a member of the European Alliance of Independent Press Councils (AIPCE).⁵² The importance of the decisions of the organization was also noted in the Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation which stated that in case of an information dispute, it is possible for the party to go to the Public Collegium for Press Complaints.⁵³ Thus, despite the fact that there are some difficulties in creation of a national self-regulation mechanism in the sphere of mass media, it should be noted that certain steps have been made. There is an opinion that the high standards of the journalistic work cannot be achieved in a night, and the importance of legal regulation decreases with the increase of the role of ethical and moral norms.

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000)7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their

⁵⁰ Draft of mediaethical standard of Public Collegium responsible for press complaints 2015. Available at: <http://presscouncil.ru/index.php/teoriya-i-praktika/dokumenty/4756-mediaeticheskij-standart-2015>

⁵¹ See generally, Register of decisions of the Collegium. Available at: <http://www.presscouncil.ru/index.php/praktika/rassmotrennye-zhaloby>

⁵² Report of the Grand Jury of the Russian Union of Journalists and the Public Collegium of the Press Complaints. Available at: <http://ruj.ru/x/the-report-of-the-secretary-of-the-russian-union-of-journalists-mikhail-fedotov-on-the-work-of-the-j.php> respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

⁵³ Ruling N 16

5.1. Limits of the national legislation in relation to non-disclosure of journalistic information

According to Article 15(4) of the Constitution international treaties are an integral part of the Russian legal system. Moreover, special federal law covers the ratification of the ECHR.⁵⁴ In Russian legislation limits of non-disclosure of journalistic information as limitation on the right to freedom of expression should totally comply with the demands of Article 10(2) of the ECHR. In particular limitation should be prescribed by law and be necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

Limits to the journalists' right not to disclose the source of information are also designated in Principle 3 of Recommendation No R (2000) 7:

a. The right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source must not be subject to other restrictions than those mentioned in Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention. In determining whether a legitimate interest in a disclosure falling within the scope of Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention outweighs the public interest in not disclosing information identifying a source, competent authorities of member States shall pay particular regard to the importance of the right of non-disclosure and the pre-eminence given to it in the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, and may only order a disclosure if, subject to paragraph b, there exists an overriding requirement in the public interest and if circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature

b. The disclosure of information identifying a source should not be deemed necessary unless it can be convincingly established that:

i. reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted by the persons or public authorities that seek the disclosure, and

ii. the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure, bearing in mind that:

- an overriding requirement of the need for disclosure is proved,
- the circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature,
- the necessity of the disclosure is identified as responding to a pressing social need, and

⁵⁴Federal Law On ratification of the European Convention of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and its Protocols 1998 N 54-FZ, ConsultantPlus

- member States enjoy a certain margin of appreciation in assessing this need, but this margin goes hand in hand with the supervision by the European Court of Human Rights.

The analysis of Russian legislation leads to the conclusion that it largely meets the demands of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7. First of all, the limitations are explicitly stated in Article 41 of the Law On Mass Media upon which the editorial board is obliged to keep the source of information secret, except for cases when the corresponding request was made by the court in connection with a case that is under the proceedings in this court.⁵⁵ The Supreme Court of the Russian Federation interprets the provisions of this article and claims that at any stage of the proceedings the court is entitled to request the editorial staff to provide information about the source if other means of proving have been exhausted and the public interest in disclosing the source clearly outweighs the public interest in keeping it secret.⁵⁶

However, Russian legislation does not require the person concerned to prove that there is the need for the disclosure of the source of information or that the corresponding public interest is clearly of top priority.

5.2. National legislation establishes judicial procedure for the disclosure of the journalistic source of information

The court may exercise the power in question at any stage and in any type of proceedings (civil, criminal, administrative and constitutional). The Law On Mass Media states that the request for the disclosure of information is made in a form of a reasoned interlocutory judgment, which can be appealed by the interested parties.⁵⁷ Journalists are not bound by oral requests of the investigator, the prosecutor, or even the judge.

Moreover, it is crucial for the disclosure of information that two criteria must be satisfied cumulatively:

- all other means of establishing essential circumstances of the case must be exhausted;
- the public interest in disclosure of confidential information must clearly outweigh the public interest in maintaining its secrecy.⁵⁸

5.2.1. Exhaustion of other possibilities to establish essential circumstances of a case

Recommendation No R (2000) 7 and the above mentioned Ruling of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation provide that the source of journalistic information may be disclosed only by

⁵⁵ Law On Mass Media, Art.41

⁵⁶ Ruling N 16

⁵⁷ Law On Mass Media, Art.41

⁵⁸ Ibid.

decision of a court and only if all the other possibilities to establish essential circumstances of a case are exhausted. This requirement is important for proper protection of the journalistic secrecy. The Code of Professional Ethics of Journalists provides that the right to anonymity may be limited only in exceptional cases when there is a suspicion that the source has deliberately distorted the truth as well as mentioning the name of the source is the only way to avoid serious and imminent harm to people.

5.2.2. Public vs Private interests in disclosure

National legislation protects both vital public and individual interests regarding the disclosure of information. However, it is hard to strike a balance between two.

In case of investigation of a crime, combating terrorism, etc. public interest clearly outweighs the necessity to keep information secret. Therefore, the disclosure of confidential information is legitimate. Examples of public interest are found in Article 2 of the Federal Law On Operational Search Activity such as discovery, prevention, suppression and detection of crimes as well as discovery and identification persons who are preparing, committing or have committed crimes, searches for persons who are hiding from the inquest and the investigation bodies and from the court and who are avoiding the criminal punishment, and also searches for missing persons, obtaining information about events or actions that threaten the state, military, economic or ecological security of the Russian Federation.⁵⁹

As to individual interests, courts do not usually consider them prevailing over public interests, because there is no explicitly defined criteria how find a balance between these interests

5.3. National legislation provides alternative measures against the disclosure of the journalistic sources

Principle 3 (b) (i) of the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 emphasizes that “the disclosure of information identifying a source should not be deemed necessary unless it can be convincingly established that ... reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted by the persons or public authorities that seek the disclosure”. The Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 lists specific alternative measures, namely:

- internal/police investigations;
- the reinforcing of restrictions on access to certain secret information;
- dissemination of contrasting information as a countermeasure;

⁵⁹ Federal Law On Operational Search Activity 1995 (ed. 29.06.1995) N 144-FZ, ConsultantPlus [“Federal Law On Operational Search Activity”], Art.2

- investigation of other persons who are connected with the journalists (employees, colleagues, contracting partners or business partners of the person requesting the disclosure).

Therefore, as it is stated in the Clause 34 of the Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, the persons or public authorities seeking a disclosure should primarily search for and apply proportionate alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the protection of the right of journalists not to disclose their source. The existence of reasonable alternative measures for the protection of a legitimate interest excludes the necessity of disclosing the source by the journalist and the parties seeking the disclosure have to exhaust these alternatives at first.⁶⁰

The respective national legislation is in a full compliance with the above-mentioned requirements. The Supreme Court confirms that disclosure of the confidential information is an extraordinary measure, which is taken only by court decision and only if all alternative measures which adequately protect public rights and interests have been exhausted. Code of Criminal Procedure provides in Article 144(2) that the editorial board is not obliged to disclose the source of information on request of the prosecutor or state investigators since the information on request is subject to a specific condition that it be kept confidential.⁶¹ Therefore, Russian legislation adequately protects both journalistic rights and the interests of the state.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defense of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

6.1. Outweighing legitimate interest

The balance of such constitutional interests as freedom of expression (protection of journalistic sources) and public interest in the disclosure of information might be found at the stage of receiving information about crime. Article 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibits disclosure of journalistic information if its source decided to remain confidential.⁶²

⁶⁰ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation no R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information

⁶¹ Code of Criminal Procedure, Art.144(2)

⁶² Code of Criminal Procedure, Art.144

However, according to Article 41 of the Law On Mass Media the right of the journalist to maintain confidentiality of the source of his/her information is not an absolute one. This Article provides the only possible exception, namely when a court requests this information as necessary to decide a particular case what was mentioned in Q. 1, 2.⁶³

Disclosure of the information of journalists' professional secrecy is possible when any case is considered. It may vary from crime of violence to economic crimes or terrorist crimes, there is no special norm, regarding this. The aim is to protect any public relations being under violation. Article 2(1) of the Criminal Code mentions, the aim of this act is to protect all the rights and freedoms of any human and citizen, property, public order and public security, environment and also protection of peace and security of mankind, as well as the prevention of crimes⁶⁴ This is the underlying interest for all the crimes in the Criminal Code. These aims have lots in common with the list of the public interests in the Recommendation such as protection of human rights, prevention of crimes, etc.

Moreover, the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation established almost a similar list of situations that constitute outweighing public interest in disclosure the journalistic source. They include necessity to identify and reveal a threat to democracy and civil society, public security, environment and information concerning how governmental official and other public figures abuse their powers.⁶⁵

6.2. Absence of other alternative measures

Further, in its Ruling the Supreme Court pointed out that a court can demand the disclosure of the source of the information “if only there is no other possibility to establish the circumstances which are of high importance to proper consideration and decision of the case.”⁶⁶ Therefore, the Supreme Court implemented principles 3, 4 and 5 of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7.

7. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

7.1. Decisions of the European Court of Human Rights with respect to the Russian Federation as an integral part of its legal system

⁶³ Law On Mass Media, Art.41

⁶⁴ Criminal Code, Art.2 (1)

⁶⁵ Ruling N 16

⁶⁶ Ruling N 16

7.1.1. General rules

As it was referred to in Q. 1 human rights are applied in the Russian Federation directly. According to Article 15(4) of the Constitution the universally recognised norms of international law and international treaties of the Russian Federation are component part of its national legal system. In the event when rules established by law contradict to international treaty, the latter shall be applied.⁶⁷ Further, according to the Article 17 of the Russian Constitution the recognition and guarantees shall be provided for the rights and freedoms of man and citizen according to the universally recognised principles and norms of international law and according to the present Constitution. Relevant international law rules are also could be found under the European Convention on Human Rights.⁶⁸

The Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation adopted the Ruling on the implementation of ECHR where it stated that legal decisions of ECtHR are considered while implementing the Russian laws.⁶⁹ Particularly the content of the rights and freedoms established by the Russian laws shall be defined with the consideration of the content of the similar rights and freedoms established by ECHR and its Protocols.

The conditions under which any restrictions of the human rights and freedoms may be established are defined in accordance with Article 55 (3) of the Constitution mentioned before in Q. 2.1, ECHR and its Protocols. Such restrictions shall (a) pursue a legitimate aim; (b) be necessary, adequate and proportionate.⁷⁰

Notably, Article 19 of the ECHR establishes the ECtHR with the primary aim to ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties in the Convention and the Protocols thereto. Moreover, Article 46(1) of the ECHR emphasizes that decisions of the Court on behalf of the Russian Federation are accepted as final and binding for all authorities including national courts.⁷¹

However, according to the Ruling of the Constitutional Court of the Russian Federation on 14 July 2015⁷² and Article 46(1) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties “a State may not invoke the fact that its consent to be bound by a treaty has been expressed in violation of a provision of its internal law regarding competence to conclude treaties as invalidating its consent unless that violation was manifest and concerned a rule of its internal law of fundamental

⁶⁷ Constitution, Art.15(4)

⁶⁸ ECHR, Art.10

⁶⁹ The Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 27.06.2015 on the implementation of ECHR by the courts of general jurisdiction N 21 [“Ruling N 21”]

⁷⁰ Ibid. Art. 5

⁷¹ ECHR, Art.46(1)

⁷² Ruling N 21

importance”.⁷³ In the Russian Federation the rules of fundamental importance are contained in the Part 1 and Part 2 of the Constitution. In accordance with Articles 15(1)(4), 79 and 125 (6) of the Constitution the international treaties of the Russian Federation shall comply with the Constitutional provision and shall not be implemented in case the provisions thereof contravene the Constitutional ruled of fundamental importance. Moreover, if an international treaty at the time of its accession complied with the Constitution and subsequently was specified through the interpretation coming in conflict with the Constitutional provisions relating to the human rights and freedoms and to the fundamental principles of the Constitutional order of the Russian Federation the latter shall apply. This does not itself entail the termination of the treaty at question but entails incapacity to satisfy the obligation invoked in a particular case which was interpreted as prescribed above.⁷⁴

7.1.2. International court practice

As to the practical example, the case against the Russian Federation in the ECtHR is one of Ivashchenko v. Russia. Applicant, a photojournalist, travelled to Abkhazia in August 2009 where he took several photographs concerning, as he described, “the life of this unrecognised Republic”. On 27 August 2009 on his return to the Russian Federation he was required to pass through the Adler customs checkpoint, where he showed his Russian passport and press card. For unspecified reasons his belongings including a laptop and several electronic storage devices were inspected. A customs officer read the information contained on the storage devices and the laptop and examined the digital photographs stored on them. The copied data included the applicant’s personal correspondence, the passwords for his e-mail, Skype and Facebook accounts and private drawings, as well as photographs previously used in newspaper publications concerning extremist activities, the Ezid ethnic group and the Azov gambling zone. Applicant decided to appeal the actions of the customs authorities. Among other issues, applicant claimed violation of Article 10 of the ECHR because he was not provided necessary procedural safeguards to protect him from unjustified interference or to protect journalistic sources. Although the case is still pending it gives a perfect example of abuse of journalistic rights by state authorities.

7.2. Applicability of the laws with regard to the right to protect journalistic sources. Balance of different interests at stake

The crucial question here is one of a balance between the freedom of expression and legitimate aims pursued by state authorities in their restrictive measures

⁷³ The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties signed at Vienna 23 May 1969. Art. 46(1). Available at: <http://www.oas.org/legal/english/docs/Vienna%20Convention%20Treaties.htm>

⁷⁴ Ruling N 21

Starting with the freedom of expression reflected in Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights, the ECtHR in a countless number of cases emphasized that this freedom constitutes a cornerstone of the democratic society being therefore a basic human right.⁷⁵ The Court further pointed out that such broad scope of protection is explained by the necessity of pluralism and the breadth of views to develop democratic society. When the press is involved the balance even more focuses on the protection of freedom of expression, since the press is a valuable organ, “a watchdog of a democratic society” working within the prescribed legal scope to maintain democratic interests.⁷⁶

As to the practice of the national courts, it revolves mostly around the distribution of the wrongful information and information, discrediting honor, dignity or business reputation.

Thus, taking into account interpretation of the ECtHR the district court recognised that as long as respondent did not indicate the source of information about the exact salary of officials which was provided to the press anonymously, it did not result in the abuse of the freedom of press. The court delivered this conclusion because the protection of the journalistic sources constitutes the cornerstone of the freedom of press in the absence of which the function of the press as “watchdog in the democratic society” would be gravely undermined. The only possible exception to reveal such sources as the court pointed out was to protect more valuable interests at stake. However, in that case the protection of dignity and business reputation did not justify any deviation from the freedom of speech.⁷⁷ In another case the district court followed the similar logic and upheld the supremacy of the freedom of expression.⁷⁸

In conclusion the national courts as well as the Supreme Court pay attention to the recognised right of the journalists to protect their sources against arbitrary disclosure. Following their rulings, the freedom of expression as a foundation of democratic governance prevails over other circumstances. However, finding a balance is still very vague in the absence of legally defined criteria.

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalist’s sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear

⁷⁵ Handyside v the United Kingdom App no 5493/72 (ECtHR, 7 December 1976) §49

⁷⁶ See generally, De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium App no 19983/92 (ECtHR, 24 February 1997)

⁷⁷ Alechina T.S. and Department of pre-school education of town Sarov's Nizhny Novgorod region administration v OOO "Editorial office of newspaper Sarov", Decision of the Savor court of Nizhny Novgorod region November (29.08.2011). Available at: <http://sudact.ru/regular/doc/vQwF3MorXpWw/>

⁷⁸ The Ruling of The Sverdlovsky region court N 33-3395/2012 (27.03.2012). Available at: <http://sudrf.ru>

legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

8.1. General observation of the legislation of the Russian Federation concerning using electronic surveillance and combating of terrorism

The freedom of mass media according to the Russian laws cannot be subject to abuses. In particular, Article 4 of the Law On Mass Media prohibits the use of mass media in order to commit a crime, disclose information, and popularise terrorist ideas, corresponding manuals and information or to justify terrorist activities.⁷⁹

Such measures as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions may be applied in case there is a suspicion that the rights to the freedom of mass media have been abused. These measures should be authorised by a court warrant. The Russian legislative framework does not explicitly address criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws. However, the Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism defines the list of terrorist activities the prevention of which by the before mentioned means demands the court. These activities include:

- organization, planning, preparation, financing and realization of a terrorist act;
- incitement to a terrorist act;
- organization of illegal armed gangs, criminal communities or groups for committing a terrorist act, as well as participation in this type of community;
- recruitment, armament, trainings and usage of terrorists;
- informational or another aiding in planning, preparation or realization of terrorist act;
- propaganda of terrorist ideas, relevant manuals and information calling upon to commit a terrorist act or to justify this type of activity.⁸⁰

The Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism in its Article 11 states that during operation of combating terrorism measures such as passport control of individuals, and, importantly – the control of telephone conversations and other communications may be applied.⁸¹

The Federal Law On the Operational Search Activity also addresses the interception of communications. It consists of, inter alia, the interception of postal, telegraphic, telephone and other forms of communication and the collection of data from technical channels of communication. They are carried out by technical means by the Federal Security Service and the

⁷⁹ Law On Mass Media, Art.4

⁸⁰ Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism 2006 (ed. 31.12.2014) N 35-FZ, ConsultantPlus, Art.3(2)

⁸¹ Ibid, Art.11(3)(4)

agencies of the Ministry of the Internal Affairs of the Russian Federation, in accordance with decisions and agreements signed between the agencies involved.⁸² The Law stipulates that audio and video recording, photography, filming and other technical means may be used during operational-search activities, provided that they are not harmful to the life or health of those involved or to the environment.

Measures as control over the use of mails, phone-tapping and control of technical communication links could be used on the following conditions:

- 1) initiation of criminal proceeding;
- 2) occurrence of special information on:
 - criminal signs
 - activities that can threaten the state, military, economical, informational and environmental security of Russian Federation
 - persons avoiding justice
 - missing persons
- 3) instructions of certain state authority;
- 4) inquiry of international law-enforcement agencies.

Importantly, these measures should be sanctioned by a decision of judge based on objective facts. In exceptional circumstances other public authorities could authorise undertaking the measures envisaged by the Law even without a warrant, but it is necessary to inform the court about the measures during 24 hours. Within 48 hours since the beginning of the operational-search activities certain authority is required to obtain a judicial decision on the conduct of such operational-search activities or on its termination.⁸³ The similar provision is contained in Article 86 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where only a judicial decision authorises the interception of the audio.⁸⁴ A court may grant authorization to intercept the communications of a suspect, an accused or other persons if there are reasons to believe that information relevant to the criminal case may be discussed.⁸⁵

According to the above mentioned provisions a judge has the right to render the operational-search activities undertaken in the absence of the judicial warrant inadmissible in case he or she consider it contradicts the Russian laws. Article 75 of the Code of Criminal Procedure contains the criteria of the admissibility of evidence. The evidence obtained with the breach of the Code of Criminal Procedure rules shall be rendered inadmissible.⁸⁶ And as it is stated in Article 6 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure the protection of the human rights is one of its core principles.⁸⁷

⁸² Federal Law On Operational Search Activity, Art.6(4)

⁸³ Ibid., Art. 8

⁸⁴ Code of Criminal Procedure, Art.86

⁸⁵ Ibid., Art.186(1)

⁸⁶ Ibid., Art.75

⁸⁷ Ibid., Art.6

Consequently, the evidence obtained in the violation of the human rights could not be considered by a court as admissible. Further according to the Constitution no laws denying or belittling human and civil rights and liberties may be issued in the Russian Federation what also indirectly demonstrates that the evidence violating human rights is illegal. In cases of indirect seizure and interception of communications violation of human rights is also an obstacle to regard particular evidence as admissible. What is more, the Code of Criminal Procedure is silent on the issue that authorities are under the obligation to bring the seized information before a judge.

Moreover, the Federal Law On Communications imposes an obligation on communications service providers to furnish to the law-enforcement agencies information about subscribers and services received by them and any other information they require in order to achieve their aims and objectives in cases specified in federal laws.⁸⁸ Most likely by federal laws legislator meant Article 7 of the Federal Law On Operational Search Activity which states the grounds for operational-search activities.⁸⁹

The body responsible for monitoring the media (electronic and mass media), information technologies and telecommunications is Roskomnadzor. In any case, this body cannot request information which is not published in mass media. Accordingly Roskomnadzor does not have access to the source of information and cannot demand its disclosure⁹⁰

It is evident that the respective legislation merely provides general regulation without any specific rules concerning journalists. It could be explained by the fact that journalistic professional secrecy has no specific limits and is included in other spheres of regulation.

8.2. Legislation of the Russian Federation contains accessible although unclear and unprecise norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions.

The ECtHR established specific requirements for the law to justify interception of communications. Thus, the criterion of foreseeability implies that the national law must be sufficiently clear to give citizens an adequate indication as to the circumstances in which and the conditions on which public authorities are empowered to resort to any such measures.⁹¹

The extensive research revealed that the respective national legislation is not absolutely clear in its regulation of journalists' conduct in the context of surveillance and terrorism spheres. It also flows from the fact that these legislative norms could be interpreted in different ways in the absence of strict regulation.

⁸⁸ Federal Law On Communications 2003 (ed. 13.07.2015) N 126-FZ, Art.64(1)

⁸⁹ Federal Law On Operational Search Activity, Art.7

⁹⁰ Decree of the Government of the Russian Federation 2009 (ed. 25.12.2015) On the Federal Service for Surveillance on the communications, information technologies and mass media N 228 ["Decree N 228"] "

⁹¹ Malone v The United Kingdom App no 8691/79 (ECtHR, 2 August 1984), 67; Leander v Sweden App no 9248/81 (ECtHR, 26 March 1987), 51; Huwig v France App no 11105/84 (ECtHR, 24 April 1990), 29

The ECtHR confirmed this conclusion in cases of Roman Zakharov v. Russia and Bykov v. Russia. Firstly, in Roman Zakharov v. Russia the ECtHR unanimously found serious and systematic faults with the Russian legislative framework regulating the surveillance of mobile communications. The parties did not dispute that interceptions of mobile telephone communications have a basis in the domestic law (Code of Criminal Procedure and the Federal Law On the Operational Search Activity). The ECtHR upheld that these laws were accessible since they were published in an official ministerial magazine, combined with the fact that it can be accessed by the general public through an internet legal database.⁹² However, the Court concluded that Russian law does not provide with sufficient clarity the circumstances in which public authorities are empowered to resort to secret surveillance measures. The authorization procedures are not capable of ensuring that secret surveillance measures are ordered only when “necessary in a democratic society”. The supervision of interceptions, as it is currently organised, does not comply with the requirements of independence, powers and competence. The effectiveness of the remedies is undermined by the absence of notification at any point of interceptions, or adequate access to documents relating to interceptions.⁹³

Secondly, in Bykov v. Russia applicant claimed that the covert operation had involved an unlawful intrusion into his home and that the interception and recording of his conversation had interfered with his private life. The ECtHR held that there had been a violation of Article 8 of the European Convention on account of the use of a surveillance technique which was not accompanied by adequate safeguards against abuses and the legal discretion enjoyed by the police authorities had been too broad.⁹⁴

Thus, Russian legislation on surveillance and anti-terrorism measures is accessible, but still rather unclear and unprecise.

9. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

9.1. General knowledge

In the modern world governments and external arbitrarily obtain access to the journalists' information thereby they limit the freedom of expression of journalists and violate the principle of confidentiality.⁹⁵ Therefore, journalists are forced to rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect their sources. Since this issue is a subject to the attention of the international community as a whole the present report focuses on United Nations documents on a question of surveillance provided in the table below and the Russian legal framework despite its limitation.

⁹² Roman Zakharov v. Russia App no 47143/06 (ECtHR, 4 December 2015), §242

⁹³ Ibid, §302

⁹⁴ Bykov v. Russia App no 4378/02 (ECtHR, 10 March 2009), §§80, 82, 83

	Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the States' surveillance of communications (2013)⁹⁶	Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the use of encryption and anonymity (2015)⁹⁷
Theses	Privacy and freedom of expression are mutually dependent. Infringements on online journalism, which constitute intimidation and censorship such as: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ illegal hacking into online journalists and bloggers accounts; ▪ monitoring of their online activities; ▪ arbitrary arrests and detention; ▪ the blocking of websites that contain information that 	Encryption and anonymity constitutes necessary tools for exercising the right to freedom of opinion and expression in the digital age. Any restrictions must be provided by law and be necessary and proportionate to achieve legitimate aim.

⁹⁶ Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the implications of States' surveillance of communications on the exercise of the human rights to privacy and to freedom of opinion and expression 2013. Available at: <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/Annual.aspx>

⁹⁷ Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the use of encryption and anonymity to exercise the rights to freedom of opinion and expression in the digital age 2015. Available at: <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/Annual.aspx>

	criticize authorities.
Recommendations	Safeguards must be articulated in law (nature, scope, duration of, grounds for restrictive measures, bodies which authorize them, remedy provided).	National laws should recognise using encryption technology and other anonymity tools.
Obligations	Surveillance over communications should not be used until exhaustion of less invasive techniques. Any illegal surveillance should be criminalised.

These documents show opinio juris of UN members which states that confidentiality of sources should be protected against illegal surveillance. The Constitution also establishes the grounds to protect the confidentiality in Article 23 which guarantees privacy of correspondence, telephone conversations, postal, telegraph and other communications.⁹⁸ Further, the encryption and anonymity online are the supplementary legal sources of protection journalists against the illegal surveillance.

9.1.1. Encryption

According to Article 2(a) of the Decree of the Government of the Russian Federation On Licensing of Certain Activities Associated With Encryption (Cryptographic) Means N 313 encryption is a method of encoding messages or information in such a way that only authorised parties can read it by access to data (a text message or a file), using the decryption key.⁹⁹ The Federal Law On Licensing Certain Types of Activity N 99-FZ which covers general licensing procedures for many activities states that the license is needed to develop encryption for information systems and telecommunications systems, disseminate encryption material, work on encryption, and provide encryption services. At the same time, the usage of the cryptography to satisfy the needs for personal use as a natural person and of the legal entity or individual entrepreneur is not prohibited in the absence of a license¹⁰⁰.

⁹⁸ Constitution, Art. 23

⁹⁹ The Decree states that the Federal Security Service of the Russian Federation (FSB) is the licensing authority. The FSB licenses are issued by the FSB Center for Licensing, Certification, and Protection of State Secrets. The Decree of the Government of the Russian Federation from 16.04.2012 On Licensing of Certain Activities Associated With Encryption (Cryptographic) Means N 313 [“Decree N 313”], ConsultantPlus.

9.1.2. Anonymisers

In the Russian Federation tools that help to use anonymity online are called anonymisers. They can imitate access to a web-page from foreign IP addresses, which allows users to bypass blocking services on particular prohibited web-pages.

In February 2015 there were calls demanding pre-trial block of anonymisers and their equivalences like Tor. The Roskomnadzor confirmed that anonymisers should be prohibited because they allow getting access to the prohibited information and even worse, to conduct the cyber attacks.¹⁰¹ On the other hand, the Head of the Roskomnadzor Alexander Zharov emphasises that need to “self made” anonymizers exists which should be under special services control or at least certified by state bodies.¹⁰² Despite the fact that national legislation does not prohibit the use of anonymous sites and anonymisers, Roskomnadzor has taken steps in order to block them.¹⁰³

9.2. The right to surveillance vs. the protection of privacy

For most journalists e-mail and social network messages are the primary means for communication with their sources of information. In case the source of information prefers to use his or her right to anonymity it is highly important for journalists to ensure the confidentiality. At the same time journalists in Russia share their concern about the privacy in the country.¹⁰⁴ The number of cases when Russian authorities request the access to users' information located in the social networks service on the opinion of the drafters of this research is rather high. From 1 July 2014 to 31 December 2015 Russian authorities requested 233 times from Twitter to disclose users' information. There is no evidence whether the reasons of the requests to disclose the information were provided to the operators or not. However, Twitter did ¹⁰⁰ Federal Law On Licensing Certain Types of Activity N 99-FZ from 04.05.2011, ConsultantPlus.

¹⁰¹A. Golichina, Roskomnadzor confirmed that anonymizers in runet should be prohibited, Vedomosti (05.02.2015). Available at: <http://www.vedomosti.ru/technology/articles/2015/02/05/roskomnadzor-podderzhal-ideyu-zapreta-anonimajzerov-v-runete>

¹⁰² Roskomnadzor: encryption algorithms of anonymizers should be controlled by state special forces, Gazeta.ru (29.12.2015). Available at: http://www.gazeta.ru/tech/news/2015/12/29/n_8073197.shtml

¹⁰³ Following the judgment of Arapskiy court of the Krasnodar region site “RosKomSvoboda” was blocked because on this site advised how to bypass the interlock and visit the blocked sites. However, afterwards this site was unblocked. Available at: <https://digital.report/oon-priznala-anonimnost-v-internete-sostavnoy-chastyu-pravcheloveka/>

¹⁰⁴ Gainutdinov D., Chikov P. Russia under supervision. Report of the International non-governmental Human Rights Protection Group Agora. Available at: https://meduza.io/static/0001/Surveillance_Report_Agora.pdf

not disclose the data.¹⁰⁵ Similarly, in the beginning of 2015 Google responded only 5% of the 207 such requests.¹⁰⁶ The “Telegram” also refused to restrict access to the messenger when the Deputy of the Russian State Duma Alexander Ageev contacted the head of the Federal Security Service with this purpose.¹⁰⁷ The evidence whether the government abuses its right to surveillance or any external enrooted surveillance spyware in the gadgets of the users may be found due to the new programme Detekt developed with the partnership of Amnesty International.¹⁰⁸ Though the access to the programme has not been limited by the Russian Government the question if an evidence which was obtained using such programme will be admissible in court is still open and not legally regulated.

In conclusion, the Russian laws do not prohibit the usage of encryption programs and anonymisers although the legal regulation thereof is very scarce. At the same time there is not enough trust of the journalistic society that the government can provide the privacy of the information in reality. Consequently, journalists keep using technical tools to protect their sources by reliance of encryption and anonymity online.

10. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

Analysis of the legal framework of the Russian Federation has shown that whistle-blowers are neither explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources nor given other special protection. However, they are subjects to general protection under the distinguished instruments.¹⁰⁹

¹⁰⁵ Russia – Information requests, Transparency Report. Available at: <https://transparency.twitter.com/country/ru>

¹⁰⁶ Report concerning availability of services and data, Google (June – July 2015). Available at: <https://www.google.com/transparencyreport/userdatarequests/countries/>

¹⁰⁷ Deputy suggest FSS to control Telegram, Vedomosti newspaper N 3961 (17.11.2015). Available at: <https://www.vedomosti.ru/technology/articles/2015/11/17/617122-fsb-kontrolirovat-telegram>

¹⁰⁸ The new program would help activists to find out whether the government has surveilled over them, Amnesty International (24.11.2014). Available at: <https://amnesty.org.ru/node/3100/>

¹⁰⁹ The Constitution; the Criminal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure; the Government Decree of the Russian Federation “On security measures for participants of the criminal judicial proceedings” 27.10.2006 N 630; Ruling of the Constitutional Court of the Russian Federation “On the rights of victims of criminal cases to get acquainted with files” 11.06.2006; the Government Decree of the Russian Federation “On determining the level of harm made to human health” 17.08.2007 N 522; the Government Decree of the Russian Federation “On the Rules of payments to victims, witnesses and other participants of criminal judicial proceedings as a state protection” 11.11.2006 N 664; the Government Decree of the Russian Federation On protection of information for protecting victims, witnesses and other participants of the criminal judicial proceedings 03.03.2007 N 134

10.1. Different protection granted by disclosure in different areas

10.1.1. Anti-Corruption regulation

In 2006 the Russian Federation ratified United Nations Convention against Corruption and relevant Council of Europe's instruments among which are the Criminal Law Convention on Corruption.¹¹⁰ Unfortunately, national legislation including protection of whistle-blowers lacks conformity with the above mentioned international agreements yet.

In September 2008 the National Anti-Corruption Council approved a package of anti-corruption bills, which had been submitted by President Medvedev to the State Duma. The draft legislation was approved in its first week of reading and introduced a norm for the mandatory reporting of cases on corruption, graft, abuse of power or abuse of resources by public officials.

On 11 December 2008 at a meeting of the State Duma working group on anti-corruption, it was decided to remove a model for whistleblowing from the text of the anti-corruption legislation prepared for the second reading. The resulting legislation, the Federal Law On Combatting Corruption does not include an explicit reference to whistle-blowers, however under its Article 9(4) public officials, in accordance with the laws of the Russian Federation, who report corrupt offences committed by other public officials are protected.¹¹¹

Further, following the G20 2010 summit Anti-Corruption Action Plan, Russian Federation decided to introduce whistle-blowing protection legislation. A national plan to counteract corruption was approved by the decree of the President and ensures that the aforementioned legislation will be in effect until the 1 of April 2013.

Unfortunately, these efforts are not effective to grant necessary protection to whistle-blowers. Yet, there is no specific legal protection for whistle-blowers besides the general rules that appear in the Federal Law On Combatting Corruption.

10.1.1.1. ANTI-CORRUPTION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR

In the public sector, persons may use phone hotlines and e-mail addresses to file a complaint against public officials. However, under its anti-corruption mandate, the General Prosecutor's Office collects such information regardless of the position a person willing to report corruption holds. For example, in September 2007, the Office of Prosecutor General in Sverdlovsk opened a hotline through which citizens could report on corrupted officials. Some experts claimed that this was an attempt to collect “kompromat” on local bureaucrats on the eve of the December 2007 parliamentary election and obtain an instrument of control over regional authorities. It is very likely that this initiative will be replicated in other regions.

¹¹⁰United Nations Convention against Corruption Signature and Ratification Status as of 1 December 2015, United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. Available at: <http://www.unodc.org/tandem/tfservlet/UNODC/infocentre/press/press-releases/2015/15-09-01-UN-Convention-against-Corruption-Signature-and-Ratification-Status-as-of-1-December-2015>; Chart of signatures and ratifications of Treaty 173 (Criminal Law Convention on Corruption) Status as of 14/03/2016. Available at: http://www.coe.int/en/web/conventions/full-list/-/conventions/treaty/173/signatures?p_auth=v9h9mt4n;

¹¹¹ Federal Law On Combatting Corruption 2008 (ed. 15.02.2016) N 273-FZ, ConsultantPlus, Art.9(4)

In practice, the internal reporting mechanism for public sector corruption does not have a professional, full-time staff and does not receive regular funding.

10.1.1.2. ANTI-CORRUPTION IN THE PRIVATE SECTOR

Private sector employees who report cases of corruption, graft, abuse of power, or abuse of resources are not protected from recrimination.

Currently, a number of Russian companies have begun to undertake measures which minimise risks for being accused by whistle-blowers. They strengthen corporate governance by creating clearer separation of board and management competencies and responsibilities. The companies also introduce International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) and create greater transparency of accounts, disclosure of shareholders and nominate independent directors to the board. At the management level, they introduce ethical codes, internal audit procedures and diverse ways for employees to raise concerns about non-compliance. For example, Tyumen Oil Company has appointed an “anti-corruption manager” who is responsible for making ethical business.

10.1.2. Witness Protection

Whistle-blowers are granted general protection under the Federal Law On governmental protection of victims, witnesses and other participants of criminal judicial proceedings.¹¹² However as Transparency International clarified in its report a whistle-blowers are not a witness in the traditional sense, as described in the Code of Criminal Procedure.¹¹³ Thus, rules of criminal procedure those apply to witness protection of suspects and accused, do not protect corporate whistle-blowers.¹¹⁴

10.1.3. Civil Defamation Law

10.1.3.1. GENERAL RULES

¹¹² Federal Law On governmental protection of victims, witnesses and other participants of criminal judicial proceedings 2004 (ed. 08.03.2015) N 119-FZ, ConsultantPlus

¹¹³ Alternative to Silence: Whistle-blower Protection in 10 European Countries, Transparency International (15 November 2009)

¹¹⁴ D. Gololobov, Businessmen v. Investigators: Who is responsible for the Poor Russian Investment Climate?, Russian Law Journal Vol. II (2014) Issue 2, 136

Claims for civil defamation are founded on Articles 150-152 and 1099-1101 of the Civil Code.¹¹⁵ Article 150 of the Civil Code establishes interests which are legally protected, such as dignity of person and privacy. Only reputation (honor, good name, and business reputation) are afforded detailed codification. Article 152(1) of the Civil Code establishes the necessary elements of a successful civil defamation claim in Russian Federation, namely:

- dissemination of a communication concerning the plaintiff;
- communication should be defamatory;
- communication should be false. As interpreted by the Russian Supreme Court, falsity is presumed, with the burden of proof resting on the defendant to prove otherwise.

10.1.3.2. REMEDIES

In civil defamation cases the available remedies are: compensation for non-material harm (moral damages) the amount of which is left for the court to determine, retraction, right of reply if the defendant is a mass media organization, and monetary compensation.¹¹⁶

10.1.3.3. INTERCONNECTION BETWEEN THE CIVIL CODE, THE CRIMINAL CODE AND THE LAW ON MASS MEDIA

Lawsuits which are based on civil defamation claims rarely include other related claims, namely invasion of privacy. However, since this claim is not outlined in the Civil Code, Russian courts look to the Criminal Code when considering this claim.

Article 137 of the Criminal Code describes an invasion of privacy as “The illegal gathering or dissemination of information about the personal life of a person without that person’s permission which information constitutes a personal or family confidence, or the dissemination of such information...by means of the mass media, if such actions are undertaken for reasons of financial gain or personal benefit and cause harm to the rights and legal interests of citizens.”¹¹⁷

Moreover, the Law On Mass Media contains rules on the civil defamation. In particular, under Article 46 someone who was identified in a defamatory statement has a right of reply even if that statement is factually correct.¹¹⁸ Furthermore, the Law states that in lawsuits of or against the journalists and other media there is a possibility to obtain monetary compensation for moral damages.

¹¹⁵ Civil Code, Art.150-152, 1099-1101

¹¹⁶ Ibid, Art.152

¹¹⁷ Ibid, Art.137

¹¹⁸ Law On Mass Media, Art.46

In 2005, the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation issued a Resolution¹¹⁹ that the civil defamation law began to embrace the plurality principle by accepting multiple sources of law for consideration. Prior to that time, the Supreme Court did not deviate from the autonomy principle with respect to civil defamation and ordinary courts did not recognise external norms as applicable to such cases either.

In addition to accepting the plurality principle, the Ruling N 3 is also significant in its specific mandate to ordinary courts to internalise the ECtHR's interpretations of Article 10 of the ECHR. Prior to 2005, one of the most criticized aspects of Russia's civil defamation law was its approach to the fact/opinion distinction, namely the treatment by Russian courts of all "communication" as subject to Article 152 of the Civil Code.

The Ruling N 3 marked a change in approach to this issue. Significantly, the Supreme Court took the position that going forward Russian courts must distinguish between allegations of fact from statements of opinion, with opinion being excluded entirely from the scope of Article 152.

However, one caveat to this broad exclusion should be noted. Although statements of opinion are no longer subject to Article 152 defamation claims, the Supreme Court left open the possibility for an opinion to be the basis for a claim resting on insult. Also important to the statements of Ruling N 3 concerning the fact/opinion issue is the proclamation, set forth for the first time, that defamation plaintiffs must bear the burden of proof with respect to showing that the communication at issue is defamatory.

Further, the Ruling N 3 provides in terms of distinguishing defamation claims from claims of invasion of privacy, a distinction often lacking in the practice of the courts.

Finally, the Ruling N 3 establishes criteria for ordinary courts to consider in their determination of monetary awards for moral harm. Firstly, the amount should be "proportionate" to the harm itself. Secondly, the amount must not "encroach on the freedom of mass information". Although these criteria are vague, they show that the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation take into account that unduly high damages might overburden the mass media.

10.2. Disclosure of different types of information

10.2.1. Commercial secrets

As a general rule, disclosure of information which constitutes a commercial secrecy leads to liability. However, in accordance with Article 5 of the Federal Law On commercial secrets the following information does not constitute commercial secrets disclosure of which would not form a basis for liability:¹²⁰

¹¹⁹ The Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 2005 N 3, ConsultantPlus ["Ruling N 3"]

- about violations of the legislation of the Russian Federation and the facts of accountability for these violations;
- about environmental pollution, condition of fire safety, sanitary-epidemiological and radiation situation, food safety and other factors that may have a negative impact on the safe functioning of industrial objects, safety of citizens as well as safety of the population as a whole;
- about employer's debt on salary payments and other social payments.¹²¹

10.2.2. State secrets

Article 4 of the Law On Mass Media prohibits everyone from using mass media for the disclosure of information comprising state secret. According to the Mass Media Defense Centre¹²², this interpretation allows Russian mass media to engage in socially responsible journalism without oppression, excessive requirements or surplus of bureaucracy.¹²³

When information being a state secret become known to journalist he or she is not held criminally responsible for its publishing until the journalist does not have access to such information while performing his or her official or professional duties but the person who provided this information or had access to it is brought to criminal responsibility for disclosure of a state secret.¹²⁴ In this regard, the most striking example is the criminal case initiated by the department of the Federal Security Service in Perm region in 2003. In October 2002, the journalists of the newspaper The Star Konstantin Sterledev and Konstantin Bakharev published an article about drug traffickers which, according to the facts of the case, revealed the identity of an agent of the Security Service. Furthermore, senior police officer captain Sergei Dudkin was charged with the disclosure of the confidential information. Under the court's warrant the editorial office was searched, the journalists' phone conversations were recorded to find out what exactly captain Dudkin told the journalists about the activities of the drug traffickers.¹²⁵

¹²⁰ D.I. Cherkaev, Informing and signaling: good or bad for Russian companies?, Available at: <http://www.ao-journal.ru/> № 3 (22) 2006

¹²¹ Federal Law On Commercial Secrets 2004 (ed. 12.03.2014) N 98-FZ, ConsultantPlus, Art.5

¹²² Russian non-governmental organization aimed at the protection of the rights of journalists and editorial boards of mass media, contribution to the protection of the right to freedom of expression registered in 1996 in Voronezh, Russia, Available at: http://www.mmdc.ru/about_center/activity/

¹²³ New opportunities for the freedom of Mass Media in Russia, Mass Media law and practice, 07.05.10, Roscomnadzor Management, Federal Service for Supervision of Communications, Information Technology and Mass Media in Voronezh region, Available at: <http://36.rkn.gov.ru/p3773/p7760/?print=1>

¹²⁴ Criminal Code, Art.283

¹²⁵ Ruling of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 27.10.2003 Case N 44-O03-113C Available at: <http://www.vsrfr.ru>

Thus, journalists are not criminally responsible for the disclosure of the state secret but in a case when the court requests the disclosure of the journalistic source who disclosed the information contained the state secret as it was mentioned in Q. 2.1 a journalist shall behave accordingly. Article 7 of the Law On State Secrets provides the list of information which does not constitute state secret:

- information about condition of the environment, health, sanitation, demography, education, culture, agriculture and crime;
- information about violations of the rights and freedoms of man and citizen;
- information about facts of state organs and its officials' violations of law.¹²⁶

11. Conclusion

The analysis of the Russian laws has shown that journalists in Russia are enjoyed full protection in accordance with the Constitution of the Russian Federation, Law on Mass Media, Code of Administrative Offences, Criminal Code, Code of Criminal Procedure and other non-legislative instruments. This protection is also a core of international obligations of the Russian Federation under the ICCPR, ECHR and other international conventions.

Under these instruments the journalists' rights to freedom of expression and privacy of their messages constitute basis for the protection. Even more importantly, to perform these rights and freedoms journalists could keep their source of information confidential except when the court has requested this information with regard to the particular proceedings. The court can exercise this power only after exhaustion of all other available means to prove a fact and if the public interest in disclosure definitely outweighs the interest in keeping it secret. Although the Russian courts regard freedom of speech as a cornerstone of democratic society absence of clearly defined criteria makes it difficult to found a balance between different interests at stake.

In addition, the LRG faced a challenge to find out whether journalists' protection extends to anyone else. In the Russian Federation this protection also covers editorial board and recognised by it freelance authors or correspondents if they perform editorial's assignments. Unfortunately, the protection of journalistic sources does not extend to bloggers as other media actors.

When freedom of mass media is abused Russian courts shall authorise the electronic surveillance and apply the anti-terrorism laws. In the absence of explicit regulation the Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism and the Federal Law On Operational Search Activity indirectly address conditions to apply these measures. Although being accessible these Laws contain unclear and unprecise norms that were confirmed by the ECtHR in Roman Zakharov v. Russia and Bykov v. Russia.

¹²⁶ The Law of the Russian Federation On State Secrets 1993 (ed. 08.03.2015) N 5485-1, ConsultantPlus, Art.7

Moreover, the LRG sought to find out whether the journalists could rely on encryption and anonymity online. Despite the fact that Russian legislation does not prohibit the use of anonymous sites and anonymisers, state bodies have taken steps in order to block them. However, still the government could not effectively protect journalistic privacy which undermines the mere trust in the high echelons of power. Therefore, encryption and anonymity tools are considered to be the only way of journalists to defend their sources.

Further, whistle-blowers are neither explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources nor given other special protection. However, they are subjects to general protection which depends on disclosure of different types of information in different areas.

Having analyzed the respective national legislation, the LRG has come to the general conclusion that regulation of the rights of journalists is vague in its terms and not well structured. This could also be explained by the very limited court practice where unwillingness of journalists to be involved in a trial is their adaptation to the existing real situations.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- Constitution of the Russian Federation (adopted by nation-wide voting 12.12.1993) (as amended by Laws of the Russian Federation about Amendments to Constitution of the Russian Federation 30.12.2008 N 6-FKZ, 30.12.2008 N 7-FKZ, 05.02.2014 N 2-FKZ, 21.07.2014 N 11-FKZ)
- Law of the Russian Federation On Mass Media 1991 (ed. 05.04.2016) N 2124
- Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 30.03.2016) N 174-FZ
- Code of Professional Ethics of Russian Journalist, Union of Journalists of the Russian Federation 1994
- Code of Administrative Offences of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 26.04.2016) N 195-FZ
- Criminal Code of the Russian Federation 1996 (ed. 29.06.2009) N 63-FZ
- Civil Code of the Russian Federation 1994 N 51-FZ
- Labour Code of the Russian Federation 2001 (ed. 30.12.2015) N 197-FZ
- Federal Law On amendments to the Federal law On information, information technologies and about information protection” and certain legislative acts of the Russian Federation on streamlining the exchange of information via information and telecommunication networks” 2014 (ed. 21.07.2014) N 97-FZ
- Federal Law On information, information technologies and on information protection 2006 (ed. 13.07.2015) N 149-FZ
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 16.12.1966, 999 UNTS 171
- European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 04.11.1950, ETS 5; 213 UNTS 221
- Resolution N 2, 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy, Principles 3, 7.
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, 08.03.2000, Council of Europe
- Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation no R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information
- United Nations Convention against Corruption Signature and Ratification Status as of 1 December 2015, United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. Available at: <https://www.unodc.org/unodc/en/treaties/CAC/signatories.htm>
- Chart of signatures and ratifications of Treaty 173 (Criminal Law Convention on Corruption) Status as of 14/03/2016. Available at: http://www.coe.int/en/web/conventions/full-list/-/conventions/treaty/173/signatures?p_auth=V9h9mT4n;
- The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties signed at Vienna 23 May 1969
- Federal Law On the order of consideration of citizens' appeals 2006 (ed. 03.11.2015) N 59-FZ

- Federal Law On ratification of the European Convention of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and its Protocols 1998 N 54-FZ
- Federal Law On Operational Search Activity 1995 (ed. 29.06.1995) N 144-FZ
- Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism 2006 (ed. 31.12.2014) N 35-FZ
- Federal Law On Communications 2003 (ed. 13.07.2015) N 126-FZ
- Federal Law On Combatting Corruption 2008 (ed. 15.02.2016) N 273-FZ
- Federal Law On Commercial Secrets 2004 (ed. 12.03.2014) N 98-FZ
- Law of the Russian Federation On State Secrets 1993 (ed. 08.03.2015) N 5485-1
- Federal Law On governmental protection of victims, witnesses and other participants of criminal judicial proceedings 2004 (ed. 08.03.2015) N 119-FZ
- The Government Decree of the Russian Federation On security measures for participants of the criminal judicial proceedings 27.10.2006 N 630
- The Government Decree of the Russian Federation On determining the level of harm made to human health 17.08.2007 N 522
- The Government Decree of the Russian Federation On the Rules of payments to victims, witnesses and other participants of criminal judicial proceedings as a state protection 11.11.2006 N 664
- The Government Decree of the Russian Federation On protection of information for protecting victims, witnesses and other participants of the criminal judicial proceedings 03.03.2007 N 134

12.2. Case Law

- Bykov v. Russia App no 4378/02 (ECHtR, 10.03.2009)
- De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium App no 19983/92 (ECHtR, 24.02.1997)
- Handyside v the United Kingdom App no 5493/72 (ECHtR, 07.12.1976)
- Huvig v France App no 11105/84 (ECHtR, 24.04.1990)
- Alechina T.S. and Department of pre-school education of town Sarov's Nizhny Novgorod region administration v OOO "Editorial office of newspaper Sarov", Decision of the Savor court of Nizhny Novgorod region November (29.08.2011)
- The Ruling of The Sverdlovsky region court N 33-3395/2012 (27.03.2012)
- Leander v Sweden App no 9248/81 (ECHtR, 26 March 1987)
- Malone v The United Kingdom App no 8691/79 (ECHtR, 02.08.1984)
- Resolution of the regional court of the Kaliningrad 12.08.2014 on a case N4-Ar-378/2014
- Roman Zakharov v. Russia App no 47143/06 (ECHtR, 4 December 2015)
- Ruling of the Constitutional Court of the Russian Federation "On the rights of victims of criminal cases to get acquainted with files" 11.07.2006
- Ruling of the Constitutional Court of the Russian Federation 2015 N 21-P
- Ruling of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation 2010 (ed. 09.02.2012) "On the practice of courts' application of the law On Mass Media N 16

12.3. Books and articles

- Alechina T.S. and Department of pre-school education of town Sarov's Nizhny Novgorod region administration v OOO "Editorial office of newspaper Sarov", state court of Savor Nizhny Novgorod region (2011)
- Alternative to Silence: Whistle-blower Protection in 10 European Countries, Transparency International (15 November 2009)
- D. Bakhareva, Legal regulation of work of freelance correspondents of the print media, Labour Law, 2008, N 6, 69-72. Available at: <http://www.center-bereg.ru/h1455.html>
- D. Gololobov, Businessmen v. Investigators: Who is responsible for the Poor Russian Investment Climate?, Russian Law Journal Vol. II (2014) Issue 2, 136
- D.I. Cherkaev, Informing and signaling: good or bad for Russian companies?, Akcionerhoe obshchestvo, № 3 (22) 2006
- Golichina, Roskomnadzor confirmed that anonymizers in runet should be prohibited, Vedomosti (05.02.2015). Available at: <http://www.vedomosti.ru/technology/articles/2015/02/05/roskomnadzor-podderzhal-ideyu-zapreta-anonimajzerov-v-runete>
- Roskomnadzor asked Twitter to explain his attitude to the Russian legislation, Vedomosti (17.02.2015). Available at: <http://www.vedomosti.ru/politics/news/2015/02/17/roskomnadzor-poprosil-twitter-razyasnit-ego-otnoshenie-k-rossiiskomu-zakonodatelstvu>
- Roskomnadzor: encryption algorithms of anonymizers should be controlled by state special forces, Gazeta.ru (29.12.2015). Available at: http://www.gazeta.ru/tech/news/2015/12/29/n_8073197.shtml
- The new program would help activists to find out whether the government has surveilled over them, Amnesty International (24.11.2014). Available at: <https://amnesty.org.ru/node/3100/>
- The UN declared anonymity in the Internet as a part of human rights, Digital.Report (25.01.2013). Available at: <https://digital.report/oon-priznala-anonimnost-v-internete-sostavnoy-chastyu-prav-cheloveka/>
- Users of Skype demanded answer to the question about security of private conversations, Kommersant.ru (25.01.2013). Available at: <http://www.kommersant.ru/doc/2112247>

12.4. Other sources

- Recommendations of the Report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education of the Parliamentary Assembly (2010) on the protection of journalistic sources
- Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the implications of States' surveillance of communications on the exercise of the human rights to privacy and to freedom of opinion and expression A/HRC/23/40 2013. Available at: <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/Annual.aspx>

- Report of the Special Rapporteur to the Human Rights Council on the use of encryption and anonymity to exercise the rights to freedom of opinion and expression in the digital age A/HRC/29/32 2015. Available at:
- <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/Annual.aspx>
- Report of the Grand Jury of the Russian Union of Journalists and the Public Collegium of the Press Complaints. Available at: <http://ruj.ru/x/the-report-of-the-secretary-of-the-russian-union-of-journalists-mikhail-fedotov-on-the-work-of-the-j.php>
- Special report on Internet surveillance, focusing on 5 governments and 5 companies “Enemies of the Internet”. Available at: <http://en.rsf.org/special-report-on-internet-11-03-2013,44197.html>
- Report concerning availability of services and data, Google (June – July 2015). Available at: <https://www.google.com/transparencyreport/userdatarequests/countries/>
- Russia – Information requests, Transparency Report. Available at: <https://transparency.twitter.com/country/ru>
- Association of Journalists of the Russian Federation (Don Charter) (01.12.2013). Available at: http://www.ruj.ru/_news/4900/?sphrase_id=10521
- Draft of mediaethical standard of Public Collegium responsible for press complaints 2015. Available at: <http://presscouncil.ru/index.php/teoriya-i-praktika/dokumenty/4756-mediaeticheskij-standart-2015>
- New opportunities for the freedom of Mass Media in Russia, Mass Media law and practice, 07.05.10, Roscomnadzor Management, Federal Service for Supervision of Communications, Information Technology and Mass Media in Voronezh region, available at: <http://36.rkn.gov.ru/p3773/p7760/?print=1>
- Register of decisions of the Collegium. Available at: <http://www.presscouncil.ru/index.php/praktika/rassmotrennye-zhaloby>

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in your native language	Corresponding translation
Конституция Российской Федерации, часть 4 статьи 15 Общепризнанные принципы и нормы международного права и международные договоры Российской Федерации являются составной частью ее правовой системы. Если международным договором Российской Федерации установлены иные правила, чем предусмотренные законом, то применяются правила международного договора.	Constitution of the Russian Federation, Article 15 (4) The universally-recognised norms of international law and international treaties and agreements of the Russian Federation shall be a component part of its legal system. If an international treaty or agreement of the Russian Federation establishes other rules than those envisaged by law, the rules of the international agreement shall be applied.
Конституция Российской Федерации, часть 2 статьи 23 Каждый имеет право на тайну переписки, телефонных переговоров, почтовых, телеграфных и иных сообщений. Ограничение этого права допускается только на основании судебного решения.	Constitution of the Russian Federation, Article 23 (2) Everyone shall have the right to privacy of correspondence, of telephone conversations, postal, telegraph and other messages. Limitations of this right shall be allowed only by court decision.
Конституция Российской Федерации, часть 4 статьи 29	Constitution of the Russian Federation, Article 29 (4)

Каждый имеет право свободно искать, получать, передавать, производить и распространять информацию любым законным способом. Перечень сведений, составляющих государственную тайну, определяется федеральным законом.	Everyone shall have the right to freely look for, receive, transmit, produce and distribute information by any legal means. The list of data comprising state secrets shall be determined by a federal law.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 2 Под журналистом понимается лицо, занимающееся редактированием, созданием, сбором или подготовкой сообщений и материалов для редакции зарегистрированного средства массовой информации, связанное с ней трудовыми или иными договорными отношениями либо занимающееся такой деятельностью по ее уполномочию...	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 2 The journalist shall be understood to mean a person who edits, creates, collects or prepares messages and materials for the editor's office of a mass medium and is connected with it with labor and other contractual relations or engaged in such activity, being authorised by it...
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 4 Не допускается использование средств массовой информации в целях совершения уголовно наказуемых деяний, для разглашения сведений, составляющих государственную или иную специально охраняемую законом тайну, для распространения материалов, содержащих публичные призывы к осуществлению террористической	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 4 No provision shall be made for the use of mass media for purposes of committing criminally indictable deeds, divulging information making up a state secret or any other law-protective secret, calling for the seizure of power, violently changing the constitutional system and the state integrity, fanning national, class, social and religious intolerance or strife, propagating war and also for the spreading of

деятельности или публично оправдывающих терроризм, других экстремистских материалов, а также материалов, пропагандирующих порнографию, культ насилия и жестокости, и материалов, содержащих нецензурную брань. Запрещается использование в радио-, теле-, видео-, кинопрограммах, документальных и художественных фильмах, а также в информационных компьютерных файлах и программах обработки информационных текстов, относящихся к специальным средствам массовой информации, скрытых вставок и иных технических приемов и способов распространения информации, воздействующих на подсознание людей и (или) оказывающих вредное влияние на их здоровье...	broadcasts propagandizing pornography or the cult of violence and cruelty. It shall be prohibited to use – in the television, video and cinema programmes or in documentary and feature films, and also in information computer files and in the programmes of the processing of information texts belonging to special mass information media - concealed in - sets influencing the subconscious of human beings and/or affecting their health.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 12 Не требуется регистрация: средств массовой информации, учреждаемых органами государственной власти и органами местного самоуправления исключительно для издания их официальных сообщений и материалов, нормативных и иных актов; периодических печатных изданий тиражом менее одной тысячи	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 12 No registration is required for the following mass media: the mass information media founded by the organs of legislative, executive and judicial power to publish nothing but their official communications and materials, normative and other acts; periodicals with a total print of not less than one thousand copies;

экземпляров; радио- и телепрограмм, распространяемых по кабельным сетям, ограниченным помещением и территорией одного государственного учреждения, одной образовательной организации или одного промышленного предприятия либо имеющим не более десяти абонентов; аудио- и видеопрограмм, распространяемых в записи тиражом не более десяти экземпляров.	radio and television programmes disseminated through cable networks, limited by the premises and area of one governmental institution, educational establishment industrial enterprise or organization that has not more than ten subscribers; audio and video-programmes spread in recording with a total printing of not more than ten copies.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», части 1 и 2 статьи 41 Редакция не вправе разглашать в распространяемых сообщениях и материалах сведения, предоставленные гражданином с условием сохранения их в тайне. Редакция обязана сохранять в тайне источник информации и не вправе называть лицо, предоставившее сведения с условием неразглашения его имени, за исключением случая, когда соответствующее требование поступило от суда в связи с находящимся в его производстве делом.	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 41 (1,2) The editorial office shall not have the right to divulge in distributed reports and materials the information submitted by a private citizen with the proviso of keeping this information secret. The editorial office shall be obliged to keep the source of information secret and shall not have the right to name the person who has submitted information with the proviso of non-divulgence of his name, except for the case when the corresponding demand came from a court of law in connection with case it disposes of.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 46	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 46

Гражданин или организация, в отношении которых в средстве массовой информации распространены сведения, не соответствующие действительности либо ущемляющие права и законные интересы гражданина, имеют право на ответ (комментарий, реплику) в том же средстве массовой информации. В отношении ответа и отказа в таковом применяются правила статей 43 - 45 настоящего Закона. Ответ на ответ помещается не ранее чем в следующем выпуске средства массовой информации. Данное правило не распространяется на редакционные комментарии.	A private citizen or organization, in respect of whom a mass medium has spread information that runs counter to the reality or impinges on the rights and lawful interests of the citizen, shall have the right to give the answer (commentary or retort) in the same mass medium. The rules, contained in Articles 43-45 of the present Law shall be applicable to the answer or refusal to this reply. The answer to the reply shall be featured at least in the next issue of a mass medium. This rule shall not extend to editorial commentaries.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 49 Журналист обязан: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) соблюдать устав редакции, с которой он состоит в трудовых отношениях; 2) проверять достоверность сообщаемой им информации; 3) удовлетворять просьбы лиц, предоставивших информацию, об указании на ее источник, а также об авторизации цитируемого высказывания, 	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 49 The journalist shall be obliged: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) to observe the statutes of the editorial office with which he maintains labor relations; 2) to verify the authenticity of the information he supplies; 3) to satisfy the requests of the persons who submitted information concerning the indication of its source, and also the authorization of a cited pronouncement, if

если оно оглашается впервые; 4) сохранять конфиденциальность информации и (или) ее источника; 5) получать согласие (за исключением случаев, когда это необходимо для защиты общественных интересов) на распространение в средстве массовой информации сведений о личной жизни гражданина от самого гражданина или его законных представителей; 6) при получении информации от граждан и должностных лиц ставить их в известность о проведении аудио- и видеозаписи, кино - и фотосъемки; 7) ставить в известность главного редактора о возможных исках и предъявлении иных предусмотренных законом требований в связи с распространением подготовленного им сообщения или материала; 8) отказаться от данного ему главным редактором или редакцией задания, если оно либо его выполнение связано с нарушением закона; 9) предъявлять при осуществлении профессиональной деятельности по первому требованию редакционное удостоверение или иной документ, удостоверяющий личность и полномочия журналиста; Журналист несет также иные обязанности, установленные законодательством Российской Федерации о средствах массовой информации.	it is made public for the first time; 4) to preserve the confidential character of information and (or) its source; 5) to receive the consent of a private citizen or his lawful representatives (except for the cases when it is necessary to protect public interests) to the spread in a mass medium of information about his personal life; 6) to inform private citizens and officials about audio- and video-recording, photography and cine-photography upon the receipt data from these persons and officials; 7) to inform the editor-in-chief about possible suits and the presentation of other claims envisaged by law in connection with the spread of the communication or material prepared by him; 8) to decline the assignment given to him by the editor-in-chief or his editorial office, if its fulfillment involves the infringement of law; 9) to produce as soon as required the identity card issued by his editorial office or any other document that certifies his identity and rights, when he carries on professional activities. The journalist shall also bear other duties established by the legislation of the Russian Federation on mass media. In his professional activities the journalist shall be obliged to respect the rights, lawful interests, the honor and dignity of
---	--

При осуществлении профессиональной деятельности журналист обязан уважать права, законные интересы, честь и достоинство граждан и организаций. Государство гарантирует журналисту в связи с осуществлением им профессиональной деятельности защиту его чести, достоинства, здоровья, жизни и имущества как лицу, выполняющему общественный долг.	private citizens and organizations. The State shall guarantee for the journalist, who carries on his professional activities, the protection of his honor, dignity, health, life and property as a person discharging his civil duty.
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 52 Профессиональный статус журналиста, установленный настоящим Законом, распространяется: на штатных сотрудников редакций, занимающихся редактированием, созданием, сбором или подготовкой сообщений и материалов для многотиражных газет и других средств массовой информации, продукция которых распространяется исключительно в пределах одного предприятия (объединения), организации, учреждения; на авторов, не связанных с редакцией средства массовой информации трудовыми или иными договорными отношениями, но признаваемых ею своими внештатными авторами или корреспондентами, при выполнении ими поручений редакции.	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 52 The professional status of journalists established by the present Law shall extend to: staff workers of the editorial offices engaged in editing, writing, collecting or preparing communications and materials for newspapers with a large circulation and other mass media whose products are disseminated exclusively within one enterprise (association), organization or institution; authors who are not connected with the editorial office or section of a mass medium by labor or other contractual relations but are recognized by it as its free-lance authors or non-staff correspondents when they fulfill the editorial office's assignments.

Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 56 Учредители, редакции, издатели, распространители, государственные органы, организации, учреждения, предприятия и общественные объединения, должностные лица, журналисты, авторы распространенных сообщений и материалов несут ответственность за нарушения законодательства Российской Федерации о средствах массовой информации...	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 56 The founders, editorial offices and sections, distributors, state agencies, organizations, institutions, enterprises and public associations, officials, journalists, and the authors of disseminated reports and materials shall bear responsibility for breaching the legislation of the Russian Federation on mass media...
Закон Российской Федерации «О средствах массовой информации», статья 58 Ущемление свободы массовой информации, то есть воспрепятствование в какой бы то ни было форме со стороны граждан, должностных лиц государственных органов и организаций, общественных объединений законной деятельности учредителей, редакций, издателей и распространителей продукции средства массовой информации, а также журналистов, в том числе посредством: осуществления цензуры; вмешательства в деятельность и нарушения профессиональной	Law of the Russian Federation on Mass Media, Article 58 The infringement of the freedom of mass communication, that is, the prevention by individuals, officials of state organs and organizations, and public associations of the lawful activity of the founders, editorial offices, publishers and distributors of mass media products, and also by journalists by means of: editorial office; interference in the activity and breach of the professional independence of the editorial office; illegal termination or suspension of the

самостоятельности редакции; незаконного прекращения либо приостановления деятельности средства массовой информации; нарушения права редакции на запрос и получение информации; незаконного изъятия, а равно уничтожения тиража или его части; принуждения журналиста к распространению или отказу от распространения информации; установления ограничений на контакты с журналистом и передачу ему информации, за исключением сведений, составляющих государственную, коммерческую или иную специально охраняемую законом тайну; нарушения прав журналиста, установленных настоящим Законом, – влечет уголовную, административную, дисциплинарную или иную ответственность в соответствии с законодательством Российской Федерации. Обнаружение органов, организаций, учреждений или должностей, в задачи либо функции которых входит осуществление цензуры массовой информации, – влечет немедленное прекращение их финансирования и ликвидацию в порядке, предусмотренном законодательством Российской Федерации.	functioning of a mass medium; breach of the right of the editorial office in reply to the inquiry and receipt of information; illegal seizure and also destruction of the print or part thereof; compulsion of journalists to spread information or to refuse to spread it; establishment of limitations on the contracts with journalists and transfer of information to them, except for the data comprising a state, commercial or any other specially law-protected secret; breach of the rights of journalists established by the present Law; shall entail criminal, administrative, disciplinary or any other responsibility in accordance with the legislation of the Russian Federation. The identification of organs, organizations, institutions or officials whose functions cover censorship of mass communication shall entail the immediate termination of their financing and their liquidation in the order prescribed by the legislation of the Russian Federation.
---	---

Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 150	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 150
1. Жизнь и здоровье, достоинство личности, личная неприкосновенность, честь и доброе имя, деловая репутация, неприкосновенность частной жизни, неприкосновенность жилища, личная и семейная тайна, свобода передвижения, свобода выбора места пребывания и жительства, имя гражданина, авторство, иные нематериальные блага, принадлежащие гражданину от рождения или в силу закона, неотчуждаемы и непередаваемы иным способом. 2. Нематериальные блага защищаются в соответствии с настоящим Кодексом и другими законами в случаях и в порядке, ими предусмотренных, а также в тех случаях и пределах, в каких использование способов защиты гражданских прав (статья 12) вытекает из существа нарушенного нематериального блага или личного неимущественного права и характера последствий этого нарушения...	1. The life and health, the personal dignity and personal immunity, the honour and good name, the business reputation, the immunity of private life, the personal and family secret, the right of a free movement, of the choice of the place of stay and residence, the right to the name, the copyright and the other personal non-property rights and non-material values, possessed by the citizen since his birth or by force of the law, shall be inalienable and untransferable in any other way. In the cases and in conformity with the procedure, stipulated by the law, the personal non-property rights and the other non-material values, possessed by the deceased person, may be exercised and protected by other persons, including the heirs of their legal owner. 2. The non-material values shall be protected in conformity with the present Code and with the other laws in the cases and in the order, stipulated by these, and also in those cases and within that scope, in which the use of the ways of protecting the civil rights (Article 12) follow from the substance of the violated non-material right and from the nature of the consequences of this violation.

Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 151 Если гражданину причинен моральный вред (физические или нравственные страдания) действиями, нарушающими его личные неимущественные права либо посягающими на принадлежащие гражданину нематериальные блага, а также в других случаях, предусмотренных законом, суд может возложить на нарушителя обязанность денежной компенсации указанного вреда. При определении размеров компенсации морального вреда суд принимает во внимание степень вины нарушителя и иные заслуживающие внимания обстоятельства. Суд должен также учитывать степень физических и нравственных страданий, связанных с индивидуальными особенностями гражданина, которому причинен вред.	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 151 If the citizen has been inflicted a moral damage (the physical or moral sufferings) by the actions, violating his personal non-property rights or infringing upon the other non-material values in his possession, and also in the other law-stipulated cases, the court may impose upon the culprit the duty to pay out the monetary compensation for the said damage. When determining the size of compensation for the moral damage, the court shall take into consideration the extent of the culprit's guilt and the other circumstances, worthy of attention. The court shall also take into account the depth of the physical and moral sufferings, connected with the individual features of the person, to whom the damage has been done.
Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 152 1. Гражданин вправе требовать по суду опровержения порочащих его честь, достоинство или деловую репутацию сведений, если распространивший такие сведения не докажет, что они соответствуют действительности. По требованию заинтересованных лиц	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 152 1. The citizen shall have the right to claim through the court that the information, discrediting his honour, dignity or business reputation be refuted, unless the person who has spread such information proves its correspondence to reality. By the demand of the interested persons, the citizen's honour and dignity shall also be

допускается защита чести и достоинства гражданина и после его смерти. 2. Если сведения, порочащие честь, достоинство или деловую репутацию гражданина, распространены в средствах массовой информации, они должны быть опровергнуты в тех же средствах массовой информации. Если указанные сведения содержатся в документе, исходящем от организации, такой документ подлежит замене или отзыву. Порядок опровержения в иных случаях устанавливается судом. 3. Гражданин, в отношении которого средствами массовой информации опубликованы сведения, ущемляющие его права или охраняемые законом интересы, имеет право на опубликование своего ответа в тех же средствах массовой информации. 4. Если решение суда не выполнено, суд вправе наложить на нарушителя штраф, взыскиваемый в размере и в порядке, предусмотренных процессуальным законодательством, в доход Российской Федерации. Уплата штрафа не освобождает нарушителя от обязанности выполнить предусмотренное решением суда действие. 5. Гражданин, в отношении которого распространены сведения, порочащие его честь, достоинство или деловую репутацию, вправе наряду с опровержением таких сведений требовать возмещения убытков и морального вреда, причиненных их	liable to protection after his death. 2. If the information, discrediting the honour, dignity or business reputation of the citizen, has been spread by the mass media, it shall be refuted by the same mass media. If the said information is contained in the document, issued by an organization, the given document shall be liable to an exchange or recall. In the other cases, the procedure for the refutation shall be ruled by the court. 3. The citizen, with respect to whom the mass media have published the information, infringing upon his rights or his law-protected interests, shall have the right to publish his answer in the same mass media. 4. If the ruling of the court has not been executed, the court shall have the right to impose upon the culprit a fine, to be exacted in the amount and in the order, stipulated by the procedural legislation, into the revenue of the Russian Federation. The payment of the fine shall not exempt the culprit from the duty to perform the action, ruled by the court decision. 5. The citizen, with respect to whom the information, discrediting his honour, dignity or business reputation has been spread, shall have the right, in addition to the refutation of the given information, also to claim the compensation of the losses and of the moral damage, caused by its spread. 6. If the person, who has spread the information, discrediting the honour, dignity or business reputation of the citizen, cannot be identified, the citizen
--	--

распространением. 6. Если установить лицо, распространившее сведения, порочащие честь, достоинство или деловую репутацию гражданина, невозможно, лицо, в отношении которого такие сведения распространены, вправе обратиться в суд с заявлением о признании распространенных сведений не соответствующими действительности. 7. Правила настоящей статьи о защите деловой репутации гражданина соответственно применяются к защите деловой репутации юридического лица.	shall have the right to turn to the court with the demand that it recognize the spread information as not corresponding to reality. 7. The rules of the present Article on the protection of the business reputation of the citizen shall be applied, correspondingly, to the protection of the business reputation of the legal entity.
Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 1099 1. Основания и размер компенсации гражданину морального вреда определяются правилами, предусмотренными настоящей главой и статьей 151 настоящего Кодекса. 2. Моральный вред, причиненный действиями (бездействием), нарушающими имущественные права гражданина, подлежит компенсации в случаях, предусмотренных законом. 3. Компенсация морального вреда осуществляется независимо от подлежащего возмещению имущественного вреда.	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 1099 1. The grounds and the amount of compensation for the moral damage done to an individual shall be determined by the rules, provided for by this Chapter and Article 151 of this Code. 2. The moral damage inflicted by actions (inaction) that infringe the property rights of an individual shall be subject to compensation in cases, provided for by the law. 3. The moral damage shall be compensated regardless of the property damage subject to compensation.

Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 1100 Компенсация морального вреда осуществляется независимо от вины причинителя вреда в случаях, когда: вред причинен жизни или здоровью гражданина источником повышенной опасности; вред причинен гражданину в результате его незаконного осуждения, незаконного привлечения к уголовной ответственности, незаконного применения в качестве меры пресечения заключения под стражу или подписки о невыезде, незаконного наложения административного взыскания в виде ареста или исправительных работ; вред причинен распространением сведений, порочащих честь, достоинство и деловую репутацию; в иных случаях, предусмотренных законом.	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 1100 The moral damage shall be compensated regardless of the guilt of the inflictor of damage in cases where: injury has been inflicted the life or health of an individual by a source of special danger; damage has been done to an individual as a result of his illegal conviction, the illegal institution of proceedings against him, the illegal application of remand in custody as a measure of suppression or of a written understanding not to leave his place of residence, the illegal imposition of the administrative penalty in the form of arrest or corrective labour; damage has been inflicted by the spread of information denigrating the honour, dignity and business standing; in other cases provided for by the law.
Гражданский кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 1101 1. Компенсация морального вреда осуществляется в денежной форме.	Civil Code of the Russian Federation, Article 1101 1. The moral damage shall be compensated in monetary form.

2. Размер компенсации морального вреда определяется судом в зависимости от характера причиненных потерпевшему физических и нравственных страданий, а также степени вины причинителя вреда в случаях, когда вина является основанием возмещения вреда. При определении размера компенсации вреда должны учитываться требования разумности и справедливости. Характер физических и нравственных страданий оценивается судом с учетом фактических обстоятельств, при которых был причинен моральный вред, и индивидуальных особенностей потерпевшего.	2. The amount of the compensation for the moral damage shall be determined by a court of law depending on the nature of physical and moral suffering caused to the victim, and also on the degree of guilt of the inflictor of damage in cases when guilt is a ground for the redress of injury. In estimating the amount of the compensation it is necessary to take into account the requirements of reasonable and justice. The nature of physical and moral suffering shall be assessed by the court with due account of the actual circumstances under which the moral damage was inflicted and of the victim's individual features.
Уголовный кодекс Российской Федерации, часть 1 статьи 137 Незаконное собирание или распространение сведений о частной жизни лица, составляющих его личную или семейную тайну, без его согласия либо распространение этих сведений в публичном выступлении, публично демонстрирующемся произведении или средствах массовой информации...	Criminal Code of the Russian Federation, Article 137(1) Illegal collection or spreading of information about the private life of a person which constitutes his personal or family secrets, without his consent, or the distribution of this information in a public speech, in a publicly performed work, or in the mass media...
Уголовный кодекс Российской Федерации, часть 1 статьи 144 Воспрепятствование законной профессиональной деятельности	Criminal Code of the Russian Federation, Article 144(1) Obstruction of the lawful professional activity of journalists by compelling them

журналистов путем принуждения их к распространению либо к отказу от распространения информации...	to give out information or to refuse to give out it...
Уголовный кодекс Российской Федерации, часть 1 статьи 238 Разглашение сведений, составляющих государственную тайну, лицом, которому она была доверена или стала известна по службе, работе, учебе или в иных случаях, предусмотренных законодательством Российской Федерации, если эти сведения стали достоянием других лиц....	Criminal Code of the Russian Federation, Article 283(1) Disclosure of information comprising a state secret, by a person to whom it has been entrusted or to whom it has become known through his office or work, if this information has become the property of other persons...
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 6 1. Уголовное судопроизводство имеет своим назначением: 1) защиту прав и законных интересов лиц и организаций, потерпевших от преступлений; 2) защиту личности от незаконного и необоснованного обвинения, осуждения, ограничения ее прав и свобод. 2. Уголовное преследование и назначение виновным справедливого наказания в той же мере отвечают назначению уголовного судопроизводства, что и отказ от	Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, Article 6 1. The criminal court proceedings are aimed at: 1) protecting the rights and the lawful interests of the persons and organizations, who (which) have suffered from the crimes; 2) protecting the person from unlawful and ungrounded accusations and conviction, and from the restriction of his rights and freedoms. 2. The criminal prosecution and the administration of the just punishment to the guilty persons shall correspond to the

уголовного преследования невиновных, освобождение их от наказания, реабилитация каждого, кто необоснованно подвергся уголовному преследованию.	purpose of the criminal court proceedings in the same measure as the refusal from the criminal prosecution of the non-guilty ones, their relief from the punishment and the rehabilitation of everyone, who has been groundlessly subjected to criminal prosecution.
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс Российской Федерации, часть 3 статьи 56 1) судья, присяжный заседатель – об обстоятельствах уголовного дела, которые стали им известны в связи с участием в производстве по данному уголовному делу; 2) адвокат, защитник подозреваемого, обвиняемого – об обстоятельствах, ставших ему известными в связи с обращением к нему за юридической помощью или в связи с ее оказанием; 3) адвокат – об обстоятельствах, которые стали ему известны в связи с оказанием юридической помощи; 4) священнослужитель – об обстоятельствах, ставших ему известными из исповеди; 5) член Совета Федерации, депутат Государственной Думы без их согласия – об обстоятельствах, которые стали им известны в связи с осуществлением ими своих полномочий.	Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, Article 56(3) Not subject to an interrogation as witnesses shall be: 1) a judge and the juror – about circumstances of the case, which have become known to them in connection with their participation in the procedure on the given criminal case; 2) a lawyer, the counsel for the defence of the suspect and of the accused – about the circumstances, which have become known to him in connection with applying to him/her for legal aid or in connection with rendering it; 3) a lawyer – about the circumstances, which have become known to him in connection with rendering legal advice; 4) a priest – about the circumstances, which he has learned from the confession; 5) a member of the Federation Council, a Deputy of the State Duma without their consent – about the circumstances, which have become known to them in connection with their discharge of their

	powers.
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс Российской Федерации, статья 75 1. Доказательства, полученные с нарушением требований настоящего Кодекса, являются недопустимыми. Недопустимые доказательства не имеют юридической силы и не могут быть положены в основу обвинения, а также использоваться для доказывания любого из обстоятельств, предусмотренных статьей 73 настоящего Кодекса. 2. К недопустимым доказательствам относятся: 1) показания подозреваемого, обвиняемого, данные в ходе досудебного производства по уголовному делу в отсутствие защитника, включая случаи отказа от защитника, и не подтвержденные подозреваемым, обвиняемым в суде; 2) показания потерпевшего, свидетеля, основанные на догадке, предположении, слухе, а также показания свидетеля, который не может указать источник своей осведомленности; 3) иные доказательства, полученные с нарушением требований настоящего Кодекса.	Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, Article 75 1. The proof, obtained with a violation of the demands of the present Code, shall be qualified as inadmissible. Inadmissible proof are deprived of legal force and cannot serve as a basis for the accusation or be used for proving any one of the circumstances, listed in Article 73 of the present Code. 2. Referred as inadmissible proof shall be: 1) evidence given by the suspect and by the accused in the course of the pretrial proceedings on the criminal case in the absence of the counsel for the defence, including the cases of the refusal from counsel for the defence, and not confirmed by the suspect and by the accused in the court; 2) the evidence of the victim and of the witness, based on a surmise, a supposition or hearsay, as well as the testimony of the witness, who cannot indicate the source of his knowledge; 3) the other proof, obtained with a violation of the demands of the present Code.
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс	Code of Criminal Procedure of the

Российской Федерации, часть 2 статьи 144 По сообщению о преступлении, распространенному в средствах массовой информации, проверку проводит по поручению прокурора орган дознания, а также по поручению руководителя следственного органа следователь. Редакция, главный редактор соответствующего средства массовой информации обязаны передать по требованию прокурора, следователя или органа дознания имеющиеся в распоряжении соответствующего средства массовой информации документы и материалы, подтверждающие сообщение о преступлении, а также данные о лице, предоставившем указанную информацию, за исключением случаев, когда это лицо поставило условие о сохранении в тайне источника информации.	Russian Federation, Article 144(2) The communication about a crime in the mass media shall be checked up on the public prosecutor's orders by the body of inquiry or by the investigator. The editorial board and the editor in chief of the corresponding mass medium shall be obliged to hand over, on the demand of the public prosecutor, of the investigator or of the body of inquiry, the documents and materials, confirming the communication on the crime, which are at the disposal of the given mass medium, as well as the data on the person who has supplied the said information, with the exception of the cases when this person has given an assurance that the source of information shall be kept secret.
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс Российской Федерации, часть 1 статьи 186 При наличии достаточных оснований полагать, что телефонные и иные переговоры подозреваемого, обвиняемого и других лиц могут содержать сведения, имеющие значение для уголовного дела, их контроль и запись допускаются при производстве по уголовным делам о преступлениях средней тяжести, тяжких и особо тяжких	Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, Article 186(1) If there are sufficient grounds to suppose that telephone and other discussions of the suspect, of the accused or other persons may contain information of importance for the criminal case, their monitoring and recording shall be seen as admissible in the proceedings on the criminal cases on grave and especially grave crimes, on the grounds of a court decision to be adopted in accordance with

преступлениях на основании судебного решения, принимаемого в порядке, установленном статьей 165 настоящего Кодекса.	the procedure, laid down by Article 165 of the present Code.
Уголовный процессуальный кодекс Российской Федерации, пункт 1 части 2 статьи 241 Закрытое судебное разбирательство допускается на основании определения или постановления суда в случаях, когда разбирательство уголовного дела в суде может привести к разглашению государственной или иной охраняемой федеральным законом тайны.	Code of Criminal Procedure of the Russian Federation, Article 241(2)(1) Conducting the judicial proceedings in camera shall be admissible on the ground of a court ruling or resolution if the judicial proceedings on a criminal case in court may lead to an indulgence of the state or of the other kind of a secret protected by the federal law.
Кодекс Российской Федерации об административных правонарушениях, часть 1 статьи 13.14 Разглашение информации, доступ к которой ограничен федеральным законом (за исключением случаев, если разглашение такой информации влечет уголовную ответственность), лицом, получившим доступ к такой информации в связи с исполнением служебных или профессиональных обязанностей...	Code of Administrative Offences of the Russian Federation, Article 13.14(1) Disclosing information, to which access is limited by federal law (safe for the cases when disclosure of such information is criminally punishable), by a person who has access to such information in connection with the performance of official or professional duties...

