Introduction

Due to its geographical position Greece has always been witnessing the movement of populations through its territory. However, the last couple of decades there has been noticed an increase in the populations that do not only cross through Greece but also chose or are forced to reside in Greece. The phenomenon has become even more intense during recent years due to the escalating crisis in the neighboring area of Middle East that triggered an increase of the refugee flows towards Europe.

As a member of the Council of Europe, Greece has the obligation to protect the fundamental rights enshrined in the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) while as a member of the European Union (hereinafter EU) the State constantly adapts its legislation in order to comply with provisions adopted at EU level. A great amount of EU provisions focus on the movement of people and create different possibilities for EU nationals (who hold the citizenship of the Union as well) and non EU nationals who enjoy fewer privileges.

While an important part of the reform of the Greek legal order concerning refugees and migrants can be attributed to the legislative process taking place at an EU level it is important to observe the pace of change in Greece and the level of the progress made. Besides, the great population influx that the country is facing and the special characteristics of its legal system and its society are the elements that created a unique environment for dealing with the rights of refugees and migrants.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

Greece is a party to the Geneva Convention of 1951, The Geneva Convention constitutes the cornerstone and the most fundamental tool not only for giving a concrete definition of the term “refugee”, but also for stipulating some basic principles which guide national legislations in respect of the status of international protection. However, it refrained from setting out or describing a concrete procedure¹⁷⁸⁰ related to the grant of asylum, leaving the national legislators free to formulate their national policies in this matter.¹⁷⁸¹

¹⁷⁸¹ Z. Papasiopi-Pasia, Βασικοί Νόμοι Διχαλόν Καταστάσεως Αλλοδαπών, Sakkoulas Publications, 2002, 165[Greek]; A. Bredimas, Η Αρχή του Non-refoulement: Θεωρητικές όψεις και ελληνική πρακτική, 1990, Νομικό Βήμα, 563 [Greek].

The national regulations governing asylum in the Greek territory had presented various deficits¹⁷⁸² in the past and multiple changes were observed over the recent years. In 2010, the presidential Decree 114/2010¹⁷⁸³ was adopted, aiming to adapt the national legislation to the requirements set by the European Directive EC/2005/85. In 2011, the Law n. 3907/2011¹⁷⁸⁴ established the Asylum Service as a separate unity in the system of the Greek Public Administration for the first time, taking the place of the Greek Police Authorities, which had the presumption of responsibility regarding the asylum application until then. In 2016, after the massive immigration flows, the Greek Government decided to respond decisively to the arrival of a great number of persons seeking international protection. Law n. 4375/2016,¹⁷⁸⁵ which currently governs the asylum procedure in Greece, is the product of this effort for the renewal of the legal framework.¹⁷⁸⁶

1.1. Submission of the application

The right to apply for international protection is recognized to every person not having Greek citizenship. The application for asylum is submitted to the Asylum Service, a special semi-autonomous¹⁷⁸⁷ Directorate, which consists of the Central Service, and the Regional Services, whereas the new legislation establishes some mobile units also responsible for asylum applications. The application should include some basic elements for the identification of the applicant, and the reasons why (s)he seeks protection, according to the criteria of the Geneva Convention of 1951. In addition, applicants have to submit all the evidence¹⁷⁸⁸ that is useful for proof of their claims.¹⁷⁸⁹ In cases of emergency, persons seeking international protection can submit the application to police officers, who have the obligation to promote it as soon as possible to the competent authorities. Once submitted the application, the applicant has the right ¹⁷⁸² Especially in the fields of the authorities responsible for the examination of asylum applications, the existence of unities for hosting the applicants and – the most important- the lack of adaptation to possible massive immigrations flows.

¹⁷⁸⁴ Law n. 3907/2011 (Establishment of an Asylum Service and a First Reception Service) 2011 [Ίδρυση Υπηρεσίας Ασύλου και Υπηρεσίας Πρώτης Υποδοχής].

¹⁷⁸⁵ Law n. 4375/2016 (Organization and operation of the Asylum Service, the Appeals Authority, the Reception and Identification Service, the establishment of the General Secretariat for Reception and other provisions), 2016, [Οργάνωση και λειτουργία Υπηρεσίας Ασύλου, Αρχής Προσφυγών, Υπηρεσίας Υποδοχής και Ταυτοποίησης και άλλες διατάξεις].

¹⁷⁸⁶ The effort of reconsideration of the asylum system put emphasis in the need to adapt to the Dublin III regulation, and respect the guarantees set by the ECHR and the Charter of Fundamental Freedoms, interpreted by the ECtHR, the ECJ and the Greek Courts.

¹⁷⁸⁷ According to the system of the Organization of the Greek Public Administration, there can be units that although they operate under the auspices of a Ministry, they have a relative administrative and fiscal autonomy.

¹⁷⁸⁸ Applicants have to submit concrete evidence founding the fear of prosecution. otherwise, rejection of their application does not have to be specifically reasoned; this view is supported in case 158/2010 [2010] Συμβούλιο της Επικρατείας (Council of State - CoS)[Greek].

¹⁷⁸⁹ R.C. v. Sweden (41827/07) [2007] ECtHR: Refugees and asylum seekers are recognized the benefit of the doubt; The Council of State has ruled that applicants should not be asked to make available to the authorities only typical evidence and that is enough to meet the standard of probability (459/2010 [2010] CoS [Greek], 2192/2008 [2008] CoS [Greek], 1628/2007 [2007] CoS [Greek]).

to stay temporarily in the territory of Greece, by receiving a card/identification of asylum seeker, which is equivalent to a temporary residency permit and valid until the end of the administrative procedure for the consideration of the application.

According to Art. 46 of Law n. 4375/2016, in principle, no alien is set under detention only on the grounds of having applied for asylum recognition (para 1). The same article includes some exceptions to this principle, according to which an applicant can be restricted to a specific unit of detention only for three particular and narrowly interpreted reasons (para 2).¹⁷⁹⁰ Persons in detention are given the right to object to this decision of detention at the President of the competent Administrative Court of First Instance (Διοικητικό Πρωτοδικείο) (para 6).

1.2. Examination of the Application

There are two basic procedures for the examination of the application by the Asylum Services: the normal and the fast-paced one. The fast-paced¹⁷⁹¹ procedure is chosen when a) the applicant comes from a safe country of origin; b) the application is obviously unacceptable; c) there are reasons to believe that the applicant has destroyed documents of his identity in order to mislead the authorities; or d) (s)he does not consent to taking fingerprints by the authorities. The authorities can give priority to applicants regarding the examination of their application when their application is obviously admissible, when these persons constitute a danger for public order¹⁷⁹², and when they are under detention in Centers of Detention and Identification (CDI).

Before the issue of any decision upon the application, a personal interview must be conducted with the applicant and the employees of the Asylum Service. The applicant has the right to be accompanied by a lawyer and take some extension in order to be fully prepared and informed further regarding the procedure. Furthermore, during the interview an interpreter is present, whose expenses are covered by the Greek State.

For accompanied minors, a special Commissioner is appointed by the Public Prosecutor of Minors. The Commissioner represents the minor, ensures that his rights are safeguarded in the context of the asylum procedure and ensures proper legal assistance and representation before the competent authorities. The unaccompanied minor is informed promptly of the significance and possible consequences of the personal interview.

When the applicant has already been granted international protection in another Member State of the EU, or when another Member State has the responsibility to consider his/her application, then the Asylum Service grants a rejection-decision, considering the application as inadmissible. On the contrary, an application is considered unfounded, when the applicant does not fulfill the requirements to be granted the status of refugee or the status of subsidiary¹⁷⁹³ international protection. Asylum seekers reserve the right to submit a subsequent application, after the ¹⁷⁹⁰ a) For the identification of the person, b) when there are grounds to believe that the application has been submitted abusively and in order to delay the deportation and c) when there is an objective risk for escape.

¹⁷⁹¹ Fast-paced procedure does not entail adverse effects regarding the consideration of the application.

¹⁷⁹² Public order cannot be defined unilaterally in each Member-State of the EU; the use of any presumption of public order without taking into consideration the personal profile of the applicant and the specific danger for each applicant violates the obligation for a personalized consideration of each application.

¹⁷⁹³ The authorities have the obligation, after deciding not to recognize an asylum seeker as refugee, to see if they can grant them the status of subsidiary international protection.

rejection of the previous one, provided that they invoke new elements that ground their application. In such a case, there is no interview,¹⁷⁹⁴ except if the authorities need some clarification on the new application. Any measures of deportation are suspended until the issue of a new decision upon request.

The presidential Decree 114/2010 has also included the possibility for Greek Authorities to authorize an asylum seeker, whose application was not considered acceptable, to remain in the Greek territory for humanitarian reasons for up to two years. From 2016, under the regulation 4375/2016 and with the aim to provide a wider protection to the asylum seekers, the Secretary General of Public Order of the Ministry of Interior is permitted to grant the status of humanitarian protection even to those whose application for asylum is still pending at second instance unless there is a risk to national security or to the country's society due to the final conviction of the applicant for serious crime inaction.¹⁷⁹⁵

The applicant has the right to appeal the decision of the Asylum Service following a specific procedure that guarantees the full examination of their claims. This procedure is divided in two parts: the administrative¹⁷⁹⁶ part and the judicial part. After the delivery of the decision to the applicants, they can apply for reconsideration to the local Appeal Committee¹⁷⁹⁷ within a deadline of 15-30 days, by sending a written memorandum explaining the reasons why they believe they should be granted international protection. In principle, the procedure is written¹⁷⁹⁸ and the applicants are not entitled to stand before the Committee and present their claims. After the submission of the appeal, any measures of enforced execution can be suspended, if the applicant claims that the execution of execution of the first- instance decision is likely to cause irreparable harm.¹⁷⁹⁹

If the Committee does not accept the claims, it ratifies the decision in first instance and delivers it to the applicant. At this time, the latter can ask for the annulment of the decision of the Appeal Committee at the Administrative Court of First Instance that serves as a Court of Appeal] sitting with three judges, according to Law n. 3900/2010¹⁸⁰⁰. The applicant cannot add ¹⁷⁹⁴ See also the relevant finding of the ECJ (C-239/14 [2015]), where it was mentioned that when the applicant submits a subsequent application without adding new claims, it would be disproportionate for the Member States to entertain a new full public procurement.

¹⁷⁹⁵ All those enjoying the status of humanitarian protection have access to labor and the same applies to the members of their family.

¹⁷⁹⁷ The local Appeal Committees together with the Central Administrative Agency constitute the Appeal Body, a separate structure under the auspices of the Ministry of Interior.

¹⁷⁹⁸ However, there are some exceptions and the oral procedure is permitted when the case is considered extremely complicated, when there are doubts regarding the legitimacy of the interview, or when the applicants add new claims, based on facts taken place after the decision at First Instance.

¹⁷⁹⁹ However, the claim that the execution is likely to bring about reversal of the social and living relations that the asylum seeker has developed in Greece does not constitute a legitimate reason (17/2014 [2014] Administrative Court of Appeal of Piraeus [Greek]).

¹⁸⁰⁰ Law n. 3900/2010 (Rationalizing procedures and speeding up administrative proceedings and other provisions) 2010 [Εξορθολογισμός διαδικασιών και επιτάχυνση της διοικητικής δίκης και άλλες διατάξεις].

new claims to the ones submitted before the Committee. The Court has the right to exercise only judicial control to the decision and it is not competent to reconsider the facts.

1.4. Revocation of the asylum status

The revocation of the asylum status is regulated by the combined implementation of both the presidential decree 141/2013 and Law n. 4375/2016. The most basic grounds for this revocation are the cases when the refugee sought protection at the country of his/her nationality, acquired new nationality and enjoyed protection under this nationality, has voluntarily re-established in the country which he had left, or the conditions under which he had been granted the asylum status have changed.¹⁸⁰¹ The revocation decision is taken by the Head of the competent Authority of Receipt and must be specifically reasoned. The person is entitled to a personal interview and has the right to submit a written memo to the receiving authority explaining the reasons why (s)he considers that the status granted should not be withdrawn. The person is also entitled to lodge an application for annulment before the Administrative Court of First Instance.

1.5. Conclusion

Since 2013, the Greek State has proceeded to a complete and thorough reform of the asylum system. The adaptation to the European legislation and the international treaties, the respect of the fundamental rights of the asylum seekers and the guarantees of a multilateral examination of the applications constitute the basic elements of this upgrade. The creation of autonomous units and offices for the consideration of the applications ensured not only the rapidness but also the respect to the international protection standards.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Introduction

Generally, the term “immigrant” means any natural person who does not have the Greek citizenship and, thus, the right to enter, and reside in, Greece which right is regulated by specific bodies of legislation. However, the Immigration Code of Greece does not define the term immigrant and uses the term “foreign national” instead. According to Art. 1 para 1 of Law no 4251/2014¹⁸⁰² foreign national means “any natural person who does not have Greek nationality or is stateless”. The same article provides separate definitions for third-country nationals (non-EU Member States nationals) and EU-citizens and regulates the rights of third-country nationals ¹⁸⁰¹Other grounds for revocation can also be the case when there are serious reasons for the refugee to be considered as perpetrator of a crime against peace, war crime or crime against humanity, or a serious non-political crime before the entry into the Greek territory or when is guilty of acts contrary to the Objectives and principles of the United Nations as defined in Art. 1 and 2 of the Charter of the UN.

while Presidential Decree No 106/2007¹⁸⁰³ transposes into the Greek law Directive 2004/38, widely known as “The EU Citizenship Directive” and harmonizes the right of entrance and residence for both EU Member States nationals and third – country nationals, who are members of family of EU citizens.

2.2. The right of entrance and residence of non – EU member States nationals

2.2.1. The right to entrance

According to Public International Law every State has the right to carry out the entry checks and regulate the presence of immigrants, as configured by ECHR and EU legislation.

More precisely, legal crossing of borders of Greece, in geographic terms, means the use of the locations provided for border crossing. The respective ports, airports and land borders are determined by a Ministerial decision. Moreover, when crossing the borders, a compulsory entry and exit check is performed by police authorities. The possibility to overcome the above prerequisites is only available by virtue of a decision of the competent Ministry. In the meantime, any evasion of the crossing points or attempt of illegal entry is punished under the provisions of Law n. 3385/2005¹⁸⁰⁴ both with a pecuniary penalty and imprisonment¹⁸⁰⁵.

In order to lawfully enter Greece a Visa must be obtained by either the Greek Consular Authorities or the embassy of the country of origin. The competent authority shall grant the Visa, after taking into consideration matters of national security, order and health. Nowadays, and in accordance with the primary and secondary EU law, there are two basic types of Visa which are referred to as “National Visa” and “Schengen Visa Types”¹⁸⁰⁶.

A Schengen Visa is obtained by any person coming from a country-member of the Schengen Area and allows its holder to reside legally in any other country within the zone and the European Free Trade Association (EFTA) member States. The National Visa (most commonly referred to as Visa D) is granted for a long period that overcomes the 90 days and can rise up to 365 days, if need be, allowing the holder to reside in Greece for the respective period. Third Country Nationals obtaining Visa D are eligible to reside in Greece solely for the purpose, for which they have been granted the Visa, after the fulfillment of which they must return to their country of origin.

Any refusal of the Greek embassy or the consular authorities to grant the applicants a Visa must be justified, while in the case of a third-country national, member of an EU citizen’s family, a specific and separate reason is further required. When the formal requirements, as provided for in the respective law, are not fulfilled or in cases of commission of a criminal offence or in case of a person subject of an alert in the SIS, this person is denied a legal document permitting him/her the entrance or residence, and is also registered on the SIS, so that any Schengen State can benefit from the central database.

2.2.2. The right to residence

In order to be granted a residence permit, the third country national who has lawfully entered Greece must submit the relevant application to the competent authority prior to the expiration of the Visa he already holds, along with the relevant documentation. Generally, the residence permit is granted to the third-country national that a) produces all the required documents (i.e. passport or any other travel document), b) holds a valid Visa, and c) is not considered a threat to the national public order, security and health. The last restriction is examined only in cases of initial provision or renewal of a long-term residence permit. Lastly, the applicant should have a full health insurance. In case of a renewal, two months prior to the expiration of the existing permit, the interested person should submit the respective application. In case of late submission, a fine is imposed.

When submitting the application, a blue certificate (certificate of registration) with a validation period of one year is provided to the applicant, ensuring his/her legal residence for the aforementioned period. Any initial residence permit lasts for two years and every renewal for three.

After the initial entry and the provision of a valid Visa, the third-country national should ask, in a timely manner, for a residence permit under the conditions set out by Law n. 4332/2015. The main categories of residence permit are associated with certain reasons, such as permission to reside and work, temporary permission issued for humanitarian reasons, permission to study and volunteer and lastly, permission for family reunification. There is also the category of long – term permissions concerning mainly second generation immigrants. All these types of residence permit are issued in the light of the regulation EC 380/2008 as entered in the Greek legislation by the Law n. 4332/2015, as a uniform format for residence permit for third country nationals and as stand – alone document in ID 1 OR ID 2 format.

Special reference shall be made to third-country nationals who are members of EU citizens' families or the partner of an EU citizen. Such persons are enjoying the right of free movement as a reflex of the right of the EU citizen they are related to and can, therefore, join them for family reunification reasons. The regulation of their entrance and residence is determined by the Presidential Decree No. 106/2007, as last amended by Law 4332/2015.

2.3. The right of entrance and residence of EU –Member States nationals

The right of free movement conferred by EU law on EU citizens and their families, as transposed into Greek legislation by the Presidential Decree No.106/2007, ensures not merely the rights to enter and reside, but also to leave Greece and travel to another Member State.

Every EU-citizen with a valid passport or identity card, and/or his/her family members, have the right to leave the territory of Greece in order to travel to another Member State, without the formalities required for third-country nationals (Visa or any equivalent formality).¹⁸⁰⁷

EU citizens are entitled to be admitted in Greece as far as they hold a valid Identity Card or passport, and their third-country national family members should be admitted, if they are holders of a passport or, in several cases, a Visa. If the non-EU national family member does not hold one of the aforementioned documents, before being expelled from Greek territory, he/she must be given a reasonable chance and period to obtain them, or otherwise to prove by any means that he/she falls within the scope of the right of free movement derived from their EU family member.

Pursuant to the right of residence up to three months, EU citizens and their family members may reside in Greece for a period of up to three months, provided that they hold a valid Identity Card or a passport. Same right is guaranteed also to third-country national family members under two conditions: a) they should hold a valid passport or a valid Visa, and b) they should travel in order to meet the EU citizens they are related to. The right of residence for both is retained only as long as the EU citizens and their family members do not become an unreasonable burden on the “shoulders” of the Greek social system.

With regard to the residence for a period of more than three months, its affirmation is divided into four categories of residents, namely: a) workers and self-employed persons, b) citizens that can support themselves and their families and that also possess the requisite health insurance cover for all the members of the family, c) persons wishing to reside in Greece for study reasons, and d) persons that are members of EU –citizens’ family and satisfy the conditions applicable to them, as mentioned above. In case of doubt, further checks may be carried out by police authorities or the relevant authority for Migration policy.

The regulation of residence for up to three month and residence after that point for EU citizens and their family members can be found in Art. 6 and 7 of Presidential Decree No. 106/2007 respectively. The same Decree, following the example of the respective EU Directive, includes provisions ensuring the right of residence of third-country national family members in cases of death or departure of the EU citizen (Art. 11) or the event of divorce, annulment of marriage or termination of registered partnership (Art. 12).

EU citizens who have legally resided for more than five continuous years in Greece, as well as their family members that fulfill the same obligations, have the right to apply for, and obtain, the permanent residence permit in Greece. The term ‘continuous residence’ does not include temporary absence for less than six months per year in any case or more under special circumstances.¹⁸⁰⁸ Once acquired the right to reside permanently cannot be lost, with the exception of two continuous years of absence from the Greek territory¹⁸⁰⁹.

¹⁸⁰⁹ Art. 13 of Presidential Decree 106/2007.

Last but not least, Chapter 6 of the Presidential Decree according to the EU Citizenship Directive provides for a number of reasons pertaining to the restriction of the freedom of movement, namely public policy, public security and public health. The degree of the threat and proportionality shall be taken into account at the phase of decision making. In general terms, the right of free movement is deemed as a cornerstone for the achievement of European integration. It shall not be excessively restricted and it should be reconciled with the right to non-discrimination.¹⁸¹⁰

2.3. The right to leave

The right to leave a country constitutes an important aspect of the cross-border movement of persons.

Since Greece is a member of the EU, every EU-citizen with a valid passport or identity card and his/her family members have the right to leave the territory of Greece to travel to another Member State, without the formalities required for third country national's (Visa or merely any equivalent formality).¹⁸¹¹

The return of an illegal immigrant can only occur based on the provisions of Law n. 3907/2011, which transposes into Greek legislation the 'Return Directive', i.e. Directive 2008/115/EC on common standards and procedures in Member States for returning illegally staying third-country nationals. There are three determined ways for the return: the immediate return, the readmission in another country and the expulsion as an administrative act. Such a decision is issued in cases of denial of residence or of a revocation of the granted residence permit. Under exceptional circumstances, as defined in the Penal Code, the extradition and the expulsion as a judicial act is possible.

Generally, the repatriation policy which requires the cooperation of the illegal immigrant and his/her voluntary departure, is preferred. However, in any of the above cases the return should be executed in accordance with the obligations in regard to international policy and the non-refoulement principle. The person in question should not be expelled to a country where his or her freedom would be in danger, as provided for in Art. 33 of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (Geneva Convention).¹⁸¹² The protection against return to a country where a person has reasons to fear persecution consists a fundamental principle which is binding for the international community.¹⁸¹³

3.3. Sources of funding

The Asylum Service¹⁸¹⁹ is funded by European Union and other resources by virtue of the following funding key programs. First of all, the Asylum Service of the Ministry of the Interior and Administrative Reconstruction, in accordance with Art. 77 (e) of Law n. 4375/2016, is funded by the Asylum, Migration & Integration Fund for the period 2014-2020¹⁸²⁰. Furthermore, a Non-Profit Society called “Solidarity Now” has undertaken the task to support the Agency in order to continually improve the quality of the asylum process at all stages. This support includes, inter alia, the provision of real estate property, the coverage of expenses related to renovations and repairs of buildings and the provision of logistical equipment for housing the services of the Asylum Service and supporting its operation, respectively. Finally, as a follow-up to the cooperation developed by the two agencies, UNHCR has undertaken the logistical support of the Asylum Service¹⁸²¹. In particular, within the framework of the extension of the Asylum Regional Offices network throughout Greece, UNHCR has undertaken the procurement and donation of part of the logistics equipment and the facilities that will host part of the asylum services in Samos.

3.4. Monitoring and evaluation system in place to assure the quality of the service it delivers¹⁸²²

Any migrant has the right to apply for international protection. The application shall be submitted to the Receiving Authorities, who shall immediately complete its registration. Full identification shall include at least the identity, country of origin of the applicant, the name of the father, mother, spouse and children, biometric identifiers, and a brief indication of the reasons why the applicant seeks international protection. The Receiving Authority examines applications for international protection, in accordance with the basic principles and guarantees in the normal or accelerated procedure. Applicants are allowed to remain in the country until the administrative procedure for examining the application for international protection has been completed and their removal is prohibited in any way.

3.5. Venues to obtain redress for cases involving maltreatment caused by that body/entity

3.5.1. Board of Appeal

The right to file an appeal against asylum decisions rejecting an application for international protection or revoking that status is available to all applicants, according to Art. 5 para. 5 of Law 3907/2011. The Ministry for Immigration Policy includes the Board of Appeal¹⁸²³, which examines applications for international protection against decisions of the Asylum Service, according to Art. 3 of Law 3907/2011. Notably, the Board of Appeal was established by law 3907/2011 as a second-grade body for internal appeals against the decisions of the Asylum Service (first grade). Now, with Law 4375/2016, as amended by Law 4399/2016, the new Appeal Authority is established as an independent Service that is directly subordinated to the Minister of the Interior and to the Minister of Immigration Policy.

3.5.2. Withdrawal of the International Protection Regime¹⁸²⁴

When new elements of reason for reconsideration of the regime of international protection arise, the competent Receiving Authorities shall examine whether this status is withdrawn or not. The decision is taken by the Head of the competent Authority of Receipt, upon the recommendation of an officer (operator) specified and specifically motivated.

3.5.3. Application for Cancellation¹⁸²⁵

If their appeal is refused or they are granted subsidiary protection status while they feel they are entitled to a refugee status, applicants for international protection have the right to file an application for annulment before the competent Court. This possibility, the deadline and the

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

Since the beginning of 2017, 12.340 migrants have arrived in Greece according to the statistics of the International Organization for Migration (IOM). In particular, the total amount of migrants that arrived in Greece between the 1st of July 2015 and the 26th of July 2017 is 1.046.609¹⁸²⁶. The aforementioned are the recent trends in migratory flows in Greece under the published data of the IOM.

Moreover, since January 2017, 115.392 people have been travelling to Europe through various transit routes across Africa, Asia or the Middle East. The number of asylum-seekers is 27.853 in 2017, according to the Asylum Service of the Hellenic Republic¹⁸²⁷. The majority of the submitted asylum applications is observed in Athens and the minimum number (only 65 applications) in the Heraklion of Crete. Concerning the nationality of the asylum seekers, most of them come from Syria and more specifically they are 38.918. On the other hand, the smallest percentage of asylum seekers is those coming from Palestine and in particular they are 1.786¹⁸²⁸.

According to the IOM, more than 3.770 migrants were reported to have died trying to cross the Mediterranean in 2015. Most died on the crossing from north Africa to Italy, and more than 800 died in the Aegean crossing from Turkey to Greece. The deadliest month for migrants was April, which saw a boat carrying about 800 people capsize in the sea off Libya. Overcrowding is thought to have been one of the reasons for the disaster¹⁸²⁹.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. Introduction

Greece is a member of the Council of Europe since 1949 and 1154 cases were transmitted for supervision since the European Convention of Human Rights entered into force. On the 9th of December 2016 the Greek State established the “National Mechanism for the Supervision of the Implementation of the Decisions of the European Court of Human Rights” (hereinafter ECtHR) by Law 4443/2016, Art. 62, within the Ministry of Justice in order more successful implementation of judgements to be achieved. Additionally, in aiming comply with the obligation under Art. 46, paragraph 1 of the Convention to be bound by final judgments of the ECtHR in cases involved, Greece has adopted the legislative and individual measures presented hereto per type of violation.

5.2. Ill-treatment by Police Forces and Treatment by Coastguards Amounting to an Act of Torture

In cases *Alsayed Allaham*¹⁸³⁰, *Zelilof*¹⁸³¹, *Galotskin*¹⁸³², *Zontul*¹⁸³³ there was no provision of domestic law of reopening criminal proceedings against police officers. Disciplinary proceedings following a judgment of the ECHR could be reopened if requested by the Executive Committee of “the Office for addressing arbitrary incidents to control abuse” first established by law 3938/2011, in compliance with judgments delivered after the 31st of March 2011. Thus, the reopening of disciplinary proceedings was possible only in the Zontul case.

In view of the above two departments were also established within the Greek Police tasked with the investigation of racial incidents. Within all Security Divisions there are 68 branches examining this type of incidents. Circular letter No. 7100/25/14 instructs police officers to refrain from degrading acts and also an electronic archive collects all complaints for racial incidents. Furthermore, the Department of Internal Affairs of the Greek Police is also responsible for addressing degrading issues. Moreover, the Prosecutor of the Court of Cassation required by circular the immediate transmission to the competent prosecutor of all accusations of ill-treatment.

5.3. Unlawfulness of Detention of Asylum Seekers and Irregular Migrants and Lack of Effective Remedy to Challenge the Lawfulness of Detention

Following the ECHR judgments on the cases *S.D.*¹⁸³⁴, *A.A.*¹⁸³⁵, *Efremidze*¹⁸³⁶, *Tabesh*¹⁸³⁷, *Ahmade*¹⁸³⁸, *Mahmundi and others*¹⁸³⁹, *R.U.*¹⁸⁴⁰, *C.D. and others*¹⁸⁴¹, *Khurosh*¹⁸⁴², *Vili*¹⁸⁴³, *Lin*¹⁸⁴⁴,

According to the provisions third country nationals shall only be detained due to reasons exclusively provided in the applicable legislation.

According to Law 3907/2011, Art. 30 transposing the EU “Return” Directive third country nationals subject to deportation shall be detained, unless no other measure can be implemented. Detention shall be solely ordered if risk of absconding, rejection of preparation to return or be removed or risk for national security exist. Furthermore, third country nationals shall be detained for the shortest period possible. A second instance procedure before administrative courts is also provided by Law 3907/2011, Art. 30 (2), which also demands reviews to be done every three months by the competent for the issue of decision of detention police director or, if detention is extended, by an administrative court. Moreover, Preventive judicial examination of the lawfulness of detention is provided by of Law 4375/2016, Art. 46.

Beyond legislative amendments, following the judgments of the ECHR, all applicants are released.

5.4. Degrading treatment regarding conditions of detention and lack of effective remedy against deficient examination of application, exposition to deportation to country of origin due to inadequate examination of application (M.S.S. case) and conditions of detention (B.M. case) others¹⁸⁶⁴, Law 4375/2016 works in the direction of improving conditions of detention of irregular migrants and asylum seekers. Therefore, seven regional asylum offices and twelve autonomous asylum units operate today, as well as 654 employees instead of 218 in 2014 provide assistance. From 8 June to 31 July 2016 pre-registration of 27,592 persons took place on the mainland as asylum seekers whose application has not been submitted. Additionally, free legal assistance and interpretation is provided to asylum applicants and there is an obligation of information regarding the procedure and their rights. Services are provided by properly trained personnel in cooperation with EASO personnel.

Regarding conditions of detention, the third country nationals subject to expulsion pursuant to the applicable legislation, they are detained in six pre-return centres in which food, clothing and health-care supplies and, if requested, assistance by lawyers and NGOs are offered. Detention in police stations is abolished and especially unaccompanied minors are kept in separate facilities from adults and relocated as they cannot be deported. Examination, organization and implementation of the asylum seekers' and minors' reception is the task of the Reception Directorate.

Regarding asylum procedure third country nationals after being received in the five reception centres, they are kept in the centre for up to 25 days in order to be identified, registered and medically treated. After their arrival they are informed about the followed procedure, their rights and obligations. Three days upon the arrival deportation or readmission shall be decided.

Moreover, in *Rahimi*¹⁸⁶⁵, *Housein*¹⁸⁶⁶ and *Barjamaj*¹⁸⁶⁷ cases the Greek State in order to comply with the decisions of the ECHR received the following legislative measures. According to the Greek law a permanent guardian of unaccompanied minors is assigned by court decision and the prosecutor is the temporary guardian. Given the large number of unaccompanied minors in practice prosecutors appoint ad hoc persons responsible for protection of minors (e.g. school enrolment). In order those violations to be prevented a special commission is founded within the Ministry of Justice to review the existing legislation concerning the appointment of guardians.

5.5. Absence of a maximum period of detention for persons subject to expulsion ordered by national court as violation of the right to liberty and security

For the execution of judgement on *Mathloom*¹⁸⁶⁸ case Art. 74 of the Penal Code which provides for expulsion, was amended by Law 4055/2012, Art. 23 and entered into force on 2 April 2012. By this provision a maximum period of delay in the detention of persons, for whom expulsion was ordered, is set as well as the examination of lawfulness of detention by the judicial authorities.

These delays comply with Directive 2008/115/ EC of the European Parliament and the Council dated 16.12.2008 on Guidelines and joint procedures for the return of illegally staying third-country nationals which apply to the Member States.

As regards individual measures adopted, the Greek Government has compensated the claimant for just satisfaction ordered by the ECHR. On the 27th of April 2007, the applicant was released under conditions (paragraph 18 of the decision).

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

6.1. Introduction

Since the very beginning of its operation, ECRI has managed to organise and monitor the EU member states in order for them to optimise their initiatives and actions towards individuals in need and comply, thus, with the relevant existing framework. Specifically, for Greece, it has recommended many times in the past various ways to deal with the need for a stronger integration policy.

6.2. The latest ECRI Report

As it can be concluded by the last report of ECRI adopted in 2014¹⁸⁶⁹, the Greek Government implemented many of the previous recommendations. More specifically, in 2013 a National Strategy for The Integration of third country nationals was planned¹⁸⁷⁰ in order to provide a better approach towards a more efficient migration management and integration on the basis of EU principles and directives. This strategy suggests specific measures and actions and interventions to be implemented in diverse areas such as services, education and Greek language courses, employment and vocational training, health, housing and quality of life, political participation and anti-discrimination. Yet, according to the report there are no concrete results of this strategy.

ECRI also proceeded to a meticulous assessment of the legal developments concerning the status of migrants and their integration. More particularly, it refers to the new Migration and Integration Code (Law n. 4251/2014) and Law n. 4332/2015 that amended it in an effort to implement in the Greek legislation the EU directive 2011/98/EU.¹⁸⁷¹ Lastly, it assessed the

6.3. 1. Greek National Commission for Human Rights

The Greek National Commission for Human Rights (hereinafter GNCHR), is the independent advisory body in the Greek State specialised in human rights issues. In accordance with the powers conferred to it by its founding Law n. 2667/1998, it has the mandate to monitor the protection of human rights in the Greek legal order, to raise public awareness and to take initiatives towards the fulfilment of the above purposes.

Since 2015 the GNCHR uses public statements or advisory opinions to highlight the nature of the right of access to asylum and the prohibition of refoulement as fundamental pillars of Refugee Law, promote the adoption of integration programs and make strong recommendations to the Greek government and the institutions in order to ensure respect to: the protection of human life, health and safety of all people living in Greece and the effective management, in conditions of dignity, of the migratory flows towards the EU, the observance of the principle of non-refoulement and the unhindered, timely and effective access of undocumented aliens to the international protection processes.¹⁸⁷³ In the light of recent events and of the ongoing refugee crisis, GNCHR has raised its objections towards the agreement between the EU and Turkey.¹⁸⁷⁴

6.3.2. Solidarity Now (NGO)

Solidarity Now has published and proposed to the Greek government in the form of public intervention, a whole plan about the refugee integration that has not been fulfilled by the Greek government. This plan focuses on the languages and communications as keys facilitator of integration, since education and job opportunities available to migrants are very often limited due to language barriers. Furthermore, the creation of a strong state – citizen relationship through the provision of efficient public services can generate trust in government and other institutions, while activity and/or job opportunities can promote peace and security within the destination country, minimising, thus, the tensions.¹⁸⁷⁵

6.3.3. Hellenic Foundation for European and Foreign Policy (HFEFP)

HFEFP has funded a group research which provides an in-depth assessment of integration policies and outcomes in the case of Greece by specifically bringing into focus the needs of migrant groups and the absence of efficient integration strategies on the part of the Greek government. Putting focus in women, the data suggests that formal rights of access to social welfare services and labour rights or the ability to independently secure the acquisition and renewal of a residence permit, are in practice significantly restricted for migrant women due to the predominantly informal nature of their work. Even though female migrants constitute a sizeable section of the total immigrant population, they are largely absent from the formal integration policies.¹⁸⁷⁶ However, as it can be concluded by the present legal framework on migration, the greek government has not took into actual consideration the recommendations of the above mentioned report.¹⁸⁷⁷

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. Introduction

As a country hosting large migrant populations, Greece has been part of various programs in order to address their needs for healthcare. E.g. the “Re Health” program, which officially started in February 2016, aims to support member states of the EU in issues related with the health of immigrants, the constant monitoring of the provision of healthcare, the reassurance of the provision of medical exams and of prevention as a principle and last but not least the collection of data so as to create data bases available in each transfer and relocation of these people within the EU. Moreover, “SOAM” program, which supports organizations that assist asylum seeking population in Greece, supervises the work done by three specific consortia: “Medicins du Monde”, “PRAKSIS” (Greek Red Cross) and NOSTOS. These three consortia are examples of specialized health services created for immigrants and refugees in Greece and operate as NGOs in Greece. Despite the help provided by these programs, access to healthcare provided at a state level shall be thoroughly examined.

7.2. Legal Framework

In the Greek Constitution there are two provisions related to health. Art. 5 para 5 provides that “Everyone has the right to the protection of its health and its genetic identity” securing, thus, the personal privilege to health while prohibiting any harm to a person’s health during medical surgery or treatment without their consent.

Art. 21 para 3 provides that “The State takes care of the citizens’ health” establishing, thus, the social privilege to health. The reference of the article 21 par. 3 to the citizens does not restrict the legislature's power to extend these rights to immigrants, too. Actually, it is supported by a group of academicians that the new provision of para 5 of Art. 5 extends the scope of Art. 21 para 3 because it enshrines the right of every person to the protection of their health. At the same time, immigrants’ right to health can be grounded on Art. 2 para 1 of the Greek Constitution, which declares that respecting and protecting persons’ dignity consists a primary obligation of the State. However, according to theory, immigrants’ right to health based on Art. 2 para 1 of the Greek Constitutions includes only the cases of treatment in emergency situations. It is supported that treatment in cases of emergency is an integral part of the right to health provided to citizens under Art 21. para 3 of the Greek Constitution and depriving non greek nationals from such treatment would violate the obligation to respect the dignity of any human being in the Greek territory regardless of their nationality as enshrined in Art.2 para 1¹⁸⁷⁸.

7.3. Access to the National Healthcare System

The immigrants’ access to the National Healthcare System (hereinafter NHS) is a basic parameter of their integration into the Greek society. Immigrants are separated into two categories: migrants with the necessary documents, who live and work in Greece having a residence permit and migrants without the necessary documents who illegally stay and work in Greece.

Each citizen of a foreign country who has a residence permit enjoys full access to the NHS with the same rights as a Greek citizen. Furthermore, the legally residing migrants who have social insurance and possess a medical booklet, edited by their insurance operator can enjoy the services of the NHS for free or just paying a small amount of the cost. Nevertheless, they cannot obtain a booklet of poverty, which is provided to Greeks who have no insurance and prove to have a small income.

In particular, according to the newsletter 2/2002 of the Ministry of Health the medical and hospital care involves: i) medical examinations in the outpatient clinics of public hospitals, health centers and public regional medical centers, along with paraclinical and laboratory examinations, and ii) administration of medicines with the presence of a doctor who serves in one of the aforementioned institutions, after the director of the clinic provides his approval.

As far as migrants lacking the necessary documents to reside legally in Greece are concerned, their access to the NHS is regulated by art. 84 para 1 of Law n. 3386/2005¹⁸⁷⁹. This provision complies with the interpretation of Art. 23 para 3 in conjunction with Art. 2 para 1 of the Greek Constitution mentioned above and calls upon hospitals, therapist centers and clinics to provide treatment services to third-country nationals who do not have a passport or any other internationally recognized travel documents only when these people are imported in an emergency situation or in the case of underaged children who must be treated in any case.

7.4. Conclusion

Taking the aforementioned into consideration it is more than obvious that Greece recognizes a very restricted right to access to healthcare and an even more restricted right to health to immigrants without the necessary documents.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

8.1. Introduction

The right to education is a fundamental human right and essential for the exercise of all other human rights, and as a matter of fact, it cannot be considered as a privilege of some societies¹⁸⁸⁰. Responding to the high rate of influx of immigrants during the last decades, the Greek Ministry of Education, Research and Religious Affairs tried to focus even more on the integration of migrant children into society through education. National priorities of Greece were the insurance of high quality educational services, which are accessible for all, while respecting children's cultural diversity.

8.2. Legal Framework

Art. 16 of the Greek Constitution and Art. 28 of International Convention on the Rights of the Child (UN, 1989, ratified by Law 2101/1992) guarantee the right to education, which is also essentially an extension and implementation of the right of personal development enshrined by Art. 5 of the Greek Constitution. The right to education is enshrined in Art. 16 of the Greek Constitution which provides the right of equal access to public education by mentioning that “All Greeks are entitled to free education on all levels at State educational institutions. The State shall provide financial assistance to those who distinguish themselves, as well as to students in need of assistance or special protection, in accordance with their abilities.”

Although, the Art. 16 refers to “Greek citizens”, its scope is the protection of the “social citizen”¹⁸⁸¹, in other words, the member of the society, who lives in Greece and participates in social life. Furthermore, a minimum of social protection is enshrined constitutionally for everyone in the Greek territory, and therefore for immigrants without a legal residence. This has been clarified by the Law 2910/2001, which provides that every child living in Greece is entitled to education regardless of the parents'/guardians' legal status in the country¹⁸⁸² making thus the State's school system accessible to migrant children irregularly residing in Greece.

8.2.1. Intercultural schools

Since 10% of students in primary and secondary Greek schools are immigrants, Greek government, seeking to meet the challenge of multicultural classes enacted laws and other legal acts for the implementation of intercultural education dealing mainly with the teaching of Greek language as a foreign language¹⁸⁸³. For this reason, the Law 4415/2016 has improved the already existing legal status of the intercultural schools in Greece focusing on child's best interest.

According to Art. 20 of the new law, "Intercultural Education concerns in structuring relationships between different cultural groups with the aim of the elimination of inequalities and social exclusion". The purpose of intercultural school is the promotion of democratic values, while addressing the discrimination based on cultural differences, xenophobia and racism. For the children living in temporary campuses, the Refugee Education Coordinator (REC) of each campus is responsible to inform the parents and ask for a written consent for the enrollment of each student to school.