Федеральный закон «Об информации, информационных технологиях и о защите информации», статья 10.2

1. Владелец сайта и (или) страницы сайта в сети "Интернет", на которых размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которым в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет" (далее - блогер), при размещении и использовании указанной информации, в том числе при размещении указанной информации на данном сайте или странице сайта иными пользователями сети "Интернет", обязан обеспечивать соблюдение законодательства Российской Федерации, в частности:

1) не допускать использование сайта или страницы сайта в сети "Интернет" в целях совершения уголовно наказуемых деяний, для разглашения сведений, составляющих государственную или иную специально охраняемую законом тайну, для распространения материалов, содержащих публичные призывы к осуществлению террористической деятельности или публично оправдывающих терроризм, других экстремистских материалов, а также материалов, пропагандирующих порнографию, культ насилия и жестокости, и материалов, содержащих нецензурную брань;

2) проверять достоверность размещаемой общедоступной информации до ее размещения и незамедлительно удалять размещенную

Federal Law On information, information technologies and on information protection, Article 10.2

1. The owner of a website and/or a website page on the Internet on which generally accessible information is placed and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day (hereinafter referred to as "blogger") when said information is placed and used, for instance when said information is placed on the given website or website page by other users of the Internet shall ensure the observance of the legislation of the Russian Federation, for instance:

1) shall not allow the website or website page on the Internet to be used for the purpose of committing the acts punishable under a criminal law, disclosing the information classified as state or another specifically law-protected secret, disseminating the materials containing public appeals for carrying out terrorist activities or publicly justifying terrorism, other extremist materials and also the materials propagating pornography, the cult of violence and cruelty and the materials containing obscene language;

2) shall verify the reliability of placed generally accessible information before it is placed and shall immediately delete unreliable information that has been placed;

3) shall not allow the dissemination of information about the private life of a

недостовверную информацию; 3) не допускать распространение информации о частной жизни гражданина с нарушением гражданского законодательства; 4) соблюдать запреты и ограничения, предусмотренные законодательством Российской Федерации о референдуме и законодательством Российской Федерации о выборах; 5) соблюдать требования законодательства Российской Федерации, регулирующие порядок распространения массовой информации; 6) соблюдать права и законные интересы граждан и организаций, в том числе честь, достоинство и деловую репутацию граждан, деловую репутацию организаций. 2. При размещении информации на сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" не допускается: 1) использование сайта или страницы сайта в сети "Интернет" в целях сокрытия или фальсификации общественно значимых сведений, распространения заведомо недостоверной информации под видом достоверных сообщений; 2) распространение информации с целью опорочить гражданина или отдельные категории граждан по признакам пола, возраста, расовой или национальной принадлежности, языка, отношения к религии, профессии, места	citizen in breach of the civil legislation; 4) shall observe the bans and restrictions envisaged by the legislation of the Russian Federation the referendum and the legislation of the Russian Federation on elections; 5) shall observe the provisions of the legislation of the Russian Federation that regulate the procedure for disseminating mass information; 6) shall observe the rights and lawful interests of citizens and organisations, for instance the honour, dignity and business reputation of citizens as well as the business reputation of organisations. 2. The following is hereby prohibited when information is placed on a website or website page on the Internet: 1) the use of the website or website page on the Internet for the purpose of concealing or falsifying information of public significance, disseminating knowingly unreliable information under the disguise of reliable messages; 2) the dissemination of information for the purpose of discrediting a citizen or some categories of citizens on the basis of sex, age, race or ethnicity, language, religion, trade, place of residence and work and also in connection with their political convictions. 3. The blogger is entitled to: 1) freely search, receive, transmit and disseminate information by any method in accordance with the legislation of the
---	--

жительства и работы, а также в связи с их политическими убеждениями. 3. Блогер имеет право: 1) свободно искать, получать, передавать и распространять информацию любым способом в соответствии с законодательством Российской Федерации; 2) излагать на своих сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" свои личные суждения и оценки с указанием своего имени или псевдонима; 3) размещать или допускать размещение на своих сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" текстов и (или) иных материалов других пользователей сети "Интернет", если размещение таких текстов и (или) иных материалов не противоречит законодательству Российской Федерации; 4) распространять на возмездной основе рекламу в соответствии с гражданским законодательством, Федеральным законом от 13 марта 2006 года N 38-ФЗ "О рекламе" на своих сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет". 4. Злоупотребление правом на распространение общедоступной информации, выразившееся в нарушении требований частей 1, 2 и 3 настоящей статьи, влечет за собой уголовную, административную или иную ответственность в соответствии с законодательством Российской Федерации. 5. Блогер обязан разместить на своих	Russian Federation; 2) set out on his website or website page on the Internet his personal judgements and assessment with an indication of his name or pseudonym; 3) place or allow the placement on his website or website page on the Internet texts and/or other materials of other users of the Internet, unless the placement of such texts and/or other materials contravenes the legislation of the Russian Federation; 4) disseminate advertisements on an onerous basis in keeping with the civil legislation, Federal Law No. 38-FZ of March 13, 2006 on Advertisement on his website or website page on the Internet. 4. An abuse of the right of disseminating generally accessible information that has manifested itself as breach of the provisions of Parts 1, 2 and 3 of the present article shall entail criminal, administrative or another liability in accordance with the legislation of the Russian Federation. 5. On his website or website page on the Internet the blogger shall place his name and initials and an e-mail address for sending legal-significance messages to him. 6. On his website or website page on the Internet the blogger shall place immediately after receiving a court's decision that has become final and contains demand for its being published on the website or website page. 7. The owners of websites on the Internet
--	---

сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" свои фамилию и инициалы, электронный адрес для направления ему юридически значимых сообщений. 6. Блогер обязан разместить на своем сайте или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" незамедлительно при получении решения суда, вступившее в законную силу и содержащее требование о его опубликовании на данном сайте или странице сайта. 7. Владельцы сайтов в сети "Интернет", которые зарегистрированы в соответствии с Законом Российской Федерации от 27 декабря 1991 года N 2124-1 "О средствах массовой информации" в качестве сетевых изданий, не являются блогерами. 8. Федеральный орган исполнительной власти, осуществляющий функции по контролю и надзору в сфере средств массовой информации, массовых коммуникаций, информационных технологий и связи, ведет реестр сайтов и (или) страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет", на которых размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которой в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет". В целях обеспечения формирования реестра сайтов и (или) страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет" федеральный орган исполнительной власти, осуществляющий функции по контролю и надзору в сфере средств массовой информации, массовых коммуникаций, информационных технологий и связи: 1) организует мониторинг сайтов и	who have registered as network editions in accordance with Law of the Russian Federation No. 2124-I of December 27, 1991 on Mass Media are not bloggers. 8. The federal executive governmental body carrying out the functions of control and supervision in the field of mass media, mass communications, information technologies and telecom shall keep a register of the websites and/or website pages on the Internet on which generally accessible information is placed and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day. For the purpose of ensuring the formation of the register of websites and/or website pages on the Internet the federal executive governmental body carrying out the functions of control and supervision in the field of mass media, mass communications, information technologies and telecom: 1) shall organise the monitoring of websites and website pages on the Internet; 2) shall endorse a methodology for assessing the number of users of a website or website page on the Internet per day; 3) has the right of requesting from organisers of dissemination of information on the Internet, bloggers and other persons the information required for keeping such register. Within 10 days after receiving a request from the federal executive governmental body carrying out the functions of control and supervision in the field of mass media, mass communications, information technologies and telecom said persons shall provide the
--	---

страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет"; 2) утверждает методику определения количества пользователей сайта или страницы сайта в сети "Интернет" в сутки; 3) вправе запрашивать у организаторов распространения информации в сети "Интернет", блогеров и иных лиц информацию, необходимую для ведения такого реестра. Указанные лица обязаны предоставлять запрашиваемую информацию не позднее чем в течение десяти дней со дня получения запроса федерального органа исполнительной власти, осуществляющего функции по контролю и надзору в сфере средств массовой информации, массовых коммуникаций, информационных технологий и связи. 9. В случае обнаружения в информационно-телекоммуникационных сетях, в том числе в сети "Интернет", сайтов или страниц сайтов, на которых размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которым в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет", включая рассмотрение соответствующих обращений граждан или организаций, федеральный орган исполнительной власти, осуществляющий функции по контролю и надзору в сфере средств массовой информации, массовых коммуникаций, информационных технологий и связи: 1) включает указанные сайт или страницу сайта в сети "Интернет" в реестр сайтов и (или) страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет", на которых	information so requested. 9. In the event of detection in information-telecommunication networks, for instance on the Internet, of a website or website page which contain generally accessible information and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day, including the consideration of relevant applications of citizens or organisations, the federal executive governmental body carrying out the functions of control and supervision in the field of mass media, mass communications, information technologies and telecom: 1) shall include said website or website page on the Internet in the register of the websites and/or website pages on the Internet on which generally accessible information is placed and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day; 2) shall identify the hosting provider or the other person which ensures the placement of the website or website page on the Internet; 3) shall send to the hosting provider or the person mentioned in Item 2 of the present part a notice in electronic form in Russian and English concerning the need for provision of details allowing to identify the blogger; 4) shall record the date and time of dispatch of the notice to the hosting provider or the person mentioned in Item 2 of the present part in the relevant information system. 10. Within three working days after
--	--

размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которым в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет"; 2) определяет провайдера хостинга или иное обеспечивающее размещение сайта или страницы сайта в сети "Интернет" лицо; 3) направляет провайдеру хостинга или указанному в пункте 2 настоящей части лицу уведомление в электронном виде на русском и английском языках о необходимости предоставления данных, позволяющих идентифицировать блогера; 4) фиксирует дату и время направления уведомления провайдеру хостинга или указанному в пункте 2 настоящей части лицу в соответствующей информационной системе. 10. В течение трех рабочих дней с момента получения уведомления, указанного в пункте 3 части 9 настоящей статьи, провайдер хостинга или указанное в пункте 2 части 9 настоящей статьи лицо обязаны предоставить данные, позволяющие идентифицировать блогера. 11. После получения данных, указанных в пункте 3 части 9 настоящей статьи, федеральный орган исполнительной власти, осуществляющий функции по контролю и надзору в сфере средств массовой информации, массовых коммуникаций, информационных технологий и связи, направляет блогеру уведомление о включении его сайта или страницы сайта в реестр сайтов и (или) страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет", на	receiving the notice mentioned in Item 3 of Part 9 of the present article the hosting provider or the person mentioned in Item 2 of Part 9 of the present article shall provide the information allowing to identify the blogger. 11. Having received the information specified in Item 3 of Part 9 of the present article, the federal executive governmental body carrying out the functions of control and supervision in the field of mass media, mass communications, information technologies and telecom shall send a notice to the blogger informing that his website or website page has been included in the register of the websites and/or website pages on the Internet on which generally accessible information is placed and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day, with reference to the provisions of the legislation of the Russian Federation applicable to said website or website page on the Internet. 12. If during three months access to the website or website page on the Internet is below 3,000 users of the Internet per day that website or that website page on the Internet shall be removed on the blogger's application from the register of the websites and/or website pages on the Internet on which generally accessible information is placed and to which access exceeds 3,000 users of the Internet per day, with a notice to this effect being sent to the blogger. The given website or website page on the Internet may be removed from that register when no application is filed by the blogger if access to the given website or website page on the Internet during six months is below 3,000 users of the Internet per day.
--	---

которых размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которым в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет", с указанием требований законодательства Российской Федерации, применимых к данным сайту или странице сайта в сети "Интернет". 12. В случае, если доступ к сайту или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" на протяжении трех месяцев составляет в течение суток менее трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет", данный сайт или данная страница сайта в сети "Интернет" по заявлению блогера исключается из реестра сайтов и (или) страниц сайтов в сети "Интернет", на которых размещается общедоступная информация и доступ к которым в течение суток составляет более трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет", о чем блогеру направляется соответствующее уведомление. Данные сайт или страница сайта в сети "Интернет" могут быть исключены из этого реестра при отсутствии заявления блогера, если доступ к данным сайту или странице сайта в сети "Интернет" на протяжении шести месяцев составляет в течение суток менее трех тысяч пользователей сети "Интернет".
Федеральный закон об оперативно-розыскной деятельности, статья 2 Задачами оперативно-розыскной деятельности являются: выявление, предупреждение, пресечение	Federal Law On Operational Search Activity, Article 2 The tasks of an operational-search activity shall be: to discover, prevent, suppress and reveal

и раскрытие преступлений, а также выявление и установление лиц, их подготавливающих, совершающих или совершивших; осуществление розыска лиц, скрывающихся от органов дознания, следствия и суда, уклоняющихся от уголовного наказания, а также розыска без вести пропавших; добывание информации о событиях или действиях (бездействии), создающих угрозу государственной, военной, экономической, информационной или экологической безопасности Российской Федерации...	crimes, and to discover and identify the persons, who are preparing and committing or who have perpetrated them; to conduct searches for persons who are hiding from the inquest and the investigation bodies and from the court and who are avoiding the criminal punishment, and also searches for missing persons; to collect information on events or actions, creating a threat to the military, economic or ecological security of the Russian Federation.
Федеральный закон об оперативно-розыскной деятельности, часть 4 статьи 6 Оперативно-розыскные мероприятия, связанные с контролем почтовых отправлений, телеграфных и иных сообщений, прослушиванием телефонных переговоров с подключением к станционной аппаратуре предприятий, учреждений и организаций независимо от форм собственности, физических и юридических лиц, предоставляющих услуги и средства связи, со снятием информации с технических каналов связи, проводятся с использованием оперативно-технических сил и средств	Federal Law On Operational Search Activity, Article 6(4) The operational-search measures, involved in controlling the mail, the telegraph and other kind of communications, the bugging of telephone conversations with the linking up to the station apparatuses of the enterprises, institutions and organizations, regardless of their forms of ownership, as well as of the natural and the legal persons, who render services and provide the means of communication, with taking the information off the technical communications channels, shall be carried out using the operational-technical forces and the means of the bodies of the federal security service, the

органов федеральной службы безопасности, органов внутренних дел и органов по контролю за оборотом наркотических средств и психотропных веществ в порядке, определяемом межведомственными нормативными актами или соглашениями между органами, осуществляющими оперативно-розыскную деятельность.	bodies of internal affairs and, of the bodies for control over the traffic of narcotics and psychotropic substances in conformity with the procedure, defined by the inter-departmental normative acts or by the agreements, signed between the bodies, engaged in the operational-search activity.
Федеральный закон об оперативно-розыскной деятельности, статья 7 Основаниями для проведения оперативно-розыскных мероприятий являются: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Наличие возбужденного уголовного дела. 2. Ставшие известными органам, осуществляющим оперативно-розыскную деятельность, сведения о: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) признаках подготавливаемого, совершаемого или совершенного противоправного деяния, а также о лицах, его подготавливающих, совершающих или совершивших, если нет достаточных данных для решения вопроса о возбуждении уголовного дела; 2) событиях или действиях (бездействии), создающих угрозу государственной, военной, экономической, информационной или экологической безопасности Российской Федерации; 	Federal Law On Operational Search Activity, Article 7 The grounds for launching operational-search measures shall be: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The existence of an instituted criminal case. 2. The information, which has become known to the bodies, engaged in the operational-search activity: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) on the signs, showing that an unlawful act is being prepared or committed, or has been perpetrated, as well as on the persons, who are preparing or committing it or have perpetrated it, if the information is insufficient to resolve the question of instituting a criminal case; 2) on events or the actions, creating a threat to the state, military, economic or ecological security of the Russian Federation; 3) on persons, hiding from the bodies of inquest and of investigation and from the court, or on those avoiding the criminal

3) лицах, скрывающихся от органов дознания, следствия и суда или уклоняющихся от уголовного наказания; 4) лицах, без вести пропавших, и об обнаружении неопознанных трупов. 3. Поручения следователя, руководителя следственного органа, дознавателя, органа дознания или определения суда по уголовным делам и материалам проверки сообщений о преступлении, находящимся в их производстве. 4. Запросы других органов, осуществляющих оперативно-розыскную деятельность, по основаниям, указанным в настоящей статье. 5. Постановление о применении мер безопасности в отношении защищаемых лиц, осуществляемых уполномоченными на то государственными органами в порядке, предусмотренном законодательством Российской Федерации. 6. Запросы международных правоохранительных организаций и правоохранительных органов иностранных государств в соответствии с международными договорами Российской Федерации.	punishment; 4) on missing persons and on finding the unidentified corpses. 3. The orders from the investigator or from the inquest body, the instructions from the prosecutor or the ruling of the court on the criminal cases in the process of examination. 4. The inquiries of the other bodies performing operational-search activities, on the grounds indicated in the present Article. 5. A decision on applying the measures, aimed at ensuring the security of protected persons, implemented by the specially authorized state bodies, in conformity with the procedure, envisaged by the legislation of the Russian Federation. 6. The inquiries of the international law-protection organizations and of the law protection bodies of foreign states in conformity with the international treaties of the Russian Federation...
Федеральный закон «О противодействии терроризму», часть 2 статьи 3	Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism, Article 3(2) Terrorist activity shall mean activity

Террористическая деятельность – деятельность, включающая в себя: а) организацию, планирование, подготовку, финансирование и реализацию террористического акта; б) подстрекательство к террористическому акту; в) организацию незаконного вооруженного формирования, преступного сообщества (преступной организации), организованной группы для реализации террористического акта, а равно участие в такой структуре; г) вербовку, вооружение, обучение и использование террористов; д) информационное или иное пособничество в планировании, подготовке или реализации террористического акта; е) пропаганду идей терроризма, распространение материалов или информации, призывающих к осуществлению террористической деятельности либо обосновывающих или оправдывающих необходимость осуществления такой деятельности...	including the following: a) arranging, planning, preparing, financing and implementing an act of terrorism; b) instigation of an act of terrorism; c) establishment of an unlawful armed unit, criminal association (criminal organisation) or an organised group for the implementation of an act of terrorism, as well as participation in such a structure; d) recruiting, arming, training and using terrorists; e) informational or other assistance to planning, preparing or implementing an act of terrorism; f) popularisation of terrorist ideas, dissemination of materials or information urging terrorist activities, substantiating or justifying the necessity of the exercise of such activity...
Федеральный закон «О противодействии терроризму», пункт 4 части 3 статьи 11 На территории (объектах), в пределах которой (на которых) введен правовой	Federal Law On Counteracting Terrorism, Article 11(3)(4) It shall be allowable to take the following measures and to establish the following temporary restrictions in the procedure

режим контртеррористической операции, в порядке, предусмотренном законодательством Российской Федерации, на период проведения контртеррористической операции допускается применение следующих мер и временных ограничений: ... ведение контроля телефонных переговоров и иной информации, передаваемой по каналам телекоммуникационных систем, а также осуществление поиска на каналах электрической связи и в почтовых отправлениях в целях выявления информации об обстоятельствах совершения террористического акта, о лицах, его подготовивших и совершивших, и в целях предупреждения совершения других террористических актов...	provided for by the legislation of the Russian Federation, on the territory (objects) where the legal regime of an antiterrorist operation is established, for the time period of conducting it: <...> exercising control over telephone communications and over other information transmitted over telecommunication channels, as well as searching in electric communication channels and in postal mailing for the purpose of detecting information concerning the circumstances of committing an act of terrorism and the persons who have prepared and committed it, as well as for the purpose of preventing other terrorist acts...
Федеральный закон о противодействии коррупции, часть 4 статьи 9 Государственный или муниципальный служащий, уведомивший представителя нанимателя (работодателя), органы прокуратуры или другие государственные органы о фактах обращения в целях склонения его к совершению коррупционного правонарушения, о фактах совершения другими государственными или муниципальными служащими коррупционных правонарушений, непредставления сведений либо	Federal Law On Combatting Corruption, Article 9(4) A government or municipal employee who has notified the representative of the hirer (the employer), Public Prosecutor's Office or other state bodies of the facts of approaching him/her for the purpose of inciting to corruption offences, the facts of corruption offences by other government or municipal employees, their non-provision of information or provision of deliberately inadequate or incomplete information on their incomes, property and property obligations, is under the protection of the State in accordance with

представления заведомо недостоверных или неполных сведений о доходах, об имуществе и обязательствах имущественного характера, находится под защитой государства в соответствии с законодательством Российской Федерации.	the legislation of the Russian Federation.
Федеральный закон «О связи», часть 1 статьи 64 Операторы связи обязаны предоставлять уполномоченным государственным органам, осуществляющим оперативно-розыскную деятельность или обеспечение безопасности Российской Федерации, информацию о пользователях услугами связи и об оказанных им услугах связи, а также иную информацию, необходимую для выполнения возложенных на эти органы задач, в случаях, установленных федеральными законами.	Federal Law On Communications, Article 64(1) Telecom operators are obliged to provide the authorized state bodies engaged in the operational-search activity or security of the Russian Federation with information about the users of telecom and of rendered services as well as other information necessary for fulfillment of the tasks of the above mentioned bodies, in cases established by federal laws.
Федеральный закон о коммерческой тайне, статья 5 Режим коммерческой тайны не может быть установлен лицами, осуществляющими предпринимательскую деятельность, в отношении следующих сведений: 1) содержащихся в учредительных документах юридического лица, документах, подтверждающих факт	Federal Law On Commercial Secrets, Article 5 The regime of commercial secrecy may not be instituted by persons conducting entrepreneurial activity in respect of the following data: 1) available in constituent documents of legal entities, documents confirming the making of entries on legal entities and individual entrepreneurs in the relevant

внесения записей о юридических лицах и об индивидуальных предпринимателях в соответствующие государственные реестры; 2) содержащихся в документах, дающих право на осуществление предпринимательской деятельности; 3) о составе имущества государственного или муниципального унитарного предприятия, государственного учреждения и об использовании ими средств соответствующих бюджетов; 4) о загрязнении окружающей среды, состоянии противопожарной безопасности, санитарно-эпидемиологической и радиационной обстановке, безопасности пищевых продуктов и других факторах, оказывающих негативное воздействие на обеспечение безопасного функционирования производственных объектов, безопасности каждого гражданина и безопасности населения в целом; 5) о численности, о составе работников, о системе оплаты труда, об условиях труда, в том числе об охране труда, о показателях производственного травматизма и профессиональной заболеваемости, и о наличии свободных рабочих мест; 6) о задолженности работодателей по выплате заработной платы и по иным социальным выплатам; 7) о нарушениях законодательства Российской Федерации и фактах привлечения к ответственности за	state registers; 2) available in documents giving the right to conduct entrepreneurial activity; 3) regarding the composition of property of state-run or municipal unitary enterprises, and government agencies and on utilisation by them of funds of corresponding budgets; 4) regarding pollution of the environment, the condition of fire safety, sanitary-epidemiological and radiation situation, safety of food products and other factors adversely affecting the safe functioning of production facilities, security of each citizen and security of the population as a whole; 5) on the numbers, make-up of employees, system of labour remuneration, terms and conditions of labour, including labour safety measures, on the indices of on-the-job injuries and occupational diseases, on availability of vacancies; 6) on debts of employers in paying wages and salaries and on other social payments; 7) on violations of the legislation of the Russian Federation and facts of instituting proceedings for commission of such offences; 8) on the terms of contests or auctions for privatisation of projects of state or municipal property; 9) on the amount and structure of incomes of non-profit organisations, on the
---	---

совершение этих нарушений; 8) об условиях конкурсов или аукционов по приватизации объектов государственной или муниципальной собственности; 9) о размерах и структуре доходов некоммерческих организаций, о размерах и составе их имущества, об их расходах, о численности и об оплате труда их работников, об использовании безвозмездного труда граждан в деятельности некоммерческой организации; 10) о перечне лиц, имеющих право действовать без доверенности от имени юридического лица; 11) обязательность раскрытия которых или недопустимость ограничения доступа к которым установлена иными федеральными законами.	amount and make-up of their property, on their incomes, on the numeric strength and remuneration of work of their employees, on the use of uncompensated labour of citizens in the activity of non-profit organisations; 10) on a list of persons entitled to act without a power of attorney on behalf of a legal entity; 11) obligation to disclose data which, or impermissibility of restricting access to data which is prescribed under other federal laws.
Закон Российской Федерации «О государственной тайне», статья 7 Не подлежат отнесению к государственной тайне и засекречиванию сведения: о чрезвычайных происшествиях и катастрофах, угрожающих безопасности и здоровью граждан, и их последствиях, а также о стихийных бедствиях, их официальных прогнозах и последствиях;	The Law of the Russian Federation On State Secrets, Article 7 The following information shall not be classified as state secret: on emergencies and catastrophes that threaten the safety and health of citizens, their consequences, as well as natural disasters, their official forecasts and consequences; on the state of the environment, public health, sanitation, demography, education,

о состоянии экологии, здравоохранения, санитарии, демографии, образования, культуры, сельского хозяйства, а также о состоянии преступности; о привилегиях, компенсациях и социальных гарантиях, предоставляемых государством гражданам, должностным лицам, предприятиям, учреждениям и организациям; о фактах нарушения прав и свобод человека и гражданина; о размерах золотого запаса и государственных валютных резервах Российской Федерации; о состоянии здоровья высших должностных лиц Российской Федерации; о фактах нарушения законности органами государственной власти и их должностными лицами...	culture, agriculture, as well as on the state of crime; on privileges, compensations and social guarantees provided by the state to citizens, officials, enterprises, institutions and organizations; on violations of the rights and freedoms of man and citizen; about the size of gold reserves and foreign exchange reserves of the state of the Russian Federation; about the health of senior officials of the Russian Federation; on violations of the rule of law by public authorities and their officials ...
Кодекс профессиональной этики журналиста, абзац 9 Журналист сохраняет профессиональную тайну в отношении источника информации, полученной конфиденциальным путем. Никто не может принудить его к открытию этого источника. Право на анонимность может быть нарушено лишь в исключительных случаях, когда имеется подозрение, что источник сознательно исказил истину, а также когда	Code of Professional Ethics of Russian Journalist, paragraph 9 A journalist respects professional secrets in relation to the source of information which is acquired in a confidential way. No one can force him to reveal this source. The right to anonymity may be broken only in exceptional cases when there is a suspicion that the source has consciously distorted truth, and also when the reference to the name of the source is the only way to avoid serious and inevitable

упоминание имени источника представляет собой единственный способ избежать тяжкого и неминуемого ущерба для людей. Журналист обязан уважать просьбу интервьюируемых им лиц не разглашать официально их высказывания.	damage to people. A journalist is obliged to respect the request of persons interviewed by him not to officially reveal their statements.
--	---

ELSA SPAIN

CONTRIBUTORS

NATIONAL COORDINATOR

PROF. DRA. BEATRIZ COLLANTES SÁNCHEZ

NATIONAL ACADEMIC COORDINATOR

PROF. DRA. MARÍA ELISA ALONSO

NATIONAL RESEARCHERS

MARÍA DEL CARMEN ESPEJEL CARRION

SARAH BONO

IRENE FERNÁNDEZ-MAYORALAS GONZÁLEZ

MIGUEL CHERÓN

OLAYA ÁLVAREZ FERNÁNDEZ

NATIONAL LINGUISTIC EDITORS

PROF. IGNACIO MUÑOZ BIELSA

NATIONAL ACADEMIC SUPERVISOR

PROF. DRA. BEATRIZ COLLANTES SÁNCHEZ

1. Introduction

From a Spanish perspective, the national legislation does not provide explicit protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information, as the protection is not regulated in the law clearly and precisely.

The Spanish Constitution (Constitución Española), in effect since December 29 1978, is the supreme norm of the Spanish legal system; to which subjects are the public authorities and Spanish citizens. It protects the right to communicate or to receive freely truthful information by any media.

Legislation on this matter comes mainly from the Spanish Civil and Criminal Codes, but there's not a specific legislation regulating on this matter, and it provokes a lot of uncertainty in the profession. The principal source of information for professionals is to be found in the deontological codes of the journalistic profession, the International legislation (UNESCO, Council of Europe, UN...) and the national case-law.

This research will show the lack of an implicit protection of journalists' sources in the Spanish legislation and of a proper definition of the limits of the non-disclosure of the information.

2. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

In the Spanish Constitution there's an explicit protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information. Firstly, the Article 20.1 d) of the Spanish Constitution says that: 'they are recognised and protected rights: To communicate or to receive freely truthful information by any media. The law shall regulate the right of conscience clause and professional secrecy in the exercise of these freedoms'.

The constitutional precept requires truthfulness of the information. It is interpreted as a need of subjective truth in which the reporter has performed with diligence, has contrasted the information adequately to the characteristics of the information and the available resources.

There are several case laws of the Spanish Constitutional Court (Tribunal Constitucional Español). A clear example of this is the case law 240/1992, December 21 1992 in which Ms María José Porteiro García, Mr. Juan Luis Cebrián Echarri and Promotora de Informaciones S.A. appealed amparo against the case-law of the First Chamber of the Spanish Supreme Court, December 11 1989. The Spanish newspaper, El País, published an article about Mr. Andrés Carril, a priest from Hío, in August 17 1984. However, the case-law established that there was no infringement of the Article 20.1 d) of the Spanish Constitution, the right to communicate freely information.

Even though, the Article 20.1 d) of the Spanish Constitution refers to the freedom of information, it does not express clearly the professional rights of the journalists and their obligations. As a result, Spain has an implicit right not to disclosure its sources of information.

Nonetheless, the Spanish Criminal Code prohibits explicitly the rights not to disclose the sources of information. Besides, the Article 200.2 of the Spanish Criminal Code which protects those that are affected by general interests or a group of people, as it is not necessarily required a report to arraign the actions described in Article 198.

Secondly, the professional secrecy of the media professionals has not been regulated yet. Therefore, there are concerns about the scope. There is only the right of rectification, regulated in the Organic Law 2/1984, March 26 1984.¹ The right of rectification is mainly for those who suffer from the exercise of information freedom. This right is for both natural and legal entities who consider that the information provided is inaccurate and its divulgation can cause a detriment. The right can be exercised by the aggrieved person, representatives and in the case of deceased, representatives of them. Moreover, the rectification should be limited to the facts of the information that would be rectified.

The Constitutional case law 168/1986 (Sentence 168/1986)² related to Ediciones Tiempo S.A. appealed “amparo” due to an article published in the number 122 about Mercorsa, a commercial entity. This article referred to Mr Luis García, the ex-president of Mercorsa, who sent a rectification statement to the Director of Ediciones Tiempo. The Spanish Constitutional Court rejected the rectification as it stated that the correction right will apply for those who suffer from the exercise of the freedom of information and for the purpose of avoiding or preventing certain information who can affect the honour or any other rights and the facts are not appropriate.

According to the Spanish Constitutional Court in the case law 35/1983³, 6/1988⁴ and 51/2007,⁵ the right of rectification is a legal right; subjective and instrumental, it's exhausted by the rectification of the information published. The rectification should comply with the facts and the director should publish the information with the same relevance as the one that had within three days of the date of reception, except if the publication or diffusion has another term, which would be done in the following number. If the period of time is not complying with or diffusing, the case would be conducted by the judge.

Thirdly, the Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations (Federación de Asociaciones de la Prensa de España, FAPE),⁶ established on May 19 1922 in Santander, it is the first professional organization

¹ Spain. Organic Law 2/1984, Right of Rectification, March 26 1984, Official State Gazette Num 74. <http://www.boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1984-7248>

² Spain. Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law, December 22 1986, Number 17. <http://ocw.usal.es/ciencias-sociales-1/derecho-a-la-informacion/contenidos/SENTENCIAS/1er%20BLOQUE/PDF/STC%20168-1986,%20de%2022%20de%20diciembre.pdf>

³ Spain. Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law, May 11 1983, Number 120. <http://www.tribunalconstitucional.es/es/jurisprudencia/Paginas/Sentencia.aspx?cod=16789>

⁴ SPAIN. SPANISH CONSTITUTIONAL COURT. CASE LAW 6/1988, JANUARY 21 1988. <HTTP://HJ.TRIBUNALCONSTITUCIONALES/HJ/EN/RESOLUCION/SHOW/947>

⁵ SPAIN. SPANISH CONSTITUTIONAL COURT. CASE LAW 51/2007, MARCH 12 2007. <http://hj.tribunalconstitucional.es/HJ/en/Resolucion/Show/6018>

⁶ Spain. Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations. <http://fape.es>

of Spanish journalists, formed by 49 associations federated and 16 related. The Law 91/1977 of Professional Associations regulated the Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations as a trade union organization. This federation is governed and approved by the General Assembly of Seville in 2008. Furthermore, the General Assembly of the FAPE established the Spanish Deontological Code (Código Deontológico Español)⁷ for the Journalistic Profession in November 27 1993 as an essential ethic principle for the journalists in the exercise of their profession. One remarkable article of the Spanish Deontological Code is the Article 10 of the Spanish professional code of ethics defining the professional secrecy as:

“The professional secrecy is a right of the journalist, and it is a responsibility that ensures the confidentiality of the information sources. Therefore, the journalist will ensure the right of information sources to remain anonymous, if it was requested. However, the professional duty could surrender exceptional in case that there is reliable evidence that the source has been distorted the information or by revealing the source is the only option to avoid a serious and imminent damage”.

In November 27 1993, after being approved the Spanish Deontological Code, the Complaints and Ethics Commission was created and in total took place four Assemblies until now: Assembly of San Sebastián 1997, Assembly of Lanzarote 2001, Assembly of Almería 2004 and Assembly of Burgos 2006. Moreover, the Foundation of Arbitration, Complaints and Deontology of the Journalism (Comisión de Arbitraje, Quejas y Deontología del Periodismo) was created in 2011 with the aim of ensuring the freedom of information and citizens right to receive truthful information and ethical opinions, while safeguarding fundamental rights.

It's also important to note that in Spain there are free press associations: the Free Press Association in Madrid (Asociación Madrileña de Prensa Gratuita: AMPG), the Free Press Association in Catalonia (Associació Catalana de la Premsa Gratuïta: ACPG) and the Spanish Free Press Association (Asociación Española de la Prensa Gratuïta: AEPG). The Spanish Free Press Association⁸ was established on February 2011 and it represents all the publications and publishers of the Free Press defined as “Publications and Free Distribution”. The publications and the journalists that work in the Spanish Free Press Association are bound by professional secrecy, complying with the sources of information and confidences. Furthermore, they will not disclose the names of the informants except in case of a judicial authorization. It's also relevant to point out that the publications are obliged to amend incorrect or inaccurate information as soon as possible. Besides, it confers the right of objection, rectification or response for everyone that request it.

⁷ Spain. Deontological Code for the Journalistic Profession.
http://ethicnet.uta.fi/spain/deontological_code_for_the_journalistic_profession

⁸ Spain. Spanish Free Press Association. <http://www.infoperiodistas.info/empresa/40804/Asociacion-Espanola-de-la-Prensa-Gratuïta-AEPG>

From a European perspective, due to the ineffectiveness of most professional codes of ethics, the Council of Europe, as a European institution responsible of safeguarding the basic human rights, approved in 1993 the Ethics of Journalism,⁹ which is the reference ethic framework of the journalism in Europe. The European Ethics of Journalism is formed as a set of self-regulatory bodies and mechanisms that enables publishers, media users, associations, experts and judges to issue resolutions in harmony with the ethical precepts of journalism. The European Ethics of Journalism in its Article 14 states that we must enlarge and clarify the essence of the professional secrecy and conscience clause.

Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights protects the right of freedom of expression.¹⁰ However, the professional secrecy and the protection of the journalist's sources are not explicitly mention.

From an International perspective, UNESCO's Declaration¹¹ in 1983 stated inter alia the freedom of information, expression and opinion. These freedoms are acknowledged as an essential part of the fundamental freedoms and human rights. Principle IV of UNESCO's Declaration refers to the journalist's professional integrity: the journalist has the right to abstain from working against his / her convictions and from disclosing sources of information.

The limits of the journalists are also regulated. Article 20.4 of the Spanish Constitution that states: 'These freedoms have the limit in the respect of the rights recognized in this Title, in the precepts of the law and, especially, in the right of honour, privacy, self-image and the protection of the youth and children'.

Furthermore, the Article 18.1 of the Spanish Constitution ensures the right of honour, privacy and self-image. These rights are also regulated in the Organic Law 1/1982, May 5 1982¹² and are civilly protected to confront every kind of illegitimate interference.

It is extremely important to consider that the rights of honour, privacy and self-image are recognised as basic rights and as a ground for the public order and social peace. Therefore, they are inalienable, undeniable and indefeasible. If there is a collision between the right to freedom of expression and information and the right of honour, privacy and self-image, the last ones will predominate

⁹ Europe. European Professional Code of Ethics. Council of Europe, Ethics of journalism. <http://assembly.coe.int/nw/xml/XRef/Xref-XML2HTML-en.asp?fileid=16414&lang=en>

¹⁰ Europe. European Convention of Human Rights, ECHR as amended by Protocols Nos. 11 and 14 supplemented by Protocols Nos. 1, 4, 6, 7, 12 and 13. http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_ENG.pdf

¹¹ International. International Principles of Professional Ethics in Journalism. http://ethicnet.uta.fi/international/international_principles_of_professional_ethics_in_journalism

¹² Spain. Organic Law 1/1982, May 5 1982, Official State Gazette, Number 115., <http://www.boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1982-11196>

3. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

In Spain there are three different types of responsibility:

- Disciplinary responsibility
- Civil responsibility
- Criminal responsibility

1. - Disciplinary responsibility: Spanish Deontological Code

The Spanish Deontological Code in its Article 10 regulates the professional secrecy as: A right of a journalist, but it is also an obligation, which guarantees the confidentiality of the sources of information. Therefore, a journalist shall guarantee the right of the sources of information to remain anonymous, if such has been requested. However, this professional obligation shall exceptionally not be applied if it has been proved that the source has deliberately falsified information or if revealing the source is the only way to avoid serious and instant damage to people.

The Complaints and Ethics Commission has evolved as a self- regulatory body for journalism in Spain. This Commission processes and resolves files opened with reference to the infringement of the Spanish Deontological Code that guarantees the independence of journalism and provides an extrajudicial possibility to denounce the negligent professional journalist behaviour.

According to Article 9 of the Complaints and Ethics Commission, the only person who can submit a complaint is the one that is directly affected by the unethical behaviour of the journalist. The person directly affected has two months to submit the complaint. Exceptionally, complaints filed by third parties are admitted in cases of social alarm or scandal.

The Resolution 2013/79 (Resolution 2013/ 79)¹³ in which the Arbitration, Complaints and Ethics Commission of Journalism considered that the director of Onda Cero Radio, Mr Juan Carlos Enrique Forcada, from Balearic islands pushed the journalist, Ms Lorena Sanz Sáez, director of the programme 'Mallorca en la Onda' to disclosure her source of information about the news of an imminent restructuring of the Balearic Government. The Commission determined that Mr Juan Carlos Enrique Forcada infringed Article 10 of the Spanish Deontological Code.

¹³ Spain. Complaints and Deontological Commission. <http://www.comisiondequejas.com/>

2. - Civil Responsibility: Organic Law 1/1982, May 5 1982, right of civil protection, personal and family privacy and image¹⁴.

When the divulgation of data or facts may affect fundamental rights, implying an illegitimate intromission in such fundamental rights as established in the Article 7 of the Organic Law 1/1982, May 5, right of civil protection, personal and family privacy and image, in which, the compensation could be asked for all damages incurred because of this illegitimate intromission.

According to Article 7 of the Organic Law 1/1982, May 5, right of civil protection, personal and family privacy and image, they are considered illegitimate intromissions in the protection of the second article of this law:

- First. The location in any place of listening, filming or optical devices or other media to record or reproduce the private life of people.
- Second. The use of listening or optical devices, or any other media in order to discover the private life of people, their opinions or their private correspondence, which are neither to be known by the people using these media, nor to be recorded, registered or reproduced in any way.
- Third. The divulgation of facts of the private life of a person or family which may affect the reputation and good name as a consequence of the revelation or publication of the content of letters, memories or any other personal private writings.
- Fourth: The revelation of private information of a person or family, obtained in the course of the fulfilling of professional or official activities.
- Fifth. The caption, reproduction or publication of the image of a person (photographs, films or any other media) in places or moments of the life, private or not, except as described of in Article 8.2.
- Sixth. The use of the name, voice or image of a person for advertising or commercial purposes, or of similar nature.
- Seventh. The divulgation of expressions or facts about a person, who by these means could be defamed and become undeserving for other people.

Besides, it is important Article 8. of this law as it states that 'the right to the own image will not prevent the exceptions of the paragraphs a) and b) and it will not be applicable when the functions of the authorities or people will need anonymity'.

3. - Criminal Responsibility: Spanish Criminal Code (Código penal español)¹⁵

¹⁴ Spain. Organic Law 1/1982, May 5 1982, right of civil protection, personal and family privacy and image. http://noticias.juridicas.com/base_datos/Admin/lo1-1982.html

¹⁵ Spain. Criminal Code. Organic Act 10/1995. Official State Gazette, November 24 1995, number 281. http://www.legislationline.org/download/action/download/id/5160/file/Spain_Criminal_Code_Codigo_Penal.pdf

The prohibition to divulgate the sources of a journalist is regulated by the Spanish Criminal Code in its Articles 197, 199, 200 and 201.

Article 197.2 states that:

“The same penalties will be imposed upon whoever, without being authorised, seizes uses or amends, to the detriment of a third party, reserved data of a personal or family nature of another that are recorded in computer, electronic or telematics files or media, or in any other kind of file or public or private record. The same penalties will be imposed on whoever, without being authorised, accesses these by any means, and whoever alters or uses them to the detriment of the data subject or a third party”.

The case-law 234/1999 of the Supreme Court of Justice (Sentence 234/1999 of the Spanish Supreme Court, Criminal Chamber n. 2)¹⁶ February 18 1999 where a journalist published a report stating that in Salto del negro prison were working two chefs with AIDS. The Supreme Court of Justice condemned the journalist for the crime to disclosure confidential information with a sentence of one year of imprisonment, penalty of twelve months and special disqualification for the exercise of his profession. According to Article 199 of Criminal Code:

1. Whoever discloses secrets of others that he obtains knowledge whereof through his trade or labour relations, shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment from one to three years and a fine from six to twelve months.
2. Professionals who, in breach of their obligation of secrecy or reserve, reveal secrets of another person shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment of one to four years, a fine of twelve to twenty- four months and special barring from that profession for a term from two to six years.

Due to Article 200 of the Criminal Code ‘the terms set forth this Chapter shall be applicable to whoever, discloses, reveals or communicates reserved data of legal persons without the consent of their representatives, except for what is set forth in other provisions of this Code’.

In regard to Article 201 of the Criminal Code, ‘it requires to make a complaint by the victim or the legal representative. When the former is a minor, incapacitated or handicapped person, it may also be reported by the Public Prosecutor’.

This article also explains the forgiveness of the victim or his legal representative, which extinguishes the penal action.

From a European perspective, the European Convention of Human Rights in Article 10 regulates the freedom of expression. In this Article, it is provided that everyone has the right of freedom of expression. The exercise of this right which entails obligations and responsibilities might be susceptible to penalties, conditions, limitations and formalities and is stipulated by law and must seek one of the purposes recognised as legitimate in a democratic society: national security, territorial security, socio-economic wellbeing, defence of public order and prevention of the criminal offences, health care or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others, prevention of disclosure information obtained confidentially.

¹⁶ Spain. Spanish Supreme Court of Justice. Case Law 234/1999, Criminal Chamber n. 2, February 18 1999. <http://supremo.vlex.es/vid/descubrimiento-revelacion-secretos-fa-17716989>

In the Castells judgment, in April 1992,¹⁷ the Court stated that there has been an infringement of Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights. A member of the Spanish Parliament who was a Basque militant, had been convicted for offending the Government when publishing an article accusing the Government of helping or permitting attacks on Basques by armed groups. The Court made the following statement observations:

“Freedom of the press affords the public one of the best means of discovering and forming an opinion on the ideas and attitudes of their political leaders. In particular, it gives politicians the opportunity to reflect and comment on the preoccupations of public opinion; it thus enables everyone to participate in the free political debate, which is at the very core of the concept of a democratic society”

4. Who is a “Journalist” According to the National Legislation? Is it, in Your View, a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources? What is the Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors? I the Protection of Journalists’s Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

The Press and Print Law (Ley de prensa e imprenta) 14/1966 March 18, in article 33 states the Journalist’s Statute (Estatuto del periodista profesional), approved by the Decree 744/1967,¹⁸ April 13, which ratifies the consolidated text of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession (Estatuto de la profesión periodística), for the definition and development of such profession.

The legal definition of “journalist” is essentially established by the articles of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession, based on the constitutional Article 20 of the Spanish Constitution of December 29 1978:

- Art. 1

For all legal purposes, a journalist is someone who is registered in the Official Register of Journalists (Registro oficial de periodistas).

¹⁷ Europe. Freedom of Expression. Case- law concerning Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights. Council of Europe, 1998-2006. http://www.echr.coe.int/LibraryDocs/DG2/HRFILES/DG2-EN-HRFILES-18\(2007\).pdf.pdf)

¹⁸ This Decree has an informative value and not a normative value. Since now there is only a draft law on the Statute of Professional Journalist displayed by the parliamentary group of Izquierda Verde- Izquierda Unida-Iniciativa per Catalunya Verds on April 23 2004 and declared admissible on November 23 2004, as stated in the question n° 1.

The journalists in possession of a Degree in Journalism will be only registered in the Official Register of Journalists. The degree will only be obtained once approved the studies in any of the legally recognised schools of journalism and after passing an exam at the official school of journalism or those established for the remaining as a requirement for its achievement.

- Art. 4

A journalist has the right to obtain the press card that identifies him/her as such, if he/she meets the requirements of Article 1 and, in general, all the requirements of the Press and Print legislation, and this for the doing the tasks of journalistic information (written, oral, or graphic), whether printed, radiated, televised or filmed, in both broadcast media as a body or public entities.

This definition of “journalist” given by the Spanish regulation (Article 4 of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession) is in accordance with the definition issued by the UNESCO in 1983:

“Every person, of any nationality, who has a permanent job paid as director, reporter, photographer, ‘cameraman’ or technical press, radio, television or filmed news service, that exercise their profession in accordance with the ethical standards required by the profession. The activity is: to seek, to receive, to impart information, opinions, ideas, studies or remarks in daily or periodical publications, news agencies, radio services, television or cinema”.

The Statute of the Journalistic Profession also involves an annex which provides general principles of the profession. Among them, there’s a reference to the protection of the sources: “The journalist has a duty to keep professional secrecy, except in cases of forced cooperation with justice, at the service of the common good”.

This legal definition of “journalist” found in the in the Statute of the Journalistic Profession regulates the access to the journalistic profession and, in my opinion, a limits the protection of the journalists sources, because those without the necessary qualification (registration in the Official Register of Journalists and “academic degree requirements”) can’t be considered as “journalists”. As a result of this, certain rights which tend to protect sources of information are rejected, i.e. the right to professional secrecy.

Nevertheless, the attribution of these specific rights to the professional journalists does not implies a restriction on the right of any citizen to freely exercise his/her freedom of expression, opinion or information. Likewise, with the arrival of the Digital Era, citizens participate the more and more informing and communicating as a public service. Consequently, “citizen journalists”, “bloggers”, “tweeters”, etc. appeared. However, these citizens in the exercise of their right of information and opinion in a professional manner, due to the absence of legal regulation, currently do not enjoy the same rights as the professionals journalists, which involves that their sources are not protected in the same manner as they do not have the right to professional secrecy as a mechanism of protection of sources.

5. What Are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How Are the Laws Implemented? How Are the Legal Safeguards Combined With Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

The legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources are regulated in the annex of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession, amended by the Decree 744/1967, April 13. The most important are the professional secrecy and the conscience clause. Such rights are recognised in the Spanish Constitution of 1978, in its Article 20, paragraph 1.d) by which acquired a value and protection of constitutional level.

The right to professional secrecy is probably the most concrete and visible protection of the journalistic sources. It is an instrument of the journalist to obtain information and, therefore, the Spanish legislation has protected it in the paragraph 5 of the annex of the Statute of the journalistic profession. It establishes the non-disclosure of the identity of people who have provided information. In October 1974, the Council of Europe defined the right of professional secrecy as "the right of the journalist" to refuse to reveal the identity of the author of the information to his/her company, third parties and the public or judicial authorities. On March 8 2000, appeared the recommendation R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, informing the Member States of 'the explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source'.

Unlike the right of conscience clause, it has not been subject to any national legislation. This obligation of non-disclosure, extended to any document or medium which communication could allow the identification of the sources. It is one of the aspects of freedom of press and freedom of expression. Moreover, is a duty of the journalist, as the beneficiary of the professional secrecy is not the journalist, but the source of information, who is also part of the audience. The revelation of sources constitutes a criminal offence, regulated in the Article 199.2 of the Spanish Criminal Code. The obligation to maintain the anonymity of the sources is to be respected before the media company and the public authorities, including the judiciary and the journalists, and he/she will not be punished for it. This protection of sources is extended not only to the journalist, but also to any other journalist or editorial manager who could indirectly know the identity of the confidential source.

However, there's an exception to this duty of confidentiality, according to the Statute: 'except in cases of forced cooperation with justice, at the service of the common good'. The journalists are required to disclose the identity of their sources if it can avoid a crime against life, physical integrity, health, freedom or sexual freedom of people. In the case of failure to do so, the person will be punished under the article 450 of the Criminal Code.

In its judgment of March 27 1996, in Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, the European Court of Human Rights recognised:

"The right of journalists to protect their sources even before the judge" and that the 'freedom of press to protect journalists against the sanctions when they cannot disclose their sources of information, because this is their freedom of expression and this protection constitutes a capital public interest'. Moreover, if there is only a preponderant 'imperative public interest' requirement could be justified to the journalist to reveal the sources".

Which underlines the conformity of the Spanish legislation to the conception of EU law in such an aspect.

Moreover, the conscience clause comes regulated by the Organic Law 2/1997, of June 19. In the explanatory memorandum, this law contains the protection of the independence of journalists, who participates in the protection of sources, declaring:

“The information may not be subject to commercial considerations, nor can professional information be conceived as a kind of open mercenary to all kinds of news and information that are published on the side-lines of the constitutional mandate of veracity and pluralism”.

This clause aims to safeguard the moral integrity and the right of opinion of the journalist, allowing him/her to terminate his/her employment contract with a communications company, in the event of a significant change in the ideological orientation of the publications. This clause, which represents a protective right, allows the professional journalist to protect his/her honour and reputation. It is important to state that the demand may not cause any detriment to the journalist during the procedure, not may be subject to transfer or modify the working conditions. That is explained by the fact that the communication is not a neutral activity but it takes part in leading public opinion, providing values and interests.

The abovementioned legal safeguards are regulated by self-regulatory mechanisms.¹⁹ There's a lot of self-regulatory mechanisms and they aim to complete the legal regulations. There are conventions and codes of conduct elaborated by different agents in the world of communication that has a more regulatory burden and are legally binding, but there are other self-regulatory mechanisms whose value is purely declarative and indicative: recommendations, declarations, and manifestos.

Codes of ethics are the main means of self-regulation and can be defined as a set of professional ethical principles and values that should guide professionals in the exercise of their profession, in this case the journalistic profession. They emanate from different actors (national and supranational, institutions as well as practitioners of such profession).

Spain has been one of the last European countries to develop a code of ethics for the journalistic profession. This situation is due to the Franco's dictatorship, whose regime exercised an extensive repression on the media and there was no self-regulation.

Currently, Spain has a code of ethics of the Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations (Federación de Asociaciones de Periodistas de España: FAPE) approved by its extraordinary Assembly on November 28 1993 in Seville. It is the main source of media self-regulation for its content and approval. In order to ensure the respect of the provisions of this code of ethics, it was created an internal control body, led by FAPE: Foundation of Arbitration, Complaints and Deontology of the Journalism (Comisión de arbitraje, quejas y deontología del periodismo). This code of

¹⁹ Please note that it doesn't exist an explicit national legislation which regulates all aspects of the profession of journalist. Although case law has begun to score limits the right to professional secrecy (see ECtHR March 27 1996, Goodwin v. the United Kingdom)

FAPE, as well as the self-control body, examine the ethical practice of the profession. Codes of ethics are not known for being binding sources because of the parallel development of the legal regulation.

However, it must be said that the first article of the FAPE's Code of ethics of the journalistic profession (Código deontológico del periodista) notes that the acceptance of the principles of professionalism and ethics contained in this code is "a necessary condition for its incorporation into the professional register of journalists and associations of the Federated Press". Since then, under the Article 16 of the Statute of the journalistic profession, approved by Decree, all journalists has the obligation to become members of the Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations, through the Press Association they belong to. Such legal provision provides indirectly binding to the precepts of FAPE's code of ethics.

In the same way, it is necessary to take into account part of the precepts that are recognised by this code and are inspired by the principles regulated in the annex of the Statute, which confers a legal value.

For example, Article 10 of the FAPE's code of ethics²⁰ agrees with the Article 5 of the annex of the Statute²¹. Other self-regulatory mechanisms merely declarative and indicative:

- The International principles of professional ethics of journalism or the UNESCO Declaration were approved in 1983
- The resolution about the European ethical code of the journalistic profession was adopted unanimously in Strasbourg on July 1 1993.

6. In the Respective National Legislation Are the Limits of Non-Disclosure of the Information in Line With the Principles of the Recommendation N° R (2000) 7? What Are the Procedures Applied? Is the Disclosure Limited to Exceptional Circumstances, Taking Into Consideration Vital Public or Individual Interests at Stake? Do the Authorities First Search for and Apply Alternative Measures, Which Adequately Protect Their Respective Rights and Interests and at the Same Time Are Less Intrusive With Regard to the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Information?

²⁰ Article 10 of the FAPE's code of ethic: "The obligation of professional secrecy is the right of the journalist, as well as a duty that guarantees the confidentiality of the sources of information. Therefore the journalist will guarantee the right of their sources of information remain anonymous, if it has been applied. However, such professional duty may assign exceptionally assuming that truthfully record source has distorted consciously when revealing the source is the only way to prevent a serious and imminent harm to people."

²¹ Article 5 of the annex of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession: "The journalist has a duty to maintain professional secrecy, except in cases of forced cooperation with justice, to serve the common good."

As we have seen so far, the national legislation in Spain regarding the protection of journalistic sources is limited for several reasons: this legislation was developed lately and, in addition, it is dispersed due to the lack of a specific rule regulating this protection in the way the Recommendation demands.

The only provision found in the Spanish Constitution is to be found in Article 20.1.d), which establishes the right to professional secret and the necessity of a specific legislation for it. This Article shows that the will of the legislator is to express the importance of this fundamental right and the imperative necessity of its development. However, this constitutional requirement has not been accomplished because there is no a specific legislation in Spain regulating the right of the journalists to not disclose their sources and, as a consequence, its limits are far from being clear.

This kind of loophole can cause legal insecurity. The lack of a specific rule regarding the limits of non-disclosure of the information can be harmful for professionals because they do not know accurately what the limits of their rights are and in what cases or situations they have the legal duty of revelation of their sources. Even if the principles established by the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Council of Europe constitute a wake-up call to the Spanish legislators for preparing a legal corpus regulating this right, it seems that since 2000 no progress has been made in this arena.

The law courts have to make reference to the regulations of the Criminal Code, which are too indeterminate to protect a fundamental right because its provisions don't provide a specific protection for journalists. In Title X of this Code is to be found the development of "felonies against privacy, the right to personal dignity and the inviolability of the dwelling", thus some provisions exist and law courts can take them into account: for example, Article 199 (that punishes "whoever discloses secrets of others that he obtains knowledge where of through his trade or labour relations") or Article 200 that applies the terms of the Chapter to "whoever discloses, reveals or communicates reserved data of legal persons without the consent of their representatives".

Another example from the Criminal Code is Article 20.7, which establishes that "any person who acts in carrying out of a duty or in the lawful exercise of a right" shall not be criminally accountable. This regulation helps the law courts to protect the right of journalists to protect their sources because it's their duty, but it seems quite clear that all these articles are not sufficient to protect journalists in Spain, and even more if we take into account the high level of protection that pretends to provide the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 of the Council of Europe.

If it is difficult for law courts to find regulations that might be useful to protect a journalist for non-disclosing his/her sources, it is even harder to delimit this right and define clearly the limits by the jurisprudence.²² Therefore, judges acknowledge this lack in the legislation in the case of conflicts implying the right of non-disclosure of the sources and its limits. It is certain that when the accusation demands to disclose a source, you need more than the Article contained in the Constitution, because there is no definition or delimitation of the content of this right and, as we have seen up to now, there is no development of it in a specific rule.

This being so, jurisprudence in Spain has confirmed the large margin of uncertainty existing, in order to find the limits of the right, and especially given the substantial number of existing references due to the effort carried out strongly by the European Court of Human Rights to determinate and define the limits of the right of the journalists not to disclose their sources. Thus, the law courts seek legal support in the European jurisprudence to confront this kind of conflicts.²³

Nevertheless, even if there is not a specific legislation accomplishing the constitutional mandate of regulation of the right of journalists, it does not mean that the legislator has not tried to work on it. It is important to emphasise that 19 bills have been proposed on the matter of protection of journalism since the Spanish Constitution came into effect and none of them has been approved.²⁴

In order to answer the question, we are going to analyse the last bill proposed on this subject matter, called Right of information and the duties and rights of reporters (Proposición de ley de derecho a la información y de deberes y derechos de los informadores).²⁵ This proposed bill constitutes a good example of application of the Recommendation (2000)7, because we find the definition of the rights very clearly and also it is regulated their limitations.

Therefore, Article 15 of this proposed bill establishes the disclosure of confidential sources and the duty of revealing them in some given situations:

“The journalists and editorial responsible that do not fulfil the professional secret will be punished as perpetrators of the crime included at article 199.2 of the Penal Code.

The journalist has to disclosure the source identity when it can be avoided the commission of a crime against life, integrity, health, freedom or sexual freedom of people. In this case, not disclosing the source will be punished by article 450 of the Criminal Code”.

We can see that the disclosure of the sources is a duty when it is extremely necessary in order to avoid a crime. In addition, there is a specific list of crimes related to the safety of the individuals and their integrity. In all these situations, the journalists find the legitimation and the duty to reveal their sources, and they will be more protected by law.

²² Moretón Torquedo, A., El secreto profesional de los periodistas. De deber ético a derecho fundamental, Madrid: Estudios Constitucionales, 2012, p. 223.

²³ Spain. AJ Instrucción nº 2 de Vitoria, September 27, 2010, Case “Tellería”.

²⁴ Moretón Torquedo, op.cit., 2012, p. 220

²⁵ Spain. Proposed Bill 122/000070 Right of information and the duties and rights of reporters

Article 15 of this proposed bill corresponds fully to the content of the Statute for journalist that, as we have seen, is not a binding norm. However, is the only reference in our legal system of the rights of journalists and the exceptional circumstances under which they must disclose the source's identity. The list of exceptional circumstances, that is, avoid a crime against life, integrity or freedom of people, constitute a model to grant legal security to journalists. Nevertheless the majority of legal experts in Spain has highlighted that is very insufficient to protect the journalists because of its inaccuracies and lack of clarity in its provisions.

As we have seen before, at the Statute it is possible to find provisions concerning the necessity of disclosure due to a "service of the common good" and "forced cooperation with justice". To analyse this provision it is important to focus on the binding norms of our legal system. However, in our Criminal Code there is no reference to journalists in the Chapter VII, dedicated to the obstruction of justice. Concerning the jurisprudence it is possible to find an example of the Provincial Court of Madrid (Audiencia Provincial de Madrid).²⁶ In this case of illegal surveillance, the journalist refuses to reveal the identity of his source and, in consequence, the Court establishes that the information obtained by this journalist hasn't any probative value at all. Thus, we can see that as the Court does not oblige the journalist to reveal his/her source, so the right of non-disclosure is implicitly recognised, despite the legal loophole. The judge seems to bear in mind the doctrine and the Statute not binding to consider that in this case the journalist is not forced to cooperate with the justice, because it is a situation which does not concern any exceptional circumstances included at the list of Article 15. The only consequence was the inadmissibility of the evidence obtained without the determination of the source identity.

In reference to the punishment, Article 450 of the Spanish Criminal Code is to be applied. This Article is included in the Chapter of "omission of the duties to prevent felonies or to promote their persecution" and establishes that:

"Whoever is able, by his immediate intervention and without risk to himself or another, and does not prevent a felony being committed that affects the life, integrity or health, freedom or sexual freedom of persons, shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment of six months to two years and if the offence is against life, and that of a fine from six to twenty-four months in the other cases, except if the offence not prevented is subject to an equal or lower punishment, in which case a lower degree punishment than that for the actual felony shall be imposed."

When there is an omission of this kind, the Article makes the difference between a crime that "affects" the life and the integrity of individuals and a crime that is "against" life. In this last case the punishment is higher because of its gravity. In fact, this Article is usually applied by the law courts in this kind of conflicts.²⁷

We can consider that this proposed bill fulfil the conditions of the Recommendation, especially the principle 3, which requires that the legitimate interest must take into account the circumstances, which have to be vital and serious (the protection of life in our case).

²⁶ Provincial Court of Madrid, December 29 2008, Case 1077/2008

²⁷ Moretón Toquero, op.cit. 2012, p. 230.

However, we have to bear in mind that we are talking about the last proposed bill about our subject and that it was not approved. Indeed, this bill was proposed in 2008 and since then, no other proposals were presented. So, as it is not to be approved soon, we will have to wait to find a legislation providing protection to journalists and defining the right of non-disclosure of its sources and its limits in Spain.

7. In the Recommendation N° R (2000) 7 the Following Principles Should Be Respected When the Necessity of Disclosure Is Stated: Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, Outweighing Legitimate Interest (Protection of Human Life, Prevention of Major Crime, Defence of a Person Accused or Convicted of Having Committed a Major Crime). Under Which Criteria Can the Interest In the Disclosure Outweigh the Interest In the Non-Disclosure?

The answer to this question is to be found in other legislations because, as we have already explained, it doesn't exist a specific regulation on this subject. The lack of legislation is a big obstacle to determinate which criteria can legitimate the disclosure of the sources and confirm if the principles of the Recommendation are taken into account or not in our legal system. Nevertheless, most of the Spanish case-law on the matter understands that article 199 and following of the Spanish Criminal Code indirectly warrant this protection.

Precisely, this disparity of points of view emphasizes is the reason why we insist since the beginning of this research on the idea that: a concrete and specific legal regulation on the subject is urgent.

With that said, we are going to focus our study on two recent norms that affect directly the protection of the right of non-disclosure of the journalist's sources. It is possible to question through this analysis if the measures that we are going to see, which were included by recent reforms, are reasonable, proportionate and legitimate in order to allow the authorities to ask for the disclosure of sources.

In the first place, we are going to take into account the provisions of the Organic Law of Protection of Citizen Security (Ley orgánica de protección de la seguridad ciudadana). This recent legislation that came into effect in 2015, is very criticised because its provisions could constitute a threat to civil liberties. The reason of this controversy resides in the regulation of the criteria defining the situations where the interest of the disclosure can outweigh the interest of the non-disclosure, so it is a delicate issue.

An example of a contestation of a provision is the one about the freedom of expression and the press. In Article 36 there is an enumeration of serious offences where we can find that the "unauthorised use of images or personal data (...) that could endanger the personal or family safety of [public security officers] or that put at risk the success of an operation" is considered a "serious offence" and therefore punishable by a fine of between €601 and €30,000. In this provision the protection of “personal or family safety” of security officers can be used as a criteria to force the journalist to reveal his/her sources.²⁸

But not only is the freedom of expression affected by this law. Article 30.3 says that:

“It will be considered as organizer or promoter of the meetings in public places or protests, the natural persons or legal entities that have subscribed the required communication”.

We can see that the journalist can be responsible of a protest only by publishing information of it. In addition, the ambiguity of these provisions can contribute to a certain arbitrariness in its interpretation, because under this Law a person just spreading a protest can be considered as responsible. We will have to wait to see the nuanced definition of the limits and the examination of the legitimate interest of this restriction of the journalist’s right by the Constitutional Court: it is important to determinate if this provisions in the Public Security Law are vague and disproportionate, even if this could take years.²⁹

Another norm that it is important to take into account is the reform of the Law on Criminal Procedure (Ley de enjuiciamiento criminal) that includes some provisions in relation to our topic. This reform carried out in 2015 has also attracted controversy, especially for Article 520.1 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which establishes that:

“Pre-trial detention and imprisonment shall be carried out in the manner least harmful to the person, reputation and property of the detainee or prisoner”.

The article also established the necessity of ensuring the constitutional rights of honour, privacy and right to image of the detainee. Once again we find the constitutional protection of the rights of honour and privacy to delimitate the journalist’s right: actually this is a provision that we find in the Spanish Constitution, Article 20.4, where it determinates that the freedom of expression has this rights as a limit.

However, the Spanish Free Press Association (Asociación Española de Prensa Gratuita: AEPG) and other journalistic groups have complaint about the legal insecurity of these provisions for the journalists: they give the example of a journalist taking a photography of a detainee or a security officer, which now constitutes a criminal offence, and that it can affect directly to the right of non-disclosure of the sources, because it can be considered a situation to add to the list of the cases in which the journalist must reveal his/her sources.

It is important to add that the press sector and the defenders of the right of freedom of expression brought pressure on the Spanish Government to rethink some provisions, especially Article 520.1. It was a success because the final version of the bill states that those measures are to be adopted only in order to protect the constitutional rights of honour, privacy and image of the detainees “with respect to the fundamental right of freedom of expression”.³⁰ It is very significant the reference to the freedom expression, because it is another constitutional and fundamental right that cannot be forgotten and it also needs a special legal protection. This can contribute to help law courts to protect it and examine the balance between the right of honour and the right of freedom of expression.

²⁸ International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 13. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf

²⁹ International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 14. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf

Through this provisions we find a new criteria other than the protection of human life, the prevention of major crime or the defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime. As we have seen, the constitutional rights of honour, privacy and right to image of the detainee appears on several provisions of these last reforms to legitimate alternative measures that offer an enlargement of situations in which journalists have to reveal their sources. In several occasions the Supreme Court established the limits of the right of honour and the illegitimate intromission and the freedom of expression. Usually, the latter prevail over the right of honour, because of the special protection of the journalists:³¹ the published information should constitute a serious offense and affect directly to the reputation of the individual for considering that it is necessary to delimitate the right of journalists.

As these provisions are quiet recent, we will have to see what are the limits posed by the law courts and above all if it is applied the principle 4 of the Recommendation inviting to consider that it does “not require for that purpose the disclosure of information identifying a source by the journalist”.

It is important to take into account that these two rules came into effect in the last legislative term, so it could be interesting to analyse how the limits to the right of non-disclosure have been developed during this period, but there is a lack of interest regarding the protection to the journalistic sources: it seems there is no political willingness to approve a bill concerning the protection of non-disclosure of the journalist’s sources.

Thus, we can consider that an offense of the right of honour included in this rules is not a crime in line with the recommendation to force the journalist to disclosure its sources. In our legal system, especially at the Criminal Code, there is no a specific and concrete provision concerning the duty of journalists to protect their source, as it exists in the deontological code (but it’s a non-binding norm). At this code we find the provisions that we have commented before under which the journalist can be forced to disclosure the source identity only in the situations where a crime can be avoided. Thus, crimes included at this provision fulfil de requirements of the Recommendation: the protection of Human Life (all the crimes against life, integrity, health, freedom or sexual freedom of people) and the Prevention of Major Crime.

³⁰ International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 18. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf

³¹ Supreme Court (Tribunal Supremo), March 25 2013. Case Law 2013\3928.

8. In The Light Of The Case Law Of The European Court Of Human Rights, How Do National Courts Apply The Respective Laws With Regard To The Right To Protect Sources? In Particular, How Do They Balance The Different Interests At Stake?

The lack of regulation about the professional secret of the journalists observed in the European countries has been solved for the most part by the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). The professional secret does not appear directly in the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) of 1950, but it can be deduced reading the Article 10. It protects the freedom of expression and, in relation with the confidentiality, it only mentions that this freedom carries duties:

“1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

*2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary”.*³²

As the professional secret is not regulated, the task of the ECtHR consists of, on one hand, clarifying the existence of this secret and, on the other hand, establishing its requirements and limitations.

Ultimately, the professional secret of the journalists in the area of the Council of Europe is a real right, that can be inferred by what is said in Article 10 of the ECHR, and is recognised by the jurisprudence of the ECtHR as not absolute (it is subject to restrictions).

We are going to see, first of all, the acknowledgement of this professional secret (I) and, secondly, the limitation of this right (II).

1. The professional secret: a right not present in the European Convention of Human Rights

a) The Sentence of Goodwin v. United Kingdom (1993)

This case acknowledged the professional secret right.

³² Article 10 of the ECHR of 1950

Mr. Goodwin received information on the telephone about the financial situation of a company. He promised not to disclose his source as it could lead the company into bankruptcy. The newspaper was sued and the Judge of the 'High Court of Justice' demanded the divulgence of the source's identity. Mr. Goodwin lodged an appeal against the judge's decision and the Appeals Tribunal disallowed the claim. The House of Lords considered that the High Court of Justice and the Appeals Tribunal had reason to establish the need of spreading the sources in the interests of justice.

The Sentence of the ECtHR Goodwin v. United Kingdom of March 27 1996 supposed a milestone in the protection of journalistic sources: not only because of his express recognition on the matter, but because it is no longer considered as a duty of ethical efficiency but a right protected by the ECHR.

In his claim before the ECtHR, Mr. Goodwin (a British journalist) alleged that the judicial order broke his freedom of expression, as it is recognised in the Article 10 of the Convention: he was required to reveal the identity of his source of information.

In his Sentence, the Court recalls that the 'freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society'³³ and that the safeguards afforded to the press are of particular importance. The protection of the sources of information is 'one of the basic conditions for press freedom'. The Court expressed that:

"[...] without such protection, source may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters for public interest [...] Having regard to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest".

The conclusion was that the judicial decision asking the defendant to reveal his source and as well the fine for refusing to obey, infringed the right to freedom of expression, as it is written in Article 10.

This sentence established the foundations of the juridical construction of the professional secret of the journalists.

b) The Sentence Fressoz and Roire v. France (1999)

This is a sentence about the professional secret of the journalists against other professional ³³ From the Sentence Handyside v. the United Kingdom (sentence of ECtHR of September 7 1976), the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) has established that 'freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society, one of the basic conditions for its progress and for each individual's self-fulfilment'. Since then, every time the ECtHR has applied the Article 10 of the ECHR, the reference to the freedom of expression like a foundation of the democracy has been constant (as Teresa Freixes Sanjuán establishes it in El Tribunal Europeo de Derechos Humanos y las Libertades de la Comunicación).

secrets.

In the Goodwin case, the Court established that the protection of the journalist allowed the guardianship of those who had infringed her duty of secret. And this sentence Fressoz and Roire v. France of January 21 1999 (JUR 1999/3) confirms it.

In this case, a journal leaked out the fiscal information of a person of public interest, after receiving copies of the original liquidations from an anonymous sender. The problem in this case lies in the fact that the source was a civil servant bound to keep the confidentiality of citizens' fiscal information.

The Court recognised that the conduct of the informers who publish documents with fiscal information provided by civil servants doesn't constitute per se an illegitimate exercise of the right to the information. This clarified the Sentence of Goodwin v. UK and the questions that Patrick Fontbressin³⁴ was raising about the possibility of publishing illicitly-obtained information (separating the journalist' conduct of the informant's conduct).

c) The Sentence Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg (2003)

In this case, the Court took a stance about the measures of judicial investigation: the registration of a journalist's workplace after being accused of violation of professional and fiscal secret, theft and concealment in relation with the publication of a journalistic article.

With this Sentence, the Court decided that the registrations could only be authorized in case of existing serious indications of the commission of a crime (which was not given in this case).

d) Cumpănă and Mazârê v. Rumania (2004)

In this case, two journalists accused of insult and slander received a prison sentence after publishing the offensive expressions. The journalists alleged before the ECtHR that they were not providing the evidences demanded by the National Court because they didn't want to cause any harm to their sources. As the Court noted

*"While the role of the press certainly entails a duty to alert the public where it is informed about presumed misappropriation on the part of local elected representatives and public officials, the fact of directly accusing specific individuals by mentioning their names and positions placed the applicants under an obligation to provide a sufficient factual basis for their assertions".*³⁵

But

³⁴ Fontbressin, P., 'Les arrêts du 17 décembre 2004 de la Cour européenne des Droits de l'Homme (Grande Chambre): Vers un principe de dignité de l'information?', in Revue Trimestrielle des Droits de l'Homme, n° 62, 2005.

³⁵ Sentence ECtHR Cumpănă and Mazârê v. Rumania of December 17 2004 §101

*“The Court points out that the applicants’ duty to provide a sound factual basis for the allegations in question in no way entailed an obligation to disclose the names of anyone who had supplied the information they used in producing their report. Furthermore, it does not appear from the evidence before the Court that during the criminal proceedings as a whole, or even on the date on which the second applicant appeared before the Court of First Instance (see paragraph 27 above), the Audit Court report on which the applicants’ article was clearly based was a confidential document whose disclosure could have led to sanctions for them or for their sources”.*³⁶

The Court established the violation of the Article 10 of the Convention, given the disproportion of the sanction, because it could dissuade the journalists from fulfilling their duty as alert of the public opinion.

In this cases, we see that the right of professional secret appeared very slowly. But as we said previously, is not an absolute right. It has some limits.

1. The limits at this professional secret

Which are the limits of this protection that we can distinguish from the jurisprudence of the ECtHR?

The general rule is the protection of the freedom of information and the journalist sources. This protection is not absolute, but the limitation takes place only in the suppositions of a ‘pressing social need’ or public interest.

We can recall the Sentences of the ECtHR³⁷ when he establishes that the exercise of freedom of expression carries with it duties and responsibilities, and the safeguard afforded by Article 10 to journalists is subject to the proviso that they are acting in good faith in order to provide accurate and reliable information in accordance with the ethics of journalism.

The reference to the ethical character of his/her action and to the good faith of the journalist can be determinant at the moment of valuing if the limitation of his/her professional secret has been so intense as to affirm the violation of Article 10.

In any case, the limitations of the professional secret are interpreted in a restrictive and proportional way. Any limitation of the professional secret has to be realised in a pondered way and with the due guarantees (judicial previous intervention)³⁸.

The sentence Handyside v. United Kingdom (September 7 1976) established the analysis (a ‘test’) of this limitation, if it was just or not in the light of the paragraph 2, Article 10 of the ECHR (vid supra).

³⁶ Ibidem §106

³⁷ Sentence ECtHR Cumpână and Mazârê v. Rumania; Fressoz and Roire v. France; and Stoll v. Switzerland (2006).

³⁸ Sentence Sanoma II v. Netherlands of September 14 2010.

In this sentence, the ECtHR established the necessary requirements in order to validate the limitation:

- (i) The limitation is necessary to be foreseen in the law;
- (ii) Has to be justified by a legitimate purpose (in agreement to the Article 10.2);
- (iii) Has to be necessary in a democratic society for the protection of the moral;
- (iv) Has to be proportional to the legitimate purpose pursued.

In this context, the ECtHR established the theory of 'margin of appraisal' (sentence of ECtHR July 23 1969).

On the other hand, it must be said that these limits are not compulsory. On the contrary, each State decides to impose limits or not, since Article 10 of the Convention says that the limitations must be established by law.

2. In the Spanish national context

In the Spanish system, the Spanish Constitution recognizes and protects in the Article 20.1 the freedom of expression and the right to freely communicate or receive truthful information:

- "1. The following rights are recognized and protected:*
- a. The right to freely express and spread thoughts, ideas and opinions through words, in writing or by any other means of reproduction.*
 - b. The right to literary, artistic, scientific and technical production and creation.*
 - c. The right to academic freedom*
 - d. The right to freely communicate or receive truthful information by any means of dissemination whatsoever. The law shall regulate the right to the clause of conscience and professional secrecy in the exercise of these freedoms".*

But that is not all, as our Constitution indicates the need of a law to develop this right of professional secret. We may wonder if this law exists.

Nowadays, we haven't a legislative text about the protection of the journalist sources. We have only a Deontological Code approved by the Ordinary Assembly of the Federation of FAPE in Seville, November 27 1993. This Code defines the professional secret in its Article 10:

"The right to keep professional secrecy is a right of a journalist, but it is also an obligation which guarantees the confidentiality of the sources of information.

Therefore, a journalist shall guarantee the right of the sources of information to remain anonymous, if such has been requested. However, this professional obligation shall exceptionally not be applied if it has been proved that the source has deliberately falsified information or if revealing the source is the only way to avoid serious and instant damage to people".

FAPE is the principal organization of professionals of journalism in Spain and its Commission wants to be a reference in the autoregulation of the journalistic profession. It works on its own initiative or at the request of any citizen, and it exercises its function independently. The main purpose of FAPE is to know and solve the journalistic questions of ethics matters in conformity with its own regulation.

This is all the existing protection of the journalist source in the Spanish system, where the Constitution is not respected because the Spanish Parliament has not legislated on this matter yet (in opposition to the Article 20 of the Spanish Constitution).

Consequently, the Spanish regulation for the protection of the journalist sources and the professional secret is poor and it is not endorsed by the legislative power, as there's a lack of specific legislation about the secret of journalistic sources.

I am going to do a brief revision to the most relevant doctrines of the Constitutional Court:

- (I) Sentence 15/1993: it notes the importance of not revealing the sources, as well as the material of work used during the process and, in this case, even the identity of the person that it publishes in the section of correspondence columns (Cartas al director in Spanish).
- (II) Sentence 123/1993 and 173/90: we see that the right of the professional secret is exercised on any public entity that requires the revelation of his sources and this does not carry the responsibility that derive from the non-cooperating with the Public Administrations. Therefore, it does not free the journalist of proving that he has acted with ethics, diligence and professional veracity.
- (III) Sentence 21/2000: this sentence talks on the conflict that exists between the professional secret and the public interest in the pursuit of the criminal activity. In this regard the High Court has declared itself on the need to weight the right to the freedom of information and the general interest of the justice to revealing this professional secret.

In conclusion, the absence of Spanish jurisprudence is due to the lack of a specific legislation about the professional secret. The Criminal Code doesn't not regulate textually the protection of the sources, as we can see in the Sentences of the Constitutional Court. But at the same time this right is developed in the national and European jurisprudence.

9. What Are The Criteria For Using Electronic Surveillance And Anti-Terrorism Laws, Which May Include Measures Such As Interceptions Of Communications, Surveillance Actions And Search Or Seizure Actions In Order To Identify Journalists' Sources Of Information? Are The National Law Provisions Accessible, Precise, Foreseeable And Include Clear Legislative Norms In The Context Of Surveillance And Anti-Terrorism Provisions?

As we'll see, the question of the telephonic interventions in the Spanish legal order (I) gave place to numerous case-law of the Constitutional Court and the Supreme Court (II) because of the insufficient regulation of the interception of communications.

1. Juridical Spanish regime in accordance with the telephonic interventions.

In this part, we're going to talk about the juridical regime in general (A). In the second part, we'll focus on the communications between lawyer and client (B) that has specific rules in accordance with the terrorism.

A. The general legal order

The general legal order refers to the ensemble of applicable legal texts in the Spanish territory: the national, international rules.

The treaties are a part of our legal order in accordance with Article 10 of the Spanish Constitution (and in according with the Article 96).

Concerning the international laws, we must mention Article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human rights: 'No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks'.

On the other hand, the United Nations signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (New-York, December 16 1966). We are interested in the Article 17.1 and 2:

*"1. - No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation.
2. - Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks".*

Regarding European laws, we must mention the ECHR and the Fundamental Freedoms: Article 8.1 and 2 deal with the 'Right to respect for private and family life'.

Finally, in the Spanish laws, the Article 18.3 of the current Spanish Constitution says: 'Secrecy of communications is guaranteed, particularly of postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications, except in the event of a court order to the contrary'.

With regard to the prohibition of the telephone tapping in our legislation, we must mention the organic law 7/1984 because it added to the Penal Code the crime of clandestine telephone tapping in its Title X, Chapter 1 'On discovery and revelation of secrets'.

The Spanish Criminal Procedure Code (SCPC) regulating the telephonic interventions until the Organic Law 4/1988 in the Article 579, paragraphs 2, 3 and 4.

Nevertheless, following the doctrinal majority opinion: the regulation of Article 579 of the SCPC is insufficient. This situation was pointed essentially by the ECHR in its Sentence of February 18 2003, Meadow Bugallo v. Spain. It declares that this Article does not conform to the requirements relative to the legal request of the interference, infringing the Article 8 of the CEDH.

Article 579 of the SCPC caused a legal vacuum in the matter of telephonic interventions. Such insufficiencies concern basically the duration of the execution of the measure, the conditions of establishment of the procedure of transcription of the intercepted conversations, the precautions to the observing, to report intact and complete the realised recordings, to the purposes of the eventual control for the judge and the defence. The Spanish law does not contain any regulation on this subject.

This vacuum was solved by the case-law of the Spanish Supreme Court (fundamentally for Judicial Decree of June 18 1992 and the Sentence of June 25 1993, according to Jose Paul Sancha Díez).

The first one established the speciality of the criminal activity and the exceptionality of the measure.

The second one established the previous existence of a procedure of penal investigation and the area of application.

In addition to the contributions done by these two important sentences, the jurisprudence has continued developing this regulation. The Sentence of the Supreme Court of March 12 2004 established the necessary conditions to the application of this legislative norm (developed in the second part of this answer).

B. The communications between lawyer and his client

This question it's regulated in Article 51.2 of the Organic law 1/1979, of September 26, General Penitentiary Act (Ley General Penitenciaria: LOGP).

The Prisons Regulations consider the intervention in Article 48.3: 'The intervention of communications between prisoners and their lawyers is very restrictive, and it's only allowed in case of terrorism or in suppositions in which the lawyer could be involved'.

The two cumulative requirements for the intervention of such communications demanded by the Organic Law of the LOGP are (Sentence of the Spain's Constitutional Court 183/1994, of June 20):

- (i) Judicial authorization
 - (ii) Cases of terrorism
2. The Jurisprudential contributions

According to Jose Paul Sancha Díez's analysis, the principles for the judicial intervention of the telephonic communications are enumerated in the Sentence of the Spain's Supreme Court of March 12 2004:

Principle of Jurisdictional exclusivity: only the judicial authority can restrict the right to the secret of the communications. This means that the fundamental Right of the secret of the communication only can be limited by a juridical act.

Principle of exclusively evidential purpose: this evidence only can serve to establish the existence of the crime and find the people personally accountable (Sentence of Supreme Court of September 12 1994).

Principle of exceptional measure: only it will be possible its use in the absence of another way of investigating the crime (The Judicial Degree of the Supreme Court of June 18th 1992).

Principle of proportionality: only in case of serious crime. Nevertheless, Article 579.2 SCPC does not have a list of “serious crimes” (Sentence of the Supreme Court of May 20 1994). The problem is that there’s not a definition of “serious crimes” and this fact has developed two theories:

- a. López Barja³⁹ thinks that we can apply this measure, only for crimes punished with a penalty of imprisonment of more than 9 years.
- b. On the other hand, López Fragoso⁴⁰ thinks these measures should apply to any type of crimes.

The Spanish Supreme Court combines both theories: the sentence of June 14 1993 thinks that the measure finds her justification on very serious crimes, but it can be authorised for minor offences with social transcendence.

Principle of temporary legitimization: Article 579.3 SPCP authorizes this intervention during a period of three months, which is extendable (Sentence of the Supreme Court May 9 1994). There’s a problem with this principle because the Article 579.3 doesn’t talk about the limitations of this extension.

Specialty of the criminal fact: the interceptions of communications are incompatibly with a general investigation of criminal acts (Sentence of Supreme Court of May 20 1994).

Such measures will be applied only on the telephones of the persons investigated (Supreme Court, June 25 1993). The consequence of this Sentence is the imposition of the name of the person in the judicial act that establishes the interceptions of communications, in order to identify accurately the person.

Existence of indications of the commission of a crime and not only suspicions (Sentence of Supreme Court of April 18 1994).

Previous existence of a procedure of penal investigation. In consequence, we can’t apply this measure in prevention or on preliminary investigations (Sentence of Supreme Court of June 15

³⁹ Jacobo López Barja, Las escuchas telefónicas y la prueba ilegalmente obtenida, AKAL, Madrid, 1989.

⁴⁰ Tomás Vicente López-Fragoso Álvarez ‘Los descubrimientos casuales en las intervenciones telefónicas como medidas coercitivas en el proceso penal’, Derechos y libertades: Revista del Instituto Bartolomé de las Casas, ISSN 1133-0937, n° 1, N° 2, 1993-1994, p. 81-90.

1993 and March 25 1994).

Principle of sufficient reasons in the sentence in order to establish these measures. We can't forget that this measure goes in opposition to our Fundamental Rights, that's why it has to be very rigorously justified (Sentence of Supreme Court of May 20, 1994 and September 12 1994). Principle of judicial control in the development and cessation of the measure (Supreme Court of April 18th 1994).

If, after all this, the right of the secret of the communications is infringed, it should be applied Article 11.1 of the Judiciary Act (LOPJ) disposing that the evidences obtained against the Rights or the fundamental freedom will not be taken into consideration (Sentence 85/1994 of the Spain's Constitutional Court).

As we have seen how, the Spanish regulation of the electronic surveillance is really poor and insufficient. As a consequence, the jurisprudence fills this legislative insufficiency.

The investigation of the telephonic communications shows deficiencies that have not been object of the necessary legal reform in spite of the case-law. It is to the legislator to solve this deficiency and not to the case-law or the doctrine.

In conclusion, the national law it is not precise, foreseeable and it doesn't include clear legislative norms.

It is necessary to reform the procedural regulation, as the Sentence of the Supreme Court 184/2003 of October 3 declared it. As long as the Spanish Criminal Procedure Code will not be reformed, the case-law (national and European) will still be used.

10. Can Journalists Rely on Encryption and Anonymity Online to Protect Themselves and their Sources against Surveillance?

The right to the secrecy of communications encompasses every content of communication, either private or not. It constitutes a fundamental right of any individual or legal person, which must be respected by all others, either public or private entities or individuals.

At International level, Article 8(2) of the European Convention on Human Rights establishes the limitation of the right to respect private and family life whereas a court order is provided. Furthermore, it requires a legal provision and the concurrence of necessity by reason of national security, public safety of economic wellbeing of the country interests, the prevention of disorder or crime, the protection of health or morals, or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. The Budapest Convention on Cybercrime determines in Article 18 the national sovereignty with the legislative measures on: 1) the request for computer data of any person in its territory; 2) the request for data to a service provider relating to the services offered in the territory of the country. This Convention empowers State parties to pass a decryption legislation, and at the same time provides encryption as, in principle, a right.

In compliance to European Union law,⁴¹ Spanish legal framework considers encryption as a dual use technology. Furthermore, European Union has created a regulatory framework which rules electronic communications,⁴² thus entirely applicable to Spain.

The framework provided by Spanish constitution in relation to the protection against surveillance is contained in various articles, among which the main regulation is contained in Article 18.

First of all, Article 18(3) guarantees the secrecy of communications, and more concretely regarding postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications, then setting it as an independent right apart from the right to privacy. In accordance to Constitutional Court case-law,⁴³ secrecy of communications not only constitutes a guarantee of individual freedom, but also a collective instrument of cultural, scientific and technological development. Furthermore, this protection covers either intrusion from private as well as public entities or individuals, independently from the content of the information, and regardless of the way in which the interception is carried out. In addition, secrecy of communications is undermined not only with the interception, but also with the unlawful awareness of the information transmitted, and are protected both, the information which constitutes the content of the information and the interlocutor's identity.

Summarizing, this article provides the prohibition of interference and intervention of communication, with the sole exception of a court order, and in compliance with the guarantees laid down.

Later on, Article 18(4) of the Spanish Constitution provides the restriction of data processing in order to guarantee the honour and personal and family privacy of citizens and the full exercise of their rights. This provision constitutes a citizen's faculty, who might oppose to the use of personal data for different purposes from which substantiated its collecting. This article sets up a different right from the right to privacy, although closely linked. It guarantees the full control on the personal data, its use as well as its final destination.

On the other hand, Article 20 sets up the right of free information in its fourth paragraph, and freedom of expression in its first paragraph. Under this Article, Spanish Constitutional Court issued a judgment⁴⁴ on the July 3 2006 in which explicitly recognises the journalist's right not to reveal his/her sources of information and to professional secrecy in accordance to this ⁴¹ R (EC) n° 428/2009 of the Council, of 5 May 2009.

⁴² Dir. 2002/21/EC of the Commission and of the Council, of 7 March 2002.

Dir. 2002/19/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.

Dir. 2002/20/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.

Dir. 2002/22/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.

Dir. 2002/58/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 12 July 2002.

⁴³ Spanish Constitutional Court. Case 132/2002, of 20 May 2002.

⁴⁴ Spanish Constitutional Court. Case 216/2006.

provision. This case-law is in accordance to ECHR⁴⁵, which has emphasised that the right of journalist's not to reveal their sources is an intrinsic part of the right to information.

These three articles, as contained within the First Section of Chapter II of Title I of the Constitution, can only be ruled through Organic Act as established in Article 81, and bind all public entities in accordance to Article 53(1).

In relation to the limitations to the secrecy of communications rights, as established in the aforementioned constitutional provision 18(3), Article 55 provides for two restrictions applicable to the journalistic sphere. The first paragraph thereby establishes that secrecy of communications may be suspended in case of state of emergency or siege. The second paragraph foresees the possibility of suspension, which shall be determined with an organic act, for specific persons in connection with investigations of the activities of armed bands or terrorist groups. This suspension must be established along with the necessary participation of the courts and proper parliamentary control, and be determined on an individual basis.

Regarding Spanish development legislation, the Organic Act on Telecommunications (Ley orgánica de telecomunicaciones) provides in its Chapter III the regulation for personal data protection, and public rights and obligations concerning networks and electronic communications. In its Article 39 is established the obligation to guarantee the secret of communications for those operators on public communication networks or who provide electronic communication services. This right can be restricted firstly, in accordance to EU Directive on personal data and privacy protection,⁴⁶ to safeguard national security, public security, defence, or an important economic or financial interest, among others. Furthermore, at national level, Article 579 of the Criminal Procedural Code, in virtue of which can be issued an interception of communications judicial warrant. The other exception prescribed is in relation to the Organic Act 2/2002 on previous judicial control of the National Intelligence Centre, in which the only article has established the need of previous judicial warrant to the adoption of measures affecting secrecy of communications.

Later on, Article 43 provides that every content transmitted via communication networks, can be protected through encryption, adding further on that every public entity can request the encryption method used.

Royal Decree 424/2005 on the conditions for the provision of electronic communication services, develops the Act on Telecommunications, including in Article 63 the legal regime to be applied. Article 65(1) provides that operators must eliminate or anonymise all those personal data of their clients and subscribers in the moment these data are not useful anymore for the purposes of communication.

⁴⁵ Sentence case of Nagla v. Latvia, 16 July 2013

⁴⁶ R (EC) n° 45/2001 of the Parliament and the Council, of 18 December 2000.

Subsidiary, Organic Act on Personal Data Protection (Ley orgánica de protección de datos) shall be applied, which enables the adoption of high-level security measures, as encryption. In case the journalist is intending to publish sensitive personal data, such as those related to ideology, union membership, or religion as provided in Article 16(2) of Spanish Constitution, the content of the information along with its sensitive nature, public interest and the person's role in public life must be weighed. Once the evaluation has been done, a journalist can be constricted to use encryption to protect that data. Its regulation provides in Article 101(2) that the distribution of supports containing personal data, shall be after their encryption.

The Spanish Agency for Data Protection (Agencia Española de protección de datos) was created on 1993 as the public entity in charge of assuring the enforcement of the Organic Act on Data Protection.

In relation to the Criminal regulation, Article 197 of Spanish Criminal Code punishes the communications' interception crime, when it is perpetrated by individuals, while Article 200 rules the same in relation to legal entities. Article 536 penalises those public workers who commit the injury.

Regarding the right of journalists to rest to anonymity in their publications, there is not concrete provision which covers that scenario. Therefore, an extension of the professional secrecy right might be alleged on that regard, as the right to anonymity covers journalist's sources regardless of who is the source.

10. Are Whistle-Blowers Explicitly Protected under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources? Is there Another Practice Protecting Whistle-Blowers? Is the Legislation Prohibiting Authorities and Companies from Identifying Whistle-Blowers?

A journalist's position is among various interests: on the one side the interest of the sources in hiding the identity; the interest of the journalist in offering unique information conserving the source at the same time; and the public opinion's interest in being informed. Professional secrecy is the main instrument directed to protect this short of interests, understood as the right to protect informative sources, and not including others such as off the record, pseudonyms, or undetermined sources. As well established at the EU Anti-Corruption report,⁴⁷ Spain does not have specific legislation protecting whistle-blowers or effective protection mechanisms.

Given the lack of a legislative framework which rules whistle-blowers protection at national level, the closer definition is found at Council's of Europe level,⁴⁸ where is defined as 'individuals who report or disclose information on threats or harm to the public interest'.

⁴⁷ COM (2014) 38 final, Annex 9.

⁴⁸ Recommendation CM/Rec(2014) 7

At international level, the Council of Europe has issued Resolution 1003 on Ethics of Journalism that points out the need to unify and develop a national regulation on professional secrecy in relation to confidential sources. This instrument links professional secrecy under two approaches: the right of citizens to be informed, and the journalist's freedom of expression. Constitutional Court⁴⁹ has reiterated that, not only media have the dissemination of information role, but citizens have also the right to receive it. Spanish Constitutional Court has occasionally been in accordance with this interpretation, while in other judgments has understood that the right to be informed is not an individual right, but part of the broader right to communicate information.

Moreover, Recommendation No R (2000) 7, affirms that professional secrecy of the journalist covers the following elements: name and personal data, concrete circumstances in the collection of the information, the information which remains unpublished, as well as the journalist's personal data.

Legal regimen on the journalist's professional secrecy must be regarded under two approaches: within the framework of business information protections when journalistic sources are considered as the media; or within the personal sphere of the journalist, in case the sources are individual connections. Professional secrecy covers the source's identity, and operates in case of truthful information.

The Spanish Constitution recognises, in Article 20(1) (d), the right to freely communicate or receive truthful information by any means or dissemination whatsoever. Later on, it reserves to the law the regulation of professional secrecy in the exercise of these freedoms. In accordance to the case-law of the Constitutional Court, journalists should own a preferential right in receiving the information. The Court points out in further judgments that Article 20 guarantees professional secrecy not only as a right linked to the information right, but also in relation to the right to receive quality information, as a public interest ownership of the citizen.

At national level, there is not any specific Act which rules professional secrecy or whistleblowers protection, not have being constitutional regulation developed yet. This lack of regulation has lead in some occasions to contradictory judgments, as that in which information of which source was not revealed, was considered as not sufficiently proven.⁵⁰

The only law still in force was issued during Franco's dictatorship. Decree 744/1967, with the consolidated text of the Journalist Profession Statute, recognises the journalist's obligation to maintain the professional secret, with the only exception of judicial cooperation. In April 2004 a proposition of law on the Statute of the professional journalist was presented, even though it declined with the Parliament's dissolution in 2008. In Article 14, professional secrecy was recorded, and the disclosure of confidential sources offence was contained in Article 15.

⁴⁹ ATC 195/1991, of 26 June 1991.

⁵⁰ STC 21/2000, of 31 January 2000.

ECHR case-law⁵¹ has consistently underlined the strong importance of whistle-blowers protection, as well as the significance of the information disclosed when it affects to a strong public interest. That is confirmed at Recommendation CM/Rec (2014)7 of April 30 2014, where it was recognised that the disclosure of information on threats or harm to the public interest can contribute to strengthening transparency and democratic accountability. Even though this Recommendation call upon States to stimulate, facilitate and protect whistle-blowers, for the time being this indications have not been implemented across Spanish legal system. On that regard, Spanish Constitutional Court has reiterated that, for the protection of whistle-blowers under Article 20(1)(d) is not necessary an absolute concordance among the real facts occurred and the information provided, but is enough the whistle-blowers' diligence in confirming the information.

Thus, it can be concluded that in front of the lack of regulation, the protection of journalistic professional secrecy must be protected pleading the constitutional direct effect, as well as the analogical application of the procedural rules on regard to the professional secrecy in other professions as the Lawyer or Doctor. Apart from those cases, Spanish system of journalistic professional secrecy can be defined as self-regulatory, being composed of various sorts of rules such as reporting Statutes of each media- subscribed between the owners of the media and the editors-, Ethics Codes, or collective agreements. Although in most of this self-regulatory instruments, professional secrecy is defined as an obligation, is rather a journalist's right. At the same time, regulation is scattered at national and regional level.

On the one side, reporting Statutes are valid as far as a private agreement between parties, thus journalists and the owners of the media. Taking into account more concrete examples, and with regard to the professional secrecy, reporting Statutes of El Mundo or El Periódico de Cataluña directly set up this right, while El País only covers professional secrecy indirectly.

In relation to Labour regulation, is applicable whenever unfair dismissal and discriminatory treatment of employees are concerned.⁵² Workers' Statute contains in its Article 5 the good faith and non-concurrence obligations, in relation to which the journalist must not disclose the information at his/her disposal as a consequence of his/her job or professional activity. In Article 85.1 is contained the possibility to regulate professional secrecy through collective agreement.

Collective agreements concluded at the workplace between workers and the media's owners, in contrast to the previous categories, have a stronger legal nature, constituting legal sources when law lacks. Their efficacy is erga omnes, affecting all the workers covered under their influence.

⁵¹ Case of Matúz v. Hungary, Application no. 73571/10, 21 January 2015; Case of Guja v. Moldova, Application no. 14277/04, 12 February 2008.

⁵² Ibid 4.

Nevertheless, professional secrecy is not frequently regulated by collective agreements in practice, and the treatment at a national level is not unified. While some agreements recognise professional secrecy only in relation to the business' internal organization, others set up a right also in relation to third parties. Summarising it can be concluded that there is not a clear trend to the open recognition of the professional secrecy at this level.

In relation to the Ethics Code, the most relevant at national level is the one issued by the Journalists Association Federation in Spain, which in Article 10 contains the right to professional secrecy which guarantees the information sources' confidentiality. At the same time is established a clear limit to this right in case is clearly established the source has manipulated the information, or when the revelation of the source is the only path to avoid a severe and imminent injury to people.

Regarding the Criminal sphere, Spanish Criminal Code, Article 199(2) sets up the disclosure of confidential sources offence, by virtue of which journalists and the editorial board can be punished. However, a journalist is obliged to reveal the source's identity when a crime against life, integrity, health, freedom or sexual liberty might be avoided. In the contrary case, shall be sanctioned by virtue of Article 450.

Criminal Procedure Code exempts the journalist from declaring under Article 410. In case the journalist is processed for a severer disobedience lawful authority offence as a consequence of the negative to reveal the sources, might avoid responsibility by invoking the legitimate exercise of a right, under Article 20(7) of Criminal Code.

11. Conclusions

1. In the Spanish Constitution there's an explicit protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information.
 - a. Nevertheless, the Spanish legal system has never clearly developed a law related to the protection of the sources.
 - b. On one hand, the Spanish Criminal Code doesn't protect explicitly the rights not to disclosure the sources of information, in the articles 199 and following.
 - c. On the other hand, as these articles don't mention specifically the protection of the sources, and as the field of criminal law doesn't accept the analogy, there's a legal vacuum. The protection depends on, the interpretation of the Supreme Court in every particular case.
2. The professional secrecy of the media professionals has not been regulated in depth yet.
3. Consequently, the Spanish regulation for the protection of the journalist sources and the professional secret is poor and it is not endorsed by the legislative power.
4. It is necessary to reform the procedural regulation, as the Sentence of the Supreme Court 184/2003 of October 3 declared it. As long as the Spanish Criminal Procedure Code will not be reformed, the case-law (national and European) will still be used.
5. Actually we will have to wait to find a legislation providing protection to journalists and defining the right of non-disclosure of its sources and its limits in Spain.

6. The Spanish regulation of the electronic surveillance is really poor and insufficient. As a consequence, the jurisprudence fills this legislative insufficiency.
 - a. The investigation of the telephonic communications shows deficiencies that have not been object of the necessary legal reform in spite of the case-law. It is to the legislator to solve this deficiency and not to the case-law or the doctrine.
7. In November 27 1993 the General Assembly of the FAPE established the Spanish Deontological Code (for the Journalistic Profession as an essential ethic principle for the journalists in the exercise of their profession).

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- International Principles of Professional Ethics in Journalism. http://ethicnet.uta.fi/international/international_principles_of_professional_ethics_in_journalism
- European Convention of Human Rights, ECHR as amended by Protocols Nos. 11 and 14 supplemented by Protocols Nos. 1, 4, 6, 7, 12 and 13. http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Convention_ENG.pdf
- Dir. 2002/21/EC of the Commission and of the Council, of 7 March 2002.
- Dir. 2002/19/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.
- Dir. 2002/20/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.
- Dir. 2002/22/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 7 March 2002.
- Dir. 2002/58/EC of the Parliament and the Council, of 12 July 2002.
- R (EC) n° 428/2009 of the Council, of 5 May 2009.
- Recommendation CM/Rec(2014) 7
- COM (2014) 38 final, Annex 9.
- European Professional Code of Ethics. Council of Europe, Ethics of journalism. <http://assembly.coe.int/nw/xml/XRef/Xref-XML2HTML-en.asp?fileid=16414&lang=en> Spanish Constitution, December 29 1978. Official State Gazette -A-1978-31229, Number 311. https://www.boe.es/diario_boe/txt.php?id=BOE-A-1978-31229
- Organic Law 1/1982, May 5 1982, Official State Gazette -A-1982-11196, Number 115. <http://www.boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1982-11196>
- Organic Law 2/1984, Rectification Right, March 26 1984, Official State Gazette -A-1984-7248, Number 74 <http://www.boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1984-7248>
- Criminal Code. Organic Law 10/1995. Official State Gazette, November 24 1995, number 281. http://www.legislationline.org/download/action/download/id/5160/file/Spain_Criminal_Code_Codigo_Penal.pdf
- Organic Law 2/1997, Jun 19, regulates the clause of conscience of the professionals of the information. Official State Gazette <http://boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1997-13374>
- Civil Code, Royal Decree July 24 1889, Official State Gazette, Number 206. <https://www.boe.es/buscar/act.php?id=BOE-A-1889-4763>
- Law 14/1966, of March 18, of Press and Press. <http://boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1966-3501>
- Royal decree 1926/1976, of July 16, by which there is modified the in force Statute of the Journalistic Profession, approved by the Decree 744/1967, of April 13. <http://boe.es/buscar/doc.php?id=BOE-A-1976-15641>

12.2. Cases Law

- Sentence from ECtHR July 23 1969
- Sentence Handyside v. the United Kingdom, from ECtHR of September 7 1976
- Sentence from ECtHR Goodwin v. United Kingdom of March 27 1996
- Sentence Fressoz and Roire v. France of January 21 1999 (JUR 1999/3)
- Sentence of February 18 2003, Meadow Bugallo v. Spain, from ECHR
- Sentence Roemen and Schmit v. Luxemburg (2003)
- Sentence ECtHR Cumpână y Mazârê against Rumania of December 17, 2004 §101.
- Sentence ECtHR Cumpână y Mazârê against Rumania; Fressoz y Roire against France; and Stoll against Switzerland (2006).
- Sentence Sanoma II against Netherlands of September 14 2010.
- Sentence Nagla v.s Latvia, 16 July 2013.
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law, May 11 1983, Number 120.
<http://www.tribunalconstitucional.es/es/jurisprudencia/Paginas/Sentencia.aspx?cod=16789>
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law, December 22 1986, Number 17.
<http://ocw.usal.es/ciencias-sociales-1/derecho-a-la-informacion/contenidos/SENTENCIAS/1er%20BLOQUE/PDF/STC%20168-1986,%20de%2022%20de%20diciembre.pdf>
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law 6/1988, January 21 1988
<http://hj.tribunalconstitucional.es/HJ/en/Resolucion/Show/94>
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law 183/1994, of June 20
- Spanish Constitutional Court 85/1994
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case January 31th, 2000. Case Law 21/2000.
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case 132/2002, of 20 May 2002
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case 216/2006
- Spanish Constitutional Court. Case Law 51/2007, March 12 2007.
<http://hj.tribunalconstitucional.es/HJ/en/Resolucion/Show/6018>
- Spanish Supreme Court fundamentally for Judicial Decree of June 18 1992
- Spanish Supreme Court Sentence of June 25 1993,
- Sentence of Supreme Court of April 18 1994
- Sentence of the Supreme Court of May 20 1994
- Sentence of Supreme Court of September 12 1994
- Spanish Supreme Court of Justice. Case Law 234/1999, Criminal 2º Chamber, February 18 1999. <http://supremo.vlex.es/vid/descubrimiento-revelacion-secretos-fa-17716989>
- Sentence of the Supreme Court 184/2003 of October 3
- Spanish Supreme Court of Justice of March 12 2004
- Provincial Court of Madrid, December, 29th 2008, Case 1077/2008
- Spain. AJ Instrucción n.º2 de Vitoria, September 27nd, 2010, Case “Tellería”.
- Freedom of Expression. Case-law concerning Article 10 of the European Convention of Human Rights. Council of Europe, 1998-2006.

http://www.echr.coe.int/LibraryDocs/DG2/HRFILES/DG2-EN-HRFILES-18\(2007\).pdf.pdf)

12.3. Books and articles

- Moretón Torquedo, A., El secreto profesional de los periodistas. De deber ético a derecho fundamental, Madrid: Estudios Constitucionales, 2012.
- Fontbressin, P., 'Les arrêts du 17 décembre 2004 de la Cours européenne des Droits de l'Homme (Grande Chambre): Vers un principe de dignité de l'information?', in Revue Trimestrielle des Droits de l'Homme, n° 62, 2005.
- Lopez Barja, Jacobo Las escuchas telefónicas y la prueba ilegalmente obtenida, AKAL, Madrid, 1989.
- López-Fragoso Álvarez; Tomás Vicente 'Los descubrimientos casuales en las intervenciones telefónicas como medidas coercitivas en el proceso penal', Derechos y libertades: Revista del Instituto Bartolomé de las Casas, ISSN 1133-0937, n° 1, N° 2, 1993-1994.

12.4. Other sources

- Deontological Code for the Journalistic Profession. http://ethicnet.uta.fi/spain/deontological_code_for_the_journalistic_profession
- Complaints and Deontological Commission. <http://www.comisiondequejas.com/>
- International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 13. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf
- International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 14. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf
- International Press Institute. Report on the June 2015 High-Level International Press Freedom Mission to Spain. P. 18. http://ipi.freemedia.at/fileadmin/user_upload/Spain-Press-Freedom-Time-of-Change-ENG.pdf
- Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations. <http://fape.es>
- Spanish Free Press Association. <http://www.infoperiodistas.info/empresa/40804/Asociacion-Espanola-de-la-Prensa-Gratuita-AEPG>

13. Table of national provisions and articles.

Spanish Regulation
	Spanish version	English version
Article 16.2, Spanish Constitution	2. Nadie podrá ser obligado a declarar sobre su ideología, religión o creencias.	2. No one may be compelled to make statements regarding his or her ideology, religion or beliefs.
Article 18, Spanish Constitution	1. Se garantiza el derecho al honor, a la intimidad personal y familiar y a la propia imagen. 2. El domicilio es inviolable. Ninguna entrada o registro podrá hacerse en él sin consentimiento del titular o resolución judicial, salvo en caso de flagrante delito. 3. Se garantiza el secreto de las comunicaciones y, en especial, de las postales, telegráficas y telefónicas, salvo resolución judicial. 4. La ley limitará el uso de la	1. The right to honour, to personal and family privacy and to the own image is guaranteed. 2. The home is inviolable. No entry or search may be made without the consent of the householder or a legal warrant, except in cases of flagrante delicto. 3. Secrecy of communications is guaranteed, particularly regarding postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications, except in the event of a court

	informática para garantizar el honor y la intimidad personal y familiar de los ciudadanos y el pleno ejercicio de sus derechos.	order. 4. The law shall restrict the use of data processing in order to guarantee the honour and personal and family privacy of citizens and the full exercise of their rights.
Article 20.1, 20.2, 20.3, 20.4, 20.5, Spanish Constitution	1. Se reconocen y protegen los derechos: a) A expresar y difundir libremente los pensamientos, ideas y opiniones mediante la palabra, el escrito o cualquier otro medio de reproducción. b) A la producción y creación literaria, artística, científica y técnica. c) A la libertad de cátedra. d) A comunicar o recibir libremente información veraz por cualquier medio de difusión. La ley regulará el derecho a la cláusula de conciencia y al secreto profesional en el ejercicio de estas libertades. 2. El ejercicio de estos derechos no puede restringirse mediante ningún tipo de censura previa. 3. La ley regulará la organización y el control parlamentario de los medios de comunicación social dependientes del Estado o de cualquier ente público y	1. The following rights are recognised and protected: a) The right to freely express and spread thoughts, ideas and opinions through words, in writing or by any other means of reproduction. b) The right to literary, artistic, scientific and technical production and creation. c) The right to academic freedom. d) The right to freely communicate or receive truthful information by any means of dissemination whatsoever. The law shall regulate the right to the clause of conscience and professional secrecy in the exercise of these freedoms. 2. The exercise of these rights may not be restricted by any form of prior censorship. 3. The law shall regulate the organization and parliamentary control of the mass

	garantizará el acceso a dichos medios de los grupos sociales y políticos significativos, respetando el pluralismo de la sociedad y de las diversas lenguas de España. 4. Estas libertades tienen su límite en el respeto a los derechos reconocidos en este Título, en los preceptos de las leyes que lo desarrollen y, especialmente, en el derecho al honor, a la intimidad, a la propia imagen y a la protección de la juventud y de la infancia. 5. Sólo podrá acordarse el secuestro de publicaciones, grabaciones y otros medios de información en virtud de resolución judicial.	communication media under the control of the State or any public agency and shall guarantee access to such media by the significant social and political groups, respecting the pluralism of society and of the various languages of Spain. 4. These freedoms are limited by respect for the rights recognised in this Part, by the legal provisions implementing it, and especially by the right to honour, to privacy, to the own image and to the protection of youth and childhood. 5. The seizure of publications, recordings and other means of information may only be carried out by means of a court order.
Article 53(1), Spanish Constitution	1. Los derechos y libertades reconocidos en el Capítulo II del presente Título vinculan a todos los poderes públicos. Sólo por ley, que en todo caso deberá respetar su contenido esencial, podrá regularse el ejercicio de tales derechos y libertades, que se tutelarán de acuerdo con lo previsto en el artículo 161, 1, a).	1. The rights and freedoms recognised in Chapter 2 of the present Part are binding on all public authorities. Only by an act which in any case must respect their essential content, could the exercise of such rights and freedoms be regulated, which shall be protected in accordance with the provisions of section 161(1) a).
Article 55, Spanish Constitution	1. Los derechos reconocidos en los artículos 17, 18, apartados 2 y 3; artículos 19, 20, apartados 1, a) y d), y 5; artículos 21, 28, apartado 2, y artículo 37, apartado 2, podrán ser suspendidos cuando se	1. The rights recognised in sections 17 and 18, subsections 2 and 3; sections 19 and 20, subsection 1, paragraphs a) and d), and subsection 5; sections 21 and 28, subsection 2; and section

	acuerde la declaración del estado de excepción o de sitio en los términos previstos en la Constitución. Se exceptúa de lo establecido anteriormente el apartado 3 del artículo 17 para el supuesto de declaración de estado de excepción. 2. Una ley orgánica podrá determinar la forma y los casos en los que, de forma individual y con la necesaria intervención judicial y el adecuado control parlamentario, los derechos reconocidos en los artículos 17, apartado 2, y 18, apartados 2 y 3, pueden ser suspendidos para personas determinadas, en relación con las investigaciones correspondientes a la actuación de bandas armadas o elementos terroristas. La utilización injustificada o abusiva de las facultades reconocidas en dicha ley orgánica producirá responsabilidad penal, como violación de los derechos y libertades reconocidos por las leyes.	37, subsection 2, may be suspended when a state of emergency or siege (martial law) is declared under the terms provided in the Constitution. Subsection 3 of section 17 is excepted from the foregoing provisions in the event of the declaration of a state of emergency. 2. An organic act may determine the manner and the circumstances in which, on an individual basis and with the necessary participation of the courts and proper parliamentary control, the rights recognised in section 17, subsection 2, and 18, subsections 2 and 3, may be suspended for specific persons in connection with investigations of the activities of armed bands or terrorist groups. Unwarranted or abusive use of the powers recognised in the foregoing organic act shall give rise to criminal liability as a violation of the rights and freedoms recognised by the laws.
Article 81, Spanish Constitution	1. Son leyes orgánicas las relativas al desarrollo de los derechos fundamentales y de las libertades públicas, las que aprueben los Estatutos de Autonomía y el régimen electoral general y las demás previstas en la Constitución. 2. La aprobación, modificación o derogación de las leyes orgánicas exigirá mayoría absoluta del	1. Organic acts are those relating to the implementation of fundamental rights and public liberties, those approving the Statutes of Autonomy and the general electoral system and other laws provided for in the Constitution. 2. The approval, amendment or repeal of organic acts shall require the overall majority of

	Congreso, en una votación final sobre el conjunto del proyecto.	the Members of Congress in a final vote on the bill as a whole.
Article 20.7, Spanish Criminal Code	El que obre en cumplimiento de un deber o en el ejercicio legítimo de un derecho, oficio o cargo. En los supuestos de los tres primeros números se aplicarán, en su caso, las medidas de seguridad previstas en este Código.	Any person who acts in carrying out of a duty or in the lawful exercise of a right, authority or office. In the cases of the first three Sections, the security measures foreseen in this Code shall be applied
Article 45, Spanish Criminal Code	La inhabilitación especial para profesión, oficio, industria o comercio o cualquier otro derecho, que ha de concretarse expresa y motivadamente en la sentencia, priva al penado de la facultad de ejercerlos durante el tiempo de la condena.	Special barring from a profession, trade, industry or commerce, or any other right, that must be duly reasoned and specified in the sentence, deprives the convict of the right to exercise these during the term of the sentence.
Article 197, Spanish Criminal Code	1. El que, para descubrir los secretos o vulnerar la intimidad de otro, sin su consentimiento, se apodere de sus papeles, cartas, mensajes de correo electrónico o cualesquiera otros documentos o efectos personales, intercepte sus telecomunicaciones o utilice artificios técnicos de escucha, transmisión, grabación o reproducción del sonido o de la imagen, o de cualquier otra señal de comunicación, será castigado con las penas de prisión de uno a cuatro años y multa de doce a	1. Whoever, in order to discover the secrets or to breach the privacy of another, without his consent, seizes his papers, letters, electronic mail messages or any other documents or personal belongings, or intercepts his telecommunications or uses technical devices for listening, transmitting, recording or to play sound or image, or any other communication signal, shall be punished with imprisonment of one to four years and a fine of

	veinticuatro meses. 2. Las mismas penas se impondrán al que, sin estar autorizado, se apodere, utilice o modifique, en perjuicio de tercero, datos reservados de carácter personal o familiar de otro que se hallen registrados en ficheros o soportes informáticos, electrónicos o telemáticos, o en cualquier otro tipo de archivo o registro público o privado. Iguales penas se impondrán a quien, sin estar autorizado, acceda por cualquier medio a los mismos y a quien los altere o utilice en perjuicio del titular de los datos o de un tercero. 3. Se impondrá la pena de prisión de dos a cinco años si se difunden, revelan o ceden a terceros los datos o hechos descubiertos o las imágenes captadas a que se refieren los números anteriores. Será castigado con las penas de prisión de uno a tres años y multa de doce a veinticuatro meses, el que, con conocimiento de su origen ilícito y sin haber tomado parte en su descubrimiento, realizare la conducta descrita en el párrafo anterior. 4. Los hechos descritos en los apartados 1 y 2 de este artículo serán castigados con una pena de prisión de tres a cinco años cuando: a) Se cometan por las personas	twelve to twenty-four months. 2. The same penalties shall be imposed upon whoever, without being authorized, seizes, uses or amends, to the detriment of a third party, reserved data of a personal or family nature of another that are recorded in computer, electronic or telematics files or media, or in any other kind of file or public or private record. The same penalties shall be imposed on whoever, without being authorized, accesses these by any means, and whoever alters or uses them to the detriment of the data subject or a third party. 3. A sentence of imprisonment shall be imposed from two to five years if the data or facts discovered, or the images captured to which the preceding numbers refer, are broadcast, disclosed or ceded to third parties. Whoever, being aware of their unlawful origin and without having taken part in their discovery, perpetrates the conduct described in the preceding Section shall be punished with imprisonment from one to three years and a fine of twelve to twenty four months.
--	---	--

	encargadas o responsables de los ficheros, soportes informáticos, electrónicos o telemáticos, archivos o registros; o b) se lleven a cabo mediante la utilización no autorizada de datos personales de la víctima. Si los datos reservados se hubieran difundido, cedido o revelado a terceros, se impondrán las penas en su mitad superior. 5. Igualmente, cuando los hechos descritos en los apartados anteriores afecten a datos de carácter personal que revelen la ideología, religión, creencias, salud, origen racial o vida sexual, o la víctima fuere un menor de edad o una persona con discapacidad necesitada de especial protección, se impondrán las penas previstas en su mitad superior. 6. Si los hechos se realizan con fines lucrativos, se impondrán las penas respectivamente previstas en los apartados 1 al 4 de este artículo en su mitad superior. Si además afectan a datos de los mencionados en el apartado anterior, la pena a imponer será la de prisión de cuatro a siete años. 7. Será castigado con una pena de prisión de tres meses a un año o multa de seis a doce meses el que, sin autorización de la persona afectada, difunda, revele o ceda a terceros imágenes o grabaciones audiovisuales de aquella que	4. Should the acts described in Sections 1 and 2 of this Article be perpetrated by persons in charge of or responsible for the files, computer, electronic or telematics media, archives or records, a sentence of imprisonment of three to five years shall be imposed on them, and if they disclose, communicate or reveal reserved data, the upper half shall be imposed. 5. Likewise, when the acts described in the preceding Sections concern personal data that reveal the ideology, religion, belief, health, racial origin or sexual preference, or when the victim is a minor or incapacitated, the penalties imposed shall be those foreseen in the upper half. 6. If the acts are perpetrated for profit-making purposes, the penalties shall be imposed as foreseen in Sections 1 to 4 respectively of this Article in the upper half. If they also affect the data mentioned in the preceding Section, the punishment to be imposed shall be that of imprisonment from four to seven years.
--	---	--

	hubiera obtenido con su anuencia en un domicilio o en cualquier otro lugar fuera del alcance de la mirada de terceros, cuando la divulgación menoscabe gravemente la intimidad personal de esa persona. La pena se impondrá en su mitad superior cuando los hechos hubieran sido cometidos por el cónyuge o por persona que esté o haya estado unida a él por análoga relación de afectividad, aun sin convivencia, la víctima fuera menor de edad o una persona con discapacidad necesitada de especial protección, o los hechos se hubieran cometido con una finalidad lucrativa.	7. Should the acts described in the preceding Sections be committed within a criminal organization or group, the higher degree penalties shall be applied respectively. Whoever, without the permission of the victim, would spread, reveal or cede to third parties images or audio-visual recordings obtained with his/her consent in a residence or any other place beyond reach of third parties, producing by this action a serious damage in the intimacy of this person, shall be punished with imprisonment from three months to one years and a fine of six to twelve months. The penalty shall be imposed in the upper half when the facts would be committed by the spouse or a person in an analogue affective bond, even if they don't live together, or if the victim is under the age of 18 or is a handicapped person needing a special protection, or if the acts are perpetrated for profit-making purposes.
--	---	---

Article 198, the Spanish Criminal Code	La autoridad o funcionario público que, fuera de los casos permitidos por la Ley, sin mediar causa legal por delito, y prevaliéndose de su cargo, realizare cualquiera de las conductas descritas en el artículo anterior, será castigado con las penas respectivamente previstas en el mismo, en su mitad superior y, además, con la de inhabilitación absoluta por tiempo de seis a doce años.	The authority or public officer who, outside the cases permitted by Law, without there being a legal cause due to an offence having being committed, and availing himself of his office, acts in any of the manners described in the preceding Article, shall be punished with the penalties respectively foreseen therein, in the upper half and also with that of absolute barring for a term from six to twelve years.
Article 199, Spanish Criminal code	1. El que revelare secretos ajenos, de los que tenga conocimiento por razón de su oficio o sus relaciones laborales, será castigado con la pena de prisión de uno a tres años y multa de seis a doce meses. 2. El profesional que, con incumplimiento de su obligación de sigilo o reserva, divulgue los secretos de otra persona, será castigado con la pena de prisión de uno a cuatro años, multa de doce a veinticuatro meses e inhabilitación especial para dicha profesión por tiempo de dos a seis años.	1. Whoever discloses secrets of others that he obtains knowledge whereof through his trade or labour relations, shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment from one to three years and a fine from six to twelve months. 2. Professionals who, in breach of their obligation of secrecy or reserve, reveal secrets of another person, shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment of one to four years, a fine of twelve to twenty- four months and special barring from that profession for a term from two to six years.
Article 200, Spanish	Lo dispuesto en este capítulo será	The terms set forth this Chapter

Criminal code	aplicable al que descubriere, revelare o cedere datos reservados de personas jurídicas, sin el consentimiento de sus representantes, salvo lo dispuesto en otros preceptos de este Código	shall be applicable to whoever, discloses, reveals or communicates reserved data of legal persons without the consent of their representatives, except for what is set forth in other provisions of this Code.
Article 201, the Spanish Criminal Code	1. Para proceder por los delitos previstos en este Capítulo será necesaria denuncia de la persona agraviada o de su representante legal. Cuando aquélla sea menor de edad, persona con discapacidad necesitada de especial protección o una persona desvalida, también podrá denunciar el Ministerio Fiscal. 2. No será precisa la denuncia exigida en el apartado anterior para proceder por los hechos descritos en el artículo 198 de este Código, ni cuando la comisión del delito afecte a los intereses generales o a una pluralidad de personas. 3. El perdón del ofendido o de su representante legal, en su caso, extingue la acción penal sin perjuicio de lo dispuesto en el segundo párrafo del número 5º del apartado 1 del artículo 130.	1. Prosecution of offences foreseen in this Chapter requires a report by the victim or his legal representative. When the former is a minor, incapacitated or handicapped person, it may also be reported by the Public Prosecutor. 2. The report required in the preceding Section shall not be necessary to prosecute the acts described in Article 198 of this Code nor when the offence committed affect to general interests or persons at large. 3. Forgiveness by the victim or his legal representative, as appropriate, extinguishes the penal action without prejudice to what is set forth in Paragraph Two of Sub-Section 5 of Section 1 of Article 130.

Article 450, Spanish Criminal Code	El que, pudiendo hacerlo con su intervención inmediata y sin riesgo propio o ajeno, no impidiere la comisión de un delito que afecte a las personas en su vida, integridad o salud, libertad o libertad sexual, será castigado con la pena de prisión de seis meses a dos años si el delito fuera contra la vida, y la de multa de seis a veinticuatro meses en los demás casos, salvo que al delito no impedido le correspondiera igual o menor pena, en cuyo caso se impondrá la pena inferior en grado a la de aquél	Whoever is able, by his immediate intervention and without risk to himself or another, and does not prevent a felony being committed that affects the life, integrity or health, freedom or sexual freedom of persons, shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment of six months to two years and if the offence is against life, and that of a fine from six to twenty- four months in the other cases, except if the offence not prevented is subject to an equal or lower punishment, in which case a lower degree punishment than that for the actual felony shall be imposed.
Article 536, Spanish Criminal Code	La autoridad, funcionario público o agente de éstos que, mediando causa por delito, interceptare las telecomunicaciones o utilizare artificios técnicos de escuchas, transmisión, grabación o reproducción del sonido, de la imagen o de cualquier otra señal de comunicación, con violación de las garantías constitucionales o legales, incurrirá en la pena de inhabilitación especial para empleo o cargo público de dos a seis años. Si divulgare o revelare la información obtenida, se impondrán las penas de inhabilitación especial, en su mitad superior y, además, la de	Such an authority, civil servant or agent thereof who, tin the course of criminal proceedings, intercepts telecommunications or uses technical tapping devices to listen, transmit, record or play sound, image or any other communication signal, in breach of the constitutional or legal guarantees, shall incur the punishment of special barring from public employment and office for two to six years. Should he disclose or reveal the information obtained, the penalties of special barring, in the upper half and also a fine from six to eighteen months

	multa de seis a dieciocho meses.	shall be imposed.
Article 410, Spanish Code of Criminal Procedure	Todos los que residan en territorio español, nacionales o extranjeros, que no estén impedidos, tendrán obligación de concurrir al llamamiento judicial para declarar cuanto supieren sobre lo que les fuere preguntado si para ello se les cita con las formalidades prescritas en la Ley.	Every person resident in Spanish territory, either national or foreigner, who is not disabled, shall have the obligation to attend the judicial call to declare all his/her knowledge on what would be asked if on that purpose are called under formalities stipulated by the Law. [Unofficial translation]
Article 520.1, Spanish Code of Criminal Procedure	La detención y la prisión provisional deberán practicarse en la forma que menos perjudique al detenido o preso en su persona, reputación y patrimonio	Pre-trial detention and imprisonment shall be carried out in the manner least harmful to the person, reputation and property of the detainee or prisoner.
Article 579, Spanish Code of Criminal Procedure	1. El resultado de la detención y apertura de la correspondencia escrita y telegráfica podrá ser utilizado como medio de investigación o prueba en otro proceso penal. 2. A tal efecto, se procederá a la deducción de testimonio de los particulares necesarios para acreditar la legitimidad de la injerencia. Se incluirán entre los antecedentes indispensables, en	1. The result of arrest and the openness of written and telegraphic corresponding might be used as investigation method or evidence in any other criminal process. 2. To that purpose, the testimony of the persons need to substantiate the interference's legitimacy shall be processed. Initial request for the adoption, judicial resolution which adopts

	todo caso, la solicitud inicial para la adopción, la resolución judicial que la acuerda y todas las peticiones y resoluciones judiciales de prórroga recaídas en el procedimiento de origen. 3. La continuación de esta medida para la investigación del delito casualmente descubierto requiere autorización del juez competente, para la cual, éste comprobará la diligencia de la actuación, evaluando el marco en el que se produjo el hallazgo casual y la imposibilidad de haber solicitado la medida que lo incluyera en su momento. Asimismo se informará si las diligencias continúan declaradas secretas, a los efectos de que tal declaración sea respetada en el otro proceso penal, comunicando el momento en el que dicho secreto se alce.	it, as well as all the other petitions and judicial resolutions of extension on the original procedure, shall be included among essential background. 3. The continuation of the measure for the criminal investigation of any crime incidentally discovered requires authorization issued by the competent Court, and to that purpose, the Judge shall verify the diligence on the performance, evaluating the framework of the incidental find and the unlikeness of having requested that inclusive measure on any other moment. Likewise, information shall be provided if diligences continue under secrecy, for the purpose of the respect of the declaration before the other criminal procedure, giving notice of the secrecy withdrawal. [Unofficial translation]
Article 33 Law 14/1966 18th March, of Press and Print Law	Un Estatuto de la profesión periodística, aprobado por Decreto, regulará los requisitos para el ejercicio de tal actividad, determinando los principios generales a que debe subordinarse y, entre ellos, el de profesionalidad, previa inscripción en el Registro Oficial,	A statute of the journalistic profession, approved by Decree, will regulate the requirements for the exercise of such activity. It will determine the subordination to the General principles as it is being part of the profession, with fixed rights and duties for journalists and

	con fijación de los derechos y deberes del periodista y especialmente del Director de todo medio informativo; el de colegiación, integrada en la Organización Sindical, que participará en la formulación, redacción y aplicación del mencionado Estatuto, y el de atribución a un Jurado de ética profesional de la vigilancia de sus principios morales.	specially Directors of the news media; also unionisation, in a Union that will participate in the formulation, drafting and implementation of the above mentioned Statute; and creation to a panel of professional ethics in charge of surveying their moral principles.
Article 1 of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession	A todos los efectos legales es periodista quien esté inscrito en el Registro Oficial de Periodistas. Sólo serán inscritos quienes estén en posesión del título de periodista que únicamente se obtendrá una vez aprobados los estudios en alguna de las Escuelas de Periodismo legalmente reconocidas y tras de superar la prueba de Grado en la Escuela Oficial de Periodismo o las establecidas para las restantes como requisito para su obtención.	For all legal purposes, a journalist is someone who is registered in the Official Register of Journalists (Registro oficial de periodistas). The journalists in possession of a Degree in Journalism will be only registered in the Official Register of Journalists. The degree will only be obtained once approved the studies in any of the legally recognized schools of journalism and after passing an exam at the official school of journalism or those established for the remaining as a requirement for its achievement.
Article 1 of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession	Se considerará periodista en activo, con derecho a la obtención del carnet que lo acredite como tal, a quien, cumplidos los requisitos del artículo primero y, en general, los exigidos en la legislación de	A journalist has the right to obtain the press card that identifies him/her as such, if he/she meets the requirements of Article 1 and, in general, all the requirements of the Press and Print legislation, and this for

	Prensa e Imprenta, realice profesionalmente en forma escrita, oral o gráfica, tareas de información periodística, ya sea impresa, radiada, televisada o cinematográfica, tanto en los medio de difusión como en Organismo o Entidades de carácter público.	the doing the tasks of journalistic information (written, oral, or graphic), whether printed, radiated, televised or filmed, in both broadcast media as a body or public entities
Article 16 section 1 of the Statute of the Journalistic Profession	Todos los Periodistas en activo, cualquiera que sea la forma en que ejerzan su actividad profesional, serán miembros de la Federación Nacional de las Asociaciones de la Prensa de España, a través de la Asociación de la Prensa que les corresponda. En caso de duda, la Federación resolverá a través de qué Asociación determinada se realizará dicha integración.	All active journalists has the obligation to become members of the Spanish Federation of Journalist Associations, through the Press Association they belong to. In case of doubt, the Federation will solve through that particular association will be such integration.
Section 5 of Statute of the Journalistic Profession' Annex	El Periodista tiene el deber de mantener el secreto profesional, salvo en los casos de obligada cooperación con la justicia, al servicio del bien común.	The journalist has a duty to keep professional secrecy, except in cases of forced cooperation with justice, at the service of the common good.
Article 1 of the FAPE's code of ethics	El Periodista actuará siempre manteniendo los principios de profesionalidad y ética contenidos en el presente Código Deontológico, cuya aceptación expresa será condición necesaria para su incorporación al Registro Profesional de Periodistas y a las Asociaciones de	The journalist shall act always maintaining the principles of professionalism and ethics contained in the present Code of ethics, whose acceptance will be a necessary condition for its incorporation to the professional registration of journalists and the associations of the Federated

	la Prensa federadas. Quienes con posterioridad a su incorporación al Registro y a la correspondiente Asociación actúen de manera no compatible con estos principios, incurrirán en los supuestos que se contemplan en la correspondiente reglamentación.	Press. Who after joining the register and the corresponding Association to act in a manner not consistent with these principles, will incur in the cases contemplated in the corresponding regulation.
Article 10 of the FAPE's code of ethics	El secreto profesional es un derecho del periodista, a la vez que un deber que garantiza la confidencialidad de las fuentes de información. Por tanto, el periodista garantizará el derecho de sus fuentes informativas a permanecer en el anonimato, si así ha sido solicitado. No obstante, tal deber profesional podrá ceder excepcionalmente en el supuesto de que conste fehacientemente que la fuente ha falseado de manera consciente la información o cuando el revelar la fuente sea el único medio para evitar un daño grave e inminente a las personas.	Professional secrecy is the right of the journalist, as well as a duty that guarantees the confidentiality of the sources of information. Therefore the journalist will guarantee the right of their sources of information remains anonymous, if it has been applied. However, such professional duty may assign exceptionally assuming that truthfully stating that the source has deliberately distorted information or when revealing the source is the only way to avoid a serious and imminent harm to the people.
Draft law on the right to access information and the duties and rights of the information workers): art 15	Los periodistas y responsables editoriales que falten al secreto profesional serán castigados como autores del delito previsto en el artículo 199. 2 del Código Penal. El periodista estará obligado a revelar la identidad de la fuente cuando de este modo se pueda evitar la comisión cierta de un	The journalists and editorial responsible that do not fulfil the professional secret will be punished as perpetrators of the crime included at article 199.2 of the Penal Code. The journalist has to disclosure the source identity when it can

	delito contra la vida, la integridad, la salud, la libertad o la libertad sexual de las personas. Quien en estos supuestos no revele la fuente reservada será castigado con las penas previstas en el artículo 450 del Código Penal	be avoided the commission of a crime against life, integrity, health, freedom or sexual freedom of people. In this case, not disclosing the source will be punished by article 450 of the Criminal Code.
Article 1 of the Organic Law 2/1984, Right of Rectification, March 26 1984	Toda persona natural o jurídica, tiene derecho a rectificar la información difundida, por cualquier medio de comunicación social, de hechos que le aludan, que considere inexactos y cuya divulgación pueda causarle perjuicio. Podrán ejercitar el derecho de rectificación el perjudicado aludido o su representante y, si hubiese fallecido aquél, sus herederos o los representantes de éstos.	The right of rectification is mainly for those who suffer from the exercise of information freedom. This right is for both natural and legal entities who consider that the information provided is inaccurate and its divulgation can cause a detriment. The right can be exercised by the aggrieved person, representatives and in the case of deceased, representatives of them.
Article 2.2, Organic Law 2/1984, Right of Rectification, March 26 1984	La rectificación deberá limitarse a los hechos de la información que se desea rectificar.	The rectification should be limited to the facts of the information that would be rectified.
Article 7 of the Organic Law 1/1982, May 5, Right of Civil Protection, personal and family privacy and image.	Tendrán la consideración de intromisiones ilegítimas en el ámbito de protección delimitado por el artículo 2 de esta ley: 1. El emplazamiento en cualquier lugar de aparatos de escucha, de	They are considered illegitimate intromissions in the protection of the second article of this law: 1. The location in any place of listening, filming or optical devices or other media to record

	filmación, de dispositivos ópticos o de cualquier otro medio apto para grabar o reproducir la vida íntima de las personas. 2. La utilización de aparatos de escucha, dispositivos ópticos, o de cualquier otro medio para el conocimiento de la vida íntima de las personas o de manifestaciones o cartas privadas no destinadas a quien haga uso de tales medios, así como su grabación, registro o reproducción. 3. La divulgación de hechos relativos a la vida privada de una persona o familia que afecten a su reputación y buen nombre, así como la revelación o publicación del contenido de cartas, memorias u otros escritos personales de carácter íntimo. 4. La revelación de datos privados de una persona o familia conocidos a través de la actividad profesional u oficial de quien los revela. 5. La captación, reproducción o publicación por fotografía, filme o cualquier otro procedimiento, de la imagen de una persona en lugares o momentos de su vida privada o fuera de ellos, salvo los casos previstos en el artículo 8.2. 6. La utilización del nombre, de la voz o de la imagen de una persona para fines publicitarios, comerciales o de naturaleza	or reproduce the private life of people. 2. The use of listening or optical devices, or any other media in order to discover the private life of people, their opinions or their private correspondence, which are neither to be known by the people using these media, nor to be recorded, registered or reproduced in any way. 3. The divulgation of facts of the private life of a person or family which may affect the reputation and good name as a consequence of the revelation or publication of the content of letters, memories or any other personal private writings. 4: The revelation of private information of a person or family, obtained in the course of the fulfilling of professional or official activities. 5. The caption, reproduction or publication of the image of a person (photographs, films or any other media) in places or moments of the life, private or not, except as described of in Article 8.2. 6. The use of the name, voice or image of a person for advertising or commercial purposes, or of similar nature.
--	--	--

	análoga. 7. La imputación de hechos o la manifestación de juicios de valor a través de acciones o expresiones que de cualquier modo lesionen la dignidad de otra persona, menoscabando su fama o atentando contra su propia estimación.	7. The divulcation of expressions or facts about a person, who by these means could be defamed and become undeserving for other people.
Article 8 of the Organic Law 1/1982, de 5 de mayo, Right of Civil Protection, personal and family privacy and image.	Las excepciones contempladas en los párrafos a) y b) no serán de aplicación respecto de las autoridades o personas que desempeñen funciones que por su naturaleza necesiten el anonimato de la persona que las ejerza.	The right to the own image will not prevent the exceptions of the paragraphs a) and b) and it will not be applicable when the functions of the authorities or people will need anonymity’.
Article 30.3 Organic Law on the protection on citizen’s security	Se considerarán organizadores o promotores de las reuniones en lugares de tránsito público o manifestaciones las personas físicas o jurídicas que hayan suscrito la preceptiva comunicación	It will be considered as organizer or promoter of the meetings in public places or protests, the natural persons or legal entities that have subscribed the required communication.
	Ley Orgánica 2/2002, de 6 de mayo, reguladora del control judicial previo del Centro Nacional de Inteligencia	Organic Law 2/2002, May 6 2002, 2002 on the Prior Judicial Control applicable to the National Intelligence Centre

Article 63, Royal Decree 424/2005 15th April 2005, approving the Regulation on the conditions for electronic communications services, the universal service and users protection.	La protección de los datos personales vinculados a las redes y servicios de comunicaciones electrónicas se regirá por lo dispuesto en el artículo 38 de la Ley 32/2003, de 3 de noviembre, por este título V y, en lo no previsto por aquellas normas, por lo dispuesto en legislación vigente sobre protección de los datos de carácter personal.	Personal data protection linked to networks and electronic communications services, shall be ruled by Article 38 Law 32/2003 3rd November, by the present Title V and, if not otherwise specifically provided, by the legislation in force on personal data protection.
Article 65(1), Royal Decree 424/2005 15th April 2005, approving the Regulation on the conditions for electronic communications services, the universal service and users protection	1. Los operadores deberán eliminar o hacer anónimos los datos de carácter personal sobre el tráfico referidos a una comunicación y relacionados con los usuarios y los abonados que hayan sido tratados y almacenados para establecer una comunicación, en cuanto ya no sean necesarios a los efectos de su transmisión, sin perjuicio de lo dispuesto en los apartados siguientes.	1. Operators shall eliminate or make anonymous the personal character information on the traffic referred to a communication and related to the users and subscribers which had been treated and stored in order to establish a communication, as it is no longer necessary for transmission purposes, except as provided below.
Article 101(2), Royal Decree 1720/2007 21st December, on behalf of which is approved the development regulation of the Organic Act 15/1999 13th December, on Personal Data Protection	2. La distribución de los soportes que contengan datos de carácter personal se realizará cifrando dichos datos o bien utilizando otro mecanismo que garantice que dicha información no sea accesible o manipulada durante su transporte. Asimismo, se cifrarán los datos que contengan los dispositivos portátiles cuando éstos se	2. Distribution of media containing personal data shall be carried out with the encryption of such data, or using any other mechanism which guarantees the non-accessibility of that information, or that it is not manipulated in the course of the transport. Likely, data contained in electronic devices will be encrypted when those are found out of the facilities under the

	encuentren fuera de las instalaciones que están bajo el control del responsable del fichero.	control of the data controller.
Article 5, Royal Legislative Decree 1/1995 March 24 1995, on behalf of which is approved the Statute of Workers Rights	Los trabajadores tienen como deberes básicos: a) Cumplir con las obligaciones concretas de su puesto de trabajo, de conformidad con las reglas de la buena fe y diligencia. b) Observar las medidas de prevención de riesgos laborales que se adopten. c) Cumplir las órdenes e instrucciones del empresario en el ejercicio regular de sus facultades directivas. d) No concurrir con la actividad de la empresa, en los términos fijados en esta ley. e) Contribuir a la mejora de la productividad. f) Cuantos se deriven, en su caso, de los respectivos contratos de trabajo.	Basic responsibilities of all workers are: a) Comply with his/her concrete obligations in relation to his/her work position, in conformity with good faith and diligence rules. b) Observe adopted measures for the prevention of occupational risks. c) Comply with orders and instructions from the employer on the normal exercise of his/her directive faculties. d) Not to compete against the company's activity, in the terms established on this Act. e) Contribute to the improvement of productivity. f) Any other derived from employment contracts.

Article 85(1), Royal Legislative Decree 1/1995 March 24 1995, on behalf of which is approved the Statute of Workers Rights	1. Dentro del respeto a las leyes, los convenios colectivos podrán regular materias de índole económica, laboral, sindical y, en general, cuantas otras afecten a las condiciones de empleo y al ámbito de relaciones de los trabajadores y sus organizaciones representativas con el empresario y las asociaciones empresariales, incluidos procedimientos para resolver las discrepancias surgidas en los periodos de consulta previstos en los artículos 40, 41, 47 y 51; los laudos arbitrales que a estos efectos puedan dictarse tendrán la misma eficacia y tramitación que los acuerdos en el periodo de consultas, siendo susceptibles de impugnación en los mismos términos que los laudos dictados para la solución de las controversias derivadas de la aplicación de los convenios. Sin perjuicio de la libertad de las partes para determinar el contenido de los convenios colectivos, en la negociación de los mismos existirá, en todo caso, el deber de negociar medidas dirigidas a promover la igualdad de trato y de oportunidades entre mujeres y hombres en el ámbito laboral o, en su caso, planes de igualdad con el alcance y contenido previsto en el capítulo III del título IV de la Ley Orgánica 3/2007, de 22 de marzo, para la igualdad efectiva de mujeres y hombres.	1. Within the respect for Law, collective bargaining agreements may regulate matters of an economic, labour and associative nature and, in general any other matters as may affect working conditions and the field of workers' and their representative organizations' relations with the employer and employers' associations, including procedures for resolving the discrepancies arising during the consultation periods provided for in Articles 40, 41, 47 and 51 of this Law. The arbitration awards that may be dictated for these purposes shall have the same effect and treatment as the resolutions emerging from consultation periods, being subject to challenge in the same terms as the awards dictated to resolve controversies deriving from the application of the agreements. Without restriction to the freedom of the parties to determine the content of collective bargaining agreements, in negotiating these, the duty shall exist, in any case, to negotiate measures aimed at promoting equality in treatment and opportunities between men and women at work or, as applicable, equality plans having the scope and content projected in Chapter III of Heading IV of the Organic Law for the Effective Equality between Men and Women.
--	--	--

Article 9 Complaints and Deontological Commission	1. Cualquier persona natural o jurídica afectada por una actividad periodística que, en su opinión, no cumpla las normas del Código Deontológico, podrá solicitar la apertura de expediente ante la Comisión de Arbitraje, Quejas y Deontología del Periodismo. 2. El plazo para la formulación de la queja será de dos meses. Excepcionalmente la Comisión Arbitral podrá admitir a trámite las quejas que, aun siendo formuladas por quien no esté directamente afectado, trate de supuestos de alarma o escándalo social. En la resolución habrán de razonarse los motivos que fundamenten la admisión.	1. Every natural person or legal entity affected by a journalist information that, in his/her opinion doesn't respect the rules of the Deontological Code, can submit a complaint before the Foundation of Arbitration, Complaints and Deontology of the Journalism. 2. The person directly affected has two months to submit the complaint. Exceptionally, complaints filed by third parties, even if they're not directly affected, will be admitted in cases of social alarm or scandal. The resolution will explain the reasons for the admittance.
Article 10, Deontological Code approved by the Ordinary Assembly of the Federation of Associations of the Press of Spain	El secreto profesional es un derecho del periodista, a la vez que un deber que garantiza la confidencialidad de las fuentes de información. Por tanto, el periodista garantizará el derecho de sus fuentes informativas a permanecer en el anonimato, si así ha sido solicitado. No obstante, tal deber profesional podrá ceder excepcionalmente en el supuesto de que conste fehacientemente que la fuente ha falseado de	The right to keep professional secrecy is a right of a journalist, but it is also an obligation which guarantees the confidentiality of the sources of information. Therefore, a journalist shall guarantee the right of the sources of information to remain anonymous, if such has been requested. However, this professional obligation shall exceptionally not be applied if it has been proved that the source has deliberately falsified

	manera consciente la información o cuando el revelar la fuente sea el único medio para evitar un daño grave e inminente a las personas	information or if revealing the source is the only way to avoid serious and instant damage to people.
Article 39, Organic Act 9/2014 9th May 2014, on Telecommunications		Due to the lengthy of Article 39, we have considered not to translate the whole text. It rules extensively secrecy on communications.
Article 43, Organic Act 9/2014 May 9 2014, on Telecommunications	1. Cualquier tipo de información que se transmita por redes de comunicaciones electrónicas podrá ser protegida mediante procedimientos de cifrado. 2. El cifrado es un instrumento de seguridad de la información. Entre sus condiciones de uso, cuando se utilice para proteger la confidencialidad de la información, se podrá imponer la obligación de facilitar a un órgano de la Administración General del Estado o a un organismo público, los algoritmos o cualquier procedimiento de cifrado utilizado, así como la obligación de facilitar sin coste alguno los aparatos de cifra a efectos de su control de acuerdo con la normativa vigente.	1. Any type of information transmitted by electronic communication networks might be protected through encryption methods. 2. Encryption is an information security method. Among its use conditions, when it is used to protect information's confidentiality, might be imposed the obligation to provide to the General State Administration or any other public organism, the algorithms or any other encryption procedure used, as well as the obligation to provide at any cost the encryption devices for control purposes in accordance to current regulations.

	Decreto 744/1967, de 13 de abril, por el que se aprueba el texto refundido del Estatuto de la Profesión Periodística	Decree 744/1967 April 13 1967, on behalf of which is approved the Statute of the Journalist Profession
European Regulation
Article 8.1 and 2, European Convention of Human Rights	1. Toda persona tiene derecho al respeto de su vida privada y familiar, de su domicilio y de su correspondencia. 2. No podrá haber injerencia de la autoridad pública en el ejercicio de este derecho sino en tanto en cuanto esta injerencia esté prevista por la ley y constituya una medida que, en una sociedad democrática, sea necesaria para la seguridad nacional, la seguridad pública, el bienestar económico del país, la defensa del orden y la prevención de las infracciones penales, la protección de la salud o de la moral, o la protección de los derechos y las libertades de los demás.	1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence. 2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic wellbeing of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others
Article 8.2, European Convention of Human	2. No podrá haber injerencia de la autoridad pública en el ejercicio de este derecho sino en tanto en	2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such

Rights	cuanto esta injerencia esté prevista por la ley y constituya una medida que, en una sociedad democrática, sea necesaria para la seguridad nacional, la seguridad pública, el bienestar económico del país, la defensa del orden y la prevención de las infracciones penales, la protección de la salud o de la moral, o la protección de los derechos y las libertades de los demás.	as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic wellbeing of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.
Art 10, European Convention of Human Rights	1. Toda persona tiene derecho a la libertad de expresión. Este derecho comprende la libertad de opinión y la libertad de recibir o de comunicar informaciones o ideas sin que pueda haber injerencia de autoridades públicas y sin consideración de fronteras. El presente artículo no impide que los Estados sometan a las empresas de radiodifusión, de cinematografía o de televisión a un régimen de autorización previa. 2. El ejercicio de estas libertades, que entrañan deberes y responsabilidades, podrá ser sometido a ciertas formalidades, 12 13 condiciones, restricciones o sanciones, previstas por la ley, que constituyan medidas necesarias, en una sociedad democrática, para la seguridad nacional, la integridad territorial o la seguridad pública, la defensa del orden y la prevención del delito, la protección de la salud o de la	1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises. 2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of

	moral, la protección de la reputación o de los derechos ajenos, para impedir la divulgación de informaciones confidenciales o para garantizar la autoridad y la imparcialidad del poder judicial	information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary”.
Article 14 of the European Ethics of Journalism	En función de estas exigencias es necesario reforzar las garantías de libertad de expresión de los periodistas a quienes corresponde en última instancia ser los emisores finales de la información. En este sentido es necesario desarrollar jurídicamente y clarificar las figuras de la cláusula de conciencia y el secreto profesional de las fuentes confidenciales, armonizando las disposiciones nacionales sobre estas materias para ejercerlas en el marco más amplio del espacio democrático europeo.	These requirements are such that we must reinforce the safeguards of the journalist's freedom of expression, for they must in the last instance operate as the ultimate sources of information. In this connection we must legally expand and clarify the nature of the conscience clause and professional secrecy vis-à-vis confidential sources, harmonizing national provisions on this matter so that they can be implemented in the wider context of democratic Europe.
Article 18, Convention on Cybercrime	1. Cada Parte adoptará las medidas legislativas y de otro tipo que resulten necesarias para facultar a sus autoridades competentes a ordenar: a) A una persona que se encuentre en su territorio que comunique determinados datos informáticos que posea o que se encuentren bajo su control, almacenados en un sistema informático o en un medio de	1. Each Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to empower its competent authorities to order: a) a person in its territory to submit specified computer data in that person's possession or control, which is stored in a computer system or a computer-data storage medium; and b) a service provider offering its

	almacenamiento de datos informáticos; y b) a un proveedor de servicios que ofrezca prestaciones en el territorio de esa Parte que comunique los datos que posea o que se encuentren bajo su control relativos a los abonados en conexión con dichos servicios. 2. Los poderes y procedimientos mencionados en el presente artículo están sujetos a lo dispuesto en los artículos 14 y 14. 3. A los efectos del presente artículo, por «datos relativos a los abonados» se entenderá toda información, en forma de datos informáticos o de cualquier otra forma, que posea un proveedor de servicios y esté relacionada con los abonados a dichos servicios, excluidos los datos sobre el tráfico o sobre el contenido, y que permita determinar: a) El tipo de servicio de comunicaciones utilizado, las disposiciones técnicas adoptadas al respecto y el periodo de servicio; b) la identidad, la dirección postal o geográfica y el número de teléfono del abonado, así como cualquier otro número de acceso o información sobre facturación y pago que se encuentre disponible sobre la base de un contrato o de un acuerdo de prestación de servicios;	services in the territory of the Party to submit subscriber information relating to such services in that service provider's possession or control. 2. The powers and procedures referred to in this article shall be subject to Articles 14 and 15. 3. For the purpose of this article, the term “subscriber information” means any information contained in the form of computer data or any other form that is held by a service provider, relating to subscribers of its services other than traffic or content data and by which can be established: a) the type of communication service used, the technical provisions taken thereto and the period of service; b) the subscriber's identity, postal or geographic address, telephone and other access number, billing and payment information, available on the basis of the service agreement or arrangement; c) any other information on the site of the installation of communication equipment, available on the basis of the service agreement or arrangement.
--	---	---

	c) cualquier otra información relativa al lugar en que se encuentren los equipos de comunicaciones, disponible sobre la base de un contrato o de un acuerdo de servicios.
	Reglamento (CE) n° 428/2009 del Consejo de 5 de mayo de 2009, por el que se establece un régimen comunitario de control de las exportaciones, la transferencia, el corretaje y el tránsito de productos de doble uso	Council Regulation (EC) No 428/2009 of May 5 setting up a Community regime for the control of exports, transfers, brokering and transit of dual-use items
	Directiva 2002/19/CE del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo de 7 de marzo de 2002, relativa al acceso a las redes de comunicaciones electrónicas y recursos asociados, y a su interconexión (Directiva acceso)	Directive 2002/19/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of March 7 2002, on Access to, and interconnection of, electronic communications networks and associated facilities (Access Directive)
	Directiva 2002/20/CE del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo de 7 de marzo de 2002, relativa a un autorización de redes y servicios de comunicaciones electrónicas (Directiva autorización)	Directive 2002/20/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of March 7 2002, on the authorization of electronic communications networks and services (Authorisation Directive)
	Directiva 2002/21/CE del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo, de 7 de marzo de 2002, relativa a un marco regulador común de las redes y los servicios de comunicaciones electrónicas	Directive 2002/21/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of March 7 2002 on a common regulatory framework for electronic communications networks and services

	(Directiva marco).	(Framework Directive)
	Directiva 2002/22/CE del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo de 7 de marzo de 2002, relativa al servicio universal y los derechos de los usuarios en relación con las redes y los servicios de comunicaciones electrónicas (Directiva servicio universal)	Directive 2002/22/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of March 7 2002, on universal service and users' rights relating to electronic communications networks and services (Universal Service Directive)
	Directiva 2002/58/CE del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo, de 12 de julio de 2002, relativa al tratamiento de los datos personales y a la protección de la intimidad en el sector de las comunicaciones electrónicas (Directiva sobre la privacidad y las comunicaciones electrónicas).	Directive 2002/58/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of July 12 2002, concerning the processing of personal data and the protection of privacy in the electronic communications sector (Directive on privacy and electronic communications).
	Reglamento (CE) 45/2001 del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo de 18 de diciembre de 2000, relativo a la protección de las personas físicas en lo que respecta al tratamiento de datos personales por las instituciones y los organismos comunitarios y a la libre circulación de estos datos.	Regulation (EC) No 45/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council of December 18 2000 on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data by the Community institutions and bodies and on the free movement of such data
	COM (2014) 38, de 3 de febrero del 2014. Informe de la Comisión al Consejo y al Parlamento Europeo. Informe sobre la lucha contra la corrupción en la UE.	COM (2014) 38 final, of February 3 2014. Report from the Commission to the Council and the European Parliament. EU Anti-Corruption Report

	Recomendación CM/Rec(2014) 7, de 30 de abril del 2014, sobre la protección de informantes	Recommendation CM/Rec(2014) 7, of April 30 2014, on the protection of whistle-blowers
	Recomendación nº R(2000) 7, sobre el derecho de los periodistas a no revelar sus fuentes de información	Recommendation No R (2000) 7 on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information
International Regulation
Article 12, the Universal Declaration of Human rights	Nadie será objeto de injerencias arbitrarias en su vida privada, su familia, su domicilio o su correspondencia, ni de ataques a su honra o a su reputación. Toda persona tiene derecho a la protección de la ley contra tales injerencias o ataques	No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.
Article 17, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights	1. Nadie será objeto de injerencias arbitrarias o ilegales en su vida privada, su familia, su domicilio o su correspondencia, ni de ataques ilegales a su honra y reputación. 2. Toda persona tiene derecho a la protección de la ley contra esas	1. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation.

	injerencias o esos ataques.	2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.
Principle IV of the UNESCO's Declaration	El papel social del periodista exige el que la profesión mantenga un alto nivel de integridad. Esto incluye el derecho del periodista a abstenerse de trabajar en contra de sus convicciones o de revelar sus fuentes de información, y también el derecho de participar en la toma de decisiones en los medios de comunicación en que esté empleado.	The social role of the journalist demands that the profession maintain high standards of integrity, including the journalist's right to refrain from working against his or her conviction or from disclosing sources of information as well as the right to participate in the decision-making of the medium in which he or she is employed.

ELSA SWEDEN

Contributors

National Coordinator

Emma Arenbo-Larsson

National Researchers

Åsa Stattin
Johanna Sjöholm
Anna Helmner
Nathalie Holvik
Petra Giessbeck

1. Introduction

During the Second World War freedom of expression and liberty of the press were subjected to a high political pressure in Sweden. This since the Swedish authorities felt the need to censure opinions, which were critical towards the Nazi-regime in Germany. As a consequence the Swedish minister of justice confiscated over 300 printed works without any prior trial. After the war had ended, the Freedom of the Press Act was reformed. The reformation contained stricter regulations on how the aforementioned freedoms could be restricted. However, after the terrorist attacks in New York, Madrid and London in the beginning of the 21th century, the strengthened protection of the freedom of expression and the liberty of the press has been diminished, and the possibility of using electronic surveillance and other means of coercion has been extended.

The protection of journalistic sources is regulated in a combination of provisions within these constitutional laws. The Freedom of Press Act regulates the liberty of the press and grants every Swedish citizen the right to publish written works, and to exchange ideas and information in any subject, without interference by the authorities. The Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression provides a corresponding protection for the freedom of expression. These rights only apply if such information is given with a purpose of publication and it must be granted to a legally authorised source. Such a source includes for example writers, publicists and editorial staff. As for the term journalist, there is no explicit definition of the word within the Swedish legal system.

Furthermore, in order for a journalistic source to be protected by these rights, the recipient of the information must have a publication license. A journalist is under obligation of professional secrecy regarding the information she or he presents for publishing. The obligation of professional secrecy for a journalist is connected to the right to anonymity of sources. The right to anonymity is twofold and concerns both a right to anonymity for sources, together with a sanctioned prohibition for journalists not to reveal their anonymous sources.

Anyone can provide a news desk with information and be guaranteed anonymity. If the source wants to remain anonymous, the journalist is under obligation of professional secrecy. This prohibition is strong and demands the journalist as well as the editor to carefully make sure no disclosure of personal data, pictures, names of places or anything else that can reveal to the public the identity of a source. The right to anonymity is far reaching and covers also an explicit freedom of liability of criminal acts. It is only the editor of a periodic print who can never be anonymous and so it is in these cases the editor's choice to publish a certain material or not, with the risk of criminal prosecution for violation of the right to freedom of speech. Only if explicit consent has been given by the source, to reveal the identity of the source, a journalistic code of ethics can be considered to apply. The right to anonymity is protected by law and any use of a code of ethics postulates the source has first agreed to have her or his identity revealed.

Due to the civil-law characteristics of the Swedish legal system, it is mainly the Supreme Court's judgments which have precedence although there is no doctrine of stare decisis. Therefore, the case-law analysed are mainly from the Supreme Court of Sweden. When it comes to case-law dealing with this issue, one should also keep in mind that Sweden did not incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into Swedish law until 1995. The importance of the possibility for journalistic sources to be anonymous has been considered in several cases. The protection of anonymity is therefore necessary for the Freedom of the Press to fulfil its function in a democratic society. The right to anonymity is a key element in the protection of journalistic sources. If anonymity is not protected the source might choose not to communicate significant facts in the light.

The use of secret means of coercion in preliminary investigations of crimes is regulated in the 27th chapter of Rättegångsbalken (the Swedish Code of Judicial Procedure). These means includes secret taping of electronic communication, camera surveillance, and wiretapping of closed areas. Only persons, whom are suspected for a crime of a more serious nature, can be subjected to these measures. These crimes include for example child pornography, trafficking, and rape. However, wiretapping in closed areas is forbidden in places which are permanently used or specifically meant for activities covered by the journalistic confidentiality provided for in the Freedom of Press Act and the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression.

In conclusion, the Swedish legislation regarding secret means of coercion are drafted in a way, which do not interfere with the journalistic confidentiality. The standards for using these measures are very high, and are not allowed unless the person being surveyed is suspected for a crime, which means that none of the laws can be used with the purpose of exposing a journalistic source. This does not exempt unintended exposure of information regarding the identity of a source, but such information cannot be used unless it is of relevance for an on-going investigation. Exceptions to the journalistic confidentiality in criminal cases is also regulated in the Freedom of Press Act (see question 1 for a more detailed description of such exemptions).

Every Swedish citizen has the right to spread ideas and information in any subject and in any forum without being censored or legally implicated by the authorities. However, this right can be restricted by regulations of confidentiality in other laws for example Offentlighet- och sekretesslagen (the Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act), which apply for public companies whereas private companies uses contracts as a means of assuring the discretion of their employees. Such clauses of secrecy cannot be too far-reaching according to Avtalslagen (the Contracts Act), and they cannot be contrary to general contractual customs. Furthermore, within the public sector, it is not allowed for the authorities to research on the identity of a “messenger”. This is provided that the information has been spread in accordance with the prerequisites prescribed for in the Freedom of Press Act and the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression. Thusly, whistle-blowers within in the public sector have a strong protection against sanctions.

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

1.1 National legislation

The Swedish legal system is built on democratic principles, and the initial paragraph in Swedish Instrument of government, Regeringsformen, states that all public power shall derive from the people.¹ The second chapter in the Instrument of Government, which regulates the fundamental rights and freedoms in Sweden, further establishes everyone's right to freedom of expression.² Additional protection of democratic principles such as the liberty of the press and the freedom of expression are provided for in two other constitutional laws, namely, the Freedom of the Press Act, Tryckfrihetsförordningen, and the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression, Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen.

The protection of journalistic sources is regulated in a combination of provisions within these constitutional laws. The Freedom of the Press Act, as mentioned, regulates the liberty of the press and grants every Swedish citizen the right to publish written works, and to exchange ideas and information in any subject, without interference by the authorities.³ The Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression provides a corresponding protection for the freedom of expression.⁴

However, in order for these rights to apply, the information in question must have been submitted to a legally authorised source, and the intention of the deliverer must have been to have the material published intention. Legally authorised sources include for example writers, publicists and editorial staff.⁵ Furthermore, in order for a journalistic source to be protected by these rights, the recipient of the information must have a publication license.⁶

As for the term journalist, there is no explicit definition of the word within the Swedish legal system. The legislation covering the subject is formulated in a way, which includes everyone working with tasks one usually associates with the profession.⁷ A more profound explanation of

¹ The Instrument of Government 1974:152 (Regeringsformen) ch 1 para 1.

² Ibid ch 2 para 1 pt 1.

³ The Freedom of the Press Act 1949:105 (Tryckfrihetsförordningen) ch 1 para 1.

⁴ The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression 1991:1469 (Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen) ch 1 para 1.

⁵ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 1 para 1 pt 3; ibid ch 1 para 2.

⁶ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 5, para 5.

⁷ ibid ch 3 para 3 states that besides journalists, the following persons and institutions are prohibited from disclosing the identity of a journalistic source: persons working with the making or publishing of a printed text, or the intended inclusion of a printed text. Moreover, persons otherwise working with companies providing periodic papers, or companies providing news to such intuitions, are also included.

the term will be provided for in question 3. Neither is there an explicit definition of what constitutes a journalistic source. However, anyone can become a source by exercising their right to provide information to companies working with the production or publication of news and other written or verbalised works⁸, i.e. this definition is very broad. Consequently, the definition is very broad and anyone who shares information to the press becomes a journalistic source.

In addition to the right of disseminate information to the press, sources are also protected by journalistic confidentiality. This means that journalists are prohibited from revealing the identity of their sources.⁹ However, there are five exceptions to this rule. The first exemption applies when a source has consented to the disclosure of his or her identity. In cases concerning breaches of the Freedom of the Press Act, journalistic sources can be exposed if they have consented to it, if the source is operating under a well-known pseudonym, or if the author's name has already been printed. Thirdly, the source of information must be revealed if it is a question of a gross political crime, as prescribed for in the Freedom of the Press Act chapter 7 part 3 point 1. The interference must, nevertheless, have been unavoidable. Confidentiality may also be set aside if a court decides that is necessary for the proceedings in cases where official documents have been wrongfully extradited, or in situations where professional secrecy has been breached. However, in order to override confidentiality in such cases, the source must be suspected of, or convicted for the crime of which he or she has provided information for. This also applies if the source has been involved in the making of the written work in question. Lastly, in an ordinary criminal procedure, the source of information may be disclosed if it is of "particular importance"¹⁰ with consideration to the public, or to the individual in that specific case.

The same right applies for information, which has been presented orally, and it can be found in the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression, ch. 2 para 3. The right contained in the mentioned paragraph is very similar to the one presented above, namely liberty of the press. Correspondingly, journalistic sources are protected from disclosure, but there are some exceptions provided for in the paragraph. These include for example voluntarily disclosure of one's identity, and disclosure a source's identity in cases where the informant is suspected of having committed a freedom of expression related crime. However, the latter requires a court order, and it must be justified on the basis that it is necessary for the continuance of the proceedings. Moreover, a court may issue an order of disclosure, with regards to the interest of individuals or the public, if it is of "particular importance" in a criminal proceeding. In cases

⁸ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 1 para 1, ch 3 para 3; The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression , ch 1 para 1, ch 2 para 3.

⁹ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 3 para 3.

¹⁰ The criterion of particular importance (synnerlig vikt) is a very strong requisite within the Swedish legal system.

Wiwecka Warnling-Nerep, Hedvig Bernitz, En orientering i Tryckfrihet och Yttrandefrihet (5 edn., Jure Förlag AB, 2013) p64 [Swedish].

regarding breaches of the press law in periodic works, the legal responsibility lies exclusively on the publisher,¹¹ whereas the source is in principle free from responsibility.¹²

1.2 National case law

The protection of journalistic sources within the Swedish legal system is far-reaching, and aside from legislation protecting the sources, case law also safeguards this right. Any deviation from this protection can only be made in accordance with the exceptions provided for in the aforementioned situations in the previous section. This has been affirmed in for example in case NJA 2012 s. 342. The case involved the publishing of a local new paper, and the Supreme Court stated that the principle of confidentiality cannot be revoked even if there is another interest that could be perceived to be of higher relevance in a particular case. Furthermore, the use of information that directly, or indirectly, can expose a source's identity is prohibited.¹³

1.3 Compliance with ECtHR case law

The European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) has emphasised the importance of the protection of journalistic sources in order to preserve the freedom of the press. The rationale behind this is that the exposure of sources can be detrimental to reputation of the newspapers and it may discourage future sources from revealing information which may be of public interest.¹⁴ Contracting states can only justify such disclosure by showing that there is an overriding requirement in the public interest¹⁵. The preamble and investigations made prior to the adoption of the Swedish legislation covering this topic, contains the same rationale as the within the Case law of the ECtHR. The importance of confidentiality within the press is stressed, since it is a prerequisite for the functioning of the freedom of the press in a democratic society.¹⁶ The Swedish legal system ought to therefore be on par with the standards of the European Convention of Human Rights and the case law of the ECtHR regarding the protection of journalistic sources.

¹¹ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 8 para 1.

¹² prop. 1975/76:204 s. 93, 97; prop. 1986/87:151 s. 115 - 116

¹³ B 2962-10 (NJA 2012 s. 342) § 9

¹⁴ Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 821/03, § 63, 15 December 2009.

¹⁵ Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Voskuil v. the Netherlands, no. 64752/01, § 65, 22 November 2007; Tillack v. Belgium, no. 20477/05, § 53, 27 November 2007; Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 821/03, § 59, 15 December 2009.

¹⁶ prop. 1975/76:204 s. 94–96, s. 110, 141; prop. 1986/87:151 s. 116 – 117; SOU 1990:12 s. 64

1.4 Compliance with international recommendations

The presented legislation within the Swedish legal system is in line with the relevant recommendations from the Council of Europe on the assessed topic.

2. Is there in domestic law a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

A journalist is under obligation of professional secrecy regarding the information she or he presents for publishing. The obligation of professional secrecy for a journalist is connected to the right to anonymity of sources. The right to anonymity is twofold and concerns both a right to anonymity for sources, together with a sanctioned prohibition for journalists not to reveal their anonymous sources.¹⁷

Anyone can provide a news desk with information and be guaranteed anonymity. If the source wants to remain anonymous, the journalist is under obligation of professional secrecy. This prohibition is strong and demands the journalist as well as the editor to carefully make sure no disclosure of personal data, pictures, names of places or anything else that can reveal to the public the identity of a source.¹⁸

The right to anonymity is far reaching and covers also an explicit freedom of liability of criminal acts. It is only the editor of a periodic print who can never be anonymous and so it is in these cases the editor's choice to publish a certain material or not, with the risk of criminal prosecution for violation of the right to freedom of speech. The prohibition is stated in the Freedom of the Press Act ch. 1 para. 3. If a certain recording, broadcasting or publishing falls within the scope of protection of the freedom of the press, the rules of the freedom of the press act apply. If the publication is a non-periodic publication the author and the publisher has a choice to be anonymous or not. However it follows that if a publisher chooses to not disclose her or his identity the publication cannot fall within the scope of protection under the freedom of press act.

2.1 Case law

The Supreme Court addressed the matter of professional secrecy and a journalist and publisher's responsibility to make sure the identity of the source was not revealed in the case NJA 2015 s. 166. The court stated that an informant or a messenger does not have to ask for anonymity, to be protected under the Freedom of the Press Act chap. 1 para. 1 and chap. 1 para. 3. The case was dealing with the issue of consent. The journalist arguing the source had given consent to the information published in an article covering a story of rape. The source, in the court case the plaintiff, pleaded her identity had been revealed in the article and so her right to anonymity violated. The court concluded that there is no room within the regulation of the Freedom of the Press Act to argue for any "grading" or classification of anonymity. The journalist in this case had the journalistic code of ethics allowed for a grading to be done by the professional journalist to decide what information would fall within the protection of the right to anonymity and what would not. The court disagreed and made clear that the presumption for protection of a source by guaranteeing anonymity is presumed and absolute. It also stated that once the information has been published no discretion applies for an editor to decide whether to reveal the identity of an anonymous source. In the case the editor argued she had not known the political ideology of the source and when it was revealed that the source belonged to an extremist organization, she refused to have the information printed anonymously. However, the Court found that such decisions cannot be made by the editor after that the source has been guaranteed anonymity.¹⁹

¹⁷ Axberger, Hans-Gunnar, Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagarna, upplaga två, Norstedts Juridik 2014, p33 , p155 [Swedish]

¹⁸ Axberger, p158, p160

The journalistic code of ethics is applicable only if explicit consent has been given by the source. The right to anonymity is protected by law and any use of a code of ethics postulates that the source has first agreed to have her or his identity revealed. As long as information has been disclosed as described in the statutory text, protection arises. What must happen is therefore that the source or a messenger provides a journalist or another professional with information meant to be disseminated to the public by publication. The requisite "to be published" shall be interpreted broadly.

This concerns any information, even what is regarded personal about the source. The prohibition to reveal the identity of a source concerns the person disclosing the information and regards not only the person's name to remain secret. No information may be published which can lead to reveal directly or indirectly the identity of a source. The right to anonymity is far reaching and covers also an explicit freedom of liability of criminal acts.²⁰

It is only the editor of a periodic publication who can never be anonymous and so it is in these cases the editor's choice to publish a certain material or not, with the risk of criminal prosecution for violation of the right to freedom of speech. The identity of sources can generally not be asked for in a criminal prosecution.

2.2 Labour code

The Swedish system makes a distinction between private and public employees, where the employment contract is always at the core of the relationship between employer and employee. All employees, public as well as private, are subject to the provisions and protection of RF, Freedom of the Press Act, and Constitution of Freedom of Speech.

¹⁹ Axberger, p 10-16

²⁰ Axberger, p 162

It is stressed that no employment contract can out rule the basic protection of freedom of speech for all citizens. The loyalty expected due to employment, of an employee towards an employer, can only to a limited extent be regulated in an employment contract and any contractual limitations of freedom of speech are considered null and void.²¹ In addition to the general protection of the Instrument of the Government, Freedom of the Press Act, and Constitution of Freedom of Speech employees in the public sector are subject to the rules of secrecy and discretion regarding conditions of the individual, regulated in The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act. Chapter 13 para. 1 of this law refers to Freedom of the Press Act and Constitution of Freedom of Speech and the provisions given there.²²

The authority of control and protection of employee's right to freedom of speech in the public sector is JO (the Parliamentary Ombudsman) and JK (Chancellor of Justice). An individual can make a report and request investigation regarding breach of secrecy of journalistic sources to both these institutions. Regarding public employees and the protection of whistle-blowers critique has been raised. The assessment of which sanctions by an employer are to be regarded reprisal is an unacceptable grey zone.

Which conduct is considered a breach of secrecy is said to be split and unclear.²³

2.3 Sanctions

One who violates the professional secrecy through negligence or by deliberate intent shall be sentenced to payment of a fine or to imprisonment for up to one year²⁴. If the source is a public employee chapter 14 of The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act is applicable. One who by deliberate intent violates the provisions of The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act chapter 13 para. 2, section 2 shall be sentenced to payment of a fine or imprisonment for up to one year.

3. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation?

There is no definition in the Swedish legislation of who is included in the definition of a ‘journalist’. Thus, the explanation of the profession is found by turning to other sources than the law, such as general descriptions of what the accepted definitions of journalism and journalists are. Accordingly, the definition is that journalism is a collective term of collecting, selecting,

²¹ Fransson, Yttrandefrihet och whistleblowing, om gränserna för anställdas kritikrätt, Premiss Förlag 2013, p 59 [Swedish]

²² Fransson p 69

²³ For further reading see Bull 2007 p. 65-78

²⁴ Tryckfrihetsförordningen 3rd chapter 3§

processing and presenting material with the purpose to portray reality through media²⁵. Furthermore, the media forums that are relevant for the journalism to take place are newspapers, periodicals, radio and television etc. The Constitutions of Sweden that regulates the collecting, selecting, processing and presenting of information via those channels are of basic, overriding importance. In the Constitution of Freedom of Speech ch. 1 § 1 ph. 1, it is stated that every Swedish citizen is insured the right to express opinion, thoughts and feelings and is given the right to provide information in any subject through radio, television or other technical records such as Internet. In question of written text, the same rights are stated in the Freedom of Press Act, ch. 1 § 1 ph. 1 and 2.

Since there is no provision which clearly defines who is a journalist according to the Swedish legislation, the definition of who is a 'journalist' can be made by identifying who is insured the rights to collect, select, process and present information. Because these Constitutional Rights are insured every Swedish citizen, the right to call oneself 'journalist' exists for any Swedish citizen aiming to inform about the reality through the media forms applicable to the Freedom of Speech Act ch. 1 para. 6 and the The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Press ch. 1 para. 5-6. Furthermore, these rights are also stated in the European Convention on the Human Rights art. 10, giving all EU citizens the same rights. Due to the incorporation of the European Convention on the Human Rights through ch. 2 para. 19 of the Instrument of Government, the meaning of this is that the national law cannot be legislated in violation of EU law²⁶. Consequently, this means that all EU citizens can be considered journalists to the extent that their actions fall within the definition of journalism. Furthermore, ICCPR art. 19.2²⁷ contain the same rights to seek, receive and provide information as the rights stated in the Acts of Freedom of Speech and Freedom of Press. As a result, the ratification of the ICCPR alongside with the generally accepted idea of who is a journalist means that the definition mentioned above is applicable to everyone regardless of his or her origin.²⁸

The Swedish legislation does not provide any guidelines or quality requirements of the information shared from individuals. On the contrary, the Constitutions rather state that the freedom to write and speak applies in respect of all subjects. Nevertheless, there are provisions in the Swedish Penal Code²⁹ in order to avoid expressions of several matters, for example violation of other vital human rights.

²⁵ Nationalencyklopedien, "Journalist" <http://www.ne.se/uppslagsverk/encyklopedi/l%C3%A5ng/journalist> assessed 31 Mars 2016 (Swedish)

²⁶ Dag Viktor, "Svenska domstolars hantering av Europakonventionen" (Underlag1 till ett föredrag den 17 augusti 2012 på konferens anordnad av Nordiska Föreningen för Processrätt) <http://svjt.se/svjt/2013/343>, assessed 31 Mars 2016 (Swedish)

²⁷ <https://treaties.un.org/doc/Publication/UNTS/Volume%20999/volume-999-I-14668-English.pdf>

²⁸ United Nation of the Human Rights, Office of the High Commissioner "STATUS OF RATIFICATION INTERACTIVE DASHBOARD" <http://indicators.ohchr.org>, assessed 28 Mars 2016

²⁹ The Swedish Penal Code, Brottsbalken (1962:700)

Therefore, hate speech is a crime in Sweden according to the Penal Code ch. 16 para. 8. This is also the case in the matter of defamation, Penal Code ch. 5 para. 1. Furthermore, the Act of Freedom of Press chapter 7 and the Act of Freedom of Speech chapter 5 include other crimes that also are stated in the Penal Code chapter 16, 18 and 19. The provisions regulates such as unlawful depiction of violence, espionage, willful breach of confidentiality, high treason etc.

As a conclusion, there is a freedom for journalists to inform in any subjects, but some information can be criminal to share according to regulations within the Penal Code with the purpose to protect the State or other human rights. These regulations can be observed as limitations of the journalism; since the classification of the actions is that they are criminal.

3.1 Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources?

Since the definition of journalism is knit to the fundamental rights of expression and press and the rights are given to anyone sharing information, the definition is not restricted in question of who can call themselves journalists. What may be questioned and what has been questioned before is whether the criminalization mentioned above is a restriction of journalistic sources, or in other words the freedom of press and speech. The Supreme Court has stated in case B 2115-06³⁰ that a conviction for a freedom of speech violation may include a restriction of the right to speech, but that this might be necessary in order to maintain a democratic society in accordance with the EU law. The Supreme Court took in account the European Court's four-stage trial when complaints about violations of the ECHR are to be considered. The trial begins with a consideration whether the action is a restriction of the freedom of expression. If that is the case, the restriction has to be supported by law. Furthermore, the European Court questions if the restriction has a legitimate purpose and if it is necessary in a democratic society to allow the restriction³¹. The Supreme Court stated in the case B 2115-06 that the ECHR gives the restrictions in the Swedish Constitutions and Penal Code legitimacy and the question is therefore whether the restrictions are necessary or not.

In the case, the Supreme Court brings up the fact that the freedoms of speech and press comprise the right to share information that might shock, offend or disturb. To explain how these rights can be restricted anyway, the Supreme Court states that in order for this kind of information to be needed in a democratic society, the information must cater an urgent social need. The Supreme Court declared:

³⁰ The Swedish Supreme Court abstracts NJA 2007 s 805 (No 99)

³¹ Council of Europe Publishing, 'Freedom of Expression in Europe' (Case-law concerning Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights)

“In order for the restriction to be acceptable, it also requires that the reasons which laid the basis of the individual case are relevant and sufficient and that the restriction is proportionate to the legitimate purposes that motivated the restriction.”³²

Thus, the Supreme Court emphasises the purposes of the restriction. This gives room for split opinions amongst the Court Members since the proportionality is a matter of subjective judgment. This happened in case B 2115-06 where there were disagreements between the Court Members whether the action was a violation of the Constitution of Freedom of Speech. In addition, the EU case-law points toward the necessity for the democratic society as being one of the most vital requirements to restrict the freedom to speak one’s mind, which again requires a subjective judgment³³. Therefore, the criminalization of certain expressions is in some ways a restriction of the journalistic sources. Nevertheless, the restrictions may be necessary to protect other human rights and that the Swedish legislation follows the EU case law in order to make the subjective assessment as properly constituted as they can be.

In conclusion, the definition of who is a journalist is not a restricted nor legal definition in Sweden, but what a journalist chooses to express can be restricted if the subjective view is that other human rights trumps the subjects expressed.

3.2 Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

The Supreme Court has stated that if an individual that is not a journalist by profession publishes material, the material can still be protected as a journalistic source. In this specific court case³⁴, which was a question of publishing personal data on the Internet and whether the exemption for journalistic purposes would be applicable, the Supreme Court stated that:

“In the preamble to the Personal Data Act regarding the exemption for journalistic sources, it is stated the starting point is that this is a matter of “accepted” journalism (a. SOU p. 264) and that there is an unanimity that “serious” journalism is worth protecting. Regardless of the choice of words, it is clear that the intention of the statements in the preamble have not been to claim that applying any kind of quality criterion in terms of content should be enforced, but merely sought to indicate the characteristics of the business nature.”³⁵

Consequently, the Supreme Court came to the conclusion in it’s’ judgement that journalistic sources can be protected for any individual. Nevertheless, in order for the exemptions in the Swedish legislation that protects the journalistic sources to be applicable, the material should be solely for journalistic purposes. The Supreme Court described this as the following:

³²As translated by the author

³³Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, Series A no. 298 and Vereniging Weekblad Bluf! v. the Netherlands, 9 February 1995, Series A no. 306-A

³⁴NJA 2001 s 409 (No. 60)

³⁵As translated by the author

“The limitation to “solely” journalistic purposes aims primarily to clarify that such personal data processing which takes place within the media and by journalists for other than editorial purposes falls outside the exception”³⁶.

This judgement points to the fact that there has to be a journalistic purpose in order for the material to fall under the strong protection of journalistic sources. In conclusion, there is a right to protection of journalistic sources but not as an extended right to others than those who call themselves a journalist.

3.3 What is the scope of protection of other media actors?

As previously mentioned, the scope of protection is the same for everyone since journalistic sources can be published by anyone. As a result of the definition of journalism in Sweden, the protection of its sources is a consequence of universal human rights that appertain to all.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

Official authorities and governmental agencies may not trace a journalistic source³⁷. This rule has a connection to the “exclusive responsibility” of the source. Since the editor is the exclusively responsible person of what has been printed or broadcasted³⁸, it would not make sense to make the author or journalist suffer inquires for what they cannot be held liable for. Non-governmental agencies, such as enterprises, may inquire a source when the source might be one of their employees³⁹.

Those protected against means of inquiry are the very same persons as those with a right to anonymity. It is the tracing of the source or the attempt to trace the source that is prohibited. Any questioning or other measures attempted to gather knowledge about a messenger, leak or informant as well as how the information has been provided to the publisher are prohibited. No questions concerning the informant are allowed, regardless of whether the intent is to disclose a source or not.⁴⁰

³⁶ As translated by the author

³⁷ SOU 2004:114 “Vissa tryck- och yttrandefrihetsrättsliga frågor” p150

³⁸ <https://www.prv.se/en/our-services/periodicals/applying-for-a-certificate-of-publication/responsible-editor/>

³⁹ <http://sverigesradio.se/sida/artikel.aspx?programid=4069&artikel=4380834> “Meddelarskydd och källskydd”

⁴⁰ Axberger p. 163-164

As for employees of the public sector The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act chapter 13 para. 2 provide a prohibition against reprisal of journalistic sources. JO and JK guard the prohibition against reprisal of public employees.

4.1 Exemptions for when inquiry is allowed

For criminal prosecution according to chapter 7 of the Freedom of the Press Act, inquiry is allowed due to a violation of the Freedom of Press Act or the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression. Only JK can act as special prosecutor according to the Freedom of the Press Act. An official body or a governmental authority can report a printed text to JK if suspicion arises about a freedom of press crime.⁴¹

4.2 Legal procedural safeguards

For criminal prosecution due to a violation of the freedom of press or the freedom of speech only Justitiekanslern (JK)⁴², i.e. the Chancellor of Justice, can be a prosecutor according to the Freedom of the Press Act ch 9 para. 2. An official body or an instrument of government can only give notice to JK if suspicion arises about a criminal action in regards to limits of the freedom of the press. During the conduction of a criminal investigation, one must respect the professional secrecy. A person, such as an author or journalist, does not have to be heard regarding their sources. In addition to this, there is no explicit right for the journalist to be heard. Only at the point of prosecution of a specific suspect JK may ask a court for special permission to hear a journalist about their sources. JK may ask only whether the specific suspect has delivered the information and the journalist may only answer that one question with either a yes or a no. No further questions than this may be asked and JK can never ask a journalist to disclose its source.⁴³

Journalists with a duty of testimony in court can still as a matter of ethics claim to have forgotten the source. Not remembering the source is no ground for liability. To provide a broader protection of their sources than what the law requires can be a question of professional pride.⁴⁴

There is no provision which protects the source after it has been revealed. The personal information does not have to be disclosed when the case has become a public document.

4.3 Sanction for conducting prohibited inquiry

⁴¹ Olsson p. 53

⁴² <http://www.jk.se/other-languages/english/>

⁴³ Axberger, p 163-164

⁴⁴ Olsson p. 58

One who violates the prohibition of inquiry shall be sentenced to payment of a fine or to imprisonment for up to one year⁴⁵. Violation of the prohibition to ask questions during a criminal investigation is not sanctioned.⁴⁶

4.4 Self-regulatory code of ethics

The extensive freedom of the press and freedom of expression in Sweden place considerable responsibility on individual newspapers and responsible editors. Therefore the market actors have drawn up their own ethical rules.⁴⁷

The code of ethics for publicists in Sweden has been developed in order to protect the use of freedom of speech. This has been achieved by composing a contract based code of ethics. The code of ethics, as formulated in the preamble, being *“in favor of upholding a responsible approach regarding the duty of publishing”*⁴⁸. Rather than a more strict legislation it is considered as a preferred provision to ensure a self-regulatory mechanism within the publicist field in Sweden. This aim has been achieved by composing a contract based code of ethics.

The legal safeguards protection journalistic sources are strict and extensive. The self-regulatory mechanism realised in the journalistic code of ethics has a tort law construction and is most closely related to the Swedish legal provision of prohibition against slander and defamation.⁴⁹ The code of ethics is voluntary, contract based and applicable only when an individual suffers a damage due to a published text in a printed paper or on the website of a contracted publication. According to the code of ethics, there is no liability to pay damages from the publisher to the complaining individuals. To achieve this, the code of ethics is instead used to force the publicist to publish a correction in the publication and to pay a penalty fine to the organization issuing the decision.

The rules of the journalistic code of ethics call for an assessment of the right of the individual to privacy (rule 7) and the right of the individual to anonymity (rule 15) and the common interest of the public. The interest for the common good of certain information to be published is considered counter to the interest of the individual⁵⁰.

The institute dealing with complaints are called PO and PON. PO is the Press Ombudsman of the Public (Pressombudsmannen) and PON is the Pendulum Commission of the Press (Pressens Opinionsnämnd). The code of ethics as well as the structure for regulating review is issued by a

⁴⁵ Tryckfrihetsförfordningen 3 chap. para. 5

⁴⁶ Axberger p. 164-165

⁴⁷ Swedish Government, The Freedom of the Press Act [Internet Source]

⁴⁸ Axberger p. 115, Olsson, Anders R, Yttrandefrihet och tryckfrihet - handbok för journalister, sjunde upplagan, Studentlitteratur, 2012, p 227

⁴⁹ Olsson, p. 229-230

⁵⁰ Axberger p. 118

joint committee of market actors called Pressens samarbetsnämnd.⁵¹ If a published text is regarded in violation of the code of ethics PO and PON has the authority to demand a correction by the publicist. If the individual suffering from the published text demands damages to be paid, a separate tort process must be initiated in the applicable district court.⁵²

The journalistic code of ethics may be applicable only if explicit consent has been given by the source to reveal the identity of the source. The right to anonymity is protected by law and any use of a code of ethics postulates that the source has first agreed to have her or his identity revealed. Furthermore, there are no other self-regulatory mechanisms that intervenes in this kind of cases.

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

5.1 The national legislation in relation to non-disclosure of journalistic information

According to the Constitution of Sweden, Sweden is bound to incorporate the European Convention of Human Rights in the Swedish legal system⁵³ and therefore, article 10 of the Convention is directly applicable in the Swedish legal system and Swedish legislation regarding non-disclosure of journalistic sources shall comply with Article 10 of the Convention. This means that everyone is granted the protection that is described in Recommendation No R (2000) 7 and that the right shall be limited only if exceptional circumstances occur or if the limitation is in line with the ECtHR case law or the Article 10(2) of the Convention.

This right to not disclose sources applies for journalists even if they are working for a private newspaper or magazine, which is an exemption from the general exemption in the Swedish law where the right of nondisclosure does not cover employees of private businesses. This is also regulated explicitly in the Freedom of the Press Act and the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression, which further grants the right to nondisclosure of sources of the journalists and it means that a journalist have a constitutional right to not give any information regarding her

⁵¹ Axberger p 116

⁵² Axberger p. 118-119, Olsson p. 227-228

⁵³ Instrument of Government, 2 chap 19 §, 11 chap 4 § and 12 chap 10 §

sources even though it is an exceptional circumstance. This also provides further protection for the messenger, since he or she has to give its explicit consent in order for the journalist to be able to consider revealing the source⁵⁴.

Except for the direct implementation of the European Convention of Human Rights and its case law, Sweden has their own set of laws connected to article 10 which are mostly in line with the principles stated in Recommendation No R (2000) 7. The Guja v Moldova case⁵⁵ in the ECtHR is an important case which has provided guidelines for Swedish courts regarding the proportionality of the Swedish court cases and how the State can interact regarding disclosure of sources. The Guja v Moldova case brought forward a wide “margin of appreciation” for the States, meaning that they may decide themselves what is acceptable in their own democratic society. It has also given guidelines on how to evaluate the good respectively bad faith of the source and other principles including the relationship between article 10 of the Convention and the Swedish labour law, principles that are useful for the Swedish courts⁵⁶.

5.2 Non-disclosure and labour law

Regarding labour law, Sweden provides a wide protection for workers in paragraph 7 of Lagen om Anställningsskydd (LAS), the Employment Protection Act, which grants protection in the event of unjustified dismissal. In order to achieve this protection, the source i.e. the employee, may not go outside the scope of the right to criticise their employer. This applies generally regardless if the employer is private or public.

This is a right in Sweden⁵⁷, and the information can be provided to media and to general public debate without fearing any reprisals from the employer. The exemption to this is when you have a temporary employment contract, where the employer may choose to not extend the contract if you have gone outside the scope of the right to criticise the company and to give information to media regarding your critics⁵⁸. This has been discussed in Arbetsdomstolen, the Labour Court, in the cases AD 1982:110 and AD 1997:57 where the Court has stated that this right is in line with the right to freedom of speech as a general principle of law⁵⁹ and that the right to inform media about the critics that you may have regarding the employer is not in conflict with the ⁵⁴ Freedom of Press Act 3 chap. 3 § p. 1, Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression 2 chap. 3 § p.1.

⁵⁵ Guja v Moldova no. 14277/04

⁵⁶ Nessmar, Visselblåsare - Sverige, EKMR och Europarådet.

Behövs förslaget i SOU 2014:31 rörande visseblåsare? P9 [Swedish]

⁵⁷ This is not explicitly stated in any law, but it is a product of the combination of freedom of expression and the duty of loyalty which is a common principle of Swedish labour law.

⁵⁸ Nessmar, p15

⁵⁹ AD 1982:110

employment contract as such and the loyalty that you should show towards the employer⁶⁰ according to Swedish labour law principles⁶¹. For journalists, this means that sources that are giving information regarding their employer are exercising their rights and therefore the journalists have protection for their sources and do not have to disclose these if the source has not given its' explicit consent.