8.2.2. Specific Status for refugee children

Due to the increase of refugee flow, the Minister of Education with its decision 131024/D1 has established "Areas of Educational Priority" in school units.¹⁸⁸⁴ The purpose of this educational framework is the integration of refugee children to Greek education, since not only the refugee children do not speak Greek, but also their parents. For this reason, the Greek government has decided to provide extra courses to these children. What is more, it is worth mentioning that there are also a lot of unaccompanied refugee children, who currently live in shelters provided by non-governmental organizations. Since, the state is obliged by Art. 16 of the Greek Constitution to provide for free to all children living in its territory access to education, the Greek legislator has taken some measures.

8.3. Conclusion

Taking all into consideration, the right to education is enshrined by the Greek Constitution and there are many regulations that guarantee this right to immigrant children. Despite the economic crisis in Greece, the government has struggled to focus more on the education of all children. The establishment of thirteen Intercultural Schools, which are located to the places where the majority of the immigrant children live, is its most important achievement by providing language training for migrants, while integrating them to the society through education.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

9.1. Introduction

The Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region (Lisbon Recognition Convention), is an international convention of the Council of Europe elaborated together with the UNESCO. Despite the fact that it has been ratified by almost all Member States of the Council of Europe and by non-member states, Greece has yet to ratify the Convention.¹⁸⁸⁵ Greece, as well as many countries in the EU has a designated National Academic Recognition Information Centre (NARIC) for recognizing academic degrees.

9.2. The Procedure According to the Greek legal order

The Greek NARIC is an administrative body currently known by the acronym ΔΟΑΤΑΠ (Διεπιστημονικός Οργανισμός Αναγνώρισης Τίτλων Ακαδημαϊκών και Πληροφόρησης -Hellenic National Academic Recognition and Information Center and other provisions) (hereinafter DOATAP) which operates according to its funding Law n. 3328/2005¹⁸⁸⁶. The recognition procedure is initiated by the interested parties, by completing the needed documents (Art.11 para 1 of Law n. 3328/2005) and paying the relative fees (Art. 11 para 5 and Art. 18). Degrees obtained abroad are compared to degrees given by Greek institutions on the basis of unclear formal criteria rather than on the basis of an essential, in-depth comparison of an applicant's actual studies and level of knowledge of his field of study. These criteria are based on the duration, the procedure, the ratings and the examinations' success of each university diploma and are described in detail in Art.4 of Law n. 3328/2005. According to Art. 11 para 4 the decisions shall be issued within the period of 60 days¹⁸⁸⁷ from the point when all the needed information are collected but DOATAP can surpass this deadline in case of lack of information and shall issue a justified decision. However, dealing with DOATAP is time-consuming and expensive. It normally takes DOATAP six to ten months to reach a decision about what is required for a degree to be recognized once all the required paperwork is submitted.

In case of rejection of the recognition, the person can request the reassessment of their application by the competent department of DOATAP's Board of Directors within a year after being notified about the rejection (Art 13 para 1). If there is a again a negative result the request is reexamined by a Special Review Committee that is responsible to propose a solution to the competent department of the Board of Directors.

9.3. Special issues concerning refugees

Concerning refugees, problems occur especially when they lack the authentic and sufficient documentation to prove their qualification and it cannot be verified because of emergency. This may be for different reasons, e.g. that the responsible authority no longer exists or archives have been destroyed. In this case the NARIC national information center will be responsible for the recognition of the academic qualification of refugees. If refugees are unable to provide documentation, their qualifications are to be recognized by using alternative methods.

9.4. The European Qualifications Passport for Refugees

A great solution in case of lack of supporting evidence is the European Qualifications Passport for Refugees. This document provides an assessment of the higher education qualifications based on available documentation and a structured interview. It also presents information on the applicant's work experience and language proficiency. The document provides reliable information for integration and progression towards employment and admission to further studies. It is a specially developed assessment scheme for refugees, even for those who cannot fully document their qualifications. The questionnaire is normally sent to candidates three weeks prior to the evaluation, with two weeks to fill it in, allowing the evaluators one week to review it. If the decision is positive, the European Qualifications Passport for Refugees is issued and valid for five years from the date of issue.

The project brings together credentials evaluators from Greece, Italy, Norway and the United Kingdom to facilitate and accelerate the recognition of refugees' qualifications in Greece, their first hosting country. This initiative is a pilot project run by the Council of Europe's Education Department in the framework of the Action Plan Building Inclusive Societies. Partners include the Greek Ministry of Education, Research and Religious Affairs and qualification recognition centers in Greece, Italy, Norway and the UK. The UNHCR Office in Greece also supports the project. The first group of candidates was interviewed from 7 to 9 March 2017 in Athens.¹⁸⁸⁸

9.5. Conclusion

Despite the efforts, the procedure prescribed by the Greek legislation does not facilitate the efficient and fast recognition of qualifications. It is making it very difficult, and sometimes impossible, for graduates (refugees or not) of foreign universities to have their degrees recognized by the Greek state.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

10.1. Introduction

Political participation, consisted of rights of voting and representation, constitutes one of the basic principles of democracy giving the opportunity to all members of a political community to have a fair share in the decision-making processes. When it comes to migrants, political participation can be considered as one of the most important aspects of their integration process. Political participation in Greece is regulated mainly by the State's Constitution (Art. 51 para 3 and Art. 102 para 2)

10.2. Legal Framework

Except the rules of public international law as well as the European law, the legal status of migrants is defined by the Greek Constitution. The protection mechanism that is provided by the latter towards migrants refers to the individual rights, also known as public ones. A great number of individual rights are guaranteed only to the nationals. In this case, the constitutional legislator uses the term 'Greeks'. However, when the Constitution does not intend to discriminate between nationals and migrants, it uses the term 'anyone' or 'no one'. Also when there is no definition regarding the subject of an individual right and given that there is no opposite provision in the text, it is considered as applicable for migrants.¹⁸⁸⁹

10.2.1. National Elections

With regard to formal participation in the country's political life, voting and standing in national elections is restricted to Greek citizens only as Article 51 para 3 of the Constitution explicitly indicates (with an exception that provides special rights to Cypriots). That means that migrants residing in the country without having acquired the official Greek citizenship are not allowed to participate in the decision-making process. Therefore the legal requirement in order for migrants to be able to participate in political decisions in Greece is to acquire its official citizenship. There is no other requirement that facilitates or excludes migrants in the matter.

10.2.2. Local Elections

When it comes to the local government agencies' elections, Article 102 para 2 of the Constitution does not provide any prohibition regarding migrants' political rights. Also, Article 4 para 4 of the Constitution indicates that 'only Greek citizens shall be eligible for public service, except as otherwise provided by special laws'. This implies that although the rights to vote and to stand in national elections are exclusive for Greek citizens, there is a possibility for a migrant not possessing official citizenship to have access and participate in local public life only if it is recognised by a specific and concrete provision.

¹⁸⁸⁹ Papassiopi-Passia, Δίκαιο Αλλοδαπών, Sakkoulas Publications, 59 [Greek].

10.2.2.1. European Citizens

In the 1992 Maastricht Treaty the member States of the EU decided that their citizens who reside in another member State will have active and passive voting rights in the country of residence at the municipal elections as well as for the European Parliament elections. This was introduced with the EC Council Directive 94/80 and therefore all EU member States including Greece, were obliged to transpose it to their national legislation.¹⁸⁹⁰

10.2.2.2. Third-country Nationals

The above does not apply to third-country nationals for whom participation in the political realm requires citizenship acquisition. Although their right to participate in local elections was recognised with Law n. 3838/2010¹⁸⁹¹ as a result of the societal changes, different approaches have given birth to a heated political debate which ended up in its abolition. In particular, Art. 14-21 of the Law were first characterised as unconstitutional and got suspended with the judgment 350/2011 of the Hellenic Council of State (Section IV) and the judgment 460/2013 of the same Court's Assembly. They were finally abolished with Art. 4 of the Law 4244/2014. Court majority's basic argument was that the election body of Locals and Regional Authorities (LRAs) is exclusively consisted of the Greek citizens since they are the only ones who constitute the term 'people', represent their sovereignty and therefore possess the Greek citizenship which is the main criterion in order for someone to exercise public authority either in national or in local level.¹⁸⁹² That argument was confronted by a strong minority which implied that the Greek Constitution does not require the same election body in national and local elections since in the former there is a direct expression of the will of the people whereas in the latter there is only an expression of the State's administrative operation (see Art. 51 para 3 and 102 para 2 of the Constitution).¹⁸⁹³ Furthermore, it was intensely supported that since Art. 5 para 1 of the Constitution guarantees for 'everyone', therefore for legal third-country nationals as well, the right to participate in the country's political life, their participation in the local elections is of utmost importance due to its direct relation to their interests through their daily lives.¹⁸⁹⁴

10.3. Participation in political decisions of the country of origin

¹⁸⁹⁰ Presidential Decree n. 320/1999 (Exercise of the right to vote and stand for election at the municipal and community elections by non-Greek EU citizens residing in Greece in compliance with Directive 94/80/EC) 1999 [Άσκηση του δικαιώματος του εκλέγειν και εκλέγεσθαι κατά τις δημοτικές και κοινοτικές εκλογές από πολίτες της Ευρωπαϊκής Ένωσης που κατοικούν στην Ελλάδα και δεν είναι Έλληνες πολίτες, σε συμμόρφωση προς την 94/80/ΕΚ Οδηγία του Συμβουλίου της Ευρωπαϊκής Ένωσης]; Law n. 3463/2006 (Code for Municipalities and Communities) 2006 [Κύρωση του κώδικα Δήμων και Κοινοτήτων], Art. 25 and 28.

Greek legislation does not include any specific provisions for the participation of migrants in political proceedings in their country of origin. Migrants' political rights in their country of origin are regulated by the laws of the respective country and they can be exercised by contacting the competent embassy.

10.4. Conclusion

At this point, it is worth mentioning that the political participation of third-country nationals in local elections is recognised by a great number of EU member States and at the same time the Council of Europe is strongly promoting through its Group of Specialists on Nationality the implementation of third-country nationals' political participation in local elections as it considers the opposite as an infringement of the dignity of a person and generally of the essence of democracy which is representativeness.¹⁸⁹⁵ Concerning the Council of Europe's efforts, Greece constitutes one of its State parties that continue not to follow its lead on the subject.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. Introduction

Nationality Law of Greece is based on the principle of "jus sanguinis" (law relating to blood), by which the nationality of children is the same that of their parents, irrespective of their place of birth. Conversely, "jus soli" (law of the soil) or more commonly known as "birthright citizenship" is the principle that nationality is dependent on the place of birth. Moreover, since Greece is a member of the EU, a Greek is also a citizen of the EU, and therefore entitled to the same rights as other EU citizens.

According to the "Greek Nationality Code" (Law n. 3284/2004¹⁸⁹⁶ as amended by Law n. 3838/2010, Law n. 4251/2014 and Law n. 4335/2015) there are ten ways to acquire Greek nationality, which is the first step in order to apply for a Greek passport and a Greek national ID. A Greek passport can be issued only for a Greek citizen who is registered in a Greek Municipality and allows the holder to reside and work in all the countries of the E.U.

11.2. Ways to acquire Greek citizenship

11.2.1. By Birth

Birth within the territory of Greece does not automatically confer citizenship. An individual born in Greece obtains the Greek nationality at birth, only in the case that at his birth he does not obtain a foreign nationality or his nationality is uncertain (abandoned children or children of stateless parents).

11.2.2. By Origin, Descent, Ancestry or Raise in Greece

11.2.2.1 Child of a Greek citizen born in Greece (Art. 1 para 1 of Law 3284/2004)

A child of a Greek citizen born in Greece acquires Greek citizenship by birth.

11.2.2.2. Child of a foreign national (Art. 1 para 2 of Law 3284/2004)

A child of a foreign national is automatically Greek if the mother is Greek or the father is Greek and a chain of Greek nationality can be established (for example through properly recorded birth and marriage certificates). Furthermore, if the father is Greek and paternity can be proven, the child will acquire Greek citizenship when an application is submitted for the child to become a Greek citizen, providing the child has not yet reached the age of 18. Grandmothers and grandfathers are also considered, but the process in order to acquire citizenship is longer. It can take up to 2-3 years.

The same applies to children born in Greece by foreign national parents who have lived legally and permanently in Greece for five years. The latest modification of the “Greek Nationality Code” (Law n. 4332/2015) provides for two new nationality acquisition modes via declaration and a transitional provision, and grants citizenship to the children of foreign national parents who were born and raised in Greece: μετανάστες δεύτερης γενιάς (second generation migrants) . According to Art. 1A of Law n. 3284/2004 as amended by Law 4332/2015, a child of parents of non Greek nationality who are longterm residents, may acquire the Greek nationality if he/she lives legally with the proper residence permit and has attended primary/secondary school in Greece for at least six (6) years before age 18, approximately. Deadline to apply is within three (3) years of a child finishing his/her six (6) years of schooling. Additionally, a citizen of foreign nationality who permanently and lawfully resides in Greece, may acquire Greek nationality if s/he has successfully attended nine years of primary and secondary education or six years of secondary or has graduated from a Greek university or technological college (Art. 1B of Law n. 3284/2004 as amended by Law 4332/2015).¹⁸⁹⁷

11.2.3. By Recognition or Adoption (Art. 2 and 3 of Law 3284/2004)

A foreign national born out of wedlock who has been legally recognised by a Greek citizen (either voluntarily or by full judicial recognition) at the time that he /she is a minor, becomes a Greek citizen. Similarly, a foreign national who has been adopted as a minor by a Greek citizen, acquires Greek citizenship upon the day of his/her adoption.

¹⁸⁹⁷ According to an Extract from the Explanatory Report of the L. 4335/2015: “The reason for this proposed legislative reform is the necessity to guarantee the development and smooth integration into the Greek society of alien children who were born or raised in Greece”.

11.2.4. By Enlistment in the Armed Forces or monasticism in Mount Athos (Art. 4 of Law 3284/2004)

Foreign nationals of Greek origin admitted to military academies as officers or non-commissioned officers of the armed services or enlisted in the armed forces as volunteers, in accordance with current regulations, acquire Greek Citizenship upon their admittance to the academies or upon their enlistment. In addition, the children of the above mentioned foreign nationals, who acquire Greek Citizenship, become Greek citizens at the same time their parents acquire Greek citizenship provided that at the time of their parents' application to the Secretary General of the Prefecture they are minors and unmarried. Moreover, according to the Greek constitution, foreign nationals admitted as monks in one of the monasteries of Mount Athos, lawfully become Greek Citizens automatically.

11.2.5. By Naturalization (Art. 5 of Law 3284/2004)

11.2.5.1. Naturalization process and general requirements

There are two naturalization processes. The first is a shorter one for people of Greek origin, descent or ancestry. The second procedure to get Greek citizenship through naturalization is a bit different from the one that should be followed in the case of a minor, because the adult will have to submit documents from the judicial authorities not only of his home country but also of Greece.

First of all, the migrant should be over 18 at the time that he chooses to submit his/her naturalization application. In addition, he/she should not have been convicted during the last ten years until the time of its application (no criminal record or outstanding deportation orders, including the case of pending judgments of deportation) or have been imprisoned for more than a year. Moreover, a foreign national who wants to get Greek citizenship through naturalization, should not have been convicted for dangerous crimes such as crimes against democracy, treason, homicide by intention, dangerous physical offense, drug dealing and trafficking, money laundering, international fiscal crimes, child abduction etc. What is more, in order to apply for Greek citizenship through naturalization a migrant needs to have sufficient knowledge of the Greek language, history, and civilization (Art 5 para 2 point b. of Law 3284/2004). All in all, the migrant should have been legally living in Greece with a long-term residence permit for seven (7) consecutive years prior to the date of application.

11.2.5.2. Marriage as a way to obtain Greek citizenship

Since 1984, marriage does not entail the acquisition of Greek nationality automatically. However, a migrant who is married for three (3) full years from the wedding date and has a child or children with a Greek citizen, and he/she has been legally living in Greece for 3 years with a long term residence permit can apply for Greek citizenship (Art. 5 para 1d of Law 3284/2004) . It is important to point out that the marriage must be legal, registered and still valid. The type of the wedding ceremony (civil or religious) does not have an impact on the naturalization process. In addition, if the foreign national have custody of a child or children who are Greek citizens, and has been legally living in Greece for three (3) years or is single/divorced, married to a foreign national, or married to a Greek citizen with no children and have seven (7) consecutive years prior to the date of application.

11.2.5.2. Refugees

Refugees are recognized under the 1951 Geneva Convention and must have a total of five (5) years residency in Greece (Art. 5 para 1d of Law 3284/2004).

11.3. The procedure for acquisition of Greek citizenship.

11.3.1. Required supporting documents

11.3.1.1. General required supporting documents (Art. 6 of Law 3284/2004)

The alien who is interested in obtaining Greek Citizenship will have to fill out an application for the acquisition of Greek citizenship. The competent public entity during the above mentioned process is the Ministry of Interior (Art. 5 para 2 of Law 3284/2004). However, the Ministry of Public Order, the Internal Revenue Services and Municipal Rolls (Municipalities and Communities) are also involved.

The applicant needs to present a birth certificate. If they fail to present a birth certificate, they can present the decision of political asylum granted to them. Moreover, they need to present a copy of passport or other travel document. Greek passports are issued by the National Passport Centre. Applicants have to apply in person – and in case of a child under 14, accompanied by a parent – at the local police department or at a Greek Consulate Authority.

In addition, they have to present a Naturalization Statement, which is made before the Mayor or the President of the Community in presence of two Greek citizens as witnesses. What is more, residence permit or other documentation of legal residence in the country, and revenue stamp, are also required for the support of the application. Last but not least, the applicant has to present tax clearance note or copy of income taxation statement (Form E1) of the last financial year. The applications usually process within twelve (12) months. Nevertheless, there is no guarantee that any individual application will be successful.

11.3.1.2. Required supporting documents for the determination of nationality and the translation of names / surnames when the parties are married

According to the Portal "ERMIS", the Central Portal of the public administration, which provides citizens and businesses electronic information services, the aliens who are married apply for the determination of citizenship and translation of names and surnames to the respective services within the Municipalities and Communities. The applicants have to present birth certificates for the members of family, marriage certificates of the parents, marriage certificates of the same and copies of their passports. All the required supporting documents have to be officially translated in Greek. The process for the determination of nationality and the translation of names and surnames when the aliens are married is zero-cost, while the processing time is about ten (10) days.

11.3.1.3. Required supporting documents for the registration in the foreigner municipal roll acquiring Greek citizenship by naturalization

Foreign nationals who acquire Greek citizenship by naturalization have to register in the foreigner municipal roll. The competent entity in this process is the Municipal Roll of Athens (Διεύθυνση Μητρώου-Δημοτολογίου). The application has to be accompanied by birth certificate, the decision on the acquisition of Greek citizenship, marriage certificate, solemn declaration of Law n. 1599/1986¹⁸⁹⁸, and a validated copy of applicant's passport. It is very important to point out that the applicant has to present not only the certificates officially translated in Greek, but also the original (in a foreign language) documents with authenticity stamp.

11.4. Dual citizenship

Greece is included in the list of the countries that have no restrictions on holding dual nationality. In addition, a Greek national is a citizen of the EU, and therefore entitled to the same rights as other EU citizens.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. Introduction

The total funding for the refugee crisis from the EU budget to meet these challenges in 2015, 2016 and 2017 amounts to €17.7 billion.¹⁸⁹⁹ The EU was the main source of funding.

12.2. Funding Instruments

First of all, the EU Commission is the main finance provider. It first launched a long-term funding program for six years, between 2014-2020. It transformed the previous funding, the Integration Fund and it replaced it with the AMIF (Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund), which is the main instrument that provided funding to Greece. The first one was implemented from 2007 to 2013 and it supported the integration of migrants in Greece, with a focus on newly arrived third-country nationals. On the other hand, its successor the AMIF, which was first launched as a long-term funding program for six years, between 2014-2020 provides support to Greek national efforts to improve reception capacities, ensure that asylum procedures are in line with EU standards, integrate migrants at local and regional levels and increase the effectiveness of return programmes.¹⁹⁰⁰ This fund promotes the efficient management of migration flows and the strengthening of the European system.¹⁹⁰¹ The second important instrument that provided funding to Greece is the International Security Fund (hereinafter ISF) which supports Greek national efforts to achieve a uniform and high level of control of the external borders and to fight cross-border organised crime. This fund is also used to provide shelter and accommodation, catering, health care, transportation at hotspots, and to ensure this way healthy and safe living conditions for migrants. This is provided to Greece in order to support the Greek authorities as well as international organisations and NGOs operating in Greece in managing the refugee and humanitarian crisis. The Commission has awarded over €352 million in emergency assistance since the beginning of 2015.¹⁹⁰² Finally, the Commission provides to Greece part of the funding of the Humanitarian Aid and Civil Protection (DG ECHO) which is normally used to provide aid to third developing countries. It launched an Emergency Support Instrument (ESI) which had a crucial role for the integration of refugees, as it provided many services such as water, sanitation, hygiene, and shelter with a special emphasis on unaccompanied minors, child-friendly spaces, social support, and education.¹⁹⁰³ The European Social Fund facilitates the integration of migrants and refugees into the labour market.

12.3. Specific Programmes

The Welcommon is a project largely financed by the EU via the UNHCR, which is described as a prototype on finding new ways to house refugees unlike the overcrowded and often dangerous facilities on the Greek islands.¹⁹⁰⁴ Moreover, the EC Commission and UNHCR launched a scheme to provide 20,000 reception places for asylum seekers in Greece. Under this declaration, the Commission is providing funding from the EU budget for the UNHCR to support Greece in developing its asylum reception capacity.¹⁹⁰⁵ Another program implemented by the NGO PRAKSIS regards unaccompanied minors and is supported by the European Refugee Fund (ERF), It is part of STEGI programme and refers to actions for unaccompanied minors who are found in Greece, usually under poor and precarious conditions.¹⁹⁰⁶ Finally, specific reference shall be given to the projects implemented by the IOM which contributed to a high extent to the integration of asylum-seekers such as the Project on protecting children in the context of the

Conclusions

Dealing with refugees and migrants and ensuring they enjoy their rights within a country, requires a multi sided approach. In order to address the increasing influx of populations, Greece has made important steps aiming to solve the various issues.

While in some areas Greece mostly follows the developments at the EU level (e.g. the asylum procedure, the multiple modifications of the Greek Nationality Code, the regulation of the right to residence) there are others that the Greek State is taking its own steps (e.g. enhancing multicultural education by law n. 4415/2016). Moreover, Greece has invested in changing its administrative structure in order to deal effectively with refugees and migrants (e.g. with Law n. 4375/2016) but there are many steps to be taken for achieving this goal. An example of a procedure that needs to be ameliorated can be considered the procedure of recognition of university diplomas and qualifications obtained abroad.

It must be noted that the Greek Constitution has been serving as a basis for further progress during these years of reform mostly due to the fact that it creates a net of protection for a series of basic human rights not only for Greek citizens but for persons in the Greek territory (e.g. healthcare, education, or even the lack of strict conditions for the persons participating in municipal election contrary to the strict regulation of the right to participate in national elections).

Additionally, we shall not oversee the contribution of various NGOs operating in Greece and the assistance provided by CoE and EU programs. From the findings of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and the extensive work of actors such as the Greek National Commission for Human Rights, the NGO Solidarity Now and the Hellenic Foundation for European and Foreign Policy that try to interact with the government to the funding provided by a series of EU programs, Greece has been receiving important assistance that has contributed to the progress that was made.

To sum up, there is no doubt that despite the efforts, many of the provisions adopted in the recent years need to be specified further or become more progressive in order to come up with more solid results. However, taking into consideration the increasing population flows and the overall situation that the country has to deal with, Greece has managed to provide important assistance to refugees and migrants and is focused in complying with the European and International Conventions it has signed and ratified. The protection and integration of incoming populations remains a high priority for the Greek state.

Η «σοτιμία» αναγνωρίζεται εφόσον: α) Η διάρκεια των σπουδών, η διαδικασία διδασκαλίας και μάθησης και οι όροι αξιολόγησης, προαγωγής και αποφοίτησης των σπουδαστών πληρούν τις απαιτήσεις των πανεπιστημίων και των τεχνολογικών ιδρυμάτων ανώτατης εκπαίδευσης της ημεδαπής. The "equivalence" is recognized under the condition that: a) The duration of studies, the teaching and learning process and the terms of evaluation, advancement and graduation of students fulfill the requirements of universities and technological institutes of higher education in our country. Exempted from the condition of the teaching and learning process are τα ιδρύματα τύπου «ανοικτού πανεπιστημίου» (open university), «σπουδών εξ αποστάσεως» (distance learning) και «εξωτερικών πτυχίων» (external degrees), υπό τον όρο ότι τα συγκεκριμένα ιδρύματα έχουν ειδικό πρόγραμμα σπουδών για το σκοπό αυτόν, ότι ολόκληρη η διαδικασία παροχής τέτοιου τύπου προγράμματος γίνεται αποκλειστικά από το ίδρυμα που απονέμει τον τίτλο και όχι από άλλο με οποιονδήποτε τρόπο συνεργαζόμενο με αυτό ίδρυμα και ότι η αξιολόγηση, προαγωγή και αποφοίτηση γίνονται με βάση διαφανείς και αδιάβλητες διαδικασίες, ανάλογες με αυτές που ισχύουν στα άλλα προγράμματα σπουδών με παρακολούθηση.

β) Όλο το πρόγραμμα σπουδών έχει διανυθεί σε ομοταγή εκπαιδευτικά ιδρύματα και τουλάχιστον το 1/2 του προγράμματος έχει πραγματοποιηθεί στο ίδρυμα που απονέμει τον τίτλο. Εξαιρέση ως προς το εν λόγω ελάχιστο ποσοστό σπουδών μπορεί να αποτελέσουν τα διαπανεπιστημιακά προγράμματα συνεργασίας αναγνωρισμένων εκπαιδευτικών ιδρυμάτων. Η διάρκεια των σπουδών υπολογίζεται σε ακαδημαϊκά έτη, εξάμηνα ή διδακτικές μονάδες ή σε συνδυασμό αυτών.

2. Ειδικότερα για την αναγνώριση τίτλων σπουδών της αλλοδαπής που αποκτώνται μετά από τριετή φοίτηση, όταν για τα αντίστοιχα προγράμματα της ημεδαπής προβλέπεται τετραετής ή πενταετής φοίτηση, «ισοτιμία» ή «ισοτιμία και αντιστοιχία» του πτυχίου αναγνωρίζεται μόνον εφόσον ο κάτοχος του πτυχίου είναι και κάτοχος μεταπτυχιακού διπλώματος. Στην περίπτωση αυτή δεν αναγνωρίζεται «ισοτιμία» του μεταπτυχιακού διπλώματος. Η κατοχή μεταπτυχιακού τίτλου δεν κρίνεται απαραίτητη προκειμένου για ισοτιμία με πτυχίο τεχνολογικού εκπαιδευτικού institutions characterized as "open university", "distance learning" and "external degrees", provided that these specific institutions have a special studies programme to this end, that the whole process for the provision of such a programme is exclusively executed by the institute granting the qualification and not by another in any manner collaborating institute, and that the evaluation, advancement and graduation of students is executed through transparent and legitimate procedures, similar to those of other studies programmes that require attendance.

b) The whole studies programme has been attended in equal educational institutes and that at least 1/2 of the programme has been attended in the institute granting the qualification. The only exception to the said minimum percentage of studies can be inter-university programmes for the cooperation of recognized educational institutes. The duration of the studies is calculated in academic years, semesters or credits, or a combination of those.

2. Especially for the recognition of qualifications from abroad, acquired after a three-year period of studying, when the respective programmes domestically provide for four or five-year periods of studies, "equivalence" or "equivalence and correspondence" of the degree is recognized only if the holder of the degree also holds a postgraduate diploma. In this case there is no "equivalence" recognized for the postgraduate diploma. The acquisition of a postgraduate qualification is not deemed necessary in the ιδρύματος. Σε ειδικές περιπτώσεις εντατικών προγραμμάτων της αλλοδαπής τριετούς διάρκειας, όταν τα αντίστοιχα πανεπιστημιακά προγράμματα της ημεδαπής είναι τετραετούς διάρκειας, είναι δυνατόν με ειδικά αιτιολογημένη απόφαση του οικείου Τμήματος του Διοικητικού Συμβουλίου (Δ.Σ.) του Οργανισμού, να χορηγηθεί «ισοτιμία» ή «ισοτιμία και αντιστοιχία» στο πτυχίο χωρίς παράλληλη συνεκτίμηση μεταπτυχιακού διπλώματος. Στη σχετική απόφαση λαμβάνονται υπόψη συγκεκριμένα ποιοτικά και ποσοτικά κριτήρια και ιδίως οι διδακτικές μονάδες (credits) του προγράμματος σπουδών του αλλοδαπού ιδρύματος και η τυχόν αξιολόγηση ή πιστοποίηση του από αναγνωρισμένους φορείς ανώτατης εκπαίδευσης. Η απόφαση αυτή δημοσιοποιείται.

case of equivalence with a degree from a technological educational institute. In special cases of intensive programmes abroad, of a three-year duration, when the respective university programmes domestically are of a four-year duration, it is possible, by a specially justified decision of the competent Department of the Center's Board of Directors, to provide "equivalence" or "equivalence and correspondence" for a degree, without simultaneously taking into account a postgraduate diploma. In order to make this decision, they take into account specific qualitative and quantitative criteria, and especially the credits of the studies programme in the foreign institution and any evaluation or certification of the institution by recognized higher education bodies. This decision is published.

3. "Equivalence and correspondence" is recognized if the conditions for the recognition of the qualification's "equivalence" apply and additionally of the interested party has been taught and successfully examined in the principal subjects of the equivalent domestic studies programme. The Center can demand additional successful examination in a number of subjects in higher education institutions domestically. The additional subjects cannot exceed 6 in number. This number can be increased up to ten, when regarding the recognition of foreign qualifications as equivalent to qualifications acquired domestically after studies of a duration of at least five years. If the difference of the domestic studies programme from the foreign

4. Τα ανώτατα εκπαιδευτικά ιδρύματα υποχρεούνται να δέχονται, μέσα στις δύο επόμενες από την υποβολή στο ίδρυμα της σχετικής αίτησης του ενδιαφερομένου εξεταστικές περιόδους, υποψηφίους που παραπέμπονται από τον Οργανισμό για εξέταση σε συμπληρωματικά μαθήματα σε αριθμό τουλάχιστον ίσο με το 10% των εισακτέων στα αντίστοιχα Τμήματα κατά το συγκεκριμένο ακαδημαϊκό έτος. Παράλειψη της υποχρέωσης τους αυτής συνιστά παράβαση καθήκοντος.

5. Ο Οργανισμός σε συνεργασία με πανεπιστημιακά και τεχνολογικά τμήματα ανώτατης εκπαίδευσης διενεργεί ειδικές γραπτές εξετάσεις για την αξιολόγηση των απαιτούμενων συμπληρωματικών μαθημάτων και για τον έλεγχο των αποκτηθεισών γνώσεων, όταν το κρίνει σκόπιμο. Οι εξετάσεις μπορεί να γίνονται και με τη μέθοδο των ερωτήσεων πολλαπλών επιλογών, η δε βαθμολογία των δοκιμιών των εξεταζομένων μπορεί να γίνεται και με ηλεκτρονικό τρόπο. Η εξεταστέα ύλη προσδιορίζεται εκ των προτέρων, ισχύει για ένα έτος, ανακοινώνεται δημοσίως και έχει το αντίστοιχο επιστημονικό επίπεδο των εξετάσεων που διοργανώνουν τα ημεδαπά ανώτατα εκπαιδευτικά ιδρύματα για την απόκτηση του αντίστοιχου πτυχίου. Μετά την ανακοίνωση των αποτελεσμάτων οι programme is so significant as to not be able to provide "equivalence and correspondence" of the qualification even with the additional examination in six or, accordingly ten subjects, then "equivalence" is recognized if there are the conditions of article 4 par. 1. The additional subjects are defined by the respective Department of the Center's BoD, following a proposal by the competent Executive Committee.

4. The higher education institutions are under the obligation to accept, within the two following exam periods from the submission to the institution of the relevant application by the interested party, candidates referred by the Center for examination in additional subjects in numbers equal to at least 10% of enrolled students in the respective Departments on the current academic year. Any omission to carry out this obligation constitutes a violation of duty.

5. The Center, in cooperation with universities and technological institutes of higher education, executes special written examinations for the evaluation of the required additional subjects and the examination of the knowledge acquired, when it deems it necessary. The exams may be executed by multiple choice questions and the grading of candidates' essays may be executed electronically. The subject-matter under examination is defined a priori, is valid for one year, is publicly announced and is of a similar scientific level as the exams organized by the domestic higher education institutions for the acquisition of the respective degree. After the announcement of the results, the Ειδικότερα θέματα ως προς τον τρόπο διεξαγωγής των εξετάσεων και τη διαδικασία επαναβαθμολόγησης ορίζονται με απόφαση του Υπουργού Εθνικής Παιδείας και Θρησκευμάτων μετά από πρόταση του Δ.Σ. του Οργανισμού κατά το άρθρο 15 παρ. 2. α) Ο Πρόεδρος αναθέτει το φάκελο του ενδιαφερομένου σε ειδικό εισηγητή, ο οποίος, μετά τη συγκέντρωση όλων των απαραίτητων στοιχείων, συντάσσει εισήγηση. Στη συνέχεια, εφόσον υπάρχει προηγούμενο αναγνωρίσεως ή μη όμοιων τίτλων, ο φάκελος εισάγεται στον Πρόεδρο, αρμόδιο να εκδώσει τη σχετική απόφαση. Αν ο Πρόεδρος διαφωνεί με την εισήγηση του ειδικού εισηγητή, το θέμα εισάγεται για απόφαση στην αρμόδια Ε.Ε. Όταν δεν υπάρχει προηγούμενο αναγνωρίσεως ή μη ισοτιμίας όμοιων τίτλων, αρμόδια να αποφασίσει, θετικά ή αρνητικά, είναι η Ε.Ε. Εάν στην Ε.Ε. δεν υπάρξει ομοφωνία, το θέμα παραπέμπεται στο αρμόδιο Τμήμα.

β) Όταν ζητείται αναγνώριση «ισοτιμίας και αντιστοιχίας» και αν ακόμη υπάρχει προηγούμενη αναγνώριση απλής ισοτιμίας του συγκεκριμένου τίτλου, απαιτείται επιπλέον και εισήγηση ακαδημαϊκού συμβούλου σχετικά με την ανάγκη συμπληρωματικής εξέτασης σε συγκεκριμένα μαθήματα. «Ισοτιμία και αντιστοιχία» μπορεί να αναγνωρισθεί με ή χωρίς πρόσθετα μαθήματα.

γ) Οι αποφάσεις επί περιπτώσεων ομοίων τίτλων που εκδίδονται από τις Ε.Ε., τα Τμήματα ή τον Πρόεδρο αποστέλλονται στο Δ.Σ. για ενημέρωση και στη συνέχεια για δημοσιοποίηση κατά το τμήμα μόνον που αφορά τις προϋποθέσεις «ισοτιμίας» και «ισοτιμίας και αντιστοιχίας» των συγκεκριμένων προγραμμάτων σπουδών.

a) The President assigns the interested party's file to a special mover, who after the collection of all the necessary data, drafts a proposal. Then, provided there is a prior case of recognition or not of identical qualifications, the file is forwarded to the President who is competent to issue a relevant decision. If the President disagrees with the proposal by the special mover, the issue is forwarded to the competent E.C. When there is no prior recognition or not of equivalence for identical qualifications, the competent body to decide positively or negatively is the E.C. If the E.C. cannot make a unanimous decision, the issue is referred to the competent Department.

b) When recognition of "equivalence and correspondence" is requested, and even if there is a prior recognition of a simple equivalence of the specific qualification, the additional proposal by an academic consultant is needed, on the need to take an additional examination on specific subjects. "Equivalence and correspondence" may be recognized with or without additional subjects.

c) The decisions on cases of identical qualifications issued by the E.C., the Departments or the President, are sent to the BoD for notification and the to be published, only in what concerns the section referring to the conditions of "equivalence" and "equivalence and correspondence" of the specific studies programmes.

Introduction

Ireland has a number of procedures in place for accepting migrants, each varying in length and complexity of procedure depending on the type of migration application. Migrants from EU and EEA countries are least burdened by bureaucracy by virtue of the free movement of people principle enshrined in EU law. Asylum seekers in Ireland are dealt with through the Direct Provision system, a process which both the delays involved and the conditions in which people live has been criticised by a number of human rights bodies including the UN. The following report aims to explain these variables in Irish migration law and the impact that these may have on accessing services and participation in Irish society at large.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

Asylum in Ireland is regulated under the International Protection Act 2015. This act replaced the Refugee Act of 1996 and significantly amended asylum law in the country. The most important reform that the 2015 International Protection Act introduced was a single procedure whereby refugee status, subsidiary protection, and leave to remain are all examined together in one procedure; having previously been evaluated separately. The Immigration Act 2004 stipulates that the conditions for being unlawfully present in the State do not apply to people who are in the process of applying for asylum, nor does it apply to a refugee who is the holder of a declaration which is in force.¹⁹⁰⁸

While the Minister for Justice and Equality oversees the asylum process in Ireland, applications for asylum are processed at the International Protection Office in Dublin run by the Irish Naturalisation and Immigration Service (INIS). The International Protection Act 2015 stipulates that refugees have the option to apply for asylum and subsidiary protection in Ireland. In order to apply for asylum there must be sufficient evidence that the applicant is unable to return to their home country due to fear or prosecution; are unable to live safely in any part of their country; and not have been able to get adequate protection from the authorities in their own country.¹⁹⁰⁹ The Minister for Justice and Equality is responsible for declaring whether a country is to be deemed a safe country of origin. Applications from countries deemed as safe are less likely to be successful in being granted asylum than applicants who are coming from countries not deemed a safe country of origin.

Asylum can be applied for at the Irish border as soon as the applicant enters the airport/ferry port. Asylum can also be applied for in Ireland if the applicant finds that they cannot return to their country for fear of prosecution. The procedure for granting asylum begins with the applicant being interviewed by an immigration officer, during which the grounds on which the application will be assessed are discussed to ascertain the applicant's reasons for applying for international protection. All applicants have the right to seek legal or interpretive assistance.¹⁹¹⁰ The applicants are required to have their photograph taken and may also be asked to provide fingerprints; refusing to provide fingerprints results in the applicant being deemed as failing to cooperate with the process, affecting the credibility of the application and may result in the application being withdrawn.¹⁹¹¹ Applicants have permission to remain in the state whilst their application is being processed and are given documentation in the form of a temporary residence certificate. In 2000 the Irish Government established the system of Direct Provision, with the purpose of providing support and assistance to asylum seekers as they wait to have their applications for protection processed. This support is given by means of accommodation, food, and education as well as a weekly allowance for both adults and children.¹⁹¹² Applicants living in Direct Provision do so under strict conditions. The prohibition on employment while in Direct Provision was recently found by the Supreme Court to be in breach of the right to work provision guaranteed by the Irish Constitution.¹⁹¹³

For children seeking asylum, the Child and Family Agency (TUSLA) has a social work team for separated children seeking asylum. Separated children are referred to the team by immigration services and will see a social worker and receive an initial assessment. If appropriate, an application for asylum will be made on the child's behalf. An assessment will be carried out on the child to establish the possibility of family reunification or the possibility of their return to their country of origin; medical assessment and care will be carried out if necessary, as well as a trafficking assessment and abuse disclosure, and psychology assessment and intervention if needed.¹⁹¹⁴

In some cases, it may be that Ireland is not the correct country to process an asylum request. The EU's Dublin III Regulation¹⁹¹⁵ determines which country is responsible for processing an asylum application. Where another EU Member State has offered a visa or a work permit to the person claiming refugee status, or where they crossed the border of another Member State before arriving in Ireland, then it is the responsibility of that first State to take charge of the application process.¹⁹¹⁶ If an applicant does not fit the strict definition of a refugee, as set out in national law, they may instead apply for subsidiary protection. Subsidiary protection was introduced after the case of *MM v Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform*¹⁹¹⁷ where the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) found that Ireland had failed to implement EU law on this subject and held that an applicant who has applied for subsidiary protection after their application for asylum has been rejected should be granted a fresh hearing.

Once an applicant has been granted international protection under the International Protection Act 2015, as a refugee or subsidiary protection, they are granted certain rights. Those granted international protection have the right to enter employment, to access education and training, to receive the same medical care and social welfare as Irish citizens, and to reside in the State for at least 3 years, as well as having the same rights of travel as Irish citizens. They can also apply to the Minister for Justice and Equality for permission for a member of their family to enter and reside in the State.¹⁹¹⁸

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

Nationals from any EU member state automatically benefit from rights conferred on them by EU treaties. The free movement of persons is one of the cornerstones of the European Union. The idea of European citizenship was first proposed by the Maastricht treaty and it is this citizenship that determines the right of free travel by EU nationals. Council Directive 2004/38/EC confirms the right of EU nationals and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the member states. EU Directives on the free movement of persons are implemented into Irish National law under the European Communities (Free Movement of Persons) Regulations 2015. Under these regulations, nationals of any EU state may enter Ireland for a period of three months under any conditions. For any period longer than three months, EU nationals may remain in the host State provided they can satisfy the minister that they are seeking employment and have a realistic prospect of gaining employment. A Union citizen may also remain in the host state if they:

- Are in employment or in self-employment in the State;
- Have sufficient resources for themselves and family members so as not to become an unreasonable burden on the social assistance system of the State, and have comprehensive sickness insurance in respect of themselves and family members;
- Are enrolled in an educational establishment accredited or financed by the State for the principle purpose of following a course of study there.