5.3 Nondisclosure and criminal law

Generally, the right to not disclose journalistic sources and the crime that is connected to it, failure of duty to keep secret, is stated in chapter 3 para 3 of the Freedom of the Press Act,

“A person who has engaged in the production or publication of printed matter, or material intended for insertion therein, and a person who has been active in an enterprise for the publication of printed matter, or an enterprise which professionally purveys news or other material to periodicals, may not disclose what has come to his knowledge in this connection concerning the identity of an author, a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, or an editor of non-periodical printed matter. (...)”

The anonymity is granted through that the ones handling the printed matters have a duty to keep secret regarding their sources, not only the name of the source but also personal data that may be traced back to the source. The personal scope of this provision includes journalists, editorial offices, media companies, news agencies, publishing companies, freelance journalists and employees of printing firms. The personal scope does not include bookstores.⁶²

It is seen as a crime if a public authority tries to investigate the source of a journalist, and the crime is classified as “Misuse of Office”⁶³,

“A person who in the exercise of public authority by act or by omission, intentionally or through carelessness, disregards the duties of his office, shall be sentenced for misuse of office to a fine or imprisonment for at most two years. If, having regard to the perpetrator's official powers or the nature of his office considered in relation to his exercise of public power in other respects or having regard to other circumstances, the act may be regarded as petty, punishment shall not be imposed.”

As stated, this provision is only applicable when the investigator is a public authority or works for a public authority, and as well is in exercise of the public authority. In Swedish law, the exercise of public authority means public authority where someone makes a decision that may be ⁶⁰ As in footnote 52, this is not explicitly stated in any law. It means that you as an employee may not hurt the employer in any way, by for example avoiding conflicting interests with the employer, do your tasks properly and be generally loyal to your employer.

⁶¹ AD 1997:57

⁶² SOU 1990:12 p. 247 and 273

⁶³ Brottsbalken 20:1

beneficial or burdensome and the decision leads to either giving benefits and/or rights or impose duties.⁶⁴ Connected to this is chapter 3 para 4 of the Freedom of the Press Act, where the journalists are given protection from reprisals relating to disclosing the information if the investigator is a public authority of any kind,

“No public authority or other public body may inquire into the identity of the author of material inserted, or intended for insertion, in printed matter, a person who has published, or who intends to publish, material in such matter, or a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, except insofar as this is necessary for the purpose of such prosecution or other action against him as is not contrary to the provisions of this Act. In cases in which such inquiries may be made, the duty of confidentiality under Article 3 shall be respected.”

If the investigator is found to be guilty of this crime, willful tracing, the sentence is either fines or imprisonment for maximum one year⁶⁵. This provision has been mentioned in several cases from the Supreme Court and is seen as a prerequisite for the freedom of the press in the democratic society. The Court stated in the case NJA 2015 s 166 that if there is no protection for the right to not disclose sources, there will not be any information regarding the wrongs in our society. Furthermore, it also predicted that without this provision, the current debate in the society regarding sources would have been negatively affected. This provision is also connected to what was mentioned in 5.2 regarding the relationship between the nondisclosure and labour law. It does not only provide protection for the journalists and their employment, but also grants protection for the employees of the Government on both state and municipal level.

When employees of private companies provides journalists with information, the abovementioned provisions do not apply. There is no such protection for employees when it comes to private companies. In these cases, only the provision in chapter 3 para 3 is applicable.

5.4 Alternative measures against the disclosure of journalistic sources

Principle 3 (b) (i) of the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 emphasizes that “the disclosure of information identifying a source should not be deemed necessary unless it can be convincingly established that reasonable alternative measures to the disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted by the persons or public authorities that seek the disclosure”. Alternative measures has been listed in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation, and these are internal/police investigations, the reinforcing of restrictions on access to certain secret information, dissemination of contrasting information as a countermeasure, investigation of other persons who are connected with the journalists (employees, colleagues, contracting partners or business partners of the person requesting the disclosure).

⁶⁴ Prop. 1985/86:80 s. 55.

⁶⁵ JK Beslut 2008-12-02

The Swedish legislation regarding journalistic sources are compliant with these above-mentioned requirements and goes beyond the requirements when providing an protection of journalists and their sources if they write in a so-called “periodical paper”⁶⁶, meaning that no investigation can be made about the source and the journalist can never be charged for breach of the press law.

The Supreme Court has stated in the case NJA 2003 s 107 that the only legal exemption to find out about a source is through an interrogation in court if exceptional circumstances apply. It also stated in the case that the interrogation may not interfere with the other provisions regarding the protection of the journalistic sources and the provision may not be interpreted widely. There are no specific alternative measures regarding this provision.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

6.1 Outweighing legitimate interest and the Recommendation No R (2000) 7

In the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 outweighing legitimate interest is described as following,

ii. outweighing legitimate interest

35. With due regard to the established jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, any restriction to Article 10 of the Convention has to be proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued (...) there must be "a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the legitimate aim pursued by the disclosure order and the means deployed to achieve that aim" (see, Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, para. 46). The concrete interest of the person or public authority in the disclosure of the source must be "sufficient to outweigh the vital public interest in the protection of the (...) journalist's source" (see, ibid., para. 45).

36. Given the importance of freedom of expression and freedom of the media for any democratic society and every individual, and taking into account the potentially chilling effect a source disclosure may have on the readiness of future sources to provide information to journalists, only exceptional cases where a vital personal or public interest is at stake might justify or be proportional to the disclosure of a source. Paragraph c, sub-paragraph ii refers to this proper use of discretion by the competent authorities and requires that (1) a legitimate interest should outweigh or override the public interest in the non-disclosure and be proven, (2) the vital and serious nature of the circumstances warrants such disclosure and (3) be identified as responding to a pressing social need by the competent authorities; (4) the assessment of the necessity of the disclosure under Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights is subject to supervision and review by the European Court of Human Rights.”

⁶⁶ Chapter 1 para. 7 of the Freedom of the Press Act

This means that for the outweighing legitimate interest to be applicable, it has to override the public interest, be proportionate and be of a vital and serious nature responding to the need of the competent authority. This is something that the Swedish courts need to follow, which will be assessed briefly in this question. The main conclusion is that the Swedish legislation is to be seen as compliant with the ECHR regulations in this matter. There are clear provisions stating what is to be seen as outweighing legitimate interest which is also supported by case law from the Swedish Supreme Court.

6.2 Outweighing legitimate interest and Swedish law

According to chapter 3 para.3 of the Freedom of the Press Act, it is stated that

A person who has engaged in the production or publication of printed matter, or material intended for insertion therein, and a person who has been active in an enterprise for the publication of printed matter, or an enterprise which professionally purveys news or other material to periodicals, may not disclose what has come to his knowledge in this connection concerning the identity of an author, a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, or an editor of non-periodical printed matter.

The duty of confidentiality under paragraph one shall not apply

- 1. if the person in whose favour the duty of confidentiality operates has given his consent to the disclosure of his identity;*
- 2. if the question of identity may be raised under Article 2, paragraph one;*
- 3. if the matter concerns an offence specified in Chapter 7, Article 3, paragraph one, point 1;*
- 4. unless, where the matter concerns an offence under Chapter 7, Article 2 or 3, paragraph one, point 2 or 3, a court of law deems it necessary for information to be produced during the proceedings as to whether the defendant, or the person suspected on reasonable grounds of the offence, has communicated information or contributed to an item; or*
- 5. unless, in any other case, a court of law deems it to be of exceptional importance, having regard to a public or private interest, for information as to identity to be produced in testimony under oath or in testimony by a party in the proceedings under an affirmation made in lieu of oath.*

In examination under paragraph two, point 4 or 5, the court shall scrupulously ensure that no questions are put which might encroach upon a duty of confidentiality in excess of what is permissible in each particular case.”

In this provision, public interest means interest of the state or a general interest of the Swedish citizens.⁶⁷ Conversely, private interest means the interest of a private entity. Conclusively, crime is a part of the definition of outweighing legitimate interest in the Swedish legislation and may be conditions for revealing sources, as mentioned above in 5.4 and stated by the Supreme Court in the case NJA 2003 s 107. Similar legislation is found in chapter 7 para 3 of the same law, which mentions that crimes such as high treason, espionage, gross unauthorised trafficking in secret information, insurrection, treason or betrayal of country, or any attempt, preparation or conspiracy to commit such an offence, wrongful release of an official document and deliberate disregard of a duty of confidentiality may be reason for disclosing the source if demanded by the Court.⁶⁸ This means that even if the journalists generally have protection regarding their sources, they might have to disclose the sources without the consent of the source if the information is regarding such serious crimes.

⁶⁷ Nationalencyklopedin, “allmänintresse” [Swedish]

Similar provisions are found in the Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act, which is connected to chapter 7 para 3, where the wrongful release of an official document to which the public does not have access and/or release of such a document in contravention of a restriction imposed by a public authority at the time of its release is seen as the crime “intentional commission of a breach of professional secrecy” and also as a condition for revealing sources because of outweighing legitimate interest. In a case of intentional commission of a breach of professional secrecy the penalty is either a fine or imprisonment for a maximum of one year. Petty cases of carelessness are not subject to any penalty according the Swedish law.⁶⁹

The Swedish legislation on this matter is to be seen as rather strict and it is very hard to get access to information about the source, since the only legal way is through an interrogation in Court. Compared to for example Norway, with whom Sweden share the legal tradition and a lot of similar legislation⁷⁰, the Swedish law is to be seen as stricter since the Norwegian legislation does not contain any provision regarding the confidentiality of the journalists.⁷¹ As stated before, the Swedish legislation is to be seen as compliant with the ECHR regulations in this matter. It provides clear criterias and has a high level of protection for both the source and the journalist.

7. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear

⁶⁸ Comment by Axberger from Karnov database, assessed on 2016-05-16

⁶⁹ Swedish Government, The Freedom of the Press Act

⁷⁰ Nationalencyklopedin, “Rättsväsen” [Swedish]

⁷¹ Susic, Europakonventionens journalistiska källskydd i jämförelse med TF och YGL - källskyddets optimala effektivitet i det progressiva internetsamhället, 2013, p 44 [Swedish] legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

7.1 Relevant Case-Law of European Court of Human Rights

Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) provides a protection for journalistic sources, which is considered to be the core of the Freedom of Press. By examining the case law from the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) it can be concluded that Article 10 also covers the measures used when transferring information to journalists.⁷²

In the case Goodwin v. the United Kingdom the Court stated that:

*“An order of source disclosure...cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest.”*⁷³

There are circumstances in which the disclosure of a journalist source can be justified. For instance, in Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark the Court concluded that the disclosure of the source was necessary in order to prevent crime.⁷⁴

7.2 Legislation in Sweden

In the Instrument of Government, chapter 1 para. 1, it is stated that all public power stem from the people through parliamentary representation. The Instrument of Government is the part of the Constitution which lays down the basic foundation of the Swedish democracy. The Constitution stipulates how the country shall be governed, what the democratic rights are and how public power shall be distributed.⁷⁵ The courts constitute the core of the Swedish justice system. They are independent and autonomous in relation to the parliament, government and other authorities. With respect for each individual and in an objective and impartial approach, the courts strive to achieve the objective of the Swedish judicial system which are to protect individual legal rights and maintain the rule of law.⁷⁶ The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression is a part of the Constitution and establish the right for journalistic sources to be anonymous.

Chapter 2 §1

“The originator of a radio programme or technical recording is not obliged to disclose his identity. The same applies

⁷² Factsheet – Protection of journalistic sources January 2016 European Court of Human Rights, p1

⁷³ Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, Judgment of 27 March 1996 §39

⁷⁴ Factsheet – Protection of journalistic sources January 2016 European Court of Human Rights, p1

⁷⁵ Swedish Government, The Instrument of Government (Swedish)

⁷⁶ Sveriges Domstolar, the Courts (Swedish) *to a person taking part in such an item and to a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 2. .*⁷⁷

Chapter one lays down a right to leave statements without disclosing the source. There is also a similar protection in the Freedom of the Press Act, which is also a part of the Constitution. It states that everyone is free to communicate information and intelligence on any subject whatsoever for publication in printed matter to the writer.⁷⁸ The same regulation also lays down a protection against authorities to investigate in sources of journalism⁷⁹.

Due to the civil-law characteristics of the Swedish legal system, it is mainly the Supreme Court's judgments which has precedence although there is no doctrine of stare decisis. Therefore, the case-law analysed are mainly from the Supreme Court of Sweden. When it comes to case-law dealing with this issue, one should also keep in mind that Sweden did not incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into Swedish law until 1995.

7.3 Swedish Case-Law

The importance of the possibility for journalistic sources to be anonymous has been considered in several cases. The protection of anonymity is therefore necessary for the Freedom of the Press to fulfil its function in a democratic society. The right to anonymity is a key element in the protection of journalistic sources. If anonymity is not protected the source might choose not to communicate significant facts in the light.⁸⁰

In the Supreme Court there was a case regarding the above mentioned provisions of the Freedom of Press Act. The court held that in order to establish a breach of the mentioned regulation it had to be clear that the respondent had investigated the source of published text in a local newspaper and that he did so with intent and that he was doing the research as a member of the city council. The outcome of the case was that the respondent was not found guilty since the intent could not be proven.⁸¹ In the same case the court referred to the case-law of ECtHR and the importance of protection of sources was emphasised.⁸² In this case the court weighed the different interests, namely the one of the respondent who claimed that her source had consented not to be anonymous against that of the applicants rights to be anonymous. The court concluded that the applicant had not given consent and thus the respondent breached the provisions of the Regulation on Freedom of Press.⁸³

⁷⁷ Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen Chapter 2 para 1,

⁷⁸ Tryckfrihetsförrordningen Chapter 3 para 4,

⁷⁹ Tryckfrihetsförrordningen Chapter 1 para 1

⁸⁰ NJA 2012 s 342

⁸¹ NJA 2001 s 673, Swedish Supreme Court, p 686

⁸² NJA 2012 s 342, Swedish Supreme Court, p 356

⁸³ NJA 2012 s 342, Swedish Supreme Court, p 356

In HD B 3594/14, the Supreme Court held the respondents guilty of disclosing the source without her consent and the respondents manner was found to be negligent.⁸⁴ In HovR B 776-13, the Court of Appeals the respondent was held guilty since he intended to disclose the source and thus he breached the provisions of the Freedom of Press Act. The court also stated that it does not matter whether the information at stake has been published or not, it is enough to do research regarding who actually left the information.⁸⁵

When analysing the above mentioned cases, some main principles connected to the protection of journalistic sources can be seen. Namely, whether or not the disclosure has been intentionally conducted, if it has been conducted with negligence and whether or not the source consented to be disclosed. Another principle worth mentioning is that the information does not have to be published to be covered by the protection.

In the case-law of the Swedish courts one can also draw the conclusion that the courts are referring to the ECHR and the importance of sources to stay anonymous, as it is a cornerstone of a democratic society. Some critique with regard to the identified cases analysed in the light of ECtHR jurisprudence is that it can be brought to the reader's attention that the intention of a person doing research about a source is very hard for the courts to establish, which might constitute a threshold when applying the right of anonymity of sources.

7.4. Personal analysis

My personal reflection when analysing the cited cases is that the Court emphasises the importance of the intention. It is the intention of the disclosing person which is the determining factor when the courts decide whether or not the conduct are in violation of the provisions protecting journalistic sources. This constitutes a threshold when determining a case and consequently also to protect the source in line with ECHR. But on the other hand, since this regards a criminal offense it might be positive that people cannot be prosecuted due to their own lack of knowledge in this field. On the other hand, one could argue that it is within the framework of the journalistic profession to be aware of the protection of sources as well as the different regulations in force.

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear

⁸⁴ HD B 3594/14, Swedish Supreme Court, § 20-21

⁸⁵ HovR B 776-13, Swedish Court of Appeal

legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

8.1 National legislation

During the Second World War freedom of expression and liberty of the press were subjected to a high political pressure in Sweden. This since the Swedish authorities felt the need to censure opinions, which were critical towards the Nazi-regime in Germany. As a consequence the Swedish minister of justice confiscated over 300 printed works without any prior trial. After the war had ended, the Freedom of the Press Act, was reformed. The reformation contained stricter regulations on how the aforementioned freedoms could be restricted. However, after the terrorist attacks in New York, Madrid and London in the beginning of the 21th century, the strengthened protection of the freedom of expression and the liberty of the press has been diminished, and the possibility of using electronic surveillance and other means of coercion has been extended.⁸⁶

The use of secret means of coercion in preliminary investigations of crimes is regulated in the 27th chapter of the Swedish Code of Judicial Procedure, Rättegångsbalken. These means includes secret taping of electronic communication, camera surveillance, and wiretapping of closed areas.⁸⁷ Only persons, whom are suspected for a crime of a more serious nature, can be subjected to these measures.⁸⁸ These crimes include for example child pornography, trafficking, and rape.⁸⁹ However, wiretapping in closed areas is forbidden in places which are permanently used or specifically meant for activities covered by the journalistic confidentiality provided for in the Freedom of Press Act and the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression.⁹⁰ A court must approve the use of secret means of coercion, and a prosecutor must apply for such an order. An approved application by the court must contain information on the allowed amount of time for the usage of the secret means of coercion. Furthermore, the allowed time limit cannot exceed what is considered necessary.⁹¹ However, if the prosecutor deems that an application to the court would be too time-consuming for the case at hand and amount to implications, she or he may permit such means of coercion before receiving an acceptance by the court. The decision by the prosecutor must be tried by the Court, which could abrogate the means of coercion if it finds

⁸⁶ Anders Olsson, Yttrandefrihet och Tryckfrihet. Handbok för journalister (7 edn, Studentlitteratur AB, 2012) 197-198 [Swedish].

⁸⁷ Rättegångsbalken ch 27 para 18, ch 27 para 20a, ch 27 para 20d.

⁸⁸ For crimes prescribing more than 2 years of imprisonment The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27 para 18 point 1, ch 27 para 20a point 1. For crimes prescribing more than 4 years of imprisonment The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27 para 20d pt 2 point 1.

⁸⁹ See for example The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27 para 20 d pt 3 a,b, c.

⁹⁰ The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27 para 20e pt 3 point 1.

⁹¹ The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27, para 21.

that there was no cause for such measures to be inflicted.⁹² The measures must also be abrogated as soon as they are deemed to no longer be necessary to the preliminary investigation.⁹³ During a case concerning the approval of the usage of means of coercion in a court, a public attorney safe-guarding the integrity of the individuals in question must be present.⁹⁴

There are other laws, which are applied in concurrence with the Code of Judicial Procedure. One of these is for example, Lag (2008:854) om åtgärder för att utreda vissa samhällsfarliga brott (the Swedish Act on measures on the investigation on certain crimes which harmful for the public and the state). It regulates the procedural aspects of preliminary investigations in crimes such as espionage, terrorism, and the recruitment of such activities.⁹⁵ The law permits the same means of coercion as prescribed for in the 27th chapter of Rättegångsbalken. Since it regulates crimes of a particularly serious nature, it can deviate from the prerequisites set out in Rättegångsbalken, i.e. it expands the possibilities of using such measures. Although, it does not permit deviations from the rule, which prohibits wiretapping in closed areas where journalistic confidentiality prevails.⁹⁶

Another law, Lag 2007:978 om hemlig rumsavlyssning (the Swedish Act on wiretapping in closed areas), is applicable in relation to preliminary investigations concerning crimes, which can lead to imprisonment for more than four years. Or other crimes, which are explicitly mentioned in the law itself.⁹⁷ By virtue of protecting freedom of expression and the liberty of the press, the regulation prohibiting wiretapping in places, which are permanently used or specifically meant for activities covered by the journalistic confidentiality, is included in this law as well.⁹⁸

In addition, there is Lag (2007:979) om åtgärder för att förhindra vissa särskilt allvarliga brott (the Swedish Act on measures counteracting specifically grouse crimes) which allows for electronic surveillance and camera surveillance in order to prevent particularly serious crimes.⁹⁹ The means of coercion provided for in this law are only permitted if it has been approved by the district court of Stockholm.¹⁰⁰ A prosecutor can in issue an order in exceptional cases when time is of the essence.¹⁰¹

⁹² The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27, para 21a.

⁹³ The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27, para 23

⁹⁴ The Code of Judicial Procedure, ch 27, para 26

⁹⁵ The Law on Measures on the Investigation on Certain Crimes which is Harmful for the Public and the State 2008:854 (Lag om åtgärder för att utreda vissa samhällsfarliga brott) para 1 point. 4,6.

⁹⁶ The Law on Measures on the Investigation on Certain Crimes which is Harmful for the Public and the State, para 3.

⁹⁷ The Law on Wiretapping in Closed Areas (Lag om hemlig rumsavlyssning) para 1-2.

⁹⁸ The Law on Wiretapping in Closed Areas, para 4 point 1.

⁹⁹ The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes 2007:979 (Lag om åtgärder för att förhindra vissa särskilt allvarliga brott) para 1.

¹⁰⁰ The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes, para 6.

¹⁰¹ The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes, para 6a.

The Act on Signal Intelligence Within the Military Intelligence Service, Lag (2008:717) om signalspaning i försvarsunderrättelseverksamhet, has the purpose of combatting international terrorism and other trans border crimes, which can constitute significant threats towards national interests. In the preparatory works it is stated that restrictions in the protection of one's integrity may only be conducted for purposes which can be considered acceptable in a democratic society. Such restrictions cannot exceed what is necessary in order to fulfil the aim of the law. Furthermore, restrictions cannot constitute a threat against the freedom of opinion as set out in the Instrument of Government.¹⁰² The law applies to signals, which are being transmitted between wires abroad and within Sweden, i.e. not only between two transmitters, which are both within the borders of Sweden.¹⁰³ In order to maintain the protection for journalistic sources, the law imposes an obligation to immediately destroy information provided by such sources, if it has been collected by means of signal intelligence surveillance. This also applies to information related to the prohibition of inquiry of the identity of a source employed in the public sector.¹⁰⁴

In regards of secret measures in terrorist cases, the special laws supplementing the general one in the Swedish code of procedure, i.e. the ones provided in this section, include crimes of terrorism as cases in which the regulations apply. Hence, secret measures in case of crimes of terrorism are regulated by the same criteria as for other gross crimes mentioned in the laws.¹⁰⁵

In conclusion, the Swedish laws on secret means of coercion are drafted in a way, which do not interfere with the journalistic confidentiality. The standards for using these measures are very high, and are not allowed unless the person being surveyed is suspected for a crime, which means that none of the laws can be used with the explicit purpose of exposing a journalistic source. This does not exempt unintended exposure of information regarding the identity of a source, but such information cannot be used unless it is of relevance for an on-going investigation. Exceptions to the journalistic confidentiality in criminal cases is also regulated in the Freedom of Press Act (see question 1 for a more detailed description of such exemptions).

8.2 ECtHR case law

Member states are obliged, under Article 10 in addition to Article 8, to strike a fair balance between interests in searching a journalist's home, and such an interference must also be in

¹⁰² Prop. 2011/12:179, p. 9-10

¹⁰³ The Law on Signals Intelligence Within the Military Intelligence Service 2008:717 (Lag om signalspaning i försvarsunderrättelseverksamhet) para 2- 2a.

¹⁰⁴ The Law on Signals Intelligence Within the Military Intelligence Service, para 7 point 2.

¹⁰⁵ See The Law on Measures on the Investigation on Certain Crimes which is Harmful for the Public and the State, para 1 point 6; The Law on Wiretapping in Closed Areas, para 2 point 1; The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes para 1 point 6; The Law on Signals Intelligence Within the Military Intelligence Service para 1 point 3.

compliance with the criteria of being lawful and proportional.¹⁰⁶ ECtHR has established minimum standards regarding national legislation on secret surveillance as an obligation under Article 8 of the Convention.¹⁰⁷ The minimum standards includes that the legislation must be foreseeable, and the crimes that could lead to a request of surveillance must be clearly stated. Moreover, there must be a definition of who can be subjected to secret surveillance, and the time of the wiretapping must be limited. There must also be procedural rules in place for inquiries, the use and storage of the gathered information, and cautionary measures must be in place if the information is being transmitted. Lastly, those circumstances in which the recordings can or must be deleted shall be specified.¹⁰⁸

In order to ensure principles connected to the rule of law, the Swedish authorities has inter alia taken these criteria regarding article 8 into consideration in regards of the latest changes of the Swedish law on measures counteracting specifically gross crimes.¹⁰⁹ The crimes which can give rise to surveillance actions are prescribed for in the law, and that the only persons who pose a real risk of committing one of these crimes could be subjected to this.¹¹⁰ The law also established that such actions can only be temporary, and must be terminated when it has been concluded that it is no longer necessary to continue.¹¹¹ Furthermore, the procedural aspects of the inquiries are regulated in several paragraphs of the law, including the treatment of gathered information and when it is to be destroyed.¹¹² Based on this, the Swedish law should be considered in line with the criteria in the case law of the Court. Similar provisions can also be found in the Swedish law on measures counteracting specifically grouse crimes and in the Swedish law on wiretapping in closed area, which render them coherent with the obligations under the Convention.

The Swedish law on signal intelligence was criticised in its preparatory works before it was adopted, on grounds of not being compatible with Article 8 and 13 of the Convention. Svenska avdelningen av internationella juristkommissionen (the Swedish part of the International Commission of Jurists) gave a statement of opinion, in which they argued that the law would not be foreseeable enough, and that it would not be proportionate to its aim. Moreover, the commission also stated that the condition of a right to an effective remedy is not fulfilled. Furthermore, Lagrådet (the Swedish Council on Legislation) stated that in order to comply with the case law of the Court, the existence of a law is not in itself enough, it must also be foreseeable. Based on this, Lagrådet claimed, in accordance with the statement of the Swedish department of the International Commission of Jurists, that the law is not foreseeable enough. They argued that the vague

¹⁰⁶ Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, no. 51772/99, ECHR 2003-IV; Ernst and Others v. Belgium, no. 33400/96, 15 July 2003

¹⁰⁷ Uzun v. Germany, no. 35623/05, ECHR 2010 (extracts)

¹⁰⁸ ibid

¹⁰⁹ Prop 2013/14:237, p.54

¹¹⁰ The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes, para 1.

¹¹¹ The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes, para 7.

¹¹² The Law on Measures Counteracting Specifically Grouse Crimes, para 11 pt 2, 13.

definition of what situations that could constitute such a crime that would result in a signal intelligence surveillance. Lagrådet did not oppose the proposition in itself, but stressed that the critique put forward should be duly noted, and taken into consideration. However, the Swedish authorities did not share this view and claimed that the case law of the ECtHR was taken into consideration in the drafting process of the law, and the majority of institutions leaving their statements of opinion approved the legislative proposal.

9. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

As mentioned above in question 1, the protection of journalistic sources is regulated in a combination of provisions which regulates the liberty of the press and grants every Swedish citizen the right to publish written works, and to exchange ideas and information in any subject, without interference by the authorities. These rights only apply if such information is given with a purpose of publication and it must be granted to a legally authorised source. There is no specific law which protects journalists from surveillance nor any legislation granting 100% anonymity regarding online communication, as stated by Dr Gustaf Lind in his report to OCHR in 2015.¹¹³

One ECHR case which is relevant for this question in the light of the Swedish similar legislation is *Klass v Germany*¹¹⁴ where Germany had a system where they could put surveillance on their citizens in order to be able to protect their country if they were suspected to commit certain kinds of crime.

The Court stated in its judgement that "Powers of secret surveillance of citizens, characterising as they do the police state, are tolerable under the Convention only in so far as strictly necessary for safeguarding the democratic institutions."

The Swedish legislation is compliant with the judgement of Klass v Germany, since it is built on the same foundation. The States do not have to grant full anonymity if it is needed to investigate in the online communication whether the State is threatened by any means.

The IP-number is the main channel regarding surveillance, since it provides information about your online activities to the relevant server and can easily be identified. During some circumstances, the internet providers are required by law to be able to provide relevant information on who uses the IP number and information connected to that. Lag (2003:389) om elektronisk kommunikation, or the Electronic Communications Act, states in chapter 6 para. 16a-16c that the Internet providers have to keep the information regarding information that is generated or used through phone, messaging and internet usage. This information can be accessed if the circumstances are such as described in The Code of Judicial Procedure chap 27 para. 19, where it either have to lead to a sentence of more than 6 months in jail, or if it is regarding hacking or severe cases of child pornography or drug-related crime. This means that if the journalist gets information through internet about this and then writes about it, the Police and/or the Courts can force the Internet provider to give out information about the relevant communication in order to investigate the case, even though an encrypted IP number has been used. Therefore, the journalists can not rely on online anonymity and encryption to protect themselves from surveillance if the topics are described in The Code of Judicial Procedure chap. 27 para. 19. There are no provisions granting that journalists or other citizens can fully rely on encryption or anonymity in the Swedish data protection laws due to above-mentioned exemptions.

¹¹³ <http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Opinion/Communications/States/Sweden.pdf>

¹¹⁴ Klass v Germany (application no. 5029/71)

10. Are whistle-blowers explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

10.1 National legislation

The term whistle-blower is not explicitly defined within Swedish legislation, but in a governmental investigation on the subject from 2014, it is understood to be a “worker whom sheds light on work related abuses or other ill-treatments”. Within a jurisprudential context, such a person is called a “messenger” in cases revolving liberty of the press, and “informer” within criminal law.¹¹⁵

As mentioned in question 1, every Swedish citizen has the right to spread ideas and information in any subject and in any forum without being censored or legally implicated by the authorities.¹¹⁶ However, this right can be restricted by regulations of confidentiality in other laws for example¹¹⁷ the Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act, Offentlighet- och sekretesslagen, which applies for public companies whereas private companies use contracts as a means of assuring the discretion of their employees.¹¹⁸ Such clauses of secrecy cannot be too far-reaching according to the Contracts Act, Avtalslagen,¹¹⁹ and they cannot be contrary to general contractual customs.¹²⁰ Furthermore, within the public sector, it is not allowed for the authorities to research on the identity of a “messenger”.¹²¹ This is provided that the information has been spread in accordance with the prerequisites prescribed for in the Freedom of Press Act and the Fundamental Law on

¹¹⁵ SOU 2014:31 p. 50-54

¹¹⁶ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 1 para 1; The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression, ch 1 para 2 (?)

¹¹⁷ The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act 2009:400 (Offentlighets- och sekretesslagen) ch 1 para 1

¹¹⁸ SOU 2014:31 p. 72

¹¹⁹ The Contracts Act 1915:218 (Lagen om avtal och andra rättshandlingar på förmögenhetsrättens område) para 36.

¹²⁰ SOU 2014:31 p. 73

¹²¹ The Freedom of the Press Act, ch 3 para 4; The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression, ch 2 para 4.

Freedom of Expression. Thusly, whistle blowers within in the public sector have a strong protection against sanctions. Furthermore, employees within the public sector have a more extensive right to express ideas, opinions, and emotions than individuals working in the private sector. This is because public entities are bound by the Swedish constitutional laws, and as aforementioned, any restrictions on their employees' rights to freedom of expression must be prescribed by laws.¹²²

When it comes to the working relationships in the private sector, the prohibition on the inquiry of sources does not apply. Therefore, informants working for private companies are much less protected. Moreover, the constitutional liberties of providing information to the press must be weighed against the principle of loyalty, which applies in the relation between employees and their employer, and can often be found in the employment agreement. This duty is well-established within the Swedish legal system, and its founding objective is to protect companies from being harmed by the actions of their employees.¹²³ This further weakens the protection of whistle-blowers working within the private sector, since their employers legally can make investigations regarding their identity and the principle of loyalty includes confidentiality in many cases.¹²⁴ Another aspect hindering the freedom of expression in work-related matters is the law prohibiting exposure of industrial secrets; namely, *Lag (1990:409) om skydd för företagshemligheter*¹²⁵. It was created in order to protect the operational aspects of companies, and prevent disclosure of information, which could harm their competitiveness. Hence, their freedom to express ideas, opinions, and emotions is not as extensive as within the public sector.

The Swedish labour laws does not regulate the protection of whistle-blowers; however, they are safe-guarded from arbitrary dismissals.¹²⁶ The Employment Protection Act, Lag (1982:80) om anställningsskydd, regulates the conditions for rightful dismissals.¹²⁷ One of the main principles regarding dismissals, is the requisite of just cause,¹²⁸ and according to Swedish case-law, notifying public authorities can be considered a justified cause if the sole intention of the employee was to harm the private entity in question. This is closely tied to the principle of loyalty.¹²⁹ When determining whether the employee has acted disloyally, the Swedish Labor Arbitration Court will examine questions such as if the employee has notified the employer of the harmful conditions before notifying the authorities. Furthermore, the court will take in consideration if the employer has tried to remedy the remarks in question, as well as the factual circumstances of the case as a

¹²² Per Larsson, 'Whistleblowing: Förutsättningar och skydd för dem som slår larm om korruption och andra oegentligheter', (2012) Transparency International Sverige, Rapport no 1, p. 34. [Swedish]

¹²³ Folke Schmidt Löntagarbrät 1994 p. 257-; AD 1994 nr 79; AD 2003 nr 84; Ad 2012 nr 25.

¹²⁴ Bet. 1988/89:LU30, s. 110

¹²⁵ The Law Prohibiting Exposure of Industrial Secrets 1990:409 (Lag om skydd för företagshemligheter) para 1.

¹²⁶ Larsson, p 33

¹²⁷ The Employment Protection Act, para. 7-23

¹²⁸ The Employment Protection Act, para. 7

¹²⁹ AD 1986 nr 95.

whole.¹³⁰ Noticeably, the employee has a greater freedom of criticising serious instances than minor incidents.¹³¹

10.2 Compliance with ECtHR case law

In *Guja v. Moldova*¹³² the Court established that employees in the public sector might be protected by the rights set out in Article 10 when it comes to cases revolving whistle blowing.¹³³ There are six principles which are used to decide whether a restriction on a workers freedom of expression has been proportionate or not. These include whether the employee had any alternative channels of revealing the information, and if there's an underlying public interest in regards of the information. Furthermore, the truthfulness of the information must be taken into account, and so must the damage inflicted on the organisation. The whistle-blower must also have been acting in good faith, and lastly, the seriousness of the sanction imposed on the person in question must be considered. These principles apply in cases where the whistle-blower has been a public official, but in case *Heinisch v. Germany*¹³⁴ these criteria were also used. The Court further established that whistle-blowers working within private industry may invoke their right to freedom of expression in order to expose illegal conduct by their employers. In practice this means that private officials are somewhat protected when it comes to whistleblowing, but the commercial interest and reputation of the employer must be weighed against the rights of the employee under Article 10.¹³⁵

Similarly to the Swedish system, the protection for public and private officials somewhat differ within the ECtHR case law. Public officials enjoy a higher level of protection since they are safeguarded by a combination of rights, namely the freedom of providing information to the press, the confidentiality of journalists, and that their employers are prohibited from making any inquires regarding their identity. Furthermore, public officials enjoy a far-reaching freedom to express ideas, opinions, and emotions. This right can only be restricted by law, and such restrictions must also pursue a legitimate aim, and must be considered necessary in a democratic society.¹³⁶ Accordingly, the Swedish legislation ought to be in line with the prerequisites in Art 10 of ECHR, as well as the case-law of the ECtHR. Civil servants on the other hand are less protected since their employers are legally allowed to make researches, which can expose the identity of the whistle-blower. Having said that, they are still protected by journalistic confidentiality and they have the freedom to reveal work-related information. By virtue of the strengthened protection provided for in Heinisch v. Germany it is questionable whether Swedish legislation lives up to the required level of protection when it comes to whistle-blowers within ¹³⁰ AD 1986 nr 95; AD 1994 nr 79.

¹³¹ AD 1986 nr 95.

¹³² Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, ECHR 2008

¹³³ ibid § 72

¹³⁴ Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08, ECHR 2011 (extracts)

¹³⁵ ibid

¹³⁶ The Instrument of Government ch 3 para 21.

the private sector. This question has also been raised in a Swedish governmental assessment from 2014, a proposal for a new law with the purpose of strengthening the protection of workers acting as whistle-blowers in general was also made.¹³⁷ However, this has not become reality and no laws have been enacted. In summation, the protection of whistle-blowers within the private sector is far less extensive than for public officials.

10.3 CM/Rec(2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the protection of whistle-blowers

This recommendation has been addressed in the same governmental assessment, which mentioned in the previous section. According to the investigation, the proposed law would have been in explicit compliance with the aims set out in the recommendation in question, since it would ensure the same protection for both public and civil servants regardless of which form of employment they possess.¹³⁸

11. Conclusion

The main conclusion of this research is that Sweden has an extensive set of rules protecting both the journalist and its' source from investigation as long as the information does not interfere with the provisions regarding the exemptions of the right to protect journalistic sources.

Due to the civil-law characteristics of the Swedish legal system, it is mainly the Supreme Court's judgments which has precedence although there is no doctrine of stare decisis. Therefore, the case-law analysed are mainly from the Supreme Court of Sweden. When it comes to case-law dealing with this issue, one should also keep in mind that Sweden did not incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into Swedish law until 1995. The importance of the possibility for journalistic sources to be anonymous has been considered in several cases. The protection of anonymity is therefore necessary for the Freedom of the Press to fulfil its function in a democratic society. The right to anonymity is a key element in the protection of journalistic sources. If anonymity is not protected the source might choose not to communicate significant facts in the light. The protection of journalistic sources is regulated in a combination of provisions within these constitutional laws. The Freedom of Press Act regulates the liberty of the press and grants every Swedish citizen the right to publish written works, and to exchange ideas and information in any subject, without interference by the authorities. the Fundamental law on Freedom of Expression, provides a corresponding protection for the freedom of expression. These rights only apply if such information is given with a purpose of publication and it must be granted to a legally authorised source. Such a source includes for example writers, publicists and editorial staff. As for the term journalist, there is no explicit definition of the word within the Swedish legal system.

¹³⁷ SOU 2014:31 p. 207, 217-218

¹³⁸ SOU 2014:31 p. 222

Anyone can provide a newsdesk with information and be guaranteed anonymity. If the source wants to remain anonymous, the journalist is under obligation of professional secrecy. This prohibition is strong and demands the journalist as well as the editor to carefully make sure no disclosure of personal data, pictures, names of places or anything else that can reveal to the public the identity of a source. The right to anonymity is far reaching and covers also an explicit freedom of liability of criminal acts. It is only the editor of a periodic print who can never be anonymous and so it is in these cases the editor's choice to publish a certain material or not, with the risk of criminal prosecution for violation of the right to freedom of speech. Only if explicit consent has been given by the source, to reveal the identity of the source, a journalistic code of ethics can be considered to apply. The right to anonymity is protected by law and any use of a code of ethics postulates the source has first agreed to have her or his identity revealed.

For future research, it would be interesting to look further into the separation between public and private employers, where the employee of the private employer has no protection from investigation since the provision regarding this only covers employees with a public employer. In Sweden, private healthcare and social care is getting more and more popular, but with this exemption of private employees, Sweden works against itself since the aim is to provide everyone with the same protection. We see the need of a legislative change in the future in order to ensure everyone the same rights.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- Avtalslagen
- Lag (1982:80) om anställningsskydd
- Lag (1990:409) om skydd för företagshemligheter
- Lag (2007:978) om hemlig rumsavlyssning
- Lag (2007:979) om åtgärder för att förhindra vissa särskilt allvarliga brott
- Lag (2008:717) om signalspaning i försvarsunderrättelseverksamhet
- Lag (2008:854) om åtgärder för att utreda vissa samhällsfarliga brott
- Offentlighet- och sekretesslagen
- Regeringsformen
- Rättegångsbalken
- Tryckfrihetsförordningen
- Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen
- European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Council of Europe
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 19 December 1966

12.2. Case Law

- HD B 3594/14,
- NJA 2001 s 673,
- NJA 2012 s. 342
- NJA 2015 s. 166
- HovR B 776-13
- AD 1982 nr 110
- AD 1986 nr 95.
- AD 1994 nr 79;
- AD 1997 nr 57
- AD 2003 nr 84;
- AD 2012 nr 25.
- JK Beslut 2008-12-02
- Ernst and Others v. Belgium, no. 33400/96,
- Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 821/03, § 63, 15
- Goodwin v. the United Kingdom,
- Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04
- Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08,

- Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, Series A no. 298
- Klass v Germany (application no. 5029/71)
- Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, no. 51772/99,
- Tillack v. Belgium, no. 20477/05,
- Vereniging Weekblad Bluf! v. the Netherlands, 9 February 1995, Series A no. 306-A
- Voskuil v. the Netherlands, no. 64752/01
- Uzun v. Germany, no. 35623/05

12.3. Books and articles

- Axberger, Hans-Gunnar, Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagarna, upplaga två, Norstedts Juridik, 2014, [Swedish]
- Olsson, Yttrandefrihet och Tryckfrihet. Handbok för journalister, 7 edn, Studentlitteratur AB, 2012 [Swedish]
- Schmidt, Löntagar rätt, Norstedts Juridik, 1994 [Swedish]
- Warnling-Nerep, Bernitz, En orientering i Tryckfrihet och Yttrandefrihet, 5 edn., Jure Förlag AB, 2013 [Swedish]
- Prop. 1975/76:204
- Prop. 1985/86:80
- Prop. 1986/87:151
- Prop. 2011/12:179
- Prop 2013/14:237
- SOU 1990:12
- SOU 2004:114
- SOU 2014:31
- Council of Europe Publishing, 'Freedom of Expression in Europe' (Case-law concerning Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights)
- http://www.echr.coe.int/LibraryDocs/DG2/HRFILES/DG2-EN-HRFILES-%2018\(2007\).pdf.pdf)
- Per Larsson, 'Whistleblowing: Förutsättningar och skydd för dem som slår larm om korruption och andra oegentligheter', (2012) Transparency International Sverige, Rapport no 1, p. 34. [Swedish]
- Nessmar, Visselblåsare - Sverige, EKMR och Europarådet. Behövs förslaget i SOU 2014:31 rörande visselblåsare?, 2015 [Swedish]
- https://www.jur.lu.se/WEB.nsf/\(MenuItemByDocId\)/IDE20A29B6C01576DAC1257D860028EAB1/\$FILE/JUCN23%20Sebastian%20Nessmar.pdf/IDE20A29B6C01576DAC1257D860028EAB1/$FILE/JUCN23%20Sebastian%20Nessmar.pdf)
- Susic, Europakonventionens journalistiska källskydd i jämförelse med TF och YGL - källskyddets optimala effektivitet i det progressiva internetsamhället, 2013, p 44 [Swedish]
- <http://www.diva-portal.se/smash/get/diva2:694286/FULLTEXT01.pdf>

- Dag Viktor, ”Svenska domstolars hantering av Europakonventionen” (Underlag1 till ett föredrag den 17 augusti 2012 på konferens anordnad av Nordiska Föreningen för Processrätt) (Swedish)
- <http://svjt.se/svjt/2013/343>

12.4. Internet sources

- Comment by Axberger from Karnov database regarding Freedom of the Press Act ch 7 para 3, assessed on 2016-05-16
https://pro-karnovgroup-se.ezproxy.ub.gu.se/document/527360/1#SFS1949-0105_K3_P3
- European Court of Human Rights, Factsheet – Protection of journalistic sources
http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf,
- Justitiekanslern,
<http://www.jk.se/other-languages/english/>
- Nationalencyklopedin, “Allmänintresse” [Swedish]
<http://www.ne.se/uppslagsverk/encyklopedi/lang/allmanintresse>
- Nationalencyklopedin, “Journalist” [Swedish]
<http://www.ne.se/uppslagsverk/encyklopedi/l%C3%A5ng/journalist>
- Nationalencyklopedin, “Rättsväsen” [Swedish]
<http://www.ne.se/uppslagsverk/encyklopedi/l%C3%A5ng/sverige/r%C3%A4ttsv%C3%A4sen>
- <http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Opinion/Communications/States/Sweden.pdf>
- Sveriges Domstolar, the Courts (Swedish)
<http://www.domstol.se/om-sveriges-domstolar/domstolarna/>
- Sveriges Radio, Meddelarskydd och källskydd
<http://sverigesradio.se/sida/artikel.aspx?programid=4069&artikel=4380834>
- Swedish Government, The Freedom of the Press Act
<http://www.riksdagen.se/en/How-the-Riksdag-works/Democracy/The-Constitution/The-Freedom-of-the-Press-Act/>
- Swedish Government, The Instrument of Government (Swedish)
<http://www.riksdagen.se/sv/Sa-funkar-riksdagen/Demokrati/Grundlagarna/Regeringsformen/>
- Regeringskansliet, Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act
<http://www.regeringen.se/contentassets/2c767a1ae4e8469fbfd0fc044998ab78/public-access-to-information-and-secrecy-act>
- The Swedish Patent and Registration Office, Responsible Editor
<https://www.prv.se/en/our-services/periodicals/applying-for-a-certificate-of-publication/responsible-editor/>
- United Nation of the Human Rights, Office of the High Commissioner ”STATUS OF RATIFICATION INTERACTIVE DASHBOARD” <http://indicators.ohchr.org>

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Avtalslagen Lag (1982:80) om anställningsskydd 7 § Uppsägning från arbetsgivarens sida skall vara sakligt grundad. En uppsägning är inte sakligt grundad om det är skäligt att kräva att arbetsgivaren bereder arbetstagaren annat arbete hos sig. Vid en sådan övergång av ett företag, en verksamhet eller en del av en verksamhet som sägs i 6 b § skall övergången i sig inte utgöra saklig grund för att säga upp arbetstagaren. Detta förbud skall dock inte hindra uppsägningar som sker av ekonomiska, tekniska eller organisatoriska skäl där förändringar i arbetsstyrkan ingår. Om uppsägningen beror på förhållanden som hänför sig till arbetstagaren personligen, får den inte grundas enbart på omständigheter som arbetsgivaren har känt till antingen mer än två månader innan underrättelse lämnades enligt 30 § eller, om någon sådan underrättelse inte lämnats, två månader före tidpunkten för uppsägningen. Arbetsgivaren får dock grunda uppsägningen enbart på omständigheter som han har känt till mer än två månader, om tidsöverdraget berott på att han på arbetstagarens begäran eller med dennes medgivande dröjt med underrättelsen eller uppsägningen eller om det finns synnerliga skäl för att	the Contracts Act The Employment Protection Act 7 § Termination by the employer must be objectively justified. A dismissal is not objectively justified if it is reasonable to require employer prepares the employee another job in itself. At such a transfer of an undertaking, business or part of an activity that is said in § 6 b transition shall not in itself constitute just cause to terminate the employee. This prohibition, however, not preclude dismissals which take place for economic, technical or organizational reasons entailing changes in the workforce If the termination is due to conditions relating to employee personally, it may not be based solely on circumstances which the employer has known either more than two months before the notification was submitted in accordance with § 30 or, if no such notice was given, two months before the date of termination. The employer may, however, base the termination only the circumstances that he has known for more than two months, and the delay was because he was due to the employee's request or with the consent of the employee, in the notification or termination process or if there are serious reasons for circumstances may be

omständigheterna får åberopas. Lag (1990:409) om skydd för företagshemligheter Lag (2007:978) om hemlig rumsavlyssning Lag (2007:979) om åtgärder för att förhindra vissa särskilt allvarliga brott Lag (2008:717) om signalspaning i försvarsunderrättelseverksamhet Lag (2008:854) om åtgärder för att utreda vissa samhällsfarliga brott Offentlighet- och sekretesslagen 13 kap. 1 § Av 1 kap. 1 och 5 §§ tryckfrihetsförordningen och 1 kap. 1 och 2 §§ yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen framgår att var och en har rätt att meddela och offentliggöra uppgifter i vilket ämne som helst i tryckt eller därmed jämställd skrift eller i radioprogram, film, tekniska upptagningar eller därmed jämställt medium. 13 kap. 2 § I förhållandet mellan å ena sidan ett sådant organ som avses i 2 kap. 4 §, beträffande den verksamhet som anges i bilagan till denna lag, eller ett sådant organ som avses i 2 kap. 3 §, och å andra sidan organets anställda eller uppdragstagare enligt 2 kap. 1 §, gäller vad som föreskrivs i tryckfrihetsförordningen och	invoked. Act on the Protection of Trade Secrets Act on wiretapping in closed areas Act on measures counteracting specifically grouse crimes Act on signal intelligence within the military intelligence service Act on measures on the investigation on certain crimes which are harmful for the public and the state The Public Access to Information and Secrecy Act 13 chap. 1 § Under 1 chap. 1 and 5 §§ of the Freedom of the Press Act and 1 chap. 1 and 2 §§ of the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression, it is stated that everyone have the right to inform and release information on any subject in print or equal form or through radio broadcasting, film, technical recordings or through any other equal medium. 13 chap. 2 § Regarding the relationship between such an institution referred to in 2 chap. 4 § regarding the area that is mentioned in the Appendix to this law, or such an institution referred to in 2 chap. 3 § and also the employees of the institution according to 2 chap 1 §, what is stated in the Freedom of the Press Act and The Fundamental Law on Freedom of
--	---

ytrtrandefrihetsgrundlagen om <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. rätt att lämna uppgifter i vilket ämne som helst för offentliggörande, 2. förbud mot att ingripa mot bruk eller missbruk av tryckfriheten eller ytrtrandefriheten eller medverka till sådant bruk eller missbruk, och 3. förbud mot att efterforska upphovsman, meddelare, den som har utgett eller avsett att utge en framställning i tryckt skrift, den som har tillhandahållit eller avsett att tillhandahålla en framställning för offentliggörande i ett radioprogram eller en teknisk upptagning och den som har framträtt i en sådan framställning. 	Expression if <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. the right to provide information regarding any subject in order to release it to the public, 2. Prohibition regarding intervention against usage or misuse of the Freedom of the Press or the Freedom of Expression or assistance to the usage or misuse, and 3. Prohibition regarding investigation of an author, source, the publisher or who has the intention of publishing a printed matter, the one providing or who has the intention of publishing information through a radio broadcast or a technical recording and the ones participating in such a publication.
Regeringsformen 1 kap. 1 § All offentlig makt i Sverige utgår från folket. Den svenska folkstyrelsen bygger på fri åsiktsbildning och på allmän och lika rösträtt. Den förverkligas genom ett representativt och parlamentariskt statsskick och genom kommunal självstyrelse. Den offentliga makten utövas under lagarna. 2 kap. 19 § Lag eller annan föreskrift får inte meddelas i strid med Sveriges åtaganden på grund av den europeiska konventionen angående skydd för de mänskliga rättigheterna och de grundläggande friheterna.	The Instrument of Government 1 chap. para. 1 All public power in Sweden proceeds from the people. Swedish democracy is founded on the free formation of opinion and on universal and equal suffrage. It shall be realised through a representative and parliamentary polity and through local self-government. Public power shall be exercised under the law. 2 chap. para. 19 No act of law or other provision may be adopted which contravenes Sweden's undertakings under the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

Rättegångsbalken 27 kap. 19 § (..) Hemlig övervakning av elektronisk kommunikation får användas vid en förundersökning om <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. brott för vilket det inte är föreskrivet lindrigare straff än fängelse i sex månader, 2. dataintrång enligt 4 kap. 9 c § brottsbalken, barnpornografibrott enligt 16 kap. 10 a § brottsbalken som inte är att anse som ringa, narkotikabrott enligt 1 § narkotikastrafflagen (1968:64), narkotikasmuggling enligt 6 § första stycket lagen (2000:1225) om straff för smuggling, 3. brott som avses i 2 § andra stycket 2–7, eller 4. försök, förberedelse eller stämpling till brott som avses i 1–3, om en sådan gärning är belagd med straff. 	The Code of Judicial Procedure 27 chap. para. 19 (..) Secret tele-surveillance may be used in the preliminary investigation of: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. offences in respect of which a less severe sentence than six months imprisonment is not prescribed; 2. offences in violation of the 4th chapter 9c § of the Swedish Penal Code, child pornography crime not considered as petty according to 16th chapter 10a § of the Swedish Penal code, Penal Law on Narcotics (1968:64), 1 §, or narcotics offences in violation of the Law on Penalties for the Smuggling of Goods (1960:418), 6 § 1st Section; or 3. Crimes referred to in 2 § 2nd section part 2-7, or 4. Attempt, preparation, or conspiracy to commit an offence stated in 1-3 in respect of which a sentence is prescribed.
Tryckfrihetsförordningen 1 § Med tryckfrihet förstås varje svensk medborgares rätt att, utan några av myndighet eller annat allmänt organ i förväg lagda hinder, utgiva skrifter, att sedermera endast inför laglig domstol kunna tilltalas för deras innehåll, och att icke i annat fall kunna straffas därför, än om detta innehåll strider mot tydlig lag, given att bevara allmänt lugn, utan att återhålla allmän upplysning.	The Freedom of the Press Act 1 chap. 1 § The freedom of the press is understood to mean the right of every Swedish citizen to publish written matter, without prior hindrance by a public authority or other public body, and not to be prosecuted thereafter on grounds of its content other than before a lawful court, or punished therefor other than because the content contravenes an express provision of law, enacted to preserve public order without

I överensstämmelse med de i första stycket angivna grunderna för en allmän tryckfrihet och till säkerställande av ett fritt meningsutbyte och en allsidig upplysning skall det stå varje svensk medborgare fritt att, med iakttagande av de bestämmelser som äro i denna förordning meddelade till skydd för enskild rätt och allmän säkerhet, i tryckt skrift yttra sina tankar och åsikter, offentliggöra allmänna handlingar samt meddela uppgifter och underrättelser i vad ämne som helst. Det skall ock stå envar fritt att, i alla de fall då ej annat är i denna förordning föreskrivet, meddela uppgifter och underrättelser i vad ämne som helst för offentliggörande i tryckt skrift till författare eller annan som är att anse som upphovsman till framställning i skriften, till skriftens utgivare eller, om för skriften finnes särskild redaktion, till denna eller till företag för yrkesmässig förmedling av nyheter eller andra meddelanden till periodiska skrifter. Vidare skall envar äga rätt att, om ej annat följer av denna förordning, anskaffa uppgifter och underrättelser i vad ämne som helst för att offentliggöra dem i tryckt skrift eller för att lämna meddelande som avses i föregående stycke.	suppressing information to the public. In accordance with the principles set out in paragraph one concerning freedom of the press for all, and to secure the free exchange of opinion and availability of comprehensive information, every Swedish citizen shall be free, subject to the rules contained in this Act for the protection of private rights and public safety, to express his thoughts and opinions in print, to publish official documents and to communicate information and intelligence on any subject whatsoever. All persons shall likewise be free, unless otherwise provided in this Act, to communicate information and intelligence on any subject whatsoever, for the purpose of publication in print, to an author or other person who may be deemed to be the originator of material contained in such printed matter, the editor or special editorial office, if any, of the printed matter, or an enterprise which professionally purveys news or other information to periodical publications. All persons shall furthermore have the right, unless otherwise provided in this Act, to procure information and intelligence on any subject whatsoever, for the purpose of publication in print, or in order to communicate information under the preceding paragraph.
--	---

1 kap. 3 § För missbruk av tryckfriheten eller medverkan däri må ej någon i annan ordning eller i annat fall än denna förordning bestämmer kunna tilltalas eller dömas till ansvar eller ersättningsskyldighet eller skriften konfiskeras eller läggas under beslag.

1 kap. 5 § Denna förordning äger tillämpning å skrift, som framställts i tryckpress. Den skall ock tillämpas å skrift, som mångfaldigats genom stencilering, fotokopiering eller liknande tekniskt förfarande, om

1. utgivningsbevis gäller för skriften; eller

2. skriften är försedd med beteckning, som utvisar att den är mångfaldigad, samt i anslutning därtill tydliga uppgifter om vem som har mångfaldigat skriften och om ort och år för mångfaldigandet.

Bestämmelse i förordningen som har avseende å skrift som framställts i tryckpress eller å tryckning skall, när ej annat angives, äga motsvarande tillämpning å annan skrift, varå förordningen enligt första stycket är tillämplig, eller å mångfaldigande av sådan skrift.

Till skrift hänföres bild, även om den ej åtföljes av text.

1 chap. para. 3 No person may be prosecuted, held liable under penal law, or held liable for damages, on account of an abuse of the freedom of the press or complicity therein, nor may the publication be confiscated or impounded other than as prescribed and in the cases specified in this Act.

1 chap. para. 5 This Act applies to all written matter produced using a printing press. It shall likewise apply to written matter duplicated by stencil, photocopying, or other like technical process, provided

1. a valid certificate of no legal impediment to publication exists in respect of the written matter; or

2. the written matter is supplied with a note indicating that it has been duplicated and, in association therewith, clear information concerning the identity of the person who duplicated it and the year and place of duplication.

Rules in this Act which refer to written matter produced using a printing press, or to printing, shall apply in like manner to other written matter to which the Act applies under paragraph one, or to the duplication of such matter, unless otherwise indicated.

Pictorial matter is classified as written matter even when there is no accompanying text.

3 kap. 3 § Den som har tagit befattning med tillkomsten eller utgivningen av tryckt skrift eller med framställning som var avsedd att införas i tryckt skrift och den som har varit verksam inom företag för utgivning av tryckta skrifter eller inom företag för yrkesmässig förmedling av nyheter eller andra meddelanden till periodiska skrifter får inte röja vad han därvid erfarit om vem som är författare eller har lämnat meddelande enligt 1 kap. 1 § tredje stycket eller är utgivare av skrift som inte är periodisk. Tystnadsplikten enligt första stycket gäller inte <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. om den till vars förmån tystnadsplikten gäller har samtyckt till att hans identitet röjs,2. om fråga om identiteten får väckas enligt 2 § första stycket,3. om det rör sig om brott som anges i 7 kap. 3 § första stycket 1,4. i den mån domstol, när det är fråga om brott enligt 7 kap. 2 § eller 3 § första stycket 2 eller 3, finner det erforderligt, att vid förhandling uppgift lämnas, huruvida den som är tilltalad eller skäligen misstänkt för den brottsliga gärningen har lämnat meddelandet eller medverkat till framställningen, eller	3 chap. para. 3 A person who has engaged in the production or publication of printed matter, or material intended for insertion therein, and a person who has been active in an enterprise for the publication of printed matter, or an enterprise which professionally purveys news or other material to periodicals, may not disclose what has come to his knowledge in this connection concerning the identity of an author, a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, or an editor of non-periodical printed matter. The duty of confidentiality under paragraph one shall not apply <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. if the person in whose favour the duty of confidentiality operates has given his consent to the disclosure of his identity;2. if the question of identity may be raised under Article 2, paragraph one;3. if the matter concerns an offence specified in Chapter 7, Article 3, paragraph one, point 1;4. unless, where the matter concerns an offence under Chapter 7, Article 2 or 3, paragraph one, point 2 or 3, a court of law deems it necessary for information to be produced during the proceedings as to whether the defendant, or the person
---	---

5. i den mån domstol i annat fall av hänsyn till ett allmänt eller enskilt intresse finner det vara av synnerlig vikt att uppgift om identiteten lämnas vid vittnesförhör eller förhör med en part under sanningsförsäkran.

Vid förhör som avses i andra stycket 4 eller 5 skall rätten noga vaka över att frågor inte ställs som kan inkräkta på tystnadsplikten utöver vad som i varje särskilt fall är medgivet.

3 kap 4 § En myndighet eller ett annat allmänt organ får inte efterforska författaren till framställning som införts eller varit avsedd att införas i tryckt skrift, den som utgett eller avsett att utge framställning i sådan skrift eller den som lämnat meddelande enligt 1 kap. 1 § tredje stycket, i vidare mån än vad som erfordras för åtal eller annat ingripande mot honom som inte står i strid med denna förordning. Får efterforskning förekomma, ska den i 3 § angivna tystnadsplikten beaktas.

Inte heller får en myndighet eller ett annat allmänt organ ingripa mot någon för att han eller hon i en tryckt skrift har brukat sin tryckfrihet eller medverkat till ett sådant suspected on reasonable grounds of the offence, has communicated information or contributed to an item; or

5. unless, in any other case, a court of law deems it to be of exceptional importance, having regard to a public or private interest, for information as to identity to be produced in testimony under oath or in testimony by a party in the proceedings under an affirmation made in lieu of oath.

In examination under paragraph two, point 4 or 5, the court shall scrupulously ensure that no questions are put which might encroach upon a duty of confidentiality in excess of what is permissible in each particular case.

3 chap. para. 4 No public authority or other public body may inquire into the identity of the author of material inserted, or intended for insertion, in printed matter, a person who has published, or who intends to publish, material in such matter, or a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, except insofar as this is necessary for the purpose of such prosecution or other action against him as is not contrary to the provisions of this Act. In cases in which such inquiries may be made, the duty of confidentiality under Article 3 shall be respected.

No public authority or other public body may intervene against someone because he or she has used the right of Freedom of Press in a printed media or has contributed

bruk. 7 kap. 3 § Om någon lämnar meddelande, som avses i 1 kap. 1 § tredje stycket, eller, utan att svara enligt 8 kap., medverkar till framställning, som är avsedd att införas i tryckt skrift, såsom författare eller annan upphovsman eller såsom utgivare och därigenom gör sig skyldig till <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. högförräderi, spioneri, grovt spioneri, grov obehörig befattning med hemlig uppgift, uppror, landsförräderi, landssvек eller försök, förberedelse eller stämpling till sådant brott; 2. oriktigt utlämnande av allmän handling som ej är tillgänglig för envar eller tillhandahållande av sådan handling i strid med myndighets förbehåll vid dess utlämnande, när gärningen är uppsåtlig; eller 3. uppsåtligt åsidosättande av tystnadsplikt i de fall som angivas i särskild lag, gäller om ansvar för sådant brott vad i lag är stadgat. Om någon anskaffar uppgift eller underrättelse i sådant syfte som avses i 1 kap. 1 § fjärde stycket och därigenom gör sig skyldig till brott som anges i förevarande paragrafs första stycke 1, gäller om ansvar härför vad i lag är stadgat. Det som föreskrivs i 2 kap. 22 § första stycket regeringsformen ska gälla också i fråga om förslag till föreskrifter som avses i första	to such. 7 chap. para. 3 If a person communicates information under Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph three, or if, without being responsible under the provisions of Chapter 8, he contributes to material intended for insertion in printed matter, as author or other originator or as editor, thereby rendering himself guilty of <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. high treason, espionage, gross espionage, gross unauthorised trafficking in secret information, insurrection, treason or betrayal of country, or any attempt, preparation or conspiracy to commit such an offence; 2. wrongful release of an official document to which the public does not have access, or release of such a document in contravention of a restriction imposed by a public authority at the time of its release, where the act is deliberate; or 3. deliberate disregard of a duty of confidentiality, in cases specified in a special act of law; provisions of law concerning liability for such an offence apply. If a person procures information or intelligence for a purpose referred to in Chapter 1, Article 1, paragraph four, thereby rendering himself guilty of an offence under paragraph one, point 1 of this Article, provisions of law concerning liability for such an offence apply. The provisions of Chapter 2, Article 12, paragraph three of the Instrument of
---	---

stycket 3. 9 kap. 2 § Justitiekanslern är ensam åklagare i mål om tryckfrihetsbrott. Ej må annan än Justitiekanslern inleda förundersökning rörande tryckfrihetsbrott. Endast Justitiekanslern och rätten äga besluta om tvångsmedel med anledning av misstanke om sådant brott, om ej annat är föreskrivet i denna förordning. Regeringen äger hos Justitiekanslern anmäla skrift till åtal för tryckfrihetsbrott. I lag må föreskrivas att allmänt åtal för tryckfrihetsbrott må väckas endast efter regeringens medgivande. Justitiekanslern är tillika ensam åklagare i annat tryckfrihetsmål än mål om tryckfrihetsbrott samt i mål som eljest avser brott mot bestämmelse i denna förordning; om befogenhet för Riksdagens ombudsman att vara åklagare i mål som nu angivits gäller dock vad i lag är stadgat. Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen 1 kap. 1 § Varje svensk medborgare är gentemot det allmänna tillförsäkrad rätt enligt denna grundlag att i ljudradio, television och vissa liknande överföringar, offentliga uppspelningar ur en databas samt filmer, videogram, ljudupptagningar och andra tekniska upptagningar offentligen	Government shall apply also in respect of proposals for provisions under paragraph one, point 3. 9 chap. para. 2 The Chancellor of Justice is sole prosecutor in cases concerning offences against the freedom of the press. No one other than the Chancellor of Justice may institute prejudicial inquiries concerning offences against the freedom of the press. Only the Chancellor of Justice and the court of law may approve coercive measures on suspicion that such an offence has been committed, unless otherwise provided in this Act. The Government has the right to report printed matter to the Chancellor of Justice for prosecution on account of an offence against the freedom of the press. It may be laid down in an act of law that public criminal proceedings on account of an offence against the freedom of the press may be instituted only with the Government's consent. The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression 1 chap. para. 1 Every Swedish citizen is guaranteed the right under this Fundamental Law, vis-à-vis the public institutions, publicly to express his thoughts, opinions and sentiments, and in general to communicate information on any subject whatsoever on sound radio, television and certain like transmissions, films, video recordings, sound uttrycka tankar, åsikter och känslor och i övrigt lämna uppgifter i vilket ämne som helst.
--	--

Yttrandefriheten enligt denna grundlag har till ändamål att säkra ett fritt meningsutbyte, en fri och allsidig upplysning och ett fritt konstnärligt skapande. I den får inga andra begränsningar göras än de som följer av denna grundlag.

Vad som sägs i grundlagen om radioprogram gäller förutom program i ljudradio också program i television och innehållet i vissa andra överföringar av ljud, bild eller text som sker med hjälp av elektromagnetiska vågor samt innehållet i vissa offentliga uppspelningar ur en databas.

Med tekniska upptagningar avses i denna grundlag upptagningar som innehåller text, bild eller ljud och som kan läsas, avlyssnas eller på annat sätt uppfattas endast med tekniskt hjälpmedel.

Med databas avses i denna grundlag en samling av information lagrad för automatiserad behandling.

1 kap. 6 § Grundlagen är tillämplig på sändningar av radioprogram som är riktade till allmänheten och avsedda att tas emot med tekniska hjälpmedel. Som sändningar av radioprogram anses också tillhandahållande till allmänheten på särskild begäran av direktsända eller inspelade program, om starttidpunkten och innehållet inte kan påverkas av mottagaren.

I fråga om radioprogram som förmedlas genom satellitsändning som utgår från Sverige gäller vad som i denna grundlag recordings and other technical recordings.

The purpose of freedom of expression under this Fundamental Law is to secure the free exchange of opinion, free and comprehensive information, and freedom of artistic creation. No restriction of this freedom shall be permitted other than such as follows from this Fundamental Law.

References in this Fundamental Law to radio programmes shall apply also to television programmes and to the content of certain other transmissions of sound, pictures or text made using electromagnetic waves, as well as to sound radio programmes.

Technical recordings are understood in this Fundamental Law to mean recordings containing text, pictures or sound which may be read, listened to or otherwise comprehended only using technical aids.

Database is understood in this Fundamental Law to mean a corpus of information stored for the purpose of automatic data processing.

1 chap. para. 6 This Fundamental Law applies to transmissions of radio programmes which are directed to the general public and intended for reception using technical aids. Such transmissions of radio programmes are understood to include also the provision of direct broadcasts and recorded programmes taken from a database.

In the case of radio programmes transmitted by satellite and emanating from Sweden, the provisions of this Fundamental Law concerning radio programmes in general

föreskrivs om radioprogram i allmänhet. I lag får föreskrivas om undantag från denna grundlag i fråga om radioprogram som huvudsakligen är avsedda att tas emot utomlands och radioprogram som sänds genom tråd men inte är avsedda att tas emot av någon större allmänhet. Sådant undantag får dock inte gälla vad som föreskrivs i 2 och 3 §§ 2 kap. 1 § Upphovsmannen till ett radioprogram eller en teknisk upptagning är inte skyldig att röja sin identitet. Detsamma gäller den som har framträtt i en sådan framställning och den som har lämnat en uppgift enligt 1 kap. 2 §. 2 kap. 3 § Den som har tagit befattning med tillkomsten eller spridningen av en framställning som utgjort eller varit avsedd att ingå i ett radioprogram eller en teknisk upptagning och den som har varit verksam på en nyhetsbyrå får inte röja vad han därvid har fått veta om vem som är upphovsman till framställningen eller har tillhandahållit den för offentliggörande eller om vem som har framträtt i den eller lämnat uppgifter enligt 1 kap. 2 §. Tystnadsplikten enligt första stycket gäller inte <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. om den till vars förmån tystnadsplikten gäller har samtyckt till att hans identitet röjs, 2. om fråga om identiteten får väckas enligt 2 	apply. Exceptions from this Fundamental Law in respect of radio programmes intended primarily for reception abroad and radio programmes transmitted by landline but not intended for reception by a wider public may be laid down in law. Such exceptions may not however relate to the provisions of Articles 2 and 3. 2 chap. para. 1 The originator of a radio programme or technical recording is not obliged to disclose his identity. The same applies to a person taking part in such an item and to a person who has communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 2. 2 chap. para. 3 A person who has been concerned in the production or dissemination of an item comprising or intended to form part of a radio programme or technical recording and a person who has been active in a news agency may not disclose what has come to his knowledge in this connection concerning the identity of the person who originated the item or made it available for publication, took part in it or communicated information under Chapter 1, Article 2. The duty of confidentiality under paragraph one does not apply <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. if the person in whose favour the duty of confidentiality operates has given his consent to the disclosure of his identity; 2. if the question of identity may be raised
---	---

§ andra stycket, 3. om det rör sig om brott som anges i 5 kap. 3 § första stycket 1, 4. i den mån domstol, när det är fråga om brott enligt 5 kap. 2 § eller 3 § första stycket 2 eller 3, finner det erforderligt att vid förhandling uppgift lämnas, huruvida den som är tilltalad eller skäligen misstänkt för den brottsliga gärningen är den till vars förmån tystnadsplikten enligt första stycket gäller, eller 5. i den mån domstol i annat fall av hänsyn till ett allmänt eller enskilt intresse finner det vara av synnerlig vikt att uppgift om identiteten lämnas vid vittnesförhör eller förhör med en part under sanningsförsäkran. Vid förhör som avses i andra stycket 4 eller 5 skall rätten noga vaka över att frågor inte ställs som kan inkräkta på tystnadsplikten utöver vad som i varje särskilt fall är me	under Article 2, paragraph two; 3. if the matter concerns an offence specified in Chapter 5, Article 3, paragraph one, point 1; 4. unless, where the matter concerns an offence under Chapter 5, Article 2 or 3, paragraph one, point 2 or 3, a court of law deems it necessary for information to be produced during the proceedings as to whether the defendant, or the person suspected on reasonable grounds of the offence, is the person in whose favour the duty of confidentiality operates under paragraph one; or 5. unless, in any other case, a court of law deems it to be of exceptional importance, having regard to a public or private interest, for information as to identity to be produced in testimony under oath or testimony by a party in the proceedings under an affirmation made in lieu of oath. In examination under paragraph two, point 4 or 5, the court shall scrupulously ensure that no questions are put which might encroach upon a duty of confidentiality in excess of what is permissible in each particular case.
--	---

ELSA TURKEY

Contributors

National Coordinator

Deniz Yagzan

National Academic Coordinator

Sibel İnceođlu

Ulař Karan

National Researchers

Ataberk Özcan

Ayře Özge Erceiř

Ecem Kumsal Bařyurt

Süleyman Yasir Zorlu

Yasemin Seękin

Introduction to Freedom of Expression in Turkey

Every individual has the right to be informed, have access to news, freedom of thought, expression, and the right to criticise freely. Journalists' rights constitute the basis of the public's right to be informed and its freedom of expression. Freedom of expression constitutes the primary and basic element of the public order of a democratic society and freedom of press and publication, which is the main tool of freedom of thought and expression, is one of the basic human rights. It is a general rule that these rights should be guaranteed by the constitution in a democratic state.¹ This right constitutes the foundation of a democratic society and an indispensable requirement for its progress and the development of every individual. Free, independent and pluralist media are a necessary condition of any true democratic society. Democracy and good governance require accountability and transparency and, in this respect, media play an essential role in the public's scrutiny of public and private sectors in society.²

Journalists have the right of free access to all sources of information and the right to observe and research all phenomena that affect public life or are of interest to the public. This occupation group can refuse to answer information received by them or give evidence or specific questions because of the location of their profession.

The right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information is a professional privilege, intended to encourage sources to provide journalists with important information which they would not give without a commitment to confidentiality. According to the principle of protection of sources, the journalists cannot be enforced to reveal his or her sources or testify about them. The journalist may reveal the identity of his or her source in cases where he or she has been clearly deceived by the source.

On the basis of the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights' case-law, member States have both negative and positive obligations to protect journalists. Not only must they refrain from intimidating political declarations or judicial practices against media actors, they also have the duty to actively grant them full protection of the law and the judiciary in order to create an enabling environment for their journalistic activities. To achieve implementation of the Council of Europe standards in all member States, a strong and specific legal framework is needed, along with an effective enforcement of the protection of media actors by the judiciary.³

The European Court of Human Rights has repeatedly emphasised that Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights safeguards not only the substance and contents of information and ideas, but also the means of transmitting it. The press has been accorded the broadest scope of protection in the Court's case-law, including with regard to confidentiality of journalistic sources.

¹ Turkish Journalists Declaration of Rights and Responsibilities

² Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).

³ <http://www.coe.int/en/web/freedom-expression/safety-of-journalists>

“Protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom. ... Without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result the vital public-watchdog role of the press may be undermined, and the ability of the press to provide accurate and reliable information be adversely affected. ... An order of source disclosure ... cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest.”⁴

Disclosure of sources is one of the more tricky areas for media lawyers and journalists. But the importance of sources to journalists cannot be understated: they are a reporter's meat and drink. Even more so is the confidential source, who asks for anonymity because more often than not they are an insider, a cuckoo in the nest, and whose job or livelihood may be at risk if they are identifiable.

Journalists would find it difficult to gain access to places and situations where they can report on matters of public interest and fulfill their role as watchdogs if they cannot when necessary give a strong and genuine promise of confidentiality to their sources. If they cannot guarantee a source's anonymity, then they may not be able to report at all.

As Lord Denning said, in a 1981 case (British Steel Corporation v Granada Television Ltd):

“If [newspapers] were compelled to disclose their sources, they would soon be bereft of information which they ought to have. Their sources would dry up. Wrongdoing would not be disclosed. Charlatans could not be exposed. Unfairness would go unremedied. Misdeeds in the corridors of power, in companies or in government departments would never be known.”⁵

1. Does the national legislation provide (explicit or otherwise) protection of the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information? What type of legislation provides this protection? How exactly is this protection construed in national law?

Despite legal protections, media freedom in Turkey has steadily deteriorated over the last five years. Since 2013, Freedom House ranks Turkey as "Not Free". Reporters Without Borders rank

⁴ http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf

⁵ <http://journalism.cmpf.eu.eu/discussions/on-protection-of-journalistic-sources/>

Turkey at the 149th place over 180 countries, between Mexico and DR Congo, with a score of 44.16. In the third quarter of 2015, Bianet recorded a strengthening of attacks on the opposition media during AKP interim government, with the censorship of 101 websites, 40 Twitter accounts, 178 news; attacks against 21 journalists, three media organs, and one printing house; civil pursuits against 28 journalists; and the six-fold increase of arrests of media representatives, with 24 journalists and 9 distributors imprisoned.⁶

According to Freedom House

“The government enacted new laws that expanded both the state’s power to block websites and the surveillance capability of the National Intelligence Organization (MIT). Journalists faced unprecedented legal obstacles as the courts restricted reporting on corruption and national security issues. The authorities also continued to aggressively use the penal code, criminal defamation laws, and the antiterrorism law to crack down on journalists and media outlets. Verbal attacks on journalists by senior politicians—including Recep Tayyip Erdoğan, the incumbent prime minister who was elected president in August—were often followed by harassment and even death threats against the targeted journalists on social media. Meanwhile, the government continued to use the financial and other leverage it holds over media owners to influence coverage of politically sensitive issues. Several dozen journalists, including prominent columnists, lost their jobs as a result of such pressure during the year, and those who remained had to operate in a climate of increasing self-censorship and media polarisation.”

Constitutional guarantees of press freedom and freedom of expression are only partially upheld in practice. They are generally undermined by provisions in the penal code, the criminal procedure code, and the harsh, broadly worded antiterrorism law that effectively leave punishment of normal journalistic activity to the discretion of prosecutors and judges.

Article 285 of the Turkish Penal Code (TPC) criminalises the ‘violation of confidentiality.’ Article 288 of the TPC criminalises ‘influencing the independence of the judiciary.’ These Articles have been used to prosecute journalists reporting on the same criminal activities that are the subject of witness protection laws.

For example, in 2007, thousands of cases were filed against journalists for claimed violations of the TPC when reporting on the criminal behavior of the Ergenekon (a criminal network accused of various terrorist activities). Turkish newspapers, the Zaman Daily, the Star Daily and the Yeni Saraf are currently involved in up to 185, 150 and 100 court cases respectively in relation to claimed breaches of confidentiality in reporting on the Ergenekon.

⁶ <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-press/2015/turkey>

Moreover, in Turkish Legislation, the sanctions on the right of non-disclosure and the protections on this matter are as followed:

- Turkish Press Law, Article 12 states that “the owner of periodicals, responsible manager and the author cannot be forced to disclose their source of information and testify in the law court.”
- Constitution of Rep. of Turkey, Article XXVI Section II: (As amended on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709) The exercise of these freedoms may be restricted for the purposes of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary.

At the Parliamentary Justice Commission in May 2012, it was recommended that harsher penalties of two to five years imprisonment be adopted for journalists who report on secretly taped voice recordings posted online by whistle-blowers.

Further to this, News Source of Turkish Press Law Article 12 states that “the owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication cannot be forced to either disclose their news sources or to legally testify on this issue.” Under this article, academicians and legal workers consider the core of the definition of journalistic source.

2. Is there, in domestic law, a provision that prohibits a journalist from disclosing his/her sources? How exactly is this prohibition construed in national law? What is the sanction?

News Source of Turkish Press Law Article 12 states that “the owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication cannot be forced to either disclose their news sources or to legally testify on this issue.” According to this article, district attorney (turkish : savcı) and court may ask for the sources of journalists, however, shall not force journalists to disclose their sources and moreover, journalists have all right to deny courts’ request on the disclosure of the journalistic sources.

In addition to that, there are several articles under the Turkish Criminal Code, concerning prohibitions of the disclosure of journalistic sources. These are as follows:

Turkish Criminal Code, Article CXXIV

- Section I: In case of unlawful prevention of communication among the persons, the offender is sentenced to imprisonment from six years to two years or imposed punitive fine.

- Section II: Any person who unlawfully prevents communication among the public institutions is punished with imprisonment from one year to five years.
- Section III: Punishment is imposed according to the provisions of second subsection in case of unlawful prevention of broadcasts or announcements of all kinds of press and publication organs.
- Turkish Criminal Code, Article CXXXII
 - Section I: Any person who violates secrecy of communication between the parties is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine. If violation of secrecy is realized by recording of contents of communication, the party involved in such act is sentenced to imprisonment from one year to three years.
 - Section II: Any person who unlawfully publicizes the contents of communication between the persons is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years.
 - Section III: Any person who openly discloses the content of the communication between himself and others without obtaining their consent, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years,
 - Section IV: The punishment determined for this offense is increased by one half in case of disclosure of contents of communication between the individuals through press and broadcast.
- Turkish Criminal Code, Article CXXXIII:
 - Section I: Any person who listens non general conversations between the individuals without the consent of any one of the parties or records these conversations by use of a recorder, is punished with imprisonment from two months to six months.
 - Section II: Any person who records a conversation in a meeting not open to public without the consent of the participants by use of recorder, is punished with imprisonment up to six months, or imposed punitive fine.
 - Section III: Any person who derives benefit from disclosure of information obtained unlawfully as declared above, or allowing others to obtain information in this manner, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine up to thousand days.
- Turkish Criminal Code, Article CXXXVI
 - Section I: Any person who unlawfully delivers data to another person, or publishes or acquires the same through illegal means is punished with imprisonment from one year to four years.

Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982

Article 8: The information and documents that are published or disclosed to the public either through publication, brochure, proclamation or other similar means, may not be made the subject of an application for access to information. However, the applicant will be informed of the date, the means and the place of the publication or disclosure of the information or the document.

Article 16: The information and documents which qualify as state secrets which their disclosure clearly cause harm to the security of the state or foreign affairs or national defence and national security are out of the scope of the right to information provided herein.

Article 17: The information or documents of which their disclosure cause harm to the economical interests of the state or will cause unfair competition or enrichment, are out of the scope of this law.

Article 19: The information or the document that is related to the administrative investigation held by the administrative authorities and which will;

- a) clearly violate the right of privacy of the individuals,
- b) endanger the security or the life of the individuals or the officials that carry out the investigation,
- c) jeopardise the security of the investigation,
- d) disclose the source of the information which needs to be kept secret, or endanger the procurement of similar information in connection with the investigation, are out of the scope of this Law.

Article 20: The information or the document of which its disclosure or untimely disclosure will

- a) give rise to a criminal offence,
- b) endanger prevention and investigation of the crime or endanger the legal procedure for the detention and the prosecution of the criminals,
- c) obstruct the proper operation judicial duty.
- d) violate right to fair trial of a defendant in a pending case

are out of the scope of this law.

Article 21: With the provision where the consent of the concerned individual has been received, the information and documents that will unjustly interfere with the health records, private and family life, honour and dignity, and the economical and professional interests of an individual, are out of the scope of the right to information.

Due to public interest considerations, personal information or documents may be disclosed by the institutions on the condition that concerned individual is notified of the disclosure at least 7 days in advance and his/her written consent is obtained.

3. Who is a “journalist” according to the national legislation? Is it in your view a restricted definition for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources? What is the scope of protection of other media actors? Is the protection of journalists’ sources extended to anyone else?

According to the Turkish Press Labor Law No. 212, Article 1 states that:

“ This law shall apply to who is employed in all manner of literary and artistic activities at newspapers, periodical, news and photography agencies and who is working outside the statement of definition of the ‘worker’ on Turkish Labor Law.

Within the bound of this law, people who are employed in the literary and artistic activities are called journalist.”

In this context, the Turkish Journalists Declaration of Rights and Responsibilities by the Association of Turkish Journalists (TGS) which is the only trade union with the authority to negotiate collective agreements for journalists in Turkey establishes:

“Any individual whose job is to gather, process, communicate news or express opinion, ideas and views regularly at a daily or periodical printed, video, audio, electronic or digital medium employed on a fulltime, contractual or copyright basis and whose main employment and means of livelihood consist of this job, and who is defined as such by the legislation that covers the functioning of the organization at which he or she is employed is a journalist.

All enterprises functioning in the field of press and publication are obliged to recognise the rights granted to journalists by law.”⁷

By law, the union can only recruit journalists as defined under Law 212. If a media employer does not provide a contract under this law, the employee is unable to obtain a press card (i.e. the yellow card) and cannot join the TGS. The union is limited in its potential to build its membership by this legal restriction.

In accordance with Turkish law, journalists working for newspapers, periodicals, news and photography agencies and news departments of radio and television companies have the right to join the TGS. However, in addition to Law 212, the threat of victimisation and dismissal discourages union membership.

In order to further understand the scope of protection of other media actors, a further look at the elements of Turkish Press Law. According to Article 1 of the Turkish Press Law, the aim of the law is to arrange freedom of the press and the implementation and the law just covers the printing and publication of printed matter. (Turkish Press Law, No. 5187, Article 1)

Article 2 of the Law 5187 states to definitions of the elements that are covered by the law:

“The implementation of the Press Law includes the following:

- a) Printed matter: All articles, images and similar material as well as publications of news agencies printed using printing equipment or copied with other equipment with the aim of publication.
- b) The act of publication: The presentation of a published work to the public.
- c) Periodicals: Regularly published printed matter such as newspapers and magazines and the releases of news agencies.
- d) Nationwide periodicals: Periodicals published by a single press organization in at least 70% of the country, that is, in at least one province in each geographical region, and the publications of news agencies.

⁷ Turkish Journalists Declaration of Rights and Responsibilities(1998) [Electronic Version].

- e) Regional periodicals: Periodicals printed by a single press organization and published in at least three neighboring provinces or in at least one geographical region.
- f) Local periodicals: Periodicals published in a single settlement, and nationwide or regional periodicals published on a weekly basis or at longer intervals.
- g) The form of the publication: It must be indicated whether these periodicals are nationwide, regional or local.
- h) Non-periodicals: Printed matter such as books, presents which are not published at regular intervals.
- i) Owner of the material: The individual who writes the news or the text which forms the content of the periodical or the non-periodical, the translator or the person who produces the image or the cartoon.
- j) Publisher: The real or corporate body that prepares and publishes printed matter.
- k) Printer: The real or corporate body that prints the matter with printing equipment or copies it with other equipment.
- l) Authorized representative of the corporate body: If the owner of the publication or the publisher is a corporate body, the authorized organ will designate a real person from among the managers, or the public institutions and organizations will designate a real person. ”

As is seen the law limits, enumerates and defines the actors of media, also not mentions about neither journalists' sources nor protection of journalists' sources. Likewise, there is a specific article about the protection of journalists' sources under the subject 'News Source', which is Article 12 of the Law 5187 refers to the owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication that they cannot be forced to either disclose their news sources or to legally testify on this issue. Grammatical interpretation of the law indicates the protection of journalists' sources cannot be extended to anyone else besides the people mentioned in the Article 12 of the Law 5187. It seems the definition of journalist is too restrictive because of terminological and etymological description. On the other hand there are some developments. Turkey adopted a freedom of information law in 2003. However, state secrets that may harm national security, economic interests, state investigations, or intelligence activity, or that “violate the private life of the individual,” are exempt from requests. In practice, access to official information remains challenging.

4. What are the legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources? How are the laws implemented? How are the legal safeguards combined with self-regulatory mechanisms?

The Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression, recently emphasised: “ensuring that journalists can carry out their work means not only preventing attacks against journalists and prosecuting those responsible, but also creating an environment where independent, free and pluralistic media can flourish and journalists are not placed at risk of imprisonment.” In this context, journalists should not be forced to declare their sources and they should not be punished by law.

Article 26, as amended on October 3, 2001 by Act No. 4709, states that the exercise of the freedom of expression and dissemination of thought may be restricted “for the purpose of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary”. The majority of Turkey’s violations of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) arise from the exceedingly wide “margin of appreciation” and lack of proportionality in the interpretation and implementation in delivering judgements.-

In reference to fourth principle; In legal proceedings against a journalist on grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, authorities should consider, for the purpose of establishing the truth or otherwise of the allegation, all evidence which is available to them under national procedural law and may not require for that purpose the disclosure of information identifying a source by the journalist.⁸ In that case; under which conditions the journalist will be expected to do an explanation? First of all, such a request is made only by the authorities or the people having the direct legal interest. Besides, journalists should be informed about this topic. Any sanctions against a journalist who refuses to disclose the identity of a source should only be applied by an impartial court after a fair trial, and should be subject to appeal to a higher court.⁹

5. In the respective national legislation are the limits of non-disclosure of the information in line with the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the procedures applied? Is the disclosure limited to exceptional circumstances, taking into consideration vital public or individual interests at stake? Do the authorities first search for and apply alternative measures, which adequately protect their respective rights and interests and at the same time are less intrusive with regard to the right of journalists not to disclose information?

⁸ (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)

⁹ İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>

The Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression, recently emphasised: “[e]nsuring that journalists can carry out their work means not only preventing attacks against journalists and prosecuting those responsible, but also creating an environment where independent, free and pluralistic media can flourish and journalists are not placed at risk of imprisonment.”¹⁰ In this context, journalists should not be forced to declare their sources and they should not be punished by law.

Since the case of Goodwin v UK, the European Court of Human Rights has given priority to the protection of journalistic sources as “one of the basic conditions for press freedom”. The court held that:

“Without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result, the vital public-watchdog role of the press may be undermined and the ability of the press to provide accurate and reliable information may be adversely affected. Having regard to the importance of the protection of journalistic sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potentially chilling effect an order of source disclosure has on the exercise of that freedom, such a measure cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest.”¹¹

5.1. Constitution

The freedom of expression and dissemination of thought are issued by Article 26 of Turkish Constitution, which follows as: “Everyone has the right to express and disseminate his/her thoughts and opinions by speech, in writing or in pictures or through other media, individually or collectively. This freedom includes the liberty of receiving or imparting information or ideas without interference by official authorities. This provision shall not preclude subjecting transmission by radio, television, cinema, or similar means to a system of licensing.”

As is seen, Article 26 of Constitution mentions, this freedom is not obstacle to make such as television, radio, visual and audio communication tools as well as newspapers, magazines, printed media tools by means of mass communication a subject to permission by government. Furthermore, when considered in the context of the right to disseminate thought and ideas have also arisen the close relationship of freedom of expression and press freedom.¹²

Article 26, as amended on October 3, 2001 by Act No. 4709, states that the exercise of the freedom of expression and dissemination of thought may be restricted “for the purpose of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary”. According to Demet Celik Ulusoy, the majority of Turkey’s violations of Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) arise from the exceedingly wide “margin of appreciation” and lack of proportionality in the interpretation and implementation in delivering judgements.¹³

¹⁰ Human Rights Council, Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank la Rue, 4 June 2012, A/HRC/20/17 at para 78.

¹¹ European Court of Human Rights, Goodwin v UK, Application No 17488/90, Judgment of 27 March 1996, para 39.

¹² Ulusoy, Demet Celik(2013). A Comparative Study of the Freedom of Expression in Turkey and EU. Ankara University, Faculty of Political Science The Turkish Yearbook of International Relations, 68.

Actually, there is a separate article concerning freedom of the press. Article 28 of Constitution expresses that:

“The press is free, and shall not be censored. The establishment of a printing house shall not be subject to prior permission or the deposit of a financial guarantee.”

Although the press is considered as free judicially, the State shall take the necessary measures to ensure freedom of the press and provisions of Articles 26 and 27 of Constitution shall apply as the limitation of freedom of the press.

Article 28 of the Constitution states that anyone who writes any news or articles which threaten the internal or external security of the State or the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, which tend to incite offence, riot or insurrection, or which refer to classified state secrets or has them printed, and anyone who prints or transmits such news or articles to others for the purposes above, shall be held responsible under the law relevant to these offences. Distribution may be prevented as a precautionary measure by the decision of a judge, or in case delay is deemed prejudicial, by the competent authority explicitly designated by law.

The article also refers to the limits specified by law. Except by the decision of judge issued within the limits specified by law, there would be no ban placed on the reporting of events, to ensure proper functioning of the judiciary. Article 28 of the Constitution follows as:

“Periodical and non-periodical publications may be seized by a decision of a judge in cases of ongoing investigation or prosecution of crimes specified by law; or by order of the competent authority explicitly designated by law, in situations where delay may constitute a prejudice with respect to the protection of the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, national security, public order or public morals and for the prevention of crime. The competent authority issuing the order to seize shall notify a competent judge of its decision within twenty-four hours at the latest; the order to seize shall become null and void unless upheld by a judge within forty-eight hours at the latest.

General provisions shall apply when seizing and confiscating periodicals and non-periodicals for reasons of criminal investigation and prosecution.

Periodicals published in Turkey may be temporarily suspended by court ruling if found to contain material which contravenes the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, the fundamental principles of the Republic, national security and public morals. Any publication which clearly bears the characteristics of being a continuation of a suspended periodical is prohibited; and shall be seized by decision of a judge.”

¹³ Ulusoy, Demet Celik(2013). A Comparative Study of the Freedom of Expression in Turkey and EU. Ankara University, Faculty of Political Science The Turkish Yearbook of International Relations, 68.

Besides these regulations, Articles 29 and 30 of the Constitution issue “Right to publish periodicals and non-periodicals”¹⁴ and “Protection of printing facilities”¹⁵.

According to the Principle 3 of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source must not be subject to other restrictions. However, those mentioned in Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention. In determining whether a legitimate interest in a disclosure falling within the scope of Article 10, paragraph 2 of the Convention should outweigh the public interest in not disclosing information identifying a source and competent authorities of member States must pay particular regard to the importance of the right and also the pre-eminence given to it in the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, and may only order a disclosure if there is an existence of an overriding requirement in the public interest and if circumstances are of a sufficiently vital and serious nature.

As the Principle 3 of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, freedom of expression is regulated in Article 10 of the Convention. In this regard, paragraph 2 of the article regulates the duties and responsibilities and limitation of the freedom of expression.

According to the Convention, the limitation must be based on reasons which are stated in the 2nd paragraph of the Article 10:

“...in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.”

Consequently, Constitution of the Republic of Turkey regulates this freedom and comparing with Convention, there are no excessive differences between them.

5.2. Penal Law

Constitutional guarantees of freedom of the press and expression are only partially upheld in practice. They are also generally undermined by provisions in the Penal Code and a strict Anti-Terror Law. Turkish law does not meet press freedom standards as laid out in the European ¹⁴ Art. 29; “Publication of periodicals or non-periodicals shall not be subject to prior authorization or the deposit of a financial guarantee. Submission of the information and documents specified by law to the competent authority designated by law is sufficient to publish a periodical. If these information and documents are found to contravene the laws, the competent authority shall apply to the court for suspension of publication.

The principles regarding the publication, the conditions of publication and the financial resources of periodicals, and the profession of journalism shall be regulated by law. The law shall not impose any political, economic, financial, and technical conditions obstructing or making difficult the free dissemination of news, thoughts, or opinions. Periodicals shall have equal access to the means and facilities of the State, other public corporate bodies, and their agencies. ”

¹⁵ Art. 30- “(As amended on May 7, 2004; Act No. 5170) A printing house and its annexes, duly established as a press enterprise under law, and press equipment shall not be seized, confiscated, or barred from operation on the grounds of having been used in a crime. ”

Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).¹⁶ Countries that are party to the European Council, have automatically agreed to follow ECHR and observe its regulations. The restrictive Penal Code overshadows positive reforms that have been implemented since Turkey became an EU candidate (Freedom house: 2012).

According to the Turkish Penal Code, press and broadcast are described as all kinds of written, visual, audio and electronic means used for public announcements.

Article 125 of the Penal Code refers that:

“Any person who acts with the intention to harm the honor, reputation or dignity of another person through concrete performance or giving impression of intent, is sentenced to imprisonment from three months to two years or imposed punitive fine. The offender is subject to above stipulated punishment in case of commission of offense in writing or by use of audio or visual means directed to the aggrieved party.”

According to Judgement No. 1577(2007), Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly determined some of member countries, such as Turkey and Azerbaijan, have prison sentence for offence of libel and the Assembly expressed their opinion to change the prison sentence immediately. Also, Turkey had been summoned by Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly about misuse of penal prosecution, protection of freedom of state attorneys and also to change Article 125/2 of Turkish Penal Code. Nevertheless, in practice, Article 125/3 is still applicable and as a matter of fact, nowadays people are jailed pending trial in regard to Article 299¹⁷ which regulates “Insulting President” and these practices are perturbative for the democratic constitutional state.¹⁸

Defamation cases against journalists who criticize the government have been brought by high level officials, including the Prime Minister. In 2011, 24 journalists were sentenced to a total of 21 years and nine months of imprisonment and 48,000 TL in fines in defamation cases. Two newspapers were fined to a total of 50,000 TL. The European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) found a violation of freedom of expression in their judgment of this issue in February 2012.¹⁹ Additionally, Art. 215 and 216, continue to be used against reporters and journalists. Article 216 states that:

“1) Any person who openly provokes a group of people belonging to different social class, religion, race, sect, or coming from another origin, to be rancorous or hostile

¹⁶ STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,23.

¹⁷ Article 299 of the Penal Code:” 1. Any person who publicly denigrates Turkishness, the Republic or the Grand National Assembly of Turkey shall be sentenced to 6 months to 3 years of imprisonment.

2. Any person who publicly denigrates the Government of Republic of Turkey, the judicial institutions of the State, the military or security organizations shall be sentenced to 6 months to 2 years imprisonment.

3. Where denigration of Turkishness is committed by a Turkish citizen in another country, the sentence shall be increased by one third.

4. Expression of thoughts intended to criticize shall not constitute a crime.”

¹⁸ TEZCAN/ERDEM/ONOK(2015). Ceza Özel Hukuku, p.531.

¹⁹ STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,24.

against another group, is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years in case of such act causes risk from the aspect of public safety.

(2) Any person who openly humiliates another person just because he belongs to different social class, religion, race, sect, or comes from another origin, is punished with imprisonment from six months to one year.

(3) Any person who openly disrespects the religious belief of group is punished with imprisonment from six months to one year if such act causes potential risk for public peace.”

Uygun emphasised that the cases concerning freedom of expression discussed in Article 216/1 should apply for a fourstage evaluation: a- having a characteristic hostility and inciting to hatred through the content of the expression; b- due to the characteristic of the owner of the expression (such as an important political leader) it has a provocative opinion that effects a particular segment of the population; c- The form of the announcement of the expressions (such as television broadcasting, publications in national newspapers); d- the situation made of the expression (such as the presence of intense terrorist activity).²⁰

Indecency is issued by Article 226 of the Penal Code. According to Article 226/2, the persons who publicise indecent scenes, words or articles through press and broadcast organs or act as intermediary in publication of the same is punished with imprisonment from six months to three years.

The most widely debated and criticised provision of the Penal Code has been Article 301²¹, indeed, “denigrating the Turkish nation” is considered to be a criminal offence. For instance, the offices of Ahmet Alper Görmüs, the editor of the weekly magazine Nokta, were raided, equipment searched and journalists interrogated in 2007, after it had published stories about the military blacklisting journalists based on a leaked report prepared by the Office of the Chief of General Staff. The owners of the newspaper and the editor were prosecuted for libel, while two others were charged with inciting disrespect against the military. The magazine closed under military pressure.²²

²⁰ Oktay Uygun, “Avrupa İnsan Hakları Sözleşmesi ve Türk Hukukunda İfade Özgürlüğünün Sınırlanması”,Kamu Hukuku Gncelemeleri, 2. Edition , 2013, Istanbul, p.153-154.

²¹ ARTICLE 301:”(1) Any person who agrees to serve in the army of a country which is at war with Turkish Republic, or Turkish citizen who participates in an armed attack against Turkish Republic, is punished with life imprisonment.

(2) Any citizen who undertakes commanding duty in the army of a foreign country is punished with heavy life imprisonment.

(3) In case of commission of another offense along with the offenses defined in first and second subsection, the offender is additionally punished according to the provisions relating to this offense.

(4) No punishment is imposed for the citizen who is obliged to serve in the army of a foreign country due to his presence in the territory of the enemy at the time of the war. Provocation of war against the State.”

²² JOHANSSON Morgan(2010). The protection of journalists' sources ,7. Revealed on 21.02.2016 <http://www.refworld.org/pdfid/4d87520b2.pdf>

As Orhan Pamuk said: “If we are going to enjoy freedom of expression in Turkey, Article 301 should be reconsidered. This law and another law about ‘general national interests’ were put into the new penal code as secret guns. They were not displayed to the international community but nicely kept in a drawer, ready for action in case they decided to hit someone in the head. These laws should be changed, and changed fast, before the EU and the international community puts pressure on Turkey to do so. We have to learn to reform before others warn us”.

Also Dr. Bulent Algan mentioned in his research that:

‘...In a nutshell, article 301 has great importance for not only its juridical aspect, but also political. In other words, its application can vary dramatically subject to changes in political atmosphere and legal or interpretative attitudes in the field of civil and political rights, especially in the field of freedom of expression. Legal texts in such content can easily be interpreted by adjudicators in a liberticidal and draconian manner. Its application, then, is strictly related to the structure of the state and how basic rights and their limits are understood by the sovereign powers, especially by the judiciary...’²³

According to the Turkish Penal Code, failure of public officer in notification of an offense is issued as a crime. Article 278 mentions that if any public officer neglects or delays in notification of an offense to the authorized bodies being aware of commission of an offense which requires investigation or prosecution, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years. Besides that, Article 284 states to recording of sound or vision which is also a crime that any person who records or transfers sound or vision during the investigation or prosecution without obtaining permission is sentenced to imprisonment up to six months.

5.3. Anti-Terror Law

According to Demet Ulusoy, generally the Anti-Terror Law (Law no. 3713) confronts the limitation of the freedom of expression and the judgements of oppression against Turkey in the front of the ECHR. In such cases in the front of the ECHR concerning with the Law, it must be remembered the ATL Article 6/2,²⁴ Article 6/5,²⁵ and Article Law 7/2²⁶.

ATL is the law that the case against Turkey grounded from Article 10 of the Convention causing violation articles by the ECHR in the following; Article 6, Paragraph 2; “...print or publish declarations or leaflets emanating from terrorist organisations..”, Article 6, paragraph 5:

²³ ALGAN Bulent, The Brand New Version of Article 301 of Turkish Penal Code and the Future of Freedom of Expression Cases in Turkey. Retrieved on: https://www.researchgate.net/publication/47276770_The_Brand_New_Version_of_Article_301_of_Turkish_Penal_Code_and_the_Future_of_Freedom_of_Expression_Cases_in_Turkey?enrichId=rgreq-73116d25-83d4-4c63b359627dfc9e5e62&enrichSource=Y292ZXJQYWdlOzQ3Mjc2NzZwO0FTOjI1OTM0NDE1OTczNTgwOUAxNDM4ODQzODc0MjI4&el=1_x_2 12 January 2016.

²⁴ The ECHR Gözel and Özer v. Turkey, (6 July 2010) judgement.

²⁵ Ürper and Others v. Turkey (20 of October 2009)

²⁶ Gül and Others v. Turkey, (June 8, 2010)

“Periodicals whose content openly encourages the commission of offenses within the framework of the activities of a terrorist organisation, approves of the offenses committed by a terrorist organisation or its members or constitutes propaganda in favor of the terrorist organisation may be suspended for a period of fifteen days to one month as a preventive measure by decision of a judge...”, and also Article 7; “Making propaganda for a terrorist organisation.”²⁷

Even freedom of the press and freedom of expression are constitutionally guaranteed, this may only apply partially in practice. As it always has been in Turkey is that the constitutional guarantees undermined by restrictive provisions of the laws such as Anti-Terror Law and the Penal Law.

Consequentially as Ragnhild Stav has mentioned: *Instead of having a well-functioning self-regulation mechanism, Turkey has a well-functioning governmental-regulated press. It is not well functioning in the sense that journalists themselves want it to be this way, but in the sense that the government succeed in functioning as a regulating mechanism for the press. The fact that the government regulates the press, results in a lot of self-censorship. The government regulates the press through different media laws, and through the Penal Code and the Anti-Terror Law.*²⁸

It is a positive step to include the right of journalist not to disclose journalistic sources in Turkish Press Law but unfortunately not enough. In addition to this regulation, it is required to inset a provision of journalists into Article 46 Criminal Procedure Code(TCPC)²⁹ of Turkish which regulates refraining from testimony because of professional privilege and privilege caused by permanent occupation. Because of not mentioning journalists in Article 46 of TCPC, sources that could disclose journalistic sources are not included in Article 126 of TCPC³⁰ which regulates letters and documents immune from seizure and also journalists are in danger to be tried under ²⁷ Karakaya and Özhabes, p. 14.

²⁸ STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,²⁷.

²⁹ Article 46:”The persons who have the right of refraining from taking the witness-stand because of their professions or their permanent occupations, as well as the subject matter and the conditions of refraining are listed below ;

a) The lawyers or their apprentices or assistants about the information they have learned in their professional capacity or during their judicial duty,
b) Medical doctors, dentists, pharmacist and their assistants, as well as other members of the medical profession, about their patients’ information and that of the relatives of the patients that they acquired in their capacity as a professional,
c) Certified public accountants and notary publics in respect to information of their clients that they acquired in their capacity as a professional.

(2) Except for those mentioned in the sub-section (a) of the subparagraph above, those persons shall not refrain from taking the witness-stand if the related person gives his consent.”

³⁰ Letters and documents immune from seizure Article 126: “Letters and documents communicated between the suspect or the accused and those persons capable of asserting a privilege to refrain from testimony as a witness in accordance with the provisions of Articles 45 and 46 may not be seized as long as such items are at the hands of persons who have this privilege.”

Article 278 and Article 284 of Turkish Penal Code. In recent years, several journalists were sent to jail even their crimes were not detected yet. For example, on 9 February, Claus Blok Thomsen, a Danish journalist working for daily newspaper Politiken, was detained by Turkish authorities at the Istanbul airport and then barred from entering Turkey. He was travelling to the country to report on refugees at the Turkish-Syrian border. At the airport, Thomsen allegedly identified himself as a journalist and then the police forced him to open his phone and computer, undermining the confidentiality of his sources.³¹

Various international organizations such as the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), the European Federation of Journalists and the Council of Europe (CoE) has pointed out the situation in Turkey, and has called on the government to take the necessary measures to ensure press freedom in the country.

The European Parliament published a critical report in March 2011, naming cases against journalists as 'police or judicial harassment' and expressing concern about 'the deterioration in freedom of the press, about certain acts of censorship and about growing self-censorship within the Turkish media, including on the Internet'. The Turkish Prime Minister blames the report for being biased and subjective, stating that the imprisoned journalists were behind the bars not because of their journalistic activities but 'because of their relations with terrorist organizations, and their attempts to topple the government.' Prime Minister Erdogan also protested RSF's World Press Freedom Index, which in their 2013 report rated Turkey as 154 out of 179 countries, which also means that Turkey dropped six places from 2012. Also in "The World Press Freedom Index" (WPFI) published by Reporters Without Borders (2013), they have found that in almost all parts of the world, influential countries that are regarded as "regional models" have fallen in the index. In the name of the fight against terrorism, Turkey is the country which has the most journalists in prison.³² In 2016 WPFI, Turkey has regressed 151st row.³³ Since 2013, Freedom House ranks Turkey as not free.³⁴

According to ECHR court data, the image of the freedom of expression was not considered well in the eye of the ECHR. The court has delivered a judgement that the freedom of expression was violated in 224 cases between 1959 and 2013 in Turkey. The 2nd rank belongs to the unity of 34 cases containing violations made by a government. The number of the violation of freedom of expression in Turkey in the year 2013 is only 9. The same number is 3 for the following country. Turkey took place in the 1st rank.³⁵

³¹ <http://politiken.dk/udland/ECE3064094/tilbageholdt-og-smidt-ud-politiken-journalist-bliver-kaldt-trussel-mod-tyrkiets-sikkerhed/>

³² <https://www.freedomhouse.org/sites/default/files/FOTP%202013%20Booklet%20Final%20Complete%20-%20Web.pdf>

³³ <https://rsf.org/en/turkey>

³⁴ https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Media_freedom_in_Turkey

³⁵ ECHR Reports, "Overview 1959-2013 ECHR", Violation judgments by State.

Since 1959, the European Court has sentenced Turkey for 248 violations of the freedom of expression, however, the government reactions to these rulings are reluctant. Responding to the Court's decision to overturn the ban on the social media platform Twitter in March 2014, Prime Minister Erdogan affirmed: "We have to obey the Court's decision, but we don't have to respect it. While the court sided with an American company in this decision, it denigrated our national values" (Today Zaman, 2015).

After three consecutive electoral victories by the Justice and Development Party (AKP), in 2002, 2007 and 2011, Turkey has inevitably undertaken the path towards a highly centralised executive democracy in which the state dominates society. As President Erdogan himself stated, during an interview to Milliyet, "Democracy is like a tram. You ride it until you arrive at your destination, then you step off". Today, the unparalleled power the President has gained makes us believe that he has long ago said goodbye to that tram. With the majority in parliament and an ample public consent, Erdogan keeps ruling with the upper hand on any opponent, be him peaceful or riotous (Cook, 2013).

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the following principles should be respected when the necessity of disclosure is stated: absence of reasonable alternative measures, outweighing legitimate interest (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime). Under which criteria can the interest in the disclosure outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure?

According to European Court of Human Rights's decision, the protection of journalistic sources as one of the generally accepted principles of press freedom is a fundamental principle which is reflected in the various international legal instruments; as mentioned in R (2000) The Committee of Ministers Recommendation No. 7. The most recent and comprehensive Council of Europe document in this regard is R (2000) No. 7 "Recommendation on the right of journalists not to disclose their source of information. In light of this decision except vital exceptional circumstances, there is no requirement of the journalist to disclose the source of information and news.

There is a need to provide additional information. According to Article 90 of the Turkish constitution says "International agreements duly put into effect have the force of law. No appeal to the Constitutional Court shall be made with regard to these agreements, on the grounds that they are unconstitutional. (Sentence added on May 7, 2004; Act No. 5170) In the case of a conflict between international agreements, duly put into effect, concerning fundamental rights and freedoms and the laws due to differences in provisions on the same matter, the provisions of international agreements shall prevail.

Perhaps the most crucial of Recommendation's principles is the requirement to balance interests: even when there is a strong public interest in uncovering the identity of a source, the vital function of the protection of sources in a democracy should not be overlooked.³⁶ The media depend to a large extent on members of the public for the supply of information of public interest. If it is required to talk about it, public interest according to the Random House Dictionary, is "1. the welfare or well-being of the general public; commonwealth. 2. appeal or relevance to the general populace: a news story of public interest." For instance, when an important criminal proceeding is at stake, courts may find that the public interest is better served by compelling the reporter to make evident.

Public authorities must not demand the disclosure of information identifying a source unless the requirements of Article 10, paragraph 2, of the Convention are met and unless it can be convincingly established that reasonable alternative measures to disclosure do not exist or have been exhausted, the legitimate interest in the disclosure clearly outweighs the public interest in the non-disclosure, and an overriding requirement of the need for disclosure is proved.³⁷

The disclosure of information identifying a source should therefore be limited to exceptional circumstances where vital public or individual interests are at stake and can be convincingly established. The competent authorities, requesting exceptionally the disclosure of a source, must specify the reasons why such vital interest outweighs the interest in the non-disclosure and whether alternative measures have been exhausted, such as other evidence. If sources are protected against any disclosure under national law, their disclosure must not be requested.³⁸

In this case, it is essential to recognise whether the intervention corresponds to mandatory and social requirements, is proportionate to the legitimate aim and reasons raised by the national authorities are appropriate and sufficient to justify it. The interest in disclosure should always be balanced against the harm of ordering disclosure to freedom of expression.

According to the first principle in the Recommendation; state parties should provide in their legal order, The right to freedom of expression as a "minimum standard". Governments are required to protect journalists' rights in "clear" and "in a detailed manner".

Even if required by law that explaining of a news source within the one subject to the limitations in the internal legal order; even assuming the public interest superior to the right to not disclose sources, the competent authorities of the Member States should give special attention to the importance of the right of not to disclose source of information and absolute superiority recognised to this right in the Human Rights Court case law. Well, the first condition is the news should enter to restriction indicated in paragraph 2 of Article 10.

³⁶ (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)

³⁷ Origin - Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).

³⁸ Origin - Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).

If the benefits that the announcement of the news source will bring are superior and conditions exhibit “adequately essential” and “serious” character, the competent national authorities should make a decision in the way of explanation of aforementioned source of news.

This decision should be a satisfactory decision. In other words, the government should be tried and consumed all the alternative routes before taking decision in this direction. The legal interest obtained by the disclosure of news source is required to pass public benefit arising from the disclosure of the source. This requirement must be proved and response to a fundamental social need. Governments have margin of appreciation in these matters and can apply this right in the direction of explaining the sources. The case of this margin of appreciation’s violation the right of freedom of expression is subject to inspection by European Court of Human Rights.

When the Turkish Constitution is examined, it is clearly visible that there are provisions containing similar restrictions. For instance, Article 13, concerning restriction of fundamental rights and freedoms says (As amended on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709) “Fundamental rights and freedoms may be restricted only by law and in conformity with the reasons mentioned in the relevant articles of the Constitution without infringing upon their essence.” and the Article 26 concerning freedom of expression and dissemination of thought envisage that “the exercise of these freedoms may be restricted for the purposes of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary.”³⁹ The formalities, conditions and procedures to be applied in exercising the freedom of expression and dissemination of thought shall be prescribed by law.” In addition to this, the control of the the constitutionality of the laws has been undertaken by the Constitutional Court.

In reference to the fourth principle; In legal proceedings against a journalist on grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, authorities should consider, for the purpose of establishing the truth or otherwise of the allegation, all evidence which is available to them under national procedural law and may not require for that purpose the disclosure of information identifying a source by the journalist.⁴⁰

In that case; under which conditions the journalist will be expected to do an explanation? First of all, such a request is made only by the authorities or the people having the direct legal interest.

³⁹ Gönenç, D. L. (2010). Control of Conformity of Laws with Constitution and Judicial Review. www.tepav.org.tr: http://www.tepav.org.tr/upload/files/1295967249-5.Yasalarin_Anayasaya_Uygunlugunun_Denetimi_ve_Anayasa_Yargisi.pdf

⁴⁰ (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)

Besides, journalists should be informed about this topic. Any sanctions against a journalist who refuses to disclose the identity of a source should only be applied by an impartial court after a fair trial, and should be subject to appeal to a higher court.⁴¹

In the act of obtaining the news stating the source by security forces or legal authorities, sixth principle of the Recommendation recommends taking some precautions in the way to prevent mentioned news use as evidence in the subsequent courts even if it does not pose the purpose of these actions.

Journalists correspondence and interviews must not be hindered. Therefore, “monitoring and surveilling” decisions or similar precautions and search and other official reports, correspondence and written report on the business activities obtained as a result of the search conducted in the journalists residence and work places has been the violation of law with sixth principle. In other words, it is recommended that these proceeding accepted "obtained through unlawful means" should not be used as “evidence” in the courts.

When re-examining Turkish law, it is encountered in the Turkish Criminal Code that tapping and recording of conversations between the individual in unlawful way is subject to sanction. Article 133, Section 3 notes that “any person who derives benefit from disclosure of information obtained unlawfully as declared above, or allowing others to obtain information in this manner, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine up to thousand days.”

Considering the importance of the protection of sources for press freedom in a democratic society and the potential freezing impact of the order of not to disclose the sources, unless it is subjected to higher demand from the public interest, such a regulation is contradictory to Article 10.⁴²

As a general principle, “the necessity” imposing any restrictions on freedom of expression should be established in convincing manner. Was the interference "necessary in a democratic society"? At this point, the Sunday Times v. The United Kingdom (No. 2) should be examined. T argument before the Court was concentrated on the question whether the interference complained of could be regarded as "necessary in a democratic society". In this connection, the Court's judgments relating to Article 10 (art. 10) – starting with Handyside (7 December 1976; Series A no. 24), concluding, most recently, with Oberschlick (23 May 1991; Series A no. 204) and including, amongst several others, Sunday Times (26 April 1979; Series A no. 30) and Lingens (8 July 1986; Series A no. 103) - enounce the following major principles.

(a) Freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society; subject to paragraph 2 of Article 10 (art. 10-2), it is applicable not only to "information" or

⁴¹ İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>

⁴² İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>

"ideas" that are favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference, but also to those that offend, shock or disturb. Freedom of expression, as enshrined in Article 10 (art. 10), is subject to a number of exceptions which, however, must be narrowly interpreted and the necessity for any restrictions must be convincingly established.

(b) These principles are of particular importance as far as the press is concerned. Whilst it must not overstep the bounds set, inter alia, in the "interests of national security" or for "maintaining the authority of the judiciary", it is nevertheless incumbent on it to impart information and ideas on matters of public interest. Not only does the press have the task of imparting such information and ideas: the public also has a right to receive them. Were it otherwise, the press would be unable to play its vital role of "public watchdog".

(c) The adjective "necessary", within the meaning of Article 10 para. 2 (art. 10-2), implies the existence of a "pressing social need". The Contracting States have a certain margin of appreciation in assessing whether such a need exists, but it goes hand in hand with a European supervision, embracing both the law and the decisions applying it, even those given by independent courts. The Court is therefore empowered to give the final ruling on whether a "restriction" is reconcilable with freedom of expression as protected by Article 10 (art. 10).

(d) The Court's task, in exercising its supervisory jurisdiction, is not to take the place of the competent national authorities but rather to review under Article 10 the decisions they delivered pursuant to their power of appreciation. This does not mean that the supervision is limited to ascertaining whether the respondent State exercised its discretion reasonably, carefully and in good faith; what the Court has to do is to look at the interference complained of in the light of the case as a whole and determine whether it was "proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued" and whether the reasons adduced by the national authorities to justify it are "relevant and sufficient".⁴³

All in all, the framework of the amendments made in constitution and other laws concerning freedom of expression is established by Turkey's National Programme for the Adoption of European Union Acquis.

According to the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, not compelling the media to disclose the source of news is required for fulfilling the function of the press in a democratic society and no injuring of the right to public information. In this context, these articles are intended to ensure compliance with the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights. Upon analysing the the Turkish case law, according to the Supreme Court, the freedom of the press is limited with reality, actuality, public interest and the intellectual commitment rules between the subject and the expression. In case, real and current news having a public interest in the publication eliminates illegality. When making evaluations whether there is an attack on personal rights and freedom of assessment, the post must be considered as a whole.⁴⁴

⁴³ Judgment by the European Court of Human Rights ,case of Sunday Times v. The United Kingdom (no.2), A Series no. 217, pages 28-29, § 50

In the Turkish Criminal Code it is clearly seen such a crime, Article 327 named with Disclosure of confidential information: Any person who discloses confidential, especially about the Public security or domestic and foreign political interest of the State with the intention of spying on political and military affairs, is sentenced to life imprisonment. If this offense is committed during war time, or puts the war preparations, or fighting power, or military movements of the Government in jeopardy, the offender is punished with heavy life imprisonment.⁴⁵

However, such a case where the public interest is superior journalists can not be forced to say that from where the provided information related to state security. The public interest is respected by journalists rather than state.

Although, the boundaries of press freedom being drawn, a jurisprudence relating to the disclosure of the resources have not yet seen in the Turkish Case Law. Turkish legal system does not follow the line of Recommendations (particularly 2000 7) even two famous journalists Can Dündar and Erdem Gül are penalised for this reason.

7. In the light of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights how do national courts apply the respective laws with regard to the right to protect sources? In particular, how do they balance the different interests at stake?

At the beginning of the legal protective mechanisms, first and foremost comes the assurance of an audit by an independent and impartial judge and decision-making body. As we gave reference to the Article 90 of Turkish Constitution, Turkish national courts are bound to apply ECtHR jurisprudence when its laws conflict with freedom. Moreover, it is underlined in the Press Law (Law No: 5187), Article 12 that "the owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication cannot be forced to either disclose their news sources or to legally testify on this issue." This principle is written in the law. According to second paragraph of Article 26 and fifth paragraph of Article 28 of the Constitution, expression and press freedom can be limited in the aim of "National security", "prevention of crime", "punishment of the guilty," "not to disclose the information duly classified as a state secret" and "to prevent the disclosure of confidential information belonging to the state".⁴⁶

⁴⁴ Turkish Supreme Court, General Law Assembly, E.2002/4-115,K.2002/151, 06.03.2002

⁴⁵ Hafizogulları Prof.Z, Turkish Criminal Law, An Overview of State Secrets, (2010) <http://www.ankarabarasu.org.tr/siteler/ankarabarasu/tekmakale/2010-1/2010-1-hafizogullari.pdf>

⁴⁶ Turkish Constitutional Court, N. 2015/18567, E.Gul-C.Dundar Case 25/2/2016

In the crucial case of Goodwin v. United Kingdom, the European Court of Human Rights ruled that an attempt to force a journalist to reveal his source for a news story violated his right to receive and impart information, and hence the right to freedom of expression. It considered that orders to disclose sources reduce the flow of information, to the detriment of democracy and are, therefore, only justifiable in very exceptional cases.

Journalists are free to seek access to and maintain contacts with, public and private sources of information and that their need for professional confidentiality is respected.⁴⁷

As reviewed in the tenth article of European Convention on Human Rights, it is clear that not only the protection of freedom of publication but also expanding the concept of the protection of fundamental research for which preliminary investigative journalism and The recent jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights should be placed in accordance with domestic law.

Events, cases and applications are likely to point to violations of the law in Turkey. To show this fact, the example of the draft of National Intelligence Organization Law can be given. According to Turkish Journalists' Association, whether the draft will be enacted, the freedom of press will be damaged. It will not be done news on the activities of this organisation and the right of journalists not to disclose their sources will be eliminated in respect of all news.

When international law and Turkish law are considered together, all people who can identify the source of information while obtaining during the collection of information, editorial review or the dissemination should benefit this protection. Academic studies also failed due to the poor Turkish jurisprudence on this issue.

8. What are the criteria for using electronic surveillance and anti-terrorism laws, which may include measures such as interceptions of communications, surveillance actions and search or seizure actions in order to identify journalists' sources of information? Are the national law provisions accessible, precise, foreseeable and include clear legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions?

The right of journalists not to disclose their sources applies also to sources from within the police or judicial authorities. Where such provision of information to journalists was illegal, police and judicial authorities must pursue internal investigations instead of asking journalists to disclose their sources International law increasingly recognises that information collected or created for journalistic purposes enjoys a special degree of protection from search and seizure by the authorities. There are various justifications for according journalists stronger immunity against search and seizure than others.

⁴⁷ International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012

In the first place, there is an obvious risk that the police will use the power to search premises as a means to circumvent the protection of sources. A search and seizure operation whose purpose is to uncover the identity of an anonymous source is particularly objectionable. Not only does it prejudice a question which should normally be ruled on by a court, after carefully weighing both sides of the argument; it is also far more intrusive than a court order to disclose a source's identity. This point was underscored by the European Court of Human Rights, in the case of Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg. The Court considers that, even if unproductive, a search conducted with a view to uncover a journalist's source is a more drastic measure than an order to divulge the source's identity. This is because investigators who raid a journalist's workplace unannounced and armed with search warrants have very wide investigative powers, as, by definition, they have access to all the documentation held by the journalist. The Court ... thus considers that the searches of the first applicant's home and workplace undermined the protection of sources to an even greater extent than the measures in issue in Goodwin.^{48 49}

The European Court, in its judgment of 15 July 2003, has come to the conclusion that the searches and seizures violated the protection of journalistic sources guaranteed by the right to freedom of expression and the right to privacy. The Court agreed that the interferences by the Belgian judicial authorities were prescribed by law and were intended to prevent the disclosure of information received in confidence and to maintain the authority and impartiality of the judiciary. The Court considered that the searches and seizures, which were intended to gather information that could lead to the identification of police officers or members of the judiciary who were leaking confidential information, came within the sphere of the protection of journalistic sources, an issue which called for the most careful scrutiny by the Court.⁵⁰

Legal proceedings directed towards the seizure of the working papers of an individual journalist, or the premises of the newspaper or television programme publishing his or her reports, or the threat of such proceedings, tend to inhibit discussion. When a genuine investigation into possible corrupt or reprehensible activities by a public authority is being investigated by the media, compelling evidence is normally needed to demonstrate that the public interest would be served by such proceedings. Otherwise, to the public disadvantage, legitimate inquiry and discussion, and 'the safety valve of effective investigative journalism' ... would be discouraged, perhaps stifled.⁵¹

⁴⁸ International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012

⁴⁹ Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, 25 February 2003, Application No. 51772/99 (European Court of Human Rights), para. 57. For the Goodwin case, see section 6.1.6.1.

⁵⁰ Judgment by the European Court of Human Rights (Second Section), case of Ernst and others v. Belgium, Application no. 33400/96 of 15 July 2003

⁵¹ Ex parte the Guardian, the Observer and Martin Bright, [2001] 2 All ER 244, 262.

Concerns like these have led several countries to specify a separate procedure in their code of criminal procedure for the search and seizure of journalistic premises and materials. This procedure usually has most or all of the following characteristics: search warrants may only be issued by a judge, who must balance the importance of the search against the importance of preventing harm to the right to gather news. No warrants may be issued if the same goal can be achieved in a way less detrimental to freedom of expression. No warrants may be issued for the seizure of material covered by the protection of sources, except in very exceptional circumstances. Moreover, the police must be accompanied on their search by a judge or prosecutor.

It is very important to underline that assisting member states in analysing and improving their legislation on the protection of the confidentiality of journalists' sources, in particular by supporting the review of their national laws on surveillance, anti-terrorism, data retention and access to telecommunications records.⁵²

If we examine Article 135 of the Turkish Code of Criminal Procedure concerning location, listening and recording of correspondence, it rules that “the judge or, in cases of peril in delay, the public prosecutor, may decide to locate, listen to or record the correspondence through telecommunication or to evaluate the information about the signals of the suspect or the accused, if during an investigation or prosecution conducted in relation to a crime there are strong grounds of suspicion indicating that the crime has been committed and there is no other possibility to obtain evidence. The public prosecutor shall submit his decision immediately to the judge for his approval and the judge shall make a decision within 24 hours. In cases where the duration expires or the judge decides the opposite way, the measure shall be lifted by the public prosecutor immediately.”

Moreover, the Article 132 of Turkish Criminal Code concerning Violation of Communicational Secrecy determines that “any person who violates secrecy of communication between the parties is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine. If violation of secrecy is realised by recording of contents of communication, the party involved in such act is sentenced to imprisonment from one year to three years. Any person who unlawfully publicises the contents of communication between the persons is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years.

Any person who openly discloses the content of the communication between himself and others without obtaining their consent, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, The punishment determined for this offense is increased by one half in case of disclosure of contents of communication between the individuals through press and broadcast.

The Article 124 of Turkish Criminal Code regarding the prevention of communication says “In case of unlawful prevention of communication among the persons, the offender is sentenced to imprisonment from six years to two years or imposed punitive fine. Any person who unlawfully prevents communication among the public institutions is punished with imprisonment from one year to five years. Punishment is imposed according to the provisions of second subsection in case of unlawful prevention of broadcasts or announcements of all kinds of press and publication organ

⁵² Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on protecting Freedom of Expression and Information in Times of Crisis (Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 26 September 2007 at the 1005th meeting of the Ministers' Deputies)

According to Demet Ulusoy, generally the Anti-Terror Law (Law no. 3713) confronts the limitation of the freedom of expression and the judgements of oppression against Turkey in the front of the ECHR. In such cases in the front of the ECHR concerning the Law, it must be remembered the ATL Article 6/2,⁵³ Article 6/5,⁵⁴ and Article Law 7/2⁵⁵.

ATL is the law that the case against Turkey grounded from Article 10 of the Convention causing violation articles by the ECHR in the following; Article 6, Paragraph 2; "...print or publish declarations or leaflets emanating from terrorist organisations..", Article 6, paragraph 5: "Periodicals whose content openly encourages the commission of offenses within the framework of the activities of a terrorist organisation, approves of the offenses committed by a terrorist organisation or its members or constitutes propaganda in favor of the terrorist organisation may be suspended for a period of fifteen days to one month as a preventive measure by decision of a judge...", and also Article 7; "Making propaganda for a terrorist organisation."⁵⁶

9. Can journalists rely on encryption and anonymity online to protect themselves and their sources against surveillance?

The surveillance of people especially journalists are very common in 21st century. The technology to keep an eye on the journalists is sold everywhere across globe and the surveillance programmes are used by governments, companies and individuals such as hackers. Online censorship, mass and targeted surveillance and data collection, digital attacks on civil society and repression resulting from online expression force individuals around the world to seek security to hold opinions without interference and seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds.⁵⁷ Many try to protect themselves through encryption, anonymity online and at rest (hard drives, cloud etc.). Encryption and anonymity, today's leading vehicles for online security, provide individuals with a means to protect their privacy, empowering them to browse, read, develop and share opinions and information without interference and enabling journalists, civil society organisations, members of ethnic or religious groups, those persecuted because of their sexual orientation or gender identity, activists, scholars, artists and others to exercise the rights to freedom of opinion and expression.⁵⁸ So, encryption and anonymity is a way for the journalists

⁵³ The ECHR, Gözel and Özer v. Turkey, (6 July 2010) judgement.

⁵⁴ Ürper and Others v. Turkey (20 of October 2009)

⁵⁵ Gül and Others v. Turkey, (June 8, 2010)

⁵⁶ Karakaya and Özhabes, p. 14.

⁵⁷ Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, David Kaye, p.1

⁵⁸ Ibid, p.1

to shield themselves and their sources from surveillance and harassment. However, encryption protects the content of communications but not identifying factors such as the Internet Protocol (IP) address, known as metadata. Third parties may gather significant information concerning an individual's identity through metadata analysis if the user does not employ anonymity tools. Anonymity is the condition of avoiding identification.⁵⁹ In other words, encryption and anonymity, separately or together, create a zone of privacy to protect opinion and belief.⁶⁰

The human rights legal framework for encryption and anonymity are evaluated in respect to the rights of privacy⁶¹ and freedom of opinion and expression⁶² which are regulated in different universal human rights instruments. Also national legislations also protect the rights of privacy and freedom of opinion and expression with constitutional and basic laws. In Turkey, notwithstanding the fact that there exists no legal framework specifically regulating the protection of personal data, the Constitution and several other laws provisions to safeguard the protection of personal data. Moreover as to “the ability of individuals and organisations to employ encryption tools in order to secure their transactions and communications online” Article 39 of the Law on Electronic Communications (no.5809), titled “encoded and encrypted communications” provides that “the following institutions are authorised to conduct encrypted communications on wireless communications systems: Turkish Armed Forces, the General Command of the Gendarmie, the Coast Guard Command, the National Intelligence Organization, the general Directorate of Security and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The procedure and principles relating to how other institutions and organisations and real and legal persons may carry out encoded and encrypted communications through electronic communications means shall be determined by the Institution (Institution of Information Technologies and Communications)”.⁶³ So legal persons and journalists can use encrypted technologies only under certain circumstances where the Institution can give permission. In practical the Institution does not give permission easily so thus journalists and real person can not use encrypted devices in practise. Also, according to article 5 of the “Regulation on the procedure and principles relating to encoded and encrypted communications within the electronic communication services by public institutions and organizations, real and legal persons” (enacted in 2010) real persons such as journalists can use encrypted communication in accordance with the provisions of the regulation. According to the article 7 of the abovementioned regulation the Institution of Information Technologies and Communications

⁵⁹ Ibid, p.4

⁶⁰ Ibid, p.5

⁶¹ Article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 16 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, article 22 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, article 14 of the Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights and article 11 of the American Convention on Human Rights protect the right to privacy.

⁶² Article 19 of the Universal Declaration and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 9 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, article 13 of the American Convention on Human Rights and article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights protect freedom of expression.

⁶³ Informaitve nore regarding measures taken by the Turkish Government in the context of the relationship between freedom of expression and the right to privacy in the digital context, 2015 evaluates the application to use encryption programmes. Article 6 regulates the requirements for creating encoded and encrypted communications and pursuant to this article the creators of the encoded and encrypted communication should not have been violated the unity and territorial integrity of state, committed crimes against the security of the state and main principles of Republic, committed crimes against the constitutional order, committed crimes such as corruption, theft, espionage, fraud, smuggling and be sentenced in accordance with Anti-terror law. So the Institution will assess the application within these conditions and has the discretionary power on the result of the application. Also, the encrypted and encoded devices which are imported from other countries can be used after sharing the code to the Institution in other words the Institution has again the right to give the permission on usage of any encoded and encrypted devices.

In cases of anonymity, there are not provisions covering the anonymity under the constitution and press law. The anonymity of journalists are not regulated specifically only the right to communicate and right of expression is regulated in several articles under constitution and laws. All in all encryption and anonymity, and the security concepts behind them, provide the privacy and security necessary for the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression in the digital age. Such security may be essential for the exercise of other rights, including economic rights, privacy, due process, freedom of peaceful assembly and association, and the right to life and bodily integrity. Because of their importance to the rights to freedom of opinion and expression, restrictions on encryption and anonymity must be strictly limited according to principles of legality, necessity, proportionality and legitimacy in objective.

10. Are whistle-blowers (muhbir) explicitly protected under law protecting journalistic sources? Is there another practice protecting whistle-blowers? Is the legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers?

There are some provisions in several laws regulating the press and the press freedom however obviously there is no specific law regarding the protecting journalistic sources in Turkey. Also whistle-blowers are not protected under any national law protecting journalistic sources.

Also, the implementation of UNCAC (United Nations Convention against Corruption) Article 32 and 33 which are about the protection of whistle-blowers is not implemented and the provisions enforced in practise is poor according to Turkey: Civil Society Report by Transparency International Turkey An input to the UNCAC Implementation Review Mechanism: Fourth year of review of UNCAC chapters III and IV. Also according to the EU Commission Report on Turkey 2015 “whistleblowing is rare given the inadequate protection by the current law” and “whistle-blowers are obliged to rely on ad hoc provisions of the witness protection law as there is no comprehensive law in either the public or private sector.”

The only law regulating the press and press freedom is Press Law (No. 5187) which is enacted in 2004. The aim of this law is mentioned in the first article of the Press Law:

Article 1– The aim of the Press Law is to arrange freedom of the press and the implementation of this freedom.

The press freedom also includes the protection of the whistle-blowers and journalistic sources. The whistle-blowers are one of the journalistic sources and therefore the whistle-blowers should be protected by the law regulating the press freedom.

Whistle-blowers can be called as reporters who deliver journalists different useful informations from several sources. However, whistle-blowers are disreputable in Turkey because of their job providing information to the journalists and if these informations are about the government security or secrets of an important person then the journalist publishing these informations will be under the surveillance of the government.

As abovementioned the whistle-blowers are one of the journalistic sources and should be protected under the law also there should be a legislation prohibiting authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers. There is actually one article protecting whistle-blowers implicitly in the Press Law which is article 12.

Journalistic Sources

Article 12 - The owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication cannot be forced to either disclose their journalistic sources or to legally testify on this issue.

This article indirectly protects the whistle-blowers when the whistle blowers are considered as a journalistic source. Additionally this article helps to keep the identity of the whistle-blowers secret by giving right to the editors and owners of the publication not to denounce. So this legislation also prohibits authorities and companies from identifying whistle-blowers by protecting the journalistic sources all the way.

11. Conclusion

Conditions for media freedom in Turkey continued to deteriorate in 2014 after several years of decline. The government enacted new laws that expanded both the state's power to block websites and the surveillance capability of the National Intelligence Organization (MİT). Journalists faced unprecedented legal obstacles as the courts restricted reporting on corruption and national security issues. The authorities also continued to aggressively use the penal code, criminal defamation laws, and the antiterrorism law to crack down on journalists and media outlets.

According to government data, there are approximately 3,100 newspapers operating in Turkey, including some 180 national papers; however, only about 15 percent of these are published daily, and many have small circulations. Independent domestic and foreign print media are able to carry diverse views, including criticism of the government and its policies, though Turkish print outlets contain a high proportion of columns and opinion articles as opposed to pure news.

Furthermore, press freedom in Turkey was categorized as "under siege", by the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ). This is because of increasing numbers of journalists in jail, violence against journalists on the rise, and critical news outlets officially harassed or obstructed.

Currently, constitutional guarantees of press freedom and freedom of expression are only partially upheld in practice. They are generally undermined by provisions in the penal code, the criminal procedure code, and the harsh, broadly worded antiterrorism law that effectively leave punishment of normal journalistic activity to the discretion of prosecutors and judges.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

- Turkish Journalists Declaration of Rights and Responsibilities
- Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).
- <http://www.coe.int/en/web/freedom-expression/safety-of-journalists>
- http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf
- <http://journalism.cmpf.eui.eu/discussions/on-protection-of-journalistic-sources/>
- <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-press/2015/turkey>
- Turkish Journalists Declaration of Rights and Responsibilities(1998) [Electronic Version].
- (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)
- İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>
- Human Rights Council, Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank la Rue, 4 June 2012, A/HRC/20/17 at para 78.
- European Court of Human Rights, Goodwin v UK, Application No 17488/90, Judgment of 27 March 1996, para 39.
- Ulusoy, Demet Celik(2013). A Comparative Study of the Freedom of Expression in Turkey and EU. Ankara University, Faculty of Political Science The Turkish Yearbook of International Relations, 68.
- Ulusoy, Demet Celik(2013). A Comparative Study of the Freedom of Expression in Turkey and EU. Ankara Universty, Faculty of Political Science The Turkish Yearbook of International Relations, 68.
- Art. 29; “Publication of periodicals or non-periodicals shall not be subject to prior authorization or the deposit of a financial guarantee. Submission of the information and documents specified by law to the competent authority designated by law is sufficient to publish a periodical. If these information and documents are found to contravene the laws, the competent authority shall apply to the court for suspension of publication.
- The principles regarding the publication, the conditions of publication and the financial resources of periodicals, and the profession of journalism shall be regulated by law. The law shall not impose any political, economic, financial, and technical conditions obstructing or making difficult the free dissemination of news, thoughts, or opinions. Periodicals shall have equal access to the means and facilities of the State, other public corporate bodies, and their agencies. ”
- Art. 30- “(As amended on May 7, 2004; Act No. 5170) A printing house and its annexes, duly established as a press enterprise under law, and press equipment shall not be seized, confiscated, or barred from operation on the grounds of having been used in a crime. ”
- STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,23.

- Article 299 of the Penal Code:” 1. Any person who publicly denigrates Turkishness, the Republic or the Grand National Assembly of Turkey shall be sentenced to 6 months to 3 years of imprisonment.
2. Any person who publicly denigrates the Government of Republic of Turkey, the judicial institutions of the State, the military or security organizations shall be sentenced to 6 months to 2 years imprisonment.
3. Where denigration of Turkishness is committed by a Turkish citizen in another country, the sentence shall be increased by one third.
4. Expression of thoughts intended to criticize shall not constitute a crime.”
- TEZCAN/ERDEM/ONOK(2015). Ceza Özel Hukuku, p.531.
- STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,24.
- Oktay Uygun, “Avrupa İnsan Hakları Sözleşmesi ve Türk Hukukunda İfade Özgürlüğünün Sınırlanması”,Kamu Hukuku Gncelemeleri, 2. Edition , 2013, Istanbul, p.153-154.
- ARTICLE 301:”(1) Any person who agrees to serve in the army of a country which is at war with Turkish Republic, or Turkish citizen who participates in an armed attack against Turkish Republic, is punished with life imprisonment.
(2) Any citizen who undertakes commanding duty in the army of a foreign country is punished with heavy life imprisonment.
(3) In case of commission of another offense along with the offenses defined in first and second subsection, the offender is additionally punished according to the provisions relating to this offense.
(4) No punishment is imposed for the citizen who is obliged to serve in the army of a foreign country due to his presence in the territory of the enemy at the time of the war. Provocation of war against the State.”
- JOHANSSON Morgan(2010). The protection of journalists’ sources ,7. Revealed on 21.02.2016 <http://www.refworld.org/pdfid/4d87520b2.pdf>
- ALGAN Bulent, The Brand New Version of Article 301 of Turkish Penal Code and the Future of Freedom of Expression Cases in Turkey. Retrieved on: https://www.researchgate.net/publication/47276770_The_Brand_New_Version_of_Article_301_of_Turkish_Penal_Code_and_the_Future_of_Freedom_of_Expression_Cases_in_Turkey?enrichId=rgreq-73116d25-83d4-4c63b359627dfc9e5e62&enrichSource=Y292ZXJQYWdlOzQ3Mjc2NzcwO0F0jI1OTM0NDE1OTczNTgwOUAxNDM4ODQzODc0MjI4&el=1_x_2 12 January 2016.
- The ECHR Gözel and Özer v. Turkey, (6 July 2010) judgement.
- Ürper and Others v. Turkey (20 of October 2009)
- Gül and Others v. Turkey, (June 8, 2010)
- Karakaya and Özhabes, p. 14.
- STAV Ragnhild, FRETHEIM Ragnhild (2013). Press ethics and perceptions of journalism in Turkey,27.
- Article 46:”The persons who have the right of refraining from ta king the witness-stand because of their professions or their permanent occupations, as well as the subject matter and the conditions of refraining are listed below ;
a) The lawyers or their apprentices or assistants about the information they have learned in their professional capacity or during their judicial duty,

- b) Medical doctors, dentists, pharmacist and their assistants, as well as other members of the medical profession, about their patients' information and that of the relatives of the patients that they acquired in their capacity as a professional,
- c) Certified public accountants and notary publics in respect to information of their clients that they acquired in their capacity as a professional.
- (2) Except for those mentioned in the sub-section (a) of the subparagraph above, those persons shall not refrain from taking the witness-stand if the related person gives his consent.”
 - Letters and documents immune from seizure Article 126: “Letters and documents communicated between the suspect or the accused and those persons capable of asserting a privilege to refrain from testimony as a witness in accordance with the provisions of Articles 45 and 46 may not be seized as long as such items are at the hands of persons who have this privilege.”
 - <http://politiken.dk/udland/ECE3064094/tilbageholdt-og-smidt-ud-politiken-journalist-bliver-kaldt-trussel-mod-tyrkiets-sikkerhed/>
 - <https://www.freedomhouse.org/sites/default/files/FOTP%202013%20Booklet%20Final%20Complete%20-%20Web.pdf>
 - <https://rsf.org/en/turkey>
 - https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Media_freedom_in_Turkey
 - ECHR Reports, “Overview 1959-2013 ECHR”, Violation judgments by State.
 - (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)
 - Origin - Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).
 - Origin - Assembly debate on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting) (see Doc. 12443, report of the Committee on Culture, Science and Education, rapporteur: Mr Johansson). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2011 (4th Sitting).
 - Gönenç, D. L. (2010). Control of Conformity of Laws with Constitution and Judicial Review. www.tepav.org.tr: http://www.tepav.org.tr/upload/files/1295967249-5.Yasalarin_Anayasaya_Uygunlugunun_Denetimi_ve_Anayasa_Yargisi.pdf
 - (International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012)
 - İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>
 - İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>
 - İlkiz, F. (2008, February). Journalists' Sources are Confidential. Bianet.org: <http://bianet.org/bianet/ifade-ozgurlugu/105129-haber-kaynagi-gizlidir>
 - Turkish Supreme Court, General Law Assembly, E.2002/4-115,K.2002/151, 06.03.2002
 - Hafizoğulları Prof.Z, Turkish Criminal Law, An Overview of State Secrets, (2010) <http://www.ankarabarusu.org.tr/siteler/ankarabarusu/tekmakale/2010-1/2010-1-hafizogullari.pdf>
 - Turkish Supreme Court, General Law Assembly, E.2002/4-115,K.2002/151, 06.03.2002

- Hafizoğulları Prof.Z, 'Turkish Criminal Law, An Overview of State Secrets, (2010) <http://www.ankarabarusu.org.tr/siteler/ankarabarusu/tekmakale/2010-1/2010-1-hafizogullari.pdf>
- International Standards: Regulation of Media Workers, 2012
- Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, 25 February 2003, Application No. 51772/99 (European Court of Human Rights), para. 57. For the Goodwin case, see section 6.1.6.1.
- Judgment by the European Court of Human Rights (Second Section), case of Ernst and others v. Belgium, Application no. 33400/96 of 15 July 2003
- Ex parte the Guardian, the Observer and Martin Bright, [2001] 2 All ER 244, 262.
- Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on protecting Freedom of Expression and Information in Times of Crisis (Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 26 September 2007 at the 1005th meeting of the Ministers' Deputies)
- The ECHR Gözel and Özer v. Turkey, (6 July 2010) judgement.
- Ürper and Others v. Turkey (20 of October 2009)
- Gül and Others v. Turkey, (June 8, 2010)
- Karakaya and Özhabes, p. 14.
- Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, David Kaye, p.1
- Ibid, p.1
- Ibid, p.4
- Ibid, p.5
- Article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 16 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, article 22 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, article 14 of the Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights and article 11 of the American Convention on Human Rights protect the right to privacy.
- Article 19 of the Universal Declaration and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 9 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, article 13 of the American Convention on Human Rights and article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights protect freedom of expression.
- Informaitve regarding measures taken by the Turkish Government in the context of the relationship between freedom of expression and the right to privacy in the digital context, 2015

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in native language	Corresponding translation
Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 90: Usulüne göre yürürlüğe konulmuş milletlerarası andlaşmalar kanun hükmündedir. Bunlar hakkında Anayasaya aykırılık iddiası ile Anayasa Mahkemesine başvurulamaz. (Ek cümle: 7/5/2004-5170/7 md.) Usulüne göre yürürlüğe konulmuş temel hak ve özgürlüklere ilişkin milletlerarası andlaşmalarla kanunların aynı konuda farklı hükümler içermesi nedeniyle çıkabilecek uyuşmazlıklarda milletlerarası andlaşma hükümleri esas alınır.	Constitution of Turkish Republic, Article 90: International agreements duly put into effect have the force of law. No appeal to the Constitutional Court shall be made with regard to these agreements, on the grounds that they are unconstitutional. (Sentence added on May 7, 2004; Act No. 5170) In the case of a conflict between international agreements, duly put into effect, concerning fundamental rights and freedoms and the laws due to differences in provisions on the same matter, the provisions of international agreements shall prevail.
Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 13: Temel hak ve hürriyetler, özlerine dokunulmaksızın yalnızca Anayasanın ilgili maddelerinde belirtilen sebeplere bağlı olarak ve ancak kanunla sınırlanabilir. Bu sınırlamalar, Anayasanın sözüne ve ruhuna, demokratik toplum düzeninin ve lâik Cumhuriyetin gereklerine ve ölçülülük ilkesine aykırı olamaz.	Constitution of Turkish Republic Article 13: Fundamental rights and freedoms may be restricted only by law and in conformity with the reasons mentioned in the relevant articles of the Constitution without infringing upon their essence.

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 327: Devletin güvenliği veya iç veya dış siyasal yararları bakımından, niteliği itibarıyla, gizli kalması gereken bilgileri temin eden kimseye üç yıldan sekiz yıla kadar hapis cezası verilir.	Turkish Criminal Code Article 327: Disclosure of confidential information: Any person who discloses confidential, especially about the Public security or domestic and foreign political interest of the State with the intention of spying on political and military affairs, is sentenced to life imprisonment.
Basın Kanunu Madde 12 Madde 12- Süreli yayın sahibi, sorumlu müdür ve eser sahibi, bilgi ve belge dahil her türlü haber kaynaklarını açıklamaya ve bu konuda tanıklık yapmaya zorlanamaz.	Turkish Press Law Article 12: the owner of the periodical, responsible editor, and owner of the publication cannot be forced to either disclose their news sources or to legally testify on this issue.
Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 26: Herkes, düşünce ve kanaatlerini söz, yazı, resim veya başka yollarla tek başına veya toplu olarak açıklama ve yayma hakkına sahiptir. Bu hürriyet resmî makamların müdahalesi olmaksızın haber veya fikir almak ya da vermek serbestliğini de kapsar. Bu fıkra hükmü, radyo, televizyon, sinema veya benzeri yollarla yapılan yayımların izin sistemine bağlanmasına engel değildir. (Değişik: 3/10/2001-4709/9 md.) Bu hürriyetlerin kullanılması, millî güvenlik, kamu düzeni, kamu güvenliği, Cumhuriyetin temel nitelikleri ve Devletin ülkesi ve milleti ile bölünmez bütünlüğünün korunması, suçların önlenmesi, suçluların cezalandırılması, Devlet sırrı olarak usulünce belirtilmiş bilgilerin açıklanmaması, başkalarının şöhret veya	Constitution of Turkish Republic Article 26: Everyone has the right to express and disseminate his/her thoughts and opinions by speech, in writing or in pictures or through other media, individually or collectively. This freedom includes the liberty of receiving or imparting information or ideas without interference by official authorities. This provision shall not preclude subjecting transmission by radio, television, cinema, or similar means to a system of licensing. (As amended on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709)

haklarının, özel ve aile hayatlarının yahut kanunun öngördüğü meslek sırlarının korunması veya yargılama görevinin gereğine uygun olarak yerine getirilmesi amaçlarıyla sınırlanabilir. (Mülga: 3/10/2001-4709/9 md.) Haber ve düşünceleri yayma araçlarının kullanılmasına ilişkin düzenleyici hükümler, bunların yayımını engellemek kaydıyla, düşünceyi açıklama ve yayma hürriyetinin sınırlanması sayılmaz. (Ek fıkra: 3/10/2001-4709/9 md.) Düşünceyi açıklama ve yayma hürriyetinin kullanılmasında uygulanacak şekil, şart ve usuller kanunla düzenlenir.	The exercise of these freedoms may be restricted for the purposes of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary. (Repealed on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709) Regulatory provisions concerning the use of means to disseminate information and thoughts shall not be deemed as the restriction of freedom of expression and dissemination of thoughts as long as the transmission of information and thoughts is not prevented. (Paragraph added on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709) The formalities, conditions and procedures to be applied in exercising the freedom of expression and dissemination of thought shall be prescribed by law.
---	--

Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 28:

Basın hürdür, sansür edilemez. Basımevi kurmak izin alma ve malî teminat yatırma şartına bağlanamaz.

(Mülga: 3/10/2001-4709/10 md.)

Devlet, basın ve haber alma hürriyetlerini sağlayacak tedbirleri alır.

Basın hürriyetinin sınırlanmasında, Anayasanın 26 ve 27 nci maddeleri hükümleri uygulanır.

Devletin iç ve dış güvenliğini, ülkesi ve milletiyle bölünmez bütünlüğünü tehdit eden veya suç işlemeye ya da ayaklanma veya isyana teşvik eder nitelikte olan veya Devlete ait gizli bilgilere ilişkin bulunan her türlü haber veya yazıyı, yazarlar veya bastırınlar veya aynı amaçla, basanlar, başkasına verenler, bu suçlara ait kanun hükümleri uyarınca sorumlu olurlar. Tedbir yolu ile dağıtım hâkim kararıyla; gecikmesinde sakınca bulunan hallerde de kanunun açıkça yetkili kıldığı merciin emriyle önlenabilir. Dağıtım önleyen yetkili merci, bu kararını en geç yirmidört saat içinde yetkili hâkime bildirir. Yetkili hâkim bu kararı en geç kırksekiz saat içinde onaylamazsa, dağıtım önleme kararı hükümsüz sayılır.

Yargılama görevinin amacına uygun olarak yerine getirilmesi için, kanunla belirtilecek sınırlar içinde, hâkim tarafından verilen kararlar saklı kalmak üzere, olaylar hakkında yayım yasağı konamaz.

Sürelili veya süresiz yayınlar, kanunun gösterdiği suçların soruşturma veya kovuşturmasına geçilmiş olması hallerinde hâkim kararıyla; Devletin ülkesi ve milletiyle bölünmez bütünlüğünün, millî güvenliğinin, kamu düzeninin,

Constution of Turkish Republic Article 28:

The press is free, and shall not be censored.

The establishment of a printing house shall not be subject to prior permission or the deposit of a financial guarantee.

(Repealed on October 3, 2001; Act No. 4709)

The State shall take the necessary measures to ensure freedom of the press and information.

In the limitation of freedom of the press, the provisions of articles 26 and 27 of the Constitution shall apply. Anyone who writes any news or articles which threaten the internal or external security of the State or the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, which tend to incite offence, riot or insurrection, or which refer to classified state secrets or has them printed, and anyone who prints or transmits such news or articles to others for the purposes above, shall be held responsible under the law relevant to these offences. Distribution may be prevented as a precautionary measure by the decision of a judge, or in case delay is deemed prejudicial, by the competent authority explicitly designated by law. The authority preventing the distribution shall notify a competent judge of its decision within twenty-four hours at the latest. The order preventing distribution shall become null and void unless upheld by a competent judge within forty-

genel ahlâkın korunması ve suçların önlenmesi bakımından gecikmesinde sakınca bulunan hallerde de kanunun açıkça yetkili kıldığı merciin emriyle toplatılabilir. Toplatma kararı veren yetkili merci, bu kararını en geç yirmidört saat içinde yetkili hâkime bildirir; hâkim bu kararı en geç kırksekiz saat içinde onaylamazsa, toplatma kararı hükümsüz sayılır. Sürelî veya süresiz yayınların suç soruşturma veya kovuşturması sebebiyle zapt ve müsaderesinde genel hükümler uygulanır. Türkiye’de yayımlanan sürelî yayınlar, Devletin ülkesi ve milletiyle bölünmez bütünlüğüne, Cumhuriyetin temel ilkelerine, millî güvenliğe ve genel ahlâka aykırı yayımlardan mahkûm olma halinde, mahkeme kararıyla geçici olarak kapatılabilir. Kapatılan sürelî yayının açıkça devamı niteliğini taşıyan her türlü yayın yasaktır; bunlar hâkim kararıyla toplatılır.	eight hours at the latest. No ban shall be placed on the reporting of events, except by the decision of judge issued within the limits specified by law, to ensure proper functioning of the judiciary. Periodical and non-periodical publications may be seized by a decision of a judge in cases of ongoing investigation or prosecution of crimes specified by law; or by order of the competent authority explicitly designated by law, in situations where delay may constitute a prejudice with respect to the protection of the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, national security, public order or public morals and for the prevention of crime. The competent authority issuing the order to seize shall notify a competent judge of its decision within twenty-four hours at the latest; the order to seize shall become null and void unless upheld by a judge within forty-eight hours at the latest. General provisions shall apply when seizing and confiscating periodicals and non-periodicals for reasons of criminal investigation and prosecution. Periodicals published in Turkey may be temporarily suspended by court ruling if found to contain material which contravenes the indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, the fundamental principles of the Republic, national security and public morals. Any publication which clearly bears the characteristics of being a
--	--

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 124: (1) Kişiler arasındaki haberleşmenin hukuka aykırı olarak engellenmesi halinde, altı aydan iki yıla kadar hapis veya adli para cezasına hükmolunur. (2) Kamu kurumları arasındaki haberleşmeyi hukuka aykırı olarak engelleyen kişi, bir yıldan beş yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. (3) Her türlü basın ve yayın organının yayınının hukuka aykırı bir şekilde engellenmesi halinde, ikinci fıkra hükmüne göre cezaya hükmolunur.	continuation of a suspended periodical is prohibited; and shall be seized by decision of a judge. Turkish Criminal Code Article 124: In case of unlawful prevention of communication among the persons, the offender is sentenced to imprisonment from six years to two years or imposed punitive fine. (2) Any person who unlawfully prevents communication among the public institutions is punished with imprisonment from one year to five years. (3) Punishment is imposed according to the provisions of second subsection in case of unlawful prevention of broadcasts or announcements of all kinds of press and publication organs. .
--	--

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 132: 1) Kişiler arasındaki haberleşmenin gizliliğini ihlal eden kimse, bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. Bu gizlilik ihlali haberleşme içeriklerinin kaydı suretiyle gerçekleşirse, verilecek ceza bir kat artırılır.⁽¹⁾ (2) Kişiler arasındaki haberleşme içeriklerini hukuka aykırı olarak ifşa eden kimse, iki yıldan beş yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.⁽¹⁾ (3) Kendisiyle yapılan haberleşmelerin içeriğini diğer tarafın rızası olmaksızın hukuka aykırı olarak alenen ifşa eden kişi, bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. İfşa edilen bu verilerin basın ve yayın yoluyla yayımlanması halinde de aynı cezaya hükmolunur.⁽¹⁾	Turkish Criminal Code Article 132: 1) Any person who violates secrecy of communication between the parties is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine. If violation of secrecy is realized by recording of contents of communication, the party involved in such act is sentenced to imprisonment from one year to three years. (2) Any person who unlawfully publicizes the contents of communication between the persons is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years. (3) Any person who openly discloses the content of the communication between himself and others without obtaining their consent, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years.
Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 133: Madde 133- (1) Kişiler arasındaki aleni olmayan konuşmaları, taraflardan herhangi birinin rızası olmaksızın bir aletle dinleyen veya bunları bir ses alma cihazı ile kaydeden kişi, iki yıldan beş yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.⁽²⁾ (2) Katıldığı aleni olmayan bir söyleşiyi, diğer konuşanların rızası olmadan ses alma cihazı ile kayda alan kişi, altı aydan iki yıla kadar hapis veya adli para cezası ile cezalandırılır.⁽²⁾ (3) (Değişik: 2/7/2012-6352/80 md.) Kişiler arasındaki aleni olmayan konuşmaların kaydedilmesi suretiyle elde edilen verileri hukuka aykırı olarak ifşa eden kişi, iki yıldan beş yıla	Turkish Criminal Code Article 133: 1) Any person who listens non general conversations between the individuals without the consent of any one of the parties or records these conversations by use of a recorder, is punished with imprisonment from two months to six months. (2) Any person who records a conversation in a meeting not open to public without the consent of the participants by use of recorder, is punished with imprisonment up to six months, or imposed punitive fine. (3) Any person who derives benefit from

kadar hapis ve dörtbin güne kadar adli para cezası ile cezalandırılır. İfşa edilen bu verilerin basın ve yayın yoluyla yayımlanması halinde de aynı cezaya hükmolunur. Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 136: (1) Kişisel verileri, hukuka aykırı olarak bir başkasına veren, yayan veya ele geçiren kişi, iki yıldan dört yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.	disclosure of information obtained unlawfully as declared above, or allowing others to obtain information in this manner, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine up to thousand days. Turkish Criminal Code Article 136: 1) Any person who unlawfully delivers data to another person, or publishes or acquires the same through illegal means is punished with imprisonment from one year to four years.
Bilgi Edinme Hakkı Kanunu No.4982 Madde 8: Kurum ve kuruluşlarca yayımlanmış veya yayın, broşür, ilân ve benzeri yollarla kamuya açıklanmış bilgi veya belgeler, bilgi edinme başvurularına konu olamaz. Ancak, yayımlanmış veya kamuya açıklanmış bilgi veya belgelerin ne şekilde, ne zaman ve nerede yayımlandığı veya açıklandığı başvurana bildirilir.	Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982 , Article 8: The information and documents that are published or disclosed to the public either through publication, brochure, proclamation or other similar means, may not be made the subject of an application for access to information. However, the applicant will be informed of the date, the means and the place of the publication or disclosure of the information or the document.

Bilgi Edinme Kanunu No.4982, Madde 16: Açıklanması hâlinde Devletin emniyetine, dış ilişkilerine, millî savunmasına ve millî güvenliğine açıkça zarar verecek ve niteliği itibarıyla Devlet sırrı olan gizlilik dereceli bilgi veya belgeler, bilgi edinme hakkı kapsamı dışındadır.	Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982, Article 16: The information and documents which qualify as state secrets which their disclosure clearly cause harm to the security of the state or foreign affairs or national defence and national security are out of the scope of the right to information provided herein.
Bilgi Edinme Kanunu No. 4982 Madde 17: Açıklanması ya da zamanından önce açıklanması hâlinde, ülkenin ekonomik çıkarlarına zarar verecek veya haksız rekabet ve kazanç sebep olacak bilgi veya belgeler, bu Kanun kapsamı dışındadır.	Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982, Article 17: The information or documents of which their disclosure cause harm to the economical interests of the state or will cause unfair competition or enrichment, are out of the scope of this law.
Bilgi Edinme Kanunu No. 4982 Madde 19: Kurum ve kuruluşların yetkili birimlerince yürütülen idarî soruşturmalarda ilgili olup, açıklanması veya zamanından önce açıklanması hâlinde; a) Kişilerin özel hayatına açıkça haksız müdahale sonucunu doğuracak, b) Kişilerin veya soruşturmayı yürüten görevlilerin hayatını ya da güvenliğini tehlikeye	Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982, Article 19: The information or the document that is related to the administrative investigation held by the administrative authorities and which will; a) clearly violate the right of privacy of the

sokacak, c) Soruşturmanın güvenliğini tehlikeye düşürecek, d) Gizli kalması gereken bilgi kaynağının açığa çıkmasına neden olacak veya soruşturma ile ilgili benzeri bilgi ve bilgi kaynaklarının temin edilmesini güçleştirecek, Bilgi veya belgeler, bu Kanun kapsamı dışındadır. Bilgi Edinme Kanunu No. 4982 Madde 20: Açıklanması veya zamanından önce açıklanması hâlinde; a) Suç işlenmesine yol açacak,	individuals, b) endanger the security or the life of the individuals or the officials that carry out the investigation, c) jeopardise the security of the investigation, d) disclose the source of the information which needs to be kept secret, or endanger the procurement of similar information in connection with the investigation, are out of the scope of this Law. Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982, Article 20: The information or the document of which its
---	--

b) Suçların önlenmesi ve soruşturulması ya da suçluların kanunî yollarla yakalanıp kovuşturulmasını tehlikeye düşürecek, c) Yargılama görevinin gereğince yerine getirilmesini engelleyecek, d) Hakkında dava açılmış bir kişinin adil yargılanma hakkını ihlâl edecek, Nitelikteki bilgi veya belgeler, bu Kanun kapsamı dışındadır.	disclosure or untimely disclosure will a) give rise to a criminal offence, b) endanger prevention and investigation of the crime or endanger the legal procedure for the detention and the prosecution of the criminals, c) obstruct the proper operation judicial duty. d) violate right to fair trial of a defendant in a pending case are out of the scope of this law.
---	--

Bilgi Edinme Kanunu No. 4982 Madde 21: Kişinin izin verdiği hâller saklı kalmak üzere, özel hayatın gizliliği kapsamında, açıklanması hâlinde kişinin sağlık bilgileri ile özel ve aile hayatına, şeref ve haysiyetine, meslekî ve ekonomik değerlerine haksız müdahale oluşturacak bilgi veya belgeler, bilgi edinme hakkı kapsamı dışındadır. Kamu yararının gerektirdiği hâllerde, kişisel bilgi veya belgeler, kurum ve kuruluşlar tarafından, ilgili kişiye en az yedi gün önceden haber verilerek yazılı rızası alınmak koşuluyla açıklanabilir. 5953 Sayılı Basın İş Kanunu Madde 1 : Bu Kanun hükümleri Türkiye'de yayınlanan gazete ve mevkutelerle haber ve fotoğraf ajanslarında her türlü fikir ve sanat işlerinde çalışan ve İş Kanunundaki "işçi" tarifi şümulü haricinde kalan kimselerle bunların işverenleri hakkında uygulanır. Bu Kanunun şümulüne giren fikir ve sanat	Turkish Law On The Right To Information, Law No: 4982, Article 21: With the provision where the consent of the concerned individual has been received, the information and documents that will unjustly interfere with the health records, private and family life, honour and dignity, and the economical and professional interests of an individual, are out of the scope of the right to information. Due to public interest considerations, personal information or documents may be disclosed by the institutions on the condition that concerned individual is notified of the disclosure at least 7 days in advance and his/her written consent is obtained. Turkish Press Labor Law No. 5953 Article 1: This law shall apply to who is employed in all manner of literary and artistic activities at newspapers, periodical, news and photography agencies and who is working outside the statement of definition of the 'worker' on Turkish Labor Law. Within the bound of this law, people who are employed in the literary and artistic activities
---	--

işlerinde ücret karşılığı çalışanlara gazeteci denir.	are called journalist
Basın Kanunu, No.5187 Madde 1: (Bu Kanunun amacı, basın özgürlüğünü ve bu özgürlüğün kullanımını düzenlemektir. Bu Kanun basılmış eserlerin basımı ve yayımını kapsar.	Turkish Press Law, No. 5187, Article 1: The aim of the Press Law is to arrange freedom of the press and the implementation of this freedom. The Press Law covers the printing and publication of printed matter.
Basın Kanunu, No.5187 Madde 2: a) Basılmış eser: Yayımlanmak üzere her türlü basım araçları ile basılan veya diğer araçlarla çoğaltılan yazı, resim ve benzeri eserler ile haber ajansı yayınlarını, b) Yayım: Basılmış eserin herhangi bir şekilde kamuya sunulmasını, c) Süreli yayın: Belli aralıklarla yayımlanan gazete, dergi gibi basılmış eserler ile haber ajansları	Turkish Press Law, No. 5187 Article 2: The implementation of the Press Law includes the following: a) Printed matter: All articles, images and similar material as well as publications of news agencies printed using printing equipment or copied with other equipment with the aim of publication. b) The act of publication: The presentation of a published work to the public. c) Periodicals: Regularly published

yayımlarını, d) Yaygın süreli yayın: Tek bir basın-yayın kuruluşu tarafından aynı isimle basılan ve her coğrafi bölgede en az bir ilde olmak üzere, ülkenin en az yüzde yetmişinde yayımlanan süreli yayın ile haber ajanslarının yayımlarını, e) Bölgesel süreli yayın: Tek bir basın-yayın kuruluşu tarafından basılan ve en az üç komşu ilde veya en az bir coğrafi bölgede yayımlanan süreli yayını, f) Yerel süreli yayın: Tek bir yerleşim biriminde yayımlanan süreli yayınlar ile haftada bir veya daha uzun aralıklarla yayımlanan yaygın ve bölgesel yayınları, g) Yayın türü: Süreli yayınların yaygın, bölgesel ve yerel yayın türlerinden hangisinin kapsamında olduğunu, h) Süresiz yayın: Belli aralıklarla yayımlanmayan kitap, armağan gibi basılmış eserleri, i) Eser sahibi: Süreli veya süresiz yayının içeriğini oluşturan yazıyı veya haberi yazanı, çevireni veya resmi ya da karikatürü yapanı, j) Yayımcı: Bir eseri basılmış eser durumuna getirip yayımlayan gerçek veya tüzel kişiyi, k) Basımcı: Bir eseri basım araçları ile basan veya diğer araçlarla çoğaltan gerçek veya tüzel kişiyi, l) Tüzel kişi temsilcisi: Yayın sahibi veya yayımcının tüzel kişi olması halinde bu tüzel kişiliğin yetkili organı tarafından, yöneticiler arasından belirlenen gerçek kişiyi veya kamu kurum ve kuruluşlarınca belirlenen gerçek kişiyi,	printed matter such as newspapers and magazines and the releases of news agencies. d) Nationwide periodicals: Periodicals published by a single press organization in at least 70% of the country, that is, in at least one province in each geographical region, and the publications of news agencies. e) Regional periodicals: Periodicals printed by a single press organization and published in at least three neighboring provinces or in at least one geographical region, f) Local periodicals: Periodicals published in a single settlement, and nationwide or regional periodicals published on a weekly basis or at longer intervals, g) The form of the publication: It must be indicated whether these periodicals are nationwide, regional or local. h) Non-periodicals: Printed matter such as books, presents which are not published at regular intervals. i) Owner of the material: The individual who writes the news or the text which forms the content of the periodical or the non-periodical, the translator or the person who produces the image or the cartoon. j) Publisher: The real or corporate body that prepares and publishes printed matter. k) Printer: The real or corporate body that prints the matter with printing equipment or copies it with other equipment. l) Authorized representative of the corporate body: If the owner of the publication or the publisher is a corporate body, the authorized organ will designate a real person from among the managers, or the public institutions and organizations will designate a real person
--	---

İfade eder
Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 29 : Süreli veya süresiz yayın önceden izin alma ve malî teminat yatırma şartına bağlanamaz. Süreli yayın çıkarabilmek için kanunun gösterdiği bilgi ve belgelerin, kanunda belirtilen yetkili mercie verilmesi yeterlidir. Bu bilgi ve belgelerin kanuna aykırılığının tespiti halinde yetkili merci, yayının durdurulması için mahkemeye başvurur. Süreli yayınların çıkarılması, yayım şartları, malî kaynakları ve gazetecilik mesleği ile ilgili esaslar kanunla düzenlenir. Kanun, haber, düşünce ve kanaatlerin serbestçe yayımlanmasını engelleyici veya zorlaştırıcı siyasal, ekonomik, malî ve teknik şartlar koyamaz. Süreli yayınlar, Devletin ve diğer kamu tüzelkişilerinin veya bunlara bağlı kurumların araç ve imkânlarından eşitlik esasına göre yararlanır.	Constitution of Turkish Republic Article 29: Publication of periodicals or non-periodicals shall not be subject to prior authorization or the deposit of a financial guarantee. Submission of the information and documents specified by law to the competent authority designated by law is sufficient to publish a periodical. If these information and documents are found to contravene the laws, the competent authority shall apply to the court for suspension of publication. The principles regarding the publication, the conditions

	of publication and the financial resources of periodicals, and the profession of journalism shall be regulated by law. The law shall not impose any political, economic, financial, and technical conditions 15 obstructing or making difficult the free dissemination of news, thoughts, or opinions. Periodicals shall have equal access to the means and facilities of the State, other public corporate bodies, and their agencies.
Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası Madde 30: Kanuna uygun şekilde basın işletmesi olarak kurulan basımevi ve eklentileri ile basın araçları, suç aleti olduğu gerekçesiyle zapt ve müsadere edilemez veya işletilmekten alıkonulamaz. .	Constitution of Turkish Republic Article 30 A printing house and its annexes, duly established as a press enterprise under law, and press equipment shall not be seized, confiscated, or barred from operation on the grounds of having been used in a crime.

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 125: 1) Bir kimseye onur, şeref ve saygınlığını rencide edebilecek nitelikte somut bir fiil veya olgu isnat eden (...) ⁽¹⁾ veya sövmek suretiyle bir kimsenin onur, şeref ve saygınlığına saldıran kişi, üç aydan iki yıla kadar hapis veya adli para cezası ile cezalandırılır. Mağdurun gıyabında hakaretin cezalandırılabilmesi için fiilin en az üç kişiyle ihtilat ederek işlenmesi gerekir. (2) Fiilin, mağduru muhatap alan sesli, yazılı veya görüntülü bir iletiyle işlenmesi halinde, yukarıdaki fıkrada belirtilen cezaya hükmolunur. (3) Hakaret suçunun; a) Kamu görevlisine karşı görevinden dolayı, b) Dini, siyasi, sosyal, felsefi inanç, düşünce ve kanaatlerini açıklamasından, değiştirmesinden, yaymaya çalışmasından, mensup olduğu dinin emir ve yasaklarına uygun davranmasından dolayı, c) Kişinin mensup bulunduğu dine göre kutsal sayılan değerlerden bahisle, İşlenmesi halinde, cezanın alt sınırı bir yıldan az olamaz. (4) (Değişik: 29/6/2005 – 5377/15 md.) Hakaretin alenen işlenmesi halinde ceza altıda biri oranında artırılır. (5) (Değişik: 29/6/2005 – 5377/15 md.) Kurul hâlinde çalışan kamu görevlilerine görevlerinden dolayı hakaret edilmesi hâlinde suç, kurulu oluşturan üyelere karşı işlenmiş sayılır. Ancak, bu durumda zincirleme suça ilişkin madde	Turkish Criminal Code Article 125: Any person who acts with the intention to harm the honor, reputation or dignity of another person through concrete performance or giving impression of intent, is sentenced to imprisonment from three months to two years or imposed punitive fine. In order to punish the offense committed in absentia of the victim, the act should be committed in presence of least three persons. (2) The offender is subject to above stipulated punishment in case of commission of offense in writing or by use of audio or visual means directed to the aggrieved party. (3) In case of commission of offense with defamatory intent; a) Against a public officer, b) Due to disclosure, change or attempt to spread religious, social, philosophical belief, opinion and convictions and to obey the orders and restriction of the one's religion, c) By mentioning sacred values in view of the religion with which a person is connected, the minimum limit of punishment may not be less than one year. (4) The punishment is increased by one sixth in case of performance of defamation act openly; if the offense is committed through press and use of any one of publication organs, then the punishment is increased up to one
--	--

hükümleri uygulanır. Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 216: Halkı kin ve düşmanlığa tahrik veya aşağılama (1) Halkın sosyal sınıf, ırk, din, mezhep veya bölge bakımından farklı özelliklere sahip bir kesimini, diğer bir kesimi aleyhine kin ve düşmanlığa alenen tahrik eden kimse, bu nedenle kamu güvenliği açısından açık ve yakın bir tehlikenin ortaya çıkması halinde, bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. (2) Halkın bir kesimini, sosyal sınıf, ırk, din, mezhep, cinsiyet veya bölge farklılığına dayanarak alenen aşağılayan kişi, altı aydan bir yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. (3) Halkın bir kesiminin benimsediği dini değerleri alenen aşağılayan kişi, fiilin kamu barışını bozmaya elverişli olması halinde, altı aydan bir yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.	third. (5) In case of defamation of public officers working as a committee to perform a duty, the offense is considered to have committed against the members forming the committee. Turkish Criminal Code Article 216 “1) Any person who openly provokes a group of people belonging to different social class, religion, race, sect, or coming from another origin, to be rancorous or hostile against another group, is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years in case of such act causes risk from the aspect of public safety. (2) Any person who openly humiliates another person just because he belongs to different social class, religion, race, sect, or comes from another origin, is punished with imprisonment from six months to one year. (3) Any person who openly disrespects the religious belief of group is punished with imprisonment from six months to one year if such act causes potential risk for public peace.”
--	--

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 226: (2) Müstehcen görüntü, yazı veya sözleri basın ve yayın yolu ile yayınlayan veya yayınlanmasına aracılık eden kişi altı aydan üç yıla kadar hapis ve beşbin güne kadar adli para cezası ile cezalandırılır. Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 301: Türk Milletini, Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Devletini, Devletin kurum ve organlarını aşağılama (1) Türk Milletini, Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Devletini, Türkiye Büyük Millet Meclisini, Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Hükümetini ve Devletin yargı organlarını alenen aşağılayan kişi, altı aydan iki yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. (2) Devletin askerî veya emniyet teşkilatını alenen aşağılayan kişi, birinci fıkra hükmüne göre cezalandırılır. (3) Eleştiri amacıyla yapılan düşünce açıklamaları suç oluşturmaz.	Turkish Criminal Code Article 226: 2) The persons who publicize indecent scenes, words or articles through press and broadcast organs or act as intermediary in publication of the same is punished with imprisonment from six months to three years. Turkish Criminal Code Article 301: Insulting Turkish Nation, the Republic, the organs and institutions of the State <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. A person who publicly denigrates the Turkish Nation, the State of the Turkish Republic or the Grand Assembly of Turkey and the judicial institutions of the State shall be punishable by imprisonment from 6 months to 2 years.2. A person who publicly denigrates the military and police organizations of the State will too receive the same punishment.3. Expressions of thought intended to
---	---

(4) Bu suçtan dolayı soruşturma yapılması, Adalet Bakanının iznine bağlıdır.	criticize shall not constitute a crime. 4. The prosecution under this article will require the approval of the Minister of Justice.
Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 279: (1) Kamu adına soruşturma ve kovuşturmayı gerektiren bir suçun işlendiğini göreviyle bağlantılı olarak öğrenip de yetkili makamlara bildirimde bulunmayı ihmal eden veya bu hususta gecikme gösteren kamu görevlisi, altı aydan iki yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.	Turkish Criminal Code Article 279: If any public officer neglects or delays in notification of an offense to the authorized bodies being aware of commission of an offense which requires investigation or prosecution, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years.
Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 286: Soruşturma ve kovuşturma işlemleri sırasındaki ses veya görüntüleri yetkisiz olarak kayda alan veya nakleden kişi, altı aya kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.	Turkish Criminal Code Article 286: Recording of sound or vision which is also a crime that any person who records or transfers sound or vision during the investigation or prosecution without obtaining permission is sentenced to imprisonment up to six months.
Terörle Mücadele Kanunu Madde 6: 2.) Terör örgütlerinin; cebir, şiddet veya tehdit	Anti-Terror Law Article 6: 2.) Those who print or publish leaflets and

içeren yöntemlerini meşru gösteren veya öven ya da bu yöntemlere başvurmayı teşvik eden bildiri veya açıklamalarını basanlar veya yayınlayanlar bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır 4.) Yukarıdaki fıkralarda belirtilen fiillerin basın ve yayın yoluyla işlenmesi hâlinde, basın ve yayın organlarının suçun işlenişine iştirak etmemiş olan yayın sorumluları hakkında da bin günden beşbin güne kadar adli para cezasına hükmolunur. Anayasa Madde 13: Temel Hak ve Özgürlüklerin sınırlandırılması Temel hak ve hürriyetler, özlerine dokunulmaksızın yalnızca Anayasanın ilgili maddelerinde belirtilen sebeplere bağlı olarak ve ancak kanunla sınırlanabilir. Bu sınırlamalar, Anayasanın sözüne ve ruhuna, demokratik toplum düzeninin ve lâik Cumhuriyetin gereklerine ve ölçülülük ilkesine aykırı olamaz Anayasa Madde 26: Düşünceyi açıklama ve yayma hürriyeti Bu hürriyetlerin kullanılması, millî güvenlik, kamu düzeni, kamu güvenliği, Cumhuriyetin temel nitelikleri ve Devletin ülkesi ve milleti ile bölünmez bütünlüğünün korunması, suçların önlenmesi, suçluların cezalandırılması, Devlet	declarations of terrorist organizations shall be punished with a sentence up to 3 years. 4.) Those who commits the acts mentioned above through press and who are not part of the crime are fined from 1000 days up to 5000 days. Constitution of Turkish Republic Article 13 Restriction of fundamental rights and freedoms Fundamental rights and freedoms may be restricted only by law and in conformity with the reasons mentioned in the relevant articles of the Constitution without infringing upon their essence. These restrictions shall not be contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution and the requirements of the democratic order of the society and the secular republic and the principle of proportionality. Turkish Constitution Article 26: Freedom of expression and dissemination of thought The exercise of these freedoms may be restricted for the purposes of national security, public order, public safety, safeguarding the basic characteristics of the Republic and the
---	--

sırrı olarak usulünce belirtilmiş bilgilerin açıklanmaması, başkalarının şöhret veya haklarının, özel ve aile hayatlarının yahut kanunun öngördüğü meslek sırlarının korunması veya yargılama görevinin gereğine uygun olarak yerine getirilmesi amaçlarıyla sınırlanabilir.

Düşünceyi açıklama ve yayma hürriyetinin kullanılmasında uygulanacak şekil, şart ve usuller kanunla düzenlenir.

Türk Ceza Muhakemesi Kanunu Madde 135:

Bir suç dolayısıyla yapılan soruşturma ve kovuşturmada, suç işlendiğine ilişkin somut delillere dayanan kuvvetli şüphe sebeplerinin varlığı ve başka suretle delil elde edilmesi imkânının bulunmaması durumunda, ağır ceza mahkemesi veya gecikmesinde sakınca bulunan hâllerde Cumhuriyet savcısının kararıyla şüpheli veya sanığın telekomünikasyon yoluyla iletişimi (...) dinlenebilir, kayda alınabilir ve sinyal bilgileri değerlendirilebilir. Cumhuriyet savcısı kararını derhâl mahkemenin onayına sunar ve mahkeme, kararını en geç yirmi dört saat içinde verir. Sürenin dolması veya mahkeme tarafından aksine karar verilmesi hâlinde tedbir Cumhuriyet savcısı tarafından derhâl kaldırılır. Bu fıkra uyarınca alınacak tedbire ağır ceza mahkemesince oy birliğiyle karar verilir. İtiraz üzerine bu tedbire karar verilebilmesi için de oy birliği aranır.

indivisible integrity of the State with its territory and nation, preventing crime, punishing offenders, withholding information duly classified as a state secret, protecting the reputation or rights and private and family life of others, or protecting professional secrets as prescribed by law, or ensuring the proper functioning of the judiciary.

The formalities, conditions and procedures to be applied in exercising the freedom of expression and dissemination of thought shall be prescribed by law.

Turkish Code of Criminal Procedure Article 135:

The judge or, in cases of peril in delay, the public prosecutor, may decide to locate, listen to or record the correspondence through telecommunication or to evaluate the information about the signals of the suspect or the accused, if during an investigation or prosecution conducted in relation to a crime there are strong grounds of suspicion indicating that the crime has been committed and there is no other possibility to obtain evidence. The public prosecutor shall submit his decision immediately to the judge for his approval and the judge shall make a decision within 24 hours. In cases where the duration expires or the judge decides the opposite way, the measure shall be lifted by the public prosecutor immediately.

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 132:

Kişiler arasındaki haberleşmenin gizliliğini ihlal eden kimse, bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. Bu gizlilik ihlali haberleşme içeriklerinin kaydı suretiyle gerçekleşirse, verilecek ceza bir kat artırılır.

(2) Kişiler arasındaki haberleşme içeriklerini hukuka aykırı olarak ifşa eden kimse, iki yıldan beş yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır.

(3) Kendisiyle yapılan haberleşmelerin içeriğini diğer tarafın rızası olmaksızın hukuka aykırı olarak alenen ifşa eden kişi, bir yıldan üç yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. İfşa edilen bu verilerin basın ve yayın yoluyla yayımlanması halinde de aynı cezaya hükmolunur

Türk Ceza Kanunu Madde 124:

Kişiler arasındaki haberleşmenin hukuka aykırı olarak engellenmesi halinde, altı aydan iki yıla kadar hapis veya adli para cezasına hükmolunur.

(2) Kamu kurumları arasındaki haberleşmeyi hukuka aykırı olarak engelleyen kişi, bir yıldan beş yıla kadar hapis cezası ile cezalandırılır. (3) Her türlü basın ve yayın organının yayınının hukuka aykırı bir şekilde engellenmesi halinde,

Turkish Criminal Code Article 132:

Any person who violates secrecy of communication between the parties is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, or imposed punitive fine. If violation of secrecy is realized by recording of contents of communication, the party involved in such act is sentenced to imprisonment from one year to three years. Any person who unlawfully publicizes the contents of communication between the persons is punished with imprisonment from one year to three years.

Any person who openly discloses the content of the communication between himself and others without obtaining their consent, is punished with imprisonment from six months to two years, The punishment determined for this offense is increased by one half in case of disclosure of contents of communication between the individuals through press and broadcast.