Under these regulations, a person residing in a member state may continue to reside in said member state as long as they continue to fulfil the aforementioned requirements. An EU citizen is entitled to permanent residence status after living in the host state for a continuous period of five years. EU nationals must be able to provide a valid national identification card or passport as proof of their EU citizenship and must neither be suffering from a disqualifying disease under the regulations nor be a threat to public policy or public security.

Persons who are citizens of non-EU states may have rights under the European Communities (Free Movement of Persons) Regulations 2015 should they be considered a qualifying family member under the regulations. Under these regulations, a qualifying family member is-

- The Union citizen's spouse or civil partner,
- A direct descendant of the Union citizen, or of the Union citizen's spouse or civil partner and is under the age of 21 or a dependent of the Union citizen, or of his or her spouse or civil partner
- A dependent direct relative in the ascending line of the Union citizen, or of his/ her spouse or civil partner.

Such family members may apply to the Minister for a residence card within three months of either arriving in the country or of being declared a qualified family member.

Immigration of non-EU nationals is governed in the Immigration Acts 1999-2004, and related statutory instruments. A visa allows a person to travel to Ireland but does not guarantee that said person will be allowed into the country, also known as "leave to land." The 2004 Act lists the circumstances in which a person will be denied entry into Ireland, such as having one of a number of diseases, where the person does not have a visa when required to do so or where they are not in a position to support themselves and any accompanying dependants.

Nationals from the EU, EEA countries or Switzerland, do not require a visa to enter Ireland for a period of less than three months, all other nationals require permission to enter Ireland for up to 90 days.¹⁹¹⁹ All short stay visas allow the holder to travel to Ireland for tourism or study for up to 90 days. Visas for stays of more than 90 days can be applied for under different categories, including those who have received an employment permit, business permission or a working holiday authorisation, students attending a recognised full-time course for at least one year, and spouses and civil partners of Irish nationals.¹⁹²⁰ A General Employment Permit can be issued for an initial period of two years and can be renewed for a further three years, after which the applicant may apply for long term residency to the Irish Naturalisation and Immigration Service.¹⁹²¹ An employment permit is not a residence permit, and non-EEA nationals are required to register with the Garda National Immigration Bureau in order to be legally resident in the state.¹⁹²² Non-EEA nationals may apply for citizenship through naturalisation by calculation of reckonable residence. reckonable residence will be determined by registration with Immigration.¹⁹²³ Reckonable residence may be calculated by using the time accumulated by the applicant on certain 'stamps'. Stamps are used to determine the type of permission an applicant has, including the activities that can and cannot be carried out in Ireland, and the time period that the applicant can stay in Ireland.¹⁹²⁴ These stamps, when endorsed on a passport, give the applicant permission to remain in Ireland, subject to the conditions of the given stamp. The onus is then on the applicant to renew the permission in order not to be in the country illegally. Upon gaining employment in Ireland, all non-national employees are entitled to the same rights in the workplace as Irish employees.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

As set out above, the Department of Justice and Equality, and more specifically the Minister for Justice and Equality are tasked with managing Ireland's migration policy. In the case of refugees claiming asylum the Department deals with this through the system of Direct Provision. However, there are two other key government bodies who deal specifically with migration, first the Irish Naturalisation and Immigration Service (INIS), and secondly the Garda National Immigration Bureau (GNIB). INIS is responsible for undertaking the administrative functions of the Minister for Justice and Equality in relation to immigration, visa, international protection, and citizenship matters. The GNIB meanwhile deals with all police matters relating to immigration such as border control, registrations, granting permission to remain, deportations and investigations relating to illegal immigration and human trafficking.

The INIS operates under two main frameworks; the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act 2004 and the International Protection Act 2015. The Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act 2004 provides an outline through which migrants may seek naturalisation and becoming Irish citizens. The process and details of how this process works and the requirements that need to be met are outlined in Part III. The INIS have used this legislation to work on behalf of the Department of Justice and administer the matters of asylum, immigration, and citizenship issues. The GNIB also operates under the same legislation previously mentioned by the INIS. When seeking to deal with trouble experienced during the process, a complaint system is in place whereby those with a grievance may write a letter or email to the customer services department to seek a redress. The Quality Customer Service Office will handle any cases of mistreatment or misconduct. The Garda Ombudsman deals with any issues that arise with An Garda Síochána (the Irish Police Force), including the GNIB.

The Diversity in the Economy and Local Integration Project (DELI Project), co-funded by the Council of Europe and European Integration Fund was set up in 2014 to help promote diversity and integration of migrants at a local level in their communities. A range of activities have been set up to help the migration process easier for migrants, such as support for migrant owned businesses, public and private dialogues to include migrant participation at the local level, ensuring the needs of the migrant community is met through economic and social inclusion policies and using state aid to increase awareness of any migrant issues raised at a local level.¹⁹²⁵

Another facility set up is the Reception and Integration Agency (RIA), a branch of the Department of Justice and Equality. The RIA deals with accommodation and provides a number of different services to asylum seekers who are under the Direct Provision system. The aim of RIA is to ensure that the needs of the migrants are met and they undergo regular process to review their situations. Before the implementation of RIA, asylum seekers were treated as homeless under the legislation. RIA has had a major impact in ensuring the high standard of living for migrants and ensuring that their accommodation needs are met.¹⁹²⁶

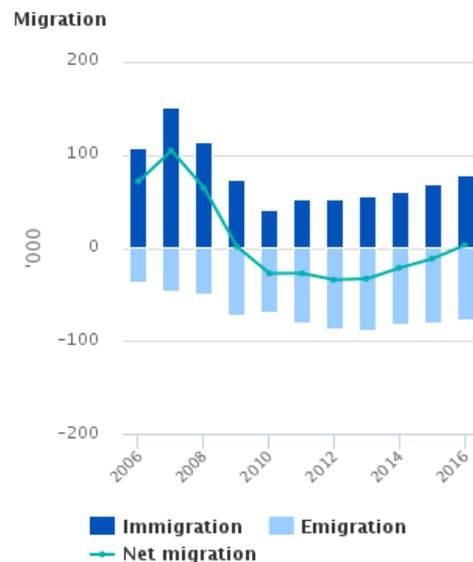

Lastly, the Office for Migrant Integration (OMI) plays an integral part in ensuring the successful integration of migrants into Irish society. This is achieved by actively promoting policies which encourage migrant participation in larger society. The OMI has a very accessible website¹⁹²⁷ which has links to all information relating to migrant affairs and can be easily navigated. The Office works across a number of different government departments to improve migrant integration and to develop migrant policy. Its function is to promote the integration of legal immigrants, manage the resettlement of migrants and to co-ordinate responses to racism relating to integration.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

From 2009 to 2016, the number of migrants coming to Ireland has varied each year. In 2009, just less than 75,000 migrants arrived in Ireland while in 2010, this dropped to around 35,000. However, since 2010 this number has steadily increased back to its 2009 level of around 76,000 according to the European Migration Network on their website.¹⁹²⁸ Statistics have shown that immigrants to the State have increased by 15% in 2016 from 69,300 to 79,300. According to the INIS Immigration in Ireland Annual Review, ‘The number of citizens from non-EU countries legally living here at the end of 2016 rose to approximately 115,000, compared to 114,000 at the end of 2015. Visa applications rose by 7% compared to 2015, to more than 124,000.’¹⁹²⁹ The current top 5 registered nationalities, which account for over 48.5% of all persons registered, are Brazil (13.2%), India (12.2%), China (9.2%), USA (7.9%) and Pakistan (6%). INIS received nearly 14,500 applications for residency in 2016 alone as stated in the review.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

The European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) establishes the binding force and execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). Parties are must abide by any final judgment of the ECHR in their case.¹⁹³⁰ In order for the Court to properly protect and vindicate the rights of citizens, judgments must be affected at the domestic level. ‘[A] judgment of the European Court of Human Rights is not an end in itself, but a promise of future change, the starting point of a process which should enable rights and freedoms to be made effective.¹⁹³¹

The ECHR states that the Committee of Ministers, as the executive arm of the Council of Europe, will supervise the implementation of the Court's decisions.¹⁹³² This function is essential, as the responsibility of States to implement decisions at the national level is fundamental in giving effect to the convention. The ECtHR requires 'unequivocal respect for and follow-up to its decisions in the Council of Europe member countries. This alone will provide the Court with the authority it needs in order to protect the fundamental rights of our people.'¹⁹³³ The role of the Committee of Ministers has intensified with the introduction of Protocol 14. The Protocol introduced significant changes aimed at ensuring the effective implementation of ECtHR decisions.¹⁹³⁴ Notably, Article 16 provides for infringement proceedings to be brought against a State for violating the ECHR by failing to implement a decision of the Court. Any state which is found to have violated the ECHR is required to execute the decision of the Court. This may entail the payment by the state of a sum of money to the complainant in the case: this is known as "just satisfaction". In order to achieve restitutio in integrum, and to avoid the commission of the same human-rights violation, the state may be required to change its domestic law.

While decisions of the ECtHR are binding, the Court applies a strong margin of appreciation leaving it to national authorities to determine 'the choice of the means to be used in its domestic legal system to give effect to the obligation under Article 53.'¹⁹³⁵ The Court has no authority to indicate how effect should be given to its rulings, as it retains no developed understanding of the domestic legal systems of the contracting parties, and lacks jurisdiction to specify how decisions should be implemented.

The Irish Constitution guarantees, its citizens, a number of express rights, mainly civil and political in nature. However during the 1960's and into the 70's and 80's the Irish Supreme Court also developed a number of unenumerated rights flowing from natural law. Any legislation enacted in Ireland must be in conformity with the provisions contained in the Constitution or will be held by the Courts to be unconstitutional. The Irish system of constitutional supremacy entangled with the common law traditions of judge lead law perhaps places Ireland in the unique position to build a collaborative relationship with the application of ECtHR decisions. Ireland incorporated the ECHR into domestic law on a sub constitutional basis in 2003 through the European Convention on Human Rights Act meaning the Constitution retains primacy over ECHR, and where conflict arises, preference will be given to the Constitution. However in the case of *J Mc D v L*¹⁹³⁶ the Irish Supreme Court stated that it was willing to give effect to the decisions of ECtHR and interpret them in line with the constitution.

The decision in *J Mc D v L*¹⁹³⁷ is of particular interest when considering that the binding nature of ECtHR judgments only extends to the parties concerned in the proceedings and is not generally binding on contracting states.¹⁹³⁸ While on the face of it, decisions of ECtHR where Ireland is not a party is not binding on the Irish Courts, the Supreme Court may be willing to give effect to the decision to ensure that the Irish legal order complies with the Convention. This is even more so given the ECHR Act 2003 requires judicial notice of decisions in all cases, and that due account should be taken of the “principles laid down” in such decisions by the Irish courts when interpreting and applying the provisions of the Convention.¹⁹³⁹ The courts have a duty therefore, when interpreting the content of Irish law, to be guided by the jurisprudence of the Strasbourg court, and the principles established by it. Domestic courts may go further than the Strasbourg court in the protection it offers, and the Irish courts should build on the jurisprudence of the Strasbourg courts in offering greater protection to migrants.

Human rights protection applicable to migrants is expressly provided by the Council of Europe legal instruments. Non-nationals on the territory or under the jurisdiction of the States Parties will enjoy the standards of the ECHR, and in some cases the European Social Charter. The rights of migrants are protected by the European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers. Other Conventions, such as the Convention on Action Against Trafficking in Human Beings and the European Convention of the Prevention of Torture are also applicable to migrants.

The right to respect for private and family life is included in the Convention at Article 8, and it is under this Article that the majority of cases regarding migrants are brought. Case law shows that state discretion in the sphere of immigration law is limited by Article 8.¹⁹⁴⁰ Jurisprudence indicates that deportation of migrants will be in breach of Article 8 if it constitutes a disproportionate disruption of the private and family life of the individual concerned, or of family members lawfully resident in the State. Article 8 may provide further protection to migrants who have integrated into the social fabric of the state. The ECtHR has recognised that the ‘solidity of social, cultural and family ties with the host country and the country of destination’ should be considered with sufficient weight with regard to migrants.¹⁹⁴¹

The Irish courts have followed the precedent of the court in Strasbourg by considering the extent to which migrants have settled and integrated into the state. In the case of *Ogunweke v Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform*¹⁹⁴², regard was given to the amount of time spent by the migrant in the state, the depth of integration and the adaptability of children in new environments. The case of *Ugbelase v Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform*¹⁹⁴³ dealt with the deportation of migrant parents of a citizen child.¹⁹⁴⁴ The Irish High Court considered the case of *Ogunweke*¹⁹⁴⁵ in assessing the Article 8 protection to be afforded, as required by the jurisprudence of the Strasbourg court. However, in general, Irish case law shows that Article 8 considerations by the domestic courts pertaining to migration cases have been weak. The courts have been conservative in applying the right to private and family life in migration issues in the course of analysing the rights laid down by the Convention. Factors of integration into the community, children settled in education have been mentioned by the courts, but the State's interest in controlling levels of migration has been given priority.¹⁹⁴⁶ In the case of Odenis Rodrigues dos Santos,¹⁹⁴⁷ the Irish Court of Appeals ruled that the alleged interference with the right to private life under Article 8 did not have consequences of such gravity potentially to engage its operation was reasonable on the facts before him. There has been some inconsistency in the approaches of the Strasbourg court and the Irish courts, with discrepancy mainly surrounding the interpretation of the concepts of "private life," and "settled migrants".¹⁹⁴⁸

In recent years, perhaps not unconnected to the declaration by the Irish Supreme Court in *J Mc D v L*¹⁹⁴⁹ the Irish courts have started to follow the jurisprudence of the ECtHR more closely, giving recognition to "settled migrants", and paying more attention to concerns for "private life" and integration efforts by migrants. The case law of the Irish High Court in *S v MJELR*¹⁹⁵⁰ and *EA v MJELR*¹⁹⁵¹ demonstrates a willingness to recognise where children are embedding in the education system, and where migrant parents of citizen children are being naturalised. National courts have acknowledged where sufficient factors connecting migrants to the state, and as such, migrants are increasingly enjoying more rights on the domestic level, after vindication by the European Court of Human Rights. If the Irish Courts continue down this path, it is likely that they are to become more sympathetic to the reasoning of the ECtHR in relation to Article 8 in the context of migrants perhaps leading to the adoption of a similar approach taken by Strasbourg in considering the integration of migrants into society.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

Although the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance does not appear to have made recommendations concerning the integration of migrants in respect of Ireland, on the national level, such recommendations have been implemented in a variety of ways.

The basic legislative framework concerning the integration of migrants in Ireland comprises in a series of anti-discrimination provisions first introduced in the late 1990s.¹⁹⁵² The Employment Equality Acts 1998-2011, which aim to protect a variety of groups at risk of discrimination, including national and ethnic minorities of which most migrants form a part, have been credited with providing an important foundation in the implementation of policy goals concerning the integration of migrants.¹⁹⁵³ In addition, the Equal Status Acts 2000-2012 have among their aims the facilitation of integration of migrants by outlawing discrimination in areas such as the provision of goods and services and education.¹⁹⁵⁴ Many of the areas of life that these pieces of legislation concern are regarded as fundamental for the successful integration of migrants and the development of these legislative frameworks from the late 1990s up to the present decade can be linked to the activities of national bodies concerned with the integration of migrants.¹⁹⁵⁵

The first major policy document generated by the Irish government on the topic of migrant integration came in the form of 'Integration – a Two Way Process', which was published in 1999 as Ireland emerged as a country of net immigration and chiefly concerned integration of refugees who had begun to arrive in large numbers earlier in the decade.¹⁹⁵⁶ This was followed by the National Action Plan Against Racism (2005 – 2008), a government initiative on foot of commitments it made at the World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia, and related Intolerance in Durban in 2001.¹⁹⁵⁷ This plan aimed to encourage a more inclusive society as regards migrants, by eliminating racism and its manifestations in society generally.¹⁹⁵⁸ The latest major policy initiative in the area of migrant integration in the National Economic and Social Council's 'Migration Nation: Statement on Integration Strategy and Diversity Management'.¹⁹⁵⁹ As well as the establishment of an Office for the Promotion of Migrant Integration within the Department of Justice and Equality and under the supervision of the Minister of State for Equality, Immigration and Integration, it has been proposed to establish a strategy committee to oversee the implementation of the Integration Strategy. It is proposed that this committee would include Government officials as well as representatives from other public bodies and NGOs.¹⁹⁶⁰

As part of the Strategy, a wide range of implementing measures and initiatives are being undertaken. This includes the provision of materials for educating migrants in Irish historical and cultural matters, including through languages and formats that are required to make such materials suitable for use by the migrants.¹⁹⁶¹ Funding initiatives will aim to encourage incorporation of the integration strategy in areas such as sports and community organisations, whereby funding grants would be awarded contingent on some efforts to promote integration activities.¹⁹⁶² As well as this, some immigration and residency rules have been placed under review in order to assess their effects on migrant integration. It is proposed to provide government officials across a range of public services with training in order for them to be able to properly advise migrants of their public services entitlements.¹⁹⁶³

Finally, a long list of steps has been planned in the spheres of education and employment with a view to eliminating some of the barriers migrants may face in these areas, which may result in further, consequent barriers to integration. Notably, steps are being undertaken to make it easier for migrants to enter the teaching profession and to thereby encourage migrant engagement with the educational system and, as a result, to participate more easily in employment.¹⁹⁶⁴

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

As a general rule, it has been observed that the same rules for access to most forms of social security, including healthcare, apply to migrants as to non-migrants in Ireland.¹⁹⁶⁵ However, for many forms of social security, including forms of healthcare, residence-related rules exist that have implications for migrants' access to such services.¹⁹⁶⁶

Provision for migrants' access to healthcare in Irish law is regulated differently depending on which of a number of different categories a migrant falls into. Citizens of EEA member states visiting Ireland temporarily are entitled medical care should they become ill during their stay.¹⁹⁶⁷ Some other categories of EEA migrants, such as posted workers, are also eligible for access to healthcare in Ireland by way of the 'medical card', a card granted by the State which signifies eligibility for comprehensive free healthcare in Ireland.¹⁹⁶⁸ Furthermore, under EU law, access to healthcare in other member states is regarded as coming within citizens' freedom of movement rights. EEA citizens resident in different member states are therefore generally entitled to healthcare in Ireland on an equal basis to that of their counterparts who are Irish citizens resident in Ireland.¹⁹⁶⁹ This means that EEA migrants in Ireland are generally regarded as ordinarily resident in Ireland for the purpose of availing of health services, meaning they can apply for a medical card on the same basis – that of means – as an Irish citizen living in Ireland could.¹⁹⁷⁰

Aside from the rights to healthcare in Ireland that citizens of other EEA member states have in respect of their nationality, rights to healthcare in Ireland are generally based on residence rather than nationality.¹⁹⁷¹ For nationals of non-EEA states, this means that healthcare can be accessed on the same basis as by Irish nationals where they can show their intent to live in the State for a period of at least a year.¹⁹⁷² The Health Service Executive (HSE), the state body charged with the provision of public healthcare, may seek evidence of a migrant's legal entitlement to reside in the state for this period before deeming a migrant eligible for such status.¹⁹⁷³ Ordinary residence status, like for EEA nationals, brings with it the entitlement to apply for a medical card and thereby, to apply for subsidised healthcare. Students may generally be deemed ordinarily resident in the state when enrolled for a course of study lasting at least one academic year in duration.¹⁹⁷⁴ Asylum seekers are entitled to medical cards while their applications for refugee status are being decided. Once this status is granted, refugees are regarded as ordinarily resident and may therefore apply for medical cards on the same basis as Irish citizens.¹⁹⁷⁵

The situation is more complicated for undocumented migrants. Basic healthcare, regardless of civil status, is a right recognised by a number of different international instruments, including in the 1966 United Nations (UN) International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), which has been ratified by Ireland.¹⁹⁷⁶ The right to healthcare in emergencies may also be regarded as coming under the right to life and the prohibition of inhuman treatment under the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).¹⁹⁷⁷ Significantly, a right to basic healthcare is also recognised at EU level, with the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU defining in Art 35 the right to healthcare as including the right of every person to access 'preventive healthcare and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws'.¹⁹⁷⁸ Art 51 obliges member states to apply the provisions of the Charter when implementing Union law.¹⁹⁷⁹

There does not appear to be any legislative provision in Irish law relating to access to healthcare for undocumented migrants, as is the case in many other countries. As a result, cost-free access even to emergency care for undocumented migrants is less than certain, with free access instead being left to the discretion of the provider.¹⁹⁸⁰ Undocumented migrants do not have access to medical cards.¹⁹⁸¹ One of the only forms of healthcare that is provided reliably free-of-charge to undocumented migrants is screening for several types of infectious diseases, including HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases. Many of these programmes, such as those run by the Women's Health Project, which is sponsored by the HSE, are primarily aimed at migrants who have been trafficked, often for sexual exploitation and include ancillary services such as vaccinations, contraception and counselling.¹⁹⁸²

Effective access to healthcare for undocumented migrants may also be limited by seemingly unrelated immigration legal provisions. Section 8 of the Immigration Act 2003 contains a duty for public authorities to share information concerning non-nationals for the purposes of implementing the law on entry and removal.¹⁹⁸³ Since 2003, an interface has been in operation between the information system of the Department of Social Protection and that of the immigration authorities. Engagement by undocumented migrants with public health services therefore may create the risk – real or perceived – of having their status brought to the attention of the immigration authorities and therefore possible deportation.¹⁹⁸⁴

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

Educational institutions play a critical role in integrating migrant children into society and into their new lifestyle. Even though migrant children face numerous challenges when it comes to education, Ireland has made a continuous effort to offer equal rights and access to education to every child. This has been demonstrated through the various support programmes, training teachers and staff, fostering a supportive environment, and effective parent-teacher engagement. Ireland has seen a big jump in diversity since the enlargement of the EU in 2004 and the inward migration of young families in search for employment, job prospects or a higher standard of living.

The ECHR has a number of Protocols attached to it, which provide for additional rights. Ireland has acceded to all ECHR Protocols, except for Protocol 12. Specifically, Protocol 1, Article 2 states that 'no person shall be denied the right to education.' The ECtHR, through its judgments has further protected the right to education, stating that 'the right to education...plays such a fundamental role' in every society.¹⁹⁸⁵ Indeed, numerous cases have come before the ECtHR concerning the infringement of the right to education, suggesting a difference in standard

Every child in Ireland is entitled to attend school. It is a mandatory requirement that children between the ages of 6 and 16 years of age attend some form of full-time education. Education is free in state-run schools. Migrants, refugees and asylum seekers are entitled to attend school the same as Irish children. Support for migrant children is offered in primary and secondary school ranging from additional English classes to extra-curricular activities. The English as an Additional Language programme (EAL) was a programme set up by the Department of Education and Skill. It offers additional help to children who have just come to Ireland or those whose first language is not English. The Department has also assigned additional language and learning support teachers to aid the programme's incorporation into the Irish educational system. There were a total of 735 secondary schools recorded in 2015/16.¹⁹⁸⁷ Many different types of secondary schools exist throughout Ireland such as vocational schools, private/fee-paying or community schools. All national schools in Ireland are funded by the state and follow the same curriculum. Some of these schools have undertaken a national programme that is concentrated on attending to the needs of children from disadvantaged areas. This programme is called "Delivering Equality and Opportunity in Schools" (DEIS).¹⁹⁸⁸ Another category of schools in Ireland that promote inclusiveness and access to education are the Educate Together schools. These schools operate independently and provide education to all children regardless of their culture, religion or background. There are currently 81 educate together primary schools in Ireland and secondary schools were recently established too.¹⁹⁸⁹ A study has shown that newcomer migrants are more likely to attend non-Catholic schools than Catholic schools and they are twice as likely to attend a disadvantaged urban school given the cultural and religious diversity.

One of the most successful projects benefitting many migrants and international students is the ability to take their own native language as a subject up to final school examination level (the Leaving Certificate). There are over 25 languages offered in the 2017 examinations (including curricular and non-curricular languages).¹⁹⁹⁰ The State Examinations Commissions have received requests to provide appropriate examinations for pupils who speak their native language. The State Commissions have also accommodated bilingual students by allowing them to use a dictionary in the Junior and Leaving Certificate. An application is made by the student prior to sitting the examinations and, if granted, they may use a dictionary in all subjects except English, Irish and their native language. In a recent report carried out where many secondary schools were analysed on their efforts and ability to accommodate students whose first language is not English, it was found that bilingual students who used a dictionary in the state examinations scored higher in general.¹⁹⁹¹ This is a great example of how a migrant student may be skilled or competent in a subject, but face an English language barrier.

Another improvement in Ireland's education system was the introduction of a free year of pre-school for children between the ages of three and four. This was a considerable policy improvement in Ireland and it exemplifies how important pre-school education is, for the child's mental, social and physical development. A key element in this policy change is that it promotes equality among all children as it does not take into consideration the family's income. It is of greater importance that children from disadvantaged areas avail of this service, such as migrant and children of the Traveller community, to help them integrate into society and to build their first step into education. The Department of Health informs parents ahead of time that their child is eligible for this scheme to ensure that they are aware of this opportunity.¹⁹⁹²

Religious schools exist throughout Ireland and they are permitted to prioritise students and give preference to those of a particular faith. Ireland's dominant religion is Catholicism – the 2016 Census reveals that 78% of the population identifies as Catholic while 9.8% of the population are of "no religion".¹⁹⁹³ This may be regarded as a small percentage of the total population, but still a significant portion. However, this may be a disadvantage to migrant children who are of different religious beliefs or whose parents are inexperienced with the enrolment and admission system of schools. Nevertheless, there are guidelines set out in relation to this so that it does not interfere with access to education.¹⁹⁹⁴

Admission systems in schools can vary but migrant children can be put at an even bigger disadvantage when schools also give priority to siblings that are attending or have attended the school in the past. However, the Education Act 1998 places an obligation on schools to accept applications from all potential students and gives migrants the opportunity to be excluded from religious activities in schools.¹⁹⁹⁵

Other barriers to education exists for migrants such as being required to pay full tuition fees when entering higher education, whereas Irish citizen students do not pay fees. As these fees are determined based on residency and nationality,¹⁹⁹⁶ it is clear the difficulty this might pose for newly arrived migrants who wish to further their education. Regardless if the migrant became an Irish citizen during the course of their education, it is still required that they continue to pay full tuition fees. However, a change in policy matters was introduced in 2013 which abolished that provision, ensuring equality among migrants in higher education.¹⁹⁹⁷

The Irish educational system provides a variety of online resources available such as the “Guide to Irish Educational System” and the curriculum for primary and secondary education. The educational curriculum in Ireland is the same for every child regardless of what school they attend. All primary schools operate on the same curriculum and as a child progresses in their education, they will sit the Junior and Leaving Certificate and proceed to further education if they wish.¹⁹⁹⁸

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

Ireland is an attractive destination for foreign workers who are in search for employment or students in pursuit of a high standard of education. In order for employers to be able to recognise and understand their qualifications and experience, a process of translating and comparing international qualifications was created. Professional bodies were set up to oversee its development and to ensure it was administered correctly and fairly.

The European Network of Information Centres (herein “ENIC”) is an authority set up to offer information and advice to employers, students, educational bodies such as universities etc. on the recognition of foreign qualifications. In 1994, UNESCO and the Council of Europe created the ENIC Network with the intention to foster a joint policy and system for the recognition of qualifications in all European countries.¹⁹⁹⁹ National Academic Recognition Information Centre (NARIC) works in a very similar way to ENIC but some European countries only operate with ENIC and others work with both networks, such as Ireland.

Quality and Qualifications Ireland (QQI) was set up by the Education and Training Act 2012 to enable foreign qualification recognition in Ireland. QQI hosts NARIC Ireland in which they provide information and advice regarding qualification recognition in Ireland. The NARIC Ireland database offers information on over 900 qualifications from more than 60 countries. The network operates on a comparability statement which positions the foreign qualification in question in the framework of the Irish educational system.²⁰⁰⁰ This service is offered online and enables the user to search and identify their qualification on the database. The process of translating foreign qualifications is called “alignment”.

The National Framework of Qualifications (NFQ) is a key feature of the educational and training system in Ireland. It is an arrangement of all the different levels and qualifications one can achieve that can be also displayed in a “fan diagram”.²⁰⁰¹ The way in which foreign qualifications are made recognisable in Ireland is by comparing it to the NFQ. This is typically achieved by a using criteria of award-type and level of qualification and translating it to the same or a similar level on the NFQ. The NFQ is useful as it acts as a guide for international educational bodies to understand Ireland’s qualification system.

The Lisbon Recognition Convention (LRC) was created by the Council of Europe and UNESCO in 1997. Ireland approved the LRC in 2004, among many other countries. The LRC’s main objective is helping people to achieve reasonable recognition of qualifications in Europe.²⁰⁰² QQI and NARIC Ireland endeavour to carry out this purpose by following the guidelines set out in the Convention.

The LRC has numerous principles set down which help to make sure that the information provided regarding recognition is clear, precise, and easily accessible. Transparency is one of the key principles laid down. In order for the recognition information to be accessible by all applicants, each recognition authority is advised to create an online database which displays all previously successful applications of qualification recognition. Ireland, in compliance with the Bologna Agreement for higher education, has compiled an online database of foreign qualifications that are presently recognised in Ireland. Applications that have succeeded in foreign qualification process are displayed on the database, free for future applicants to refer to, should their qualifications match.²⁰⁰³

This is also reinforced by the Bologna process which was set up in 1999 to help create an easier system of qualification recognition in Europe. The process is comprised of 48 member states and the European Commission. The activities and accomplishments achieved by the Bologna process is overseen by ministerial meetings held every 3 years.²⁰⁰⁴ This process has allowed for the creation of the European Higher Education Area whose key objective is encouraging the recognition of qualifications in Europe through designing a system of mutual recognition and common goals. Ireland is a member of the process and as such has taken part in higher education reforms. It has adopted the three-cycle academic degree standards as well as making the system more consistent and inclusive.²⁰⁰⁵

There are two different categories set out when trying to get a foreign qualification recognised in a member state: for the purposes of further education or for the purposes of accessing employment. Several professions are under a separate “category” known as regulated professions.²⁰⁰⁶ This means that in order for someone to be able to work in these professions, they must have a license to do so. Examples of such professions include doctors, nurses, teachers and pharmacists.²⁰⁰⁷ Under the EU Directive 2013/55/EU for Mutual Recognition of Professional Qualifications, a person who is fully qualified in one member state can transfer their qualification to another member state and this applies to regulated professions in the same manner as non-regulated professions.²⁰⁰⁸

In Ireland, the international qualification recognition process begins by searching for the required qualification on the online NARIC database. The first step is breaking down the qualification by country and type of education. Once the relevant qualification has been identified, a profile of that particular qualification can be accessed in which it displays important details about it. One of the most important steps is accessing the Comparability Statement which is downloadable and printable. This document is a valuable aid for employers and educational institutions and it can help them to appreciate and identify with a person’s qualification. If a qualification cannot be found on the database, an application form can be filled out in order to obtain advice on the recognition of that qualification.

Such a qualification is then evaluated by experienced evaluators at NARIC Ireland. If the award/qualification is found to meet all relevant criteria and a comparable level is established, it is then added to the NARIC database and published online which ensures that it is available for public viewing.

In the case of a migrant, refugee or asylum seeker who, for valid reasons, cannot fully complete an application or provide the required documents to uphold the qualification claimed, special procedures have been formulated. The applicant is required to provide as much information as possible relevant to the qualification such as student identification number or details of work experience.²⁰⁰⁹ The authority is advised to try and re-assemble the qualification with the information given and to use similar qualifications from the same institute to help. Additional steps may also be required such as an interview or an exam, depending of the individuals’ circumstance. The LRC encourages a flexible approach to qualification recognition when it comes to migrants and refugees.²⁰¹⁰

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

Ireland's first migrant mayor was former Cllr. Rotimi Adebari who was first elected in 2004 to Portlaoise Town Council in the county of Laois. He was then re-elected in 2009 to the town council and was elected as a member of Laois County Council. Adebari contested a total of six elections, both local and national before finally losing his seat on the council in 2014²⁰¹¹. Seven years after seeking asylum in Ireland, Adebari was a local politician²⁰¹². This is an unusual phenomenon in the Republic of Ireland as the number of migrants that engage in politics as public representatives has been traditionally, a low figure. In 1992, the first migrant was elected to serve as a Teachta Dála (TD) in Dáil Éireann (the Irish parliament)²⁰¹³. Dr. Moosajee Bhamjee was a South African of Indian heritage. He was elected for the Irish Labour Party from the rural constituency of Clare. Since Dr. Bhamjee, there has been one TD elected who was not of Irish heritage, the current serving Minister for Children and Youth Affairs, Dr. Katherine Zappone, who is a Canadian²⁰¹⁴. Much of the politics in Ireland is local and many TDs who serve in the national parliament, have served as local councillors prior to their election. Research²⁰¹⁵ shows that few migrants succeed in breaking through to local politics. In 2004, of six Africans that contested the local elections, only two were elected. In 2014, there was only one African local representative, Sinn Féin councillor, Edmond Lukusa²⁰¹⁶, originally from the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He became active in politics after becoming an Irish citizen. This leads to the question, is acquiring citizenship necessary to engage with politics in Ireland and just what are the requirements for voting and can migrants vote in certain elections prior to becoming citizens?

Every Irish citizen over the age of eighteen has the right to vote in all Irish elections. There are different conditions for migrants of different nationalities when it comes to voting in Ireland²⁰¹⁷. British citizens may vote in all Irish general elections, European elections and local elections.

Other EU citizens are restricted to EU and local elections while non-EU citizens can vote only in local elections. Once Irish citizenship is granted, the individual has the right to vote in all Irish elections and referenda. To cast your vote, the individual must present themselves at their local polling station. On most occasions, all those entitled to vote will be issued with a polling card to their home address. This must be presented at the polling station and the individual may be asked to present some form of identification. The formalities regarding voting are quite straightforward and it is clear that Irish citizens are afforded the most opportunity to engage politically. Therefore, any migrant that becomes an Irish citizen has the right to participate in the democratic processes of their country of residence.

Foreign nationals that do not have Irish citizenship are prohibited from voting in referenda held within the State. It is proven that disenfranchising migrants through restrictive policies in this area creates a perception of a country that is weak on immigration policy and tends to provide for migrant's representation, merely through weak, ineffectual bodies.²⁰¹⁸ Studies of non-EU migrant's political participation indicate that several factors influence the willingness of foreign nationals to engage civically. Ireland was identified as a country where the higher the level of education, the more likely migrants are to participate politically.²⁰¹⁹ The question surrounding political participation revolves not just around the willingness of migrants to participate in politics e.g. as candidates for election but also on the willingness of others to elect these individuals. In the local elections of 2009, three non-national candidates contested the Mulhuddart ward in Dublin, seeking election to Fingal County Council²⁰²⁰. While Mulhuddart is a district with a large number of foreign nationals²⁰²¹ that have taken up residence there, all of these candidates failed to be elected. While Irish national legislation clearly outlines in what ways migrants can participate in Irish political decisions, there has been little work done in the area of increasing the number of foreign nationals serving as politicians at either a local or national level. To ensure that migrants can participate effectively in the political decisions of their countries of residence, nations such as Ireland should look towards implementing strategies of civic engagement as part of a wider policy of integration. Similar to the recent implementation of gender quotas in Ireland, this could pave the way for a possible quota of migrants to ensure effective representation and in turn, a truly representative democracy. As outlined above, all citizens resident in Ireland, including non-EU citizens are granted the right to vote in local elections. However, non-Irish citizens whether legally resident or not are excluded from voting in all Presidential elections and referendums, based on their nationality. Special status is designated to British citizens resident in Ireland and they are permitted to cast a vote in general elections. However, other EU citizens may not vote in general elections; they are restricted to local and European elections. The conditions that have been outlined that migrants must satisfy to be entitled to cast their vote and engage politically are rather straightforward in Ireland. No migrant satisfying these aforementioned conditions can be denied their right to vote.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

Foreign nationals can apply for Irish citizenship through naturalisation²⁰²². The Minister for Justice and Equality has complete discretion over whether to grant citizenship through naturalisation. To apply for citizenship through naturalisation, the applicant must satisfy some basic conditions. The individual must be 18 years of age or over but minors born within the State after 2005 can apply also. The individual must also have been a continuous resident for at least 1 year prior to the application being made. In total, the applicant must have been continuously resident in Ireland for five of the nine years preceding the application. Such conditions regarding naturalisation are more favourable for foreign nationals that are married to Irish citizens. Marriage no longer entitles one to automatic citizenship in the Republic of Ireland. As an Irish citizen, you may also hold dual citizenship, however it is important to ensure that the second country in question also allows for dual citizenship and that acquiring Irish citizenship does not void citizenship of ones' home country. Applying for citizenship through naturalisation simply involves completing a form that is available online at the Irish Citizen's Information website and paying a fee of €175.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

Ireland has become an increasingly diverse population, according to Census 2011 about 12%²⁰²³ of the Irish population are migrants or non-nationals. This has a lot to do with Ireland's social and economic progression since joining the European Union. Ireland has also been committing to actively integrating these non-nationals into Irish life, utilising European Programs and Funds in order to implement their integration strategies. The main Irish body which handles the funds set out by the EU for Ireland is Department of Justice and Equality. Within this department are main control units which are allocated a specific budget of the funds issued to Ireland from the European Migration Fund; mainly Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF), which are the Funds Unit of the Office for the Promotion of Migrant Integration (OPMI) rather than the Ireland received an average amount of €14,519,077 between 2011 and 2013.²⁰²⁴ About €4.5 million²⁰²⁵ is being made to non-governmental organisations, who can apply for funding through the Department of Justice and Equality. The strategy for implementation and distribution of said funds is laid on in The National Programme AMIF (as adopted by the Commission on March 21st, 2016). The financing plan of the programme provides that 28.3% of the national allocation will be spent on Asylum, 27.9% on Integration, 25.5% on Return, 7.7% on Solidarity and 10.6% on technical assistance.

In relation to relocation the program sets out €5,455,000.00 both for the integration of legal migrants and asylum seekers between 2015 and 2020.²⁰²⁶ Laid out in this document is also what the government of Ireland intends to use the funds to benefit Irish society and particularly integrate migrants into said society. The plan laid out is as follows, first Ireland will continue its efforts to attract highly skilled workers to contribute to our economic development, in particular, streamlining the administrative processes for bringing such people to Ireland, including faster processing and greater flexibility. This will continue as will the operation of the EU research scheme and programmes aimed at entrepreneurs and investors. Secondly, substantial reform is being carried out on international student migration to raise quality standards and tackle abuses. Thirdly, an on-going civilianisation programme will aim to deliver enhanced customer service to all migrants.

More specific actions to be taken are outlined in the Migrant Integration Strategy by the department of Justice and Equality. These actions include but are not limited to; the inclusion of a target of 1% for the employment of EEA migrants and people from minority ethnic communities in the civil service (in most cases civil service employment is not open to non-EEA nationals). This issue is important in terms of beginning the process of making the civil service representative of the broader population. Schools outside the established education system will be encouraged to network with the aim of providing information on child protection and health and safety regulations to them and of developing relationships with them. The establishment by local authorities of networks aimed at reaching out to migrant groups to help them to engage with Government Departments and to provide information on their needs. The establishment of a Communities Integration Fund intended to support organisations in local communities (sports organisations, faith organisations etc.) to undertake actions to promote the integration of migrants into their communities. There is also the monitoring of current school enrolment policies over time to assess their impact on the enrolment of migrant students, as well as the inclusion of a language component in education and training programmes for unemployed migrants with poor English proficiency. Initiatives have been set up to ensure that migrant needs in relation to skills acquisition and labour market activation are addressed, as well as to encourage the business sector to play a role in promoting integration. The establishment of a working group to examine data gaps in relation to migrant needs and experience. These programs and expansions will be funded by the AMIF.

Potentially, the most important of these projects is the introduction of the Communities Integration Fund supported by the AMIF. This fund will make €500,000²⁰²⁷ available to community organisations who promote integration within their communities. Up to €5,000 will be granted to each individual organisation.

Conclusions

The findings of this paper highlight the varying treatment of migrants by Ireland depending on the type or status of migrant application. There is vast inequality in the process between those migrants from EU and EEA countries compared to those seeking asylum in Ireland. The status of a migrant's application also plays a role in accessing services. Those who live in Direct Provision do so under the strictest of conditions and face a number of barriers to participating in society including limited access to social welfare and work. However the landmark case of *NHV v Minister for Justice and Equality*²⁰²⁸ saw the Irish Supreme Court find that a ban on those living in Direct Provision from working to be unconstitutional. This paper has found that education is one of the areas of little restriction with a comprehensive framework for recognising qualifications earned abroad, free access to education for children regardless of status and the implementation of a number of provisions to assist with integration and language learning. On the other end of the scale voting rights is one of the most restricted areas, with the migrant's country of origin being a decisive factor in the extent to which they may participate. Whether this limitation is the reason for low migrant participation in Irish politics is unclear, however even in elections where migrants have the right to vote there does not appear to be a high engagement with the democratic process. This research therefore concludes that while Ireland may have many ambitious policy initiatives relating to migrants, it falls short of reaching its potential by failing to implement these goals in practice.