Turkish Criminal Code Article 124:

In case of unlawful prevention of communication among the persons, the offender is sentenced to imprisonment from six years to two years or imposed punitive fine. Any person who unlawfully prevents communication among the public institutions is punished with imprisonment from one year to five years. Punishment is imposed ikinci fıkra hükmüne göre cezaya hükmolunur

Elektronik Haberleşme Kanunu Madde 39:

Telsiz haberleşme sistemleri üzerinden kriptolu haberleşme yapmaya Türk Silahlı Kuvvetleri, Jandarma Genel Komutanlığı ve Sahil Güvenlik Komutanlığı, Milli İstihbarat Teşkilatı, Emniyet Genel Müdürlüğü ve Dışişleri Bakanlığı yetkilidir. Ayrıca yukarıda belirtilen kurumlara ait olanlar dışında kamu kurum ve kuruluşları ile gerçek ve tüzel kişilerin elektronik haberleşme hizmeti içinde kodlu veya kriptolu haberleşme yapma usul ve esasları Kurum tarafından belirlenir.

Kamu kurum ve kuruluşları ile gerçek ve tüzel kişilerin elektronik haberleşme hizmetleri içinde kodlu veya kriptolu haberleşme yapma usul ve esasları hakkında yönetmelik according to the provisions of second subsection in case of unlawful prevention of broadcasts or announcements of all kinds of press and publication organ

Law on Electronic Communications
Article 39:

The following institutions are authorized to conduct encrypted communications on wireless communications systems: Turkish Armed Forces, the General Command of the Gendarmie, the Coast Guard Command, the National Intelligence Organization, the general Directorate of Security and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The procedure and principles relating to how other institutions and organizations and real and legal persons may carry out encoded and encrypted communications through electronic communications means shall be determined by the Institution.

Regulation on the procedure and principles relating to encoded and encrypted communications within the electronic communication services by public institutions and organizations, real and legal persons

Madde 5: 5809 sayılı Kanunda belirtilen istisnai kurumlar haricindeki tüm kamu kurum ve kuruluşları ile gerçek ve tüzel kişiler bu Yönetmelik hükümlerine aykırı olmamak kaydıyla kodlu ve/veya kriptolu haberleşme yapabilir. Madde 6: Üretici veya üretici firmayı temsilen imza yetkisini haiz kişilerin adli sicil kayıtlarında Devletin ülkesi ve milletiyle bölünmez bütünlüğüne, Cumhuriyetin temel ilkelerine ve devletin güvenliğine karşı suçlar, Anayasal düzene ve bu düzenin işleyişine karşı suçlar, milli savunmaya karşı suçlar, Devlet sırlarına karşı suçlar ve casusluk, zimmet, irtikâp, rüşvet, hırsızlık, dolandırıcılık, sahtecilik, güveni kötüye kullanma, hileli iflas, ihaleye fesat karıştırma, edimin ifasına fesat karıştırma, suçtan kaynaklanan malvarlığı değerlerini aklama veya kaçakçılık veya 12/4/1991 tarihli ve 3713 sayılı Terörle Mücadele Kanunu kapsamındaki suçlardan mahkûm olma durumu var ise yapılan başvuru reddedilir. Madde 7: Kodlu veya kriptolu elektronik haberleşme hizmeti başvuruları Kurum tarafından değerlendirilir. Başvurunun kabul edilmesi durumunda kod veya kripto Kuruma teslim edilir ve üreticiye izin verilebilir.	Article 5: Real persons and public institutions can use encrypted communication in accordance with the provisions of the regulation Article 6: The creators of the encoded and encrypted communication should not have been violated the unity and territorial integrity of state, committed crimes against the security of the state and main principles of Republic, committed crimes against the constitutional order, committed crimes such as corruption, theft, espionage, fraud, smuggling and be sentenced in accordance with Anti-terror law. Article 7: The Institution of Information Technologies and Communications evaluates the application to use encryption programmes
--	---

ELSA UKRAINE

Contributors

National Coordinator

Yuriy Pochtovyk

National Academic Coordinator

Yuriy Pochtovyk

National Researchers

Kateryna Lahodivets
Olexandra Ferlikovska
Pavlo Malyuta
Victor Komziuk

National Linguistic Editors

Ivan Chopyk
Olesia Gorbun
Mariia Skorikova

1. INTRODUCTION

Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter: “Convention” or “ECHR”) establishes that everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.¹ In the Goodwin v. the United Kingdom judgment, the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter: “ECtHR” or “Court”) stressed that Article 10 also includes the right of the journalists not to disclose their source of information. The ECtHR highlighted that it is one of the basic conditions for freedom of the press, without which ‘sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest.’² Taking into account the importance of journalists’ privilege not to disclose sources of information, the Council of Europe addressed this issue as well as adopted some requirements for adequate protection of this right in a set of its documents and instruments.³

2. Does the National Legislation Provide (Explicit or Otherwise) Protection of the Right of the Journalists Not to Disclose Their Source of Information? What Type of Legislation Provides This Protection? How Exactly is This Protection Construed in National Law?

2.1. Does the National Legislation Provide (Explicit or Otherwise) Protection of the Right of the Journalists Not to Disclose Their Source of Information?

Ukrainian legislation provides for certain legal measures for the protection of journalistic sources, however, they are not explicit. Whereas general legal rules are established, specific definitions and procedures are missing.

Under national law, journalists’ privilege of non-disclosure of their sources of information encompasses rights to keep in secret (1) a journalistic source; and (2) information identifying a journalistic source. Being prescribed by specific legislation on journalists’ rights, it is also protected under the Constitution of Ukraine and procedural law.

¹ Council of Europe, Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights, as Amended) (ECHR) Art 10, 1950.

² Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996) para 39.

³ Council of Europe (4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy), ‘Resolution No 2 on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights’ (7-8 December 1994); Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (8 March 2000); Council of Europe (Committee on Culture, Science and Education) ‘Report on the Protection of Journalists’ Sources’ (1 December 2010); Council of Europe (Parliamentary Assembly) ‘Recommendation 1950 (2011) on the Protection of Journalists’ Sources’ (25 January 2011) et al.

2.2. What Type of Legislation Provides This Protection?

The Constitution of Ukraine describes the right for information as follows:

Everyone is entitled to the right to freedom of thought and speech, and to the free expression of his or her views and beliefs. Everyone has a right to freely collect, store, use and disseminate information by oral, written or other means of his or her choice. The exercise of these rights may be restricted by law in the interests of national security, territorial indivisibility or public order, with the purpose of preventing disturbances or crimes, protecting the health of the population, the reputation or rights of other persons, preventing the publication of information received confidentially, or supporting the authority and impartiality of justice.⁴

Article 34 of the Constitution describes the right to information in general. However, it contains a provision on 'preventing the publication of information received confidentially', which, inter alia, concerns journalistic sources. Being a general rule, this provision grants constitutional protection to journalistic sources.

One of the main legal provisions regarding the protection of journalistic sources is established in the Law of Ukraine "On Information":

A journalist has the right not to disclose the source of information or information that allows to detect sources of information, except when it is ordered by the court and based on law.⁵

The Law "On the Print Media (Press) in Ukraine" provides for almost the same provision:

A journalist has the right [inter alia] to the secrecy of authorship and sources of information, unless such information is to be revealed at the request of the court.⁶

The mechanism for the legal protection of journalistic sources is also introduced in the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine. It is stated that journalists shall not be interrogated as witnesses about confidential information of a professional nature, provided on condition of non-disclosure of its authorship or source of information.⁷ Furthermore, under the Criminal Procedure Code such information is recognised as "secret" and "protected by law":

⁴ Law n. 254к/96-ВР (The Constitution of Ukraine) 1996 [Конституція України] art 34.

⁵ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 25 pt 3.

⁶ Law n. 2782-XII (On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні] art 26 pt 2 para 11.

⁷ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 65 pt 2 para 6.

Secret information protected by law and contained in objects and documents includes [inter alia] information in possession of a mass medium or a journalist, which was provided to them on condition that its author or source would not be disclosed.⁸

Additionally, Article 11, Part 4 of the Law of Ukraine “On Investigative and Search Operations” prohibits involving journalists in such operations, if such co-operation is related to the disclosure of information of a professional nature. Failure to comply with this prescription results in inadmissibility of obtained evidence.

As for civil proceedings, Article 51, Part 1, paragraph 2 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine prohibits to examine as witnesses individuals who are obliged by law to keep in secret information, entrusted to them in connection with their official or professional status. Article 65 Part 2 paragraph 5 of the Code of Administrative Procedure of Ukraine protects journalists from examination in the same manner.

There is no specific criminal liability for the breach of legal provisions concerning protection of journalistic sources. However, it falls under the scope of obstruction of lawful professional activity of a journalist. Criminal liability for such acts is established by the Criminal Code of Ukraine:

1. Illegal seizure of materials, collected, processed, prepared by journalist, and technical tools that he/she uses in connection with his/her professional activities [...] as well as any other wilful obstruction of legitimate professional activities of a journalist is punishable by a fine of up to 50 tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to six months or imprisonment for up to three years.
2. Any obstruction of the performance of professional duties of a journalist or prosecution of a journalist in connection with his/her legitimate professional activities is punishable by a fine of up to two hundred tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to six months or imprisonment for up to four years.
3. Actions stipulated in this Article, if committed by a public official using his official position or conducted in a conspiracy are punishable by a fine of two hundred to five hundred tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to five years, with disqualification either to hold certain positions or engage in certain activities for up to three years or without such.⁹

2.3. How Exactly is This Protection Construed in National Law?

In the light of the national legislation, the privilege of non-disclosure of journalistic sources consists of four elements:

1. right to keep in secret a source of information and information identifying a source;

⁸ ibid art 162 pt 1 para 1.

⁹ Law n. 2341-III (Criminal Code of Ukraine) 2001 [Кримінальний кодекс України] art 171.

2. prohibition of interrogation of a journalist as a witness in criminal proceedings about confidential information provided on condition of non-disclosure of authorship or source of this information;
3. broadcasting organisations shall keep in secret information about persons who provided them with information or other materials, if the confidentiality of a person was the condition for such transmission of information;
4. investigators shall not demand disclosure of journalistic sources during covert investigation.

However, the wording of the provisions dealing with protection of journalistic sources is not consistent enough. The Law of Ukraine “On Information” provides for the terms of a “source” and “information identifying a source”¹⁰ with no further definition as it is set out in Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7.¹¹ Alternatively, it defines information about a natural person and information, access to which is restricted under the decision of natural or legal person, to be confidential.¹² In terms of criminal proceedings, information identifying a source is recognised as “secret information protected by law”.¹³ There is no definition of a “source” in Ukrainian legislation.

3. Is There, in Domestic Law, a Provision That Prohibits a Journalist From Disclosing His/Her Sources? How Exactly is This Prohibition Construed in National Law? What is the Sanction?

3.1. Is There, in Domestic Law, a Provision That Prohibits a Journalist From Disclosing His/Her Sources?

Ukrainian legislation prohibiting journalists to disclose his/her sources includes the following legal acts:

- Law of Ukraine n. 2657-XII “On Information” (1992);
- Law of Ukraine n. 2782-XII “On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine” (1992);
- Law of Ukraine n. 3759-XII “On Television and Radio Broadcasting” (1993).

¹⁰ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 25 pt 3.

¹¹ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (8 March 2000) Appendix, Definitions, para c, d.

¹² Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 21 pt 2.

¹³ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 162 pt 1 para 1.

3.2. How Exactly is This Prohibition Construed in National Law?

National legislation outlines the journalists' obligation not to disclose confidential sources rather than clearly establishes the prohibition. Article 26 of the Law "On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine" stipulates that the journalist is obliged to fulfil his/her sources requests regarding their confidentiality.¹⁴ Also, Article 59 of the Law "On Television and Radio Broadcasting" prescribes that broadcasting organisations shall keep confidentiality of their sources at the request of the latter.¹⁵ While recognising the journalists' privilege of non-disclosure, the Law of Ukraine "On Information" does not directly prohibit a journalist from disclosing sources. However, Article 21 Part 2 of the above-mentioned law provides that the confidential information may be disseminated upon the approval of a respective person in a manner prescribed by this person, and in other cases prescribed by law.

The prohibition for journalists to disclose their sources of information under Ukrainian law is not limited to the prohibition of disclosing personal information about a person. Such prohibition also encompasses the disclosure of materials that do not constitute sources themselves, but may be used to identify a person who acts as the source of information.¹⁶

There are some provisions on the prohibition of disclosure of journalistic sources in the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist, which was adopted by the National Society of Journalists of Ukraine and Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine in 2013.¹⁷ The Code itself does not encompass legal rules; it is rather a compilation of moral and ethical principles that should be observed by every journalist in Ukraine. Article 5 of the aforesaid Code provides that journalist shall not disclose his/her sources of information, except in the cases prescribed by law.¹⁸

However, the Law "On Information" acknowledges certain exceptional circumstances when the sources may be legally disclosed. In particular, Article 29 of the Law provides that classified information may be disseminated in case of public necessity, i.e. it is a matter of public interest and the public's right to know this information overweight potential harm of its dissemination. According to the Law a matter of public interest is information that (1) indicates a threat to national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine; (2) facilitates implementation of constitutional rights, freedoms and duties; (3) indicates a possibility of violation of human rights, ¹⁴ Law n. 2782-XII (On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні] art 26 pt 3 para 3.

¹⁵ Law n. № 3759-XII (On Television and Radio Broadcasting) 1993 [Про телебачення і радіомовлення] art 59 pt 1 para ж.

¹⁶ Viktoriya Dobrynska, 'Європейський суд своїм рішенням поставив під загрозу журналістський привілей на збереження у таємниці джерел інформації' (Media Law Institute, 30 June 2009) <<http://medialaw.org.ua/analytics/yevropejskyj-sud-svoyim-rishennyam-postavyv-pid-zagrozu-zhurnalistykyj-pryvylej-na-zberezhennya-u-tayemnytsi-dzherel-informatsiyi/>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

¹⁷ Congress of Journalists-Signatories of the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist, 'Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist' (4 October 2013) [Кодекс етики українського журналіста].

¹⁸ ibid art 5.

deception of the public, harmful environmental and other negative effects of activity (or inactivity) of natural and legal persons.¹⁹

3.3. What is the Sanction?

General provisions governing sanctioning of journalists for not fulfilling their obligations are established by above-mentioned three key legal acts. However, provisions concerning sanctions applied for disclosure of journalistic sources are not formulated clearly. The Law of Ukraine “On Information” provides that violation of the national legislation concerning information entails disciplinary, civil, administrative or criminal liability under the laws of Ukraine²⁰, while Article 41 of the Law “On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine” prohibits misuse of one’s journalist rights.²¹ However, Ukrainian law does not provide for specific provisions on disciplinary, civil and administrative liability of journalists with regard to unlawful disclosure. Thus, the subject matter falls under the scope of general provisions.

In terms of disciplinary liability, an employed journalist is a subject to disciplinary liability for labour discipline infringement. According to Article 147 of the Labour Code of Ukraine, an employer may apply only one of the following sanctions for such infringement: reprimand or dismissal.²²

Taking into account that unlawful disclosure may cause both material and moral damage, a journalist or a media outlet as a legal entity may be brought to civil liability under general provisions of the Civil Code of Ukraine concerning compensation for damage.²³

Provisions providing for administrative liability of a journalist for disclosure of confidential sources are absent.

At the same time, the Criminal Code of Ukraine provides for a clear provision, which may be applied to journalists in case of unlawful disclosure. In particular, Article 182 of the Criminal Code establishes the following:

Illegal collection, storage, use or dissemination of confidential information about a person without his/her consent, or dissemination of such information in a public speech, publicly demonstrated work, or mass media, – shall be punishable by a fine of five hundred to one thousand tax-free minimum incomes, or correctional labour for a term up to two years, or arrest for a term of up to six months, or imprisonment for a term of up to three years.²⁴

¹⁹ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про Інформацію] art 29 pt 2.

²⁰ ibid art 27.

²¹ Law n. 2782-XII (On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні] art 41 pt 2 para 5.

²² Law n. 322-VIII (Labour Code of Ukraine) 1971 [Кодекс законів про працю України] art 147 pt 1.

²³ Law n. 435-IV (Civil Code of Ukraine) 2003 [Цивільний кодекс України] ch 22.

²⁴ Law n. 2341-III (Criminal Code of Ukraine) 2001 [Кримінальний Кодекс України] art 181 pt 2.

For the purpose of this article, dissemination of confidential information is recognised as the transmission of a message containing confidential information in any way (oral, written, printed, via Internet, etc.) to at least one person. In addition, the dissemination of such information in the media may be embodied in the form of public notice in printed media (newspapers, magazines, newsletters) or through other types of media (radio, television, etc.).²⁵

When it comes to the broadcasting organisations, they are subject to sanctions for violating Ukrainian legislation on television and radio broadcasting. Such sanctions are to be determined by court or the National Television and Radio Broadcasting Council of Ukraine. According to Article 72 of the Law “On Television and Radio Broadcasting”, admonition, fine, initiation of the broadcast license revocation in court are among the possible sanctions for violation of the respective legislation.²⁶

In the context of the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist, violation of its provisions (including illegal disclosure of journalists’ sources) may also be subject to public condemnation or expulsion from trade union or National Union of Journalists of Ukraine. The Commission on Journalists’ Ethics considers such cases.²⁷ Although, the Commission is not a public authority, and does not have power of adjunction. It can only report violations to the respective authorities.

Given the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 is limited to the right of journalists not to disclose their sources, the standards established in Recommendation should not prevent member States from introducing in their national legislation a higher protection of the sources.²⁸ Taking into consideration above-mentioned provisions, we think that national legislation provides for higher standards of protection of confidential sources with respect to journalists’ obligation not to disclose such sources themselves.

²⁵ Mykola Melnyk, Mykola Khavronyuk, Науково-практичний коментар до Кримінального кодексу України (9th edn, Yurydychna Dymka 2012) 493 [Ukrainian].

²⁶ Law n. № 3759-XII (On Television and Radio Broadcasting) 1993 [Про телебачення і радіомовлення] art 72 pt 1 para 6.

²⁷ Congress of Journalists-Signatories of the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist, ‘Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist’ (4 October 2013) [Кодекс етики українського журналіста] art 19.

²⁸ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 42.

4. Who is a “Journalist” According to the National Legislation? Is It in Your View a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources? What is the Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors? Is the Protection of Journalists’ Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

4.1. Who is a “Journalist” According to the National Legislation?

National law provides for a range of definitions of a “journalist” that are mostly similarly outlined in several legal acts. All of these definitions may be found below in the chronological order of the laws they are fixed in. One should bear in mind that all of the undermentioned laws are still in force.

Article 25 Part 1 of the Law “On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine” of November 16 1992 states the following:

Journalist of a print mass medium is a creative worker, who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for a print media outlet and acts on the basis of labour or other contractual relations with his/her editorial office or is authorised by the editorial office to perform these activities, which is confirmed by a certificate issued by the editorial office or by other document issued by the editorial office.

According to Article 1 of the Law of Ukraine “On Television and Radio Broadcasting” of December 21 1993:

journalist of television and radio is a staff or a freelance creative employee of a broadcasting organisation, who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for distribution.²⁹

Article 21 of the Law of Ukraine “On Informational Agencies” of February 28 1995 states that:

Journalist of an informational agency is a creative employee, who collects, receives, creates and prepares information for an informational agency and acts on its behalf on the basis of a labour contract, or on the basis of other contractual relations, or under authorisation of an informational agency [...] Journalist of an informational agency enjoys rights and bears obligations prescribed by Ukrainian legislation on press, television and radio broadcasting.³⁰

Article 1 of the Law of Ukraine “On State Support of Mass Media and Social Protection of Journalists” of September 23 1997 provides for the following:

Journalist is a creative employee, who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for a mass medium, performs official editorial duties for a mass

²⁹ Law n. № 3759-XII (On Television and Radio Broadcasting) 1993 [Про телебачення і радіомовлення] art 1 para 65.

³⁰ Law n. 74/95-BP (On Information Agencies) 1995 [Про інформаційні агентства] art 21 pt 1, 3.

media outlet (as a member of staff or on a freelance basis) according to the professional titles of jobs listed in the State Classifier of Professions in Ukraine.

It is necessary to mention that some amendments to the Law of Ukraine “On Information” were passed in May 2011. Before that, Article 20 of the above-mentioned law recognised only printed and audiovisual types of media, and defined them in a following way:

Print media are periodical publications (press) – newspapers, magazines, bulletins, etc. and separate editions with certain print runs. Audiovisual media are: radio broadcasting, television, film, audio recording, video recording, and others.³¹

A specific law that includes definition of a “journalist” regulates each type of media. In such a way, the Parliament limited definition of a journalist and his professional activities to a particular type of media. This resulted in exclusion of some individuals performing the same type of activities as media journalists for organisations that do not fall under the scope of the Parliament’s understanding of mass media. The most obvious example of this are journalists of web-based media outlets.

The amendments of 2011 showed that the Parliament took more flexible approach by considering mass media as ‘resources targeted for public distribution of printed or audiovisual information’.³² Thus, web-based media, which could not be considered as mass media according to the approach had been existing before 2011, now also fall under the scope of the term “mass media”. Consequently, a person working on collecting, processing and creating information for online media outlets is also considered a journalist similarly to a person performing journalistic activities for print and audiovisual mass media.

All of the above-mentioned types of journalists enjoy almost the same scope of rights and bear similar number of obligations that are established in several laws, while in other ones reference is only fixed, when it comes to journalists’ rights. For example, the Law of Ukraine “On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine” states that a journalist of a print media outlet enjoys the rights and bears duties prescribed by the Law of Ukraine “On Information”.³³

Unfortunately, we observe the lack of clarity in national legislation governing the subject matter. Essentially, the above-mentioned laws differentiate such professions as a journalist, a journalist of print media, a journalist of television and radio and a journalist of an informational agency, which is contrary to the State Classifier of Professions.³⁴ It should be noted that the State Classifier of Professions is a regulation developed by the State Committee of Ukraine on Technical Regulation and Consumer Policy and approved by the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade of Ukraine. It provides for official titles of professions in Ukraine, which are classified into groups according to certain characteristics. Every employer while ³¹ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 20 pt 2, 3 (as of 2 October 1992).

³² Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 22 pt 2.

³³ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 26 pt 1.

³⁴ Decree n. 327 5 of the State Committee of Ukraine on Technical Regulation and Consumer Policy (Classifier of Professions ДК 003:2010) 2010 [Класифікатор професії ДК 003:2010].

maintaining employment records of the employees must follow this regulation. The Classifier provides only for professions of a journalist and a journalist of multimedia publications of mass media, while Ukrainian legislation does not define the term of a “journalist of multimedia publications of mass media”.

Furthermore, the requirement to hold an identification document confirming professional status of a journalist in order to be recognised as such, and enjoy all rights and guarantees deriving from this status should be considered. Not all of the above-mentioned laws require a journalist to have such a document. Nonetheless, the Law of Ukraine “On Print Mass Media in Ukraine” states that professional affiliation of a journalist can be confirmed by (1) a certificate issued by the editorial office; (2) other document issued by the editorial office; (3) a document issued by the professional association of journalists.³⁵ The Law “On Informational Agencies” prescribes that ‘journalist’s affiliation with an information agency is confirmed by an official identification document of this agency or other document issued by this agency’.³⁶

In this regard, the criminal legislation should be mentioned. The Criminal Code of Ukraine does not include a clear definition of a journalist. At the same time, Article 345-1 of the Criminal Code defines the term of “professional activities of a journalist”:

The professional activities of a journalist in this Article and articles 171, 347-1, 348-1 of the Code should be understood as a systematic activity of a person related to the collection, obtainment, creation, distribution, storage or other usage of the information with a purpose of its dissemination to the indefinite range of persons through print mass media, broadcasting organisations, informational agencies, the Internet. The status of a journalist or his/her affiliation with a mass medium is confirmed by editorial or official identity card or other document issued by a mass media outlet, its editorial office, or professional or creative union of journalists.

We think that this provision needs further clarification. While the first sentence of the provision does not define journalistic activities as activities performed by a holder of a special document, the second sentence provides that the status of a journalist is confirmed by relevant documents without any further explanation whether the possession of such documents is obligatory in order to be recognised as a journalist.

Thus, whether a person with no official documentation confirming his/her status of a journalist can be entitled to rights and bear obligations of a journalist in Ukraine is not clear. As a practical matter, such documentation facilitates access to information. Moreover, upon presentation of a document that confirms professional affiliation, a journalist has a right to collect information within the areas of natural disasters, catastrophes, accidents, in areas of mass riots, acts of war with exceptions prescribed by law.³⁷

³⁵ Law n. 2782-XII (On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (преси) в Україні] art 25 pt 1, 2.

³⁶ Law n. 74/95-BP (On Information Agencies) 1995 [Про інформаційні агентства] art 21 pt 2.

4.2. Is it in Your View a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources?

To summarise, the main features characterising the legal status of a journalist according to the national legislation can be described as follows:

- A journalist is a person, who performs the functions of collecting, processing and creating information for mass media outlets;
- He/she can work as a member of staff of a mass media outlet or on a freelance basis;
- His/her professional status is confirmed by official documentation issued by a mass media outlet or professional association of journalists.

As previously mentioned, national law is not precise enough with regard to the necessity of holding special identification documentation for being recognised as a journalist. It should be noted that Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 does not limit the definition of a “journalist” to the persons in possession of specific official documentation confirming their status. It extends the status of a journalist to ‘any natural or legal person who is regularly or professionally engaged in the collection and dissemination of information to the public via any means of mass communication’.³⁸ Therefore, as it is stressed in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Recommendation, ‘legal entities like publishing companies or news agencies are also to be protected like “journalists” under this Recommendation’.³⁹

It is not clear whether a legal entity is treated in the same manner as a journalist, who is a natural person, under Ukrainian legislation. There are no direct provisions as for the protection of legal persons from disclosure of confidential sources in the same manner as for natural persons. However, Article 59, Part 1 of the Law of Ukraine “On Television and Radio Broadcasting” prescribes that television and radio broadcasting organisations are obliged not to disclose confidential sources, while not establishing their right of non-disclosure. Moreover, national legislation does not consider other kinds of mass media outlets with regard to the privilege of non-disclosure. Therefore, we can conclude that the current definition of a “journalist” is largely limited for the purpose of the protection of journalistic sources.

³⁷ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 25 pt 4.

³⁸ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (8 March 2000) Appendix, Definitions, para a.

³⁹ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 13.

4.3. What is the Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors?

In order to determine the scope of protection of other media actors than journalists, it is useful to determine the scope of other media actors. For this purpose, the Recommendation (2011) 7 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to member states on the notion of media should be taken into consideration. The Recommendation calls upon member states to adopt a broader notion of media, which encompasses the following:

all actors involved in the production and dissemination, to potentially large numbers of people, of content (for example information, analysis, comment, opinion, education, culture, art and entertainment in text, audio, visual, audiovisual or other form) and applications which are designed to facilitate interactive mass communication (for example social networks) or other content-based large-scale interactive experiences (for example online games), while retaining (in all these cases) editorial control or oversight of the contents.⁴⁰

This being stated, we may conclude that every legal or natural person involved in one of the above-mentioned activities should be considered as media actor and enjoy respective rights. However, Ukrainian legislation fails to adopt such notion of media as well as lacks provisions concerning other media actors than journalists. There are only a few clauses regarding actors involved in activities of mass media outlets.

The Law of Ukraine “On Print Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine” recognises a founder (co-founders) of a print media outlet, its editor (editor in chief), editorial office, editorial board, editorial board’s staff, journalistic staff, author, publisher and distributor as actors of print mass media activities.⁴¹ Additionally, Article 6 Part 1 of the Law “On Informational Agencies” considers as actors of informational agencies’ activities the following entities:

founder (co-founders) of informational agency; its manager (director, CEO, President, etc.), staff; creative team; journalist of an informational agency; specialist in the field of communication; author or other person who owns the right to information; publisher (producer) of informational agency’s production; distributor of informational agency’s production; consumer of informational agency’s production.

Each kind of the above-mentioned actors enjoys the scope of rights and guarantees of these rights under the relevant legislation (for instance, staff as subject to labour relations enjoy the rights under labour legislation), but none of them, besides journalists, is entitled to journalists’ rights. Thus, Ukrainian legislation does not provide ‘all actors delivering services or products in the media ecosystem’ with ‘relevant safeguards against interference that might otherwise have an ⁴⁰ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation (2011) 7 on a New Notion of Media’ (21 September 2011) para 7.

⁴¹ Law n. 2782-XII (On Printed Mass Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні] art 7 pt 1.

adverse effect on Article 10 rights'.⁴²

4.4. Is the Protection of Journalists' Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

National legislation clearly establishes the right of non-disclosure of journalistic sources only for journalists. Article 25, paragraph 7 of the Law of Ukraine "On Information" extends the rights and obligations of a journalist to foreign journalists and employees of foreign mass media outlets, who work in Ukraine. However, national legislation does not either define the term of an "employee of a foreign mass media outlet" or an "employee of a mass media outlet" or prescribe which rights such actors are entitled to. Thus, we believe that national law fails to comply with the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 as 'other persons active in the media sector than journalists should be entitled not to disclose a source of information, if they acquire knowledge of this source through the collection, editorial processing or dissemination of the information'.⁴³

These "other persons" may include secretarial staff, journalistic colleagues, printing staff, the editor or the employer of a journalist, and therefore shall be subject to the privilege of non-disclosure.⁴⁴

5. What are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How are the Laws Implemented? How are the Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

5.1. What are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How are the Laws Implemented?

According to national legislation, the disclosure of confidential sources is possible solely at the request of the court as it is provided by the laws of Ukraine "On Information" and "On the Printed Media (Press) in Ukraine". Therefore, any disclosure motion is a subject for consideration by an independent judicial body, which complies with recommendations of the Council of Europe. Still, we can see the lack of legal safeguards for the protection of journalists' rights in national laws governing disclosure proceedings.

⁴² Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation (2011) 7 on a New Notion of Media' (21 September 2011) para 7.

⁴³ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (20 December 2000) para 22.

⁴⁴ ibid.

The disclosure proceedings are specified in the Criminal Procedure Code and Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine. In terms of criminal proceedings, Article 162, Part 1 paragraph 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine establishes that information in possession of a mass medium or a journalist that is obtained on the terms of non-disclosure of its author or source of information is regarded as secret information protected by law. However, such information may be subject to temporary access under Article 160 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, be disclosed only upon the court ruling or the order of the investigative judge. Article 159, Part 1 of the Code defines temporary access to objects and documents as an action providing a party to a criminal proceeding with an opportunity to examine objects and documents, make their copies or seize them by the person, who is in possession of such objects and documents. Thus, both parties to criminal proceedings (prosecution and defence) are given the right to file a disclosure motion. With regard to prosecution, Procedure law establishes additional requirements for disclosure motion. An investigator upon approval of the prosecutor shall submit such motion.⁴⁵ The prosecutor shall assess whether the motion is adequately justified, and if not refuses to approve it. Such two-step motion filing procedure seems to be a positive feature of national legislation. An investigator has an obligation to prove the necessity of disclosure not only before the court, but also before the respective prosecutor. This has a potential to eliminate groundless disclosure motions.

Together with a disclosure (temporary access) order, the court or investigative judge may order a seizure of objects and documents if a party to criminal proceedings proves there is a risk of destruction of these items.⁴⁶ However, a disclosure order is not equivalent to a search warrant.

This means that in case an investigator's temporary access request is refused, he/she cannot force the owner or keeper of the items to grant him/her access. If a journalist refuses to provide an investigator with a temporary access to objects or documents, an investigator should file a new motion to obtain a search warrant.⁴⁷

It is also important to mention that, as High Specialised Court of Ukraine stresses it for Civil and Criminal Cases in its case-law analysis of February 7 2014, temporary access to objects and documents shall only be conducted within the framework of criminal proceedings.⁴⁸

With regard to civil cases, parties to civil proceedings (plaintiff and defendant) as well as other persons involved in a case are entitled to file a disclosure motion as a mean of obtaining an evidence under Article 137 Part 1 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine: "The court upon

⁴⁵ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 160 pt 1.

⁴⁶ ibid art 163 pt 7.

⁴⁷ Goncharenko V., V. Nor, M. Shumylo (eds.), Кримінальний-процесуальний кодекс України. Науково-практичний коментар (Pravo 2012) 323-324 [Ukrainian].

⁴⁸ Case-Law Analysis of the High Specialised Court of Ukraine for Civil and Criminal Cases (On review of the motions for the use of the means to maintain criminal proceedings) February 7 2014 [Узагальнення судової практики щодо розгляду слідчим суддею клопотань про застосування заходів забезпечення кримінального провадження] para 2.5.

motion of the parties and other persons involved in the case shall vindicate the evidence that is difficult for the persons involved in the case to obtain.’

Additionally, parties to proceedings are entitled to apply for a review of court orders. However, the right to appeal a disclosure order is relatively limited.

Disclosure order in civil proceedings is not a subject for a separate judicial review, and therefore may be reviewed together with the final court decision in a civil case under Article 293 Part 2 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine. According to Article 392 Part 2 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, court orders for a temporary access to objects and documents that contain secret information protected by law and for search are reviewed in the same manner. Thus, journalists can only appeal disclosure orders after a final court’s judgement in the case is entered. In our opinion, this does not meet the requirements of Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 as ‘fair and efficient administration of justice at national level might therefore require the possibility of a national review of disclosure orders’.⁴⁹

5.2. How are the Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-Regulatory Mechanisms?

We note, with regret, that self-regulation does not play a sufficient role in the protection of journalists’ rights in Ukraine yet. Two key journalistic organisations in Ukraine, the National Union of Journalists of Ukraine and the Commission on Journalists’ Ethics, do not provide Ukrainian journalists with sufficient self-regulation. Having been established in 1959, the National Union of Journalists of Ukraine was reorganised in 1992 after Ukraine declared its independence. According to the Statutes of the Union, one of the main goals of this organisation is to protect the rights and interests of journalists.⁵⁰ However, it does not seem to be active in journalists’ rights advocacy. The Commission on Journalists’ Ethics does not also appear to be an adequate self-regulatory body. Aimed at resolving conflicts of ethical and professional nature within the journalistic community, the last time the Commission reviewed complaints was in July 2015, while its website is completely outdated.⁵¹ In addition, objectivity of Commission’s decisions is often subject to criticism in the media. It was accused several times of serving the interests of particular mass media outlets and individuals.⁵²

In terms of their legal status, the Commission on Journalists’ Ethics is non-governmental organisation, while the National Union of Journalists of Ukraine is a creative union, which is ⁴⁹ Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 49.

⁵⁰ VII Special Congress of National Union of Journalists of Ukraine, ‘Statutes of National Union of Journalists of Ukraine’ (15 January 1992) [Статут Національної Спілки Журналістів України] para 2.

⁵¹ Commission on Journalists’ Ethics <<http://www.cje.org.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

⁵² Natalia Sidorova, ‘Громадський осуд» з присмаком шахрайства’ (8 January 2011) <<http://stopkat.net/news/view/8182>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

subject to Law of Ukraine “On Professional Creative Employees and Creative Unions”.⁵³ Both organisations are entitled to similar rights and do not exercise regulatory authority. Even though the Commission considers violations of the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist and applies sanctions (public condemnation or expulsion from trade union or the National Union of Journalists of Ukraine), it is not recognised as self-regulatory organisation by the state (as, for example, self-regulation of attorneys) and, therefore, lacks competence to provide journalists with sufficient self-regulation. Thus, journalistic self-regulation is not developed in Ukraine.

6. In the Respective National Legislation are the Limits of Non-Disclosure of the Information in Line With the Principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the Procedures Applied? Is the Disclosure Limited to Exceptional Circumstances, Taking into Consideration Vital Public or Individual Interests at Stake? Do the Authorities First Search for and Apply Alternative Measures, Which Adequately Protect Their Respective Rights and Interests and at the Same Time are Less Intrusive With Regard to the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Information?

6.1. In the Respective National Legislation are the Limits of Non-Disclosure of the Information in Line with the Principles of the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7?

The privilege of non-disclosure of confidential sources is not absolute. Article 10 Paragraph 2 of the Convention provides that the freedom of expression may be subject to some limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary. These limitations are specified in Principle 3 (Limits to the right of non-disclosure) of Appendix to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7. In particular, the Recommendation establishes the following requirements for disclosure:

- legitimate aim under Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights
- necessity of the disclosure
 - i. absence of reasonable alternative measures
 - ii. outweighing legitimate interest
 - iii. protection of human life
 - iv. prevention of major crime
 - v. defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime

⁵³ Law n. 554/97-BP (On Professional Creative Employees and Creative Unions) 1997 [Про професійних творчих працівників та творчі спілки].

- application of the requirements to all stages of any proceedings.⁵⁴

Unfortunately, Ukrainian legislation does not fully meet these requirements. The laws of Ukraine “On Information” and “On the Printed Media (Press) in Ukraine” reserve the right of the court to request the disclosure while providing no further criteria or procedure for such disclosure. Neither do they limit the disclosure to exceptional circumstances listed in Article 10 of the ECHR.

The Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine gives greater clarity on disclosure of journalistic sources. In particular, when requesting disclosure, parties to criminal proceedings have to indicate whether objects and documents they request include information, which can be used as evidence, and impossibility to otherwise prove circumstances, which are supposed to be proved in a criminal proceeding with the use of these objects and documents.⁵⁵

6.2. What are the Procedures Applied?

While discussing Principle 3 of the Recommendation, the Committee of Ministers of Council of Europe in its Explanatory Memorandum emphasises the following:

The requirements stipulated in this Principle [Principle 3] should be respected and applied by all public authorities and at all stages of any proceedings where the right of non-disclosure might be invoked by journalists. Such stages may include investigations by the police or prosecutor, court proceedings, parliamentary or political committees of enquiry and other bodies with the power to compel witnesses, as well as review procedures upon appeal or at higher instances.⁵⁶

National legislation does not provide for a general procedure applicable to any case of interference with the right of non-disclosure. In terms of criminal proceedings, there is a measure of temporary access to objects and documents, which is used in order to disclose the journalistic sources. For this purpose, a party to criminal proceedings should file a motion for disclosure pointing out specific circumstances prescribed by law. Such motion is subject to review by the court or investigative judge, who decides, upon their sole discretion, whether such a motion meets the criteria established in procedural law. Nevertheless, Article 160 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, which provides for such measure, does not clearly indicate requirements of the Principle 3, thus granting courts excessive discretion in disclosure proceedings. The laws of Ukraine “On the Office of Public Prosecutor” and “On National Police” do not prescribe any requirements for authorities filing disclosure motion.

⁵⁴ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (8 March 2000) Appendix, Principle 3.

⁵⁵ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 160 pt 2 para 6.

⁵⁶ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 42.

With regard to civil proceedings, it is possible to file a disclosure motion as a mean of obtaining evidence under Article 137 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine. According to Article 137 Part 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, such motion shall indicate the evidence required the grounds based on which a person, who requests vindication, believes that the evidence is in possession of another person, the circumstances that this evidence may prove. In this case, the court also decides whether to grant such motion upon its sole discretion, while no further criteria are provided.

6.3. Is the Disclosure Limited to Exceptional Circumstances, Taking Into Consideration Vital Public or Individual Interests at Stake?

According to Article 34 Part 2 of the Constitution of Ukraine, the freedom of expression may be limited for the following purposes:

in the interest of national security, territorial integrity or public order, with the purpose of preventing disturbances or crimes, protecting the health of the population, the reputation or rights of other persons, preventing the publication of information received confidentially, or supporting the authority and impartiality of justice.

Additionally, Article 29 of the Law of Ukraine “On Information” establishes that confidential information may be disclosed based on the grounds of public interest, i.e. such information (1) indicates there is a threat to national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine; (2) facilitates implementation of constitutional rights, freedoms and duties; (3) indicates there is a possibility of violation of human rights, deception of the public, harmful environmental and other negative effects of activity (or inactivity) of natural and legal persons.⁵⁷

Thus, national laws provide for limits of non-disclosure rather than limit disclosure to exceptional circumstances. Furthermore, procedural law does not provide for any circumstances to which the right of non-disclosure or vice versa grounds for disclosure shall be limited.

6.4. Do the Authorities First Search For and Apply Alternative Measures, Which Adequately Protect Their Respective Rights and Interests and at the Same Time are Less Intrusive With Regard to the Rights of Journalists Not to Disclose Information?

Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 suggests that ‘a disclosure should only be justified if and after other means or sources have been unsuccessfully exhausted by the parties to a disclosure proceeding.’⁵⁸ ECtHR case-law also requires public authorities to consider alternative measures ⁵⁷ Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Про інформацію] art 29 pt 2.

⁵⁸ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 32.

before proceeding to disclosure. In De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, the Court held that under Article 6 of the Convention, national courts shall not reject an application from a journalist to consider alternative evidence to disclose the source of information, if such evidence for the proof of the journalist's statement is available to the judiciary.⁵⁹

Under Ukrainian legislation, the journalists' privilege of non-disclosure of confidential sources may be only interfered upon an order of the court. Thus, the only way for authorities to disclose the source of confidential information is to file a disclosure motion in the court within the framework of court proceedings. Nevertheless, national law does not clearly establish that the authorities shall first search for alternative measures instead of interfering journalists' privilege of non-disclosure.

With regard to criminal proceedings, when requesting temporary access to objects and documents that contain secret information, a party to a criminal proceeding shall indicate the possibility to use the information contained in the objects and documents as evidence, and impossibility to prove otherwise circumstances, which are supposed to be proved with the use of such objects and documents.⁶⁰ Thus, this provision meets the criteria of absence of reasonable alternative measures, which means that a disclosure should only be justified if and after other means or sources have been unsuccessfully exhausted by the parties to a disclosure proceeding. Nevertheless, this only applies to criminal proceedings, which does not meet the requirement of paragraph c of the Principle 3 – application of the requirements to all stages of any proceedings.⁶¹

7. In the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, the Following Principles Should Be Respected When the Necessity of Disclosure Is Stated: Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, Outweighing Legitimate Interest (Protection of Human Life, Prevention of Major Crime, Defence of a Person Accused or Convicted of Having Committed a Major Crime). Under Which Criteria Can the Interest in the Disclosure Outweigh the Interest in the Non-Disclosure?

Principle 3 (Limits to the Right of Non-Disclosure)

While assessing whether the national legislation complies with the Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 or not, it is important to refer to ECtHR case-law. In Goodwin v. United Kingdom, the Court has stressed that

‘the relevant national law must be formulated with sufficient precision to enable the persons concerned – if need be with appropriate legal advice – to foresee, to a degree

⁵⁹ ibid para 43.

⁶⁰ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 160 pt 2 para 6.

⁶¹ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (8 March 2000) Appendix, Principle 3.

that is reasonable in the circumstances, the consequences which a given action may entail.⁶²

Furthermore, any restriction on the freedom of expression must pursue a legitimate aim that is established by reference to those grounds, which can possibly override the rights and interests in the protection of the confidentiality of journalists' sources.⁶³ Most recently, in Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v The Netherlands the Court concluded:

the judge or other independent and impartial body must thus be in a position must thus be in position to carry out this weighing of the potential risks and respective interests prior to any disclosure and with reference to the material that it is sought to have disclosed so that the arguments of the authorities seeking the disclosure can be properly assessed. The decision to be taken should be governed by clear criteria, including whether a less intrusive measure can suffice to serve the overriding public interests established'.⁶⁴

Based on an analysis of Ukrainian law, we may conclude that all of the above-mentioned is not adequately reflected in national legislation.

The laws "On Information" and "On the Print Media (Press) in Ukraine" grant courts a power to request disclosure of sources. Unfortunately, both legal acts are not in line with the requirements established in Principle 3. They do not provide for any criteria of legitimacy and necessity of disclosure order. Neither do they limit the disclosure to exceptional circumstances listed in Article 10 of the Convention. Despite the fact that the Court does not recognise laws conferring discretion inconsistent with the requirement of precision itself,⁶⁵ the previously mentioned legal acts lack clarity, and therefore grant courts excessive discretion in assessing the legitimate interest.

The Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine provides for somewhat more clear provisions governing disclosure proceedings. While requesting disclosure, a party to a criminal proceeding shall indicate the possibility to use the information contained in the objects and documents as evidence, and impossibility to otherwise prove circumstances, which are supposed to be proved with the use of such objects and documents.⁶⁶ We may conclude that this provision, to a certain extent, meets the requirement of paragraph c of the Principle 3. Yet, the rest of the requirements of paragraph b (protection of human life, prevention of major crime, defence of a person accused or convicted of having committed a major crime) are not implemented in Ukrainian legislation, which deprives journalists "adequate protection against arbitrary interference".⁶⁷

⁶² Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996) para 31.

⁶³ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (20 December 2000) para 25.

⁶⁴ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010) para 92.

⁶⁵ Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996) para 31.

⁶⁶ Law n. 2341-III (Criminal code of Ukraine) 2001 [Кримінальний кодекс України] art 160 pt 2 para 6.

⁶⁷ Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996) para 31.

The Constitution and the Law “On Information” of Ukraine provide for a list of exceptional circumstances, when the interest of disclosure outweighs the privilege of non-disclosure. However, they are not reflected in the procedural law. Consequently, authorities are not directly prescribed to justify disclosure motions with such circumstances.

A year before the current Criminal Procedure Code was adopted in 2012, a group of Ukrainian MPs had proposed the Parliament to consider amendments to the Criminal Procedure Code of 1960 that grant journalists absolute testimonial immunity and regulate conduct of search and seizure concerning journalistic materials. In its Conclusions on the proposed draft law, the Main Scientific and Expert Department of the Parliament of Ukraine offered an opinion that the testimonial immunity should be narrowed down to cases, when non-disclosure may not result in dangerous consequences, specifically loss of human life.⁶⁸ The Department noted that a journalist in possession of information about major crimes, such as homicide, terrorist attack, etc., as well as about individuals, who are going to commit or have committed such crimes, should not have testimonial immunity and right to deny law enforcement in helping to eliminate or investigate such crimes, as information received from a journalist can save human lives.⁶⁹ Unfortunately, such remarks have not been afterwards reflected in Ukrainian legislation.

Principle 4 (Alternative Evidence to Journalist' Sources)

Principle 4 specifically covers defamation cases. It implies that in legal proceedings against a journalist on the grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, the competent authorities should consider all other evidence ‘which is available to them under national procedural law’ instead of requiring journalists to disclose their sources.⁷⁰ Recalling Article 6 of the Convention, which protects the right to a fair trial, the Court found in De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium that authorities’ rejection to use alternative evidence rather than insisting on the disclosure of journalistic sources ‘put the journalists in substantial disadvantage vis-à-vis the plaintiffs’.⁷¹ The Court held that ‘there was therefore a breach of the principle of equality of arms’.⁷²

⁶⁸ Conclusions of the Main Scientific and Expert Department of the Parliament of Ukraine (On the Draft Law of Ukraine “On Amendments to the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine” (concerning the right of journalists to protect sources of information) 10 June 2011 [Висновок на проект Закону України "Про внесення змін до Кримінально-процесуального кодексу України" (щодо забезпечення права журналістів на захист джерел інформації)].

⁶⁹ Conclusions of the Main Scientific and Expert Department of the Parliament of Ukraine (On the Draft Law of Ukraine “On Amendments to the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine” (concerning the right of journalists to protect sources of information) 10 June 2011 [Висновок на проект Закону України "Про внесення змін до Кримінально-процесуального кодексу України" (щодо забезпечення права журналістів на захист джерел інформації)].

⁷⁰ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information’ (20 December 2000) para 45.

⁷¹ De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium App no 19983/92 (ECtHR, 24 February 1997) para 58.

⁷² ibid.

Procedural law of Ukraine lacks specific provisions regulating defamation proceedings. It also does not prescribe rules that oblige the courts to consider alternative proof of the journalists' statements instead of confidential sources. Paragraph 6 of the Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 7 "On courts' application of legislation governing the protection of honour, dignity and business reputation of citizens and organisations" (28 September 1990), which, as for today, is not in force, stated that a media outlet is obliged to disclose a person who provided published or otherwise disseminated information at the request of the court.⁷³ It did not mention any criteria or procedure for such disclosure as well as a requirement to consider alternative sources. Current Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 1 "On judicial practice in cases of protection of honour and dignity of the individual and business reputation of individual and legal entity" (27 February 2009) does not specify requirements for disclosure procedure. At the same time, paragraph 2 of the Resolution stresses that when considering such cases, courts shall also take into consideration the Convention and ECtHR case-law.⁷⁴ It does not underline the necessity of considering alternative sources either, which results in non-compliance with the Council of Europe's recommendations and ECtHR case-law concerning disclosure proceedings.

According to the Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, one of the leading human rights NGOs in Ukraine, in cases against journalists on the grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person, they generally disclose the sources.⁷⁵

Principle 5 (Conditions Concerning Disclosures)

Considering that 'the protection of journalists' sources of information constitutes a basic condition for journalistic work and freedom as well as for the freedom of the media',⁷⁶ the Council of Europe establishes some procedural safeguards regarding the disclosure of journalistic sources in Principle 5 of the Recommendation. Principle 5 sets out that requirements for disclosure proceedings shall encompass the following:

- Direct legitimate interest of a person or public authority that initiative an action of disclosure
- Journalists' right to be informed of their privilege not to disclose confidential sources as well as of its limitations
- Imposition of the sanctions for not disclosing sources only by judicial authorities

⁷³ Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 7 (On courts' application of legislation governing the protection of honour, dignity and business reputation of citizens and organisations) 28 September 1990 [Постанова Пленуму Верховного Суду України "Про застосування судами законодавства, що регулює захист честі, гідності і ділової репутації громадян та організацій"].

⁷⁴ Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 1 (On judicial practice in cases of protection of honour and dignity of the individual and business reputation of individual and legal entity) 27 February 2009. [Постанова Пленуму Верховного Суду України "Про судову практику у справах про захист гідності та честі фізичної особи, а також ділової репутації фізичної та юридичної особи"].

⁷⁵ Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, Законодавство та практика ЗМІ в Україні (20(61) edn Pholio 2002) [Ukrainian].

⁷⁶ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (8 March 2000).

- Journalists' right to have the imposition of a sanction for not disclosing a source reviewed by another judicial authority
- Limits of the extent of a disclosure

Procedural law of Ukraine does not provide for any limitations with regard to natural or legal persons, who have a right to introduce a motion for disclosure. Only in case of criminal proceedings, Article 160 Part 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine grants this right exclusively to the parties to criminal proceedings. There are also no provisions obliging public authorities to inform the journalists of their privilege of non-disclosure and its limitations. Moreover, some lawyers note that the law enforcement officials often violate the rights of journalists by inviting them for interrogation or directly visiting their offices and demanding to disclose confidential sources.⁷⁷

At the same time, Ukrainian legislation provides for sanctions for not disclosing sources in the same manner as for any other failure to comply with a court decision. Article 382 Part 1 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine establishes criminal liability for wilful failure to comply with a verdict, judgement, ruling or order of a court, which has come into force, or preclusion of their execution. Additionally, Article 166 Part 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code prescribes that upon failure to comply with a court order granting one of the parties to a criminal proceeding a temporary access to objects and documents that contain secret information protected by law, a court or investigative judge may grant this party a motion for search in order to find and seize the objects and documents concerned. In both cases, judicial authorities shall impose sanctions. In terms of judicial review of the imposed sanctions, procedural law does not establish specific provisions on review of sanctions for not disclosing information identifying a source.

According to Article 392 Part 2 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, a search warrant is not a subject for a separate judicial review, and therefore may be reviewed only together with the final court decision in a criminal case. Thus, journalists can only appeal search warrants after a final court's judgment in a case is entered. As for criminal liability established in Article 382 of the Criminal Code, a verdict in a criminal case may be reviewed under Article 392 Part 1 paragraph 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code. An appeal against the decision of a first instance court is considered by another judicial authority – a court of appeals.

When it comes to state's obligation to limit the extent of a disclosure, procedural law of Ukraine provides for some provisions excluding the public from a disclosure. Article 27 Part 2 paragraph 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives court an authority to close a hearing for the public under the risk of disclosure of confidential information protected by law. Article 6 Part 3 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine limits extent of a disclosure in the same manner. Only participants in the proceedings may attend closed court hearings.

⁷⁷ М.О. Yelnykova, Конституційно-правові аспекти права на таємницю журналістських джерел [2013] Матеріали Міжнар. наук.-практ. конф., присвяч. 20-річчю НАПрН України та обговоренню п'ятитом. моногр. "Правова доктрина України" 787 [Ukrainian].

Thus, we may conclude that national law is not clear and foreseeable enough to adequately protect the journalists' privilege of non-disclosure from "arbitrary interference". National courts are not directly obliged to assess whether the interest in the disclosure outweighs the interest in the non-disclosure in every case. The requirements for disclosure proceedings, which are established in Principle 5, are not fully implemented in Ukrainian legislation as well.

8. In the Light of the Case Law of the European Court of Human Rights, How Do National Courts Apply the Respective Laws With Regard to the Right to Protect Sources? In Particular, How Do They Balance the Different Interests at Stake?

Ukrainian legislation stipulates that journalists' sources shall be only disclosed at the request of the court. In the light of ECtHR case-law and Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, the disclosure of confidential sources shall be justified only in case when (1) such interference is necessary in democratic society, (2) there is a proven legitimate interest in the disclosure, which clearly outweighs the interest of non-disclosure, and (3) there are no other alternative measures to determine the facts in the case or such measures have been exhausted.

In Handyside v. the United Kingdom, the Court emphasised that any interference with exercise of freedom of expression must be "necessary in a democratic society", which is assessed through the reality of pressing social need.⁷⁸

When evaluating whether a particular legitimate interest under Article 10 paragraph 2 of the Convention justifies the restriction of the right to freedom of expression, the Court applies a balancing test, which determines whether restriction is "necessary in a democratic society".⁷⁹ The ECtHR has stressed that 'freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of such a society, one of the basic conditions for its progress and for the development of every man', and therefore 'every "formality", "condition", "restriction" or "penalty" imposed in this sphere must be proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued'.⁸⁰ In Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom, the Court reaffirmed the balancing test emphasising that it has 'to look at the interference complained of in the light of the case as a whole, and determine whether it was 'proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued' as well as whether the reasons adduced by the national authorities to justify it are "relevant and sufficient"'.⁸¹ Recently, in Roemen and Schmidt v. Luxembourg, the ECtHR reaffirmed that 'an interference cannot be compatible with Article 10 of ⁷⁸ Handyside v. the United Kingdom App no 5493/72 (ECtHR, 7 December 1976) para 48.

⁷⁹ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (20 December 2000) para 26.

⁸⁰ Handyside v. the United Kingdom App no 5493/72 (ECtHR, 7 December 1976), para 49.

⁸¹ Sunday Times v United Kingdom App no 13166/87 (ECtHR, 24 October 1991), para 50.

the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest'.⁸² We note, with regret, that national courts do not fully comply with the respective case-law.

Nevertheless, national law obliges the courts to consider the Convention and ECtHR case-law, when deciding a case. In particular, Article 17 of the Law “On the Execution of Judgments and Application of the European Court of Human Rights Case-Law” establishes that while considering cases, courts apply the Convention and ECtHR case-law as a source of law. We can see that Ukrainian courts increasingly refer to ECtHR case-law in their decisions in recent years. Yet, they mostly fail to apply the balancing test.

Recalling the Lingens v. Austria, De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, Goodwin v. United Kingdom and Prager and Oberschlick v. Austria judgements, the Ukrainian court, in case No. 314/3755/15-II, recognised that ‘the freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society, which is one of the basic conditions for its progress and for the development of every man’.⁸³ It also acknowledged that ‘the freedom of expression is not only applicable to “information” or “ideas” that are favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference, but also to those that offend, shock or disturb. Such are the demands of pluralism, tolerance and broadmindedness without which there is no “democratic society”’.⁸⁴ At the same time, in this case, against a journalist on the grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour and reputation of an official, Ukrainian court failed to comply with ECtHR case-law while requesting a disclosure of a journalist source. Rather than disclosing the source, who had provided a journalist with an audiotape exposing claimant’s corrupt activities,⁸⁵ the journalist submitted alternative evidence – a document, which allegedly confirms his statements. The court refused to consider the alternative source as an evidence because the document was drawn up two months after the article had been published.⁸⁶ Thus, the plaintiff’s claims were partially satisfied.⁸⁷ We believe that while not accepting alternative proof of the journalist’s statement, the national court put the defendant in ‘substantial disadvantage’ vis-à-vis the plaintiff.⁸⁸ Additionally, ‘the necessity of the interference with the exercise of the freedom of expression has not been shown’.⁸⁹

In case No. 757/9271/14-к, heard by the Pechersk District Court of Kyiv, an investigator filed a motion for temporary access to documents and objects that contained secret information protected by law. According to the case materials an individual, whose name is not revealed in the materials, was transferred into the second year of university programme based on a certificate

⁸² Roemen and Schmidt v. Luxembourg App no 51772/99 (ECtHR, 25 February 2003), para 46.

⁸³ Case n. 314/3755/15-II [2015] Vilniensk District Court of Zaporiz’ka Oblast <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

⁸⁴ ibid.

⁸⁵ ibid.

⁸⁶ Case n. 314/3755/15-II [2015] Vilniensk District Court of Zaporizka Oblast <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

⁸⁷ ibid.

⁸⁸ See De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium App no 19983/92 (ECtHR, 24 February 1997), para 58.

⁸⁹ ibid para 49.

from another higher education institution, which allegedly confirmed that this individual had been studying there for one academic year. A confidential source, whom journalist involved in this case refused to disclose, claimed that the stamp on this certificate had been forged. The court granted the investigator a motion for temporary access to documents and objects on the grounds that (1) such measures would allow a pre-trial investigation body to detect the conduct of offence (time, place, method), which was essential to establish the actual circumstances of the alleged offense; (2) it was impossible to determine the truth in this case otherwise.⁹⁰ Again, the national court did not apply the balancing test in order to justify the necessity of such interference. Neither did it discuss whether alternative measures have been taken. It is also worth mentioning that forgery of documents, stamps, seals or letterheads (Article 358 Part 1 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine), which was allegedly committed in this case, is minor offence according to Article 12 Part 2 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine, which doubts the proportionality of disclosure.

In case No. 760/7399/15-II, the national court again recalled Lingens v. Austria and ‘the demands of pluralism, tolerance and broadmindedness, without which there is no “democratic society”’.⁹¹ The court also referred to Ukrainian Media Group v. Ukraine judgement, which reaffirmed that:

While the existence of facts can be demonstrated, the truth of value judgments is not susceptible of proof. The requirement to prove the truth of a value judgment is impossible to fulfill and infringes freedom of opinion itself, which is a fundamental part of the right secured by Article 10.⁹²

This time, the court did not grant an applicant motion for disclosure, while stressing that value judgments are not subject to refutation and proof of their veracity, while the applicant failed to prove that the information published was not a value judgment.⁹³

Therefore, we may conclude that national courts tend to take into consideration ECtHR case-law, especially in cases against journalists on the grounds of an alleged infringement of the honour or reputation of a person. In many ways, it is due to national legislation, which obliges the courts to do so, and a number of the Court’s judgments against Ukraine, when journalists were charged with defamation.⁹⁴ Nevertheless, national case-law on disclosure of journalistic sources is not well-established. The courts fail to apply the balancing test with regard to the right to protect sources. This is caused by the lack of clear criteria in national legislation under which ⁹⁰ Case n. 757/9271/14-K [2014] Pechersk District Court of Kyiv <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

⁹¹ Case n. 760/7399/15-II [2015] Solomenskyi District Court of Kyiv <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> [Ukrainian].

⁹² Ukrainian Media Group v. Ukraine App no 72713/01 (ECtHR, 29 March 2005) para 41.

⁹³ ibid.

⁹⁴ Gazeta Ukraina-Tsentr v. Ukraine App no 16695/04 (ECtHR, 15 July 2010); Ukrainian Media Group v. Ukraine App no 72713/01 (ECtHR, 29 March 2005); Lyashko v. Ukraine App no 21040/02 (ECtHR, 10 August 2006); Marchenko v. Ukraine App no 4063/04 (ECtHR, 19 February 2009).

the interest in the disclosure may outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure. Consequently, journalists continue to report on various interference with their privilege of non-disclosure.⁹⁵

9. What are the Criteria For Using Electronic Surveillance and Anti-Terrorism Laws, Which May Include Measures Such as Interceptions of Communications, Surveillance Actions and Search or Seizure Actions in Order to Identify Journalists' Sources of Information? Are the National Law Provisions Accessible, Precise, Foreseeable and Include Clear Legislative Norms in the Context of Surveillance and Anti-Terrorism Provisions?

Privacy of mail, telephone conversations, telegraph and other correspondence are among basic human rights provided to everyone by the Constitution of Ukraine. Exceptions to this rule shall be established only by a court in cases prescribed by law, with the purpose of preventing crime or ascertaining the truth in the course of the investigation of a criminal case, if it is not possible to obtain information by other means.⁹⁶ Article 32 of the Constitution establishes that no one shall be subject to interference with his/her personal and family life, except cases prescribed by the Constitution of Ukraine. Collection, storage, use and dissemination of confidential information about a person without his/her consent shall not be permitted, except cases prescribed by law, and only in the interests of national security, economic welfare and human rights.⁹⁷ Article 301 of the Civil Code of Ukraine corresponds to the foregoing provision. It stipulates that information on one's personal life may be disclosed only if it indicates elements of a crime as confirmed by court decision, or with consent of such person.⁹⁸ Finally, Article 21 Part 2 of the Law of Ukraine "On Information" provides that confidential information may be disseminated upon the approval of a respective person, and in a manner prescribed by this person, and in other cases prescribed by law.

The definition of "personal and family life" is set out in Decision of the Constitutional Court of Ukraine No. 2-рп/2012 of 20 January 2012. Information about personal and family life (personal information) is defined as any information about a person that is identified or may be identified through such information, including his/her nationality, marital status, religious ⁹⁵ The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, 'НМПУ закликає підтримати законопроект на захист джерел інформації' (10 January 2012) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2012/01/nmpu-zaklykaje-pidtrymaty-zakonoproekt-na-zahyst-dzherel-informatsiji/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian]; The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, 'НМПУ вимагає перевірити законність обшуку квартири журналіста в Житомирській області' (16 July 2013) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/07/nmpu-vymahaie-pereviryty-zakonnist-obshuku-kvartyry-zhurnalista-v-zhytomyrskij-oblasti/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian]; The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, 'Обшукують журналіста. Що робити?' (19 July 2013) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/07/obshukuyut-zhurnalista-scho-robyty/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian]; The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, 'НМПУ: керченська влада комплексно знищує ТРК «Бриз» (відео)' (13 August 2013) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/08/nmpu-kerchenska-vlada-kompleksno-znyshchuje-trk-bryz-video/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

⁹⁶ Law n. 254к/96-ВР (Constitution of Ukraine) 1996 [Конституція України] art 31.

⁹⁷ ibid art 32 pt 2.

⁹⁸ Law n. 435-IV (Civil Code of Ukraine) 2003 [Цивільний кодекс України] art 301 pt 4.

beliefs, medical condition, education, personal wealth, address, date and place of birth; events, that have occurred or occur in his/her daily, intimate, professional, business and other spheres of life.⁹⁹ The Constitutional Court also emphasises that it is confidential and shall not be disclosed, except cases prescribed by law and only in the interests of national security, economic welfare and human rights.¹⁰⁰

9.1. What are the Criteria for Using Electronic Surveillance and Anti-Terrorism Laws, Which May Include Measures Such as Interceptions of Communications, Surveillance Actions and Search or Seizure Actions in Order to Identify Journalists' Sources of Information?

According to the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, the term “investigative (detective) operations” encompasses different measures of interference with private communications. There are the following types of such interference:

- audio and video monitoring of an individual;
- arrest, inspection and seizure of correspondence;
- interception of information in transport telecommunications networks;
- interception of information in electronic information systems.¹⁰¹

Audio, video monitoring of an individual is a variety of interference in private communication, conducted without the individual’s knowledge. It encompasses recording and processing of conversations or other sounds, movements, actions related to activity or place of residence of an individual by the technical means.¹⁰²

Arrest, inspection and seizure of correspondence implies a prohibition to agencies that provide postal services and financial institutions to deliver correspondence to addressee without relevant guidance of an investigator or prosecutor.¹⁰³

Interception of information in transport telecommunications networks includes conducting surveillance, selection and recording of information, which is transmitted by an individual, and is important for pre-trial investigation, as well as receiving, converting and recording signals of different types, which are transmitted by communication channels.¹⁰⁴ these investigative operations are conducted by responsible units of the agencies of internal affairs and ⁹⁹ Case n. 2-рп/2012 [2012] Constitutional Court of Ukraine [Ukrainian] para 3.3.

¹⁰⁰ ibid.

¹⁰¹ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 258 pt 4.

¹⁰² Decree n. 114/1042/516/1199/936/1687/5 of the Prosecutor General of Ukraine (Instruction on organising the conduct of covert investigating actions and the use of their results in criminal proceedings) 2012 [Про затвердження Інструкції про організацію проведення негласних слідчих (розшукових) дій та використання їх результатів у кримінальному провадженні] para 1.11.2.

¹⁰³ ibid para 1.11.3.

¹⁰⁴ ibid para 1.11.5.

agencies of security.¹⁰⁵ It shall be facilitated by managers and employees of telecommunication networks' operators, taking required measures in order not to disclose the fact of conducting such measures and the information obtained, and to preserve such information in its initial version.¹⁰⁶

Interception of information in electronic information systems encompasses acquisition of information contained in electronic computers, automatic systems or computer networks by technical means.¹⁰⁷ As established in the Article 264 Part 2 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, when intercepting information from electronic information systems or their parts, the access to which is not restricted by the system's owner, possessor or keeper, or is not related to circumventing a system of logical protection, permission of investigative judge is not required. However, permission for conducting the rest of investigative (detective) operations connected with interference with private communications is granted by an investigative judge.¹⁰⁸ They shall be conducted exclusively in criminal proceedings regarding grave crimes or crimes of special gravity that have been committed or are being planned. According to the Article 12 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine, a grave criminal offense is an offense punishable by imprisonment for a term of up to ten years, while a special grave offence is punishable by more than ten years of imprisonment or a life sentence.¹⁰⁹

Ukrainian legislation, as well as legal doctrine, defines covert investigative actions as secondary means. Thus, they should be used when all other possible investigative measures are exhausted.¹¹⁰ According to Article 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine, a motion for conducting of covert investigative (detective) actions shall provide for justification of impossibility to obtain information about crime and an individual who committed this crime in other way.¹¹¹

¹⁰⁵ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 263 pt 4.

¹⁰⁶ ibid.

¹⁰⁷ Decree n. 114/1042/516/1199/936/1687/5 of the Prosecutor General of Ukraine (Instruction on organising the conduct of covert investigating actions and the use of their results in criminal proceedings) 2012 [Про затвердження Інструкції про організацію проведення негласних слідчих (розшукових) дій та використання їх результатів у кримінальному провадженні] para 1.11.6.

¹⁰⁸ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] ibid art 258 pt 1.

¹⁰⁹ Law n. 2341-III (Criminal Code of Ukraine) 2001 [Кримінальний кодекс України] art 13 pt 4, 5.

¹¹⁰ Valeriya Duntu, 'Аналіз процесуальних відмінностей у проведенні огляду житла чи іншого володіння особи й обмеженні публічно недоступних місць, житла чи іншого володіння особи' (Law and Society, n. 5-2 2015) <http://www.pravoisuspilstvo.org.ua/archive/2015/5_2_2015/part_1/38.pdf> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

¹¹¹ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 248 pt 2 para 7.

9.2. Are the National Law Provisions Accessible, Precise, Foreseeable and Include Clear Legislative Norms in the Context of Surveillance and Anti-Terrorism Provisions?

When it comes to the law's foreseeability, it is useful to refer to Weber and Saravia v. Germany. In this case, the Court stressed that in the context of secret measures of surveillance, it cannot mean that an individual should be able to foresee, when his communications are likely to be intercepted by authorities, so that he can adopt his conduct accordingly. Thus, the law is foreseeable when it is composed of sufficiently clear terms concerning the circumstances in which and the conditions on which public authorities are empowered to resort to any surveillance and other covert investigative measures.¹¹²

The Court has also developed the minimum safeguards that should be set out in statute law in order to avoid abuses of power, such as:

- the nature of the offences, which may give rise to an interception order;
- a definition of the categories of people liable to have their telephones tapped;
- a limit on the duration of telephone tapping;
- the procedure to be followed for examining, using and storing the data obtained;
- the precautions to be taken when communicating the data to other parties;
- the circumstances in which recordings may or must be erased or the tapes destroyed.¹¹³

Based on above criteria we may conclude that Ukrainian legislation under consideration is to some extent foreseeable. For example, the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine provides for that an interception order may be used during the investigation of grave crimes or crimes of special gravity. Thus, telephone tapping may be conducted to suspect or any other person if such covert actions can lead to obtaining information on the offence or the person who actually committed such offence or circumstances, indispensable for investigation.¹¹⁴ Duration of telephone tapping, as well as of any other covert investigative action may not exceed a period of 18 month.¹¹⁵ There is also the Instruction on organising the conduct of covert investigative actions and the use of their results in criminal proceedings, which sets out the procedure to be followed for examining, using and storing the data obtained.

However, we may hardly conclude that national legislation under consideration fully respects the right to privacy. First of all, the grounds for conducting surveillance and other covert ¹¹² Weber and Saravia v. Germany, App no. 54934/00 (ECtHR, admissibility decision 29 June 2006) para 93.

¹¹³ ibid para 95.

¹¹⁴ Decree n. 114/1042/516/1199/936/1687/5 of the Prosecutor General of Ukraine (Instruction on organizing the conduct of covert investigating actions and the use of their results in criminal proceedings) 2012 [Про затвердження Інструкції про організацію проведення негласних слідчих (розшукових) дій та використання їх результатів у кримінальному провадженні] para 1.1.

¹¹⁵ Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України] art 246 pt 5.

investigative actions in Ukraine are too wide. Another problem is unclear and inexact reports of responsible agencies on prerequisites, conduct and results of these actions.¹¹⁶ Provisions on interception of information from transport telecommunications networks and electronic information systems, and about establishing the whereabouts of a radio-electronic means, including a mobile terminal or communications system, are also considered vague.¹¹⁷ Given that, the main function of covert investigative actions is not uncovering a criminal, but establishing a fact that there is a crime. In some cases, covert investigative actions may be conducted prior to the commitment of a crime to gather information about the person or criminal gang, or possible acts of violence. Thus, operational divisions can effectively organise secret surveillance at their own discretion without the use of court control. For this reason, some human rights activists stress the necessity to guarantee the possibility of public monitoring over their actions.¹¹⁸

10. Can Journalists Rely on Encryption and Anonymity Online to Protect Themselves and Their Sources Against Surveillance?

Ukrainian legislation does not contain provisions addressing right to anonymity online or issues related to encryption in the context of privacy.

Only Article 26 of the Law of Ukraine “On Print Mass Media”, which establishes rights and duties of journalists working in printed mass media, stipulates, inter alia, that journalists have a right to publish messages and materials without signature (anonymously) or using an alias and a right to the secrecy of authorship and sources of information unless such an information has to be revealed at the request of the court.¹¹⁹

At the same time, national legislation neither prohibits nor restricts the ability of individuals to rely on encryption and anonymity online.

Therefore, these issues are not explicitly regulated under Ukrainian legislation. Consequently, we may conclude that journalists cannot rely on anonymity online in order to protect themselves and their sources of information as national legislation have no reservations concerning such protection.

¹¹⁶ Yevhen Zakharov, ‘Поліцейська держава’ (Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, 29 May 2013) <<http://www.khpg.org/index.php?id=1369818744>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

¹¹⁷ ibid.

¹¹⁸ Yevhen Zakharov, ‘Поліцейська держава’ (Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, 29 May 2013) <<http://www.khpg.org/index.php?id=1369818744>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

¹¹⁹ Law no. 2782-XII (On Printed Mass Media) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні] art 26 para 9, 11.

11. Are Whistle-Blowers Explicitly Protected Under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources? Is There Another Practice Protecting Whistle-Blowers? Is There Legislation Prohibiting Authorities and Companies From Identifying Whistle-Blowers?

11.1. Are Whistle-Blowers Explicitly Protected Under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources?

In Ukraine, legislation concerning the protection of journalistic sources does not contain explicit provisions on the protection of whistle-blowers.

11.2. Is There Another Practice Protecting Whistle-Blowers?

To a certain extent, whistle-blowers are protected by two legislative acts: the Law of Ukraine “On Access to Public Information” and the Law of Ukraine “On Prevention of Corruption”.

Article 11 of the Law of Ukraine “On Access to Public Information” entitled ‘Protection of Person who Discloses Information’ contains provision protecting only certain categories of individuals, namely officials and civil servants. It stipulates that such persons shall not be subject to legal liability, regardless of the breach of their duties, for disclosure of information on infringements or information concerning serious threat to the health or safety of citizens and environment, if the person is acting in good faith and has a justified belief that the information is accurate and contains evidence of infringement or concerns serious threat to the health or safety of citizens and environment.¹²⁰

Thus, this cited provision merely exempts whistle-blowers from liability without establishing any other protection mechanisms, and is of limited, personal scope.

The Law of Ukraine “On Prevention of Corruption” deals with the issue of whistle-blowers’ protection in Section VIII. In Article 53 of the Law, a whistle-blower is defined as a person who provides assistance in prevention and combating corruption by reporting violations of this Law committed by another person on the basis of justified belief that the information is accurate.¹²¹

Thus, unlike in the Law of Ukraine “On Access to Public Information” the personal scope of protection under this act is not limited; however, it covers only reports on offences connected with corruption allegations, whereas the Law of Ukraine “On Access to Public Information” deals with any kind of infringement.

¹²⁰ Law no. 2939-VI (On Access to Public Information) 2011 [Про доступ до публічної інформації] art 11.

¹²¹ Law no. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції] art 53 para 1.

Section VIII of the Law of Ukraine “On Prevention of Corruption” establishes guarantees for whistle-blowers regarding personal safety, employment relations and anonymity.

Firstly, Article 53 para 2 stipulates that in case of danger to life, home, health and property of whistle-blowers or persons, who are in close relations to them, in connection to reported violations, law enforcement bodies may apply measures provided in the Law of Ukraine “On the Protection of Individuals Involved in Criminal Proceedings” aimed at protecting such individuals from illegal actions.

Such measures may include: change of identification documents and appearance,¹²² change of place of work or education,¹²³ change of place of residence,¹²⁴ securing confidentiality of information about a person,¹²⁵ issuance of special individual protection means and warning devices,¹²⁶ usage of technical means of tracing and listening on telephone and other means of communication,¹²⁷ bodyguards, protection of home and property.¹²⁸

Secondly, Article 53 para 3 envisages that in connection to reported violations a person or a member of his family cannot be discharged or forced to resign, subjected to or threatened with disciplinary liability or any other negative measures (reassignment, attestation, labour conditions change, denial of appointment to a higher level position, wage cuts, etc.).

Additionally, Article 60 para 1 of the Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine stipulates that in disputes concerning such negative measures the burden of proof of their legality lies on the employer.¹²⁹ Article 235 of the Labour Code of Ukraine contains provision allowing a whistle-blower unlawfully dismissed in connection with reported violations to claim reinstatement or, alternatively, to leave an employer and claim a compensation worth six monthly salaries.¹³⁰

Thirdly, as a general rule, information about whistle-blower may be disclosed only upon his consent.¹³¹

The Law “On Prevention of Corruption” obliges National Agency on the Prevention of Corruption and other authorities to facilitate reporting corruption offences by their employees through special telephone lines, official web-sites and means of electronic communication.¹³² It

¹²² Law no. 3782-XII (On the Protection of Individuals Involved in Criminal Proceedings) 1993 [Про забезпечення безпеки осіб, які беруть участь у кримінальному судочинстві] art 11.

¹²³ ibid art 12.

¹²⁴ ibid art 13.

¹²⁵ ibid art 15.

¹²⁶ ibid art 9.

¹²⁷ ibid art 10.

¹²⁸ ibid art 8.

¹²⁹ Law no. 1618-IV (Civil Procedure of Ukraine) 2004 [Цивільно-процесуальний кодекс України] art 60 para 1.

¹³⁰ Law no. 322-VIII (Labour Code of Ukraine) 1971 [Кодекс законів про працю України] art 235 para 1, 4.

¹³¹ Law no. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції] art 53 para 3.

¹³² ibid para 4.

also sets out procedure for consideration of anonymous reports (normally 15 days, in special cases, 30 days).¹³³

The analysis of Ukrainian legislation indicates that the principles contained in Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers are not fully implemented.

First of all, Recommendation provides that the material scope of protection should 'at least, include violations of law and human rights, as well as risks to public health and safety and to the environment'.¹³⁴ Ukrainian legislation contains comprehensive framework of protection only regarding corruption offences, whereas other violations are only covered by declaratory provision in the Law of Ukraine "On Access to Public Information" exempting a whistle-blower from liability.

As to the personal scope, Recommendation states that the protection framework should cover 'all individuals working in either the public or private sectors' as well as those who have already terminated employment and those who are at recruitment or other pre-contractual stage.¹³⁵ While the Law of Ukraine "On Prevention of Corruption" covers any individual, exemption from liability under the Law "On Access to Public Information" is only effective for officials and civil servants.

In relation to legal framework, Recommendation stipulates that it 'should reflect a comprehensive and coherent approach to facilitating public interest reporting and disclosures'.¹³⁶ Existing provisions in Ukrainian legislation ensuring whistle-blowers a certain level of protection are scattered in different legal acts: Laws "On Access to Public Information", "On Prevention of Corruption", "On the Protection of Individuals Involved in Criminal Proceedings", the Civil Procedure Code, the Labour Code. In order to remedy such situation representatives of Ukrainian non-governmental organisations created the coalition of civil society organisations called "Initiative 11" and developed draft law "On the Protection of Whistle-Blowers in Ukraine", which contains comprehensive framework and additional safeguards for the protection of whistle-blowers.¹³⁷

The Recommendation establishes that channels of reporting should include reports within organisation, to relevant public regulatory bodies, law enforcement and supervisory bodies, as well as to the public.¹³⁸ The Law "On Prevention of Corruption" deals with this issue and obliges ¹³³ ibid para 5.

¹³⁴ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 on the Protection of Whistle-Blowers' (30 April 2014) para 2.

¹³⁵ ibid para 3, 4.

¹³⁶ ibid para 7.

¹³⁷ Initiative 11, 'Draft Law "On the Protection of Whistle-Blowers in Ukraine"' <<http://initiativa11.org/draft-law-for-the-protection-of-whistle-blowers-in-ukraine/>> assessed 15 April 2016.

¹³⁸ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 on the Protection of Whistle-Blowers' (30 April 2014) para 14.

authorities to establish mechanisms to ensure internal reporting;¹³⁹ the only relevant outside body mentioned is the National Agency on the Prevention of Corruption, whereas public (journalists or members of the parliament) is not mentioned at all.

In respect of confidentiality requirement expressed in part V of the Appendix to the Recommendation, Article 53 para 5 of the Law “On Prevention of Corruption” allows whistle-blowers to report anonymously, whereas Article 53 para 3 provides that information about a whistle-blower may be disclosed only upon his consent.

The Recommendation states that disclosures should be investigated promptly and provides that a whistle-blower making an internal report should be informed of actions taken.¹⁴⁰ The Law “On Prevention of Corruption” sets the limit of time for consideration of anonymous reports,¹⁴¹ but it does not contain obligation of informing a whistle-blower about the results.

The Recommendation also provides that ‘whistle-blowers should be protected against retaliation of any form’.¹⁴² In this regard, Ukrainian legislation adequately protects whistle-blowers by provisions of the Law “On Prevention of Corruption” and the Labour Code.

11.3. Is There Legislation Prohibiting Authorities and Companies From Identifying Whistle-Blowers?

Article 53 para 3 of the Law “On Prevention of Corruption” stipulates that information about a whistle-blower may be disclosed only upon his consent.¹⁴³ However, this prohibition is only effective for allegations of corruption.

In conclusion, Ukrainian legislation includes comprehensive legal framework for the protection of whistle-blowers only in regards to corruption offences. There are no effective safeguards for individuals reporting other kinds of abuses.

12. Conclusion

The protection of professional relationships between journalists and their sources is of high importance as ‘without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result, the vital public-watchdog role of ¹³⁹ Law no. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції] art 53 para 4.

¹⁴⁰ Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, ‘Recommendation on the protection of whistle-blowers’ (30 April 2014) CM/Rec (2014) 7 para 19, 20.

¹⁴¹ Law no. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції] art 53 para 5. Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) ‘Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 on the Protection of Whistle-Blowers’ (30 April 2014) 7 para 21.

¹⁴³ Law no. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції] art 54 para 3.

the press may be undermined and the ability of the press to provide accurate and reliable information may be adversely affected.¹⁴⁴ Having regard to the importance of journalists' privilege of non-disclosure, the Council of Europe established a set of common principles for member states in order to ensure that for the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information is adequately protected. However, in view of the National Research Group of ELSA Ukraine, these principles are not fully respected. Ukrainian legislation provides for certain legal measures for the protection of journalistic sources, however they are not explicit. Whereas general legal rules are established, specific definitions and procedures are missing.

Under Ukrainian law, journalists' privilege of non-disclosure of their sources of information encompasses rights to keep in secret (1) a journalistic source; and (2) information identifying a journalistic source. Being prescribed by specific legislation on journalists' rights, it is also protected under the Constitution of Ukraine and procedural law.

In addition to the privilege of non-disclosure, national legislation also establishes journalists' obligation not to disclose confidential sources. This also encompasses an obligation not to disclose materials that do not constitute sources themselves, but may be used to identify a person who acts as the source of information.¹⁴⁵ Such an obligation is extended to broadcasting organisations as legal entities. Failure to comply with this prohibition may entail disciplinary, civil or criminal liability. In such a way, Ukrainian law provides for higher standards of protection of confidential sources with respect to journalists' obligation not to disclose such sources themselves than Recommendation No. R (2000) 7.

As for a definition of a "journalist" under Ukrainian legislation, we find it restrictive for the purpose of protection of freedom of the press. This leads to situations when not all the persons who are actually engaged in journalistic activities enjoy the legal status of a journalist. Additionally, national law does not extend the definition of a "journalist" to legal entities as suggested by the Council of Europe.¹⁴⁶ Moreover, Ukrainian legislation almost neglects the right of non-disclosure of other media actors. Third parties, who, by their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information identifying a source through the collection, editorial processing or dissemination of such information, are not protected under provisions of national legislation in the same manner.

It is also worth mentioning that the limits of non-disclosure are not clearly set out in Ukrainian legislation. National courts enjoy relatively excessive discretion in disclosure proceedings, while specific mechanism as prescribed by Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 is not fully invoked regarding such proceedings. More importantly, court order for the disclosure of journalistic sources is not a subject for a separate judicial review, and therefore may be reviewed together with the final court decision in a case.

¹⁴⁴ Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996) para 39.

¹⁴⁵ Viktoriya Dobrynska, 'Європейський суд своїм рішенням поставив під загрозу журналістський привілей на збереження у таємниці джерел інформації' (Media Law Institute, 30 June 2009) <<http://medialaw.org.ua/analytics/yevropejskyj-sud-svoyim-rishennyam-postavyv-pid-zagrozu-zhurnalistykyj-pryvilej-na-zberezhennya-u-tayemnytsi-dzherel-informatsiy/>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].

¹⁴⁶ Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (8 March 2000) Appendix, Definitions, para a.

When it comes to surveillance actions aimed at identification of journalistic sources, procedural law prohibits involving journalists in covert investigation, if such cooperation is related to the disclosure of information of a professional nature. However, it does not mean that journalists cannot be subjects to surveillance themselves. In this regards, Ukrainian legislation provides for certain procedure to be followed for examining, using and storing information obtained by the means of surveillance. Nevertheless, the legal grounds for conducting surveillance and other covert investigative actions in Ukraine are too wide. Moreover, we may conclude that journalists cannot rely on anonymity online in order to protect themselves and their sources of information as national legislation have no reservations concerning such protection.

Also, Ukrainian legislation does not provide for adequate protection of whistle-blowers. It includes comprehensive legal framework for the protection of whistle-blowers only in regards to corruption offences. There are no effective safeguards for individuals reporting other kinds of abuses.

Overall, we conclude that current Ukrainian legislation is not fully in line with ECtHR case-law and recommendations of the Council of Europe. While major provisions under consideration have been adopted in early 1990s, the current Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine was adopted in 2012. Thus, there is not well-established case-law concerning disclosure of sources in criminal matters in Ukraine. With regard to other cases of disclosure, Ukrainian case-law may fairly be characterized as controversial. The lack of scholarly attention to the issues of protection of journalistic sources should be noted as well.

13. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

13.1. Legislation

- Law n. 322-VIII (Labour Code of Ukraine) 1971 [Кодекс законів про працю України].
- Law n. 2135-XII (On Investigative and Search Operations) 1992 [Про оперативно-розшукову діяльність].
- Law n. 2657-XII (On Information) 1992 [Закон України Про Інформацію].
- Law n. 2782-XII (On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine) 1992 [Про друковані засоби масової інформації (преси) в Україні].
- Law n. № 3759-XII (On Television and Radio Broadcasting) 1993 [Про телебачення і радіомовлення].
- Law no. 3782-XII (On the Protection of Individuals Involved in Criminal Proceedings) 1993 [Про забезпечення безпеки осіб, які беруть участь у кримінальному судочинстві].
- Law n. 74/95-ВР (On Information Agencies) 1995 [Про інформаційні агентства].
- Law n. 254к/96-ВР (Constitution of Ukraine) 1996 [Конституція України].
- Law n. 540/97-ВР (On State Support of Mass Media and Social Protection of Journalists) 1997 [Про державну підтримку засобів масової інформації та соціальний захист журналістів].
- Law n. 554/97-ВР (On Professional Creative Employees and Creative Unions) 1997 [Про професійних творчих працівників та творчі спілки].
- Law n. 2341-III (Criminal Code of Ukraine) 2001 [Кримінальний кодекс України].
- Law n. 435-IV (Civil Code of Ukraine) 2003 [Цивільний кодекс України].
- Law n. 1618-IV (Civil Procedural Code of Ukraine) 2004 [Цивільний процесуальний кодекс України].
- Law n. 2747-IV (Code of Administrative Procedure of Ukraine) 2005 [Кодекс адміністративного судочинства України].
- Law n. 2939-VI (On Access to Public Information) 2011 [Про доступ до публічної інформації].
- Law n. 4651-VI (Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine) 2012 [Кримінально-процесуальний кодекс України].
- Law n. 1697-VII (On the Office of Public Prosecutor) 2014 [Про прокуратуру].
- Law n. 1700-VII (On Prevention of Corruption) 2014 [Про запобігання корупції].
- Law n. 580-VIII (On National Police) 2015 [Про Національну Поліцію].
- Decree n. 114/1042/516/1199/936/1687/5 of the Prosecutor General of Ukraine (Instruction on organizing the conduct of covert investigating actions and the use of their results in criminal proceedings) 2012 [Про затвердження Інструкції про організацію проведення негласних слідчих (розшукових) дій та використання їх результатів у кримінальному провадженні].
- Decree n. 327 5 of the State Committee of Ukraine on Technical Regulation and Consumer Policy (Classifier of Professions ДК 003:2010) 2010 [Класифікатор професій ДК 003:2010].

- Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 7 (On courts' application of legislation governing the protection of honour, dignity and business reputation of citizens and organizations) 28 September 1990 [Постанова Пленуму Верховного Суду України "Про застосування судами законодавства, що регулює захист честі, гідності і ділової репутації громадян та організацій"].
- Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court of Ukraine No. 1 (On judicial practice in cases of protection of honour and dignity of the individual and business reputation of individual and legal entity) 27 February 2009 [Постанова Пленуму Верховного Суду України "Про судову практику у справах про захист гідності та честі фізичної особи, а також ділової репутації фізичної та юридичної особи"].
- Case n. 2-рп/2012 [2012] Constitutional Court of Ukraine [Ukrainian].
- Case-Law Analysis of the High Specialised Court of Ukraine for Civil and Criminal Cases (On review of the motions for the use of the means to maintain criminal proceedings) February 7 2014 [Узагальнення судової практики щодо розгляду слідчим суддею клопотань про застосування заходів забезпечення кримінального провадження].
- Case n. 757/9271/14-к [2014] Pechersk District Court of Kyiv <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- Case n. 760/7399/15-ц [2015] Solomensky District Court of Kyiv <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- Case n. 314/3755/15-ц [2015] Vilniansk District Court of Zaporozhye Oblast <<http://www.reyestr.court.gov.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

13.2. Case Law

- Handyside v. the United Kingdom App no 5493/72 (ECtHR, 7 December 1976).
- Sunday Times v United Kingdom App no 13166/87 (ECtHR, 24 October 1991).
- Goodwin v United Kingdom App no 17488/90 (ECtHR, 27 March 1996).
- De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium App no 19983/92 (ECtHR, 24 February 1997).
- Roemen and Schmidt v. Luxembourg App no 51772/99 (ECtHR, 25 February 2003).
- Ukrainian Media Group v. Ukraine App no 72713/01 (ECtHR, 29 March 2005).
- Weber and Saravia v. Germany, App no. 54934/00 (ECtHR, admissibility decision 29 June 2006).
- Lyashko v. Ukraine App no 21040/02 (ECtHR, 10 August 2006).
- Marchenko v. Ukraine App no 4063/04 (ECtHR, 19 February 2009).
- Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v the Netherlands App no 38224/03 (ECtHR, 14 September 2010).
- Gazeta Ukraina-Tsentr v. Ukraine App no 16695/04 (ECtHR, 15 July 2010).

13.3. Books and articles

13.3.1. English titles

- Council of Europe, Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights, as Amended) (ECHR) 1950.
- Council of Europe (4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy), 'Resolution No 2 on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights' (7-8 December 1994).
- Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (8 March 2000).
- Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Explanatory Memorandum to Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists Not to Disclose Their Sources of Information' (20 December 2000).
- Council of Europe (Committee on Culture, Science and Education) 'Report on the Protection of Journalists' Sources' (1 December 2010).
- Council of Europe (Parliamentary Assembly) 'Recommendation 1950 (2011) on the Protection of Journalists' Sources' (25 January 2011).
- Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation (2011) 7 on a New Notion of Media' (21 September 2011).
- Council of Europe (Committee of Ministers) 'Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7 on the Protection of Whistle-Blowers' (30 April 2014).

13.3.2. Ukrainian Titles

- Goncharenko V.G., V.T. Nor, M.Y. Shumylo (eds.), Кримінальний-процесуальний кодекс України. Науково-практичний коментар (Pravo 2012) [Ukrainian].
- Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, Закони та практика ЗМІ в Україні (20(61) edn Pholio 2002)[Ukrainian].
- Melnyk M.I., M.I. Khavronyuk (eds.), Науково-практичний коментар до Кримінального кодексу України (9th edn, Yurydychna Dumka 2012) [Ukrainian].
- Dobrynska V., 'Європейський суд своїм рішенням поставив під загрозу журналістський привілей на збереження у таємниці джерел інформації' (Media Law Institute, 30 June 2009) <<http://medialaw.org.ua/analytics/yevropejskyj-sud-svoyim-rishennyam-postavyv-pid-zagrozu-zhurnalistskyj-pryvilej-na-zberezhennya-u-tayemnytsi-dzherel-informatsiyi/>> accessed 15 April [Ukrainian].
- Dyntu V. A., 'Аналіз процесуальних відмінностей у проведенні огляду житла чи іншого володіння особи й обстеженні публічно недоступних місць, житла чи іншого володіння особи' (Law and Society, no 5-2 2015) <http://www.pravoisuspilstvo.org.ua/archive/2015/5_2_2015/part_1/38.pdf> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, 'НМПУ закликає підтримати законопроект на захист джерел інформації' (10 January 2012) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2012/01/nmpu-zaklykaje-pidtrymaty-zakonoproekt-na-zahyst-dzherel-informatsiji/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].

- The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, ‘НМПУ вимагає перевірити законність обшуку квартири журналіста в Житомирській області’ (16 July 2013) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/07/nmpu-vymahaє-pereviryty-zakonnist-obshuku-kvartyry-zhurnalista-v-zhytomyrskij-oblasti/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, ‘Обшукують журналіста. Що робити?’ (19 July 2013) [<<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/07/obshukuyut-zhurnalista-scho-robyty/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- The Independent Media Trade Union of Ukraine, ‘НМПУ: керченська влада комплексно знищує ТРК «Бриз» (відео)’ (13 August 2013) <<http://nmpu.org.ua/2013/08/nmpu-kerchenska-vlada-kompleksno-znyschuje-trk-bryz-video/>> accessed 15 April 2015 [Ukrainian].
- Yelnykova M.O., ‘Конституційно-правові аспекти права на таємницю журналістських джерел’ (Legal doctrine - the basis of the formation of the national legal system conference, Kharkiv, 20-21 November 2013) [Ukrainian].
- Zakharov Y., ‘Поліцейська держава’ (Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group, 29 May 2013) <<http://www.khpg.org/index.php?id=1369818744>> accessed 15 April [Ukrainian].

13.4. Other sources

- Commission on Journalists’ Ethics <<http://www.cje.org.ua/>> accessed 15 April 2016 [Ukrainian].
- Conclusions of the Main Scientific and Expert Department of the Parliament of Ukraine (On the Draft Law of Ukraine “On Amendments to the Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine”(concerning the right of journalists to protect sources of information) 10 June 2011 [Висновок на проект Закону України "Про внесення змін до Кримінально-процесуального кодексу України" (щодо забезпечення права журналістів на захист джерел інформації)].
- Congress of Journalists-Signatories of the Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist, ‘Code of Ethics of Ukrainian Journalist’ (4 October 2013) [Кодекс етики українського журналіста].
- Initiative 11, ‘Draft Law “On the Protection of Whistle-Blowers in Ukraine”’ <<http://initiativa11.org/draft-law-for-the-protection-of-whistle-blowers-in-ukraine/>> assessed 15 April 2016.
- VII Special Congress of National Union of Journalists of Ukraine, ‘Statutes of National Union of Journalists of Ukraine’ (15 January 1992) [Статут Національної Спілки Журналістів України].

13. Table of Provisions

Legal acts appear in chronological order*

Provisions in Ukrainian	Corresponding translation
Кодекс законів про працю України Стаття 147. Стягнення за порушення трудової дисципліни ч.1 За порушення трудової дисципліни до працівника може бути застосовано тільки один з таких заходів стягнення: п.1 догана; п.2 звільнення.	Labour Code of Ukraine Article 147. Sanctions for labour discipline infringements pt 1 Only following sanctions are applied for labour discipline infringements para 1 reprimand; para 2 dismissal.
Закон України “Про оперативно-розшукову діяльність” Стаття 11. Сприяння здійсненню оперативно-розшукової діяльності [...] ч.4 Забороняється залучати до виконання оперативно-розшукових завдань осіб, професійна діяльність яких пов'язана зі збереженням професійної таємниці, а саме: адвокатів, нотаріусів, медичних працівників, священнослужителів, журналістів, якщо таке співробітництво буде пов'язано з розкриттям конфіденційної інформації професійного	The Law of Ukraine “On Investigative and Search Operations” Article 11. Assistance in investigative and search operations [...] pt 4 It is prohibited to involve in investigative and search operations individuals whose work is related to secret information of a professional nature, namely: lawyers, notaries, medical staff, clergymen, journalists, if such cooperation is related to the disclosure of confidential information of a professional nature.

характеру. Закон України “Про інформацію” Стаття 21. Інформація з обмеженим доступом ч.2 Конфіденційною є інформація про фізичну особу, а також інформація, доступ до якої обмежено фізичною або юридичною особою, крім суб'єктів владних повноважень. Конфіденційна інформація може поширюватися за бажанням (згодою) відповідної особи у визначеному нею порядку відповідно до передбачених нею умов, а також в інших випадках, визначених законом. Відносини, пов'язані з правовим режимом конфіденційної інформації, регулюються законом. Стаття 22. Масова інформація та її засоби ч.2 Засоби масової інформації – засоби, призначені для публічного поширення друкованої або аудіовізуальної інформації. Стаття 25. Гарантії діяльності засобів масової інформації та журналістів ч. 3 Журналіст має право не розкривати джерело інформації або інформацію, яка дозволяє встановити джерела інформації, крім випадків, коли його зобов'язано до цього рішенням суду на основі закону.	The Law of Ukraine “On Information” Article 21. Classified information pt 2 Information about natural person and information, access to which is restricted under the decision of natural or legal person, is confidential. Confidential information may be disseminated upon the approval of a respective person, and in a manner prescribed by this person, and in other cases prescribed by law. Relations associated with the legal regime of confidential information shall be regulated by law. Article 22. Mass information and media pt 2 Mass media are resources aimed at public distribution of printed or audiovisual information. Article 25. Guarantees of media and journalist activities pt 3 A journalist has the right not to disclose the source of information or information that allows to identify sources of information, except when it is ordered by the
---	--

ч.4 Після пред'явлення документа, що засвідчує його професійну належність, працівник засобу масової інформації має право збирати інформацію в районах стихійного лиха, катастроф, у місцях аварій, масових безпорядків, воєнних дій, крім випадків, передбачених законом. ч.7 Права та обов'язки журналіста, працівника засобу масової інформації, визначені цим Законом, поширюються на зарубіжних журналістів, працівників зарубіжних засобів масової інформації, які працюють в Україні.	court and based on law. pt 4 Upon presentation of a document that confirms professional affiliation, journalist is entitled to collect information within the areas of natural disasters, catastrophes, accidents, in areas of mass riots, acts of war with exceptions prescribed by law. pt 7 The rights and obligations of a journalist and employee of a media outlet defined in this Law are extended to foreign journalists and employees of foreign mass media outlets, who work in Ukraine.
Стаття 27. Відповідальність за порушення законодавства про інформацію Порушення законодавства України про інформацію тягне за собою дисциплінарну, цивільно-правову, адміністративну або кримінальну відповідальність згідно із законами України.	Article 27. Responsibility for violation of legislation on information Violation of legislation of Ukraine on information entails disciplinary, civil, administrative or criminal liability under the laws of Ukraine.
Стаття 29. Поширення суспільно необхідної інформації ч.1 Інформація з обмеженим доступом може бути поширена, якщо вона є суспільно необхідною, тобто є предметом суспільного інтересу, і право громадськості знати цю інформацію переважає потенційну шкоду від її поширення. ч.2 Предметом суспільного інтересу вважається інформація, яка свідчить про	Article 29. Dissemination of socially necessary information pt 1 Classified information may be disseminated in case of public necessity, i.e. it is a matter of public interest and the public's right to know this information outweighs potential harm of its dissemination. pt 2 A matter of public interest is information that indicates a threat to national

загрозу державному суверенітету, територіальній цілісності України; забезпечує реалізацію конституційних прав, свобод і обов'язків; свідчить про можливість порушення прав людини, введення громадськості в оману, шкідливі екологічні та інші негативні наслідки діяльності (бездіяльності) фізичних або юридичних осіб тощо.

Закон України “Про друковані засоби масової інформації (пресу) в Україні”

Стаття 7. Суб'єкти діяльності друкованих засобів масової інформації

ч.1 До суб'єктів діяльності друкованих засобів масової інформації належать засновник (співзасновники) друкованого засобу масової інформації, його редактор (головний редактор), редакційна колегія, редакція, трудовий колектив редакції, журналістський колектив, журналіст, автор, видавець, розповсюджувач.

Стаття 25. Журналіст редакції друкованого засобу масової інформації

ч.1 Журналістом редакції друкованого засобу масової інформації відповідно до цього Закону є творчий працівник, який професійно збирає, одержує, створює і займається підготовкою інформації для друкованого засобу масової інформації та діє на підставі трудових чи інших договірних відносин з його редакцією або займається такою діяльністю за її sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ukraine; facilitates implementation of constitutional rights, freedoms and duties; indicates a possibility of violation of human rights, deception of the public, harmful environmental and other negative effects of activity (or inactivity) of natural and legal persons.

The Law of Ukraine “On Print Media (Press) in Ukraine”

Article 7. Actors of printed mass media activities pt 1 Actors of print mass media activities are founder (co-founders) of print media outlet, its editor (editor in chief), editorial office, editorial board, editorial board's staff, journalistic staff, author, publisher and distributor.

Article 25. Journalist of editorial office of print media outlet pt 1 Journalist of a print mass medium is a creative employee, who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for a print media outlet and acts on the basis of labour or other contractual relations with his/her editorial office or authorised by the editorial office to perform these activities, which is confirmed by a certificate issued by the editorial office or by

уповноваженням, що підтверджується редакційним посвідченням чи іншим документом, виданим йому редакцією цього друкованого засобу масової інформації. ч.2 Професійна належність журналіста може підтверджуватися документом, виданим професійним об'єднанням журналістів. ч.3 На особу, якій видано редакційне посвідчення чи інший документ, що підтверджує повноваження, надані їй редакцією друкованого засобу масової інформації, або її професійну належність, поширюються права і обов'язки, зазначені у статті 26 цього Закону. Стаття 26. Права та обов'язки журналіста редакції ч.1 Здійснюючи свою діяльність на засадах професійної самостійності, журналіст використовує права та виконує обов'язки, передбачені Законом України “Про інформацію” та цим Законом. ч.2 Журналіст має право: [...] п.9 поширювати підготовлені ним повідомлення і матеріали за власним підписом, під умовним ім'ям (псевдонімом) або без підпису (анонімно); [...] п. 11 на збереження таємниці авторства та	other document issued by the editorial office. pt 2 Professional identity of a journalist can be confirmed by a document issued by the professional association of journalists. pt 3 A person in possession of a certificate issued by the editorial office or other document confirming his/her credentials granted by the editorial office, or his/her professional affiliation, enjoys the rights and obligations specified in Article 26 hereof. Article 26. Rights and obligations of the journalist of printed media pt 1 While conducting activities based on a principle of professional independence, a journalist uses the rights and fulfil the obligations stipulated by the Law of Ukraine “On Information” and this Law. pt 2 A journalist have a right: [...] para 9 to publish messages and materials without signature (anonymously) or using an alias [...]
--	---

джерел інформації, за винятком випадків, коли ці таємниці обнародуються на вимогу суду. ч.3 Журналіст зобов'язаний: [...] п.3 задовольняти прохання осіб, які надають інформацію, щодо їх авторства або збереження таємниці авторства. Стаття 41. Підстави відповідальності [...] ч.2 Порушеннями законодавства України про друковані засоби масової інформації є: [...] п.5 зловживання правами журналіста. Закон України “Про телебачення і радіомовлення”	para 11 to the secrecy of authorship and sources of information, unless such information is to be revealed at the request of the court. pt 3 A journalist have a right: [...] para 3 meet the request of persons who provide information regarding their authorship or confidentiality of their authorship. Article 41. Grounds for liability [...] pt 2 Violations of legislation of Ukraine on printed media: [...] para 5 misuse of journalist's rights.
---	---

Стаття 1. Визначення термінів Для цілей цього Закону вживаються такі терміни: [...] п. 65 телерадіожурналіст – штатний або позаштатний творчий працівник телерадіоорганізації, який професійно збирає, одержує, створює і готує інформацію для розповсюдження. Стаття 59. Обов'язки телерадіоорганізації ч.1 Телерадіоорганізація зобов'язана: [...] ж) зберігати у таємниці, на підставі документального підтвердження, відомості про особу, яка передала інформацію або інші матеріали за умови нерозголошення її імені. Стаття 72. Санкції за порушення законодавства про телебачення і радіомовлення ч.1 Санкції за порушення законодавства про телебачення і радіомовлення застосовуються за рішенням суду або, у встановлених цим Законом випадках, за	The Law of Ukraine “On Television and Radio Broadcasting” Article 1. Definitions For the purposes of this Act the following terms are used: [...] para 65 journalist of television and radio is a staff or a freelance creative employee of a broadcasting organisation, who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for distribution. Article 59. Obligations of broadcasting organisation pt 1 A broadcasting organisation is obliged: [...] para “ж” to keep confidential, based on documentary evidence, information about the person who provided information or other materials, if the confidentiality of the person was a precondition for transmission of information. Article 72. Sanctions for violation of
---	--

рішенням Національної ради. ч.2 Національна рада застосовує санкції до телерадіоорганізацій у разі порушення ними вимог цього Закону або ліцензійних умов. [...] ч.6 Національна рада може застосовувати до телерадіоорганізацій та провайдерів програмної послуги такі санкції: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – оголошення попередження; – стягнення штрафу; – подання до суду справи про анулювання ліцензії на мовлення. Закон України “Про інформаційні агенства” Стаття 6. Суб'єкти діяльності інформаційних агентств ч.1 Суб'єктами діяльності інформаційних	legislation on television and radio broadcasting pt 1 Sanctions for violation of legislation on television and radio broadcasting are applied by the court or, in specified in this Act cases, by the National Council [National Television and Radio Broadcasting Council of Ukraine]. pt 2 The National Council applies sanctions to broadcasters upon violation of the requirements of this Act or license conditions. [...] pt 6 The National Council may apply to broadcasters and providers of software programme the following sanctions: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – warning; – fine; – filing a case regarding broadcast license revocation in a court. The Law of Ukraine “On Information Agencies”
---	--

агентств є: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – засновник (співзасновники) інформаційного агентства; – його керівник (директор, генеральний директор, президент та ін.); – трудовий колектив; – творчий колектив; – журналіст інформаційного агентства; – спеціаліст у галузі засобів комунікації; – автор або інша особа, якій належать права на інформацію; – видавець (виробник) продукції інформаційного агентства; – розповсюджувач продукції інформаційного агентства; – споживач продукції інформаційного агентства. Стаття 21. Журналіст інформаційного агентства ч.1 Журналіст інформаційного агентства – це творчий працівник, який збирає, одержує, створює та готує інформацію для інформаційного агентства і діє від його імені на підставі	Article 6. Actors of informational agencies' activities pt 1 Actors of informational agencies' activities are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – founder (co-founders) of informational agency; – its manager (director, CEO, President, etc.); – staff; – creative team; – journalist of an informational agency; – specialist in the field of communication; – author or other person who owns the right to information; – publisher (producer) of informational agency's production; – distributor of informational agency's production; – consumer of informational agency's production. Article 21. Journalist of information agency
---	---

трудоуох чи інших договірних відносин з ним або за його уповноваженням. ч.2 Належність журналіста до інформаційного агентства підтверджується службовим посвідченням цього агентства чи іншим документом, виданим йому цим агентством. ч.3 Журналіст інформаційного агентства має права та виконує обов'язки, визначені чинним законодавством України про пресу, телебачення і радіомовлення. Конституція України Стаття 31. Кожному гарантується таємниця листування, телефонних розмов, телеграфної та іншої кореспонденції. Винятки можуть бути встановлені лише судом у випадках, передбачених законом, з метою запобігти злочинів чи з'ясувати істину під час розслідування кримінальної справи, якщо іншими способами одержати інформацію неможливо. Стаття 32. ч.1 Ніхто не може зазнавати втручання в його особисте і сімейне життя, крім випадків, передбачених Конституцією	pt 1 Journalist of an information agency is a creative employee, who collects, receives, creates and prepares information for information agency and acts on its behalf on the basis of a labour contract or on the basis of other contractual relations or under authorisation of the information agency. pt 2 Journalist's affiliation with an information agency is confirmed by a service certificate of this agency or other document issued by this agency. pt 3 Journalist of the information agency enjoys all rights and performs all obligations prescribed by Ukrainian legislation on press, television and radio broadcasting. Constitution of Ukraine Article 31. Everyone is entitled to privacy of mail, telephone conversations, telegraph and other correspondence. Exceptions from this rule shall be established only by a court in cases prescribed by law, with the purpose of preventing crime or ascertaining the truth in the course of the investigation of a criminal case, if it is not possible to obtain information by other means.
--	--

України. ч.2 Не допускається збирання, зберігання, використання та поширення конфіденційної інформації про особу без її згоди, крім випадків, визначених законом, і лише в інтересах національної безпеки, економічного добробуту та прав людини. Стаття 34. ч.1 Кожному гарантується право на свободу думки і слова, на вільне вираження своїх поглядів і переконань. Кожен має право вільно збирати, зберігати, використовувати і поширювати інформацію усно, письмово або в інший спосіб – на свій вибір. ч.2 Здійснення цих прав може бути обмежене законом в інтересах національної безпеки, територіальної цілісності або громадського порядку з метою запобігання заворушенням чи злочинам, для охорони здоров'я населення, для захисту репутації або прав інших людей, для запобігання розголошенню інформації, одержаної конфіденційно, або для підтримання авторитету і неупередженості правосуддя.	Article 32. pt 1 No one shall be subject to interference with his/her personal and family life, except cases prescribed by the Constitution of Ukraine. pt 2 Collection, storage, use and dissemination of confidential information about a person without his/her consent shall not be permitted, except cases prescribed by law, and only in the interests of national security, economic welfare and human rights. Article 34. pt 1 Everyone is entitled to the right to freedom of thought and speech, and to the free expression of his or her views and beliefs. Everyone has the right to freely collect, store, use and disseminate information by oral, written or other means of his or her choice. pt 2 The exercise of these rights may be restricted by law in the interests of national security, territorial indivisibility or public order, with the purpose of preventing disturbances or crimes, protecting the health of the population, the reputation or rights of other persons, preventing the publication of information received confidentially, or supporting the authority and impartiality of justice.
--	---

Закон України “Про державну підтримку засобів масової інформації та соціальний захист журналістів” Стаття 1. Поняття і терміни ч.1 Основні поняття і терміни, що вживаються в цьому Законі, мають таке значення: [...] п.6 журналіст - творчий працівник, який професійно збирає, одержує, створює і займається підготовкою інформації для засобів масової інформації, виконує редакційно-посадові службові обов'язки в засобі масової інформації (в штаті або на позаштатних засадах) відповідно до професійних назв посад (роботи) журналіста, які зазначаються в державному класифікаторі професій України; Кримінальний кодекс України Стаття 12. Класифікація злочинів [...] ч.4 Тяжким злочином є злочин, за який передбачене основне покарання у виді штрафу в розмірі не більше двадцяти п'яти тисяч неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або позбавлення волі на строк не більше десяти років. ч.5 Особливо тяжким злочином є злочин,	The Law of Ukraine “On State Support of Mass Media and Social Protection of Journalists” Article 1. Definitions and terms pt 1 The main definitions and terms used in this Act have the following meanings: [...] para 6 Journalist is a creative employee who professionally collects, receives, creates and prepares information for mass media, performs official editorial duties for a mass media outlet (as a member of staff or on a freelance basis) according to the professional titles of jobs listed in the State Classifier of Professions in Ukraine. Criminal Code of Ukraine Article 12. Classification of criminal offences
--	---

за який передбачене основне покарання у виді штрафу в розмірі понад двадцять п'ять тисяч неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян, позбавлення волі на строк понад десять років або довічного позбавлення волі.

Стаття 171. Перешкоджання законній професійній діяльності журналістів ч.1 Незаконне вилучення зібраних, опрацьованих, підготовлених журналістом матеріалів і технічних засобів, якими він користується у зв'язку із своєю професійною діяльністю, незаконна відмова у доступі журналіста до інформації, незаконна заборона висвітлення окремих тем, показу окремих осіб, критики суб'єкта владних повноважень, а так само будь-яке інше умисне перешкоджання здійсненню журналістом законної професійної діяльності - карається штрафом до п'ятдесяти неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або арештом на строк до шести місяців, або обмеженням волі на строк до трьох років.

ч.2 Вплив у будь-якій формі на журналіста з метою перешкоджання виконанню ним професійних обов'язків або переслідування журналіста у зв'язку з його законною професійною діяльністю - караються штрафом до двохсот неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або арештом на строк до шести місяців, або обмеженням волі на строк до чотирьох років.

ч. 3 Дії, передбачені частиною другою цієї статті, якщо вони були вчинені pt 4 A grave criminal offence shall mean an offense punishable by a fine of not more than twenty-five thousand tax-free minimum incomes, or imprisonment for a term of up to ten years.

pt 5 A special grave offence shall mean an offense punishable by a fine of more than twenty-five thousand tax-free minimum incomes, imprisonment for a term of more than ten years or life sentence.

Article 171. Obstruction of journalistic activities pt 1 Illegal seizure of materials, collected, processed, prepared by journalist, and technical tools that he/she uses in connection with his/her professional activities [...] as well as any other willful obstruction of legitimate professional activities of a journalist is punishable by a fine of up to 50 tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to six months or imprisonment for up to three years.

pt 2 Any obstruction of the performance of professional duties of a journalist or prosecution of a journalist in connection with his/her legitimate professional activities is punishable by a fine of up to two hundred tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to six months or imprisonment for up to four years.

службовою особою з використанням свого службового становища або за попередньою змовою групою осіб, - караються штрафом від двохсот до п'ятисот неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або обмеженням волі на строк до п'яти років, з позбавленням права обіймати певні посади чи займатися певною діяльністю на строк до трьох років або без такого.

Стаття 182. Порушення недоторканності приватного життя ч.1 Незаконне збирання, зберігання, використання, знищення, поширення конфіденційної інформації про особу або незаконна зміна такої інформації, крім випадків, передбачених іншими статтями цього Кодексу, - караються штрафом від п'ятисот до однієї тисячі неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або виправними роботами на строк до двох років, або арештом на строк до шести місяців, або обмеженням волі на строк до трьох років.

.Стаття 345-1. Погроза або насильство щодо журналіста

Примітка. Під професійною діяльністю журналіста у цій статті та статтях 171, 347-1, 348-1 цього Кодексу слід розуміти систематичну діяльність особи, пов'язану із збиранням, одержанням, створенням, pt 3 Actions stipulated in this Article, if committed by a public official using his official position or conducted in a conspiracy are punishable by a fine of two hundred to five hundred tax-free minimum incomes, or arrest for up to five years, with disqualification either to hold certain positions or engage in certain activities for up to three years or without such.

Article 182. Violation of privacy pt 1 Illegal collection, storage, use or dissemination of confidential information about a person without his/her consent, or dissemination of such information in a public speech, publicly demonstrated work, or mass media are punishable by a fine of five hundred to one thousand tax-free minimum incomes, or correctional labour for a term up to two years, or arrest for up to six months, or imprisonment for up to three years.

Article 345-1. Threats or violence against journalists

Note. The professional activities of a

поширенням, зберіганням або іншим використанням інформації з метою її поширення на невизначене коло осіб через друковані засоби масової інформації, телерадіоорганізації, інформаційні агентства, мережу Інтернет. Статус журналіста або його належність до засобу масової інформації підтверджується редакційним або службовим посвідченням чи іншим документом, виданим засобом масової інформації, його редакцією або професійною чи творчою спілкою журналістів. Стаття 382. Невиконання судового рішення ч.1 Умисне невиконання вироку, рішення, ухвали, постанови суду, що набрали законної сили, або перешкодження їх виконанню – карається штрафом від п'ятисот до однієї тисячі неоподатковуваних мінімумів доходів громадян або позбавленням волі на строк до трьох років Цивільний кодекс України Стаття 301. Право на особисте життя та його таємницю [...] ч.4 Обставини особистого життя фізичної особи можуть бути розголошені іншими особами лише за умови, що вони містять ознаки правопорушення, що	journalist in this Article and articles 171, 347-1, 348-1 of the Code should be understood as a systematic activity of a person connected with the collection, obtainment, creation, distribution, storage or other use of the information for its indefinite extension to the range people through print media, broadcasting, news agencies, the Internet. The status of the journalist or his affiliation with mass media is confirmed by official identity card or other document issued by the mass media, his editorship or professional or creative union of journalists. Article 382. Failure to comply with a court decision pt 1 Wilful failure to comply with a verdict, judgment, ruling or order of a court, which has come into force, or preclusion of their execution are punishable by a fine of five hundred to one thousand tax-free minimum incomes, or imprisonment for up to three years. Civil Code of Ukraine Article 301. The right to privacy and confidentiality [...]
---	--

підтверджено рішенням суду, а також за її згодою. Цивільно-процесуальний кодекс України Стаття 6. Гласність та відкритість судового розгляду [...] ч.3 Закритий судовий розгляд допускається у разі, якщо відкритий розгляд може привести до розголошення державної або іншої таємниці, яка охороняється законом, а також за клопотанням осіб, які беруть участь у справі, з метою забезпечення таємниці усиновлення, запобігання розголошенню відомостей про інтимні чи інші особисті сторони життя осіб, які беруть участь у справі, або відомостей, що принижують їх честь і гідність. Стаття 51. Особи, які не підлягають допиту як свідки ч.1 Не підлягають допиту як свідки: [...]	pt 4 Information on one's personal life may be disclosed only if it indicates elements of a crime as confirmed by court decision, or with consent of such person. Civil Procedure Code of Ukraine Article 6. Transparency and openness of the trial [...] pt 3 Closed trial is allowed if the public trial could lead to disclosure of state or other secrets, which is protected by law, as well as upon the petition of the persons involved in the case, to ensure the secrecy of adoption, preventing the disclosure of information or other intimate sides of personal live of the parties involved in the case, or information that may humiliate their honour and dignity. Article 51. Persons who are not subject to examination as witnesses pt 1 Persons who are not subject to examination as witnesses
---	--

п.2 особи, які за законом зобов'язані зберігати в таємниці відомості, що були довірені їм у зв'язку з їхнім службовим чи професійним становищем, – про такі відомості Стаття 60. Обов'язки доказування і подання доказів ч.1[...] п.3 У справах щодо застосування керівником або роботодавцем чи створення ним загрози застосування негативних заходів впливу до позивача (звільнення, примушування до звільнення, притягнення до дисциплінарної відповідальності, переведення, атестація, зміна умов праці, відмова в призначенні на вищу посаду, скорочення заробітної плати тощо) у зв'язку з повідомленням ним або членом його сім'ї про порушення вимог Закону України “Про запобігання корупції” іншою особою обов'язок доказування правомірності прийнятих при цьому рішень, вчинених дій покладається на відповідача. Стаття 137. Витребування доказів ч.1 У випадках, коли щодо отримання доказів у сторін та інших осіб, які беруть участь у справі, є складнощі, суд за їх клопотанням зобов'язаний витребувати такі докази [...] ч.2 У заяві про витребування доказів має бути зазначено, який доказ вимагається, підстави, за яких особа вважає, що доказ	[...] para 2 individuals who are obliged by law to keep in secret information, entrusted to them in connection with their official or professional status, – regarding this information. Article 60. Burden of proof and submitting evidence pt 1 [...] para 3 In cases concerning the application negative measures or the creation of the threat of such to the plaintiff by a manager or employer (discharge, forced dismissal, disciplinary liability, reassignment, attestation, labour conditions change, denial of appointment to a higher level position, wage cuts etc.) in connection to reported violations of the Law of Ukraine “On the Prevention of Corruption” made by a whistle-blower or a member of his family the burden of proof of the legality of such measures lies on the defendant. Article 137. Vindication of evidence pt 1 The court upon motion of the parties and other persons involved in the case shall vindicate the evidence that is difficult for the persons involved in the case to obtain [...]
---	--

знаходиться в іншій особі, обставини, які може підтвердити цей доказ. Стаття 293. Ухвали, на які можуть бути подані скарги окремо від рішення суду [...] ч.2 Заперечення на ухвали, що не підлягають оскарженню окремо від рішення суду, включаються до апеляційної скарги на рішення суду. У разі подання апеляційної скарги на ухвалу, що не підлягає оскарженню окремо від рішення суду, суд першої інстанції повертає її заявнику, про що постановляє ухвалу, яка не підлягає оскарженню. Кодекс адміністративного судочинства України Стаття 65. Свідок [...] ч.2 Не можуть бути допитані як свідки: [...] п.5 інші особи, які не можуть бути допитані як свідки згідно із законом чи міжнародним договором, згода на обов'язковість якого надана Верховною Радою України, без їхньої згоди.	pt 2 Such motion shall indicate evidence required, the grounds based on which a person, who requests vindication, believes that evidence is in possession of another person, the circumstances that this evidence can prove. Article 293. Court rulings that are subject to a separate from the judgment appeal [...] pt 2 Objections to court rulings that are not subject to a separate from the judgment appeal are included in the appeal against court's judgment. If an appeal against a ruling is not subject to a separate from the judgment appeal, the court of first instance rules to return it to the applicant, which is not subject to appeal. Code of Administrative Procedure of Ukraine Article 65. Witness [...] pt 2 Not subject to examination as witnesses: [...] para 5 other persons who cannot be examined as witnesses without their consent according to national law or international treaty ratified by the Parliament of Ukraine.
--	--

Закон України «Про доступ до публічної інформації» Стаття 11. Захист особи, яка оприлюднює інформацію ч.1 Посадові та службові особи не підлягають юридичній відповідальності, незважаючи на порушення своїх обов'язків, за розголошення інформації про правопорушення або відомостей, що стосуються серйозної загрози здоров'ю чи безпеці громадян, довіллю, якщо особа при цьому керувалася добрими намірами та мала обґрунтоване переконання, що інформація є достовірною, а також містить докази правопорушення або стосується істотної загрози здоров'ю чи безпеці громадян, довіллю.	The Law of Ukraine “On the Access to Public Information” Article 11. Protection of a person who discloses information pt 1 Officials and civil servants shall not be subject to legal liability, regardless of the breach of their duties, for disclosure of information on infringements or information concerning serious threat to the health or safety of citizens and environment, if the person is acting in good faith and had has a justified belief that the information was is accurate and contains evidence of infringement or concerns serious threat to the health or safety of citizens and environment.
Кримінальний процесуальний кодекс України Стаття 27. Гласність і відкритість судового провадження та його повне фіксування технічними засобами [...] ч.2 Кримінальне провадження в судах усіх інстанцій здійснюється відкрито. Слідчий суддя, суд може прийняти рішення про здійснення кримінального провадження у закритому судовому засіданні впродовж усього судового провадження або його окремої частини лише у випадках:	Criminal Procedure Code of Ukraine Article 27. Transparency and openness of the proceedings and its full recording by technical means [...] pt 2 Criminal proceedings in the courts of all instances are open. Investigative judge or court may decide to hold closed criminal

[...] п.4 якщо здійснення провадження у відкритому судовому засіданні може призвести до розголошення таємниці, що охороняється законом. Стаття 65. Свідок [...] ч.2 Не можуть бути допитані як свідки: [...] п. 6 журналісти – про відомості, які містять конфіденційну інформацію професійного характеру, надану за умови нерозголошення авторства або джерела інформації. Стаття 159. Загальні положення тимчасового доступу до речей і документів ч.1 Тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів полягає у наданні стороні кримінального провадження особою, у володінні якої знаходяться такі речі і документи, можливості ознайомитися з ними, зробити їх копії та вилучити їх (здійснити їх виїмку). Стаття 160. Клопотання про тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів ч.1 Сторони кримінального провадження мають право звернутися до слідчого судді	hearings throughout duration of proceedings or separate closed hearing only in the following cases: [...] para 4 under the risk of disclosure of confidential information protected by law in case of open hearings. Article 65. Witness [...] pt 2 Shall not be interrogated as witnesses: [...] pt 6 journalists – about confidential information of a professional nature, provided on condition of non-disclosure of its authorship or source of information. Article 159. General provisions on temporary access to objects and documents pt 1 Temporary access to objects and documents is providing a party to a criminal proceeding by the person, who owns such objects and documents, with an opportunity
--	---

під час досудового розслідування чи суду під час судового провадження із клопотанням про тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів, за винятком зазначених у статті 161 цього Кодексу. Слідчий має право звернутися із зазначеним клопотанням за погодженням з прокурором. ч.2 У клопотанні зазначаються: [...] п. 6 можливість використання як доказів відомостей, що містяться в речах і документах, та неможливість іншими способами довести обставини, які передбачається довести за допомогою цих речей і документів, у випадку подання клопотання про тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів, які містять охоронювану законом таємницю. Стаття 162. Речі і документи, які містять охоронювану законом таємницю ч. 1 До охоронюваної законом таємниці, яка міститься в речах і документах, належать: п. 1 інформація, що знаходиться у володінні засобу масової інформації або журналіста і надана їм за умови нерозголошення авторства або джерела інформації. Стаття 163. Розгляд клопотання про	to examine these objects and documents, make their copies or seize them. Article 160. Motion for temporary access to objects and documents pt 1 The parties to criminal proceedings may submit a motion to an investigative judge during the preliminary investigation or court during the court proceedings for temporary access to objects and documents, except as provided in Article 161 of this Code. An investigator may submit the motion upon the prosecutor's approval. pt 2 The motion shall include: [...] para 6 in case of filing a motion for temporary access to objects and documents that contain secret information protected by law – possibility to use information contained in these objects and documents as evidence, and impossibility to otherwise prove circumstances, which are supposed to be proved with the use of such objects and documents. Article 162. Objects and documents containing secrets protected by law pt 1 Secret information protected by law and
--	---

тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів [...] ч.7 Слідчий суддя, суд в ухвалі про надання тимчасового доступу до речей і документів може дати розпорядження про надання можливості вилучення речей і документів, якщо сторона кримінального провадження доведе наявність достатніх підстав вважати, що без такого вилучення існує реальна загроза зміни або знищення речей чи документів, або таке вилучення необхідне для досягнення мети отримання доступу до речей і документів. Стаття 166. Наслідки невиконання ухвали слідчого судді, суду про тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів ч.1 У разі невиконання ухвали про тимчасовий доступ до речей і документів слідчий суддя, суд за клопотанням сторони кримінального провадження, якій надано право на доступ до речей і документів на підставі ухвали, має право постановити ухвалу про дозвіл на проведення обшуку згідно з положеннями цього Кодексу з метою відшукання та вилучення зазначених речей і документів. Стаття 246. Підстави проведення негласних слідчих (розшукових) дій [...]	contained in objects and documents includes: para 1 information in possession of a mass medium or a journalist, which was provided to them on condition that its author or source of information would not be disclosed Article 163. Review the motion for temporary access to objects and documents [...] pt 7 Investigative judge or the court in its decision to grant temporary access to objects and documents may order seizure of objects and documents, if a party of criminal proceedings provides sufficient grounds to believe that without seizure there is a real threat of alteration or destruction of objects or documents, or such seizure is necessary to access documents and objects. Article 166. The consequences of failure to comply with investigative judge's or court's order for temporary access to objects and documents pt 1 In case of failure to comply with for temporary access to objects and documents, an investigative judge or a court at the request of parties to the criminal
--	--

ч.5 У рішенні про проведення негласної слідчої (розшукової) дії зазначається строк її проведення. Строк проведення негласної слідчої (розшукової) дії може бути продовжений: [...]до вісімнадцяти місяців. Стаття 248. Розгляд клопотання про дозвіл на проведення негласної слідчої (розшукової) дії [...] ч.2 У клопотанні зазначаються: [...] п.7 обґрунтування неможливості отримання відомостей про злочин та особу, яка його вчинила, в інший спосіб. Стаття 258. Загальні положення про втручання у приватне спілкування ч.1 Ніхто не може зазнавати втручання у приватне спілкування без ухвали слідчого судді. [...] ч.4 Втручанням у приватне спілкування є доступ до змісту спілкування за умов, якщо учасники спілкування мають достатні підстави вважати, що спілкування є приватним. Різновидами втручання в приватне спілкування є: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) аудіо-, відеоконтроль особи;2) арешт, огляд і виїмка кореспонденції;3) зняття інформації з транспортних	proceedings, who have the right of access to objects and documents on the based on order, are entitled to order a search according to the provisions of the Code with search in order to find and seize the objects and documents concerned. Article 246. The grounds of covert investigative (detective) actions [...] pt 5 The decision on covert (investigative) action shall include a period of its implementation. A period of implementation of covert (investigative) action may be extended [...] up to eighteen months. Article 248. Consideration of a motion for covert investigative (detective) action [...] pt 2 A motion shall include: [...] para 7 justification of impossibility to obtain information about crime and an individual who committed this crime in other way. Article 258. General provisions on
---	--

телекомунікаційних мереж; 4) зняття інформації з електронних інформаційних систем. Стаття 263. Зняття інформації з транспортних телекомунікаційних мереж [...] ч.4 Зняття інформації з транспортних телекомунікаційних мереж покладається на уповноважені підрозділи органів Національної поліції та органів безпеки. Керівники та працівники операторів телекомунікаційного зв'язку зобов'язані сприяти виконанню дій із зняття інформації з транспортних телекомунікаційних мереж, вживати необхідних заходів щодо нерозголошення факту проведення таких дій та отриманої інформації, зберігати її в незмінному вигляді. Стаття 264. Зняття інформації з електронних інформаційних систем [...] ч.2 Не потребує дозволу слідчого судді здобуття відомостей з електронних інформаційних систем або її частини, доступ до яких не обмежується її власником, володільцем або утримувачем	interference with private communication pt 1 There shall be no interference with private communication without order of an investigative judge. [...] pt 4 Interference with private communication is access to the content of communication under conditions that participants of such communication have sufficient reasons to believe that communication is private. There are the following types of such interference: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) audio and video monitoring of an individual; 2) arrest, inspection and seizure of correspondence; 3) interception of information in transport telecommunications networks; 4) interception of information in electronic information systems. Article 263. Interception of information from transport telecommunications networks [...] pt 4 Interception of information in transport telecommunications networks is conducted by responsible units of the agencies of internal affairs and agencies of security. It shall be facilitated by managers and employees of telecommunication networks' operators, taking required measures in order
---	--

або не пов'язаний з подоланням системи логічного захисту. Стаття 275. Використання конфіденційного співробітництва ч.2 Забороняється залучати до конфіденційного співробітництва під час проведення негласних слідчих дій [...] журналістів, якщо таке співробітництво буде пов'язане з розкриттям конфіденційної інформації професійного характеру Стаття 392. Судові рішення, які можуть бути оскаржені в апеляційному порядку [...] ч.1 В апеляційному порядку можуть бути оскаржені судові рішення, які були ухвалені судами першої інстанції і не набрали законної сили, а саме: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) вироки, крім випадків, передбачених статтею 394 цього Кодексу;2) ухвали про застосування чи відмову у застосуванні примусових заходів медичного або виховного характеру;3) інші ухвали у випадках, передбачених цим Кодексом. ч.2 Ухвали, постановлені під час судового провадження в суді першої інстанції до ухвалення судових рішень, передбачених частиною першою цієї статті, окремому	not to disclose the fact of conducting such measures and the information obtained, and to preserve such information in its initial version. Article 264. Interception of information from electronic information systems [...] pt 2 When intercepting information in electronic information systems or their parts, the access to which is not restricted by the system's owner, possessor or keeper, or is not related to circumventing a system of logical protection, permission of investigative judge is not required. Article 275. The use of confidential cooperation pt 2 When conducting covert investigative (detective) actions, it is forbidden to involve in confidential cooperation [...] journalists, if such cooperation would require disclosing confidential professional information.
---	---

оскарженню не підлягають, крім випадків, визначених цим Кодексом. Заперечення проти таких ухвал можуть бути включені до апеляційної скарги на судове рішення, передбачене частиною першою цієї статті. Закон України “Про запобігання корупції” Стаття 53. Державний захист осіб, які надають допомогу в запобіганні і протидії корупції ч.1 Особа, яка надає допомогу в запобіганні і протидії корупції (викривач), - особа, яка за наявності обґрунтованого переконання, що інформація є достовірною, повідомляє про порушення вимог цього Закону іншою особою. ч.2 Особи, які надають допомогу в запобіганні і протидії корупції, перебувають під захистом держави. За наявності загрози життю, житлу, здоров'ю та майну осіб, які надають допомогу в запобіганні і протидії корупції, або їх близьких осіб, у зв'язку із здійсненим повідомленням про порушення вимог цього Закону, правоохоронними органами до них можуть бути застосовані правові, організаційно-технічні та інші спрямовані на захист від протиправних посягань заходи, передбачені Законом України "Про забезпечення безпеки осіб, які беруть участь у кримінальному	Article 392. Court decisions that can be appealed against [...] pt 1 Court decisions that have been adopted but have not entered into force yet may be appealed. In particular: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1) verdicts, except cases prescribed by Article 394 of the Code;2) decision on approval or disapproval of compulsory measures of medical or educational nature;3) other decisions in cases prescribed by this Code. pt 2 Court rulings made during the proceedings at the court of the first instance before the adoption of court decisions prescribed by Part 1 of this Article, are not subject to separate appeal, except as provided by this Code. Objections against such rulings can be included in appeal against the court decision prescribed by Part 1 of this Article. The Law of Ukraine “On the Prevention of Corruption” Article 53. State protection of individuals providing assistance in preventing and
---	--

судочинстві". ч.3 Особа або член її сім'ї не може бути звільнена чи примушена до звільнення, притягнута до дисциплінарної відповідальності чи піддана з боку керівника або роботодавця іншим негативним заходам впливу (переведення, атестація, зміна умов праці, відмова в призначенні на вищу посаду, скорочення заробітної плати тощо) або загрози таких заходів впливу у зв'язку з повідомленням нею про порушення вимог цього Закону іншою особою. Інформація про викривача може бути розголошена лише за його згодою, крім випадків, встановлених законом. ч.4 Національне агентство, а також інші державні органи, органи влади Автономної Республіки Крим, органи місцевого самоврядування забезпечують умови для повідомлень їх працівниками про порушення вимог цього Закону іншою особою, зокрема через спеціальні телефонні лінії, офіційні веб-сайти, засоби електронного зв'язку. ч.5 Повідомлення про порушення вимог цього Закону може бути здійснене працівником відповідного органу без зазначення авторства (анонімно).	combating corruption pt 1 A person who assists in preventing and combating corruption (whistle-blower) is a person who provides assistance in preventing and combating corruption by reporting violations of this Law committed by another person on the basis of justified belief that the information is accurate pt 2 Persons who provide assistance in preventing and combating corruption are under the state protection. If there is danger to life, home, health and property of persons who assist in preventing and combating corruption, or persons, who are in close relations to them, in connection to reported violation of this Law, law enforcement bodies may apply legal, organisational, technical and other measures aimed at protection against illegal actions under the Law of Ukraine "On the Protection of Individuals Involved in Criminal Proceedings" pt 3 In connection to reported violations of the requirements of this Law by another person, a person or a member of his family cannot be discharged or forced to resign, subjected to or threatened with disciplinary liability or any other negative measures (reassignment, attestation, labour conditions change, denial of appointment to a higher level position, wage cuts etc.) by his employer or manager. Information on the whistle-blower may be disclosed only upon his consent, except in fixed in law.
---	--

pt 4 National Agency on the Prevention of Corruption and other state authorities, authorities of the Autonomous Republic of Crimea, local governments facilitate reporting violations of this Law by another person, through a special phone lines, official web-sites, means of electronic communication by their employees.

pt 5 Reporting of violations of this Law can be made by the employee of the relevant body anonym

ELSA UNITED KINGDOM

Contributors

National Coordinator

Stephania Elis Karasamani

National Researchers

Angelika Majchrowska

Freya Cassia

Lydia Leather

Mihaela Angelova

Nietta Keane

Nikoletta Zenonos

Ondrej Toloch

Panayiotis Constantinides

Stefanos Xenofontos

Yiota Constantinidou

National Linguistic editor

Stephania Elis Karasamani

Introduction

It is a basic tenet of journalistic ethics that, in the words of the National Union of Journalists' code of conduct, a journalist 'protects the identity of sources who supply information in confidence and material gathered in the course of her/his work.'¹ Hence, the need to ensure anonymity becomes evident in the process of source cultivation which, in turn, occupies a predominant role in the investigative endeavours of journalists.² A famous statement of principle by the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR), stemming from the seminal case of Goodwin v. United Kingdom, recognises that:

Protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom... Without such protection, sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest. As a result the vital public watchdog role of the press could be undermined and the ability of the press to provide accurate and reliable information could be adversely affected.³

Therefore, freedom of expression, guaranteed by Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR)⁴ protects not just the right to disseminate information to the public but the preceding right to protect the source of that information. It is thus submitted that fear of disclosure can be a serious impediment to the confidential flow of information between source and journalist. Regrettably, despite the decision in *Goodwin*⁵, English courts may sometimes order disclosure. Their power to do so depends on who is asking the question and why.

1. Does the National Legislation Provide (explicit or otherwise) Protection of the Right of the Journalists not to Disclose their Source of Information? What Type of Legislation Provides this Protection? How Exactly is this Protection Construed in National Law?

1.1 The (in)adequacy of UK law to Protect Journalists' Rights

It can be said that UK legislation is severely lacking in the area of protection of journalistic sources, taking into consideration the lack of concrete primary legislation that enshrines the right

¹ 'NUJ Code of Conduct' (National Union of Journalists, 5 February 2013) <<https://www.nuj.org.uk/documents/nuj-code-of-conduct/>> accessed March 2 2016.

² Geoffrey Robertson and Andrew Nicol, Media Law (5th edn, Penguin 2008) 316.

³ (1996) 22 E.H.R.R. 123, para. 39.

⁴ Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights, as amended) (ECHR) art 10.

⁵ (n 3).

on a constitutional level and the very few instances of explicit elaboration of the scope of the right on a national level (which includes any term definitions). In the *Camelot*⁶ case, the UK focused more on the particular source (and its nature), unlike in Goodwin. It was made clear by the judgment in Camelot that a domestic courts' order to disclose depends on whether the source is 'worth protecting... [which could] undermine the main goal of protecting sources'⁷.

A lack of a firm grasp of all the elements involved in the protection of journalistic sources puts the national implementation of this right at risk. Judgments that qualify this right, like *Re an Inquiry under the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985*⁸, may restrict and complicate the national approach to the protection of journalistic sources, as without a definite and elaborate foundation upon which to base these more nuanced legislations, national courts may not have much to rely on when attempting to pinpoint the precise limits of domestic law in the area of source protection.

The main statutory provision, found in s.10 of the Contempt of Court Act (COCA) 1981⁹ does not provide an absolute protection to journalists to not disclose their sources. Instead, the provision is to be regarded as a presumption that can potentially be rebutted under the four grounds that are going to be subsequently analysed in Question 6. However, it is worth noting that courts have adopted a more favourable approach to the protection of journalistic sources as 'one of the basic conditions for press freedom following the seminal judgment of the ECtHR in *Goodwin v. United Kingdom*¹⁰, given the United Kingdom's obligation to do so under s.2 of the Human Rights Act (HRA) 1998.

1.2 Journalists and Their Sources: A Sub Rosa Relationship?

The common law did not give journalists an absolute right to preserve the confidentiality of their sources but it did recognise in the case of *R. v. Broadcasting Complaints Commission ex p. Granada TV*¹¹ that a judge had a discretion as to whether to force them to name their sources even where their identity was relevant to an issue in dispute. The common law approach has now been strengthened by section 10 of COCA 1981:

⁶ Camelot v Centaur Communications Limited [1997] EWCA Civ 2554.

⁷ Article 19, 'Freedom of Expression Litigation Project: Briefing Paper on the Protection of Journalistic Sources' (1998) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/right-to-protect-sources.pdf>> accessed on February 6 2016.

⁸ '(1) Journalists should ordinarily be entitled to refuse to disclose the source of any information contained in any publication (2) if they are to be deprived of that privilege the party seeking disclosure will have to satisfy the court that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime.'

⁹ (n 7).

¹⁰ (n 3).

¹¹ [1995] E.M.L.R. 16.

No court may require a person to disclose, nor is any person guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a publication for which he is responsible unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that it is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime.¹²

Section 10 establishes a presumption in favour of journalists who wish to protect their sources, but that presumption will be rebutted if the court concludes that revelation is necessary on one or more of the following four stated grounds.

1.3 European Court of Human Rights: *Goodwin v. United Kingdom*¹³

Unsurprisingly, the ECtHR held that the approach of the English courts had led to a breach of the ECHR¹⁴. Indeed, the ECtHR was unimpressed by Lord Bridge's balancing act and pointed out that Article 10's jurisprudence would generally 'tip the balance of competing interests in favour of the interest of democratic society in securing a free press'.¹⁵ The ECtHR said that the order requiring the applicant to reveal his source and the fine imposed upon him for having refused to do so could not be regarded as having been 'necessary in a democratic society'¹⁶ for the protection of the rights of the party seeking disclosure under UK law, even considering the margin of appreciation available to the national authorities.

Under section 2 of the HRA 1998¹⁷, English courts must treat Goodwin as precedent. Notably, the Court of Appeal said, in the first case after the HRA 1998 came into force, that 'the decisions of the [ECtHR] demonstrate that the freedom of the press has in the past carried greater weight in Strasbourg than it has in the courts of this country'.¹⁸ The Ashworth case¹⁹ itself makes a valuable recognition, as a result of *Goodwin*²⁰, that the effect of court orders requiring source disclosure is not affected by the importance of the information or the mercenary motives of the source.²¹

2. Is There, in Domestic Law, a Provision that Prohibits a Journalist From Disclosing his/her Sources? How Exactly is this Prohibition Construed in National law? What is the Sanction?

¹² Contempt of Court Act 1981, s.10.

¹³ (n 3).

¹⁴ (n 4).

¹⁵ (n 3) para 45.

¹⁶ (n 4) art. 10(2).

¹⁷ Human Rights Act 1998, s.2 requires domestic courts to 'take into account' relevant decisions of the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg.

¹⁸ Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 515 CA at [101].

¹⁹ ibid.

²⁰ (n 3).

²¹ ibid.

It has already been demonstrated that journalists and their sources are awarded a qualified protection under English law: whereas a journalist, subject to exceptions provided for, cannot be forced to disclose his source, he can freely decide to do so.²² There, nonetheless, is a fairly strong presumption that each journalist would protect the identity of sources.²³

Upon further examination of available legal instruments, it can be observed that the legislator chose to prohibit disclosure of certain protected information: that is information received under special statutory power or for promise of confidentiality.²⁴ It can also be noted that a special status which, for instance, prevents its seizure and requires special care and consideration to be taken when deciding whether or not to disclose it, is accorded to journalistic material which, arguably, covers the identity of one's source as well.²⁵ Nevertheless, any 'personal data which are processed only for special purpose are exempt [not protected under this act] (...) if the processing is undertaken with a view to the publication by any person of any journalistic, literary or artistic material.'²⁶ Therefore 'provided that certain criteria are met (...) there can be no challenge on data protection grounds to the processing of personal data for the special purposes.'²⁷

When a party wishes certain information to remain confidential, they can bring an action for interim injunction which then effectively prevents its publication.²⁸ There is, however, especially in relation to criminal proceedings, a strong general rule on unrestricted publicity.²⁹ Therefore, the proportionality test would be applied in each case.³⁰ Nevertheless, where the interim measure is granted and subsequently breached, the offender can be subjected to fine or even committal.³¹

It is evident that no Act of Parliament confers a direct duty to safeguard anonymity of a journalist's source. Consequently, any such disclosure by the journalist is not subject to any penalty. If, however, the details were published in breach of a court's order, then the journalist may face financial penalty and criminal conviction.

Similar outcome can be reached when referring to the case-law which, although rich in authorities on journalists' right to keep their sources anonymous,³² appears silent on whether there also exists a direct duty not to disclose.

²² Contempt of Court Act 1981 c49, s10.

²³ ibid.

²⁴ Energy Act 2013 c32, sch9; Constitutional Reform Act 2005 c4, s139; Bank of England Act 1998 c11, sch7.

²⁵ Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 c60, s13; Police Act 1997 c50, s100.

²⁶ Data Protection Act 1998 c29, s32(1).

²⁷ HL Deb 2 February 1998, vol 585, cols 438 and 441.

²⁸ K v News Group Newspapers Ltd [2011] 1 WLR 1827; PJS v News Group Newspapers Ltd [2016] EWCA Civ 393.

²⁹ S (A Child) (Identification: Restriction on Publication) Re [2005] 1 AC 593.

³⁰ Campbell v Mirror Group Newspapers Ltd [2004] 2 AC 457.

³¹ (n 22) s14.

³² See preceding question.

3. Who is a ‘Journalist’ According to the National Legislation? Is it, in your View, a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources? What is the Scope of Protection of Other Media Actors? Is the Protection of Journalists’ Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

3.1. Who is a “Journalist” According to the National Legislation?

On a national level, the press/print media is self-regulated, meaning that there are no specific statutory rules governing it, thus no specific statutory definition of the term ‘journalist’. The United Kingdom, though, recognizing the importance of protecting journalistic sources in section 10 of COCA 1981, does not mention ‘journalists’ specifically, nor does it define what exactly is meant by ‘person’. The Data Protection Act (DPA) 1998³³ does not define the term ‘journalist’ and is intended to be interpreted broadly, covering all printed/broadcasted media (news, current affairs, art, literature) as well as the collection of information.

It is possible that the omission of any explicit reference to journalists and the lack of a clear definition could be so as to avoid limiting the scope of the right. However, this is widely criticized, as ‘in most countries where a law protecting journalistic sources was adopted, the number of cases incriminating journalists on this matter has decreased or can be more easily fought back at a legal level. In countries where no such law was adopted, journalistic sources are more often threatened³⁴. This was recognised by the Council of Europe in 2011, noting that ‘violations (of journalistic privilege) are more frequent in member states without clear legislation³⁵’.

Nevertheless, the UK’s fairly weak position on the protection of journalists and their sources appears to be strengthened not only by its reliance on European instruments, like Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, but by case-law, such as the landmark cases of *Goodwin*³⁶ and *Financial Times*³⁷. Prior to Goodwin, the COCA 1981 provision³⁸ was interpreted broadly and the domestic courts ordered disclosure frequently³⁹. Judge Walsh, in his dissenting opinion, briefly touched upon the distinction between an ordinary citizen and a journalist being the idea of ³³ Data Protection Act 1998, s.32.

³⁴Anthony Bellanger, deputy general secretary of the IFJ, speaking at the ‘Journalism in the age of mass surveillance’ conference in 2014.

³⁵ Recommendation 1950 (2011) of the Parliamentary Assembly on the protection of journalists sources.

³⁶ Goodwin v United Kingdom (1996) 22 EHRR 123.

³⁷ Interbrew SA v financial Times Ltd & Others [2002] EWCA Civ 274.

³⁸ (n 12).

³⁹ Geoffrey Robertson and Andrew Nicol (n 2).

‘profession’⁴⁰, from which one may infer the element of remuneration being important in the UK interpretation of the term.

3.2. Is it, in your View, a Restricted Definition for the Purpose of the Protection of Journalistic Sources?

The Leveson Report⁴¹ published pursuant to a phone hacking scandal in 2011, proposed the creation of an “independent” press regulator that would depend on state recognition. This sparked serious concerns regarding the protection of journalistic sources in the UK, as the inquiry’s underpinning concept poses a substantial threat to the freedom of press. The lack of clear legislation and protection exacerbates this issue. The report ‘appears to suggest that there has to be an express obligation of confidence between a journalist and a source in order for the source to qualify for legal protection’⁴², which is arguably an unnecessary restriction that threatens ‘the vital public-watchdog role of the press’⁴³ and its ability ‘to provide accurate and reliable information may be adversely affected’⁴⁴.

3.3. What is the Scope of Protection for Other Media Actors?

The Council of Europe stated that ‘other media actor’ can be anyone that fulfills the ‘public watchdog’ role and that ‘the scope of media actors has enlarged as a result of new forms of media in the digital age’⁴⁵. In most cases, the role of the information conveyor/messenger or ‘middleman’ is played by who we understand to be a traditional journalist (serving a mass media outlet for remuneration). However there is nothing to say that the ‘middleman’ cannot be someone else whose profession involves collecting and disseminating information, such as an NGO activist or academic commentator. Appendix Principle 2⁴⁶ extends this protection to individuals who form ‘professional relations with journalists but are not per se classified as journalists.

This is what is understood by the term ‘other media actors’ on an international level. The Council of Europe purposely formulated a very wide definition of ‘journalist’, covering anyone who serves as a conduit of information to the public, regardless of whether they would normally ⁴⁰ Goodwin v United Kingdom (1996) 22 EHRR 123 at para 1, 23.

⁴¹ Leveson Inquiry: Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press Vol 4 (2012), Appendix 4.

⁴² Gill Philips, ‘On Protection of Journalistic Sources’ (Journalism in Europe discussion series, October 10 2014) <<http://journalism.cmpf.eu.eu/discussions/on-protection-of-journalistic-sources/>> accessed June 2 2016.

⁴³ (1996) 22 EHRR 123.

⁴⁴ (1996) 22 EHRR 123.

⁴⁵ Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Declaration of the Committee of Ministers on the protection of journalism and safety of journalists and other media actors.

⁴⁶ Recommendation No R(2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information: ‘Other persons who, by their professional relations with journalists, acquire knowledge of information identifying a source through the collection, editorial processing or dissemination of this information, should equally be protected under the principles established herein.’

be perceived as journalists. The Declaration⁴⁷ 'urges member states to fulfill their positive obligations to protect journalists and other media actors from any form of attack and to end impunity'⁴⁸.

The UK has been criticized by academics such as William Horsley, saying that despite any recent reform in the law, 'the job is still not fully done...further reforms are awaited'⁴⁹. David Anderson QC maintains that the lack of clear domestic legislation to protect journalists and other media actors is 'undemocratic and intolerable'⁵⁰.

3.4. Is the Protection of Journalists' Sources Extended to Anyone Else?

Although it is normally journalists (and other media actors) who have a claim to the protection of sources, it is really a right that enables and protects everyone who receives information and ideas. This means that, technically, persons who would not normally identify themselves or be identified by the general public as journalists can validly invoke this protection.

So, not only is this right available to journalists and other media actors, it is also available to any potential collaborators. The purpose of this rule is, of course, to prevent the protection of sources from being simply side-stepped⁵¹ due to formality.

In the UK, it can be said that an ordinary citizen may invoke the DPA, if they are publishing information for the public consumption online. The High Court made it clear in 2011⁵² that a private individual can indeed engage in 'internet journalism', though this is limited by the intention to create content for the public interest as opposed to a mere intention of recreational online publications.

In practice, however, one may say that the line is generally drawn, nationally and internationally, at the concept of 'profession'. This particular nature of protection seems to be granted to those whose line of work coincides with the area of news publication and media.

⁴⁷ Council of Europe, Declaration of the Committee of Ministers on the protection of journalism and safety of journalists and other media actors.

⁴⁸ ibid para 11.

⁴⁹ William Horsley, 'Protecting Journalists from attack under International Law' (Ossigeno and The European Center For Press and Media Freedom (ECPMF) conference, 2 July 2015) <<http://notiziario.ossigeno.info/2015/07/protecting-journalists-from-attacks-under-international-law-by-william-horsley-60062/>> accessed March 16 2016.

⁵⁰ David Anderson QC, 'A Question of Trust – Report of the Investigatory Powers Review' (June 2015) <<https://terrorismlegislationreviewer.independent.gov.uk/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/IPR-Report-Web-Accessible1.pdf>> accessed March 16 2016.

⁵¹ Article 19 (n 7).

⁵² The Law Society and others v Kordowski [2011] EWHC 3182 (QB) 99.

4. What are the Legal Safeguards for the Protection of Journalistic Sources? How are the Laws Implemented? How are the Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-regulatory Mechanisms?

4.1 Legal Safeguards in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and Implementation of the Law

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE) 1984 was the first piece of legislation to provide for legal safeguards and the principle of journalistic privilege is enshrined within it. Journalistic material may be deemed to fall within either excluded material (confidential) or special procedure material (non-confidential).⁵³ Such material can only be seized by the police after a successful application for a warrant under Section 9 of PACE.⁵⁴ PACE set up a two-tiered system; under the first tier there is an inter-party hearing before a judge orders disclosure, and under the second tier a judge may authorise a search of premises.⁵⁵ The right for an order of disclosure to be subject to review by an independent judicial body is composed of numerous elements which heighten the robustness of the legal safeguards: police must have 'reasonable grounds for believing' information is substantial, valuable and relevant in order to demonstrate a serious arrestable offence has been committed, methods other than disclosure have been attempted, disclosure is in the public interest, the request is made by a senior officer, and the judge must conclude that a production order has not been complied with, a request for one would not be practical or would 'seriously prejudice' an investigation.⁵⁶

4.2 Legal Safeguards in the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and Implementation of the Law

Police access to journalistic source information is further governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act RIPA (2000), a controversial piece of legislation, which is concerned with the interception of the collection and monitoring of communications data and the interception of the content of the communications.⁵⁷ RIPA established the Investigatory Powers Tribunal (IPT) to hear complaints about surveillance by public bodies.⁵⁸ The Home Secretary must issue codes of practice detailing how the legislation is to be implemented; these emphasise ⁵³ Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, s 8(1)(d).

⁵⁴ ibid s 9.

⁵⁵ Privacy International, 'Silencing Sources: An International Survey of Protections and Threats to Journalists' Sources' (2007) <<https://wikileaks.org/w/images/c/c0/Silencingsources.pdf>> accessed January 4 2015, 33.

⁵⁶ Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, sch 1 s 2(a)(b)(c); Privacy International (n 5) 34.

⁵⁷ Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000, part 1 ch 2; Philip Ward, 'Access to journalists' sources' (Briefing Paper No 07440, 2015) 4.

⁵⁸ Information Commissioner's Office, 'Surveillance Road Map: A shared approach to the regulation of surveillance in the United Kingdom' (2015) Version 3.5

<<https://ico.org.uk/media/fororganisations/documents/1042035/surveillance-road-map.pdf>> accessed March 13 2016.

the need to exercise investigatory powers in ways that are both necessary and proportionate.⁵⁹ In December 2014, a consultation on an updated code of practice, as required under RIPA, included the views of the National Union of Journalists (NUJ) who considered the code contained 'no safeguards on accessing journalists' communications', they called for a rigorous statutory framework, rather than 'mere codes of practice', and for reform to prevent police accessing journalists' phone records without authorisation from a judge.⁶⁰

4.3 Reform to RIPA, Revised Codes of Practice and Inquiries Impacting Legal Safeguards

As a consequence of parliamentary proceedings regarding the passage of the Serious Crime Bill in 2015, Section 83 of the Serious Crime Act 2015 inserted a subsection (2A) into Section 71 RIPA, requiring the Secretary of State to consult the Interception of Communications Commissioner and consider their reports.⁶¹ In February 2015, a Commissioner inquiry found current Home Office guidelines did not provide 'adequate safeguards' to protect journalistic sources and recommended police should be required to seek a judge's permission to disclose a journalist's confidential source.⁶² On the 25th of March 2015 a revised code came into force, which emphasised the nature of the freedom of expression rights to be interfered with when considering whether to acquire communications data to identify a journalist's source.⁶³ The revised code provides guidance on necessity, proportionality and the need to consider 'unintended outcomes'.⁶⁴ Until new legislation provides for judicial authorisation, law enforcement agencies must use PACE procedures to apply for a Production Order.⁶⁵ Only with an immediate threat to life can agencies use the existing internal authorisation procedure under RIPA.⁶⁶

An independent review of the operation and regulation of investigatory powers was conducted by David Anderson QC, as required by the Data Retention and Investigatory Powers Act

⁵⁹ Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 71; Philip Ward and Alexander Horne, 'Interception of Communications' (Home Affairs SN/HA/6332, 2015).

⁶⁰ Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 71; Philip Ward (n 57) 12.

⁶¹ Explanatory Notes to the Serious Crime Act 2015 <<http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/2015/9/notes>> accessed March 12 2016,334.

⁶² JUSTICE, 'Freedom from Suspicion: Building a Surveillance Framework for a Digital Age' (2011) <<http://2bqk8cdew6192tsu41lay8t.wpengine.netdna-cdn.com/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/JUSTICE-Building-a-Surveillance-Framework-for-a-Digital-Age.pdf>> accessed December 20 2015, 20; Interception of Communications Commissioners Office, 'Inquiry into the use of Chapter 2 of Part 1 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act (RIPA) to identify journalistic sources' (2015), ss 8.7-8.10.

⁶³ Home Office, 'Acquisition and Disclosure of Communications Data Code of Practice' (2015) <https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/426248/Acquisition_and_Disclosure_of_Communications_Data_Code_of_Practice_March_2015.pdf> accessed January 4 2016, s 3.81.

⁶⁴ ibid s 2.44.

⁶⁵ ibid s 3.78.

⁶⁶ ibid s 3.83.

(DRIPA) 2014.⁶⁷ The report, dated 11 June 2015, called for RIPA to be replaced with a new comprehensive law to provide 'clear limits and safeguards'⁶⁸. In July 2015, the Interception of Communications Commissioner reported that he was concerned by 'serious contraventions' of the new code of practice in cases of seizure of call logs of journalists' and their sources without prior judicial approval.⁶⁹

4.4 Draft Provisions

On the 4th of November 2015, the Draft Investigatory Powers Bill (DIPB) was published by the Home Office, which seeks to update and consolidate existing legislation governing the use of investigatory powers.⁷⁰ Clause 61 provides that a public authority must obtain the approval of a Judicial Commissioner before obtaining communications data which would identify a journalist's source, unless there is an imminent threat to life.⁷¹ There is no requirement to notify the source or their legal representative of the application. The Bill includes a new oversight body, the Investigatory Powers Commission (IPC), headed by the Investigatory Powers Commissioner and supported by Judicial Commissioners.⁷² The Joint Committee on the Draft Investigatory Powers Bill has advocated for a reconsideration of the level of protection afforded to journalistic material and sources.⁷³ The NUJ, appearing before the Committee, said the principle of prior notification was 'essential' to ensure that journalists are treated 'not as a first resort but as a last resort' and the provision for Judicial Commissioners did not go 'far enough'.⁷⁴

A full analysis of any changes to the provisions regarding legal safeguards of the protection of journalistic sources can only be made if the bill is passed into law. It should be noted that there has been calls for a British Bill of Rights to replace the HRA 1998, which supposedly would offer 'explicit protection for the role of journalists' and ban police accessing journalists' phone records to identify sources without prior judicial approval.⁷⁵

⁶⁷ David Anderson QC, 'A Question of Trust: Report of the Investigatory Powers Review' (2015)

<<https://terrorismlegislationreviewer.independent.gov.uk/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/IPR-Report-Web-Accessible1.pdf>> accessed February 2 2016, s 1.1; Data Retention and Investigatory Powers Act 2014 s 7.

⁶⁸ ibid 4.

⁶⁹ Philip Ward (n 57) 13.

⁷⁰ Draft Investigatory Powers Bill 2015

<https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/473770/Draft_Investigatory_Powers_Bill.pdf> accessed January 4 2016.

⁷¹ ibid cl 61.

⁷² ibid cls 167-187.

⁷³ Joint Committee on the Draft Investigatory Powers Bill, 'Draft Investigatory Powers Bill Report' (HL Paper 93 HC 651 2016) <<http://www.statewatch.org/news/2016/feb/uk-dip-bill-jt-committee-report.pdf>> accessed January 4 2016, 110.

⁷⁴ Philip Ward (n 57) 17.

⁷⁵ The Conservative Party Manifesto 2015

<<https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/manifesto2015/ConservativeManifesto2015.pdf>> accessed March 13 2016, 42.

4.5 Legal Safeguards Combined with Self-regulatory Mechanisms

The legal safeguards are combined with self-regulatory mechanisms, primarily in the form of professional codes of conduct.⁷⁶ The obligation on journalists to protect their sources, despite being a moral obligation, is 'deeply ingrained' in British journalism and journalists owe 'loyalty' to their source.⁷⁷ Principle 7 of the NUJ Code of Conduct details that journalists' should protect 'the identity of sources who supply information in confidence'.⁷⁸ Principle 14 of the Editor's Code of Practice provides for a 'moral obligation' on journalists to protect their sources (a similar provision was previously found in the Press Complaints Commission Code).⁷⁹ The Independent Press Standards Organisation (IPSO), replacing the Press Complaints Commission (PCC) in the wake of the Leveson Inquiry, administers self-regulation for the press and complaints about editorial content and journalist conduct.⁸⁰ The IPSO's mandate includes intervention after a complaint, the ability to initiate investigations where there has been systemic failures in adhering to the codes of practice and an arbitration scheme.⁸¹ It should be noted that the complaints procedure by IPSO cannot be used where the issue can be 'more appropriately' dealt with through the court system or where the issue is already 'the subject of legal ⁷⁶ 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy of the Council of Europe, 'Resolution on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights' (1994) <https://eos.cartercenter.org/uploads/document_file/path/260/CoE_Committee_of_Ministers_Declaration_on_Journalistic_Freedoms_and_Human_Rights_EN.pdf> accessed February 6 2016, 36, 37; ARTICLE 19 and INTERRIGHTS, 'Freedom of Expression Litigation Project: Briefing Paper on the Protection of Journalistic Sources' (1998) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/right-to-protect-sources.pdf>> accessed February 6 2016, 4.

⁷⁷ Press Complaints Commission, Clause Fourteen – Confidential Sources <http://www.pcc.org.uk/assets/449/Clause_14.pdf> accessed March 13 2016, 66; Chris Frost, Journalism Ethics and Regulation (4th edn, Routledge 2016) 151.

⁷⁸ National Union of Journalists, 'Code of Conduct' (2013) <<https://www.nuj.org.uk/documents/nuj-code-of-conduct/>> accessed January 6 2016; Chris Frost (n 77) 16.

⁷⁹ Press Complaints Commission, 'Editor's Code of Practice' (2012) <http://www.pcc.org.uk/assets/696/Code_of_Practice_2012_A4.pdf> accessed February 2 2016; Independent Press Standards Organisation, 'Editor's Code of Practice' (2016) <<https://www.ipso.co.uk/IPSO/cop.html>> accessed April 30 2016; Ian Beales 'The Handbook to the Editor's Codebook' <<http://www.editorcode.org.uk/downloads/codebook/codebook-2014.pdf>> accessed February 2 2016, 19, 77, 78.

⁸⁰ Human Rights Review, 'Article 10: Freedom of Expression' (2010) <http://www.equalityhumanrights.com/sites/default/files/documents/humanrights/hrr_article_10.pdf> accessed January 6 2016, 331; Ian Beales (n 79).

⁸¹ Media Standards Trust, 'The Independent Press Standards Organisation (IPSO): An Assessment' (2013) <<http://mediastandardstrust.org/wp-content/uploads/downloads/2013/11/MST-IPSO-Analysis-15-11-13.pdf>> accessed April 30 2016, 9, 14.

proceedings'.⁸² Thus, criminal proceedings are clearly given priority. However, under Regulation 9 of the IPSO, complaints may be allowed, at its discretion, 'notwithstanding that legal proceedings (whether civil or criminal) may later be brought concerning the subject matter of the complaint' (the subject matter potentially being the disclosure of journalistic sources).⁸³

5. In the Respective National Legislation, are the Limits of Non-disclosure of the Information in Line with the Principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7? What are the Procedures Applied? Is the Disclosure Limited to Exceptional Circumstances, Taking into Consideration Vital Public or Individual Interests at Stake? Do the Authorities First Search for and apply Alternative Measures, which Adequately Protect their Respective Rights and Interests and at the Same Time are Less Intrusive with Regard to the Right of Journalists not to Disclose Information

Fairness demands flexibility in the law, a fundamental principle which subjects every rule to its exceptions. Unsurprisingly, protection of journalistic sources does not remain unqualified. Recommendation No R (2000) 7⁸⁴ lays down the European standards for the circumstances in which an order for disclosure could be successfully pursued. While it affords a significant margin of appreciation to Member States, it also emphasizes that the margin should go hand in hand with the supervision of the ECtHR and subjects qualifications to Article 10(2) ECHR. Limits of non-disclosure should, thus, be prescribed by law and be necessary in the democratic society. In the United Kingdom, limits on the protection of journalists against disclosing their confidential sources are found in Section 10 COCA 1981.

5.1 UK limits and the Principles of Recommendation No R (2000)7

5.1.1 Limits should be prescribed by law

Qualifications to the protection of journalistic sources in the UK are clearly prescribed by law as they are expressly embedded in a statutory provision. In fact, in Goodwin v United Kingdom,⁸⁵ the ⁸² Independent Press Standards Organisation, 'What kinds of complaints can IPSO consider?' <<https://www.ipso.co.uk/IPSO/makeacomplaint/whatkindsofcomplaintsdoesipso.html>> accessed April 30 2016.

⁸³ Media Standards Trust, 'The Independent Press Standards Organisation (IPSO): An Assessment' (2013) <<http://mediastandardstrust.org/wp-content/uploads/downloads/2013/11/MST-IPSO-Analysis-15-11-13.pdf>> accessed April 30 2016, 37; Independent Press Standards Organisation, 'Regulations' (2013) <https://www.ipso.co.uk/assets/1/REGULATIONS__PDF_.PDF> accessed April 30 2016, 3.

⁸⁴ Recommendation No. R [2000]7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information.

⁸⁵ Goodwin v United Kingdom [1996] 22 EHRR 123.

Strasbourg court highlighted that s.10 COCA satisfies the European standard of foreseeability, being sufficiently clear, specific and widely accessible.

5.1.2 Necessity

Following Principle 3 of the Recommendation⁸⁶, necessity would be established if an overriding legitimate public interest is proved and is regarded as outweighing the public interest in non-disclosure. Prima facie, s.10 COCA appears to be compatible with the principles of the Recommendation.⁸⁷ Firstly, necessity is expressly incorporated in the provision as a condition for the circumstances in which disclosure would be ordered. Secondly, the limits are founded on an exhaustive list of vital public interests; 'interests of justice,' 'national security,' 'prevention of disorder,' and 'prevention of crime.' Most importantly, the wording of s.10 imposes a presumption that courts are not to order disclosure 'unless' necessity is established. The presumption is in line with the Recommendation which allows limitations only in exceptional cases; that is in circumstances of sufficiently 'vital and serious nature' and 'responding to a pressing social need.'⁸⁸

However, substantial compatibility of s.10 COCA with the Recommendation would depend primarily on how the courts have interpreted and applied it. As it will be discussed below, the UK courts have been criticized for adopting a wide interpretation of the aforementioned public interest exceptions. 'Crime', for example, has not been restricted to 'serious' crimes but was even extended to cover cases of financial dishonesty.⁸⁹ On the other hand, it could be argued that following the introduction of the HRA 1998, there has been a movement towards a more robust protection of free press, restricting the scope of application of the limitations in s.10 COCA.⁹⁰

This movement was evident in Interbrew SA v Financial Times,⁹¹ a case concerning the leakage of market sensitive information for a takeover bid. The case is significant because the judges both in first instance and in the Court of Appeal followed s.3 (1) HRA 1998, accepting their obligation to interpret national law in accordance with the Convention, explicitly subjecting the application of s.10 COCA to Article 10 ECHR. The reasoning in the Court of Appeal provided a promising ground for the robust protection of journalistic sources. Lord Justice Sedley acknowledged that subjecting s.10 COCA to Article 10(2) ECHR imports a proportionality test in the inquiry as to whether a restriction is necessary in a democratic society and sets a high

⁸⁶ Recommendation No. R [2000]7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information.

⁸⁷ ibid.

⁸⁸ ibid.

⁸⁹ Re An Inquiry under the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 [1988] A.C. 660.

⁹⁰ Steve Foster, 'The disclosure of journalistic sources, press freedom and the confidentiality of medical records' [2007] Coventry Law Journal 50.

⁹¹ Interbrew SA v Financial Times [2002] EWCA Civ 274; [2002] EMLR 446; [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep 229.

necessity threshold to be achieved only in circumstances 'where disclosure meets a pressing social need and is the only practical way of doing so'⁹². The reasoning reflects Principle 3 of the Recommendation⁹³. This was appreciated by the Strasbourg court (Financial Times v United Kingdom)⁹⁴ where it was confirmed that an order for disclosure is prima facie an infringement of Article 10. The ECtHR subsequently found an infringement of Article 10 under the circumstances, criticizing the way the proportionality exercise was carried out by the Court of Appeal which placed emphasis on the maleficent motif of the particular source. The shortcomings in the Court of Appeal's decision were arguably the result of a misunderstanding on the weight that should be afforded to the importance of protecting journalistic sources in a free press society,⁹⁵ rather than incompatibility of the UK legislative framework with the Convention standards.

5.2 The Procedure: Norwich Pharmacal Order

The traditional method of forcing disclosure of a source in UK courts is a Norwich Pharmacal order.⁹⁶ A Norwich Pharmacal order is made on the basis of discovering the identity of a wrongdoer and is available to anyone against whom the plaintiff has a cause of action in relation to the same wrong. The respondent of such an action is in an intermediate position, as he is not likely to be party in any subsequent claim or incur personal liability, but he was either voluntarily or involuntarily mixed up in the wrongdoing of others. Therefore, he carries the duty to assist the person who has been wronged by giving him full information and disclosing the identity of wrongdoers.

The application of a Norwich Pharmacal order has 'taken wings'⁹⁷ since its revival in 1974. Although the case itself related to an action for the infringement of a patent, a Norwich Pharmacal order is no longer limited to a tortious act. Subsequent cases encompassed equitable wrongs, such as the breach of confidence (Ashworth v MGN),⁹⁸ as well as criminal offences, so long as the person seeking the order was the victim of the crime (Interbrew v Financial Times).⁹⁹ In addition, while earlier authorities made the order conditional upon the proof of a seriously arguable case against the wrongdoer (RCA Corp v Reddingtons Rare Records),¹⁰⁰ it was then established that there is no need to satisfy such a high threshold (P v T).¹⁰¹ Journalists often find ⁹² ibid.

⁹³ Recommendation No. R [2000]7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information.

⁹⁴ Financial Times Ltd v United Kingdom (821/03) [2010] E.M.L.R. 21.

⁹⁵ Steve Foster (n 90).

⁹⁶ Norwich Pharmacal Co. v Customs and Excise Commissioners [1973] UKHL 6.

⁹⁷ Charles Hollander, 'Norwich Pharmacal takes wings' [2009] Civil Justice Quarterly 458.

⁹⁸ Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2002] UKHL 29; [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2033; [2002] 4 All E.R. 193.

⁹⁹ Interbrew v Financial Times Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 274; [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 229.

¹⁰⁰ RCA Corp v Reddingtons Rare Records [1974] 1 W.L.R. 1445.

¹⁰¹ P v T Ltd [1997] 1 W.L.R. 1309.

themselves in this intermediary position. The inevitable result of extending the scope of application of Norwich Pharmacal orders is that more and more journalists can now be required to disclose their sources. The interpretation of s.10 COCA, therefore, becomes crucial.

5.3 Order for Disclosure: Vital Public and Individual Interests

The wording of s.10 provides for an exhaustive list of potentially overriding interests which all relate to vital public interests. The English courts, however, have chosen a broad interpretation for the meaning of 'interests of justice,' contrary to the earlier confinement of the provision to the 'technical sense of interests in the administration of justice in the course of proceedings in a court' (Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers).¹⁰² In *X Ltd v Morgan Grampian (Publishers) Ltd*¹⁰³, it was established that 'interests of justice' include the exercise of legal rights and self-protection. Confirming Morgan Grampian,¹⁰⁴ the House of Lords in Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN,¹⁰⁵ deemed s.10 wide enough to be applied in cases where the injured party sought any form of legal redress, beyond litigation.

The wide scope of the limitations in s.10 means that disclosure can be sought for the protection of commercial interests, which are not in reality vital public interests. For example, commercial interests were at the heart of X v Morgan Grampian,¹⁰⁶ where disclosure was ordered against a trainee journalist who received information regarding the financial status of a computer software company. When a complaint was filed in Strasbourg (Goodwin v UK),¹⁰⁷ the ECtHR found the order to be disproportionate, highlighting that the commercial interests of the company were not simply balanced against another public interest but assessed against 'one of the basic conditions for press freedom.'¹⁰⁸ While Strasbourg guidance seemed to suggest that commercial interests should rarely reflect exceptional circumstances for ordering disclosure, the English courts continued to attach weight on commercial considerations in the post Goodwin era; in *Camelot Group plc v Centaur*¹⁰⁹ the overriding interest of a company to ensure the loyalty of its employees was the basis for ordering disclosure; and protecting a company's market share was the basis of Interbrew v Financial Times.¹¹⁰

More recently, the UK courts have used Pharmacal orders and s.10 to protect vital public interests.¹¹¹ In Ashworth Security Hospital v MGN Ltd,¹¹² an order for disclosure was available to identify the employee who leaked a patient's medical information. The basis of the order was the ¹⁰² Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers [1985] AC 339, [1984] 3 All ER 601, [1984] 3 WLR 986.

¹⁰³ X Ltd v Morgan Grampian (Publishers) Ltd [1991] 1 AC 1; [1990] 2 All ER 1; [1990] 2 WLR 1000.

¹⁰⁴ ibid.

¹⁰⁵ Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2002] UKHL 29; [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2033; [2002] 4 All E.R. 193.

¹⁰⁶ X Ltd v Morgan Grampian (Publishers) Ltd [1991] 1 AC 1; [1990] 2 All ER 1; [1990] 2 WLR 1000.

¹⁰⁷ Goodwin v United Kingdom (1996) 22 EHRR 123.

¹⁰⁸ ibid.

¹⁰⁹ Camelot Group plc v Centaur [1997] EWCA Civ 2554; [1999] QB 124.

¹¹⁰ Interbrew v Financial Times Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 274; [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 229.

¹¹¹ Steve Foster (n 90).

¹¹² Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2002] UKHL 29; [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2033; [2002] 4 All E.R. 193.

general public interest of maintaining confidential medical records. It is important to note that five years later the Court of Appeal refused to order disclosure of the source leaking medical information regarding the same patient (Mersey Care NHS Trust v Ackroyd).¹¹³ Article 10 was, indeed, found to be of higher order in the circumstances, especially as the patient had already made widely available information about his medical records. The success of the Court of Appeal in this judgment lies in taking an independent assessment of the context and the facts of the case in order to determine 'necessity' or 'truly exceptional circumstances' which could limit protection of journalistic sources.

5.4 The Less Intrusive Alternatives: Injunctions and Internal Inquiries

One of the criticisms made regarding the Financial Times case was that even the Strasbourg Court failed to highlight that the interests of Interbrew could have been protected by an injunction that would have prohibited the media from reporting further on the takeover bid.¹¹⁴ Although an injunction would still be an infringement to the right to freedom of speech, it would have been 'far less intrusive than a disclosure which carries with it the chilling broader effect on press freedom.'¹¹⁵

However, in line with the more recent robust free press approach, the Court of Appeal reversed the decision in *John v Express Newspapers*¹¹⁶, emphasizing that the first instance judge attached insufficient significance to the failure of the law firm to first conduct an internal inquiry in order to find out who made the draft opinion in question available. This reflects a new approach towards forcing private individuals and authorities in the UK to first search for the less intrusive alternatives before resorting to a disclosure application.

In conclusion, the UK legislative framework, interpreted and applied in accordance with the guidance provided by Strasbourg, meets the European standard afforded to the limits of the protection of journalistic sources following Recommendation No R (2000)7. Orders for disclosure and breaches of confidentiality thus remain the exception rather than the norm.

¹¹³ Mersey Care NHS Trust v Ackroyd [2007] EWCA Civ 101; [2008] EMLR 1; [2007] 94 BMLR 84; [2007] HRLR 19.

¹¹⁴ Ashley Savage and Paul David Mora 'Case Comment; The protection of journalistic sources, Norwich Pharmacia orders and Article 10 ECHR' [2007] Entertainment Law Review 137.

¹¹⁵ ibid.

¹¹⁶ John v Express Newspapers [2000] EWCA Civ 135, [2000] 1 WLR 1931.

6. In the Recommendation No R (2000) 7, the Following Principles Should be Respected when the Necessity of Disclosure is Stated: Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures, Outweighing Legitimate Interest (Protection of Human Life, Prevention of Major Crime, Defence of a Person Accused or Convicted of Having Committed a Major Crime). Under Which Criteria can the Interest in the Disclosure Outweigh the Interest in the Non-disclosure?

When the necessity of disclosure is stated, there should be subsequent measures that follows. In the United Kingdom, the principles of the Recommendation No R (2000) 7 are illustrated rather patchy and in a number of legislations. COCA 1981 presumes in favor of those journalists that are ordered to disclose a source and establishes conditions which will outweigh the legitimate interest in non-disclosure.

6. 1 The Contempt of the Court Act 1981

The COCA 1981¹¹⁷ acts as shield law to those who wish to obtain the information about the source and it includes the weighing of the legitimate interests. However, it does not provide for the principle of exercising other reasonable alternative measures.

Section 10 starts with the presumption that a court may not require a person to disclose a source unless it is satisfied that the disclosure is necessary for one or more legitimate interest listed. Therefore, COCA 1981 satisfies the principle 3.b.ii of the Recommendation as it respects that the disclosure is balanced on the basis of pursuing a legitimate interest that outweighs the right to confidentiality of journalists' sources.

Accordingly, the Recommendation's guidelines laid down some non-exhaustive examples of when the public interest in the non-disclosure could be outweighed where the disclosure is necessary for 'the protection of human life', the prevention of major crime', or 'the defense in the course of legal proceedings of a person who is accused or convicted of having committed a serious crime'.¹¹⁸ Clearly, the recommended interests are not entirely similar like in the s.10 of the COCA. We could, however, endorse the recommended interest under some of the categories, such as the protection of human life can be parallel to 'national security', where there is a probability of a terrorist attack, similarly the 'prevention of disorder or crime' in s.10 can be ¹¹⁷ The Contempt of the Court Act 1981. The Act was introduced in response to the ECtHR case Sunday Times v UK ECtHR 26 April 1979, Case No. 6538/74, where the court held that the common law norm of a 'contempt of the court' is vague and uncertain and cannot be regarded as being 'prescribed by the law' in order to demand a disclosure of a source. See para 46-47 of the judgment.

¹¹⁸ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information, para 38.

equivalent to the prevention of major crime in the recommended interest. However, this category in COCA 1981 seems to cover all crimes ranging from minor crimes to major and serious crimes. Also, the national security is mentioned in the Recommendation's guidelines as one of the possibility to justify disclosure under the heading of 'prevention of major crime'.¹¹⁹ Nevertheless, the listed categories under s.10 are far stretched to those established under Article 10 of the ECHR and the Recommendation. While COCA 1981 seems to go beyond the Recommendation of Council of Europe it may naturally lead to a less favorable judgment for the journalists.

6.1.1. Legitimate Interests

6.1.1.1. Interest of Justice

The UK courts tended to give a wider definition for the term 'interest of justice' and it was first introduced 'where the disclosure was vital "for the administration of justice" ',¹²⁰ such as to allow the complainant to make their case. However, instead of limiting the exception the drafter used a rather vague and undefined term which was remarked by Lord Hailsham as 'What are the interests of justice? I suggest they are as long as the judge's foot.' This exception has been widely criticised and used against the journalists due to its wide scope, attempts to limit its scope has been made in *Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers*¹²¹ to only include justice in the course of legal proceedings but it was later subsequently ignored in *Morgan Grampian case*¹²² where the House of Lords affirmed that the 'interest of justice' included the exercise of legal rights and protection from legal wrongs known as Norwich Pharmacal Order. Such broader approach was latter sustained in *Ashworth Hospital Authority*¹²³ where it included cases of lawful redress other than litigation.

This exception of mere 'interests of justice' is not prescribed or not even referenced in any way by the ECtHR or the ECHR and Goodwin has confirmed it. It is without a doubt that the judiciary adopted an approach unpropitious to the media which as stated by Stockdale was invented to limit the judiciary's discretion, however, through the cause of rather original interpretation and implementation the judiciary was left rather with more discretion than it was ever envisioned.¹²⁴ A number of academics argue that the implementation of the necessity test in the name of 'interests of justice' has been one of the most problematic issues,¹²⁵ and such exception was 'the greatest flaw in the legislation'.¹²⁶ Yet, at the beginning the term was a strong ¹¹⁹ ibid para 40.

¹²⁰ Angel Fahy, 'Confidential Sources and Contempt of Court: An Argument for Change' (DIT, July 2 2009) <<http://arrow.dit.ie/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1016&context=aaschssldis>> accessed February 10 2016, 21-22.

¹²¹ Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers [1985] A.C. 339.

¹²² X Ltd v Morgan Grampian [1991] 1 AC 1; Camelot Group Plc v Centaur Communications Ltd [1998] IRLR 80.

¹²³ Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2002] 1 WLR 2033.

¹²⁴ Michael Stockdale and Rebecca Mitchell, 'Company Confidentiality and the Freedom of Press: Striking Balance' (2003) Company Lawyer 170-172.

¹²⁵ Ruth Costigan, 'Protection of Journalists' Sources' [2007] Public Law 471.

¹²⁶ Angel Fahy, (n 120) 21.

prima facie protection as it is illustrated by *AG v Lundin*¹²⁷ where the court held that a disclosure of the source could not assist the prosecution's case and was not necessary in the interests of justice. However, as pointed out by Granada and Goodwin this section has been given a rather wider interpretation in later cases. It is evident that the UK courts rely on the 'interest of justice' without any clear guidelines of what is actually established and what can be referred as the 'interest of justice'.

6.1.1.2. National Security

In cases where the legitimate interest is one of the national security the necessity for disclosure of the source is almost obligatory as it far outweighs the right to confidentiality of the source.¹²⁸ The rationale behind it is that a public servant should not disclose information that is of a confidential nature or may be a threat to the government as these are to be protected under the Official Secrets Act 1911 and hence there is a limited protection for the source as the Act does not offer them any public interest defence.

The case of Former Foreign Office clerk Sarah Tisdal¹²⁹, Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers, is an example of how thin the ice is if a journalist is considering publishing a document revealing anything slightest to do with national security. Ms Tisdall has leaked a classified document revealing arrival of cruise nuclear missiles to the Guardian newspaper. The Ministry of Defence argued that the document showed parliamentary tactics as it told how the missiles would go in to Greenham Common and the arguments that the then defense minister would use in the house. According to Preston, it was more to do with politics than with national security or disorder or crime.¹³⁰ The Guardian has lost its case even though the judges admitted it was protected by s.10 and otherwise harmless, however, it came to the conclusion that an unreliable public servant who had leaked classified documents may leak something of larger importance in the future therefore the source must be exposed¹³¹. Ms Tisdall was sentenced to six months imprisonment, a punishment that demonstrates other whistleblowers to think twice before revealing any documents of 'secret nature'.¹³²

It is clear that the definition of national security in the UK is undermined by the lack of clear statutory guidelines for examining what national security covers; it is left undefined by the UK

¹²⁷ AG v Lundin (1982) 75 CR APP R 90, 101 (DC).