Introduction

In the last 50 years, Italy has experienced a relevant transformation, starting from an emigrant nation (according to the last statistics from the Ministry of the Interior, there are more than 4.636.647 Italians still living abroad) to become an immigrant destination.

From 1970 until now, migrant citizens with regular residence permits in Italy have increased, with a rate of growth that looks almost unstoppable: at the beginning of 2017, there were more than 5,047,028 foreign nationals resident in Italy.

This numbers, added to the illegal immigrants whose numbers are difficult to define, outline a complex situation, characterized by immigrant flows from almost 200 different countries, especially Central Eastern Europe (Albania, Romania and Ukraine), Northern Africa (Morocco), China and the Indian subcontinent (Pakistan, India, and Sri Lanka).

This historically important phenomenon requires in-depth analysis in order to evaluate the effectiveness of the Italian legislation and intervention policies, and to find concrete solutions to help immigrants settling in our country.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Description of the national legislation regulating asylum

The right to asylum in Italy is expressly codified by art. 10 par. 3 of the Italian Constitution, stating that “the foreign citizen who is prevented in his own country from the effective assertion of the democratic rights guaranteed by the Italian Constitution, has the right of asylum in the Italian Republic, under the conditions set by the law”.

The main pieces of legislation, implementing EU secondary legislation on asylum, are the Legislative Decree (LD) n. 251 of the 19th November of 2007,²⁰²⁹ concerning the “Implementation of Directive 2004/83/EC on the minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as person who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted” (Qualification Decree) and the LD n. 25 of the 28th of January of 2008, concerning the “Implementation of the Directive 2005/85/EC on minimum standards for procedures for granting and withdrawing refugee status”²⁰³⁰ (Procedure Decree).

Three different categories of protection are provided for by the Italian legislation: the refugee status, the subsidiary protection and the humanitarian protection.

According to the LD n. 251/07, referring directly to the European Directive 2004/83/EC, a refugee is a “third country national who owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it”,²⁰³¹ while beneficiary of subsidiary protection is considered a “third country national or stateless person who does not qualify as a refugee but in respect of whom substantial grounds have been shown for believing that the person concerned, if returned to his or her country of origin, or in the case of a stateless person, to his or her country of former habitual residence, would face a real risk of suffering serious harm as defined by this decree, and is unable, or, owing to such risk, unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country”.²⁰³²

The third category of protection is a residual one. Indeed, a permit of stay for humanitarian reasons, lasting 2 years, can be granted when the applicant does not satisfy the conditions for obtaining asylum or subsidiary protection.²⁰³³ In fact, when the Territorial Commission does not recognize the conditions for international protection, indicates “serious reasons of humanitarian nature” and forwards the asylum seeker’s documentation to the Questura that will grant a humanitarian permit of stay.²⁰³⁴

The Italian legislation also defines specific causes of exclusion of the recognition of the refugee status. This is the case, inter alia, of the foreigner who has already been recognized as a refugee in another country; who has committed a crime against peace, a war crime, a crime against ²⁰³⁰ LD n. 25 (Implementation of Directive 2005/85/EC on minimum standards on procedures in Member States for granting and withdrawing refugee status) 2008 [Attuazione della direttiva 2005/85/CE recante norme minime per le procedure applicate negli Stati membri ai fini del riconoscimento e della revoca dello status di rifugiato] as modified by the Law n. 46 of the 13th of April of 2017.

²⁰³² Ibidem.

²⁰³³ Art. 5 par. 6 of the Consolidated Immigration Act – Legislative Decree n. 286 of the 25th of July 1998, (Testo unico sull’immigrazione) makes possible to release a residence permit in a situation in which this is justified by “serious reasons, in particular of humanitarian nature or arising from constitutional or international obligations of the Italian State”. This protection granted to citizens of a third country who are found in objective and serious personal conditions that do not allow their removal from Italy. In order to obtain a humanitarian stay permit, a request has to be forwarded to the Questura who will examine the applicant’s personal and specific situation.

humanity; or a serious crime outside Italy, even for political reasons, prior to his/her admission to Italy as a refugee.²⁰³⁵

The Italian legal system defines a single procedure for determining whether an applicant is entitled to the refugee status or to the subsidiary protection.

The authorities that are entrusted with examining the applications for the different types of protection are the Territorial Commissions for the Recognition of International Protection (CTRPI²⁰³⁶ or “territorial commissions”) and the Sub Commissions, administrative bodies within the Ministry of Home affairs, specialized in asylum matters and located on the entire national territory.²⁰³⁷

Each of the 20 Territorial Commissions is composed of 4 members: two representatives of the Ministry of Home affairs, one of whom is a senior police officer, a representative of the Municipality (or Province or Region), and a representative of the UNHCR.²⁰³⁸

Due to the high numbers of migrants and asylum seekers that have arrived in Italy from the sea in the last 4 years, the Italian Government has created the “Hotspot system”, in order to implement the new approach launched by the European Agenda for migration in 2015.²⁰³⁹

According to the European Commission, hotspot centres are sections of external borders characterized by specific and disproportionate migratory pressure, consisting of mixed migratory flows, including asylum seekers and economic migrants.²⁰⁴⁰ These centres, set up only in two Member States, Italy and Greece,²⁰⁴¹ provide first assistance, processing and identification of ²⁰³⁵ Art. 10 and 12 LD 251/07 and art. 29 LD 25/08. Other options of exclusion are established for whom coming from a state other than his/her own that has adhered to the Refugee Convention, and in which he/she has resided for a period of time, excluding the time necessary for his/her transit from that territory to the Italian border, for who has been declared guilty of acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the UN, has been convicted in Italy for a crime established in the Code of Criminal Procedure. According to the art. 12, can't obtain the refugee status also who is considered dangerous for the security of the state. Refugee status is also denied based on an individual evaluation when the legal grounds to claim such status are not met, there are well-founded reasons to believe that the foreigner constitutes a danger to the security of the state, or the foreigner constitutes a danger to public order and safety, after being convicted of certain crimes established in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Those claiming asylum will be immediately channeled into an asylum procedure... For those not in need of protection, Frontex will help Member States by coordinating the return of irregular migrants...”.

See also Statewatch, Explanatory note on the “Hotspot approach” (2015) <<http://www.statewatch.org/news/2015/jul/eu-com-hotspots.pdf>> accessed on 6 July 2017.

²⁰⁴¹ The “hotspot approach” has been implemented in Italy since 2015; the first facilities were opened in Lampedusa. In January 2016, the CIE (centre of identification and expulsion) of Trapani and the reception centre of Pozzallo (CPSA) were converted in hotspots. Finally, in March 2016 hotspot facilities were set up in Taranto. Two other centers, Porto Empedocle and Augusta are still not operating. However, according to the revised roadmap submitted to the European Commission on 31 March 2016, an additional hotspot will be opened soon.

migrants and asylum seekers that have usually arrived after search and rescue operations.²⁰⁴² Afterwards, migrants are transferred to other centres.²⁰⁴³

1.2. Procedure for granting asylum and allocation of responsibility

National legislation in Italy does not specifically regulate the hotspots; currently only a “standard operating procedures”²⁰⁴⁴ (SOPs), drafted by the ministry of Home affairs (and hence not ranking as law) lays down the applicable procedures in the hotspots.²⁰⁴⁵

In these centres, migrants are asked whether they intend to apply for asylum; in case of a positive answer, they are relocated in shelter centres set up on the entire national territory.²⁰⁴⁶

According to the LD 142/2015, the asylum procedure starts when an asylum seeker submits his/her request (through the “C3” form – “verbale delle dichiarazioni degli stranieri che chiedono in Italia il riconoscimento dello status di rifugiato ai sensi della Convenzione di Ginevra del 28 luglio 1951”) at the Border Police office or at the provincial Police station within the territory (Questura).²⁰⁴⁷

Then, the application and all the supporting documentation is sent to one of the 20 Territorial Commissions operating on the Italian territory.

However, in practice, asylum seekers usually have the possibility to fill the C3 form only after their arrival in the shelters; from here, these forms are forwarded to the competent Questura.

²⁰⁴³ All migrants arriving irregularly in Italy are registered under category 2 (illegal entry into national territory "EU IT2"). In a second phase, those who have expressed their intention to seek for international protection, are fingerprinted and registered under category 1 (request for international protection) and transferred to the regional centers. In contrast, migrants registered and identified under CAT 2 who do not intend to apply for international protection will be transferred to Centres of Identification and Expulsion (CIE) to be returned to their countries of origin (see p. 13, Standard Operating Procedures (Sops) Applicable to Italian Hotspots). The return procedure faces numerous problems due to the fact that only in case of readmission agreements in force between Italy or the EU and third countries the return procedure will be completed. According to the data of the Home Affairs Ministry, in 2015 only 2.746 migrants out of 5.242 transferred in the CIE have been effectively returned (representing 52% of the total). On this problematic issue, see Chiara Favilli, ‘L'attuazione in Italia della direttiva rimpatri: dall'inerzia all'urgenza con scarsa cooperazione’ [2011] Riv. dir. internaz., 341.

²⁰⁴⁷ Article 6.1 LD 25/2008. The police officers are not designated to directly examine the application; rather they ask questions to the applicant to verify the Italian jurisdiction on the examination of his/her asylum request according to the Dublin III Regulation (European Parliament and Council Regulation (Eu) 604/2013 establishing the criteria and mechanisms for determining the Member State responsible for examining an application for international protection lodged in one of the Member States by a third-country national or a stateless person [2013], art. 3).

According to the LD 142/2015, which sets the framework of the so-called “regular procedure”, the Territorial Commission should interview the applicant within 30 days after receiving the application and decide on his request in the following three working days.²⁰⁴⁸

Nevertheless, due to the high numbers of requests, such a time limit is almost never respected.²⁰⁴⁹

During the personal interview, which is not public, the asylum seeker has the opportunity to disclose exhaustively all the elements supporting his/her asylum request.

In all the phases concerning the presentation and examination of an asylum request, including the interview, the applicant, when necessary, receives the assistance of an interpreter in his/her own language or in a language he/she understands. Moreover, the LD 142/2015 specifies that, where necessary, the documents produced by the applicant shall be translated.

As a result of a reform enacted in August 2014,²⁰⁵⁰ the interview before the Territorial Commission is carried out by one member only, which should be of the same sex as the applicant. At the end of this procedure, the interviewer presents the case to all the other members which will take a common decision. The decision must be taken with a majority of 3 members; in case of 2:2, the President’s vote prevails.

After the interview in front of the Commission, five different decisions can be taken: 1. the granting of refugee status and the release of a 5-year renewable residence permit; 2. the granting of subsidiary protection, implying the release of a 5-year renewable residence permit; 3. the adoption of a recommendation to the Police to issue a 2-year residence permit on humanitarian grounds; 4. the rejection of the asylum application; 5. the rejection of the application as manifestly unfounded. Should the application be accepted, the file with all the documents is sent to the head of the police.²⁰⁵¹ In case the application is rejected, the applicant may introduce an appeal before the competent ordinary Court in order to obtain a review of the Territorial ²⁰⁴⁸ According to the Article 28 LD 25/2008, as amended by LD 142/2015, a fast procedure is possible in particular situations, such as 1) where the application is likely to be well-founded; 2) where the applicant is vulnerable, in particular, unaccompanied minors or in need of special procedural guarantees; 3) when the application is made by the applicant placed in an administrative detention centre; 4) if the applicant comes from one of the countries identified by the CNDA that allow the omission of the personal interview when considering that there are sufficient grounds available to recognise subsidiary protection. The LD 142/2015 also introduced an accelerated procedure for applicants placed in CIE. Should the Questura receive the application, it is obliged to immediately send the necessary documentation to the CTRPI that within 7 days of the receipt of the documentation takes steps for the personal hearing. The decision is taken within the following 2 days. These time limits are doubled in the other three cases where the procedure is applicable: (1) the application is manifestly unfounded; (2) the applicant has introduced a subsequent application for international protection; (3) when the applicant has lodged his/her application after being stopped for avoiding or attempting to avoid border controls or after being stopped for irregular stay, merely in order to delay or frustrate the adoption or the enforcement of an earlier expulsion or rejection at the border order (Article 28-bis LD 25/2008, as inserted by LD 142/2015).

²⁰⁴⁹ In case that the CTRPI is unable to take a decision within the time limit or needs to acquire new elements, the examination procedure may last six months. The CTRPI may also extend the time limit in specific cases. The asylum procedure may last for a maximum period of 18 months.

²⁰⁵¹ According to the art. 13 of the LD 25/08, the refugee status can be revoked when, following its recognition, it is demonstrated that the recognition was based on facts and/or circumstances presented erroneously, or by the voluntary omission of other facts and/or circumstances, or based on a documentation proved as false. The refugee status can be revoked also in the cases defined by the art. 10 and 12 of the LD 25/08.

Commission's decision.²⁰⁵² The appeal must be lodged by a lawyer within 30 days from the notification of the concerned decision.²⁰⁵³

The recently adopted Law n. 46 of the 13th of April of 2017²⁰⁵⁴ has thoroughly reformed the procedure of appeal, introducing 14 new Specialized Sections on 'migration law, international protection and free movement of EU citizens'. According to the new procedure, the case is discussed before of a judicial panel in an en banc session.²⁰⁵⁵ The judges will decide on the applicant's case only by consulting the videotaped interview carried out by the Territorial Commission; only in exceptional cases, oral hearings are allowed.

The judicial panel can either reject the appeal or grant international or humanitarian protection to the applicant; the decision must be taken within 4 months from the submission of appeal.

The Law of 13th of April 2017 has introduced another important change: it has eliminated the possibility to lodge an appeal against the decision of the ordinary court. Such a decision can be appealed only before the Court of Cassation within 30 days.²⁰⁵⁶ Furthermore, the new Law has also established that the request for suspensive effect must be decided by the judge who rejected the appeal. The new piece of legislation has been criticized for several reasons.²⁰⁵⁷

In case the request for asylum is rejected, according with the European legislation,²⁰⁵⁸ the asylum seeker will be considered illegally staying on the Italian territory and he/she will be asked to go back to their countries of origin or to a country of transit in accordance with Community or bilateral readmission agreements. The asylum seeker may also decide to move to a different third-country in which he or she will be accepted.²⁰⁵⁹

²⁰⁵³ Applicants under the accelerated procedure have only 15 days to lodge an appeal. This appeal does not have suspensive effect.

In particular, asylum seekers who got rejected have the obligation to leave Italy after the notification of the decision,²⁰⁶⁰ otherwise they can be punished according to art. 162 of the Italian criminal code.²⁰⁶¹ Both the judges and the administrative authority, the Prefetto, which represents the Minister of Internal Affairs, can release a removal order against the national of a non-EU country illegally staying in Italy.²⁰⁶² The person which is concerned with the removal order is not allowed to enter on the Italian territory within 3 years after its release.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

The Italian Constitution recognizes a specific status of foreigner in article 10, although it does not give a definition of it. Widely, foreigner means every non-Italian citizen, but a distinction must be made between those who came from other EU Member states, on one side, and non-EU citizens and stateless person, on the other. These two categories enjoy different treatments and, when the Constitution generally refers to foreigners, only the second category should be taken into account.²⁰⁶³

2.1. Immigration from EU member States

Entry and stay of EU-citizens are fully covered by EU legislation,²⁰⁶⁴ implemented at the national level by the Legislative Decree n. 30/2007 (as modified by Legislative Decree n. 32/2008) “on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the EU and EEA member states”.²⁰⁶⁵ It provides EU citizens with a more favourable treatment for entry and stay, compared to third-country nationals; the only common rules for both categories concern the exit from the State, and namely the expulsion measures set forth by the decree 286/1998. Restriction on the right of free movement or residence can be imposed only for reasons of public policy, public security or public health.

EU citizens have the right of residence in Italy for a period of up to three months without any conditions or formalities other than the requirement to hold a valid travel document. For periods longer than three months, they can report their presence to a police office; otherwise, they must be able to prove that they have not stayed in Italy for longer than three months, and, in case they cannot provide any evidence of their entry, they will be deemed to have stayed for a longer period.

²⁰⁶² Under the art. 19 LD 286/98, hypothesis of exception to this procedure are made for people found in a position of especial vulnerability as children, pregnant women, or whoever could face any sort of discrimination based on the race, ethnicity, sex, languages, citizenship, religion, personal or political opinion, personal or social conditions.

EU-citizens who wish to stay in Italy for a period exceeding three months are only required to register with the local Anagrafe (Register Office). Permits issued to them may be recognized to their family members as well, even when the latter are not EU citizens.

2.2. Immigration from non-EU member States

The main piece of legislation regulating the entry, stay and exit of non-EU citizens and stateless persons in Italy is the Legislative Decree (“LD”) n. 286/1998 (Consolidated Code on immigration) as implemented by the Presidential Decree n. 334/2004. Nationals of EU member states, except as provided for in the implementing rules of Community framework,²⁰⁶⁶ fall outside the scope ratione personae of the concerned LD. Hence, the conditions for their entry, stay and removal are laid down by different sources of law.

The first part of the Code (Title I) determines the requirements for the legal entry and the stay in Italy. These rules, based on a system of visas and permits, were enacted for two different purposes: on one hand, to control and manage migration flows and, on the other, to favour the entry of specific categories of immigrants.²⁰⁶⁷

Article 4 of the LD regulates the admission of third country nationals²⁰⁶⁸ and the procedures to obtain the appropriate entry visa, which depend on the reason and the duration of the stay. Visas for staying longer than three months are issued by the diplomatic representation of Italy in the country of origin (or of residence) of the third-country national. Short-term Schengen visas (valid for a period of up to three months) may be issued by diplomatic representations of the country of origin, in case Italy has concluded a specific agreement with this country. Third country nationals who are not in possession of a visa shall be refused entry to the territory of Italy.

Visa applications must be accompanied by a valid travel document together with the supporting documents required by the type of the requested visas.²⁰⁶⁹ Applications should state the purpose of the visit as well as the means of transport and support during the stay. The entry on the Italian territory is refused if the third country national may be considered a threat to the public order or public security of Italy (or of other countries with which Italy has concluded agreements for the abolition of checks at internal borders and for the free movement of people), if he is subject to a prohibition of entry following expulsion, or if he has been condemned for the commission of certain crimes.²⁰⁷⁰ The entry ban operates automatically, i.e. without any discretion of the ²⁰⁶⁹ Inter-ministerial decree n. 850 of 11 May 2011 defines 21 types of entry visas, along with the requirements and conditions for obtaining them: adoption, business, medical treatment, diplomatic, sports competition, invitation, independent work, subordinate work, mission, family reasons, religious reasons, re-entry, elective residence, research, study, airport transit, transit, transport, tourism, working holiday, volunteer work.

²⁰⁷⁰ Third country nationals who are condemned according to article 380 par. 1 and 2 of the criminal procedure code or for crimes such as drug-related or sexual crimes, smuggling of human beings or recruiting of persons for prostitution or minors for illegal activities. See for more details Art. 4, par. 3.

competent authorities,²⁰⁷¹ when a third country national commits peremptory offences. A higher threshold is applied to expel a third country national representing a threat to the public order and security, if this person enters the territory for family reunification.²⁰⁷²

Once they have legally entered Italy, foreigners who stay for visit, business, tourism or study for periods not exceeding three months are not required to apply for a residence permit; instead, they must report their presence in the country to the border authorities²⁰⁷³ and obtain a Schengen stamp on their travel document on the day of arrival, as an equivalent of the declaration of presence.

Conversely, foreigners who aim to stay for a period exceeding three months must apply for a residence permit²⁰⁷⁴ within eight days of arrival, on pain of administrative exclusion ex art. 13, par. 2 of the Code. After an agreement between the Ministry of the Interior and the Italian Post Office, the applications for the issuance and renewal of some types of residence permits are today forwarded to the authorized post offices by the "Sportello Amico", using a special kit (consisting of an envelope which contains two forms and a list of instruction); in all other cases, the applications must be submitted to the "Questura", the central police station set up in every Italian province.

Articles 5 and 4 of the Code are strictly related: the residence permit is issued for the period of time and for the purpose indicated in the visa; the reasons for the denial of issuance or renewal of the residence permits are the same as for the issuance of the visa.²⁰⁷⁵ Regardless of the reasons of immigration, the applicant must provide, in addition to a valid travel document, proof of financial self-sufficiency, adequate shelter and valid health insurance.²⁰⁷⁶ Condition for the issuance of the permit is also the subscription of an agreement of integration ("accordo d'integrazione"), aimed at achieving specific integration goals during the stay period.²⁰⁷⁷

According to the length of the stay, there are different types of residence permits: up to nine months for seasonal work; up to one year for subordinate work with a temporary contract, for study or vocational training; up to two years for self-employed work, for subordinate permanent work and for family reunion.

Under the need to achieve the unification of European procedures, the Legislative Decree n. 3/2007 introduced the EC Long-Term Residence Permit²⁰⁷⁸ (previously called Residence Card) for a third-country national and his family members. This permit is addressed to foreigners in possession of a residence permit, that have been legally residing in Italy for a period of at least 5 years, and that have a minimum income equivalent to the amount of the social security benefit. The issuance of this permit is subordinated to the passing of an Italian language test, as prepared by the Minister of the Interior in concert with the Minister of Education. It is valid for an indefinite period and works as personal identification document for 5 years. The Long-Term Residence Permit cannot be granted to a foreigner who is a threat to State security or public order, and cannot be requested by holders of a permit for study, professional training, temporary protection, humanitarian reasons, or asylum when the related status has not been recognised yet. It provides the acquisition of resident status, which ensures civil rights of any Italian citizen, on the condition of reciprocity. The EC permit has the same effect when issued by another member State,²⁰⁷⁹ also for highly qualified foreign workers holding a EU Blue Card.²⁰⁸⁰

In case of irregular stay, specific procedures for expulsion and manners of removal of the migrant are applied. The application of these measures is strictly based on the rule of law,²⁰⁸¹ as they affect the constitutional right of personal freedom.²⁰⁸² Articles 13 and 14 of the Code set up the administrative expulsion procedure. The Minister of Interior or the Prefect are entitled to enforce the measure for reasons of public order or state security or, on a case-by-case basis, when the migrant commits some specific violations. Article 15 and 16, instead, regulate, the judicial expulsion. Expulsion is generally carried out by accompanying the foreigner to the borders. The foreigner who is willing to voluntarily leave the country may be admitted to assisted repatriation programs, within the limits of the financial resources of the “return fund” (Fondo Rimpatri) established by the Minister of Interior, and in cooperation with international organizations, local authorities and other associations.²⁰⁸³

If immediate expulsion is temporary impossible, the foreigner can be detained in so-called “Permanence Centers for Repatriation”, for the time that is strictly necessary to overcome the impediment.²⁰⁸⁴

Moreover, special rules are applicable to certain categories of migrants who could be classified as especially vulnerable and requiring an extra protection. They are listed in the Chapter III of the Code.²⁰⁸⁵ According to these provisions, foreigners who may be subject to persecution for reasons of race, nationality, religion or political opinions, victims of trafficking or exploitation, minors, pregnant women (or six months after childbirth), can not be expelled.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

In Italy, the coordination of migration policy principally falls under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Interior and it is assigned to the Dipartimento per le Libertà civili e l'immigrazione (Department of Civil Liberties and Immigration) and the Dipartimento della Pubblica Sicurezza (Department of Public Security).

Within the Department for Civil Liberties and Immigration, attributions and functions are divided between the Direzione Centrale dei Servizi Civili per l'Immigrazione e l'Asilo (Central Directorate of Civil Services for Immigration and Asylum), the Direzione Centrale per I Diritti Civili, la Cittadinanza e le Minoranze (Central Directorate for Civil Rights, Citizenship and Minorities), the Direzione Centrale per le Politiche dell'Immigrazione e dell'Asilo (Central Directorate for Immigration and Asylum Policies) and the Commissione Nazionale per il Diritto d'Asilo (National Commission for the Right to Asylum).²⁰⁸⁶

This organisational set-up is provided for by Article 5 of the Presidential Decree no. 398/2001, as amended by Article 2 of the Presidential Decree no. 210/2009.

The Central Directorate of Civil Services for Immigration and Asylum has jurisdiction over the reception of migrants, from the first assistance to the so-called “integrated projects”. It manages the initial reception through the CDAs- Centri di Accoglienza (Center for First Assistance of Migrants), where immigrants are identified, and the CARAs- Centri di Accoglienza per Richiedenti Asilo (Center for First Assistance of Asylum Seekers), where migrants have access to asylum procedures. The next step is represented by the SPRAR- Sistema di Protezione per Richiedenti Asilo e Rifugiati (Protection System for Asylum Seekers and Refugees), provided for by the law n.189/2002, that consists in a network of infrastructures in which a large number of supporting activities, aimed at reaching the so-called “integrated reception”, are carried out: distribution of food and/or garments, Italian language courses, legal and social advice etc. The SPRAR, as well as the CDAs and the CARAs, although under the supervision of the Central Directorate, are conducted by associations, cooperatives and NGOs²⁰⁸⁷ which have been selected as contractors through a public tender launched at local level by the territorial administrations.

The Central Directorate for Immigration and Asylum Policies, instead, beyond taking numerous initiatives in order to provide migrants effective assimilation in the social fabric, performs functions of analysis and monitoring of integration policies. The so-called Turco-Napolitano law (law n. 40/1998, Art. 3.2) in order to strengthen the efficiency of this analysis, has established the Consigli Territoriali per l'Immigrazione (Territorial Councils for Immigration), advisory bodies which operate at decentralized level aiming to the promotion of integration initiatives. Chaired by the Prefect, they are composed by representatives of the State (namely, from prefectures and police headquarters), representatives of local administrations, representatives of employers' organisations and of non EU-workers' organisations, as well as exponents of associations dealing with immigrants' assistance and of associations of immigrants. According to the implementation decree²⁰⁸⁸ of the aforementioned law, "at least two representatives of the most representative associations of immigrants locally operating" should take part to the Council; due to the vagueness of the provision's formulation, however, those are discretionally chosen by local authorities and often paradoxically devoid of an effective representativeness. Moreover, as provided for in the law n.203/1994 (Chapter B), bodies with the same advisory nature and representative purpose could be discretionally established by regions and local administrations, such as the Consulte Comunali (Municipal Consultative Bodies) and the Consigliere Straniero Aggiunto (Extra Foreign Advisor).²⁰⁸⁹

The Central Directorate for Civil Rights, Citizenship and Minorities is responsible for the recognition of the Italian citizenship and the statelessness status. According to the law n.94/2009, Art. 9.1.E, for refugees and stateless persons the procedure at stake is less burdensome.

Last but not least, within the Department of Civil Liberties and Immigration, an essential and chief role is played by the National Commission for the Right of Asylum. Chaired by the Prefect, it is made up with two representatives of the Ministry of the Interior (one from the Department of Public Security and one from the Department of Civil Liberties and Immigration), a representative of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a representative of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers and UNHCR representatives. As provided for by the legislative decree no.25/2008, Art. 5, the National Commission holds refresher courses for the members of each commission, collects data and statistics over migration and is even responsible for the revocation and cessation of international protection. The National Commission also holds a key position in the exchange of information over migration with the European Commission or public authorities of other countries. Moreover, it coordinates and gives guidance to the Commissioni Territoriali per il Riconoscimento della Protezione Internazionale (Territorial Commissions for the Recognition of International Protection), pointing to the harmonisation of their activities, e.g. drafting and communicating Country of Origin Information or guidelines reports.²⁰⁹⁰ The Territorial Commissions are the only bodies in charge for the asylum procedure and the recognition of international protection. Due to the impressive rise of asylum applications during the last years, even the number of the operating Commissions has increased: nowadays there are 20 of them, as against 10 before the decree of the Ministry of the Interior of the 11.10.2014. The same Decree has also established 20 Sections which came up beside the Commissions (with the same functions of these last), and which are now 28. The Territorial Commission is composed of four members: a functionary of the Prefecture, a functionary of the Polizia di Stato, a representative of the ANCI (National Confederation of Local Authorities) and a representative of the UNHCR. A feature that strongly characterizes the Italian asylum procedure is the ascription of a decisional role (above the consultative one covered in the National Commission) to the representatives of the UNHCR. Within the Ministry of the Interior, as mentioned before, even the Department of Public Security deals with migration issues: the Direzione Centrale dell'Immigrazione e della Polizia delle Frontiere (Central Directorate for Immigration and Border Police) promotes preventive actions and various measures to tackle irregular immigration.²⁰⁹¹ Other Ministries play a secondary but complementary role in those fields related to immigration which fall under their responsibilities. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and in particular the Direzione Generale per gli Italiani all'Estero e le Politiche Migratorie (General Directorate for Italians Abroad and Migration Policies) has jurisdiction over visa requests and juridical administrative issues regarding foreign citizens and/or asylum seekers or refugees (V and VI Office).²⁰⁹²

For the sake of a coherent framework, which could be jeopardized by the overlap of responsibilities between Ministries, the Consolidation Act on Immigration (Legislative Decree no. 286/1998, article 2-bis, as modified by Law no. 189/2002, Art. 2.1) provides for the Coordination and Monitoring Committee, led by the President or vice-President of the Council of Ministers and constituted by other relevant Ministers designated cas par cas depending on the issues under debate. The Committee is supported by the Technical Working Group, which plans the subjects of the Committee's future undertakings, in order to examine migration-related questions and elaborate potential responses in terms of national strategies, and which synchronizes the attitudes of all the governmental bodies involved.

The whole organisational set-up of the Italian migration governance is based on chronic interconnections between central governmental entities and peripheral ones (e.g. regions, provinces, municipalities) and is inspired by the principle of administrative decentralization (Title V of the Italian Constitution). Other subjects actively involved in this systems are private entities (e.g. non-profits and co-ops) as well as international organisations (e.g. UNHCR representatives in the Territorial Commissions).

In order to have a complete overview of the organisational arrangements, it is fundamental to underline the role of the European Union Commission. First of all, it has allocated the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF) to support national migration policies during the period 2014-2020. Secondly, it controls that the Italian national migration policy is aligned with the principles of the EU migration law.²⁰⁹³ A control of function is also attributed to the Garante della Protezione della Libertà Personale (Authority for the Protection of Personal Freedom) in relation with the respect of fundamental rights during the removal and deportation procedures as

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transimmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

2016 has been a year of record highs for Italy, for what concerns asylum seeking. As it is possible to notice in Figure 3, the number of applications for asylum procedures has exceeded 123.000 in the last year, with an increment of 47% compared to 2015. Comparing Figures 1 and 2, it is evident a rise of applications took place yet in 2015, with an increment of 32% compared to 2014. During the 2014-2016 period, about 270.000 asylum applications have been filed, whereas in the previous 13 years the total number of submitted applications has been of about 365.000. Table 1 and Figure 4 analyze trends of asylum applications over the last years, starting from 1990: the graphic demonstrates a quasi-constant trend of applications during the first decade, never exceeding 2000 applications per year, with important but sporadic peaks in 1991, with 28.400 applications, and during the 1998-2000 period, when about 82.000 submissions in total were presented. Since 2000, asylum seekers have never been less than 10.000 per year, but they followed a fluctuating and not steady trend, reaching new record highs in 2008 (31.723 requests of asylum) and in 2011 (37.350). However, it is after 2014 that asylum seeking has reached a farfetched climax, with a continuous rise of numbers. Available statistics show that, until June 2017, 72.744 applications have been submitted, with an average of 12.124 requests per month. The sea arrivals until the 17th July of 2017, however, amounted to a larger number: 93,213 – see Figure 7. Examining Figures 1, 2 and 3, it is noteworthy that, over the last three years, males have been the vast majority of asylum seekers, women representing only the 10-15% of all the applicants. Furthermore, over 50% of the applicants are Africans, followed by Asians (about 25-30%). Taking nationality into consideration, most of the applicants were recorded as Nigerians (about 22%): 10.040 in 2014, 18.174 in 2015 (+81% compared to the previous year) and 27.289 in 2016 (+50% compared to 2015). Pakistan, Gambia and Senegal followed Nigeria in terms of number of asylum seekers, both in 2015 and in 2016. A remarkable number of applications has been filed also by Eritreans, with an impressive increment of 925% from 2015 to 2016 (729 Eritrean applicants in 2015, compared to 7472 in 2016). In 2015 and 2016, asylum has been granted to about 40% of all the applicants, which have been 71.117 in 2015 and 91.102 in 2016: 5% of them have been recognized as refugees, 14% have received subsidiary protection, while 22% have been granted humanitarian protection. In 2014, when 36.270 asylum seekers were interviewed, only 40% of the applications were denied (-20% compared with the last two years).²⁰⁹⁴ Sea arrivals statistics mainly reflect the trends of asylum seeking exposed before. In

²⁰⁹⁴ Ministero dell'Interno, 'Dipartimento per le libertà civili e l'immigrazione' (Department of Civil Liberties and Immigration, file attached: Riepilogo anno 2015-2016 and Riepilogo anno 2014-2015), <<http://www.libertacivilimmigrazione.dlci.interno.gov.it/it/documentazione/statistica/i-numeri-dellasil>>

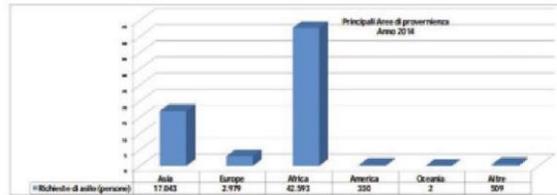

2017 most of the sea arrivals are coming from Nigeria (17,8%), and Bangladesh (10,4%). The majority of sea influxes concerns men, while women and children represent a slight minority (20%). As said before, until July 2017, 93,213 immigrants disembarked on Italian coasts: Italy is facing 9 times the sea arrivals of Greece (10,250) and 14 times those of Spain (6,524). The region most involved region is Sicily, in which more than half of immigrants arriving in Europe land (56,115), followed by Calabria (21,382) – see Figure 7. Concerning immigrants residing in Italy, some interesting data are shown in Figure 5: in 2015 and 2016, they were almost 5 million, and they now represent 8,2/8,3% of the whole population residing on the Italian territory. Most of them have been recorded as Romanians, Albanians and Moroccans. These data are similar to those collected in 2014: over the last three years, the number of foreigners residing in Italy has slightly increased of about 1% each year. Despite this, a noteworthy difference can still be noticed when comparing these statistics to those of 2012, when immigrants were only 4 million and represented the 6,8% of the whole population on the Italian territory. Italy, on 1 January 2016, is classified as the third country of the European Union with the largest number of non-nationals living within its territory. Moreover, in 2015, 178.000 non-nationals acquired the Italian citizenship: Italy is the first EU country in terms of residents granted citizenship – see Figure 6. In 2015, in Italy there were 280.1 thousand immigrants: only 26% of them came from an EU Member State of previous residence and over 206 thousand immigrants came from non-EU countries – see table 2.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

Italy was found to breach the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) or of its protocols for the treatment reserved to migrants in several important judgments delivered by the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). This chapter focuses on the implementation of these judgments at national level. The ECHR leaves to the State the possibility to choose the instruments and the procedures to implement its decisions. In the Italian legislative system, the duty to conform to the ECtHR's decisions can be found in Article 117 of the Constitution. Formally, the competence to monitor the implementation of the decisions is recognised to the Parliament by the Article 5 §3 let. a bis of Law n. 400 of 1988,²⁰⁹⁵ as amended by Law n. 12 of 2006.²⁰⁹⁶ This provision does not touch the competence of the Government to choose how and when to implement them. Moreover, anyway, there is no national provision which establishes a procedure to be followed in these cases. This leads to the adoption of several different acts, often expression of the executive power, chosen time by time in relation to the exigencies of the situation.

Any High Contracting Party of the Convention has the duty to implement only the judgments in which it appeared as respondent before the ECtHR, but this does not mean that national law and courts are not influenced also by the others. Due to space constraints, the latter profile will be only briefly addressed before concentrating on the most relevant decisions against Italy.

A recent case decided by the Italian Court of Cassation and that clearly explains the influences of the ECHR's judgements is judgment n. 38041/2017.²⁰⁹⁷ The court of Cassation changed the decision of the lower court of expelling an individual who was seriously invalid and who proved that his home country did not have any legislative framework to protect people with disability. The Court of Cassation decided "in the light of the principles stated by the ECtHR and the Constitutional Court". The decision was taken only a few months after the ECtHR's case *Paposhvili v. Belgium*²⁰⁹⁸ where the Strasbourg judges affirmed that applicability of Article 3 (Prohibition of Torture) of the ECHR to such cases. This is a recent example of how a decision of the ECtHR, even if not directly referred to a certain State, can produce effects in the territories of all the High Contracting Parties of the Charter.

Moving to the main object of this paper, namely the implementation of the judgments in which Italy appeared as respondent, the oldest case is Saadi v. Italy,²⁰⁹⁹ where the Court found a potential violation of Article 3 of the ECHR, as a result of Mr. Saadi's possible deportation to Tunisia.

²⁰⁹⁹ Saadi v. Italy, App. No. 37201/06 (ECtHR, 28 February 2008).

The findings of the ECtHR led the Italian Court of Cassation to deliver an order²¹⁰⁰ stating that judicial authorities (including Giudici di pace (justices of the peace)), as far as expulsion orders are concerned, should assess the concrete risks that an irregular migrant would face in his or her country of origin before an expulsion order can be executed. Furthermore, on May 28 2010, the Ministry of Justice sent a circular²¹⁰¹ to all the domestic Courts of Appeal stressing the need to comply with the ECtHR's interim measures and reaffirming that an evaluation should be made on whether there are "impediments" to expulsion, such as the risk of a violation of rights under Article 3 of the Convention in the country of destination. Regarding the individual measures adopted by the Court, Italy complied with them lifting all the expulsion orders against the applicants and duly paying the sum established as just satisfaction.

The second relevant case is Hirsi Jamaa and others v. Italy.²¹⁰² The case concerned the return to Libya of 11 Somalian and 13 Eritrean intercepted at sea, without any assessment of their individual situation. The Court condemned the State for the violation of Article 3 of the Convention, both for the potential ill-treatment that they could have suffered in Libya and for the subsequent risk of ill-treatment in Eritrea and Somalia if they were to be further deported in those countries. The Court also found a breach of Article 4 of Protocol n. 4 (prohibition of collective expulsion of alien) and of Article 13 of the ECHR (right to an effective remedy), in conjunction with Article 4 of Protocol n. 4. As far as the execution of this judgment is concerned, it is important to note that the bilateral agreement with Libya, of 2009, which was at the basis of the return of the migrants to Libya, was suspended in 2011 due to the change of the Libyan regime. Italy also provided to the ECtHR assurances that the guarantees contained in national laws and regulations concerning the treatment of asylum seekers were properly applied.²¹⁰³ In particular, Italy reaffirmed that refugees and asylum seekers would be granted access to all the relevant domestic procedures in all circumstances, including during military and coast guard operations. Furthermore, the Government informed the Court that the naval units had received the order to disembark all the migrants intercepted at sea in Italy. There, they would be able to file an application for asylum or international protection before the Territorial Commissions. Italy also informed the Court of the adoption of the Legislative Decree n. 142 of 2015²¹⁰⁴ which implemented the Directive 2013/32/EU (on common procedures for granting and withdrawing international protection), and the Directive 2013/33/EU (laying down standards for the reception of applicants for international protection). The decree sets up the procedures to be followed when a migrant arrives in Italy and includes the possibility to immediately lodge an asylum application which will be evaluated on an individual basis. In principle, this legal background safeguards against expulsions carried out without any individual assessment of the situation of the migrant. For what concerns the individual measures adopted, Italy clarified that the whereabouts of the 9 applicants are unknown, tried to find them contacting the Libyan authorities without success and deposited in an account at their disposal the sum granted as just satisfaction.

The next case, Dhabbi v. Italy,²¹⁰⁵ concerns an application from migrants lawfully resident in Italy. The ECtHR found in this case a violation of Article 14 (prohibition of discrimination) in conjunction with Article 8 (right to respect for private and family life). The victim was a Tunisian national whose application for a family allowance, provided by Section 65 of Law n. 448 of 1998,²¹⁰⁶ had been rejected. As a consequence of the judgment, Italy amended that provision bringing its legislation in line with the Court's requirements. Article 2 §2 of Decree n. 337 of 2001²¹⁰⁷ and Article 13 §1 of Law n. 97 of 2013²¹⁰⁸ recognised access to the allowance, respectively, to European citizens and to non-Europeans who reside in the country for a long-term period. Also in this case, the just satisfaction was duly paid by the State.

Another interesting judgment, related to the breach by Italy of Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8, is Taddeucci and Mc Call v. Italy.²¹⁰⁹ The applicants were a homosexual couple registered as an unmarried couple in New Zealand; after the facts of this case they married in the Netherlands. When they moved to Italy, the second applicant (Mr. Mc Call), was refused a residence permit which he had requested on family grounds. The refusal was due to the fact that only different-sex spouses could qualify for a residence permit for "family members". In its judgment, the Court did not question the State's right to reject an application for a residence permit to an unmarried couple. However, Italy was condemned since the Court found that as regards the residence permit for family members, the applicants were treated equally to couples in a significantly different situation, namely different-sex couples that decided not to have their relationship legally recognized. The Court found that there was no objective and reasonable justification for this equal treatment of significantly different situations. The discrimination lied in the fact that the two applicants did not have access in Italy to any form of legal recognition of their union. The discrimination was, thus, found in comparison with heterosexual couples who, in abstract, could have married to obtain the permit. Italy has enacted Law n. 76 of 2016²¹¹⁰ giving to same-sex couples access to a civil partnership comparable to marriage. Therefore, by adopting this piece of legislation Italy has rectified its breaches since transnational same-sex couples are no longer discriminated with respect to different-sex couples. Furthermore, the just satisfaction has been regularly paid by the State.

*Sharifi and others v. Italy and Greece*²¹¹¹ is another case which is particularly relevant. The Court found that the unregistered return of 4 irregular migrants to Greece, on the basis of a bilateral readmission agreement signed in 1999, amounted to a violation of Article 3 of the ECHR, Article 4 of the Protocol n. 4, and Article 13 ECHR in conjunction with Article 3 ECHR and 4 Protocol n. 4. The applicants had neither been granted access to an interpreter, nor to a lawyer, nor to officials capable of providing them with the minimum information about their rights and the procedures to follow in order to seek international protection in Italy. Furthermore, they did not receive any official, written and translated, documents regarding their return to Greece. On July 13 2016, Italy submitted an action plan²¹¹² concerning the implementation of the judgment. Firstly, this document reaffirmed what already stated in Hirsi Jamaa and others in relation to the possibility to seek asylum in Italy.²¹¹³ Secondly, the Government submitted a report²¹¹⁴ of the Consiglio Italiano per i Rifugiati (Italian Refugee Council) on the reception conditions and on the procedures to apply for international protection in the Adriatic ports. This report was quoted by the State to highlight that in the Adriatic ports the migrants had access to an effective information system in relation to the options available to apply for international protection. Thirdly, Italy affirmed that, at the moment of the submission of the action plan the readmission agreement was applied in compliance with the principles dictated by the ECtHR and that asylum seekers were not subject to it. In support of these statements, the Government provided some statistics highlighting the lowering of the number of migrants sent back to Greece (from 3.433 in 2009, to 426 in 2015, to only 103 in the first half of 2016). Furthermore, a report, published in November 2013 by *Medici per i Diritti Umani*²¹¹⁵ (Doctors for Human Rights) was quoted by Italy in its action plan. This report was used to show that irregular migrants who were intercepted on the ships coming from Greece had access to NGOs' assistance. The officials of the NGOs interviewed migrants in order to evaluate their legal status. Lastly, the State has underlined that, since 2008, Italy had applied increasingly the sovereignty clause provided for in Article 17 §1 of Reg. UE 604/2013, derogating in this way from the ordinary criteria established in Dublin III Regulation.

The Sharifi case is particularly interesting because its implementation has received, on September 20-21 2016, a feedback from the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers. The latter acknowledges efforts made by Italian authorities to rectify the breach; however, several concerns are expressed. The Committee focuses on the report written by Medici per i Diritti Umani and highlight several issues raised therein. The NGO complained about the uncertainty of humanitarian organisation's (human and financial) resources and of their insufficient presence in the Adriatic ports. The Committee also paid a special attention to the fact that in the same report the NGO affirmed that the 85% of migrants arriving from Greece were sent back in the next few hours, without any formal procedure, in a clear breach of the above-mentioned bilateral agreement. Another piece of information which is deemed relevant is that in the first half of 2013, only 50% of migrants arriving from Greece had access to the assistance of the organisations. Moreover, the Committee asked for statistical data to clarify the reduction of migrants sent back to Greece, stressing that, without the data related to the total number of arrivals and to the number of asylum requests received, the relevance of the reduction cannot be shown. In its decision, the Committee asks Italy to provide more up to date information in relation to the functioning and funding of the reception system in the Adriatic ports, on the procedures followed there and on migrants' access to NGO assistance, and on the numbers needed to better understand the decrease of migrants sent back to Greece.

Italy communicated an action report on March 16 2017, but the information contained therein were considered by the Committee insufficient to clarify the abovementioned issues. Italy was asked to send further information before the end of September 2017.

Also with regards to the individual measures the Committee of Ministers is not satisfied with the actions of the Italian government. One of the four applicants received international protection in Italy, but the situation of the others is considered not to have been sufficiently clarified in the above mentioned Italian action plan.

The last relevant case is Kblajfia and others v. Italy.²¹¹⁶ The case concerned three Tunisian citizens who were intercepted at sea by the Italian coastguard and brought to Lampedusa. There, they stayed at an Early Reception and Aid Centre until a violent riot destroyed the centre. The migrants were then transferred to Palermo. Expulsion orders were, then, issued against them; however, they claimed that they did not receive all the relevant documentation. The ECtHR found a violation of Article 5 of the ECHR (right to liberty and security) §1, §2, §4, and of Article 13 in conjunction with Article 3 of the ECHR. In order to implement the judgement at issue, an action plan/report was awaited by the Italian Government before June 15 2017 but it is not yet available. However, in the yearly report to the Parliament, the Government stated that the Legislative Decree n. 142 of 2015 would permit to leave the emergency approach, leading, together with previous national provisions, to a structure and flexible system to face the arrival of migrants. Moreover, it is underlined that the new hotspot approach would allow the reception of migrants in structures where operators of the UNHCR and of the IOM can deliver them all of the relevant information. In the report it is also stated that the just satisfaction has been duly paid.²¹¹⁷

In conclusion, ECtHR's judgments have deeply influenced Italian law and practice. As far as the last two judgements are concerned, the information on their implementation provided by the Government are not always complete and clear. The shortcomings of the Italian system have been addressed several times by the Court to bring it in line with human rights standards; the full compliance with these standards is a goal still to be reached.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

6.1. The implementation of the recommendations of the European Commission against racism and intolerance (ECRI)

6.1.1. Implementation at a legislative level

Italy has made relevant efforts to implement the Recommendations of the ECRI,²¹¹⁸ included in various reports delivered since its creation. However, the last report, published on 7 June 2016, shows that Italy's legislation presents some lacunae. For example, Italy has not so far implemented the recommendation to ratify the Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights establishing a general prohibition of discrimination; neither it has enacted an ad hoc ordinary law on equal treatment and prohibition of discrimination,²¹¹⁹ in order to implement the principle of equality laid down by art. 3 of the Italian Constitution. Nevertheless, although a general prohibition of discrimination does not exist under the national system, there are sector-related pieces of legislation providing for equal treatment between foreigners and Italian nationals. Among the others, the Legislative Decree (LD) No. 286/98, the so-called "Turco-Napolitano Act", as amended by Act No. 189/02 of 2002 (known as the "Bossi-Fini" Act) provides for special "Measures for social inclusion" and defines the concept of "Discrimination based on race, ethnicity, nationality or religion".²¹²⁰

In this regard, Italy has to some extent implemented ECRI's General Policy Recommendation No. 7 to combat racism and racial discrimination. Indeed, Act n. 654 of 13 October 1975 ("Reale Act"), as amended by Act No. 205 of 25 June 1993 ("Mancino Act") and Act No. 85 of 24 February 2006, criminalized racial discrimination, incitement to racial discrimination, incitement to racial violence, racial violence, the promotion of ideas based on racial superiority or ethnic or racist hatred and the setting up or running of, participation in or support to any organisation, association, movement or group whose purpose is the instigation of racial discrimination or violence. The Mancino Act also prohibits the public display of symbols and emblems of such organisations and, above all, makes racist bias an aggravating circumstance in connection with any offence. However, as mentioned above, these Acts present substantial lacunae, e.g. the lack of any reference to “colour and language” as causes of discrimination²¹²¹; in addition, public insults, defamation or threats against a person or group of people are ordinary crimes for the purposes of the Criminal Code, and not separate criminal offences, when committed against a person or group of people on the grounds of their race, colour, language, religion, nationality or national or ethnic origin. For these reasons, the ECRI has underlined the need to amend the Italian Criminal Code,²¹²² which is deficient as far as the prevention and repression of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes is concerned. In fact, with the exception of the condoning of genocide, all the other crimes are considered as merely aggravating circumstances, instead of proper criminal offences. Turning to civil and administrative law provisions against racial discrimination, these are to be found in Act No. 300 of 1970 on employment, in the “Turco-Napolitano Act” and in Legislative Decrees N. 215 and 216 of 2003. These are in line with ECRI’s general recommendation No. 7, although they do not cover discrimination on grounds of language and colour, for which no provision is made. The Italian legislation is deficient insofar as all organizations active in the field of combating racism and racial discrimination are not able to take legal action on behalf of alleged victims of these phenomena or in cases of collective discrimination. As an example, this is the case of the National Office Against Racial Discrimination, which is not entitled to take legal action in the event of discrimination.

²¹¹⁹ The main source on such prohibition is found in Law No. 300 (Statute of Workers) 1970 [Statuto dei Lavoratori].

²¹²⁰ Artt 42 and 43, Legislative Decree No. 286 (Consolidated Law on Dispositions Concerning the Discipline on Immigration and the Norms on Non-nationals' conditions) 1998 [Testo unico delle disposizioni concernenti la disciplina dell'immigrazione e norme sulla condizione dello straniero].

Another issue raised by the latest ECRI’s report concerns the ratification of the additional Protocol to the Convention on Cybercrime, aimed at criminalizing acts of racist and xenophobic nature committed through computer systems. The ratification of this Convention was approved by one of the houses of Parliament on July 6 2016 and is currently waiting for discussion before the Senate²¹²³. The Italian legal order is also deficient with respect to the collection of data on hate speech and other hate-motivated offences. In addition, political extremism in Italy with strong xenophobic and islamophobic connotations gives rise to concerns.

6.1.2. Practical implementation and impact on society

The abovementioned “Turco-Napolitano Act” and subsequent amendments introduced by the “Bossi-Fini” Act contain measures to facilitate the integration of third country nationals lawfully residing in Italy, whose practical implementation can be deemed appreciable, even though not fully satisfactory. Since 2012, a compulsory individual training based on an “integration agreement”²¹²⁴ has been established, which aims at facilitating integration of foreign nationals and concerns the renovation of the residence permit upon condition, inter alia, of the acquisition ²¹²¹ ECRI considered that Art 18*bis*, para. 1, of Law No. 482/1999 on linguistic and cultural minorities providing that the Reale Act “shall also apply in order to prevent and counter intolerance and violence acts against people belonging to linguistic minorities” is not equivalent to a prohibition of racism and racial discrimination on ground of language (ECRI Report on Italy, fifth monitoring cycle, published on 7 June 2016, note 7).

of a sufficient knowledge of the Italian language and culture and of compliance with the obligation to send children to school.²¹²⁵ Difficulties in accessing housing and home ownership for immigrants have been frequently recalled in the Recommendations directed to Italy, with special reference to disparity in the rent conditions and, also, to discrimination in the procedures of access public housing, which can vary depending on the local authorities. Even though the right to house and to private life is fully granted both at a national and international level, with the Italian law disposing the obligation of equal treatment in matter of access to public housing and equalizing non-nationals to Italian citizens,²¹²⁶ the practical compilation of the waiting lists and their criteria are municipal prerogatives, circumstance that leads to strong de facto divergences across Municipalities. This notwithstanding the several sentences of Italian Tribunals asking for the elimination of discriminatory policies. Nevertheless, the flourishing case-law shows a decisive trend toward the elimination of these disparities.²¹²⁷ On the same time, the adoption of Act No. 107/15 “on good schooling” has demonstrated an effort in improving the inclusion at school, introducing provisions with the aim of giving substantial financial and human support to schools with large numbers of foreign pupils and of promoting adult education and trainings specifically addressed to foreigners.²¹²⁸

6.2. The implementation of the recommendations of National Human Rights Bodies on integration

In addition to ECRI, some recommendations on integration have been issued by UNHCR to Italy, which recently addressed some specific questions that are yet to be solved.²¹²⁹ Among the most significant, it has been recommended that, for the first two years after obtaining international protection, refugees should be included in disadvantaged workers categories that should be provided with an assisted access to work. Such ad hoc categorization has not been adopted yet, but a relevant initiative in this direction has been the strategy promoted by the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, mainly focusing on vocational trainings and grant-assisted ²¹²⁵ ibid, Art 13.5-bis.

²¹²⁶ The right to house and to private life is protected by the Italian Constitution under the Articles 10, comma 2, and 117, comma 1. Moreover, European Council Directive 2003/109/EC of 25 November 2003 concerning the status of third-country nationals who are long-term residents, implemented in Italy through Legislative Decree No. 3/2007 amending the Italian Consolidated Law on Migration, disposes the principle of equal treatment (see Art. 11, comma 1, lett. F of the Directive, and Art. 9 of the Consolidated Law on Migration; supra, note 92). Accordingly, under the Italian Consolidated Law on Migration regular non-nationals enjoy the full sphere of rights of Italian citizens regarding public housing and credit facility (see Art. 11, comma 1, lett. F of the Directive, and Art. 9 of the Consolidated Law on Migration; supra, note 92).

jobs through the adoption of SPRAR Projects²¹³⁰ and pilot projects coordinated by the Ministry.²¹³¹

All beneficiaries of international protection who are destitute should be allowed access to suitable reception conditions for a minimum period of six months, renewable under specific circumstances. Control and monitoring systems should be standardized, with a particular attention to people with special needs. Such monitoring system should include mechanisms for the consultation and active participation of asylum-seekers, as well as a sanctioning system based on objective and verifiable parameters. However, a standardized mechanism has not been adopted yet; on the contrary, the system is characterised by great inhomogeneity, due to structural deficiencies, lack of adequate funds and administrative unevenness. In fact, Italy presents remarkable geographical inequalities in the process of integration of immigrants, with special reference to the services offered and to available facilities. Data on access to work, housing and scholarization display a strong regional disparity, with the local authorities often being unable to guarantee an effective application of the national and supranational legislation on integration and non-discrimination. Especially in the South, the implementation of integration policies often relies on associations, trade unions and religious organisations.²¹³² To fix this problem, in 2014 the Ministry of Labour and Social Policies signed seventeen regional agreements to strengthen cooperation with regional and local authorities in the field of integration policies.²¹³³

Another noticeable problem is the subjective disparity in acceding integration facilities in Italy. Most of the rights protected under common laws and Courts' decisions are addressed specifically to permanent non-nationals with a regular permit of residence. Additionally, the main category of beneficiaries of integration policies is constituted of the Roma population and non-nationals recently arrived and regularly present in the country. On the contrary, a specific integration policy for refugees and people who qualify for international protection is lacking.²¹³⁴ This situation translates into substantial integration problems, as the lack of post-reception support for beneficiaries of protection upon leaving reception facilities, especially for those who could not stay in a second-line reception SPRAR facility and had to leave the CARA (First Line Reception Centres) immediately after they were recognized international protection.²¹³⁵ As already mentioned, reception standards differ considerably among facilities, especially on a geographical basis, and UNHCR found that in some cases services provided are particularly inadequate to support refugees' social inclusion.²¹³⁶

²¹³⁰ The System of Protection for Asylum Seekers and Refugees has been introduced by Law No. 189 (Modifications in the Law Concerning Immigration and Asylum) 2002 [Modifica alla normativa in materia di immigrazione e di asilo or "Bossi-Fini"].

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. The Constitutional framework and its interpretation

Article 32, para. 1 of the Italian Constitution states that “the Republic safeguards health as a fundamental right of the individual and as a collective interest, and guarantees free medical care to the indigent”. The provision is enshrined among several other significant rights in the Title II of the Charter, and its most common interpretation includes the duty of the State to provide for every individual an appropriate access to healthcare. In essence, the above-mentioned article also grants to the individual the right of seeking public assistance by the state. This positive obligation is confirmed by the constant jurisprudence of the Italian Constitutional Court, which has interpreted the right to healthcare as a “primary and fundamental right that imposes full and comprehensive protection” by the state.²¹³⁷ Moreover, such duty could not be affected even by financial necessities.²¹³⁸

The applicability of Article 32 to migrants derives from the wording of the same article, which refers to the “individual”, expressing the concept that citizenship should not be taken into account when dealing with the right to healthcare. In addition, such provision should be interpreted in the light of Article 3,²¹³⁹ that sets forth the principle of non-discrimination before the law, and Article 2, which binds the Republic to guarantee not only civil and political rights of the person, but also to fulfil the duties of economic and social solidarity. It should be underlined that, even if the text of Article 3 refers to “citizens”, the same Court has reaffirmed that “when dealing with fundamental rights, the constitutional principle of non-discrimination does not admit any inequity between the citizen and the foreigner”.²¹⁴⁰

It follows that every migrant, regular or irregular, has the same right to seek health assistance from the Italian State; this principle is confirmed by the judgment 252/2001 of the Constitutional Court, stating that “this irreducible core of the protection of health as a fundamental right of the person must thus be recognised also to foreigners, regardless of their position with respect to the rules that discipline the entrance and permanence in the country” (§2).

²¹³⁸ Italian Constitutional Court, judgement 309/1999, §3. See also: Italian Constitutional Court, judgement 203/2016.

²¹³⁹ Article 3 in conjunction with Article 32 has been used by the Constitutional Court in many cases to avoid discriminations and barriers to the access to healthcare (as example, see judgement 416/1995, setting forth the principle of “equality of health services”).

²¹⁴⁰ Italian Constitutional Court, judgement 62/1994, §4.

7.2. Statutory regulations

7.2.1. The right to access to healthcare of legal migrants

The constitutional provisions on the right to access to healthcare have been implemented on a statutory level in 1978, when the Sistema Sanitario Nazionale (National Healthcare System) was created²¹⁴¹ in order to provide free public healthcare to everyone. The principle that legal migrants have access to the Healthcare System has been specified in the legislative decree 286/1998 (“Testo Unico sull’immigrazione”). Indeed, Article 2, para. 1 reaffirms the respect of foreigners’ fundamental rights under national and international law, and Article 2, para. 2 establishes that, in addition, legal migrants have the same rights and duties of Italian citizens.

In accordance with this principle, Article 34 of the same decree provides that legal migrants have the right or the option to register within the National Healthcare System, receiving the same services and conditions of Italians. In particular, the inscription to the National Healthcare System is mandatory for legal migrant workers or work-seekers, asylum seekers, and those who have been admitted in Italy on the ground of family reunification or humanitarian reasons or for adoption. The duty to register is also extended to family members and minors.²¹⁴² On the other hand, other categories of migrants have an option to register within the public system or to pay for private insurance; usually this category includes short-term migrants, as students or au pairs. If they choose to use the public service, they pay the same amount as Italians or other migrants do by paying their taxes.²¹⁴³

7.2.2. The right to access to healthcare of irregular migrants

Since regular migrants enjoy the same rights and duties of Italian citizens, the main issues can be found in the protection of irregular migrants’ right to access to healthcare. First of all, it should be underlined that minors, even if irregular, still have the right under national legislation to register within the National Healthcare System²¹⁴⁴ in accordance with the Italian international commitment in the New York Convention.²¹⁴⁵

Indeed, the status of irregular migrants differs from the full equality in civil rights given to regular migrants: the law simply states that their fundamental rights enshrined in national and international instruments should be respected.²¹⁴⁶ Their right to access to healthcare is set forth by Article 35 of the Testo Unico sull’immigrazione (Italian Law on Immigration). The article states that foreign citizens, whose permanence in the country is not in compliance with national migration law, still have the right to seek from public service “urgent” and “essential” medical care (para 3). According to the Circular Letter 5/2000 of the Ministry of Health, “urgent” healthcare should be considered any medical care that cannot be postponed without jeopardizing the patient's life or health; while "essential" healthcare consists in any treatment, diagnosis or therapy regarding diseases not immediately dangerous, but which could lead to health damage or death if not cured. Moreover, Article 35 of the Testo Unico also gives special relevance to some treatments to be always granted, such as the one concerning pregnancy, vaccines, infectious diseases and drug addiction. The procedure to access to such services is specified by Article 43 para.3 of the Presidential Decree 394/1999: since irregular migrants cannot register within the National Healthcare System, they should apply for a six-months valid STP Regional Code, where STP stands for "Straniero Temporaneamente Residente", Temporarily Resident Foreigner.

7.3. The regional system and the different approaches towards irregular migrants' healthcare

Following the new Article 117 of the Italian Constitution,²¹⁴⁷ the power of regulation of public healthcare is shared between the State and the Regions. This concurrent discipline means that the State must provide the general provisions on the matter, while regional administration can choose how to put it into practice and regulate it more specifically. In particular, the Ministry of Health determines the LEA (Livelli Essenziali di Assistenza), essential services to be granted to everyone – and to irregular migrants in particular, but it is up to the Regions to implement them.²¹⁴⁸ The practice has shown that heavy differences persist between regions, both on an economic and policy ground: some regions have integrated healthcare services for irregular migrants within the normal healthcare system, some others have created specific medical helpdesk directed to them, others do not have any regional provision on the matter, leaving the national discipline directly applicable.

7.4. Illegal immigration as a criminal offence and negative outcomes on access to healthcare

In 2009, the right-wing governed led by Silvio Berlusconi, enacted the law 94/2009, which is generally referred to as "Bossi-Fini" from the name of its creators. One of the most controversial aspect of such statute is the addition of Article 10bis to the Testo Unico sull'immigrazione (d.lgs. 286/1998). The provision created a new criminal offence, namely the "crime of illegal immigration". What matters here is the effect that considering illegal immigration as a crime has on access to public healthcare: following the 2009 law, a strong debate on whether illegal migrants should be referred to police when assisted by public hospitals. Indeed, by creating a new crime automatically prosecutable, it seemed that the law required the public medical staff to report to the police any illegal migrant seeking for assistance.²¹⁴⁹ Such interpretation was disproved by the circular 12/2009 of the Ministry of Health, which, in reaffirming the validity of Article 35 para. 5 of the Testo Unico, expressly denied the possibility of ²¹⁴⁷ This Article has been heavily modified by the constitutional reform 3/2001, which, inspired by a federalist vision of the State, transferred numerous competences to the regional administrations.

²¹⁴⁸ In particular, the Agreement of the State-Regions Conference of September 7 2016 157/CSR.

²¹⁴⁹ The Italian Criminal Code, at Article 362 requires all public employees to report to the police or the public procedure any crime related to the cures given during their work if it is automatically prosecutable by the state (reato perseguibile d'ufficio).

reporting immigrant migrants for the mere fact of being illegally on the Italian soil. Irregular migrants are thus subjected to the same rule applicable to Italians and legal migrants and have to be reported only if any other crime automatically prosecutable occurs.

The fact that the obligation to report has been repudiated does not mean that the effects of the criminalisation of illegal immigration do no longer affect access to healthcare, as irregular migrants have still a reasonable fear of being reported to authorities when seeking public assistance – which requires them to denounce their irregular status.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

The right to education is primarily expressed in Article 31 of the Italian Constitution, according to which the Italian Republic protects youth through the implementation of the necessary institutes and structures. This right is recognized by the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989, which represents the most authoritative instrument for the protection and promotion of children' rights. The Convention lays down the prohibition to discriminate on the basis of race, sex, language, religion, political opinion and national origin and other factors for the enjoyment of the rights it contains.²¹⁵⁰ Article 38 of the Testo Unico sull'Immigrazione of 1998 n. 286 (Consolidated Act on Immigration) provides that all minors, both Italian and foreigners, have the obligation until the age of 16 to take part in the national education system.²¹⁵¹ They are subject to the provisions of the law concerning the right to education and of access to educational services. The same provision stresses that the effectiveness of these rights is guaranteed by the State, together with the regions (Regioni) and the local authorities, also through the activation of special language courses. According to par. 3 of Article 38, the School community welcomes linguistic and cultural differences since they are considered as fundamental values at the basis of mutual respect, cultural exchange and tolerance. For these reasons, the School community promotes initiatives aimed at fostering hospitality and protecting foreigners' cultures and languages of origin, as well as carrying out common intercultural activities. These initiatives are undertaken in cooperation with foreigners' associations, diplomatic and consular delegations and voluntary organizations, taking into consideration different local needs. The availability of the right to education to migrant children has been further clarified by Article 45 PD 394/1999, which provides for foreign children the same right to education of Italian children, even when they do not have a valid title to stay in the Italian territory. It should be noted that Article 6, par. 2 of the mentioned Consolidated Act on Immigration, as modified by Law 94/09, makes sure that the access to the obligatory educational services (“prestazioni scolastiche obbligatorie”) is not subject to the obligation of the beneficiary to have a residency permit.²¹⁵² This principle applies to the registration of children at the crèche (attended by children under the age of 3). Under Article 45 of the mentioned act, migrant children have access to the same public schools as Italian citizens and are entitled to the same assistance and arrangements in case they have special needs.²¹⁵³ They are automatically integrated in the obligatory National Education System and included in the class appropriate to their age. The Faculty commissions can deliberate upon the admission of the foreign student in a different class, basing their decisions on elements such as the school system of the country of origin, the verification of their abilities and skills and the educational qualification owned, if any. Proposals for the allocation of foreign students in each class are formulated by the Faculty commission, avoiding the creation of classes with a predominant presence of foreigners. The Ministry of Education released a communication on this issue on January 8 2010, underlying that the number of foreigners per class should not exceed its 30%.²¹⁵⁴ However, although there are exceptions, as a general rule the schools cannot refuse to enroll foreign minors.²¹⁵⁵ The Faculty commission also defines the necessary adaptation of the teaching programs, in relation to the competencies of the students. Consequently, specific and individual interventions would be adopted in order to facilitate the learning of the Italian language, using, if possible, the institution’s financial and structural resources. The knowledge and practice of the Italian language could also be strengthened by the activation of intensive courses on the basis of specific projects. Finally, it should be noted that foreigners cannot be discriminated with respect to Italians as regards to access to scholarships and other services related to the right to participate to the life of the school community. However, sometimes these rights are subject to the requirement of residence, which cannot be fulfilled for children of parents who are irregular migrants.²¹⁵⁶

All the measures previously mentioned are aimed at contrasting scholastic discrimination. The general principle of equality can be primarily found in Art. 3 of the Italian Constitution, which states, at its first paragraph, that “every citizen has equal social dignity and is equal in front of the law”. Although its authors used the expression “citizen”, the right is not limited to them but can be extended to foreigners and stateless people, as already decided by some Constitutional Court’s judgments during the 1960s.²¹⁵⁷ The principle of non-discrimination applied to the school system is also protected by Art. 34 of the Italian Constitution, according to which the school is open to everyone and primary education should be mandatory and free. Moreover, Italy adopted different international conventions on the principle of non-discrimination, which have become an integral part of its system.²¹⁵⁸ Nevertheless, its implementation in the sector of education still shows some weaknesses. According to the last Report of the Working Group for the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC Group),²¹⁵⁹ Italy should develop specific programs in order to improve the scholastic integration of foreign minors and of minors who are part of minorities. In particular, the Italian State should guarantee the professional, technical and financial resources needed, both for their integration and individual orientation. Moreover, a particular attention should be paid to migrant children and to Roma and Sinti children. The Italian Government is asked to provide for, and financially support, the admission of a cultural mediator, particularly in those schools where the presence of foreign children is higher than the 50%.

²¹⁵² In addition, foreign minors cannot be asked to provide a residence permit to enrol in a school until they have not completed their course of studies, even if the latter ends after the minor turns eighteen years old. I minori stranieri extracomunitari e il diritto all’istruzione dopo l’entrata in vigore della legge n. 94/2009, available at: <<http://www.meltingpot.org/I-minori-stranieri-extracomunitari-e-il-diritto-all.html>>, accessed 15/07/2017.

The right of education is provided for by two additional pieces of legislation. The first is LD 142/2015, which implements directive 2013/33/EU laying down standards for the reception of applicants for international protection. Art. 21 par. 3 of the mentioned act applies the provisions of art. 38 of the Consolidated Act on Immigration to unaccompanied minors seeking asylum and children of asylum seekers. The second is Law 7 April 2017, n. 47 on the protection of unaccompanied children,²¹⁶⁰ whose enactment has been praised by UNICEF.²¹⁶¹ Paragraph 3 of Article 14 imposes on all educational institutions to adopt necessary measures to enable the unaccompanied minors to complete their studies since their entry in the reception facilities. However, no additional public financial resources are devoted to perform this task. Furthermore, paragraph 4 protects minors who cannot be identified at the moment of their arrival in the reception facility: indeed, they can obtain the diplomas at the end of their studies even if they turn eighteen while they are completing these studies.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

9.1. The recognition procedure

In the Italian legal system a diploma is awarded by the competent national authority, upon the successful completion of each cycle of studies. Foreign qualifications must be recognised as equivalent to those awarded in Italy through the so-called recognition procedure. In this context, reference will be made only to the rules applicable in Italy in order to implement the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997 (Lisbon recognition Convention), ratified by Italy by Law n. 148/2002.²¹⁶² This Convention has been ratified by all members of the Council of Europe (with exception of Greece and Monaco) and some non-member states.²¹⁶³ The aim of this Treaty is to simplify the recognition of qualification granted in one Party in another party; indeed, the recognition procedure tend to be complicated due to the differences between legal systems, national educational systems and legal validity of the qualifications.

In cases where a recognition of a foreign qualification diploma concerns a third country that has not ratified the Lisbon Qualification Convention, the Legislative Decree n. 286 of 1998 and its implementation through the Presidential Decree n. 394 of 1999²¹⁶⁴ lay down specific rules which will not be accounted for in this context.

9.2 General Principles

In order to obtain the recognition in Italy of any foreign qualification, there are three steps to perform in advance in the country of origin. These general principles apply both to countries which have ratified the convention and third parties.

- Legal Translation: an official translation in Italian made by a certified translator with legal validity. The list of the certified translators is provided by the Italian diplomatic offices.²¹⁶⁵
- Legalisation: a certification of the authenticity of a document provided by the Italian diplomatic offices. Under the Hague Convention of October 5 1961, ratified by Law n.1253/1966, the Endorsement (hereafter apostille) replaces the legalisation.²¹⁶⁶ As a result of the Brussels Convention of 1987, neither the legalisation nor the apostille is necessary for the contracting parties of this Convention.
- Declaration of Value: a document, issued by the Italian diplomatic offices, containing information about the educational qualification obtained abroad. This document provides information on the legal status and nature of the issuing institution, the access requirements to the study programme, the legal duration of the studies and the value of the qualification in the country of origin. Instead of the Declaration of Value, the so-called Diploma Supplement is required in the countries in the European Higher Education Area under the Bologna Process.²¹⁶⁷

These documents are to be presented to the competent authorities: the Local School Offices (Uffici Scolastici Provinciali) for the recognition of school diplomas and the University Administrative Offices (Segreteria Universitarie) for the recognition of high-school diplomas giving access to the University and university diplomas.

9.3 The Lisbon recognition Convention and its implementation by Italy

The Convention concerns: 1) the recognition of qualification giving access to higher education; 2) the recognition of higher education qualifications; 3) the recognition of qualifications held by refugees, displaced persons and persons in a refugee-like situation. In Italy the recognition procedure, and the sources of law regulating it, vary depending on the purpose for which an application for recognition of a foreign qualification is made. An application for recognition may be made for academic purposes, mainly to get access to Universities (first cycle programmes) or to pursue further studies (second/third cycles programmes) or for the purpose of acceding to an employment in the public administration, or for other purposes.²¹⁶⁸

9.4 Recognition of foreign qualifications for academic purposes

The recognition of foreign qualifications to get access to higher education studies (first cycle programmes) or to further University studies (second and third cycles programmes) is regulated by Law n. 148 of July 11 2002. One of the most important aspect of this law is that art. 9 abolishes the principle of nostrification (equipollenza), which implied the need to prove that a foreign qualification is equivalent to one earned in Italy, as the exclusive means to have a foreign qualification recognised, regardless of the purpose of the application for recognition.

The application for recognition of foreign qualification for academic purposes should be made to Universities and AFAM Institutions (Alta Formazione Artistica e Culturale). These are designated by art. 2 of the competent authorities. The decision on the application for recognition should be made within 90 days from the application. The university may decide to fully recognize the qualification, to refuse the recognition or to only partially recognize it (this means that the interested person has to pass further exams or to complete a period of internship before being able to access the university studies).²¹⁶⁹ In case the applicant wishes to appeal the decision of refusal, he/she has to file a complaint to the Regional Administrative Tribunal (TAR), within sixty days.

9.5 The recognition of qualifications for non-academic purposes

A recognition of foreign qualifications may be necessary once the foreigners has completed his/her course of studies and wishes to use his qualifications to a) seek employment in the public sector or b) to obtain a career progress in the public administration, c) to be registered in job seeking centres or d) to get access to internships (praticantati) necessary to get access to regulated professions. This subject-matter is regulated by the Presidential Decree n. 189 of 2009.²¹⁷⁰ This decree applies to the recognition of diplomas awarded by higher education Institutes of the contracting parties to the Lisbon recognition Convention.

In order to take part in public competitions leading to employment in the Italian public administration (case a) above), the holder of a foreign qualification must apply for recognition to the Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research (MIUR) and the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri - Dipartimento della Funzione Pubblica (art. 2).²¹⁷¹ The competent authority to carry out the recognition is the President of the Council of Ministers (Presidente del Consiglio dei Ministri), upon proposal of the competent ministry.

In all the other cases (b), c), d) above) the individual assessment of the application for recognition is carried out by the Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research (MIUR). The applicant may submit his/her application directly to the interested public administration (art. 3 par. 2) and the final decision will be made within 90 days by the MIUR; such a decision will be communicated to the administration that forwarded the application for recognition. An internal appeal procedure (procedura di riesame) is provided for in case the application is rejected.

9.6 The recognition of qualifications held by refugees, displaced persons and persons in a refugee-like situation

For refugees, displaced persons and persons in a refugee-like situation,²¹⁷² the Legislative Decree n. 251 (Implementation of Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted) of 2007 is applicable. In particular, its art. 26, § 3 states that persons who are qualified as refugees or have been granted subsidiary protection status are subject to the same provisions regulating the recognition of diplomas, certificates and other foreign qualifications which are applicable to Italian citizens.

schooling. In addition, should a national test or final exam be necessary to enter a higher education institution, this requirement is also mandatory for the applicant.

²¹⁷¹ The procedure is regulated by art. 38, par. 3, of the Legislative Decree n. 165 (General rules on the work in the public administrations) 2001 [Norme generali sull'ordinamento del lavoro alle dipendenze delle amministrazioni pubbliche].

²¹⁷² Section VII of the Lisbon recognition Convention.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

In the Italian legal system there is an inseparable tie between citizenship and participation to political decisions. “The long-term non-EU foreign residents do not enjoy any kind of political rights, not even at the local level, unless they naturalize”.²¹⁷³ The only exception is made for EU citizens in municipal elections. The main obstacle in the recognition of political rights to migrants is article 48 of the Constitution that reserves the participation in political life to citizens. Although there have been attempts to expand migrants’ influence in political life at all levels, only a cohesive political will can overcome the constitutional obligation.

10.1. Participation in National Political Life

Foreigners do not have the right to vote for the election of the Parliament. Proposals to extend the possibility to vote to foreigners have been made only in 1996. The draft Turco-Napolitano Act (Consolidated Act n. 286 of 1998) included the provision for third country nationals to vote after 5 years of regular residence in the country. However, this provision was not retained in final text of the law. In more recent years, the issue of participation in political life by migrants has gained momentum in the political debate. The Democratic Party (Partito Democratico) granted the right to vote in primary elections (elezioni primarie) to designate the candidate to the Prime Minister held in December 2012, December 2013 and April 2017 to all documented residents.

10.2. Participation in Political Life at Regional Level

There is no national legislation concerning the right to vote at a regional level. The Constitutional Court, in judgment n. 196/2003 has recognized the possibility for Regions to legislate even in absence of a national legal framework, implementing article 122.1 of the Constitution. In this framework, two regions, Emilia Romagna and Toscana, in 2004 included in their Statutes the possibility for legal residents to vote and to be voted in regional elections.²¹⁷⁴

Article 3, par. 6, of Statute of Tuscany stated that: “The Region promotes, in respect of constitutional principles, the extension of the right to vote to immigrants”. However, judgement of the Constitutional court n. 372 of 2004 considered this provision not to have a binding nature, but only a cultural/political purpose.²¹⁷⁵ With judgment n. 379 of 2004 the Constitutional Court considered article 2, paragraph 1, letter f) and article 15 paragraph 1 of Emilia Romagna Statute inconsistent with articles 1, 48, 117, 121 and 122 of Constitution insofar as it extended electoral rights (including participation in referendum and other public consultations) to immigrants and legal residents in the Region.²¹⁷⁶

The provisions of the two Statutes have been judged by Council of State (higher administrative court) and the Constitutional Court either unconstitutional – electoral rights as confined to citizens- or as an invasion of central state competences in the field of electoral rights and status of migrants.²¹⁷⁷

10.3. Participation to municipal elections (“elezioni comunali”) by nationals of EU member States and third country nationals

The right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections is recognized by Article 22 par. 1 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union and by art. 40 of the Charter of the fundamental rights to all citizens of EU members. The latter provision states: “Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.” A more detailed discipline can be found in Directive 94/80/EC which was adopted after the Maastricht Treaty introduced the concept of European citizenship, including the right to stand and to vote in municipal election. The national legislation implementing this Directive is the Legislative Decree n. 197 (Implementation of Directive 94/80/EC concerning the exercise of the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in municipal election) of 1996. Under this law, EU citizens can vote for the major and for local bodies such as consiglio del comune (city council) and circonscrizione (district) of the city where they are registered in the electoral list of voters. They can be elected consigliere (councilman) and members of the giunta del comune (municipal council); however, they cannot be appointed as vice-sindaco (deputy mayor).

In order to vote EU citizens are required to submit a request to the mayor of the Municipality where they reside, 40 days before the elections. They are therefore enrolled in a special electoral registry called Liste aggiunte (additional lists).²¹⁷⁸ However, the right to stand as a candidate has been seriously restricted: the non-citizen has the only right to be appointed as city councillor or alderman, never as mayor or deputy mayor, as stated in article 1.5 of Law n. 197 1996.²¹⁷⁹ Art. 2 par. 4 of the Consolidated Law on Immigration n. 286 1998 [Testo Unico sull'Immigrazione] states that: “the foreigner legally resident in Italy participates in public local life.” However, this provision is not in itself sufficient to enable third country nationals to vote. It should be noted that Italy has made a reservation to the Strasbourg Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at a Local Level. According to Chapter C of the Convention, each Contracting Party should grant every foreign resident the right to vote and to stand for election in local authority election (art. 6). 11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. Acquisition of Italian citizenship: Iure sanguinis, iure soli, judiciary ruling on natural paternity/maternity and adoption

Law n. 91 of 1992²¹⁸⁰ lays down rules concerning the Italian citizenship. There are several ways to acquire Italian nationality: automatic acquisition, acquisition by claim and naturalization.²¹⁸¹ In this context, we will focus on naturalization, merely hinting at the other ways of acquiring the citizenship.

Article 1 of the law establishes a principle of ius sanguinis by which citizenship is automatically passed on either from an Italian parent, mother or father, to their child. Individuals born in the territory of the Republic will acquire the Italian citizenship only if their parents are unknown, stateless or cannot pass on their citizenship to their child according to the laws of the State of which they are citizens or do not have known parentage on the Italian territory and whose natural citizenship is impossible to ascertain. A further case of automatic acquisition concerns the foreign minor who is recognized or declared Italian by filiation. Lastly, citizenship extends to those foreign minors adopted by an Italian citizen.²¹⁸²

Pursuant Article 4, the acquisition of citizenship by claim is threefold. A foreigner or stateless person whose direct ancestors up to the second degree were Italian citizens by birth can become citizen if at least one of these three requirements are fulfilled: a) service in the Italian armed forces; b) employment by the Italian government, even abroad; c) residence in Italy for at least two years before reaching to the age of 18 years old; d) Foreigners born on the Italian soil can claim Italian citizenship after continuous legal residence in Italy (up to 18 years old) and attendance at a school recognized by the Italian State. The interested person must submit the request one year before turning 18. Lastly, there is a right to claim Italian nationality by the foreign spouse of an Italian citizen, in case certain conditions are met: a) legal residence in Italy for a period of at least two years (or three if the couple is living abroad); b) absence of a criminal

11.2. Acquisition of citizenship by naturalization

Outside the mentioned cases, every foreigner can apply for naturalization. However, it is important to remember that this procedure is discretionary and depending by a decree of the President of the Republic, upon proposal of the Ministry of the Interior, having heard the Council of State. The law prescribes a legal residence in the country for a required minimum of time. The amount depends upon the category of individuals interested: 3 years for descendants of former Italian citizens up to the second degree and for foreigners born on Italian soil; 4 years for citizens of a European Union country; 5 years for stateless persons and refugees, as well as for adult foreigners over the age of 18 adopted by Italian citizens; 7 years for children adopted by Italian citizens before the entry into effect of Law no. 184/1983; 10 years for the others. However, no period of legal residence is required for foreigners who have been employed in the service of the Italian Republic for a period of at least 5 years, also abroad (Art. 9). Importantly, the act is adopted upon the effective and established integration of the foreigner in the Italian society. For this reason, it has been pointed out by the jurisprudence that the naturalization process is largely discretionary in nature. In fact, the concerned administration does not hold itself to the mere checking of the legal requirements, but it attempts to ascertain a true 'Italian sentiment',²¹⁸³ to the point that it includes in its evaluation any element regarded as relevant, even historical facts.²¹⁸⁴ Regarding the competent organ, whether the applicant's residency is in Italy or abroad, the application for citizenship can be submitted either to an authorized police office (Prefettura) in Italy or to a competent Italian consulate in the foreign country. Nevertheless, as of 18 of June 2015, applications must be submitted exclusively electronically.²¹⁸⁵

11.3. Dual Citizenship

A clear principle that allows dual nationality has been established in Law n. 91 of 1992, with Article 11. Hence, as of after 15 August 1992, Italian citizenship is no longer lost in concomitance with the acquisition of other citizenship, unless there is an express and formal renunciation by the Italian citizen, except in some exceptional circumstances²¹⁸⁶. To be noted, minors do not lose their Italian citizenship if one or both parents lose it or acquire foreign citizenship.²¹⁸⁷

²¹⁸³ According to Art. 10 of the Law, the applicant must swear to be faithful to the Republic and to observe the Constitution and the laws of the State.