¹²⁸ 'Journalism – Protection of the Sources' (InBrief) <<http://www.inbrief.co.uk/media-law/journalists-sources.htm#>> accessed January 2 2015.

¹²⁹ Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers [1985] A.C. 339 para 166.

¹³⁰ Peter Preston, 'A Source of Great Regret' (The Guardian, 5 September 2005) <<http://www.theguardian.com/media/2005/sep/05/pressandpublishing.politicsandthemedia>> accessed January 2 2015.

¹³¹ Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers [1985] A.C. 339 para 166.

¹³² ARTICLE 19, 'SECRETS, SPIES AND WHISTLEBLOWERS, Freedom of Expression and National Security in the United Kingdom, (Article 19 and Liberty, November 2000) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/secrets-spies-and-whistleblowers.pdf>> accessed February 20 2016, ch 3.

legislation and the ECHR. It has been portrayed as 'a protean idea'¹³³ and 'an ambulatory concept',¹³⁴ the exception of national security is used as carte blanche to define the national security for convenience of the government.¹³⁵

6.1.1.3. Prevention of Disorder or Crime

This legitimate interest is evidently going beyond the Recommendation as it includes also minor crimes by definition. In this criteria, the same applies as to the national security interest, it is understood that a criminal offence or a public disorder will outweigh the interest of non-disclosure.

In the UK, there seems to be no case that provides for the meaning of 'disorder' under s.10 but a few judgments had discussed 'the prevention of a crime'. A leading authority is *Insider Dealing*¹³⁶ where a financial journalist refused to answer questions in the course of an inquiry as it could provide the identification of the source who leaked price-sensitive information. The House of Lords stated that the prevention of a crime could be used in a 'broadest general sense of deterrence and containment',¹³⁷ and eventually the inspectors satisfied the court that they should know the source of a leak in order to prevent this type of financial dishonesty. This case shows how 'the prevention of disorder or crime' in the UK is laid down far away from what was envisioned under the Recommendation and that the spectrum of crime applicable by the UK judges is so wide that there is diminutive protection for the source.

6.2. The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

6.2.1. Absence of Reasonable Alternative Measures

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 contains a provision similar to s.10 of COCA 1981 from preventing the police from having access to journalistic materials without authorization obtained by application to the court. It is the only legislation that provides for the principle of subsidiarity, that is that the reasonable alternatives do not exist or have been exhausted. However, the only legitimate interest that needs to be fulfilled is the public interest.

In conclusion, there is limited transposition for the principles enacted in the Recommendation and if there are somehow reflected in the UK legislation they are mutually exclusive. COCA ¹³³ Secretary of State for the Home Department v Shafiq Ur Rehman, May 23 2000, No.1999/1268/C, para 35.

¹³⁴ Nicholas Wilkinson, 'National Security, Secrecy and the Media – A British View' in S.Maret (ed), Government Secrecy, Research in Social Problems and Public Policy vol 19, (1st edn, Emerald Group Publishing Limited 2011) 137.

¹³⁵ ARTICLE 19 (n 132) ch 2.

¹³⁶ Re An Inquire under the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 [1988] A.C. 660.

¹³⁷ The Leveson Inquiry, 'An Inquiry into the Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press' (November 2012)

<<http://leveson.robertsharp.co.uk/appendices/appendix4/#footnoteref85>> accessed January 10 2016, vol 4 Appendix 4; Re An Inquire under the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 [1988] A.C. 660 para 704.

1981 provides for the principle of proportionality but it does not provide for the test of subsidiarity. While, an order for a disclosure made under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 is subject to the test of subsidiarity, it includes almost none of the legitimate interest stated in the Recommendation. It is clear, that the legitimate interests are limited in the UK legislation and the judges considering the disclosure should reflect upon the case law of the ECHR in order to respect the protection of journalistic sources.

7. In the Light of the Case Law of the European Court of Human Rights, How do National Courts Apply the Respective Laws with Regard to the Right to protect sources? In Particular, How do they Balance the Different Interests at Stake?

7.1 Statutory Protection Before the Human Rights Act

The UK legislature has afforded a privilege against disclosure to the press long before explicitly defining a right to freedom of expression. Section 10 of COCA 1981 provides that a court will not require a person to disclose their sources unless the 'disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime'.¹³⁸ In a glance, the statute confers protection, even though qualified, to journalists. Simultaneously, as Palmer suggests, there is an implicit recognition that protection of journalistic sources acts in favour of the overall public interest.¹³⁹ However, the application of section 10 in the subsequent case law reveals a rather controversial understanding of the four exceptions by the judiciary.

One of the first instances that the House of Lords had to address the question of disclosure under section 10 was in the case of *Secretary of State for Defence v Guardian Newspapers Ltd.*¹⁴⁰ The newspaper published a memorandum of the Ministry of Defence which was classified as secret, after anonymously receiving a photocopy of it. The State sought the recovery of the photocopy by relying on the national security exception. Their Lordships held that although the information was not of military value, the exception could be established. They accepted the arguments of the government that the informant could potentially reveal classified information in the future and therefore, there could be assumed that national security was at stake.

Another discussion regarding the exceptions of section 10 arose in the case of *X Ltd. v Morgan Grampian (Publishers) Ltd.*¹⁴¹ In this case, a company, arguing on the basis of the interests of justice exception, was able to obtain an injunction in relation to confidential information on their financial structure and plans. The journalist, Williams Goodwin, was also ordered to reveal the name of his source. After refusing to do so, a fine was imposed upon him and the newspaper. In ¹³⁸ Contempt of Court Act 1981, s 10.

¹³⁹ Stephanie Palmer, 'Protecting Journalists' Sources: Section 10, Contempt of Court Act 1981' [1992] Public Law 61, 65.

¹⁴⁰ [1985] AC 339.

¹⁴¹ [1991] 1 AC 1.

their judgments, the Law Lords emphasised that the manner by which the information was obtained was paramount and concluded that the identity of the 'disloyal' informant could not be protected, taking into account the gross breach of confidentiality committed.¹⁴² Therefore, it is evident that the court seems to be more sympathetic towards companies or the government and places considerable weight on the possibility of damage or financial loss to them.

7.2 The Enactment of the Human Rights Act and its Aftermath

Although the ruling of Goodwin was precise and clear, a complete and comprehensive appreciation of the obligations it produced did not come until the introduction of the HRA 1998 in the UK legal system. Since the Act duplicates the rights found in the ECHR, it was apparent that a right to freedom of expression, which includes imparting 'information and ideas without interference',¹⁴³ was given effect and could be applied equally in domestic law. Additionally, section 3 provides that UK law must be interpreted, so far as possible, in a way that is compatible with ECHR rights, while section 2 provides that English courts 'must take into account' Strasbourg's jurisprudence.¹⁴⁴ Consequently, in theory, additional responsibilities were placed upon the UK judiciary to protect the interests of journalists and formally recognise the importance of defending journalistic sources.

Nonetheless, in practise, the case of Interbrew SA v Financial Times Ltd and Others indicates that even after the HRA 1998 came into force, reluctance was shown by the courts to find in favour of journalists.¹⁴⁵ The case involved the disclosure of partly falsified confidential material about Interbrew SA. The court held that the journalist had to hand over his documents so that the company would ascertain the identity of the informant and the decision was justified as 'prescribed by law' under Article 10(2). An application for an appeal to the House of Lords on behalf of Financial Times was rejected and the newspaper decided to take the case to the ECtHR.

Before the case of Financial Times was heard by the Strasbourg court, domestic courts were requested to rule on another similar case regarding disclosure. However, on that instance, the issue related to stolen medical records that were associated with the notorious murderer Ian Brady and other patients. Accordingly, in Ashworth Hospital Authority v MNG Ltd., the House of Lords recognised that there was an overriding obligation and a legitimate aim to protect health data and subsequently, private life.¹⁴⁶ That obligation necessitated disclosure of the identity of the source. In their judgments, their Lordships concluded that article 8 and the protection of private life took priority over article 10.¹⁴⁷ Nevertheless, it was recognised that disclosure of the source of information would only be justified in exceptional scenarios.¹⁴⁸

¹⁴² ibid 54 (Lord Bridge).

¹⁴³ Article 10(1) ECHR.

¹⁴⁴ Human Rights Act 1998, s 2.

¹⁴⁵ [2002] EWCA Civ 274.

¹⁴⁶ [2002] 1 WLR 2033.

¹⁴⁷ ibid 62.

One of the most recent cases on the matter of disclosure that makes apparent a shift in the approach adopted by UK courts is Mersey Care NHS Trust v Ackroyd (No.2).¹⁴⁹ The issue at stake was an investigation, conducted by a journalist, which concerned the mismanagement of a publicly run hospital. Following the decision in Ashworth, the judges indicated that an overriding interest, which would allow the hospital to obtain information on the identity of the informants, would only exist in the confidentiality of medical records that might have revealed personal information. Thus, the two cases were distinguished, as the leaked records did not contain any details or information relating to the hospital staff. The Court of Appeal judges recognised that, on the facts of the case, it was not necessary and proportionate to order Mr Ackroyd to reveal his sources. No overriding interest or pressing social need existed to justify disclosure and thus, the journalist won the case. As Brabyn argues, the reasoning in this case is revolutionary as the judiciary explicitly accepted that the right of the journalist to freedom of expression and its protection took priority over other competing values such as the right of the hospital to know the identity of the informant for breach of confidence.¹⁵⁰

7.3 The Financial Times in the European Court of Human Rights¹⁵¹

Although the case of Interbrew SA v Financial Times Ltd was decided before Ackroyd, which presented a change in the attitude of the judiciary and might have provided a different outcome, the complainants were still able to take their case to the Strasbourg court. The Court held that there had been a substantial interference and violation of article 10 and disclosure could not be justified as there was no overriding public interest that could outweigh protection of the journalists.¹⁵² In addition, it was recognised that there is a potential of a 'chilling effect' as the flow of information might be hindered if protection to is not afforded.¹⁵³

7.4 Concluding Remarks

It could be argued that the influence of the ECHR, the persuasive nature of the judgments of the ECtHR and subsequently, the effect of the HRA 1998 have had a great impact on the United Kingdom in regards to the protection of journalistic sources. While the case law before the enactment of the HRA 1998 reveals that UK courts were unenthusiastic in affording a privilege to the press, their position was reversed and a more positive outlook has been cultivated. The current position seems to embrace the freedom of the press to publish and impart information of public interest freely.

¹⁴⁸ ibid 66.

¹⁴⁹ [2003] EWCA Civ 663.

¹⁵⁰ Janice Brabyn, 'Protection Against Judicially Compelled Disclosure of the Identity of News Gatherers' Confidential Sources in Common Law Jurisdictions' [2006] The Modern Law Review 69,921.

¹⁵¹ Financial Times Ltd. and Others v United Kingdom, Application no. 821/03.

¹⁵² ibid 65.

¹⁵³ ibid 59.

8. What are the Criteria for Using Electronic Surveillance and Anti-terrorism Laws, which may Include Measures such as Interceptions of Communications, Surveillance Actions and Search or Seizure Actions in Order to Identify Journalists' Sources of Information? Are the National Law Provisions Accessible, Precise, Foreseeable and Include Clear Legislative Norms in the Context of Surveillance and Anti-terrorism Provisions?

8.1 Protection of Journalistic Sources

Through the development of the ECtHR's jurisprudence and in raising the standards of protection for journalists, the ECtHR has clarified that states must ensure that procedures with adequate legal safeguards are available for the protection of journalist sources.¹⁵⁴ In the context of electronic surveillance and intelligence gathering, it has been acknowledged that 'clear, detailed rules governing the scope and application of measures, as well as minimum safeguards...for preserving the integrity and confidentiality of data' are essential in order for state actions to avoid the risk of abuse and arbitrariness and ensure compliance with the ECHR rights.¹⁵⁵

8.2 Grounds for Interfering with Journalists' Rights

As it has been demonstrated in this report, the free exercise of journalism is protected, on a European level, within the general framework of the right to freedom of expression and information, guaranteed by Article 10 of the ECHR. Since Article 10 of the ECHR is not an absolute right, any restrictions on the exercise of the freedom of expression and information will constitute violations of the ECHR right unless the state can prove that the restriction falls under the exceptions of Article 10(2) and it is, thus, justified. Essentially, restrictions imposed upon freedom of expression must meet the standard of 'legality', meaning that there must be a basis in law for the restriction to be justified.¹⁵⁶ Additionally, exceptions under Article 10(2) require any interference with freedom of expression to be made only for legitimate purposes, such as 'the interests of national security',¹⁵⁷ 'territorial integrity and public safety',¹⁵⁸ 'the prevention of disorder or crime' and the 'protection of morals' of the Contracting Party. No less important is the final requirement provided for in the second paragraph of Article 10 as state authorities must also show that the restriction in place is 'necessary in a democratic society'¹⁵⁹ and that there is a 'pressing social need' for such a limitation to be imposed.¹⁶⁰ As the ECtHR has been prepared to ¹⁵⁴ Sanoma Uitgevers BV v. Netherlands [2011] EMLR 4.

¹⁵⁵ S. and Marper v. United Kingdom (2009) 48 EHRR 50, para 99.

¹⁵⁶ See Sunday Times v. United Kingdom (1979-80) 2 EHRR 245; Gavenda v Poland (2004) 39 EHRR 4.

¹⁵⁷ See Ministry of Defence v. Griffin [2008] EWHC 1542.

¹⁵⁸ In the context of anti-terrorism laws, see Süreç v Turkey (No 4) App 24762/94, paras 46-49.

¹⁵⁹ See R v Shayler [2002] UKHL 11, paras 54-61.

¹⁶⁰ Handyside v. United Kingdom, App No 5493/72, para 48.

interpret this provision so as to allow a wide margin of appreciation to the domestic authorities, where they are called upon to strike the correct balance between the competing interests at stake, the requirement of necessity has been decisive in most Article 10 cases.

In the aftermath of the recent mass surveillance revelations, it has become known that government officials had authorised interception of communications of journalists. There was no judicial oversight of eavesdropping conducted by the British intelligence agencies, while revelations have shown that a large degree of personal discretion was involved in the process of who was going to be targeted.¹⁶¹ Declassified GCHQ document confirmed that this practice of targeting communications required 'reasonable grounds to believe...[that individuals concerned]...are participating in or planning activity that is against the interests of national security, [or] the economic well-being of the UK...'.¹⁶² In this occasion, it is again evident that any interference with individual human rights to enable surveillance practices is brought on the basis of 'national security' and the 'interests' of the state.

8.3 Security and Intelligence Agencies and the Preservation of Journalists' Rights

Terms such as domestic spying and mass surveillance have become very common within the daily discourse of many governments' national security strategies in relation to security and risk prevention. In the post-9/11 era, and with the emergence of the 'war on terror', governments, mainly the US and the UK, passed laws authorising their security and intelligence agencies to secretly eavesdrop their citizens, including journalists, without the ordinary court-approved warrants for the purpose of dealing with the new threat, hiding any violation of the rights to privacy and the protection of journalists' sources of information behind the 'national security' justification.¹⁶³ As far as the UK is concerned, the state's intelligence and security organisation GCHQ had been using a dragnet style data collection program, the Optic Nerve, for the creation of database with webcam imagery to be used for suspected or known criminals' identification. The agency database has intercepted and stored imagery from more than 1.8 million Yahoo user accounts globally in one six-month period in 2008 alone, regardless of whether individual users were an intelligence target or not.¹⁶⁴

In the light of these events, the ECtHR has strengthened its position regarding the protection of journalists' right not to disclose their information sources. In Youth Initiative for Human Rights v. Serbia,¹⁶⁵ it was emphasised anew that security and intelligence agencies need to respect human

¹⁶¹ Ryan Gallagher, 'British Spies are Free to Target Lawyers and Journalists' (The Intercept, 6 November 2014) <<https://theintercept.com/2014/11/06/uk-surveillance-of-lawyers-journalists-gchq/>> accessed April 26 2016.

¹⁶² ibid.

¹⁶³ J. Risen and E. Lichtblau, 'Bush Lets U.S. Spy on Callers Without Courts', (The New York Times 16 December 2005) <http://www.nytimes.com/2005/12/16/politics/16program.html?pagewanted=all&_r=1&_>, accessed March 2 2016.

¹⁶⁴ S. Ackerman and J. Ball, 'Optic Nerve: millions of Yahoo webcam images intercepted by GCHQ', (The Guardian, 28 February 2014) <<http://www.theguardian.com/world/2014/feb/27/gchq-nsa-webcam-images-internet-yahoo>> accessed March 2 2016.

¹⁶⁵ Application No. 48135/06, judgment of 25 September 2013.

rights and fundamental freedoms, while profoundly stressing that '[T]here can be no robust democracy without transparency, which should be served and used by all citizens'.¹⁶⁶ Following its previous judgment in Telegraaf Media,¹⁶⁷ the ECtHR reaffirmed that states are under the obligation to take appropriate steps to provide protection against an unlawful interference with the ECHR rights and, therefore, this means that security and intelligence agencies need to also act in compliance with the ECHR. In the latter case, the ECtHR reaffirmed that for any interference with Article 10 to be justified, the requirements of legitimate aim and 'necessity in a democratic society' need to be satisfied first. Additionally, the domestic legislation must provide safeguards appropriate to the use of powers of surveillance against journalists, so that their right of non-disclosure is maintained.¹⁶⁸

Despite the strong stance of the ECtHR to protect rights under Article 10 and the rights of journalists and their material more specifically, the UK national legislation does not seem to comply with these principles. In the recent high-profile case of R. (on the application of Miranda) v Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Court of Appeal held that the powers conferred to law enforcement agents by the Terrorism Act 2000¹⁶⁹ to stop and question a person at a port or border area was incompatible with freedom of expression under the ECHR.¹⁷⁰ This judgment was delivered in relation to journalistic material, and the non-compliance of the national legislation with the ECHR was based on the lack of adequate legal safeguards against its arbitrary exercise, and therefore, the national legislation did not afford effective protection of journalists' Article 10 rights.¹⁷¹ The domestic court ruled that the term 'terrorism' needs to be strictly construed and be interpreted within its literal meaning, so that a mere publication could not constitute an act of terrorism.¹⁷² Although the detention of the journalist by the state agents was regarded lawful under the Terrorist Act 2000, because his human rights were outweighed by 'compelling national security interests', it was ruled that the 'stop power' provided for under Schedule 7 of the 2000 Act was incompatible with the Convention right relating to journalism information or material.¹⁷³ The Court of Appeal, without setting the national legislation aside, and, instead, by issuing a statement of incompatibility, reached the conclusion that it would be for the national parliament to adopt the necessary legal safeguards to ensure protection of the confidentiality of journalistic material, where in so doing, the right balance between the individual rights of the journalist and the national interests of the state needs to be struck.¹⁷⁴

In commending the high threshold that the ECtHR has set through its jurisprudence for justifying an interference with freedom of expression, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council ¹⁶⁶ ibid, joint concurring opinion of judges Sajó and Vučinić.

¹⁶⁷ Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and others v. The Netherlands (App No. 39315/06), judgment of February 222013.

¹⁶⁸ ibid paras 98-102, 122-132.

¹⁶⁹ Sch 7, para 2(1).

¹⁷⁰ [2016] EWCA Civ 6, paras 25-31.

¹⁷¹ ibid paras 98-119.

¹⁷² ibid paras 51-55.

¹⁷³ ibid paras 82-84.

¹⁷⁴ ibid para 119.

of Europe has recently acknowledged that the protection of journalists' sources of information is one of the cornerstones of freedom of the Press.¹⁷⁵ It was also emphasised that this right constitutes 'the foundation of a democratic society' and reaffirmed that it is a 'basic condition for both the full exercise of journalistic work and the right of the public to be informed on matters of public concern'.¹⁷⁶ Furthermore, it went as far as to remark that the disclosure of journalistic sources should be limited to 'exceptional circumstances where vital public or individual interests are at stake'¹⁷⁷. In regards to the technological advances of the last years and the ease in which transmission of information is nowadays being conducted, the Assembly highlighted that the confidentiality of journalists' sources 'must not be compromised' by the technological means the public authorities have in their hands 'to control the use by journalists of mobile telecommunication and internet media'¹⁷⁸. As these powerful statements come from the legislative body of the Council of Europe and they are in accordance with the jurisprudence of the ECtHR, they should possibly act as guidelines for national parliaments and influence them in bringing domestic legislation in compliance with the ECHR.

8.4 Identifying the Legal Boundaries

Although national legislation in the UK provides for judicial and procedural safeguards for protection against interferences with the individual human rights of journalists, the overbroad discretionary powers enjoyed by the State should be treated with scepticism. The adoption of a vague and excessively broad definition of 'terrorism'¹⁷⁹ by the government to justify the enactment of a wide-range of anti-terrorism laws should be seen as a matter of serious concern. Additionally, the fact that recent laws and policies prohibit not only acts of terrorism or direct participation in such activities, but also the 'indirect encouragement' and 'other inducement' of terrorism' including its 'glorification', shows the wide-ranging degree of prohibition.¹⁸⁰ These broadly defined terms impose a greater authority upon the state and it makes it easier to justify almost every prohibition under the justification of 'national security'. While it could be accepted that activities falling under these terms would require a public order response, one could very plausibly argue that an anti-terrorism response is disproportionate as to the aim to be achieved. Consequently, this state practise negatively affects the precision of the relevant legal framework and it makes it less foreseeable for the individual to protect himself/herself against any arbitrary interference.¹⁸¹ Arguably, the justification that the anti-terrorism laws are 'prescribed by law' finds application only in theory since, in practice, the relevant law does not meet the necessary standards of sufficient clarity and accessibility to enable the individual to identify the boundaries of the law and regulate his/her conduct accordingly.¹⁸²

¹⁷⁵ 'The Protection of Journalists' sources' (2010) Committee on Culture, Science and Education Report Doc. 12443.

¹⁷⁶ ibid s A paras 1,2.

¹⁷⁷ ibid s A, para 5.

¹⁷⁸ ibid s A, para 11.

¹⁷⁹ Terrorism Act 2000, s 1.

¹⁸⁰ Terrorism Act 2006, s 1.

¹⁸¹ Wingrove v. United Kingdom, App No. 17419/90 (ECtHR) para 40.

¹⁸² Sunday Times v. United Kingdom (1979-80) 2 EHRR 245, para 49.

9. Can Journalists Rely on Encryption and Anonymity Online to Protect Themselves and Their Sources Against Surveillance?

9.1 The Essence of Encryption and Online Anonymity

Encryption is a mathematical process of “converting messages, information, or data into a form unreadable by anyone except the intended recipient”¹⁸³. It protects the confidentiality and integrity of content against third-party access or manipulation. It is a key instrument to ensure that digital communications – ranging from online financial transactions to personal phone conversation and emails – are protected from unwarranted interference. Encryption relies on the process of merging a message (“plaintext” –the content of the message) with a passphrase or other arbitrary data such as a file (commonly referred to as an “encryption key”) in order to produce a “ciphertext” that is indecipherable to users who do not have the encryption key¹⁸⁴. Without encryption, forming a secure channel for exchanging private information digitally is nearly impossible.

9.2 The Importance of Encryption and Online Anonymity for Journalists

Journalists and their journalistic sources is one of the groups around the world that are most at risk when their communications are intercepted¹⁸⁵. Journalists’ role as watchdogs on matters of public interest would be severely impeded if there is not a genuine promise of confidentiality in the process of obtaining and transferring information.

9.3 Evaluation of the Restrictions on Encryption and Anonymity in the United Kingdom

As of present, there are no general legal restrictions on the online anonymity in the UK¹⁸⁶. However, targeted measures to circumvent encryption in certain cases are currently in force under UK legislation. The Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (RIPA)¹⁸⁷ provides a legal framework for the interception of communications, the acquisition and use of data, surveillance and covert intelligence sources. RIPA regulations allow authorities to obtain notices that require individuals to disclose encryption keys or decrypt specific information in the context of criminal investigation. Those provisions weaken the privacy guaranteed by encryption use as ¹⁸³SANS Institute, ‘History of encryption’ (2001) <<http://www.sans.org/reading-room/whitepapers/vpns/history-encryption-730>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁸⁴ Privacy International, ‘Securing Safe Spaces Online’ (2015) <https://www.privacyinternational.org/sites/default/files/Securing%20Safe%20Spaces%20Online_0.pdf> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁸⁵ Joint Submission of World Wide Web Foundation/Centre for Internet and Human Rights at European University.

¹⁸⁶ The Human Development Index country rankings <<http://hdr.undp.org/en/countries>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁸⁷ Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000.

the grounds for issuing notices for encryption key disclosure are broad and vague¹⁸⁸ and an investigating officer just needs an approval from a senior officer rather than the formal approval of a court hearing; disclosure must be necessary in the interest of national security, crime and prevention or detection, the UK's economic well-being or 'for the purpose of securing the effective exercise or proper performance by any public authority of any statutory power or statutory duty'¹⁸⁹.

Many journalists and media lawyers¹⁹⁰ have argued that RIPA gives the British police powers to snoop on journalists. Following the implementation of the Act, John Battle, head of compliance at ITV News, argued that the UK legal safeguards that allowed journalists to protect sources now amounted to nothing because police and others could circumvent them through the RIPA, "the back door", to identify sources or obtain information without going through the usual judicial processes. Alan Rusbridger, the editor-in-chief of The Guardian, noted that there were insufficient safeguards to ensure a free press following the enactment of RIPA and journalists must fight for better protection, do a better job of protecting sources and understand technology better. Gill Phillips, director of editorial legal services at Guardian News & Media, warned that in the present legislative environment, journalists should minimise the use of electronic forms of communication. Barrister Gavin Millar QC has filed a case with the European Court of Human Rights on behalf of the Bureau of Investigative Journalism arguing that RIPA was incompatible with section 10 of the Human Rights Act. He has also further added that 'if the application was successful, the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (RIPA) should be torn up'¹⁹¹.

Recent developments and the Government's aim to consolidate and expand on existing laws governing the use of investigatory powers so as to bring them into the digital age, as well as to guarantee "no safe spaces for terrorists"¹⁹² resulted in publication of the Draft Investigatory Powers Bill by the Home Secretary on November 4 2015.

The 'Miscellaneous and General Provisions' part contains some of the most intrusive provisions in the Bill that have attracted criticism. Aside from defining key terms in the Bill, this part broadly relates to the Government's powers to issue national security notices and technical capability notices to telecommunications operators (and possibly platform providers) requiring them to take specified steps for the purposes of national security or the maintenance of technical capability. Law practitioners have indicated that:

¹⁸⁸ ibid 3.

¹⁸⁹ ibid section 49(2)(b)(i)(ii).

¹⁹⁰ Chris Johnson, 'Journalist Must Fight for Better Legal Protection' (The Guardian, 16 October 2014) <<http://www.theguardian.com/media/2014/oct/16/journalists-legal-protection-itn-guardian-ripa>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁹¹ Lisa O'Carroll, 'European Court to investigate laws allowing GCHQ to snoop on journalist' (The Guardian, 15 September 2014) <<http://www.theguardian.com/media/2014/sep/15/human-rights-snoop-on-journalists-gchq-echr>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁹² 'David Cameron says new online data laws needed' (BBC News, 12 January 2015) <<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-politics-30778424>> accessed June 2 2016.

While these powers come with some procedural safeguards regarding prior consultation, reasonableness and consideration of the technical feasibility and costs of complying with a notice, these provisions may leave scope for abuse as a result of being drafted so broadly.¹⁹³

The Secretary of State has the power to issue technical capability notices imposing, among other things, 'obligations relating to the removal of electronic protection applied by a relevant operator to any communications data'¹⁹⁴. This is the first of this kind of obligations proposed in the UK and it has the potential to have aversive consequences for individuals and companies alike. Even though the Government has made much noise over the fact that the Bill does not ban end-to-end encryption, this provision may lead to a similar outcome. For example, telecoms companies and platform providers could be forced to bypass their own security systems in order to enable security services to hack into their systems and services, allowing them to read people's communications. Consequently, this poses unprecedented threat to users, some of which could also be journalists or journalistic sources who will no longer be guaranteed strong encryption in the information transfer without unwarranted third-party interference. Apple CEO, Tim Cook, expressed that very strong encryption is necessary and 'any back door is a back door for everyone... Opening a backdoor can have very dire consequences'. Indeed, the Information Commissioner's Office has warned that the removal of encryption could have "detrimental consequences to the security of data and safeguards which are essential to the public's continued confidence in the handling and use of their personal information".

Further changes to the Bill prior to its enactment are expressed to be desirable. The Parliament Joint Committee recommends that the Government needs to make explicit that providers which offer end-to-end encryption or other un-decryptable communications services will not be expected to provide decrypted information if it is not practicable. A draft code of practice is also recommended to accompany the Bill for consideration.

10. Are Whistle-blowers Explicitly Protected Under Law Protecting Journalistic Sources? Is there Another Practice Protecting Whistle-blowers? Is the Legislation Prohibiting Authorities and Companies from Identifying Whistle-blowers?

10.1 Protection of Whistle-blowers in the UK

In the United Kingdom, whistle-blowers are protected under employment law, not laws protecting journalistic sources. The primary legislation which offers this protection is the Public Interest Disclosure Act (PIDA) 1998.¹⁹⁵ The main purpose of this Act is to prevent the unfair dismissal or treatment of workers if they had made a disclosure in the public interest. Additionally, the Act applies to workers who have not received promotions — the Act covers all workers, temporary agency staff, trainees and NHS workers. It does cover volunteers: in Sims v MASH, the Act was held not to extend to an unpaid secondee at a charity.¹⁹⁶ The burden of proof for whistle-blowing cases is on the employer. As held in Pipes v Bridgeford, once the claimant brings the case against the employer, it is the employer who must discharge the burden.¹⁹⁷

¹⁹³ Nadia Banno, Sarah West and Lereesa Easterbrook, 'Draft Investigatory Powers Bill 2015: a long way to go to achieve adequate protection for the media and communications industry' (Baker and McKenzie, February 2016) <<http://bakerxchange.com/rv/ff0025aeb510dba37933fb82104c950e9227a515/p=3878691>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁹⁴ Draft Investigatory Powers Bill 2015, cl 189(4).

¹⁹⁵ Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998.

The UK government website defines a whistle-blower as a worker who reports certain types of wrongdoing, usually something seen at work.¹⁹⁸ It emphasises that the wrongdoing disclosed must be in the public interest. The government advises that if a whistle-blower reports their concern anonymously, they may find it harder to argue that any unfair treatment was a result of the whistle-blowing.¹⁹⁹ Whistle-blowers must raise any claim of unfair dismissal within three months of the event happening.²⁰⁰ Though logical, it is easy to see how this may open the system up for abuse by employers.

Section 1 of PIDA 1998 lists several requirements that whistle-blowers must satisfy for a successful claim. Firstly, the whistle-blower must have made the disclosure in good faith. For example, it is not enough that the whistle-blower knew about illegal practices for some time and then decided to disclose after a disagreement with his or her line manager. Secondly, the whistle-blower must believe that the information is substantially true. Thirdly, the disclosure cannot be a trivial matter. There must have been a serious miscarriage of justice, illegal activity, threats, or damage to the environment. Fourthly, the whistle-blower must believe that he or she is making the disclosure to the right person. In Everett v Mijano Care Services, an application for interim relief failed because this requirement had not been satisfied.²⁰¹

External disclosures, i.e. to the media, should only be made in exceptional circumstances. These circumstances may be if the complaint was not dealt with by the appropriate channel or if the disclosure about an exceptionally serious matter. In Kay v Northumberland Healthcare NHS Trust, it was held to be reasonable for the claimant to go to the media with her concern.²⁰² The tribunal considered the freedom of expression provision in the HRA 1998.²⁰³ In addition, the claimant did not know of the Trust's whistle-blowing policy and the tribunal took account of the fact that there was no reasonable expectation of action following earlier concerns. Finally, the concern was of a serious nature.

¹⁹⁶ Sim v Manchester Action on Street Health [2002] EAT/0085/01.

¹⁹⁷ Pipes v Bridgeford [2002] (unreported).

¹⁹⁸ GOV.UK, 'Whistleblowing for Employees' <<https://www.gov.uk/whistleblowing/what-is-a-whistleblower>> accessed June 2 2016.

¹⁹⁹ ibid.

²⁰⁰ Employment Rights Act 1996, s 111.

²⁰¹ [2000] EAT/3101180/00.

²⁰² Employment Tribunal case no. 6405617/00, 29 November 2001.

²⁰³ Human Rights Act 1998.

According to s 1 PIDA 1998, lodging a complaint with the correct channel is an important aspect of UK law protecting whistle-blowers. Jeanette Ashton has written that requiring employees to use their employer's whistle-blowing procedure could be problematic.²⁰⁴ She adds that many employees will be unfamiliar with the procedure and will be in fear of personal detriment. Imposing these restrictions on the way the complaint is made means that the public is not necessarily made aware of the complaint until it has been investigated internally. This could be seen as a way to protect the reputations of companies and businesses, not individuals.

Peter Yeoh has found in a recent UK survey that just 15% of whistle-blowers raised their concerns externally.²⁰⁵ Additionally, 75% of the whistle-blowers surveyed claimed nothing was done about the wrongdoing. Crucially, the most likely response to the whistle-blowing was found to be demotion and dismissal. Yeoh notes these results are aggravated by 'pressures on whistle-blowers to withhold consent for the information to be passed on to the regulators concerned'. Again, these observations suggest that the law – or at least its result – is failing to protect whistle-blowers sufficiently. The report will now go on to discuss whether these concerns are in compliance with the ECHR.

10.2 Does this Protection Comply with ECHR Case Law?

Article 10 ECHR protects individuals' rights of freedom of expression. In a recent case, Goodwin v UK, the Court in Strasbourg emphasised that "protection of journalistic sources is one of the basic conditions for press freedom."²⁰⁶ Without this protection, the Court says, "sources may be deterred from assisting the press in informing the public on matters of public interest." Thus, freedom of expression continues to be closely guarded by the ECtHR. The leading case on the protection of whistle-blowers is Heinisch v Germany.²⁰⁷ In this case, a German nurse was employed by a company which specialised in healthcare for elderly people. She made multiple complaints about the company, and even fell ill due to overworking. Eventually, she was dismissed. She brought a case before the ECtHR, arguing that her dismissal interfered with her right to freedom of expression under Art 10 ECHR.²⁰⁸ The ECtHR held that the information disclosed by the claimant was "undeniably of public interest" and that her external reporting of the event by making a criminal complaint was justified by the seriousness of the information.

The Court set out six factors which should be taken into account in cases considering whistle-blowers.²⁰⁹ Firstly, the whistle-blower must have acted in good faith. Secondly, the information disclosed by the whistle-blower must be in the public interest. Thirdly, the Court will consider ²⁰⁴ Jeanette Ashton, '15 years of whistleblowing protection under the Public Disclosure Act 1998: are we still shooting the messenger' (2015) 44(1) Industrial Law Journal 29-52.

²⁰⁵ Peter Yeoh, 'Whistleblowing: motivations, corporate self-regulation and the law' (2014) 56(6) International Journal of Law & Management 459-474.

²⁰⁶ Goodwin v UK (1996) 22 EHRR 123.

²⁰⁷ (2014) 58 EHRR 31.

²⁰⁸ John Tingle and Alan Cribb, Nursing Law and Ethics (2nd edn Blackwell Academy 2002) 121.

²⁰⁹ Heinisch v Germany (2014) 58 EHRR 31.

the authenticity of the information disclosed and fourthly, whether there was an alternative way the whistle-blower could have used to make his complaint known. Fifthly, the damage suffered by the employer will be considered and, finally, the penalty that the employer imposed on the whistle-blower.

It can be seen that section 1(43C) of the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 matches up with the good faith required by the Court in Heinisch v Germany. The Act also provides a definition of 'disclosure in the public interest' as required by the Court. The Act specifies that a whistle-blower must reasonably believe the information is true and also dictates that the person must make the disclosure to his employer, unless he believes the evidence will be concealed or destroyed if he does so. The Act is less vociferous about the proportionality of the penalty. In general, it would seem that the 1998 Act is compliant with the ECHR case law.

Jean Paul Jacqué has raised concerns about the EU application of Heinisch v Germany.²¹⁰ In his report, he draws attention to the CJEU's failure to apply all six of the European Court of Human Rights' requirements in recent cases. Since all decisions of the Court of Justice are binding on member states, this judgment may have a negative effect on the protection of whistle-blowers in the UK. It follows that this is an area which requires further investigation to ensure that UK law is fully compatible with the ECHR and its subsequent case law.

10.3 Recommendation CM/Rec(2014) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States

As with the case law of the Convention, UK law largely complies with the Recommendation. However, one particular area gives cause for concern. The Person Scope section of the Recommendation specifies that all individuals working 'in either the public or private sector, irrespective of the nature of their working relationship and whether they are paid or not', should be protected. As mentioned briefly above, UK law has excluded volunteers from being able to access the protection offered by the 1998 Act. More specifically, Sims v Mash prevented an unpaid secondee at a charity from making out a successful claim. From this, it would seem that in this respect, UK laws protecting whistle-blowers are not fully compatible with all policies and laws of the Council of Europe.

10.4 Concluding Remarks

While UK law is generally compatible with the Convention and Recommendation CM/Rec(2014) 7, there are two major concerns. Firstly, the results of the HRA 1998 suggest that it is too often the focus of authorities to protect companies rather than whistle-blowers.

²¹⁰ Jean-Paul Jacqué, 'Review of the EULEX Kosovo Mission's Implementation of the Mandate with a Particular Focus on the Handling of the Recent Allegations' (Report to the Vice President of the European Commission Federica Mogherini, 21 November 2014) < http://www.eeas.europa.eu/statements-eeas/docs/150331_jacque-report_en.pdf > accessed June 2 2016.

Secondly, volunteers and unpaid workers tend not to be protected under UK law, contrary to the Recommendation made by the Committee of Ministers.

11. Conclusion

It becomes evident from the preceding analysis that the main statutory provision, found in s.10 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 does not provide an absolute protection to journalists to not disclose their sources. Instead, the provision is to be regarded as a presumption in favor of non-disclosure that can be rebutted under the four grounds of the provision. Indeed, the interest in the disclosure may outweigh the interest in the non-disclosure if it is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime. However, it is worth noting that courts have adopted a more favorable approach to the protection of journalistic sources as 'one of the basic conditions for press freedom' following the seminal judgment of the ECtHR in Goodwin v. United Kingdom, given the United Kingdom's obligation to do so under s.2 of the Human Rights Act 1998.

Furthermore, a direct positive obligation to safeguard the anonymity of a journalistic source does not exist in UK legislation or common law. If, however, the details were published in breach of a court's order, then the journalist may face financial penalty and criminal conviction.

Legal safeguards for the protection of journalistic sources, combined with self-regulatory mechanisms in the form of professional codes of conduct, can be found within the Legal Safeguards in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. The Draft Investigatory Powers Bill which will update and consolidate existing legislation governing the use of investigatory powers is currently under consultation.

With regard to the principles of Recommendation No R (2000)7, the UK legislative framework is currently being interpreted and applied in accordance with the guidance provided by the Court in Strasbourg and consequently meets the European standards. Indeed, orders for disclosure and breaches of confidentiality remain the exception rather than the norm.

In terms of legislative norms in the context of surveillance and anti-terrorism provisions, the UK currently provides for judicial and procedural safeguards for protection against interferences with the individual human rights of journalists. However, the adoption of a vague and excessively broad definition of 'terrorism' under the Terrorism Act 2000 by the executive branch to justify the subsequent enactment of a wide-range of discretionary anti-terrorism laws should be seen as a matter of serious concern.

As of present, there are no general legal restrictions on online anonymity in the UK. However, targeted measures to circumvent encryption in certain cases are currently in force under the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 which provides a legal framework for the interception of communications, the acquisition and use of data, surveillance and covert intelligence sources.

Finally, whistle-blowers in the United Kingdom, are protected under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 which is primarily legislation relating to employment. While UK law is generally compatible with the Convention and Recommendation CM/Rec (2014) 7, there are two major concerns. Firstly, the results of the 1998 Act suggest that it is too often the focus of authorities to protect companies rather than whistle-blowers. Secondly, volunteers and unpaid workers tend not to be protected under UK law, contrary to the Recommendation made by the Committee of Ministers.

12. CASE LAW, LEGISLATION, BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ONLINE RESOURCES

12.1. Legislation

- Bank of England Act 1998.
- Constitutional Reform Act 2005.
- Contempt of Court Act 1981.
- Data Protection Act 1998.
- Data Retention and Investigatory Powers Act 2014.
- Employment Rights Act 1996.
- Energy Act 2013.
- Human Rights Act 1998.
- Police Act 1997.
- Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.
- Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998.
- Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000.
- Terrorism Act 2000.
- Terrorism Act 2006.

12.2. Case Law

- A-G v Guardian Newspapers Ltd (No.2) [1990] 1 AC 109.
- AG v Lundin (1982) 75 CR APP R 90, 101 (DC).
- Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 515 (CA).
- Ashworth Hospital Authority v MGN Ltd [2002] UKHL 29; [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2033; [2002] 4 All E.R. 193.
- British Steel Corporation v Granada Television Ltd (1981) AC 1096.
- Camelot Group plc v Centaur [1997] EWCA Civ 2554; [1999] QB 124.
- Camelot Group Plc v Centaur Communications Ltd [1998] IRLR 80.
- Everett v Miyano Care Services [2000] EAT/3101180/00.
- Interbrew SA v Financial Times [2002] EWCA Civ 274; [2002] EMLR 446; [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep 229.
- John v Express Newspapers [2000] EWCA Civ 135, [2000] 1 WLR 1931.
- Key v Northumberland Healthcare NHS Trust Employment Tribunal case no. 6405617/00, 29 November 2001.
- Mersey Care NHS Trust v Ackroyd (No.2) [2003] EWCA Civ 663.
- Mersey Care NHS Trust v Ackroyd [2007] EWCA Civ 101; [2008] EMLR 1; [2007] 94 BMLR 84; [2007] HRLR 19.
- Ministry of Defence v. Griffin [2008] EWHC 1542.

- News Group Newspapers Limited, (2) Tom Newton Dunn, (3) Anthony France, (4) Craig Woodhouse v The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis Respondent [2016] UKIPTrib 14_176-H.
- Pipes v Bridgeford [2002] (unreported).
- R v Advertising Standards Authority ex parte Matthias Rath BV [2001] EMLR 22.
- R v Shayler [2002] UKHL 11.
- R. (on the application of Miranda) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2016] EWCA Civ 6.
- R. v. Broadcasting Complaints Commission ex p. Granada TV [1995] E.M.L.R. 16.
- Re an Inquiry under the Companies Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 [1988] AC 660.
- Secretary of State for Defence v. Guardian Newspapers Ltd [1985] A.C. 339.
- Secretary of State for the Home Department v Shafiq Ur Rehman, [2000] EWCA Civ 168.
- Sim v Manchester Action on Street Health [2002] EAT/0085/01.
- The Law Society and others v Kordowski [2011] EWHC 3182 (QB), at 99.
- X Ltd v Morgan Grampian (Publishers) Ltd [1991] 1 AC 1; [1990] 2 All ER 1; [1990] 2 WLR 1000.
- Financial Times Ltd. and Others v United Kingdom, Application no. 821/03.
- Gaweda v Poland (2004) 39 EHRR 4.
- Goodwin v. United Kingdom (1996) 22 EHRR. 123.
- Heinisch v Germany (2014) 58 EHRR 31.
- S. and Marper v. United Kingdom (2009) 48 EHRR 50.
- Sanoma Uitgevers BV v. Netherlands [2011] EMLR 4.
- Sunday Times v United Kingdom (1979) 2 EHRR 245.
- Süreke v Turkey (No 4) App 24762/94.
- Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and others v. The Netherlands (App No. 39315/06), judgment of 22 February 2013.
- Youth Initiative for Human Rights v. Serbia Application No. 48135/06, judgment of 25 September 2013.

12.3. Books

- Arlidge, Eady & Smith, The Law of Contempt (3rd edn, Sweet & Maxwell 2005).
- Carey Peter, Media Law (5th edn, Thompson Reuters 2010).
- Harris D, O'Boyle M, Bates E and Buckley C (eds), Law of the European Convention on Human Rights (3rd edn, OUP 2014).
- Rainey B, Wicks E and Ovey C (eds), The European Convention on Human Rights (6th edn, OUP 2014).
- Richard C and Howard J(eds), Blackstone's Statutes on Media Law (4th edn, OUP 2013).
- Robertson G. and Nicol A., Media Law (5th edn, Penguin 2008).
- Tingle J. and Cribb A., Nursing Law and Ethics (2nd edn, Blackwell Academy, 2002).

- Voorhoof Dirk, 'Telegraaf judgment on protection of journalists' sources' in Koltay Andras (ed), Butterfly upon a Wheel? Selected papers on free speech and on free press (Hungarian Academy of Sciences Media Studies Research Group 2013).
- Wilkinson N., 'National Security, Secrecy and the Media – A British View' in S. Maret, Government Secrecy, Research in Social Problems and Public Policy, vol 19 (1st edn, Emerald Group Publishing Limited 2011).
- Ashton J., '15 years of whistleblowing protection under the Public Disclosure Act 1998: are we still shooting the messenger', (2015) 44(1) Industrial Law Journal.
- Brabyn J., 'Protection Against Judicially Compelled Disclosure of the Identity of News Gatherers' Confidential Sources in Common Law Jurisdictions' [2006] The Modern Law Review 69.
- Costigan R., 'Protection of Journalistic Sources' [2007] Public Law 471.
- Foster S., 'The disclosure of journalistic sources, press freedom and the confidentiality of medical records' [2007] Coventry Law Journal 50.
- Hollander C., 'Norwich Pharmacal takes wings' [2009] Civil Justice Quarterly 458.
- Kratochvil J., 'The Inflation of the Margin of Appreciation by the European Court of Human Rights' (2011) 29(3) Netherlands Quarterly Human Rights 324.
- Mitchell R. and Stockdale M., 'Company Confidentiality and the Freedom of the Press: Striking the Balance' (2003) Company Lawyer 170.
- Palmer S., 'Protecting Journalists' Sources: Section 10, Contempt of Court Act 1981' [1992] Public Law 61.
- Savage A. and Mora P.D., 'Case Comment; The protection of journalistic sources, Norwich Pharmacia orders and Article 10 ECHR' [2007] Entertainment Law Review 137.
- Stockdale M. and Mitchell R., 'Company Confidentiality and the Freedom of Press: Striking Balance' (2003) Company Lawyer.
- Voorhoof D., 'The Protection of Journalistic Sources Under Fire?' (2012) <<https://biblio.ugent.be/publication/3060033/file/3060035>> accessed on March 13 2016.
- Yeoh P., 'Whistleblowing: motivations, corporate self-regulation and the law' (2014) 56(6) International Journal of Law & Management.
- 'David Cameron says new online data laws needed' (BBC News, 12 January 2015, <<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-politics-30778424>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Ackerman S. and Ball J., 'Optic Nerve: millions of Yahoo webcam images intercepted by GCHQ' (The Guardian, 28th February 2014) <<http://www.theguardian.com/world/2014/feb/27/gchq-nsa-webcam-images-internet-yahoo>> accessed on March 2 2016.
- Kravets D., 'UK prime minister wants backdoors into messaging apps or he'll ban them', (2015) <<http://arstechnica.com/tech-policy/2015/01/uk-prime-minister-wantsbackdoors-into-messaging-apps-or-hell-ban-them/>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Risen J. and Lichtblau E., 'Bush Lets U.S. Spy on Callers Without Courts', (The New York Times, 16 December 2005) <http://www.nytimes.com/2005/12/16/politics/16program.html?pagewanted=all&_r=1&> accessed March 2 2016.

- Watt N., Mason R. and Traynor I., 'David Cameron pledges anti-terror law for internet after Paris attacks' (The Guardian, 12 January 2015) <<http://www.theguardian.com/uk-news/2015/jan/12/david-cameron-pledges-anti-terror-law-internet-paris-attacks-nick-clegg>> accessed March 3 2016.
- Williams C., 'UK jails schizophrenic for refusal to decrypt files: Terror squad arrest over model rocket' (The Register, 24 November 2009) <http://www.theregister.co.uk/2009/11/24/ripa_jfl/?page=1.> accessed March 16 2016.

12.4. Other sources

- ARTICLE 19 and INTERRIGHTS, 'Freedom of Expression Litigation Project: Briefing Paper on the Protection of Journalistic Sources' (1998) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/right-to-protect-sources.pdf>> accessed on February 6 2016.
- ARTICLE 19, 'SECRETS, SPIES AND WHISTLEBLOWERS, Freedom of Expression and National Security in the United Kingdom' (November 2000) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/secrets-spies-and-whistleblowers.pdf>> accessed March 10 2016.
- Beales I., 'The Handbook to the Editor's Codebook', <<http://www.editorcode.org.uk/downloads/codebook/codebook-2014.pdf>> accessed February 2 2016.
- Human Rights Review, 'Article 10: Freedom of Expression' (2010) <http://www.equalityhumanrights.com/sites/default/files/documents/humanrights/hr_r_article_10.pdf> accessed January 6 2016.
- JUSTICE, 'Freedom from Suspicion: Building a Surveillance Framework for a Digital Age', <<http://2bqk8cdew6192tsu41lay8t.wengine.netdna-cdn.com/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/JUSTICE-Building-a-Surveillance-Framework-for-a-Digital-Age.pdf>> accessed December 20 2015.
- National Union of Journalists, 'Code of Conduct' (2013) <<https://www.nuj.org.uk/documents/nuj-code-of-conduct/>> on 6 January 2016> accessed March 16 2016.
- Press Complaints Commission, 'Clause Fourteen – Confidential Sources' <http://www.pcc.org.uk/assets/696/Code_of_Practice_2012_A4.pdf> accessed February 10 2016.
- Press Complaints Commission, 'Editor's Code of Practice' (2012) <http://www.pcc.org.uk/assets/696/Code_of_Practice_2012_A4.pdf> on 2 February 2016> accessed February 10 2016.
- Privacy International, 'Securing Safe Spaces Online' (2015) <https://www.privacyinternational.org/sites/default/files/Securing%20Safe%20Spaces%20Online_0.pdf> accessed March 16 2016.
- Privacy International, 'Silencing Sources: An International Survey of Protections and Threats to Journalists' Sources',

<<https://wikileaks.org/w/images/c/c0/Silencingsources.pdf>> on 4 January 2015> accessed February 10 2016.

- Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights, as amended) (ECHR).
- Inter-American Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression (Adopted in 24 October 2000) <<http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/showarticle.asp?artID=26>> accessed March 2 2016.
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (Adopted 16 December 1966, entered into force 23 March 1976) 999 UNTS 171 (ICCPR).
- Anderson D., 'A Question of Trust: Report of the Investigatory Powers Review' (2015) <<https://terrorismlegislationreviewer.independent.gov.uk/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/IPR-Report-Web-Accessible1.pdf>> on 02 February 2016> accessed January 4 2016.
- Draft Investigatory Powers Bill, November 2015 <https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/473770/Draft_Investigatory_Powers_Bill.pdf> accessed January 4 2016.
- Explanatory Notes to the Serious Crime Act 2015, <<http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/2015/9/notes>> accessed on March 12 2016.
- Home Office, 'Acquisition and Disclosure of Communications Data Code of Practice', <https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/426248/Acquisition_and_Disclosure_of_Communications_Data_Code_of_Practice_March_2015.pdf> on 4 January 2016> accessed January 4 2016.
- Horne A. and Ward P., Interception of Communications (Home Affairs SN/HA/6332, 2015).
- Interception of Communications Commissioners Office, Inquiry into the use of Chapter 2 of Part 1 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act (RIPA) to identify journalistic sources (2015).
- Joint Committee on the Draft Investigatory Powers Bill, Draft Investigatory Powers Bill Report (HL Paper 93 HC 651 2016) <<http://www.statewatch.org/news/2016/feb/uk-dip-bill-jt-committee-report.pdf>> on 4 January 2016> accessed January 4 2016.
- Ward P., Access to journalists' sources (Briefing Paper No 07440, 2015).
- The Conservative Party Manifesto 2015 <<https://s3-eu-west-1.amazonaws.com/manifesto2015/ConservativeManifesto2015.pdf>> accessed March 13 2016.
- HL Deb 2 February 1998, vol 585, cols 438 and 441.
- 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy of the Council of Europe, Resolution on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights (1994), <https://eos.cartercenter.org/uploads/document_file/path/260/CoE_Committee_of_Ministers_Declaration_on_Journalistic_Freedoms_and_Human_Rights_EN.pdf> accessed February 6 2016.
- Anderson David QC, 'A Question of Trust – Report of the Investigatory Powers Review' (June 2015 <<https://terrorismlegislationreviewer.independent.gov.uk/a-question-of-trust-report-of-the-investigatory-powers-review/>> accessed March 16 2016.

- ARTICLE 19, 'Briefing Paper on the Protection of Journalists Sources' (1998) <<https://www.article19.org/data/files/pdfs/publications/right-to-protect-sources.pdf>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Council of Europe, Declaration of the Committee of Ministers on the protection of journalism and safety of journalists and other media actors, (Adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 30 April 2014 at the 1198th meeting of the Ministers' Deputies) <<https://wcd.coe.int/ViewDoc.jsp?id=2188999>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Council of Europe, IRIS Theme Vol. III, 'Freedom of Expression, the Media and Journalists: Case law of the European Court of Human Rights', Strasbourg 2013 <http://www.obs.coe.int/documents/205595/2667238/IRIS+Themes+III+\(final+9+December+2013\).pdf/2e748bd5-7108-4ea7-baa6-59332f885418.pdf/2e748bd5-7108-4ea7-baa6-59332f885418)> accessed March 16 2016.
- Evan R. and Mendel T., 'Media Regulation in the United Kingdom' Published by Article 19
- Fahy A., 'Confidential Sources and Contempt of Court: An Argument for Change' (DIT, 02 July 2009) <<http://arrow.dit.ie/aaschssldis/17/>> accessed May 20 2016.
- Horsley William, 'Protecting Journalists from attack under International Law' (2 July 2015) <<http://notiziario.ossigeno.info/2015/07/protecting-journalists-from-attacks-under-international-law-by-william-horsley-60062/>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Jacqu e, J, 'Review of the EULEX Kosovo Mission's Implementation of the Mandate with a Particular Focus on the Handling of the Recent Allegations' (Report to the Vice President of the European Commission Federica Mogherini, 21 November 2014) <http://eeas.europa.eu/statements-eeas/docs/150331_jacque-report_en.pdf> accessed March 16 2016.
- Journalism in the age of mass surveillance: safeguarding journalists and their sources, October 2014
- Kaye D., Report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, A/HRC/29/32 (22 May 2015), <<http://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/FreedomOpinion/Pages/CallForSubmission.aspx>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Leveson Report Vol 4 (2012), Appendix 4 <http://webarchive.nationalarchives.gov.uk/20140122145147/http://www.official-documents.gov.uk/document/hc1213/hc07/0780/0780_iv.pdf> accessed March 16 2016
- National Union of Journalists <<https://www.nuj.org.uk>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Office of Surveillance Commissioners, 'Annual Report of the Chief Surveillance Commissioner to the Prime Minister and to the Scottish Ministers for 2013-2014', HC 343 SG/2014/92, September 2014, <https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/350857/Annual-Report-of-the-Chief-Surveillance-Commissioner-for-2013-2014-laid-4-September-2014.pdf> accessed March 16 2016.
- Philips Gill, 'On Protection of Journalistic Sources' (Journalism in Europe discussion series, October 10 2014) <<http://journalism.cmpf.eui.eu/discussions/on-protection-of-journalistic-sources/>> accessed June 2 2016.

- Protection of Journalistic Sources, January 2016 Factsheet of European Court of Human Rights <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf> accessed March 16 2016.
- Protection of Sources <<https://www.article19.org/pages/en/protection-of-sources-more.html>> accessed March 16 2016.
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on the right of journalists not to disclose their sources of information.
- Recommendation No. R (2000) 7 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the Right of Journalists not to Disclose their Sources of Information.
- Resolution on Journalistic Freedoms and Human Rights, adopted at the 4th European Ministerial Conference on Mass Media Policy (Prague, 7-8 December 1994)
- Resolution on the Confidentiality of Journalists' Sources by the European Parliament, 18 January 1994, Official Journal of the European Communities No. C 44/34)
- The Protection of Journalists' sources (2010) Committee on Culture, Science and Education Report Doc. 12443.

12.5. Internet sources

- <<http://www.5rb.com>> accessed March 16 2016.
- <<https://www.nuj.org.uk/campaigns/safeguarding-journalists-and-their-sources/>> accessed March 16 2016.
- European Court of Human Rights, 'Protection of journalistic sources' <http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/FS_Journalistic_sources_ENG.pdf> accessed March 10 2016.
- GOV.UK, 'Whistleblowing for Employees' (2016) <<https://www.gov.uk/whistleblowing/what-is-a-whistleblower>> accessed February 28 2016.
- Preston P., 'A Source of Great Regret' The Guardian (The Guardian, 5 September 2005) <<http://www.theguardian.com/media/2005/sep/05/pressandpublishing.politicsandthemedial>> accessed March 10 2016.
- SANS Institute, 'History of Encryption' (2001) <<http://www.sans.org/reading-room/whitepapers/vpns/history-encryption-730>> accessed March 10 2016.
- Voorhoof D., 'Extra procedural safeguards for protection of journalistic sources: Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands' (Strasbourg Observers, 16 September 2010), <<http://strasbourgobservers.com/2010/09/16/extra-procedural-safeguards-for-protection-of-journalistic-sources-sanoma-uitgevers-b-v-v-the-netherlands/>> accessed December 20 2015.

13. Table of Provisions

Provisions in your native language
Contempt of Court Act 1981	Section 10: No court may require a person to disclose, nor is any person guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a publication for which he is responsible, unless it be established to the satisfaction of the court that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime.
Energy Act 2013	c32 Schedule 9 Part 2: Offences relating to disclosure and use of protected information Prohibition on disclosing protected information (2) Protected information must not be disclosed— (a) by the original holder of the information, or (b) by any other person holding it who has received it directly or indirectly from the original holder by virtue of a disclosure, or disclosures, in accordance with this Schedule, except in accordance with Part 3 of this Schedule. Offence of disclosing protected information in contravention of paragraph 2 (3) It is an offence for a person to disclose information in

	contravention of paragraph 2. Offence of using protected information in contravention of a restriction in Part 3 4 It is an offence for a person to use protected information in contravention of a restriction under paragraph 10(3), 11(2), 12(2), 13(2), 14(2) or 15(2). Defence to offences under paragraphs 3 and 4 (5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under paragraph 3 or 4 to prove— <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. (a) that the person did not know and had no reason to suspect that the information was protected information, or2. (b) that the person took all reasonable precautions and exercised all due diligence to avoid committing the offence. Penalty for offences under paragraphs 3 and 4 (6) (1) A person who commits an offence under paragraph 3 or 4 is liable— <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. (a) on summary conviction—<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. (i) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months (in England and Wales or Scotland) or 6 months (in Northern Ireland),2. (ii) to a fine (in England and Wales) or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (in Scotland or Northern Ireland), or3. (iii) to both;2. (b) on conviction on indictment—<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. (i) to imprisonment for a term not
--	---

	exceeding 2 years, 2. (ii) to a fine, or 3. (iii) to both. (2) In the application of sub-paragraph (1) to England and Wales in relation to an offence committed before the commencement of section 154(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (general limit on magistrates' court's power to imprison), the reference in sub-paragraph (1)(a)(i) to 12 months is to be read as a reference to 6 months.
Constitutional Reform Act 2005	c4 Section 139 : Confidentiality (1) A person who obtains confidential information, or to whom confidential information is provided, under or for the purposes of a relevant provision must not disclose it except with lawful authority. (2) These are the relevant provisions— (a) sections 26 to 31; (b) Part 4; (c) regulations and rules under Part 4. (3) Information is confidential if it relates to an identified or identifiable individual (a “subject”). (4) Confidential information is disclosed with lawful authority only if and to the extent that any of the following applies— (a) the disclosure is with the consent of each person who is a subject of the information (but this is subject to subsection (5)); (b) the disclosure is for (and is necessary for) the exercise by

	any person of functions under a relevant provision; (c)the disclosure is for (and is necessary for) the exercise of functions under section 11(3A) of the Supreme Court Act 1981 (c. 54) or a decision whether to exercise them; (d)the disclosure is for (and is necessary for) the exercise of powers to which section 108 applies, or a decision whether to exercise them; (e)the disclosure is required, under rules of court or a court order, for the purposes of legal proceedings of any description. (5) An opinion or other information given by one identified or identifiable individual (A) about another (B)— (a)is information that relates to both; (b)must not be disclosed to B without A's consent. (6) This section does not prevent the disclosure with the agreement of the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice of information as to disciplinary action taken in accordance with a relevant provision. (7)This section does not prevent the disclosure of information which is already, or has previously been, available to the public from other sources. (8)A contravention of this section in respect of any information is actionable, subject to the defences and other incidents applying to actions for breach of statutory duty. (9)But it is actionable only at the suit of a person who is a subject of the information.
--	--

Bank of England Act 1998	c11 Schedule 7: Restriction on disclosure of information 1(1) Subject to sub-paragraph (2), information is restricted information for the purposes of this paragraph if – (a) it is obtained by the Bank by virtue of the power conferred by section 17(1) or paragraph 9 of Schedule 2 (whether or not it was obtained pursuant to a notice under that provision) and b) it relates to the business or other affairs of any person. (2) Information is not restricted information for the purposes of this paragraph if— (a) it has been made available to the public from other sources or (b) it is in the form of a summary or collection of information so framed as not to enable information relating to any particular person to be ascertained from it. (3) Except as permitted by the following provisions of this Schedule, restricted information shall not be disclosed by— (a) the Bank or any officer or servant of the Bank, or (b) any person obtaining the information directly or indirectly from the Bank, without the consent of the person from whom the Bank obtained the information and if different the person to whom the information relates. (4) Any person who discloses information in contravention of this paragraph shall be guilty of an offence and liable— (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years, or to a fine, or to both;
--	--

	(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 3 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.
Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984	c60 Section 13: Meaning of “journalistic material” (1) Subject to subsection (2) below, in this Act “journalistic material” means material acquired or created for the purposes of journalism. (2) Material is only journalistic material for the purposes of this Act if it is in the possession of a person who acquired or created it for the purposes of journalism. (3) A person who receives material from someone who intends that the recipient shall use it for the purposes of journalism is to be taken to have acquired it for those purposes. Section 8(1)(d): Power of justice of the peace to authorise entry and search of premises. (1) If on an application made by a constable a justice of the peace is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing— (d) that it does not consist of or include items subject to legal privilege, excluded material or special procedure material; Section 9: Special provisions as to access. (1) A constable may obtain access to excluded material or special procedure material for the purposes of a criminal investigation by making an application under Schedule 1 below and in accordance with that Schedule. (2) Any Act (including a local Act) passed before this Act under which a search of premises for the purposes of a

	criminal investigation could be authorised by the issue of a warrant to a constable shall cease to have effect so far as it relates to the authorisation of searches— (a)for items subject to legal privilege; or (b)for excluded material; or (c)for special procedure material consisting of documents or records other than documents. Schedule 1: Special Procedure Section 2: The first set of access conditions is fulfilled if— (a)there are reasonable grounds for believing— (i)that [an indictable offence] has been committed; (ii) that there is material which consists of special procedure material or includes special procedure material and does not also include excluded material on premises specified in the application [or on premises occupied or controlled by a person specified in the application (including all such premises on which there are reasonable grounds for believing that there is such material as it is reasonably practicable so to specify);] (iii)that the material is likely to be of substantial value (whether by itself or together with other material) to the investigation in connection with which the application is made; and (iv)that the material is likely to be relevant evidence; (b)other methods of obtaining the material— (i)have been tried without success; or (ii)have not been tried because it appeared that they were bound to fail; and
--	---

	(c) it is in the public interest, having regard— (i) to the benefit likely to accrue to the investigation if the material is obtained; and (ii) to the circumstances under which the person in possession of the material holds it, that the material should be produced or that access to it should be given.
Police Act 1997	c50 Section 100: Confidential journalistic material. (1) In section 97 “confidential journalistic material” means— (a) material acquired or created for the purposes of journalism which— (i) is in the possession of persons who acquired or created it for those purposes, (ii) is held subject to an undertaking, restriction or obligation of the kind mentioned in section 99(3), and (iii) has been continuously held (by one or more persons) subject to such an undertaking, restriction or obligation since it was first acquired or created for the purposes of journalism, and (b) communications as a result of which information is acquired for the purposes of journalism and held as mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii). (2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a person who receives material, or acquires information, from someone who intends that the recipient shall use it for the purposes of journalism is to be taken to have acquired it for those purposes.

Data Protection Act 1998	c29 s32(1): Journalism, literature and art. (1) Personal data which are processed only for the special purposes are exempt from any provision to which this subsection relates if— (a) the processing is undertaken with a view to the publication by any person of any journalistic, literary or artistic material, (b) the data controller reasonably believes that, having regard in particular to the special importance of the public interest in freedom of expression, publication would be in the public interest, and (c) the data controller reasonably believes that, in all the circumstances, compliance with that provision is incompatible with the special purposes.
Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act RIPA 2000	Section 71: Issue and revision of codes of practice. (1) The Secretary of State shall issue one or more codes of practice relating to the exercise and performance of the powers and duties mentioned in subsection (2). (2) Those powers and duties are those (excluding any power to make subordinate legislation [F1 and subject to subsection (10)]) that are conferred or imposed otherwise than on the Surveillance Commissioners by or under— (a) Parts I to III of this Act; (b) section 5 of the M1 Intelligence Services Act 1994 (warrants for interference with property or wireless telegraphy for the purposes of the intelligence services); and (c) Part III of the M2 Police Act 1997 (authorisation by the police or [F2 Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs] of interference with property or wireless telegraphy). (3) Before issuing a code of practice under subsection (1),

	the Secretary of State shall— (a) prepare and publish a draft of that code; and (b) consider any representations made to him about the draft; and the Secretary of State may incorporate in the code finally issued any modifications made by him to the draft after its publication. (4) The Secretary of State shall lay before both Houses of Parliament every draft code of practice prepared and published by him under this section. (5) A code of practice issued by the Secretary of State under this section shall not be brought into force except in accordance with an order made by the Secretary of State. (6) An order under subsection (5) may contain such transitional provisions and savings as appear to the Secretary of State to be necessary or expedient in connection with the bringing into force of the code brought into force by that order. (7) The Secretary of State may from time to time— (a) revise the whole or any part of a code issued under this section; and (b) issue the revised code. (8) Subsections (3) to (6) shall apply (with appropriate modifications) in relation to the issue of any revised code under this section as they apply in relation to the first issue of such a code. (9) The Secretary of State shall not make an order containing provision for any of the purposes of this section unless a draft of the order has been laid before Parliament and
--	---

	approved by a resolution of each House. (10)A code of practice under this section may not relate to any matter which is to be dealt with by guidance of the Interception of Communications Commissioner by virtue of paragraph 7 of Schedule A1.] s 49(2)(b)If any person with the appropriate permission under Schedule 2 believes, on reasonable grounds— (i)necessary on grounds falling within subsection (3), or (ii) necessary for the purpose of securing the effective exercise or proper performance by any public authority of any statutory power or statutory duty,
Data Retention and Investigatory Powers Act 2014	Section 7: Review of investigatory powers and their regulation (1)The Secretary of State must appoint the independent reviewer of terrorism legislation to review the operation and regulation of investigatory powers. (2)The independent reviewer must, in particular, consider— (a)current and future threats to the United Kingdom, (b)the capabilities needed to combat those threats, (c)safeguards to protect privacy, (d)the challenges of changing technologies, (e)issues relating to transparency and oversight, (f)the effectiveness of existing legislation (including its proportionality) and the case for new or amending

	legislation. (3)The independent reviewer must, so far as reasonably practicable, complete the review before 1 May 2015. (4)The independent reviewer must send to the Prime Minister a report on the outcome of the review as soon as reasonably practicable after completing the review. (5)On receiving a report under subsection (4), the Prime Minister must lay a copy of it before Parliament together with a statement as to whether any matter has been excluded from that copy under subsection (6). (6)If it appears to the Prime Minister that the publication of any matter in a report under subsection (4) would be contrary to the public interest or prejudicial to national security, the Prime Minister may exclude the matter from the copy of the report laid before Parliament. (7)The Secretary of State may pay to the independent reviewer— (a)expenses incurred in carrying out the functions of the independent reviewer under this section, and (b)such allowances as the Secretary of State determines. (8)In this section “the independent reviewer of terrorism legislation” means the person appointed under section 36(1) of the Terrorism Act 2006 (and “independent reviewer” is to be read accordingly).
Draft Investigatory Powers Bill 2015	Clause 61: Commissioner approval for authorisation to identify or confirm journalistic sources 169 Clause 61 sets out the procedure for authorising communications data requests made by public authorities, in order to identify a journalist’s source. In these instances it is necessary to obtain the approval of a Judicial Commissioner before the data can be acquired. 170 Subsections (1), (2) and (3) set out that an authorised

communications data application made by certain public authorities for the purpose of identifying the source of journalistic information must not take effect until approved by a Judicial Commissioner. Prior Judicial Commissioner approval is not required in an imminent threat to life situation.

171 Subsection (4) sets out that in making an application for data to identify a journalistic source, the applicant is not required to notify either the person to whom the applications relates i.e. the journalistic source, nor that person's legal representative.

172 Subsections (5) and (6) sets out that a Judicial Commissioner should only approve an authorisation to acquire communications data to identify a journalistic source if satisfied that the conditions of the authorisation by the designated senior officer have been met.

173 Subsection (6) sets out that the Judicial Commissioner must quash any authorisation given by the designated senior officer, if the Judicial Commissioner refuses to approve it.

174 Subsection (7) sets out what is meant by the 'source of journalistic information'. It is defined as an individual (i.e. the source) who provides material intending the recipient (i.e. the journalist) to use it for the purpose of journalism or knowing that it is likely to be used for journalism.

Clause 167: Investigatory Powers Commissioner and other Judicial Commissioners [j760]

390 This clause establishes the office of the Investigatory Powers Commissioner, who will be supported in fulfilling their functions by other Judicial Commissioners. No-one will be appointed as the Investigatory Powers Commissioner or as a Judicial Commissioner unless they have held a judicial position at least as senior as a high court judge. To allow them to work effectively, the Investigatory Powers Commissioner will be able to delegate functions to the other Judicial Commissioners. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner is a Judicial Commissioner, so where the Bill or these Explanatory Notes refers to a Judicial Commissioner this includes the Investigatory Powers Commissioner.

	Clause 168: Terms and conditions of employment 391 The Judicial Commissioners will be appointed for fixed terms of three years and can be re-appointed. Subsections (2)-(5) ensure the independence of the Judicial Commissioners by limiting the circumstances in which they can be removed from office. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner can only be removed from office with the say so of both Houses of Parliament, unless some very limited circumstances apply, including the Commissioner being given a prison sentence or disqualified from being a company director. Other Judicial Commissioners can be removed from office in the same way, but they can also be removed from office by the Investigatory Powers Commissioner (subsection (6)). Clause 169: Main oversight functions 392 This clause gives the Investigatory Powers Commissioner a very broad remit to keep under review the use of investigatory powers. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner must do so through audits, inspections and investigations. In particular the Investigatory Powers Commissioner will undertake, with the assistance of their office, the functions currently undertaken by the Intelligence Services Commissioner, the Interception of Communications Commissioner and the Surveillance Commissioner. 393 However, subsection (4) explains that, to prevent inefficiency and duplication of oversight, the Investigatory Powers Commissioner will not oversee particular areas that are already subject to oversight by other individuals or bodies. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner will not oversee decisions by other judicial authorities or where information is obtained through a search warrant or production order issued by a judicial authority. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner will not oversee matters which are overseen by the Information Commissioner. 394 Subsection (5) and (6) seek to ensure that the oversight activities do not have a negative effect upon the ability of law enforcement agencies and security and intelligence agencies to perform their statutory functions. These subsections do not apply to the judicial functions of the Commissioners – such as deciding whether to approve the
--	---

	issuing, renewing or modification of a warrant. Clause 170: Additional directed oversight functions 395 As the policies, capabilities and practices of the security and intelligence agencies change with time, subsections (1)-(3) allow the Prime Minister to direct the Investigatory Powers Commissioner to oversee new areas. This is important to ensure that independent oversight keeps pace with developments within the security and intelligence agencies. 396 Subsection (5) sets out that the Prime Minister must publish any direction that he makes to the Investigatory Powers Commissioner to ensure that there is full transparency about their role. However, this will need to be balanced against a situation where saying too much about what is being overseen will give away details of the policy or capability to the extent that it damages These Explanatory Notes relate to the Investigatory Powers Bill as published in Draft on 4 November 2015 (Cm 9152) 52 52 281 national security. Clause 171: Error reporting 397 This clause provides for a process through which people can be informed of serious errors in the use of investigatory powers. An error means any error made by a public authority in complying with any requirement which the Investigatory Powers Commissioner has oversight of. 398 When the Investigatory Powers Commissioner becomes aware of an error, the Commissioner must decide whether the error is serious. An error can only be considered serious if it has caused significant prejudice to the person concerned. If the Commissioner thinks that the error is serious the IPT must be informed. If the IPT agrees that the error is serious, the IPT must then decide whether it is in the public interest for the person concerned to be informed. In doing so the IPT must balance on one hand the seriousness of the error and the impact on the person concerned, and on the other hand the extent to which disclosing the error would be contrary to the public interest or would be prejudicial to national security, the prevention and detection of serious crime, the economic well-being of the UK, or the ability of the intelligence agencies to carry out their functions.
--	---

399 If the IPT decides that the person should be informed, that person must also be informed of their right to bring a claim in the IPT. The person must also be provided with the details necessary to bring such a claim, to the extent that disclosing information is in the public interest.

400 The Investigatory Commissioner's annual report (see clause 172(1)) must include details regarding errors, including the number of errors the Commissioner becomes aware of, the number referred to the IPT and the number of times a person has been informed of an error.

Clause 172: Additional functions under this Part

401 This clause sets out that a Judicial Commissioners must give the IPT any assistance the IPT may ask for, including Commissioner's opinion on anything the IPT has to decide. This allows the IPT to take advantage of the Investigatory Powers Commissioner's expertise and the expertise of his office when reaching a decision or carrying out an investigation.

402 Subsection (2) allows the Investigatory Powers Commissioner to provide advice and information to both public authorities and the general public. If the Commissioner thinks that providing such information or advice might be contrary to the public interest or be damaging to one of the things listed, including national security, the Commissioner must consult with the Secretary of State first.

Clause 173: Functions under other enactments

403 This clause means that authorisations that are currently approved by the Surveillance Commissioner will instead be approved by the Investigatory Powers Commissioner.

	Clause 174: Annual and other reports 404 Subsection (1) means that the Investigatory Powers Commissioner must report to the Prime Minister on an annual basis about their work and subsection (2) lists matters which must be included in the report. The Prime Minister may require additional reports. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner may report at any time on any matter the Commissioner has oversight of. The Investigatory Powers Commissioner's reports can include any recommendations the Commissioner thinks are appropriate. 405 Subsections (3) & (4) state that upon receipt of an annual report from the Investigatory Powers Commissioner the Prime Minister must publish that report and lay it before Parliament. These Explanatory Notes relate to the Investigatory Powers Bill as published in Draft on 4 November 2015 (Cm 9152) 53 53 282 However, the Prime Minister may redact information from the report if that information would damage national security or damage operational effectiveness. The Prime Minister must consult with the Investigatory Powers Commissioner before deciding to redact anything from the report. 406 Reports that are laid before Parliament must be sent to the Scottish Ministers and the First Minister and deputy First Minister to be laid before the Scottish Parliament and the Northern Irish Assembly. Clause 175: Information and inspection powers 407 This clause ensures that the Investigatory Powers Commissioner has access to the information necessary to carry out the Commissioner's oversight role effectively. The clause does this by requiring people to provide the Investigatory Powers Commissioner with all the information and documents that the Commissioner may need. They must also provide the Commissioner with any assistance the Commissioner may need when carrying out an inspection. The persons to whom these obligations apply includes public authorities and also telecommunications and postal operators who are subject to obligations under this Act.
--	--

Clause 176: Funding, staff and facilities

408 Subsection (1) explains that the Judicial Commissioners will be paid a salary and may be paid expenses. The amount will be decided by the Treasury.

409 Subsection (2) requires the Secretary of State to provide the Investigatory Powers Commissioner with the staff, accommodation, equipment and facilities that the Secretary of State thinks necessary. It is intended that the resources afforded to the Investigatory Powers Commissioner will ensure that the office is fully staffed with judicial, official, legal and technical support to ensure that the Commissioners are fully able to perform their oversight and authorisation functions and to hold those that use investigatory powers to account. In determining the resources that should be provided the Secretary of State will consult with the Investigatory Powers Commissioner. Treasury approval will be required as to the number of staff. Should the Investigatory Powers Commissioner believe that the resources afforded to them are insufficient then they may publicly report the fact in their Annual Report.

Clause 177: Power to modify functions

410 This clause allows the functions of the Investigatory Powers Commissioner to be changed. This would require the approval of both Houses of Parliament. The ability to change the function allows a level of flexibility about the role of the Commissioner to ensure that it can be modified and adapted to fit with the work that needs to be overseen.

Clause 178: Abolition of existing oversight bodies

411 This clause confirms that the Investigatory Powers Commissioner will replace the existing commissioners who provide oversight of investigatory powers: the Interception of Communications Commissioner, the Surveillance Commissioner (including Assistant Surveillance

	Commissioners), the Intelligence Services Commisisoner and the Investigatory Powers Commissioner for Northern Ireland. The abolition of the Surveillance Commissioner and Assistant Surveillance Commissioner includes those appointed by Scottish Ministers for the purposes of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Act 2000. Chapter 2: Other arrangements Clause 179: Codes of practice 412 This clause provides for the Secretary of State to issue Codes of Practice covering the use of powers covered by the Bill, as outlined in Schedule 6. These Explanatory Notes relate to the Investigatory Powers Bill as published in Draft on 4 November 2015 (Cm 9152) 54 54 283 Clause 180: Right of appeal from the Tribunal 413 Currently there is no domestic route of appeal from decisions of the Investigatory Powers Tribunal, with Claimant's having to issue appeals to the European Court of Human Rights if they wish to challenge a decision. This clause introduces a domestic appeal route from decisions of the IPT on a point of law, to the Court of Appeal (for England and Wales) or its equivalent in Scotland or Northern Ireland (to be detailed in Regulations). 414 Where there is a point of law, the decision on whether to grant permission to appeal will be taken by the Investigatory Powers Tribunal in the first instance. If the Tribunal refuses to grant permission to appeal then this decision may be reviewed by the appeal court. 415 The Tribunal must only give permission to appeal on a point of law where the appeal would raise an important point of principle or practice or they consider that there are other compelling reasons to grant permission to appeal.
--	---

	Clause 181: Functions of Tribunal in relation to Part 4 416 This clause extends the functions of the Investigatory Powers Tribunal in relation to retention notices under Part 4. Clause 182: Oversight by Information Commissioner in relation to Part 4 417 The Information Commissioner must audit requirements related to the retention of communications data, for example, to ensure the data is retained securely. This is distinct from the Investigatory Powers Commissioner's requirements in respect of the acquisition of communications data. Clause 183: Technical Advisory Board 418 This Clause provides for the continued existence by order of a Technical Advisory Board. Its make-up will be prescribed by Secretary of State regulations and must include a balanced representation of the interests of communications service providers and of those people listed in subsection (2b). Clause 184: Combination of warrants and authorisations 419 This clause explains that Schedule 7 (which is explained further below) allows for the combination of targeted interception and equipment interference warrants with other warrants or authorisations. This builds on the existing ability to combine certain warrants and authorisations (RIPA allows authorisations that combine Property interference (under the Intelligence Services Act 1994) and Intrusive Surveillance). Clause 185: Payments towards certain compliance costs 420 This clause requires the Secretary of State to ensure that there are arrangements to secure that communications service providers receive a fair contribution towards their costs of complying with the provisions in the Act. Subsection (6) makes clear that the appropriate contribution must never be nil. Subsection (7) requires that a retention notice under Part 4 or national security notice under clause
--	--

	188 must specify the level of contribution to be made. Clause 186: Power to develop compliance systems etc 421 This clause enables the Secretary of State to develop, provide, maintain or improve equipment that can be used by the Secretary of State, another public authority or any other person to facilitate compliance with the provisions in the Act. The clauses also enables the Secretary of State to enter into financial arrangements with any other person to develop, provide, maintain Clause 187: Amendments of the Intelligence Services Act 1994 422 Subsection (1) describes the act to be amended - the Intelligence Services Act 1994. 423 Subsection (2)(a) adds in to subsection (1)(a) of the existing clause 3 of ISA, that GCHQ can ,make use of' as well as ,monitor or interfere with electromagnetic, acoustic and other emissions and any equipment producing such emissions and to obtain and provide information derived from or related to such emissions or equipment and from encrypted material'. This clarifies that GCHQ may, in the performance of its functions, make use of communications services in the manner in which it was intended they would be used. This could be used for public communications as well as for investigative purposes. 424 Subsection (2)(b) amends ISA to allow GCHQ to provide advice and assistance on the protection of information to other organisations and members of the public as appropriate. This will enable GCHQ to provide information assurance advice to a wide audience on issues which impact not just HMG but also business and the public in general e.g. cyber security. 425 Subsection (3) amends ISA to remove the restriction on GCHQ and SIS to take action in support of the prevention and detection of serious crime in the UK, as well as overseas. Currently ISA only permits such activity where it is in support of MI5. The security and intelligence agencies have a remit to support law enforcement to help prevent and detect serious crime.
--	---

	Clause 189: Maintenance of technical capability Subsection (4) sets out the types of obligations that may be imposed for example in (a) providing communications facilities and capacity to support the implementation of warrants or (d) ensuring the security of facilities or staff who may be required to handle classified material.
Official Secrets Act 1911	Section 1: Penalties for spying. (1)If any person for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State— (a)approaches, [inspects, passes over] or is in the neighbourhood of, or enters any prohibited place within the meaning of this Act; or (b)makes any sketch, plan, model, or note which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to an enemy; or (c)obtains, [F1collects, records, or publishes,] or communicates to any other person [F1any secret official code word, or pass word, or] any sketch, plan, model, article, or note, or other document or information which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to an enemy; he shall be guilty of felony . . . (2)On a prosecution under this section, it shall not be necessary to show that the accused person was guilty of any particular act tending to show a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State, and, notwithstanding that no such act is proved against him, he may be convicted if, from the circumstances of the case, or his conduct, or his known character as proved, it appears that his purpose was a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State; and if any sketch, plan, model, article, note, document, or information relating to or used in any prohibited place within the meaning of this Act, or anything in such a place [or any secret official code word or pass word], is made, obtained, [collected, recorded, published], or communicated

	by any person other than a person acting under lawful authority, it shall be deemed to have been made, obtained, [collected, recorded, published] or communicated for a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State unless the contrary is proved.
Human Rights Act 1998	Section 2: Interpretation of Convention rights. (1) A court or tribunal determining a question which has arisen in connection with a Convention right must take into account any— (a) judgment, decision, declaration or advisory opinion of the European Court of Human Rights, (b) opinion of the Commission given in a report adopted under Article 31 of the Convention, (c) decision of the Commission in connection with Article 26 or 27(2) of the Convention, or (d) decision of the Committee of Ministers taken under Article 46 of the Convention, whenever made or given, so far as, in the opinion of the court or tribunal, it is relevant to the proceedings in which that question has arisen. (2) Evidence of any judgment, decision, declaration or opinion of which account may have to be taken under this section is to be given in proceedings before any court or tribunal in such manner as may be provided by rules. (3) In this section “rules” means rules of court or, in the case of proceedings before a tribunal, rules made for the

	purposes of this section— (a)[the Lord Chancellor or] the Secretary of State, in relation to any proceedings outside Scotland; (b)by the Secretary of State, in relation to proceedings in Scotland; or (c)by a Northern Ireland department, in relation to proceedings before a tribunal in Northern Ireland— (i)which deals with transferred matters; and (ii)for which no rules made under paragraph (a) are in force. Section 3: Interpretation of legislation. (1)So far as it is possible to do so, primary legislation and subordinate legislation must be read and given effect in a way which is compatible with the Convention rights. (2)This section— (a)applies to primary legislation and subordinate legislation whenever enacted; (b)does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of any incompatible primary legislation; and (c)does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of any incompatible subordinate legislation if (disregarding any possibility of revocation) primary legislation prevents removal of the incompatibility.
Terrorism Act 2000	Section 1: Terrorism: interpretation. (1)In this Act “terrorism” means the use or threat of action where—

	(a) the action falls within subsection (2), (b) the use or threat is designed to influence the government [F1 or an international governmental organisation] or to intimidate the public or a section of the public, and (c) the use or threat is made for the purpose of advancing a political, religious [F2, racial] or ideological cause. (2) Action falls within this subsection if it— (a) involves serious violence against a person, (b) involves serious damage to property, (c) endangers a person's life, other than that of the person committing the action, (d) creates a serious risk to the health or safety of the public or a section of the public, or (e) is designed seriously to interfere with or seriously to disrupt an electronic system. (3) The use or threat of action falling within subsection (2) which involves the use of firearms or explosives is terrorism whether or not subsection (1)(b) is satisfied. (4) In this section— (a) "action" includes action outside the United Kingdom, (b) a reference to any person or to property is a reference to any person, or to property, wherever situated, (c) a reference to the public includes a reference to the public of a country other than the United Kingdom, and (d) "the government" means the government of the United Kingdom, of a Part of the United Kingdom or of a country other than the United Kingdom.
--	--

	(5) In this Act a reference to action taken for the purposes of terrorism includes a reference to action taken for the benefit of a proscribed organisation. Schedule 7: Port and Border Controls 2: Power to stop question and detain (1) An examining officer may question a person to whom this paragraph applies for the purpose of determining whether he appears to be a person falling within section 40(1)(b).
Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998	Section 1(43C): Disclosure to employer or other responsible person. (1) A qualifying disclosure is made in accordance with this section if the worker makes the disclosure in good faith— (a) to his employer, or (b) where the worker reasonably believes that the relevant failure relates solely or mainly to— (i) the conduct of a person other than his employer, or (ii) any other matter for which a person other than his employer has legal responsibility, to that other person. (2) A worker who, in accordance with a procedure whose use by him is authorised by his employer, makes a qualifying disclosure to a person other than his employer, is to be treated for the purposes of this Part as making the qualifying disclosure to his employer.

Employment Rights Act 1996

Section 111: Complaints to [employment tribunal].

(1) A complaint may be presented to an [employment tribunal] against an employer by any person that he was unfairly dismissed by the employer.

(2) [Subject to the following provisions of this section], an [employment tribunal] shall not consider a complaint under this section unless it is presented to the tribunal—

(a) before the end of the period of three months beginning with the effective date of termination, or

(b) within such further period as the tribunal considers reasonable in a case where it is satisfied that it was not reasonably practicable for the complaint to be presented before the end of that period of three months.

(2A) Section 207A(3) (extension because of mediation in certain European cross-border disputes) [and section 207B (extension of time limits to facilitate conciliation before institution of proceedings) apply] for the purposes of subsection (2)(a).]

(3) Where a dismissal is with notice, an [employment tribunal] shall consider a complaint under this section if it is presented after the notice is given but before the effective date of termination.

(4) In relation to a complaint which is presented as mentioned in subsection (3), the provisions of this Act, so far as they relate to unfair dismissal, have effect as if—

(a) references to a complaint by a person that he was unfairly dismissed by his employer included references to a complaint by a person that his employer has given him notice in such circumstances that he will be unfairly dismissed when the notice expires,

(b) references to reinstatement included references to the withdrawal of the notice by the employer,

(c) references to the effective date of termination included

	references to the date which would be the effective date of termination on the expiry of the notice, and (d)references to an employee ceasing to be employed included references to an employee having been given notice of dismissal. (5)Where the dismissal is alleged to be unfair by virtue of section 104F (blacklists), (a)subsection (2)(b) does not apply, and (b)an employment tribunal may consider a complaint that is otherwise out of time if, in all the circumstances of the case, it considers that it is just and equitable to do so.]
Terrorism Act 2006	Section 1: Encouragement of terrorism (1)This section applies to a statement that is likely to be understood by some or all of the members of the public to whom it is published as a direct or indirect encouragement or other inducement to them to the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism or Convention offences. (2)A person commits an offence if— (a)he publishes a statement to which this section applies or causes another to publish such a statement; and (b)at the time he publishes it or causes it to be published, he— (i)intends members of the public to be directly or indirectly encouraged or otherwise induced by the statement to commit, prepare or instigate acts of terrorism or Convention offences; or (ii)is reckless as to whether members of the public will be directly or indirectly encouraged or otherwise induced by the statement to commit, prepare or instigate such acts or

	offences. (3)For the purposes of this section, the statements that are likely to be understood by members of the public as indirectly encouraging the commission or preparation of acts of terrorism or Convention offences include every statement which— (a)glorifies the commission or preparation (whether in the past, in the future or generally) of such acts or offences; and (b)is a statement from which those members of the public could reasonably be expected to infer that what is being glorified is being glorified as conduct that should be emulated by them in existing circumstances. (4)For the purposes of this section the questions how a statement is likely to be understood and what members of the public could reasonably be expected to infer from it must be determined having regard both— (a)to the contents of the statement as a whole; and (b)to the circumstances and manner of its publication. (5)It is irrelevant for the purposes of subsections (1) to (3)— (a)whether anything mentioned in those subsections relates to the commission, preparation or instigation of one or more particular acts of terrorism or Convention offences, of acts of terrorism or Convention offences of a particular description or of acts of terrorism or Convention offences generally; and, (b)whether any person is in fact encouraged or induced by the statement to commit, prepare or instigate any such act or offence. (6)In proceedings for an offence under this section against a person in whose case it is not proved that he intended the statement directly or indirectly to encourage or otherwise induce the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism or Convention offences, it is a defence for him to
--	--

	show— (a)that the statement neither expressed his views nor had his endorsement (whether by virtue of section 3 or otherwise); and (b)that it was clear, in all the circumstances of the statement's publication, that it did not express his views and (apart from the possibility of his having been given and failed to comply with a notice under subsection (3) of that section) did not have his endorsement. (7)A person guilty of an offence under this section shall be liable— (a)on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 7 years or to a fine, or to both; (b)on summary conviction in England and Wales, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both; (c)on summary conviction in Scotland or Northern Ireland, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both. (8)In relation to an offence committed before the commencement of section 154(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (c. 44), the reference in subsection (7)(b) to 12 months is to be read as a reference to 6 months.
--	--