VI, 25 Marzo 2009, n.1788.

11.4. The reform of the law: renewed ius soli and the new ius culturae

In 2013, the Italian Institute of Statistics estimated that almost 80,000 babies were born in Italy from non-Italian parents.²¹⁸⁸ On October 13 2015, the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament approved a reform to the current legislation on the acquisition of Italian citizenship, which was transmitted to the Senate for its final discussion and approval. The intention of the proposal is to modify the existing legislation on the acquisition of citizenship of minors whose parents are not Italian citizens, granting another particular case for acquiring citizenship by birth (ius soli) and an additional one when the child has concluded a study cycle in Italy (the so called ius culturae). The first requires a formal declaration from one of the parents, who must be a legal resident,²¹⁸⁹ before the minor reaches the legal age. In the second case the minor is granted citizenship if these conditions are satisfied: being born in Italy or having entered the country before turning twelve years old, together with the regular attendance of at least one cycle of studying for a minimum of five years. Again, one parent, with a valid residence permit, must present the request. Furthermore, the reform introduces a new case of naturalization for foreigner minors, discretionary in nature, which allows those who entered the country before eighteen years old, legally resident in Italy for at least six years and successfully completed a cycle of education.²¹⁹⁰

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. The EU Policy Framework for migrants' integration

Immigrant integration policies fall within competence of the Member State, but the European Union has always been aware of topical role of migrants in economic, social and cultural development of host countries. The key to maximize the benefits of migration is the successful integration of migrants in the fabric of our societies. Therefore, since the 1999 Treaty of Amsterdam the EU has periodically set priorities and goals to drive EU policies, legislative proposals and funding opportunities, aimed at supporting the process of integration, particularly in countries where the flow of immigration is strong, like Italy.²¹⁹¹ The 7 June 2016 Action Plan on the integration of third country nationals is the latest goals setting document published by the European Commission (EC). The Action Plan provides a comprehensive framework to support Member States' efforts in developing and strengthening their integration policies, and describes the concrete measures the Commission will implement in this regard. All the policy actions relevant for the integration area are included in the Plan: pre-departure and pre-arrival measures, education, employment, access to housing and health care, active participation and social inclusion. The instrument provides also tools for strengthening coordination between the different actors working on integration at national, regional and local level.²¹⁹² For the key to integration is the creation of jobs opportunities, the EC main instrument is the European Social Fund (ESF), that aims at supporting inclusion for vulnerable groups through ensuring better jobs. Italy is using ESF funds to increase employment possibilities for young people, including disadvantaged groups, such as migrants.²¹⁹³

12.2. The EU Funding: the Integration Fund (2007-2013) and the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (2014-2020)

In order to implement the policy framework, an adequate, coherent and flexible set of financial resources are essential for the realization of the EU objectives on integration of migrants in host societies. For the period 2007-2013, the European Fund for the Integration of non-EU immigrants (EIF) was financed, with a budget of EUR 825 million, as part of the General Programme “Solidarity and Management of Migration Flows” (SOLID).²¹⁹⁴ The EIF aimed at supporting Member States in the formulation, realization and evaluation of policies and specific actions to ensure the integration of non-EU citizens to be part of the host country. The target group is those migrants who legally reside in the country, particularly women and children. According to the programme, Member States have to report on the activities and actions carried out for the process of integration of migrants. Remarkably, more than 300 programs were enacted by Italy.²¹⁹⁵ At the moment, Italy is supported on its integration policy by the “Asylum, Migration and Integration” Fund (AMIF) with a budget of EUR 3.137 billion for 7 years. Not so different from the previous one in the objectives, the AMIF focuses on supporting legal migration to EU States in line with the labour market needs and promoting the effective integration of non-EU nationals.²¹⁹⁶ The Italian Refugee Council has in particular benefited from ²¹⁹⁶ This Fund will also provide financial resources for the activities and future development of the European Migration Network (EMN). Conclusions

Everyday, Italy has to face a non-stop flow of migrants: the national legislation is trying to comply with the short and long term evolution of this phenomenon, even if it is difficult to keep up with all the needs emerging from this situation.

Due to the high numbers of migrants and asylum seekers arrived in Italy in the last years, the Italian Government has created the “Hotspot system”, in order to implement the new approach launched by the European Agenda for migration in 2015 and to provide first assistance to migrants. Regarding the treatment of EU and non-EU migrants, EU migrants have a more favourable treatment, as they have a right of residence in Italy up to 3 months without any condition, while third country nationals can be admitted in Italy depending on the reason and duration of their stay. Italy introduced in 2007 the Long Term Residence Permit for foreigners legally residing in Italy for more than 5 year, who can prove to have a minimum income and knowledge of Italian language. In Italy there are different authorities dealing with migrants, most of all directorates belonging to Ministry of Interiors, with jurisdiction in migration issues like reception and integration. Talking about numbers, in the last year application for asylum in Italy increased up to 47% compared on 2016. Most of the applications are from men coming from North Africa. As already known, Italy is the 3rd EU country with the largest number of non-nationals living in its territory, and this number is going to increase: in fact, in the first 6 months of 2017 more than 93.000 migrants disembarked on the Italian coast.

Regarding the implementation of ECHR decisions, ECtHR’s judgments have deeply influenced Italian law and practice: Italy breached the provisions of ECHR several times, with violations related on access to justice, right to an interpreter at court, right to information. The new hotspot approach would allow the reception of migrants in structures where operators of the UNHCR and of the IOM can deliver them all of the relevant information.

The shortcomings of the Italian system have been addressed several times by the Court to bring it in line with human rights standards; the full compliance with these standards is a goal still to be reached.

Regarding the implementation of recommendations against racism, Italy’s legislation presents some lacunae. It hasn’t enacted an ad hoc ordinary law on equal treatment and prohibition of discrimination; anyway, there are sector-related pieces of legislation providing for equal treatment between foreigners and Italian citizens (i.e., Bossi Fini Act). We can observe positive actions regarding housing and right to education even if data on access to work, housing and scholarization display a strong regional disparity, with the local authorities often being unable to guarantee an effective application of the national and supranational legislation on integration and non-discrimination.

Every migrant, regular or irregular, has the same right to seek health assistance from the Italian State. The inscription to the National Healthcare System is mandatory for legal migrant workers or work-seekers, asylum seekers, and those who have been admitted in Italy for family reunification, humanitarian reasons or adoption. Irregular migrants still have the right to seek from public service “urgent” and “essential” medical care, and the national legislation expressly denied the possibility of reporting them for the mere fact of being illegally on the Italian soil.

All minors, both Italian and foreigners, have the obligation until the age of 16 to take part in the national education system, also through the activation of special language courses. The access to the obligatory educational services is not subject to the obligation of the beneficiary to have a residency permit. Migrant children have access to the same public schools as Italian citizens and are entitled to the same assistance and arrangements in case they have special needs.

Although there have been attempts to expand migrants’ influence in political life at all levels, foreigners do not have the right to vote for the election of the Parliament, neither at regional level. EU citizens can vote for the major and for local bodies. They can be elected as councilman and members of the municipal council.

National law establishes a principle of ius sanguinis by which citizenship is automatically passed on either from an Italian parent, mother or father, to their child. Outside the mentioned cases, every foreigner can apply for naturalization: the law prescribes a legal residence in the country for a minimum of time. A clear principle that allows dual nationality has been established in Law n. 91 of 1992. On October 13 2015, the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament approved a reform to the current legislation on the acquisition of Italian citizenship, which was transmitted to the Senate for its final discussion and approval. The intention of the proposal is to modify the existing legislation granting another particular case for acquiring citizenship by birth (ius soli) and an additional one when the child has concluded a study cycle in Italy (ius culturae).

Regarding the use of EU Funding on Integration, Italy is using EFS funds to increase employment possibilities for young people, including disadvantaged groups, such as migrants. More than 300 programs were enacted and, at the moment, Italy is supported on its integration policy by the “Asylum, Migration and Integration” Fund (AMIF) with a budget of EUR 3.137 billion for 7 years.

And, secondly, we would like to express our deep gratitude to our fellow friend, Vice-President for Academic Activities from ELSA UK (2016/2017), Jessica ALLEN, who has helped us to recruit a linguistic editor for the LRG, and of course to our astonishing and very experienced linguistic editor herself, Alice GOULD from ELSA Nottingham.

Introduction

The current issues of migration did not accidentally and unexpectedly intervened into a life of Latvians. Nevertheless, in the Latvian legal system, various regulation on migration exists; various institutions are established and officials are currently working together with the international community on modern migration issues. But is it all so effective? Do all not-directly oriented institutions are able to provide services to migrants? What are the recent cases in the field of migration concerning Latvia or Latvians? And what is the status of foreign students in our country? These were the additional questions that we've asked ourselves before the research. The structure of the report is strictly based on the provided questions by the international coordinators. In some topics, we've managed to highlight subtopics to help readers to understand information in easier and in more appropriate way. All translations of legal acts that we've provided here are performed by official institution - State Language Centre (Valsts valodas centrs).

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. National regulations governing asylum

The right to asylum in the Republic of Latvia is regulated by the Asylum Law²¹⁹⁸, enacted on 17 December 2015 with subsequent amendments on 20 April 2017²¹⁹⁹. Subordinate questions are regulated by the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers²²⁰⁰ issued on the basis of the Asylum ²¹⁹⁹ Amendments to the Asylum Law. Published: Latvijas Vēstnesis, 10 May 2017, No. 90.

Law. The Asylum Law is lex specialis towards the Immigration Law²²⁰¹, which determines general procedures for the entry, residence, transit, exit and detention of foreigners, as well as the procedures by which foreigners are kept under temporary custody in the Republic of Latvia and returned from it in order to ensure the implementation of migration policy conforming with the norms of international law and the State interests of Latvia. The Asylum Law may be applied from the moment the third country national submits a request for granting a status of refugee or alternative status till the respective decision is made.

The existing Asylum Law has replaced the previous Law due to the necessity to transpose the Directive 2013/32/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 on common procedures for granting and withdrawing international protection²²⁰², the Directive 2013/33/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 laying down standards for the reception of applicants for international protection²²⁰³ and to pursue Regulation (EU) No. 603/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013²²⁰⁴.

1.2. Procedure for requesting asylum and responsible authorities

According to Article 6 of the Asylum Law a person is entitled to express a wish to acquire refugee or alternative status in oral form or in writing. The State Border Guard shall draw up an orally expressed wish to acquire refugee or alternative status in the presence of the asylum seeker in writing. If a person has expressed the wish to acquire refugee or alternative status to the Office, the State Police or the Latvian Prison Administration, they shall, without delay but not later than within three working days, contact the State Border Guard so that the asylum seeker could submit an application. An unaccompanied minor shall express a wish to acquire refugee or alternative status in accordance with the procedures laid down in the Asylum Law. thereby, or the head of a child care institution if the head of a child care institution, on the basis of an assessment of the personal situation provided by the unaccompanied minor, deems that the minor needs international protection. He or she has the right to submit an application on behalf of the minor.

After receipt of an application or after reception of an asylum seeker in accordance with Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 establishing the criteria and mechanisms for determining the Member State responsible for examining an application for international protection lodged in one of the Member States by a third-country national or a stateless person²²⁰⁵ (hereinafter – Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013), the State Border Guard shall: 1) register the application of the asylum seeker no later than within three working days after receipt thereof. If applications are concurrently submitted by a large number of third country nationals or stateless persons and it is not possible to conform to the deadline of three working days, the time period for registration of the application may be extended up to 10 working days; 2) take fingerprints of each asylum seeker who is at least 14 years of age in order to verify his or her identity; 3) identify the asylum seeker and ascertain his or her nationality.

In identifying an asylum seeker and ascertaining his or her nationality, the State Border Guard has the right: 1) to perform inspection of the asylum seeker and his or her possessions, and also to seize objects and documents if they may have a significance in examination of the application or if they may pose a threat to the asylum seeker or those around him or her. An official of the State Border Guard and the Office shall provide the above-mentioned information to the asylum seeker in writing in a language which he or she understands or is reasonably supposed to understand. If necessary, the official of the State Border Guard and the Office shall provide the above-mentioned information also in oral form.

If the application is submitted by an unaccompanied minor, the Orphan's Court together with the social service office of the local government, the State Border Guard, and the Office shall take measures to look for family members of the minor and ascertain the possibilities of

The Orphan's Court shall take a decision to appoint a guardian, finding out the opinion of the Office. Primarily an unaccompanied minor shall be provided care with a guardian or a foster family.

1.3. Personal Document and accommodation of an Asylum Seeker

According to Article 8 of the Asylum Law an asylum seeker shall hand his or her personal identity and travel documents over to the State Border Guard until the time when the final decision is taken to grant or to refuse to grant refugee or alternative status, except where the asylum seeker has another legal basis to reside in the Republic of Latvia.

Article 9 of the Asylum Law entitles an asylum seeker to be accommodated at the accommodation centre for asylum seekers, which is a unit of the Office, where an asylum seeker does not have sufficient resources to ensure living arrangements conforming to his or her health condition during the asylum procedure.

1.4. Procedure for examination an asylum request and responsible authorities

After receipt of an application or after reception of an asylum seeker the State Border Guard, according to Article 23 of the Asylum Law, conducts negotiations with the asylum seeker in order to obtain information necessary for determination of the Member State. This will be responsible for examination of the application in accordance with Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013. It entails an initial interview with the asylum seeker, except the case referred to in Article 35 of the Asylum Law, in order to obtain information regarding his or her individual situation and circumstances, which is necessary in order to take a decision to accept the application for examination or to leave without examination, and basic information regarding the motives for requesting international protection. The State Border Guard shall submit all information regarding the asylum seeker at its disposal, including the information obtained in negotiation and the initial interview, and the application to the Office within 10 working days or within two working days if the application has been submitted at the border crossing point or in the border crossing transit zone.

No later than within one month from the day when a decision was taken to accept the application for examination, the Office shall conduct a personal interview with the asylum seeker. This is in relation to his or her persecution or threats of serious harm and also to obtain information necessary in order to assess the possibility of examining the application in accelerated procedure. If it is not possible to conduct the personal interview within this time period, the head of the Office may extend the time period for the interview by another month. The Office may send the asylum seeker, with consent, to a medical expert-examination which might point to previous persecution performed or serious harm inflicted, if the Office believes it to be essential in order to take a decision to grant refugee or alternative status or to refuse to grant it according to Article 27 of the Asylum Law.

According to Article 32 of the Asylum Law the application of each asylum seeker shall be examined individually, objectively and fairly, using accurate and updated information from different sources, for example, from the European Asylum Support Office and United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and from relevant international human rights organisations, regarding general situation in the country of origin of the asylum seeker, and, if necessary, in countries, which he or she has crossed. An official authorised by the head of the Office shall take a decision to: 1) accept the application for examination or to leave it without examination; 2) grant or refuse to grant refugee or alternative status; 3) transfer the asylum seeker to the responsible Member State, which will examine the application submitted in the Republic of Latvia according to Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013; 4) discontinue examination of the application; 5) resume examination of the application or to refuse to resume examination of application. According to Article 29 of the Asylum Law the application shall be examined and a decision to grant refugee or alternative status or to refuse to grant it shall be taken within three months from the day when the personal interview with the asylum seeker was conducted, but not later than within six months after registering the application. The State Secretary of the Ministry of the Interior or his or her authorised person may extend the time period for another nine months, if: 1) assessment of the application is related to complex factual or legal issues; 2) applications have been simultaneously submitted by a large number of third country nationals or stateless persons and it is not possible to conform to the stated deadline.

A decision to leave the application without examination according to Article 30 of the Asylum Law shall be taken, if at least one of the following conditions exists: 1) another Member State has granted international protection to the asylum seeker; 2) a country, which is not a Member State, is regarded as the first country of asylum of the asylum seeker; 3) a country, which is not a Member State, is regarded as the safe third country for the asylum seeker; 4) the asylum seeker has submitted a repeat application in the Republic of Latvia after a decision to refuse to grant refugee or alternative status has entered into effect, and such circumstances are not referred to therein, which would have significantly changed for the benefit of the asylum seeker and might serve as justification for granting refugee or alternative status.

Furthermore, a decision to accept an application for examination, shall be taken if: 1) the conditions mentioned above do not exist; 2) information has been received from the competent authority of another Member State in accordance with Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013 regarding refusal to take responsibility for examination of the application or the Republic of Latvia is responsible for examination of an application submitted in another Member State and the asylum seeker has been admitted back to the Republic of Latvia; 3) it is not possible to ensure the fulfilment of the previously mentioned conditions.

In examining the application, firstly, a decision shall be taken to grant refugee status to the asylum seeker in accordance with the provisions of the Asylum Law, but if they do not apply to the asylum seeker – to grant alternative status. In examining the application following shall be taken into account: 1) the facts which relate to the country of origin of the asylum seeker during the period when a decision is being taken to grant refugee or alternative status or to refuse to grant it, also the laws and regulations of the country of origin and the manner in which they are applied; 2) the explanations provided and the documents submitted by the asylum seeker; 3) the individual state and circumstances of the asylum seeker. The condition that the asylum seeker has special procedural or reception needs in itself shall not affect the assessment of the application; 4) results of the medical expert-examination, if such has been performed; 5) whether activities of the asylum seeker, since leaving the country of origin, have not been aimed towards creating conditions for the granting of refugee or alternative status; 6) whether it is justifiably expected that the asylum seeker would accept the protection of such other country where he or she might request citizenship.

According to Article 33 of the Asylum Law accelerated procedures for examination of an application may be applied if at least one of the following conditions exists: 1) in submitting the application, the asylum seeker has indicated only such circumstances, which may not be the grounds for taking a decision to grant refugee or alternative status; 2) the asylum seeker is from a safe country of origin; 3) the asylum seeker has misled the institutions involved in the asylum procedure, providing false information or documents or not submitting corresponding information or documents confirming his or her identity or nationality; 4) it is possible that the asylum seeker has maliciously destroyed or left a personal identification document or travel document, which could have helped to determine his or her identity or nationality; 5) the asylum seeker has provided inconsistent, controversial, obviously false or obviously incredible information, which is in contradiction with sufficiently verified information of the country of origin and causes grounds for an assumption that his or her claim in relation to persecution or threats of serious harm are not convincing; 6) the asylum seeker has submitted a repeat application, which has been accepted for examination; 7) the asylum seeker has submitted the application mainly in order to hinder or prevent his or her removal from the Republic of Latvia; 8) the asylum seeker has illegally entered or illegally extended his or her residence in the Republic of Latvia and has not submitted the application sooner without justified reason; 9) the asylum seeker does not agree to taking of fingerprints; 10) the asylum seeker causes threat to national security or public order and safety or has been removed from the Republic of Latvia, because he or she has caused threat to national security or public order and safety and, in accordance with the provisions of the Immigration Law, has been included in the list of such foreigners who are prohibited from entering in the Republic of Latvia.

1.5. Decision to Discontinue Examination of the Application

A decision to discontinue examination of the application according to Article 34 of the Asylum Law shall be taken, if: 1) a request of the asylum seeker to discontinue examination of the application has been received at the Office; 2) there is a substantial reason to assume that the asylum seeker has indirectly revoked his or her application or refused from it, because he or she has not fulfilled the obligations or has escaped from the State Border Guard accommodation premises for asylum seekers. A decision to discontinue examination of the application shall be taken not later than within three months from the day when any of the circumstances referred above became known, unless the asylum seeker has proved in a timely manner that it has happened due to circumstances independent from him or her.

The asylum seeker has the right, within nine months from the day when the decision to discontinue examination of the application has entered into effect, to request that examination of his or her application is resumed. This time period shall not apply to cases when the Republic of Latvia, in accordance with Regulation (EU) No. 604/2013, is accepting back an asylum seeker who has revoked his or her application during its examination, prior to taking of a decision to grant refugee or alternative status or to refuse to grant it, and has drawn up an application in another Member State or is residing in the territory of another Member State without a residence permit. An official authorised by the head of the Office shall take a decision to resume examination of the application or to refuse to resume examination of the application within 10 working days after a request of the asylum seeker to resume examination of his or her application was received. Examination of the application shall be resumed and continued from such stage of the asylum procedure, in which it was discontinued.

1.6. Procedure for granting refugee or alternative status and responsible authorities

According to Article 37 of the Asylum Law, the conditions for granting refugee status are a third-country national who, on the basis of justified fear from persecution (several activities, also an accumulation of violations of human rights, which are sufficiently serious to affect an individual - physical or mental abuse, including sexual abuse; legal and administrative measures or also police or judicial measures; a disproportionate or discriminatory charge or a disproportionate or discriminatory punishment; refusal of legal appeal; a charge or punishment for the refusal to perform military service during a conflict; activities which are particularly aimed towards gender or towards minors) due to his or her race, religion, nationality, membership of a specific social group or his or her political views, is located outside the country where he or she is a national, and is unable or due to such fear does not wish to accept the protection of the country where he or she is a national, or a stateless person, who being outside his or her former country of permanent residence is unable or unwilling to return there due to the same reasons and to whom the conditions of Section 45 of this Law do not apply, may apply for refugee status.

According to Article 45 of the Asylum Law refugee status shall not be granted if at least one of the following conditions exists: 1) the person is receiving protection or aid from other structures of the United Nations Organisation, except the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. If the above mentioned protection or aid to the person is suspended due to any reason and if the status thereof has not been specifically determined in resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the provisions shall apply thereto; 2) the competent authorities of the Republic of Latvia have acknowledged that the person has the rights and obligations, which are applicable to citizens of Latvia, or rights or obligations equivalent thereto; 3) the person has committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity, as defined in international documents; 4) prior to arrival in the Republic of Latvia the person has committed a crime, which is not of political nature and which in accordance with the law of the Republic of Latvia should be recognised as a particularly serious crime; 5) the person has performed activities, which are aimed against the objectives and principles of the United Nations Organisation; 6) there is reason to believe that the person poses a threat to national security; 7) the person, who has been recognised as guilty of committing a particularly serious crime by a court judgement of the Republic of Latvia, poses a threat to the society of Latvia.

Simultaneously, as stipulated in Article 40 of the Asylum Law the conditions for granting alternative status are a third-country national or a stateless person who cannot be granted refugee status. They may apply for alternative status if there is a reason to believe that he or she may be exposed to serious harm (imposition of death penalty to an asylum seeker; torture, inhuman or degrading attitude towards an asylum seeker or inhuman or degrading punishment; serious and individual threats to the life or health of a civilian due to widespread violence in case of international or domestic armed conflicts) after return to their country of origin and due to this reason is unable or does not wish to accept the protection of the above mentioned country.

Article 10 of the Asylum Law stipulates that a person whose application has been examined and in relation to whom a decision has been taken to refuse to grant refugee or alternative status, a decision to discontinue examination of the application or a decision to refuse to resume examination of the application, shall be issued a voluntary return decision or a removal order shall be taken in relation to such person in accordance with the procedures of the Immigration Law, except the case when he or she has another legal basis to reside in the Republic of Latvia. The asylum seeker or his or her representative may, according to Article 48 of the Asylum Law, appeal the following decisions of an official authorised by the head of the Office to the Administrative District Court according to the address of accommodation of the asylum seeker.

According to Article 55 of the Asylum Law a person shall lose refugee status if he or she: 1) has voluntarily re-accepted the protection of his or her country of citizenship; 2) has voluntarily re-acquired citizenship after he or she had lost it; 3) has acquired citizenship of Latvia or another country and enjoys the protection of the new country of citizenship; 4) has returned to the country, which he or she had left in fear of persecution; 5) cannot refuse the protection of his or her country of citizenship because the circumstances, due to which he or she was recognised as refugee, do not exist anymore; 6) can return to his or her former country of permanent residence as a stateless person because the circumstances, due to which he or she was recognised as refugee, do not exist anymore.

Article 56 of the Asylum Law stipulates that refugee status shall be revoked for a person, if at least one of the following conditions exists: 1) the conditions of Article 45(1) apply to such person; 2) such person has provided false information or has not provided information, which had a crucial role in granting refugee status, including using falsified documents.

In parallel, according to Article 57 of the Asylum Law a person shall lose alternative status, if the circumstances, due to which he or she was granted alternative status, do not exist anymore or have changed so much that such person does not need the protection of the Republic of Latvia anymore. Alternative status shall be revoked for a person, if at least one of the following conditions exists: 1) the conditions of Article 46(1) apply to such person; 2) such person has provided false information or has not provided information, which had a crucial role in granting alternative status, including using falsified documents.

According to Article 60 of the Asylum Law a person, who has lost refugee or alternative status or for whom such status has been revoked, shall leave the Republic of Latvia within two months from the day of entering into effect of the relevant decision, if he or she has no other legal grounds for residing in the Republic of Latvia.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

The general legal framework for immigration in Latvia is provided by Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums) although according to Article 2¹ only several articles of this law are also applicable to the citizens of EU member states. In Article 2,¹ Section 2 it is set out that the Cabinet of Ministers must provide a separate set of procedures for the entry and residence in the Republic of Latvia of citizens of the Union and their family members.

According to the terminology of the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums) (Article 1) a citizen of the Union is a person who is a citizen of either one of the EU member states, European Economic Area states or is a citizen of the Swiss Confederation. On this basis the Cabinet of Ministers has adopted regulation No. 675 of August 30 2011 "Procedures for the Entry and Residence in the Republic of Latvia of Citizens of the Union and their Family Members" (Ministru kabineta 2011.gada 30.augusta noteikumi Nr.675 'Kārtība, kādā Savienības pilsoņi un viņu ģimenes locekļi ieceļo un uzturas Latvijā Republikā') (hereinafter – Regulation No. 675). Provisions of the Directive 2004/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States amending Regulation (EEC) No. 1612/68 and repealing Directives 64/221/EEC, 68/360/EEC, 72/194/EEC, 73/148/EEC, 75/34/EEC, 75/35/EEC, 90/364/EEC, 90/365/EEC and 93/96/EEC (hereinafter – Directive 2004/38) have been transposed in Regulation No. 675.

According to Article 16 of Regulation No. 675, a Union citizen and his or her family members are entitled to enter and reside within the Republic of Latvia for up to three months, as of the first day of the entry, provided that he or she is in possession of a valid travel document and he or she does not pose a genuine, present and serious threat to public security, public policy or public health. If the said family member is not a citizen of Union and would need a visa in order to enter and reside in the Republic of Latvia he or she still benefits from better provisions than those who are not family members to a citizen of Union. For instance, according to Article 21 of Regulation No. 675 the authorities should not charge the state fee for processing the visa application.

When a citizen of the Union wishes to reside in the Republic of Latvia for more than three months (as of the first day of entry) he or she must comply with the provisions set out in the third chapter of Regulation No. 675. According to Article 25 he or she shall register with the Office and shall be granted a registration certificate. However, Article 26 provides some exceptions when the registration is not necessary - accordingly it shall not be necessary to register with the Office, where he or she is in possession of a valid travel document and he or she: 1) resides in the Republic of Latvia for up to six months per year, as of the first day of entry, where the purpose of such residence is to establish an employment legal relationship in the Republic of Latvia. Where, upon expiry of the period of six months, the Union citizen has not yet established an employment legal relationship, he or she and his or her family members may continue to reside in the Republic of Latvia without being registered with the Office for as long as there is evidence that the Union citizen is continuing to seek employment and that he or she has a genuine chance of being employed; 2) is employed in the Republic of Latvia, but resides in another European Union Member State, to which he or she returns at least once per week; 3) is a student of an educational institution registered with the Register of Education Institutions of the Republic of Latvia and his or her intended period of residence in the Republic of Latvia does not exceed one year.

According to Article 27 a citizen of the Union is entitled to receive a registration certificate, provided that he or she satisfies at least one of the following conditions: 1) he or she is employed in the Republic of Latvia in the status of an employee; 2) he or she is a self-employed person in the Republic of Latvia; 3) he or she is a service provider or an employee of a person established in a Member State that provides services in the Republic of Latvia; 4) he or she is a student of an educational institution registered with the Register of Education Institutions of the Republic of Latvia and he or she has sufficient resources for himself or herself not to become a burden on the social assistance system, as well as a valid document issued by a Member State and certifying that the person is entitled to receive in the Republic of Latvia the necessary medical or emergency medical assistance, or he or she holds a health insurance policy; 5) he or she has sufficient resources for himself or herself not to become a burden on the social assistance system, as well as a valid document issued by a Member State, certifying that the person is entitled to receive in the Republic of Latvia the necessary medical or emergency medical assistance, or he or she holds a valid health insurance policy; 6) he or she is a spouse of a Latvian citizen or non-citizen or of a foreigner with the permanent residence permit in the Republic of Latvia, and he or she has sufficient resources for himself or herself not to become a burden on the social assistance system as well as a valid document issued by a Member State, certifying that the person is entitled to receive in the Republic of Latvia the necessary medical or emergency medical assistance, or he or she holds a health insurance policy; 7) trusteeship or guardianship has been established in respect of him or her in the Republic of Latvia.

The list of documents that a citizen of the Union needs to present in order to request a registration certificate is laid out in Article 28 of Regulation No. 675.

In several circumstances, a citizen of the Union can also obtain a permanent residence card. According to Article 30 of Regulation No. 675 a citizen of the union has this right if he or she: 1) immediately prior to applying for the permanent right of residence, has resided legally in the territory of the Republic of Latvia for a continuous period of five years; 2) prior to becoming a citizen of a Member State, has been a citizen or non-citizen of Latvia and has submitted the documents for requesting the permanent residence card within 30 days after the decision regarding the loss of the status as a citizen or non-citizen of Latvia; 3) is a minor child of a citizen of Latvia, a non-citizen of Latvia, a Union citizen holding a permanent residence card, a family member of a Union citizen holding a permanent residence permit or a foreigner holding a permanent residence permit.

Although even if a person has not met the condition of having resided in the territory of the Republic of Latvia in the status of an employee or a self-employed person for a continuous period of less than five years he or she still might have the right to obtain a permanent residence card. Those exceptions are laid out in Article 31 of Regulation No. 675 and include such cases as when the person at the time of ceasing his or her professional activities, has reached the age of retirement specified in regulatory enactments of the Republic of Latvia or has ceased paid employment, to go into retirement prematurely if he or she has worked in the Republic of Latvia for at least the last 12 months and has resided in the Republic of Latvia for a continuous period of more than three years. It also includes cases when the person has resided in the Republic of Latvia for more than two continuous years and terminated employment in the Republic of Latvia due to irreversible incapacity for work as well as cases when the person after three years of continuous employment relationship and residence in the Republic of Latvia, is working in an employed or self-employed capacity in another Member State, while retaining the place of residence in the Republic of Latvia, to which he or she returns each day or at least once a week.

Comparatively the migration from non-Union states are regulated more strictly. Article 4, Section 1 of the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums) states that in order to enter and reside in the Republic of Latvia the foreigner must have: a valid travel document, a valid visa in a valid travel document, a residence permit issued by the Republic of Latvia or a residence permit of a long-term resident of the European Union, health insurance (although the Cabinet may set out cases when a foreigner may enter and reside in the Republic of Latvia without a health insurance policy), no other obstacles laid down in the law or other laws and regulations regarding entry into the Republic of Latvia; the necessary financial means in order to reside in the Republic of Latvia or another Schengen Agreement Member State and return to the country of residence or to depart to a third country which he or she has the right to enter. At the same time law provides some exceptions. According to Section 2 of Article 4, a visa or residence permit is not necessary for a foreigner who enters and resides in accordance with the procedures laid down in international treaties binding on the Republic of Latvia regarding the abolition of visa requirement or Council Regulation (EC) No. 539/2001 of 15 March 2001 listing the third countries whose nationals must be in possession of visas when crossing the external borders and those whose nationals are exempt from that requirement, use a United Nations passport (Laissez-passer), Vatican passport or European Commission passport as a travel document, is a holder of a properly issued seaman's book and has disembarked ashore while the ship is in port and stays in the administrative territory of the port city, or is a holder of the certificate of a crew member issued in accordance with the International Convention on Civil Aviation of 7 December 1944, enters the Republic of Latvia within the scope of his or her work duties in order to take the next flight and stays in the administrative territory of the city nearest to the airport.

According to the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums) (Article 1) a visa is a sticker of a certain design affixed in a travel document, it shall certify that a person has requested an authorisation to enter and stay in the Republic of Latvia or in any Schengen Member State, or in several Schengen Member States or cross their territory in transit, and that the institution which has issued the visa in accordance with the competence thereof, does not see any obstacle to the fact that the person enters and stays in the Republic of Latvia or in any Schengen Member State, or in several Schengen Member States during the period of time indicated in the visa and for the number of times indicated therein. However, a visa does not, by itself, provide the right of entrance into the Republic of Latvia or any of Schengen Member States. Foreigners who enter the Republic of Latvia with or without a visa are not allowed to exercise economic activities in an employed capacity. Foreigners can be employed only in cases that are stated in normative acts and if they have received a visa for employment and work permit. Thus, if a foreigner is interested in residing in the Republic of Latvia for a period of time exceeding 90 days within half a year counting from the first day of entrance a residence permit is necessary. According to Article 22 of Immigration Law two types of residence permit can be issued to a foreigner – a temporary residence permit and a permanent residence permit. A temporary residence permit can be issued in the occasions set out in Article 22 of the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums). The term of the temporary residence permit depends on the reasons of why it has been requested. The circumstances under whom it is possible to request a permanent residence permit are laid out in Article 24 of the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums). In order to be eligible for a permanent residence permit the person must have a stronger connection to the Latvian state, for instance family connections (such as being a child, a parent or a spouse of a Latvian citizen or non-citizen). In several occasions a person must also have knowledge of Latvian language in order to receive a permanent residence permit.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

In the Republic of Latvia, there are dozens of institutions which have the potential to deal with migrants. Most of the institutions participate in internal administration without being targeted specifically at migrants, such as providing health support or education to the citizens, but also deal with migrants and their issues (labour, social and so on). There are, however, also some institutions whose aim is to specifically work with migrants. These institutions are: the Ministry of the Interior (Iekšlietu Ministrija)²²⁰⁶, The Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs (Pilsonības un migrācijas lietu pārvalde)²²⁰⁷ and the State Border Guard (Valsts robežsardze).²²⁰⁸

The national legislative framework for the authorities depends on an essence of migrant status: for labour and education migrants the regulation will be based on the Immigration Law (Imigrācijas likums), but for refugees or alternative status seekers the regulation will be based on the Asylum Law (Patvēruma likums).

Regarding the internal administration of the authorities, it is worth mentioning the Cabinet Regulation No. 240 (from 2003) on Ministry of the Interior (Ministru Kabineta noteikumi nr. 240 no 2003. gada „Iekšlietu Ministrijas nolikums”). The Regulation states: ‘the Ministry of the Interior (hereinafter – the Ministry) is the leading State administration institution in the internal affairs sector, which includes combating crime, protection of public order and safety and the protection of the rights and lawful interests of a person, State border security, fire safety, fire-fighting, rescue, civil protection, record keeping and documentation of population, as well as the sub-sectors for migration and citizenship matters’. So, one of the main areas of the Ministry’s activity is to supervise over migration, as well as to draft and to implement policy relating to migration area.²²⁰⁹

Regulation No. 240 additionally prescribes which institutions are subordinated to the Ministry. These institutions include, but are not limited to: the Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs and the State Border Guard.²²¹⁰

The activity of the Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs is also regulated by Cabinet Regulation No. 811 (from 2006) “on the Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs” (Ministru Kabineta noteikumi Nr. 811 no 2006. gada „Pilsonības un migrācijas lietu pārvaldes nolikums”). In the Regulation, the function of implementing a State Migration and Asylum Policy is delegated to the Office.²²¹¹ For the implementation of the policy the Office performs analysis of the processes related to migration, asylum seeking, determination of legal status of persons, registration of inhabitants and provision of persons with personal identification and travel documents, conducting research in the referred to fields and to participate therein,²²¹² as well as cooperating with the State administrative institutions, international and non-governmental organisations and foreign migration services, organizing international meetings and conferences regarding the matters within its competence and participating in the activities thereof, and analysing the experience of Latvia and other states in solving the referred to matters.²²¹³

In the internal structure of the Office, there are some departments actually performing mentioned tasks, like the Migration Division (Migrācijas nodaļa), the Asylum Division (Patvēruma lietu nodaļa) and the Division on a Displacement of Asylum Seekers (Patvēruma meklētāju izmitināšanas nodaļa).²²¹⁴

The State Border Guard is the other institution, which is subordinated to the Ministry of the Interior and which activity is directly connected with migration. The Cabinet Regulation No. 122 (from 2005) “on the State Border Guard” (Ministru Kabineta noteikumi Nr. 122 no 2005. gada „Valsts robežsardzes nolikums”) prescribes that the aims of a State Border Guard are to provide integrity of State borders and to prevent illegal migration.²²¹⁵

The others institutions of public administration, like Ministry of Education and Science (Izglītības un zinātnes ministrija) and the State Social Insurance Agency (Valsts sociālās apdrošināšanas aģentūra), are also involved with migrant activities, along with other projects and tasks they are obliged to perform.

It is worth to mention as well, the Ministry of Culture (Kultūras ministrija) and Society Integration Foundation (Sabiedrības integrācijas fonds) as organisations not directly related to migrants, but cooperating with them. Development and promotion of integration policy of society in Latvia are one of the main objectives of these organisations.^{2216,2217}

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

From 1998 to 2016, international protection was requested by 2118 asylum seekers in total. Recent statistics²²¹⁸ show the amount of applications of asylum seekers has progressed rapidly: from 20 applications in 2005 up to 328 in 2015 with a peak in 2014 which had 364 applications in total. It is reasonable to say that overall migration flow to Latvia from countries such as Afghanistan, Syria, Russia and Iraq, has a tendency to increase, considering that not only economic factors constitute a foundation for the desire to migrate to a different country, but also it may be considered as an escape from various warfare activities in Eastern Asia.

Latvia's Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs have granted 47 refugee statuses and 107 alternative²²¹⁹ statuses in 2016. This can be considered a rather large number, because Latvia's ²²¹⁹ Alternative status is granted to persons who cannot be recognised as refugees under the Geneva Convention, but in accordance with the international agreements entered into by Latvia, EU legislation and practices of the Member States are in need of protection. The alternative may be granted the status of a person, if there are reasonable grounds for believing that: 1) the person in the state of citizenship or mitnes land, if the person is a stateless person, common practice shows that in total 118 refugee statuses and 255 alternative protection statuses have been given.²²²⁰ According to agreements with the EU Council it was expected that Latvia will host 531 asylum seekers within two years and provide them the necessary support for international protection. 20 July 2015 the EU Council meeting of Ministers of Justice and Home Affairs agreement provides that during the two following years Latvia will host up to 250 persons in need of international protection (that is, 50 persons from third countries, and 200 people from Italy and Greece).²²²¹ On 22 September 2015 an additional agreement by the EU Council of Ministers of Justice and Home Affairs has been conducted and provides that Latvia will additionally host 281 asylum seekers in need of protection.²²²²

As recent statistics²²²³ show, in 2016, there were 8345 long-term migrants registered in Latvia. This number is slightly lower than previous years (e.g. 10365 long-term migrants in year 2014 and 9479 in year 2015). However, despite these immigration flows, in 2015 Latvia was one of the EU Member States where the number of emigrants outnumbered the number of immigrants.²²²⁴ However, immigration trends continue to become more visible within Europe and the whole world making cross-border movement of people an essential factor in planning both national and international policy. According to the information of the United Nations Organisation (UN), approximately 232 million people or 3.2% of the total population of the world in 2013 lived in a country which was not their country of origin.²²²⁵ Since 2004 the number of requests for residence permits has increased three times in Latvia, almost in every group of immigrants. In 2015 there were large increases in applications from several countries of origin compared with 2014, but the numbers stabilised in 2016 for the main countries of origin.

The figures for first time applications for the EU28 for the five countries of origin with the largest number of first time applications in 2016 are shown in the table below:²²²⁶

There is an increase in number of the nationals from the EU and other countries who live in Latvia both with temporary and permanent residence permits. In 2014, there were 23857 foreigners with temporary residence permits living in Latvia, whereas 48724 people have permanent residence permits.²²²⁷ The current geopolitical situation may facilitate migration even more migration in the near future.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

The decisions by the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter – ECtHR) have mostly been implemented into the national legal acts, especially the Asylum Law. At national level not only does the case-law between the ECtHR and the Republic of Latvia substantially influence the national normative regulation but also cases against other countries have had an effect.

Delineating the issue, very evident and ample alterations concerning the decisions by the ECtHR have been made, elaborating and enacting the novel Asylum Law. For instance, following the judgment in *Saadi v. the United Kingdom*²²²⁸, *Suso Musa v. Malta*²²²⁹, *Kanagaratnam v. Belgium*²²³⁰ and *Ermakov v. Russia*²²³¹ the national law has been supplemented with conditions on the detention of asylum seekers. Namely, a comprehensive legal framework was introduced with regard to the conditions and procedures for the application of restrictive measures. Reduction in the possible period of detention of asylum seekers which can be imposed by the administrative authority, foreseeing detention as a last resort. In addition, the detention of asylum seekers is subject to judicial review both ex officio and at the request of the asylum seeker.

The decisions of the ECtHR have been taken into consideration, regarding the procedure of appeal of decisions to refuse to grant the status of refugee or alternative status. At the national level during the elaboration procedure of the Asylum Law broad discussions were held about the competent institutions for the procedure of appeal and about the number of instances, where it will be possible to submit an appeal. Eventually, with reference to the existing practice of the ²²³¹ Ermakov v. Russia, App no 43165/10 (ECtHR 7, November 2013).

ECtHR, for instance, case *Baranowski v. Poland*²²³², *Navarra v. France*²²³³, the legislator has decided to dedicate appeal to a court in one instance.

The new Asylum Law was enacted to transpose the above mentioned European Union legal acts. The Regulation contains minimal standard of rights of prosperity, which must be provided for the asylum seekers. Those rights have been introduced taking into account also the respective decisions of the ECtHR.

Furthermore, the national legal framework has been influenced also following the ECtHR case-law, regarding Article 3 of the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms²²³⁴, namely, prohibition of torture, inhuman or degrading treatment, or punishment. Quotes, which are mentioned in respective decisions of the ECtHR, have directly been taken into account, examining applications for refugee or alternative status. For instance, *R.H. v. Sweden*²²³⁵ analyses the correct conduct of interview and evaluation criteria for granting refugee or alternative status and extradition.

The case of *A.S. v. Switzerland*²²³⁶, which is meaningful because it concerns the state, which is responsible for evaluation of the application and criteria for admissibility of returning an asylum seeker to another country. The concept of 'family member' has been narrowed, stipulating, for example, that the brother or sister of an asylum seeker does not fill the status within the meaning of the legal framework for asylum seekers where the individuals concerned have been separated for a long period.

The case of *M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece*²²³⁷ evaluated the feasibility of extraditing asylum seekers and the criteria for the assessment of possible threats as well as the procedure for appeal and conditions of accommodation center for asylum seekers, where the ECtHR concluded that automated refusal to evaluate the application for refugee or alternative status solely on the basis of the fact that the asylum seeker has applied for the asylum in another country breaches the ECHR.

The case of *Hode and Abdi v. the United Kingdom*²²³⁸ evaluated the question of the granting of refugee or alternative status for an individual who has submitted an application as a family member when the marriage was concluded after an application has been submitted. The ECtHR concluded that refusal to grant refugee or alternative status for family members on the grounds that national regulation had not foreseen the marriage was discriminatory. Such a restriction may not be justified by the margin of discretion afforded to the Member States with regards to their immigration policy. The respective decision has been taken into consideration also reviewing the national criteria for granting refugee or alternative status.

Delineating the ECtHR decisions against the Republic of Latvia, two cases have been reviewed.

²²³⁸ Hode and Abdi v. the Lebedev v. Russia United Kingdom, App no 22341/09 (ECtHR 6, November 2013).

The case of *Longa Yonkeu v. Latvia*²²³⁹ concerned the duration of arbitrary detention, inconsistency in the justification for detention and the lack of legal aid, especially the lawfulness of the detention after conclusion of asylum procedure. The ECtHR, referring to the cases of *Ammur v. France*²²⁴⁰, *Nasrulloev v. Russia*²²⁴¹, *Khudoyorov v. Russia*²²⁴², *Ječius v. Lithuania*²²⁴³ concluded that under domestic law, the detention of an asylum seeker beyond the date of the final decision within the asylum proceedings was not authorised, therefore unlawful. Furthermore, the domestic law did not allow detention of asylum seeker beyond the date of a final decision, therefore the ECtHR concluded that there was a breach of Article 5 of the ECHR. In addition, the ECtHR, examining the question about the lawfulness of detention in order to extradite an asylum seeker, pointed that the procedure, relating to deportation of failed asylum seekers in Latvia at the relevant time was regulated by the Immigration Law, the provisions of which were quite complex. Therefore, developments in the the subsequent legislature were welcomed. Nonetheless, evaluating the quality of the law and respective national case-law, the ECtHR found inconsistency with regard to regulatory framework and institutional practice in its interpretation. This highlights the vagueness of the provisions in question, which was such that their practical effect for a failed asylum seeker could not be anticipated. The applicant could not have foreseen that a removal procedure other than that expressly provided for in the Immigration Law would be applied to him or her. Accordingly, the Court considers that the domestic law concerning the deportation procedure was not sufficiently precise and foreseeable in its application and fell short of the “quality of law” standard required under the Convention; hence, the underlying detention orders issued in respect of the applicant cannot be considered to have been “prescribed by law”. Furthermore, the ECtHR noted that national legislation only allowed practically unlimited power to commence a removal procedure, but could also delay the applicant’s removal on the basis of its misconceived perception of the status as an asylum seeker. Although in the present case the delay in the applicant’s removal, which was caused by a misinterpretation of the domestic law, was not excessive, the ECtHR considered that such errors could in other cases raise serious concerns of arbitrariness. However, the consecutive detention was effected in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law and was justified. Because the national authorities have corrected previous mistakes.

The case of *Nassr Allah v. Latvia*²²⁴⁴ regarded the period of detention on the grounds that an asylum seeker may delay the asylum procedure and tenure for court to review a submitted appeal. The ECtHR, citing the cases of *Lebedev v. Russia*²²⁴⁵, *Mooren v. Germany*²²⁴⁶, *Abdulkhakov v. Russia*²²⁴⁷, *S.T.S. v. the Netherlands*²²⁴⁸, and *Savriddin Dzhurayev v. Russia*²²⁴⁹ stipulated that in order to determine whether the requirement that a decision be given “speedily” has been complied with, it is necessary to effect an overall assessment where the proceedings were conducted at more than one level of jurisdiction. As is the case for the “reasonable time”, the question whether the right to a speedy decision has been respected must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Albeit states are not inquired to dedicate courts of appeal to review the lawfulness of detention, if they choose to do so, the appeal court also has to comply with the requirement of “speediness”. The Court must, in particular, examine whether any new relevant factors that had arisen in the interval between periodic reviews were assessed, without unreasonable delay, by a court with jurisdiction to decide whether or not the detention had become “unlawful” in the light of those new factors. The fact that the detention was ordered by a court and periodically reviewed does not automatically mean that all the requirements have been observed.

The ECtHR concluded that twenty-five days for the domestic authorities to ensure translation of a one-page appeal drafted in simple terms cannot be considered reasonable, bearing in mind the strict standards set down in case-law. Taking into account the period for the appeal court to enact the decision this was found to be excessive.

Therefore, it can be concluded that both cases against the Republic of Latvia affected not the quality of the law but rather the practice of the institutions in their application. Given that the differences in interpretation allowed were corrected, the violations were thus eliminated. Hence, the decisions of the ECtHR have been successfully implemented at the national level, confirmed by the fact that at the date of writing the court has ruled on the violations of rights of migrants in only two cases. In addition, the current issues, affecting the rights of migrants, relate to the amount of benefits and other welfare issues, where the case law of the ECtHR plays a substantial role in order to find necessary solutions to tackle the highlighted problems.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

The recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance have contributed to positive changes in Latvian legislation and in practice. On 17 July 2007 and 21 May 2009 Latvia introduced into its Criminal Law²²⁵⁰ two new provisions criminalising the justification, public glorification or public denial of genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against peace and war crimes. It also included ethnicity as one of the grounds on which incitement to hatred is prohibited. However, on the other hand there are no specific provisions in criminal law or in Latvian Administrative Violations Code dealing with racist speech other than incitement to racial hatred. That is why European Commission against Racism and ²²⁵⁰ The Criminal Law 1998. [Krimināllikums].

Intolerance in its report on Latvia on 21 February 2012²²⁵¹ has recommended that the Latvian authorities make amendments in the criminal law legislation criminalising racist speech (other than incitement to hatred which is already a criminal offence) and also criminalising the production, distribution, acquisition, transportation or storage of items that incite hatred in ethnic, racial or similar grounds and the creation of support/leadership/participation in a group which promotes racism. On 29 October 2014, amendments to Article 149(1) of the Criminal Law entered into force providing for criminal liability for discrimination on the grounds of racial or ethnic origin, nationality or religious affiliation or for the violation of the prohibition of any other type of discrimination. A more severe liability is provided if substantial harm is caused or if they have been committed by a public official, a responsible employee of an enterprise (company) or organisation, a group of persons or if they are committed using an automated data processing system.

Another positive addition in this matter is that the Associations and Foundations Law²²⁵² was amended on 20 July 2011 so that associations and foundations whose mandate includes advocacy of human rights are now authorised under the law to represent injured natural person in institutions or in the court and defend the rights or lawful interests of such persons in matters which are related to the violations of the prohibition of unequal treatment, or with employment of such persons who are not entitled to stay in the Republic of Latvia. Latvian Electronic Mass Media Law²²⁵³ has also been amended on 22 May 2013 adding Article 35 which prohibits commercial announcements on incitement to hatred and inviting to discriminate against any person or group of persons based on sex, age, religious, political or other beliefs, sexual orientation, disability, racial or ethnic origin, nationality or other grounds. Various other civil and administrative laws have been amended to implement recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance, for example, the grounds on which discrimination is prohibited were broadened in Law on Consumer Rights Protection, Law on Social Security, and Law on Support for Unemployed Persons and Persons Seeking Employment. However, Latvia hasn't fully adopted a comprehensive body of civil and administrative law prohibiting racial discrimination in all fields.

Latvian authorities also have made progress concerning Recommendation No. 3. on combating racism and intolerance against Roma/Gypsies. Successful integration of Roma is still a big problem in Latvia. The Society Integration Foundation's research in 2015²²⁵⁴ pointed out low average achievement rates in education - almost 40 percent of Roma had left education at primary school - as the most important reason for the high unemployment rate, which is 68 %. That, alongside recommendations from Ombudsmen is why the practice of forming separate classes for Roma children has been stopped in the academic year 2013/14. However, there are still local education authorities like Ventspils²²⁵⁵ who haven't done that yet.

National authorities have made some progress regarding ECRI's recommendation that the national authorities ensure the Policy Guidelines for the Integration of Society in Latvia. Awareness-raising campaigns like "Migration, development and human rights"²²⁵⁶, have been organised notably for younger people and training seminars have been held for teachers, civil servants and local government staff. National authorities have also organised seminars for employers and journalists on tolerance and social exclusion, management of diversity and intercultural competences. Currently, the project "Integration of Third-Country Nationals in Latvia: A Professional Opportunity for the Development of Responsible, Varied and Qualitative Journalism in the National and Regional Mass Media in Latvia"²²⁵⁷ is being developed. Moreover, events for the general public have been organised to encourage tolerance towards foreigners and to promote their integration into society.

The Ombudsman's Office has a significant role in elimination of discrimination of any kind and integration of migrants. It's important to note that European Commission against Racism and Intolerance has strongly recommended Latvian authorities to endow the Ombudsman's Office with sufficient funds. That is why the budget of the Ombudsman's Office has been increased from €813597 in 2011 to €1007911 in 2012 and to €1168466 in 2015. The budgetary planning for the period 2017 – 2019 foresees approximately €1300000 per year.²²⁵⁸ The Office provides legal assistance to victims of discrimination, aid in integration of migrants and regularly implements measures aimed at raising public awareness.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

Migrants' right to healthcare should be deviated depending on the status of a migrant. Generally, as previously mentioned, rights are regulated by the Immigration Law, Section 4(6) of which stipulates that the procedures for foreigners' health insurance, as well as the procedures by which a foreigner receives health care services in the Republic of Latvia, the minimum insurance amount, the minimum amount of services to be covered and cases when a visa or a residence permit without health insurance policy may be issued to a foreigner shall be determined by the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers. Article 6 of the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 591 'Regulations of the Foreigners' Health Insurance'²²⁵⁹[1] stipulates that health insurance policy should cover expenditures for health related services such as: 1) emergency medical assistance; 2) treatment of a critical condition in a hospital for life or health; 3) transportation to the nearest medical treatment institution, which provides the above mentioned services; 4) transport for return to the host country in case of serious illness or death. According to Article 9 the validity period of the policy may not be less than the intended term of stay of the third-country national in the Republic of Latvia or in the territory of the Republic of Latvia and one or more other Schengen member states. According to Article 7 the minimum limit of liability of the insurer for the period of insurance may not be less than €30000, requesting a short-term visa, and €42600, requesting the long-term visa or residency permit.

Article 12 stipulates that a foreigner must receive health care services in the Republic of Latvia in accordance with the procedures prescribed by regulatory enactments regulating medical treatment. Section 16 of the Medical Treatment Law²²⁶⁰ states that everybody has the right to receive emergency medical care in accordance with procedures stipulated by the Cabinet. Nonetheless, Section 17 of the law stipulates that the amount of medical treatment services paid from the State basic budget and from the funds of the recipient of services in accordance with the procedures stipulated by the Cabinet shall be provided to: 1) Latvian citizens; 2) Latvian non-citizens; 3) citizens of Member States of the European Union, of European Economic Area states and Swiss Confederation who reside in Latvia in relation to employment or as self-employed persons, as well as the family members thereof; 4) third-country nationals who have a permanent residence permit in Latvia; 5) refugees and persons who have been granted alternative status; 6) persons detained, arrested and sentenced with deprivation of liberty. Medical treatment services shall be provided at the time and place where it is necessary, in conformity with the medical practitioner's qualifications and the diagnostic, medical treatment and equipment for patient care level of the relevant medical treatment institution. The spouses of Latvian citizens and Latvian non-citizens, who have a temporary residence permit in Latvia, have the right to receive free of charge the care for pregnant women and birth assistance paid from the State basic budget and from the funds of the recipient of services in accordance with the procedures stipulated by the Cabinet. The children of the persons referred above have the right to receive free of charge the amount of medical treatment services paid from the State basic budget and from the funds of the recipient of services. Persons who are not mentioned above, shall receive medical treatment services for a fee. According to Section 18 of the Law other medical assistance to the persons referred to in Section 17 of the Law shall be provided for payment from insurance companies, employers, patients themselves or from other resources in accordance with laws and regulations.

Moreover, according to Article 27.5. of the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 675 ‘The procedure for the entry and residence of Union citizens and their family members in the Republic of Latvia’²²⁶¹ a citizen of the union may receive a registration certificate, which grants the right to stay in another Member State longer than three months, if he has sufficient livelihoods to avoid becoming a burden on the social assistance system and a valid document issued by a Member State certifying that the person in the Republic of Latvia is entitled to the necessary medical or emergency medical assistance or a valid health insurance policy.

In case the foreigner, according to Section 51 of the Immigration Law, has been detained because the removal procedure is applicable to him or her or he or she is subject to the return to a third country or to another Member State of the European Union in accordance with a treaty or agreement, which provides for the readmission of such persons who are staying illegally in the territory of the relevant state, the detained foreigner shall be accommodated in specially equipped premises or accommodation centre separately from persons detained according to criminal procedural procedures or imprisoned persons. According to Section 59(3¹) the scope and procedure for receipt of health care services guaranteed by a third-country national placed in a housing center is determined by the Cabinet of Ministers. Article 2 of the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 255 ‘Regulations on the amount and procedure for receiving health care services guaranteed to a detained foreigner in a lodging center’²²⁶² stipulates that before placing a person in the center of the accommodation, a medical practitioner of the accommodation center carries out an examination of the state of health of a person and makes a record on the person's medical card out of the patient's medical record. A person has the right to receive emergency medical assistance as well as primary and secondary health care services.

In the case of an unaccompanied minor, according to Section 47 or 49 of the Immigration Law, may not be extradited and is allowed to reside in the Republic of Latvia for a stated term, health care services should be provided for the above mentioned minor as well as for other minors. Section 3(2) of the Protection of the Rights of the Child Law²²⁶³ stipulates that the State shall ensure the rights and freedoms of all children without any discrimination – irrespective of race, nationality, gender, language, political party alliance, political or religious convictions, national, ethnic or social origin, place of residence in the State, property or health status, birth or other circumstances of the child, or of his or her parents, guardians, or family members.

Identical norm is included in the Convention on the Rights of the Child of the United Nations²²⁶⁴. Article 2 stipulates that State Parties shall respect and ensure the rights set forth in the present Convention to each child within their jurisdiction without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the child's or his or her parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status. In addition, Article 24(1)(2) of the Convention states that State Parties recognize the right of the child to enjoy the highest attainable standard of health and to facilitate the treatment of illness and rehabilitation of health. State Parties shall strive to ensure that no child is deprived of his or her right of access to such health care services. State Parties shall pursue full implementation of this right and, in particular, shall take appropriate measures: a) to diminish infant and child mortality; b) to ensure the provision of necessary medical assistance and health care to all children with emphasis on the development of primary health care; c) to combat disease and malnutrition, including within the framework of primary health care, through, inter alia, the application of readily available technology and through the provision of adequate nutritious foods and clean drinking-water, taking into consideration the dangers and risks of environmental pollution.

The Asylum seeker's right to healthcare is regulated according to the Asylum Law. According to Section 9 of the Asylum Law if an asylum seeker does not have sufficient resources to ensure living arrangements conforming to his or her health condition and his or her residence during the asylum procedure, he or she shall be accommodated at the accommodation centre for asylum seekers, which is a joint dwelling for non-detained asylum seekers, in which the conditions necessary for everyday life are ensured, by taking also into account that the special reception needs of the asylum seeker, and his or her physical and mental health is protected. According to Section 11 (2) Paragraph 8 in accordance with the procedures laid down in the laws and regulations to receive emergency medical assistance, primary health care, outpatient and inpatient psychiatric assistance in case of serious mental health disorders and also any medical assistance to minors, non-provision of which may pose a threat to the development and health of the child, from the State funds, taking into account the special reception needs of the asylum seeker.

On the basis of Article 8 of the Regulations of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 489 'Internal Rules of the Asylum Seeker Accommodation Center'²²⁶⁵ an asylum seeker lodging center provides a first-time health check if it has not been made to the asylum seeker beforehand. According to Article 24 in order to receive the necessary medical assistance in the amount and according to the procedure specified in regulatory enactments, the asylum seeker turns to the employee of the accommodation center.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

According to Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention on Human Rights, no person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions relating to education and teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions. In the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia (Latvijas Republikas Satversme) Article 112 states that everyone has the right to education, the State shall ensure that everyone may acquire primary and secondary education without charge and that the primary education shall be compulsory. Hence migrant children have the same right to education as Latvian children do. It is also confirmed by the Education Law (Izglītības likums).

In accordance with Article 3, Section 1 of the Education Law (Izglītības likums) the right to education is for citizens of Latvia, non-citizens of Latvia, citizens of the European Union, citizens of the European Economic Area, citizens of the Swiss Confederation, permanent residents of the European Community who have a valid residence permit in the Republic of Latvia, stateless persons who have a valid travel document for stateless persons issued in the Republic of Latvia, citizens of another state, other than a citizen of the European Union, the European Economic Area or Swiss Confederation (hereinafter – a third-country national), stateless persons who have a valid residence permit in the Republic of Latvia, refugees or persons who have been granted subsidiary protection and persons who have received temporary protection in the Republic of Latvia. The right to education for a minor who has been granted refugee status or subsidiary protection is also set out in Article 50, Section 2 of the Asylum Law [Patvēruma likums] where it is specified that they are provided with opportunities for acquiring education in the official language in a state or local government educational institution. The same applies to minors who have been granted temporary protection.²²⁶⁶

Minor asylum seekers or minor children of asylum seekers too have the right to basic education and secondary education, as well as the right to continue the commenced education after reaching the age of majority according to Article 3, Section 2 of the Education Law (Izglītības likums). This right of minor asylum seekers derives also from Article 9, Section 7 of the Asylum Law (Patvēruma likums) where it is specified that they are provided with opportunities for acquiring education in the official language in a state or local government educational institution. It also states that it is the Cabinet of Ministers that shall determine the procedures by which a minor asylum seeker shall be provided with opportunities for acquiring education. In order to determine these procedures the Cabinet of Ministers adopted regulation No. 488 of 26 July 2016 "Procedures for the Provision of a Minor Asylum Seeker with Opportunities for Acquiring Education" (2016.gada 26 jūlija Ministru kabineta noteikumi Nr.488 "Kārtība, kādā nepilngadīgam patvēruma meklētājam nodrošina izglītības ieguves iespējas") (hereinafter – Regulation No. 488). In Regulation No. 488 more specific information is given about the procedure on how to provide minor asylum seekers with opportunities to acquire education. For example the timeframe in which the asylum seeker must be able to start acquiring education (according to Article 3 it must happen within 3 months from the day when the person has submitted their asylum application to the State Border Guard); that the Ministry of Education and Science is responsible for determining which educational institution the asylum seeker will attend (Article 7); that it should be chosen according to their place of residence (Article 6) etc.

Even in cases when the minors have no legal ground for residence they still have the right to education whilst in Latvia. Article 3, Section 3 of the Education Law (Izglītības likums) determines that a minor third-country national or stateless person who has no legal basis to reside in the

²²⁶⁶ Article 62, Section 3 of Asylum Law [Patvēruma likums], available at www.likumi.lv

Republic of Latvia has the right to acquire basic education during the time period specified for voluntary exit or during the time period for which the expulsion is suspended, as well as during his or her detention.

According to Article 12, Section 5 of the Education Law (Izglītības likums) those persons who are not citizens or non-citizens of Latvia but are also referred to in Article 3, Section 1 and also for the minor asylum seekers or minor children of asylum seekers as well as minor third-country nationals or stateless persons who have no legal basis to reside in the Republic of Latvia the fee for acquiring a basic education and secondary education shall be determined and covered in accordance with the same procedures as for citizens of Latvia and non-citizens of Latvia.

The fees that are set for the pre-school, basic and secondary education at an institution established by the state or one of the local governments (municipalities) shall be covered from the State budget or local government budgets, a private educational institution may set a tuition fee for acquiring education there.²²⁶⁷

Altogether this means that migrant children enjoy the right to a free of charge basic and secondary education in Latvia and must be provided with a possibility to attend a state or local government educational institution. If they wish so they can also choose to attend a suitable private educational institution but in that case the state will not bear the expenses.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

The Republic of Latvia signed the Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region on 11 April 1997. This was ratified by Law on Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region (Likums par Eiropas reģiona konvenciju par to kvalifikāciju atzīšanu, kas saistītas ar augstāko izglītību) on 13 May 1999, and the Law has entered into force for the Republic of Latvia on 26 May 1999.²²⁶⁸

The legal framework for recognition procedure of foreign education documents is provided by the Education Law (Izglītības likums), especially by Section 11¹ “Recognition in Latvia of Education Document Certificates Issued by the Foreign States” (11¹. pants. „Ārvalstīs izsniegto izglītības dokumentu atzīšana Latvijā”). The Section consists of 5 paragraphs:

1. The first paragraph describes the legal basis for performance of recognition procedure – the application to the institution should be submitted by a holder of the education document, or regarding documents certifying academic degrees, the application must be submitted by relevant educational institutions, State institutions, employers or professional organisations. This paragraph also provides additional information which extends the definition of an educational document and to the documents certifying academic degrees conferred abroad. In addition, the paragraph defines the administration body for the procedure of recognition of foreign educational documents, which is the Academic Information Centre (Akadēmiskās informācijas centrs).²²⁶⁹ The Centre provides all its services for pay, and the amount of payment is defined by government – The Cabinet of Ministers (Ministru kabinets).²²⁷⁰

2. The second paragraph provides two possible provisional results for an expert examination of educational document or document certifying academic degrees:

- In the first option, it should be defined which education document issued in Latvia, or which academic degree conferred in Latvia, is equivalent to the education document issued abroad and may be considered as equivalent;
- In the second option, the list of additional conditions which must be fulfilled in order that the education document issued abroad may be considered as equivalent to an education document issued in Latvia if the education document issued abroad does not conform to the requirements of any education document issued in Latvia should be provided.²²⁷¹

3. The third paragraph provides the form of the result of an expert-examination which will be performed in a form of notice (izziņa) with information: which education document issued in Latvia, or which academic degree conferred in Latvia, is equivalent (Paragraph 2a) or the list of additional conditions which must be fulfilled (Paragraph 2b).

4. The fourth paragraph prescribes the right of an institution to recognise an educational document. When notice has been received by the holder of the educational document, he / she must submit the educational document and the notice to the respective institution for which the expert-examination has been performed. The institution, considering the provided notice from the Academic Information Centre, should make a decision on the recognition of the educational document. These institutions, who are entitled to take a decision are defined conditionally for the purpose of application:

- in the purpose of continuation of studies - the institution of higher education: college, institute, academy or university, where an applicant is going to continue their studies;
- in the purpose of employment – the employer;
- in the purpose of practising a professional activity in professions in which the professional activities, or the education required for it, is governed by laws, as well as in other regulatory enactments - the institution is determined within said laws and other regulatory enactments;
- in the purpose of continuation of basic or secondary school education – the Ministry of Education and Science.

5. And the last, fifth, paragraph prescribes subordination of the Academic Information Centre to the Ministry of Science and Education (Izglītības un zinātnes ministrija).

According to the abovementioned paragraph 1 of Section 11¹ of the Education Law, the price list is provided by the Cabinet of Ministers. The price list, in its legal essence, is a piece of legislation. Regulation No. 409 (from 2015) of the Cabinet has set up the price for recognition of foreign education documents at €41.00 (per 1 document).

In summary, the main stages of the procedure of recognition of foreign education documents are: submitting the application and payment; expert-examination of educational documents; giving notice to the applicant by the Academic Information Centre and making a decision regarding recognition of education document by a respective institution.

The fee must be paid by an applicant according to the invoice which will be provided in a 24-hour period. When payment is performed, and money has been received by the Academic Information Centre, the 30-day period of notification is started. The Academic Information Centre must provide the applicant with notice within this term.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

In accordance with Article 8 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia, 'All citizens of Latvia who enjoy full rights of citizenship and, who on election day have attained eighteen years of age shall be entitled to vote'²²⁷². Therefore, migrants have no rights to participate in parliamentary vote. Latvian Law on Elections of the Republic City Council and Municipality Council²²⁷³ states that in the Republic of Latvia only citizens of Latvia and citizens of the European Union who have been registered in the Population Register have the right to elect the Municipality Council. Hence migrants are not legally allowed to directly participate in any parliamentary or Municipality Council political decision making.

Following the general principle set in chapter 8 of the Constitution of the Republic of Latvia everyone is allowed to participate in previously announced peaceful meetings, street processions, and pickets. In addition everyone also has the right to form and join associations, political parties and other public organizations. However, these rights are restricted by law. Article 26 of The Law of the Political Parties states that citizens can become party members only if they have reached the age of 18 and who are either citizens of Latvia, non-citizens of Latvia or citizens of the European Union who are not Latvian citizens but who reside in the Republic of Latvia²²⁷⁴[3]. Migrants are legally allowed to participate in meetings, processions and pickets. It is important to note that migrants, in accordance with Article 4 of the law On Meetings, Processions, and Pickets, are now allowed to be organisers of such events.²²⁷⁵

Migrants are also legally allowed to take part in non-governmental organisations. In Latvia, third-country nationals, if they have received a residence permit, are provided with opportunities for political participation in the work of associations and trade unions. However, in practice, most immigrants are not members of trade unions and most of these non-governmental organization's activities are focused on promoting tolerance and cultural diversity, rather than encouraging civic and political participation by immigrants.

In general, it must be recognized that migrants in the Republic of Latvia enjoy full rights to participate in political decisions after the naturalisation process. Otherwise, migrants enjoy the right to vote municipality elections, the European Parliament, to join parties, to take part in rallies, gatherings, and strikes. Migrants can acquire citizenship through naturalisation after they have lived in Latvia with a permanent residence permit for 5 years.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

In the Republic of Latvia, the regulation over citizenship area is performed in accordance with the Citizenship Law (Pilsonības likums). The Law prescribes both researched areas: an acquisition of citizenship and a double nationality (or dual citizenship).

The process of acquiring Latvian citizenship can be performed by any person over 15 upon their personal request (before this age, applicant's parents (or legal guardian) should apply for a citizenship)^{2276, 2277}. The request will initiate the prescribed procedure for an applicant to the process called naturalisation (naturalizācija). However, there are several restrictions to applicants. If one of the restrictions is exist, then person may not proceed in naturalisation, and therefore, to become a Latvian national. These restrictions are:

1. the person is a threat to the national security, independence, territorial sovereignty and to the society:
 - a. has acted against the independence of the Republic of Latvia, the democratic parliamentary structure of the State or the existing State power in Latvia;
 - b. after 4 May 1990, have propagated fascist, chauvinist, national-socialist, communist or other totalitarian ideas or incited ethnic or racial hatred or discord;
 - c. is related to terrorism or acts in an anti-state or criminal organisation;
 - d. is related to anti-money laundering (AML) crime;
2. the person is serving in the armed forces or military organisation of another country without an authorisation of the Cabinet;

²²⁷⁷ The Citizenship Law 1994, Sec. 17., para. 1. [Pilsonības likums].

3. after 17 June 1940, the person has chosen the Republic of Latvia as his or her place of residence directly after demobilisation from the armed forces of the U.S.S.R. (Russia) or the internal military forces of the U.S.S.R. (Russia), and, until the day of conscription into service or enlistment, had not permanently resided in Latvia;
4. the person has been the staff employee of the state security service, intelligence service or counter-intelligence service of the U.S.S.R. or Latvian S.S.R., except a person who has only been the employee of the Planning and Finance or Administrative-Maintenance Division of the State Security Committee of the U.S.S.R. or the Latvian S.S.R.;
5. the person has been convicted in Latvia or any other country for committing a criminal offence that is qualified as a criminal offence also in Latvia during examination of an application for naturalisation. This condition shall not apply to a person who has been convicted for committing a criminal offence in a foreign country, if it has been recognised in accordance with the procedures specified by the Cabinet that in respect of such person a judgment of conviction has been rendered without complying with the principle of fair trial or of proportionality of the punishment;
6. after 13 January 1991, the person has worked against the Republic of Latvia in the C.P.S.U. [Communist Party of the Soviet Union] (L.C.P. [Latvian Communist Party]), the Working People's International Front of the Latvian S.S.R., the United Council of Labour Collectives, the Organisation of War and Labour Veterans, the All-Latvia Salvation of Society Committee or the regional committees thereof, or the Union of Communists of Latvia;
7. the person has not fulfilled tax obligations or obligations of other payments towards the State of Latvia.²²⁷⁸

Despite the wide list of restrictions to the naturalisation procedure, the entitled (to naturalise) person should meet other provisions²²⁷⁹ and must:

- Have had permanent residence in Latvia for at least 5 years;
- be fluent in Latvian language (in Section 20 of the Citizenship Law, specification of what exactly meant by being fluent in language is provided);
- know the basic principles of the Constitution (Satversme);
- know the text of the National Anthem and the basics of the history and culture of Latvia;
- have a legal source of income;
- give a pledge of loyalty to the Republic of Latvia;
- not be a subject to the naturalisation restrictions;
- pay the State fee (the Cabinet Regulation No. 849 (from 2013) for application to naturalisation amounting to €28.46,²²⁸⁰ and for some persons (like the registered unemployed, disabled persons, but not refugees) the state fee is lower²²⁸¹ – €4.27).²²⁸²

²²⁷⁹ ibid, Sec. 12., para. 1.

If all these conditions are fulfilled, then the applicant may proceed to the naturalisation procedure. This procedure is regulated according to the Cabinet Regulation No. 973 (from 2013) and de facto the procedure is exams on language, Constitution, Anthem, history and culture. The Regulation contains technical provisions on how exactly the evaluation of applicant's knowledge is performed. If exams are passed, then the applicant is entitled to give a pledge of his or her loyalty to the state and to become a Latvian national.

Double nationality

The regulation over double nationality is prescribed mostly by Section 9 of the Citizenship Law. But, the definition of the double nationality is provided in Chapter 1 of the Citizenship Law (before Section 1): 'Double nationality is the belonging of a person to a citizenship (nationality) of several states'.

Analysing the first paragraph of Section 9, we can "narrow" the definition of double nationality. According to the above-mentioned paragraph 1 of Section 9, the Latvian nationality shall be retained for a Latvian citizen who has:

- acquired citizenship of another Member State of the European Union or Member State of the European Free Trade Association;
- acquired citizenship of another Member State of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation;
- acquired citizenship of the Commonwealth of Australia, Federative Republic of Brazil or New Zealand;
- acquired citizenship of such country with which the Republic of Latvia has entered into an agreement regarding recognition of dual citizenship;
- acquired citizenship of a country not referred to in the previous 1 – 4 clauses, but has received an authorization of the Cabinet to retain Latvian citizenship in compliance with important State interests. The Cabinet shall take a decision not later than within a year, and it shall not be subject to appeal;
- acquired citizenship of another country through entering into marriage (acquired ex lege) or as a result of adoption.

The next condition for double nationality is provided in paragraph 4 of Section 9: 'Double nationality may not occur for a person who is admitted to Latvian citizenship through naturalisation procedures, except the cases provided for in Section 12, Paragraph 2 of this Law'. The mentioned paragraph 2 of Section 12 allows that a national admitted to Latvian citizenship to retain nationality of its state if the state is one of these: a Member State of the European Union, a Member State of the European Free Trade Association, a Member State of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Federative Republic of Brazil,

²²⁸² The Citizenship Law 1994, Sec. 12., para. 5. [Pilsonības likums].

New Zealand or a citizen of the country with which the Republic of Latvia has entered into agreement regarding recognition of dual citizenship.

And the last condition for clear perception of ‘double nationality’ subject is prescribed by paragraph 6 of Section 9 – the regulation of a respective country shall allow its nationals to have double nationality with the Republic of Latvia.

In summary, a Latvian national is entitled to apply for dual nationality, but regarding refugees, it will be possible only if said refugee has citizenship of one of the following states: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Cyprus, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Ireland, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, UK, USA. This situation is mostly due to the method obtaining nationality – the most common way for a refugee to gain citizenship is naturalisation.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

There are several ways in which Latvia has assisted towards integration of migrants. The responsible authority for integration projects in Latvia is the Ministry of the Interior, whilst the Ministry of Culture is responsible for integration matters. One example of the integration of migrants is the recently established foundation “Asylum, migration and integration fund” (hereinafter – Foundation). This Foundation has number of objectives²²⁸³, some of them are:

- strengthen and develop all aspects of the Common European Asylum System, including its external dimension;
- to provide support for legal migration to the Member States in accordance with their economic and social needs, for example, the needs of the labour market, while at the same time ensuring the integrity of the immigration system, and to promote the effective integration of third country nationals;
- to strengthen fair and effective return strategies in the Member States, which contribute to the fight against illegal immigration, with emphasis on the sustainability of return and readmission in the countries of origin and transit;
- to strengthen solidarity and division of responsibility between the Member States, in particular those most affected by migratory and asylum flows, including through practical cooperation.

For example, one of the Foundation’s projects²²⁸⁴ is dedicated to raising standards for the reception of asylum seekers and to strengthen the capacity of the asylum procedure.²²⁸⁵ The project is feasible for two years and it will be completed by December 2017. During the implementation of the project there has been received a considerable amount of funds from the EU, approximately in the range of €1.5 million.

It is also important to mention a rather recent project named “Solidarity and management of migration flows, the framework programme 2007 – 2013.” has been funded by the EU with the aim of promoting the integration of immigrants in society. The previously mentioned project mainly covers the principle of solidarity in managing people flows by ensuring a fair share of responsibilities between Member States as regards the financial burden associated with the introduction of an integrated management system for external borders, as well as the implementation of common asylum and immigration policy.²²⁸⁶ Also, the EU not only funds projects that are related to integration of migrants, but also supports the development of the infrastructure as a whole, granting funds for the reception and accommodation system of asylum seekers, which includes works that cover various adjustments of premises, even the socio-economic integration process.²²⁸⁷

In Latvia on 1 January 2017 there were registered a total of 73965 citizens of third countries²²⁸⁸, of which 26262 have been issued the terminated residence permit and 47703 citizens of third countries have been issued a permanent residence permit. Employment, studies and marriage are considered the main causes of entry of third country citizens in Latvia.²²⁸⁹

During our research we were able to conclude the following:

The general legal framework for immigration in Latvia is provided by Immigration Law, and the framework is widened by Regulations of the Cabinet. The other main legal act is the Asylum Law, which prescribes the framework for a procedure of asylum-seeking or for an application for acquisition of alternative status.

Dozens of official institutions are targeted to specifically deal with migrants such as the Ministry of the Interior, the Office of Citizenship and Migration Affairs and the State Border Guard. Some other institutions can provide services to migrants but they are not targeted for that. It is worth to mention Society Integration Foundation, the main priority of which is to develop and promote integration policy of society in Latvia.

From 1998 to 2016, international protection was requested by 2118 asylum seekers in total. Recent statistics show a number of applications of asylum seekers have progressed rapidly: from 20 applications in 2005 up to 328 in 2015 with a peak in 2014 which had 364 applications in total. Overall migration flow to Latvia from countries such as Afghanistan, Syria, Russia and Iraq, has a tendency to increase, considering that not only economic factors constitute a foundation for the desire to migrate to a different country, but also it may be considered as an escape from various warfare activities in Eastern Asia.

The decisions by the European Court of Human Rights have mostly been implemented into the national legal acts, especially the Asylum Law. At the national level not only does the case-law between the ECHR and the Republic of Latvia substantially influence the national normative regulation but also cases against other countries have had an effect.

Migrants' right to healthcare depending on the status of a migrant. And regarding the education – the main point of the Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention on Human Rights, no person shall be denied the right to education, has been implemented into the national legal system.

In regards to recognition of foreign diplomas, the Latvia is a member of Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European region of 1997. The main institution that is responsible for implementation of recognition procedure is the Academic Information Centre.

Political decisions: all citizens of Latvia who enjoy full rights of citizenship and, who on an election day have attained eighteen years of age shall be entitled to vote'. Therefore, migrants have no rights to participate in a parliamentary vote.

Migrants have an opportunity to become a citizen of the Republic of Latvia, and the most common way to do so for them is naturalisation procedure. The possibility to hold double nationality is restricted by the list of countries that are considered eligible for double nationality with the nationality of Latvia.

Introduction

Migration law is one of the most important and at the same time, one of the most sensitive issues in modern world. The reason for that can be found in the migrant crisis that the world has faced over the past years, but also in the fact that a considerable number of people decide to leave their country and move to another, from different motives, which are often connected with economic and social issues. Globalization has contributed to a greater mobility of people around the world, therefore many states become home to people which are not their citizens. It is well-known that each state provides a different body of rights for its citizens and for non-citizens, even though human rights are equally applied to everyone, in spite of the citizenship. Moreover, each state is obliged to respect human dignity and to provide suitable conditions for normal life of the people living on its territory. There are many conventions which secure migrants rights, but also each state has its own legislation which provides fair treatment for them. Legislation concerning non-citizens is increasingly evolving because of its necessity, having in mind the previously said about the increasing number of migrants in many states. Republic of Macedonia has already adopted a number of laws that regulate significant aspects of migrants' lives. This research gives an answer to some questions concerning national regulation on migrants' rights in Republic of Macedonia.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. National Regulation of the Right to Asylum in the Republic of Macedonia

The Macedonian regulation provides the possibility for foreigners and stateless persons that are persecuted due to their democratic and political beliefs and actions to have the right to asylum under legally envisaged conditions. The ground of this right is established in the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia (Article 29)²²⁹⁰. On January 18 1994 the Republic of Macedonia has also acceded to:

- the Convention on the Status of Refugees (1951);
- its Protocol (1967); and
- the Convention on the Status of Stateless Persons (1954).

The aforementioned legislation provides a basic regulation of the right to asylum in the Republic of Macedonia, whereas the Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection²²⁹¹ provides detailed regulation on the subject in question. The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection regulates the conditions and the procedure of granting and terminating the right to asylum of a foreign citizen or stateless person, seeking for an asylum in the Republic of Macedonia, as well as the rights and obligations of the asylum seekers and the foreign citizen with granted right to asylum in the Republic of Macedonia. Furthermore, this Law regulates the conditions under which the Republic of Macedonia may grant temporary protection of foreign citizens, as well as their rights and obligations towards the country.

²²⁹⁰ Article 29, Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia no. 52/1991

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection defines the right to asylum as an international protection that the Republic of Macedonia grants to the following categories of people:

- recognized refugees (refugees as defined in the Convention on the Status of Refugees (1951) and the Protocol on the Status of Refugees (1967)); and
- persons under subsidiary protection.

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection also defines the asylum seekers, recognized refugees, people under subsidiary protection, recognized refugees and people under subsidiary protection sur place (already on the territory of the Republic of Macedonia), as well as the acts of persecution and the executors of persecution or serious injuries.

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection furthermore regulates the rights and obligations of the asylum seekers until the moment of adoption of final decision in the procedure on recognition of the right to asylum. The rights of the asylum seekers are as follows:

- residence;
- free legal aid;
- accommodation and care in a Reception Centre or other place for accommodation determined by the Ministry of Labour and Social Politics, if needed;
- basic healthcare services according to the healthcare insurance regulation;
- right to social protection according to the social protection regulation;
- right to education according to the regulation on primary and secondary education;
- right to work only in the Reception Centre and right to free access to the labour market if the asylum seeker's request has not been solved for more than a year, following the period of one year;
- contacts with the High Commissioner for Refugees, as well as NGOs with respect to providing legal aid during the course of the procedure on recognition of the right to asylum.²²⁹²

On the other hand, they are obliged to fulfill the following obligations:

- to stay in the Reception Centre or other place for accommodation determined by the Ministry of Labour and Social Politics and not to leave the residence place without: (i) informing the competent institution, or (ii) obtaining permission for leaving the place, if needed;
- to cooperate with the institutions responsible for granting the right to asylum, including: to provide personal data, to hand over identification and other

- documentation, to enable his/her photographing and fingerprinting, personal search and search of his/her luggage and/or vehicles with which he/she has arrived in the country, as well as to provide information on his assets and income;
- to undergo some health tests, medical treatment and missed vaccination upon request of the healthcare institutions, in case if there is an event that might be considered as a risk upon the public health; and
 - to respect the house rules of the Reception Centre or any other place for accommodation determined by the Ministry of Labour and Social Politics and to avoid being violent.²²⁹³

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection was subject to amendment several times during the last years in order to ease the procedure on obtaining right to asylum to potential asylum seekers and to prevent illegal migration. In this respect, several amendments were adopted in regards to harmonization with the EU regulation.

1.2. Procedure for Granting Asylum and Responsible Authority

The responsible authority in the Republic of Macedonia for granting the right to asylum is the Ministry of Interior, and specifically the Department for Asylum. The procedure is initiated by submitting a Request for granting the right to asylum (“Request”) by the asylum seeker. The asylum seeker may submit the Request with the border police, the nearest police station or in the office of the Department for Asylum in the scope of the Reception Centre. In case the asylum seeker is already on the territory of the Republic of Macedonia, he/she should submit the Request to the Department for Asylum in the Ministry of Interior. Such Request may be submitted in writing or oral on a record, in Macedonian language or in the language of his/her origin. In the moment of submission of the Request, the foreigner is being photographed and her/his fingerprints are being taken. Following this, the Ministry of Interior is obliged to issue a Certificate for submitted Request within three days of the submission, whereby the status of asylum seeker is being confirmed and it proves that the asylum seeker has the right to residence in the Republic of Macedonia until the final decision upon the Request.²²⁹⁴

Following the submission of the Request, the Department for Asylum notifies the asylum seeker within fifteen days as of the submission, in writing and oral, on the manner of conducting the procedure for granting the right to asylum, the rights and obligations of the asylum seeker, the consequences in case of failure to fulfill these obligations, the right on legal aid, the right to communicate with representatives of the High Commissioner for Refugees, as well as NGOs with respect to providing legal aid during the course of the procedure on recognition of the right to asylum. On the other hand, the asylum seeker is obliged to provide complete documentation and information with respect to its age, family relations, identity, citizenship, former residence, history of travel and reasons on submitting the Request.

The procedure on granting the right to asylum may be:

- regular procedure; or
- shortened procedure.²²⁹⁵

The regular procedure lasts six months as of the day of submission of the Request and it includes hearing of the asylum seeker, analyzing whether there are reasons for rejecting the Request, in case the Request should be rejected the Department for Asylum will review whether there are reasons for granting the right to asylum due to subsidiary protection, and adopting a decision on granting/rejecting the right to asylum or granting the right to asylum under subsidiary protection. If the adopted decision refers to rejecting the right to asylum, such decision will include the reasons why the Request has been rejected, legal remedy and timeframe for leaving the country (not earlier than fifteen days as of the day when the decision has become effective). In this event, the asylum seeker has the right to initiate an administrative lawsuit against such decision within thirty days as of receipt of the decision. The Administrative Court should adopt a decision within two months as of the submission of the lawsuit.

The shortened procedure is being conducted when the Request is obviously groundless, unless the Request is submitted by an unaccompanied minor or a person with intellectual disabilities. Examples of a groundless Request include: when the Request is based on a fraud or misuse of the procedure on granting the right to asylum; the country of origin of the asylum seeker is being considered as a safe country, unless the asylum seeker proves that the country is not safe for him/her; there are no grounds in the claims on fear of persecution, etc.

In this event, the Department for Asylum will adopt the decision within fifteen days as of the submission of the Request, and the timeframe for leaving the country will be following five days as of the effectiveness of the decision. As well as with the regular procedure, in the event of the Request has been rejected, the asylum seeker also has the right to initiate an administrative lawsuit before the Administrative Court, within seven days as of the receipt of the decision and such lawsuit should be solved within thirty days as of the submission of the lawsuit.

In any event, the asylum seeker has the right to submit a new Request, in which event he/she will have to prove that the circumstances have changed significantly from the moment of submission of the previous Request.

The Ministry of Labour and Social Politics is another authority responsible for the social security and care for the asylum seekers and refugees. The Ministry of Labour and Social Politics is responsible for the procedure on accommodation with the Reception Centre, social care, health care and basic education and work within the Reception Centre.

A foreigner cannot obtain the right to asylum in the Republic of Macedonia (grounds for exclusion of refugee protection) if there is a reasonable doubt that he/she:

- committed a crime against peace, humanity or committed a war crime, in accordance with the international acts envisaging these crimes;
- committed a serious nonpolitical crime outside of the territory of the Republic of Macedonia, prior entering as a refugee; or

²²⁹⁵ Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection, Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia, nos. 49/2013, 66/2007, 142/2008, 146/2009, 166/2012, 101/2015, 152/2015, 55/2016 and 71/2016

- is guilty for acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the Organization of the UN; or
- is considered as danger upon the safety of the Republic of Macedonia.

The right to asylum will cease to exist (grounds for termination of the right to asylum) for recognized refugee that:

- will be voluntarily re-placed under protection of his/her country of citizenship;
- will voluntarily re-obtain citizenship of his/her country
- obtained new citizenship and enjoys protection by the country of citizenship;
- will voluntarily move to the country that he/she left due to fear of prosecution;
- cannot continue rejecting protection from the country of citizenship, due to the fact that the circumstances under which the person was assigned with right to asylum ceased to exist; and
- a stateless person that can go back to his/her country of residence due to the fact that the circumstances under which the person was assigned with right to asylum ceased to exist.

With respect to the removal and re-entry into the Republic of Macedonia, please note that Macedonian law does not envisages any further regulation besides the provisions for deportation of immigrant in case when the request for asylum has been denied.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

The Macedonian law differs asylum seekers that seek to enter or have already entered in Macedonia illegally from any secure third country, EU member, NATO member or EFTA member country, compared to the asylum seekers from the rest of the countries.

In the event of such an asylum seeker submitting a Request, such Request will be considered as a groundless Request and will be rejected according to the aforementioned shortened procedure, taking into consideration the principle of non-refoulement (the fundamental principle which forbids a country receiving asylum seekers from returning them to a country in which they would be in likely danger of persecution based on race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion or where he would be subjected to torture, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment).

The Macedonian law defines the secure third countries, EU member, NATO member or EFTA member countries as countries that have ratified the Convention on the Status of the Refugees (1951) and the European Convention on Protection of Human Rights, including the standards for effective legal aid, as well as countries that have established asylum procedure in accordance with its national regulation and the Convention on the Status of the Refugees (1951).

Once the immigrants have obtained the migration status (i.e. they became recognized refugees), they are obliged to act in accordance with the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, the laws and other regulations and decision of state authorities, as well as in accordance with the obligations envisaged in the international agreements, ratified in accordance with the Constitution. Under Macedonian law, the recognized refugees have the same rights and obligations as the citizens of the Republic of Macedonia, except the right to vote, to be part of the military service and to perform business activity/to be employed/to establish NGOs or political party in the event when the law prescribes a condition for the person to be a Macedonian citizen. The Macedonian Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection does not envisage any particular steps in order for the immigrant to maintain his/her status. However, the recognized refugees have to comply with the Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection with respect to the grounds for exclusion of migration status and the grounds under which the right to asylum will cease to exist, as described above in question 1.

In the event when the recognized refugee wants to leave the country, there should not be any legal barriers to do so, under the event that the conditions for termination of the right to asylum are met. In this respect they are obliged to notify the state authorities responsible for granting the right to asylum in order for a procedure on terminating the right to asylum to be performed. In this event, the immigrant is obliged to return the personal identity card and the passport to the Ministry of Interior of the Republic of Macedonia.

On the other hand, if the asylum seeker Request has been rejected, he/she should leave the country within the deadline prescribed in the decision of the Department for Asylum. On the contrary, the deportation will be conducted in accordance with the Law on Foreigners²²⁹⁶ on the ground on illegal residency in the Republic of Macedonia. The procedure in the Law on Foreigners implies adoption of a Decision by the Ministry of Interior, including the deadline in which the immigrant should leave the country, as well as the period of prohibition to enter in the Republic of Macedonia (from six months to five years) and the notification to the immigrant that if he do not leave the country in the respective deadline he/she will be deported.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

The Ministry of Labor and Social Policy²²⁹⁷ has implemented the Integration Strategy for Refugees and Foreigners in 2008, which should be able to contribute to fast integration of foreigners in the country, in accordance with the international and European legal framework. The Strategy contains thorough analysis of the historical and legal aspects of the integration of the target group, adding the EU integration policy and the national legal framework in the Republic of Macedonia. Laws regulating this subject are: Law on asylum and temporary protection, Law on foreigners, Law on employment and work of foreigners and many other laws that contain applicable regulations.

²²⁹⁷ <http://www.mtsp.gov.mk>

The Law on asylum and temporary protection²²⁹⁸ contains the rights and responsibilities of asylum seekers and persons under humanitarian protection. According to Article 2, the right of asylum is protection granted by the Republic of Macedonia, under the conditions and in the procedure defined by this Law, to the following categories of persons:

- recognized refugee (refugee according to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees); and,
- person under humanitarian protection (in compliance with Article 3 of the 1950 Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and Article 3 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment).²²⁹⁹

A specialized public shelter that provides housing for asylum seekers is called for and opened in 2008. It has the capacity of 150 beds and while providing food, shelter and other basic human needs, it also gives the asylum seekers psychological help and support.

The right to enter the country and stay in it is covered by the Law on foreigners²³⁰⁰. According to Article 2, a foreigner, in the context of this law, shall mean a person who is not a citizen of the Republic of Macedonia. A foreigner shall also mean a stateless person, that is, a person who is regarded by no country as its own citizen as in accordance with its national law.²³⁰¹ The law governs the types of visas available to the foreigners and the requirements they have to meet in order to acquire them. The Ministry of Interior²³⁰² of the Republic of Macedonia is in charge of making decisions in that area.

The Law on employment and work of foreigners²³⁰³ regulates the conditions and procedure for employment or work of foreigners in the Republic of Macedonia, unless otherwise defined by an international agreement. According to Article 1, a foreigner shall be considered an employed person in the Republic of Macedonia if he, on the basis of an employment contract, has established a labor relation with an employer whose headquarters or place of residence is in the Republic of Macedonia or if the foreigner has acquired a status of a self-employed person in accordance with this Law, and services provided by foreigners and other forms of work performed by foreigners on the basis of employment contracts or other contracts under the civil law, implemented on the territory of the Republic of Macedonia for a definite period of time, shall be considered work performed by foreigners in accordance with this Law. It contains the procedure for work permits issuance and other procedures foreigners have to follow in order to work legally in the Republic of Macedonia.²³⁰⁴

MARRI is also an important subject in the field of migration law. In 2002, the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe²³⁰⁵ adopted a decision on the establishment of the Regional Initiative for issues of migration, asylum and refugees (MARRI)²³⁰⁶ for the purpose of better management of migration flows in the region. MARRI was founded in Herceg Novi, Republic of Montenegro on 5 April 2004²³⁰⁷. It is a regional initiative on issues of migration, asylum and refugees, whose participants are: Republic of Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republic of Macedonia, Republic of Montenegro, Republic of Serbia and Republic of Kosovo and its headquarters, the MARRI Regional Center is in Skopje, Republic of Macedonia. The Statute of the Migration, Asylum and Refugees Center defines the activities of the participant countries, as well as internal and operational organization of the Center; on the other hand, the functioning of the initiative is established by the Guidelines and Rules of Procedure.

Decision-making bodies within the MARRI Initiative are:

1. Regional forum – composed of the ministers of interior of the participant countries, as well as senior representatives in charge of the issues of asylum, migration, border management, visa regime and return of displaced persons, and
2. Regional committee - composed of representatives of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs of the participants and its task is to determine the guidelines for MARRI, to coordinate activities, make strategic decisions regarding the activities of the initiative and propose ways of realization of ideas and projects within the Initiative.

In 2006, the Government formed a Coordinative integration body for Refugees and Foreigners. This group is responsible for developing strategies and policies, reviewing reports from the ministries and sending recommendations to the Government to implement and develop final strategies and national action plans for local integration in Macedonia. Founding members are: Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, Ministry of Internal Affairs, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health, Ministry of External Affairs, Ministry of Local Self-government, Secretariat for European Affairs, Association of the Units of Local Self-government and the Red Cross. The Ministry of Labor and Social Policy leads the process of executing integration measures and it presides with the body.

In 2009, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy founded the Integration Center for Refugees and Foreigners, which is supposed to function as a helping hand for the Government in the process of executing integration activities. It works as a consulting center for informing refugees and getting access to services like housing, medical care and education.

Having in mind that the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy is part of the Government of the Republic of Macedonia, the funds come from the Government. That also includes funding the aforementioned bodies under the Ministry. They create budgets, which are approved by the Ministry. Then, the Government gives approval to the ministries' budgets and the Parliament votes and it adopts the needed budgets.

In case of maltreatment by the responsible bodies, migrants can turn to the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy and the Ministry of Internal Affairs. They can also address the primary courts in Skopje, the Ombudsman of the Republic of Macedonia and various organizations, such as the Helsinki Committee for Human Rights in Macedonia, Red Cross, Open Gate: La Strada and other venues similar to these.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

Migration from one country to another has dramatically increased in recent years, a trend that is predicted to increase further in the foreseeable future. The official numbers collected by the State Statistical Office²³⁰⁸ show that the number of migrants is gradually growing. According to population estimates (on December 31 2016), the Republic of Macedonia has 2.073.702 inhabitants, which is 13.908 persons or 0.7% more compared with 2011, and 31.761 persons or 1.6% more, compared to 2006. In the period 2006-2016 there has been a continuous increase in the number of immigrated foreigners in the Republic of Macedonia. In 2006, there have been 1.029 immigrated foreigners and 35 emigrated foreigners. The numbers are increasing in the next years, so in 2011 there have been 1.747 immigrated foreigners and 147 emigrated foreigners, and in 2016 there have been 2.481 immigrated foreigners and 190 emigrated foreigners.

The statistics from the State Statistical office regarding international migrations show that the numbers of immigrants are changing from year to year. In 2012, there have been 2.072 foreigners with temporary stay, 1.319 foreigners with extended stay, 1.941 foreigners were with temporary stay and 1.560 foreigners were with extended stay in 2013. In 2014, there have been 2.273 foreigners with temporary stay and 1.670 foreigners with extended stay. In 2015, the statistics show that there have been 3.617 foreigners with temporary stay and 1.482 foreigners with extended stay. Last year, in 2016, there have been 2.481 foreigners with temporary stay, 1.979 foreigners with extended stay.

The official numbers collected by the State Statistical Office also show that most of the immigrated citizens of the Republic of Macedonia and the foreigners are from Europe – 2.501 to be precise, from which 234 are immigrated citizens, and the other 2.481 are immigrated foreigners. The other immigrated citizens and foreigners are from America - 100, Asia - 112, Africa – 15, Australia – 23, and the other is unknown.

The immigrated foreigners in the Republic of Macedonia are from Turkey, Albania, Kosovo, Serbia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and other countries. Most of them are from Turkey. The statistical review also shows the emigrated citizens of the Republic of Macedonia, which are immigrating to USA, Germany, Australia, Switzerland and other countries. The statistics also show that most of the immigrated citizens of the Republic of Macedonia are females; more of them are married compared to the ones which are unmarried, widowed or divorced; and most of them are at the age of 30-64. The main reasons for the migrations are employment, education, family and mostly marriage. Most of the immigrated citizens of the Republic of Macedonia are with secondary school, while there are least doctorates as immigrated citizens in Republic of Macedonia. In Macedonia, from 2.481 immigrated foreigners, only 81 of them are foreigners born in the Republic of Macedonia. The other 2.400 are foreigners born abroad. According to Albanian Centre for Socio-Economic Research²³⁰⁹, migration has been a major determinant of demographic change in Macedonia. Macedonia is a migration area characterized by an intense exodus of the population to other countries, mainly to the EU. Macedonia's migrants usually leave as young working age adults and remain in their destinations for a long period of time (5-10 years). The emigrants are often young married males who depart to earn money abroad. The total number of Macedonian citizens residing abroad is estimated to be more than 300.000 persons who migrated from Macedonia over the last 50 years, representing 15% of the total population. More recent statistics confirm that the current stock of migrants abroad is 447.139, or a quarter of the population. Regarding their educational attainment, the majority of emigrants have low or medium levels of education at the time of departure. There has also been a very slight rural bias among emigrants – slightly more individuals from Macedonia's rural areas tend to go abroad and remain. All ethnic groups experience emigration, but there is a disproportionate level of migration among the Albanian, Roma and Turkish ethnic groups. This may well be an effect of poverty, which also slightly disproportionately affects these ethnic groups (which, on average, also exhibit lower levels of education).

A research from Oncheva²³¹⁰ show that since UNHCR began monitoring on July 1 2015, by mid October 2015 some 515.000 refugees and migrants have departed from Gevgelija. The Ministry of Interior Affairs' statistics on refugees and migrants who have declared their intention to apply for asylum reached 230.248, including 58.217 (25%) children of whom 11.711 (6%) have been unaccompanied since 19th June until November 10 2015. 146.121 (63%) of the arrivals are Syrians, 48.716(21%) Afghans, 17.969 (8%) Iraqis, 4.822 (3%) Pakistanis and the remainder represent other nationalities such as Palestinians, Iranians, Somalis, Congolese and Bangladeshi. 70 asylum applications were registered from which 51 were submitted by Syrians in the same period, while from January to the end of October 1.739 asylum applications were submitted.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. Council of Europe's protection of migrants

The European Court of Human Rights plays a crucial role in the protection of human rights in the countries party to the European Convention. As such, its influence is of utter importance in regards to matters of migration law.

Migrants are a special, vulnerable category of people, who for various reasons, often including threat for their lives or wellbeing, have chosen to leave their country of residence seeking a new one. Therefore, the international community is responsible to utilize all of its methods to grant these people a special treatment and ease their already difficult lives. Migrants are protected by international standards, but specifically by Council of Europe standards. The European Court of Human Rights has raised itself on a pedestal of key protector of immigrants' rights.

According to the European Convention on Human Rights, migrants enjoy several rights specific to their position, such as the right to immigration controls in conformity with the human rights standards, rights related to the process of entry and reception, specific duration and condition of the possible detentions, right to judicial review and compensation, right to housing, medical assistance, education, work and protection, right to family reunification etc.²³¹¹

So far, there has not been a single decision by the ECtHR with the Republic of Macedonia as a respondent state in which an application has been filed due to violation of the migrants' rights. However, the valuable case law of this Court from other countries both in the region and beyond shall be of great relevance for the country's treatment of migrants.

5.2. Rights in detention

Perhaps the biggest topic, both in theory and in the practice of the courts is the question of the rights in detention, including the strict grounds for detention, but also the maximum duration and the optimal conditions in detention. Even the countries who do not accept migrants, or who adopt a more strict approach towards their acceptance, are obliged to respect the basic human rights of these groups of people, an obligation which also applies in detention.²³¹²

An interesting case dealing with the rights in detention is Khlaifia and Other v. Italy.²³¹³ According to the Court's decision, Italy was found in violation of the applicant's right to liberty and security, their right to be promptly informed for the reasons of detention, as well as their right to a speedy decision by the court on the lawfulness of the decision. The rest of the allegations were disregarded by the Court.

This is one of the many cases presenting the countries' ill treatment of migrants when under detention. However, most of the countries that are exposed to large migration flows have in some way violated their rights during detention. In the Republic of Macedonia, including the Macedonian-Greek border, several migration camps have been enacted in order to easily control the number and actions of the incoming refugees. However, there have been multiple protests inside these camps, and although the general public is not closely acquainted with the conditions, they are clearly less than perfect. It is obvious that such violations directly infringe migrants' rights to liberty and security.²³¹⁴ In addition, knowing the malfunctioning and inefficiency of the Macedonian judicial system, it is highly possible that migrants have to wait prolonged periods of time to acquire a decision on the lawfulness of the detention decision, often to no avail.

5.3. Extreme poverty and respect for human dignity

As we have previously mentioned the conditions in detention, it is also useful to observe the treatment of migrants generally, and the state's liability for the lack of adequate living conditions. The landmark case *M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece*²³¹⁵ deals with this. According to the Court, the living conditions, combined with the vulnerability of the applicant and the inaction of the state, combined into a judgment of inhumane and degrading treatment.²³¹⁶ The applicant in question had been living on the street, with no access to sanitary facilities and lacking and without any means of providing for his essential needs. In addition, he was subjected to humiliating treatment showing lack of respect which caused him to feel constant fear and inferiority. The court decided that the state could have reduced this suffering by hastening the process of examining his asylum claim, but also through providing better living conditions.

While it is true that, as mentioned above, the migrants crossing Macedonia's territory are sometimes obliged to live in degrading conditions²³¹⁷, both at liberty and under detention, it is also worth to mention that there have not been any similar cases in our country, with especially inhumane living conditions. With the current economic and political situation in the country, in comparison to other, more developed Western countries, the situation is not as bad. The country attempts to, at least in theory, implement the obligation to protect the migrants against extreme material poverty by providing adequate standards of living, in accordance with international and EU standards.

5.4. Conclusion

Although there is no case law regarding the treatment of migrants in the Republic of Macedonia, it cannot be said that this country provides an excellent treatment of these vulnerable groups. Through the observance of two important decisions by the ECtHR, we have seen the basic requirements for protection of the human rights of migrants crossing or living in other countries. While it is true that the Republic of Macedonia lacks the provision of adequate living conditions, and is not very prompt in guaranteeing the migrants' rights in detention, it may be concluded that, comparatively, the country attempts to aid the migrants and, if it does not manage to make it easier, at least does not put a further burden on the lives of the thousands of migrants passing its territory. This, together with the election of a new, pro-European and reformative government in the state, enables us to hope for better protection of the rights of the migrants in the Republic of Macedonia.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

Most of the recommendations initiated in the ECRI report paved certain problematic provisions in the codes of the state, particularly those regarding minority groups with a common point to the LGBT community including the persistent problems of hate speech, the lack of plans to aid the Roma community issues and their representation in society as well as a number of legislative concerns in areas like the refugee crisis, the independence of certain organs among others. It is to be noted that as of May of 2017 Macedonia is undergoing a government change and is in a transitional period still which entails starting, continuing or cancelling a number of programs or acts. As of right now, the new government has strict guidelines that coincide with ECRI's recommendations with the so called Plan 3-6-9²³¹⁸ which is promising significant ways of developing new strategies and paths to strengthening a number of areas. This includes everything from issues with procedures of work, administrative, media and judicial reforms, partnering with the civil society, organized crime and corruption and migration. It's also crucial to add that these are still in an early stage of development and few legal acts are in effect.

The National Strategy for Equality and Non-discrimination 2016-2020²³¹⁹ was adopted in May of 2016. Whilst some hopeful changes have been highlighted, no crucial matters have been initiated in the document, including no real mention of concrete policies regarding the critiques from the report. Going from the 20 bullet points mentioned in the report, the provisions of the Criminal Code, those most ridiculed for not complying completely with the General Policy Recommendation (GPR) No. 7²³²⁰ have not been adjusted. Within the same grasp, a number of criticisms have been made towards the civil and administrative law provisions – all of which have a focal point that there's no mention of sexual orientation or gender identity as a means of discrimination. It is to be noted that no legal document in Macedonia explicitly states either of the two as a target for discrimination, including the Constitution.

The urgent point on the independence of authorities that would battle discrimination and the Ombudsman as an authority still cannot deal with alleged infringement of legal persons or initiate court cases when a specific victim is not referred to – the provisions stated in the Law on the Ombudsman (2003)²³²¹ have not been changed. The Commission for protection against discrimination that was formed with The prevention and protection against discrimination (2010)²³²² came under serious fire in January of 2016 for, what a number of NGOs and experts call, “an incompetent commission” after the choice of new members, as a large number of them have never worked in the field of protecting marginalized groups and have close ties to the now former ruling party – a note the report urged be fixed as a top priority. In their annual report for 2016²³²³, they concluded only 80 cases where they acted upon; however 31 of those have concluded no basis for discrimination. To remark, the new government promised immediate change to make the body a “more independent and expert body”²³²⁴ by changing its member status and expanding their jurisdiction.

Regarding the hefty hate speech critiques followed up with the load of recommendations, it is to be noted that a number of NGO initiatives have taken action with multiple conferences, events, trainings etc. in hopes to educate people on the effects of hate speech and hate crime – however no such changes in the legal department. No official government or regulatory bodies keep any statistical, factual documentation on the situation of what the report calls “the growing problem of racist and homo-/transphobic hate speech”²³²⁵, the Ombudsman as an independent body released a report²³²⁶ on the situations regarding human rights and freedoms, where he begrudgingly noted a number of issues, including the rise of police brutality, the ineffectiveness in dealing with responsibility from authority, the ever growing problem with the prison system and the conditions in it, social security for marginalized communities, group employments on an ethnic basis, hate crimes against ethnic minorities among others.

One of the main points of the report had concerns over the lack of assistance, integration, even rights that the Roma community has. Macedonia adopted the Strategy for the Roma in Republic of Macedonia 2014-2020 in 2014 which promised a number of improvements in the community including employment, education, health, social security, culture, integration etc. Regrettably, no significant improvements have been made as even more initiatives, projects and reports urge the solving of the same problems which only highlights the lack of success this strategy has had. No official documents have been received to shed facts or statistics with the made plans however the problem still resides.

ECRI's recommendations with respect to the inclusion of the new Integration Strategy have unfortunately not been taken into account. UNHCR's recent observation²³²⁷ regarding the treatment and policy for refugees critiqued the same points: lack of independent observers, mechanisms for proper screening, the full implementation of laws into practice, training for officials. Macedonia is one of the main transit countries for the "Balkan route" that refugees take, with a mind boggling 90%²³²⁸ of all asylum seekers leaving the country before the procedure is completed – and in 2016 it effectively shut down the route after closing its borders. On a lighter note, UNHCR also concluded that there has been a steady improvement in adopting international standards within legislature and overall capacity – however it still doesn't qualify Macedonia as a safe third country for refugees. With recent changes, the government's position stands that there will be no expansion or building of new refugee camps had another crisis come about.

It is worth noting that the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy has recently drafted the Refugees and Foreigners' Integration Strategy 2017–2027²³²⁹. The Strategy itself was outlined with the help of UNHCR and covers four significant areas: housing, education, employment as well as integration and procedural shortcomings and a faster integration process. The legal framework for providing same-sex couples a right to be recognised and protected under the law is – as mentioned above, absent. Macedonia's LGBT rights record lags far beyond those of most other European countries as in Macedonian family law only heterosexual non-marital cohabitation is allowed. In 2015, there was an overwhelming support to a vote that defined marriage as a union between one woman and one man.²³³⁰ In more recent news, for the first time ever in Macedonia, the minister of Culture acknowledged the existence of the LGBT community and promised to promote and protect it at the opening of Pride Week this year – a first in Macedonian history. The Ombudsman has also signed a memorandum to work and improve the status of the LGBT community in late 2016²³³¹, and as a viable institution promised to help and prevent any and every kind of discrimination the community faces.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

The migrants' right to access to healthcare is regulated with a few laws, mainly with The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection and the Law on Health Protection.

The Law on Health Protection, in article 2 defines that the health protection, in terms of the Law, shall include a system of social and individual measures, activities and procedures for: maintenance and promotion of health; prevention, early detection and eradication of diseases, injuries and other work; environment related health disorders; timely and efficient treatment, and healthcare and rehabilitation. The measures, activities and procedures referred must be based on scientific evidence, must be safe, secure, efficient and in accordance with the professional ethics.

Everyone shall be entitled to health protection and shall be obliged to care for and maintain and promote his/her health in accordance with this and another law. No one has the right to endanger the health of the others. In states of emergency, everyone shall be obliged to provide first aid according to his/her abilities, and in a life-threatening situation, to notify the closest healthcare institution and to enable access to emergency medical care, according to the Law on Health Protection, article 3.

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection is the basis of the legal framework for treatment of refugees and asylum seekers in the Republic of Macedonia. The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection governs the conditions under which the Republic of Macedonia can grant temporary protection as well as the rights and duties of persons under temporary protection. The law guarantees certain rights for recognized refugees. In essence, these rights are those enjoyed by every citizen of the state, with the exception of the right to vote, the right to establish a working relationship, to establish associations of citizens and political parties when the citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia is a legal obligation, according to Articles 50-57 of the Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection.²³³³

The Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection in chapter V regulates the rights and duties of asylum seekers, rights and duties of recognized refugees, rights and duties of persons under subsidiary protection and the right of temporary protection.

According to article 48, the asylum seekers until the taking of a final decision in the procedure for recognition of the right to asylum have the right to basic health services. The asylum seeker is obliged to: subject himself to medical examinations, treatment and omitted immunization upon request of the bodies competent for the activities in the field of the health care, in case of a threat for the public health.²³³⁴

According to article 54, until the acquisition of the capacity of an insured person pursuant to the Law on Health Protection, the recognized refugee has the right to basic health services, same as the nationals of the Republic of Macedonia.²³³⁵ Article 55 claims that the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy takes care of the accommodation, allocation of financial assistance and healthcare of the recognised refugees.

²³³⁴ Article 48, ibid

²³³⁵ Article 54, ibid

The rights and duties of persons under subsidiary protection are regulated in Article 60, which claims that the person under subsidiary protection is entitled to financial assistance under conditions and in the amount established in the Article 53 of the Law and to basic health services pursuant to Article 54 of the Law.²³³⁶

If not otherwise determined by the Law on Health Protection or any other law, the persons under subsidiary protection have the same rights and obligations as the aliens under temporary residence permit in the territory of the Republic of Macedonia.²³³⁷

In the event of a mass influx, the Government may grant temporary protection to persons coming directly from a state where their life, safety or freedom have been threatened by war, civil war, occupation, internal conflict linked with violence or mass violation of human rights. The temporary protection in the Republic of Macedonia cannot last longer than two years. The persons under temporary protection have the rights to healthcare, pension and invalid insurance, under the same conditions prescribed by appropriate regulations for aliens under temporary residence permit in the Republic of Macedonia, humanitarian assistance and basic health services for unemployed persons under temporary protection, according to article 64.

Unlike the recognized refugees and persons under subsidiary protection, the treatment facilities of refused asylum seekers are fully provided by the UNHCR office. By the fact that these persons do not have any status in the Republic of Macedonia, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy refrains from any protection against these persons. In accordance with the procedure for recognition of the right to asylum in the Republic of Macedonia, after the submission of the application for recognition of the right to asylum in a police station or at a border crossing, the asylum seeker is placed in the Reception Center for asylum seekers. The Reception Center, which is under the competence of the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, according to the Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection, obliges to provide accommodation, food and healthcare to the asylum seeker until the completion of the procedure for recognizing asylum in the Republic of Macedonia.²³³⁸

The European Charter of Patients' rights declares that every individual has the right to access to all kind of information regarding their state of health, the health services and how to use them, and all that scientific research and technological innovation makes available²³³⁹. The right to information is extensively covered in the Law on the Protection of Patients' Rights. According to Article 7 of this law, "the patient, during all stages of healthcare, shall have the right to be fully informed of: his health status, including a medical assessment of the prognosis and outcome of a particular medical intervention; recommended medical interventions, as well as dates planned for their realization (including a treatment and rehabilitation program); possible advantages and risks of the realization and non-realization of recommended medical interventions; his right to decide upon recommended medical interventions; possible alternatives to recommended medical

The European Charter of Patients’ rights declare that every individual has the right of access to the health services that his or her health needs require. According to Article 3 of the Law on the Protection of Patients’ Rights, healthcare access must include the following conditions: healthcare services constantly available and accessible to all patients on equal basis and without discrimination; continuity of healthcare, including cooperation among all healthcare workers and healthcare facilities along the continuum of care; just and fair procedure for choosing/selecting medical treatment, under conditions of limited resources and rationing, whereby prioritization is based on medical criteria and without discrimination; choice of and ability to change healthcare provider and healthcare facilities; availability of home visits and services in the community where the patient lives; and equal opportunity for protection of healthcare rights for all patients in the territory of the Republic of Macedonia.

Article 9 from the Constitution of Republic of Macedonia endorses a general principle of equality, but only for citizens of the Republic of Macedonia. The different treatment of persons which are not citizens of the Republic of Macedonia related to the rights and freedoms granted with the Constitution, with the legislation and international agreements to which the Republic of Macedonia is a party, and which directly arise out of the citizenship of Republic of Macedonia shall not be deemed discrimination according to article 14, Law on prevention and protection against discrimination.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

The first protocol to the European Convention of Human Rights (20.03.1952) signed by the members of the European Council in its second article says that „No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.“²³⁴⁰

When it comes to the right of education in the Republic of Macedonia the main legislatives in which we will find the answers to this question are the Constitution of the Republic (1991), the Law on Primary Education (2008), and the Law on High School Education (1995).

²³⁴⁰ Article 2, Protocol 1, European Convention of Human Rights

According to the article 44 of the Constitution everybody has the right to education, and the education is available to everyone under equal conditions.²³⁴¹ Article 8 of the Law on Primary Education states that „children with foreign citizenship or the ones that are stateless which are residing in the Republic of Macedonia, have the right to primary education under equal conditions as the children citizens of the Republic of Macedonia, and their education is organized in their native language, in accordance with the international agreements ratified in accordance with the Constitution.“²³⁴² Also article 5 of the Law on High School Education states that foreign citizens and stateless persons can gain high school education in ways and conditions determined by the law.²³⁴³

Unfortunately all those regulations and legislatives are strictly applicable only for the ones with Macedonian citizenship or foreigners lawfully residing in the country, which leads us to the question of the migrants, their legal regulation and status in the Republic of Macedonia, and more specifically, the right to education on the migrant children. Therefore we need to look into the regulations and the Macedonian laws who determine which migrants are under their law and what are their rights and obligations.

The main law and legislation that regulates these questions in Macedonia is the Law of Asylum and Temporary Protection (2009) in which it has been stated that the right to an Asylum is given under strict conditions to a person that falls into the next categories: ²³⁴⁴

- Recognized refugees (under the UNCHR Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951 and the protocol relating to the status of the refugees 1967)
- Persons under Humanitarian Protection (according to article 3 from the European Convention of Human Rights and article 3 from the UN Convention against Torture)

Article 4 of the Law of Asylum and Temporary Protection (2002) of Republic of Macedonia states that a „recognized refugee is a person who after his examination of the application for asylum fulfills the necessary conditions i.e. to be a person who due to a justified fear of being persecuted because of his race, religion, nationality, or belonging to a particular social group or because of its political belief, is outside the country of which he is a citizen and cannot, or because of such fear, does not want to be under the protection of that state, or, that person is without a citizenship is outside the country in which they had a usual place of residence stay, cannot, or because of such fear, does not want to return to her.“²³⁴⁵ According to article 62 „In the case of a mass influx of people who are coming directly from a state in which their lives, their state of security or freedom are endangered by a war, civil war, occupation, an internal conflict that is accompanied by violence or a massive violation of human rights, the government shall give them a Temporary Protection. The Government shall periodically review the existence of the circumstances referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article and decide on the extension of the temporary protection. Temporary protection in the Republic of Macedonia can last no longer than two years. ²³⁴⁶

So according to that article, the article 64 of the same law, it is determined that the persons under temporary protection besides their rights to stay and care in the Republic of Macedonia during the temporary period and right to work, they also have access to health care and pension and disability insurance, Humanitarian aid and basic health services for unemployed persons.²³⁴⁷

Under temporary protection, they also have the right to basic and secondary education, and in view of the higher degrees of education. the persons under temporary protection are equally matched with foreigners that have been granted a temporary residence in the Republic of Macedonia. The main state body which implements and exercises these rights is the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy. So in terms of the regulatory framework, the Republic of Macedonia through appropriate legal acts, and in accordance with the European Convention on Human Rights and its first protocol, enables and equates the rights in the primary and secondary education of migrant children, with the children of the citizens of the country.

The main problem with this question and the right of the migrant children to a proper education is that The Republic of Macedonia is only a transitional state for the migrants which most of them are coming from Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan. According to NGO - Helsinki committee of Republic of Macedonia, which is the biggest non governmental organization that deals with these sort of problems, under no legal regulation, the migrant children cannot exercise the right to education, because they don't have the status for a temporary stay. The Helsinki Committee has reported that several non-governmental organizations and associations are giving humanitarian support to the refugee groups, in the refugee camps where they are permanently staying, where they are organizing informal educational classes, more precisely, informal lessons for several educational subjects, which means that behind these modest educational experiences for refugees children the State does not appear as an entity (the Republic of Macedonia) or any of its institutions.

We can conclude that there is a high absence of practicing that right for the migrants, because of two main reasons, one of which is that they don't fulfill the temporary stay status, and the other one as told by the Helsinki Committee is the absence of interest of the migrant parents to give their child a proper education when it comes to the Republic of Macedonia because as said before, they are only transiting through the country with no desire for asylum or temporary settlement.

Also the question of objective complexity and expensive financing for this type of teaching is raised when it comes to an extremely small number of children or children under the age of attending classes. Moreover, there is no official institution which has experience with organizing lectures and educational programs for children refugees. Also, many refugees see Republic of Macedonia only as a transit country, not as their final destination. It is also a problem in the process of providing quality education to children refugees.

²³⁴⁷ Article 64, ibid

When it comes to the legal protection specifically on the subject of the migrant children and their parents or their legal guardians there is no concrete law defining this matter. In this field there is just one general law - The Law on Prevention and Protection against Discrimination (2010) which provides for the prevention and protection against discrimination in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, the laws and ratified international treaties. This law is applied by all state organs, organs of the unit of local self-governments, legal entities with public legal authorizations and legal and natural persons in the field of various matters, including education.

In Article 3 of the Law on Prevention and Protection against Discrimination (2010) it is stated that „any direct or indirect discrimination is prohibited, reference, or encouraging discrimination, and helping a discriminate treatment based on sex, race, skin color, gender, affiliation to a marginalized group, ethnicity, language, citizenship, socially origin, religion or religious belief, other types of beliefs, education, political affiliation, personal or social status, mental and physical disability, age, family or marital status, property, health status condition or any other basis which is provided for by law or by law ratified international agreement.“²³⁴⁸

If a person considers that some of his rights have been infringed because of a discrimination they are entitled to a submission for a lawsuit in front competent court or they could file a complaint in front of the Commission for Protection against Discrimination established by this Law.

Unfortunately, in Article 14, paragraph 1, it has been foreseen that the different treatment of persons who are not citizens of the Republic of Macedonia related to the rights and freedoms granted by the Constitution, the legislation and the international agreements to which the Republic of Macedonia is a party and which are directly derived from the citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia, shall not be deemed as a discrimination.

This gives a clear frame that The Republic of Macedonia puts its citizens on the first place and their constitutional rights, and the laws or provisions regarding the subject of migrants on this field or any other are very poorly present or do not exist at all. One of the problems is that, as said before, Republic of Macedonia is just a transit state for the migrants, which means that they do not stay permanently in the state, therefore the state has not adopted many laws that regulate this question, as there was no need for them. The other problem is the question of acceptance of the migrants in the surroundings of the local residents. In the Republic of Macedonia, there are still negative attitudes and opinions regarding the migrant issue and the enabling of their settlement in its territory and the acquiring of the same rights and freedoms that Macedonian citizens have. It is expected that this “picture” would be improved with the new strategies and decisions by the new government that should be implemented in the near future, so that the situation in this field could be improved drastically.

Refugees and asylum-seekers have the right to free and accessible primary and secondary education. On the other hand, they are required to pay tuition to enroll in any university in the Republic of Macedonia. That is to say, they have the same access to education as Macedonian citizens. Additionally, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy has decided to organize courses for kids and adults to learn the Macedonian language, a decision which should be implemented as of this year.

Firstly, it is important to stress that the Republic of Macedonia has ratified the Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region²³⁴⁹ and it has entered into force in 2003. This means that the adopted laws had to be changed in order for the work of the Ministry of Education and Science of the Republic of Macedonia to be in accordance with the aforementioned Convention. Regarding that issue, the Law on primary education states that foreign citizens have the right to seek validation or equivalence of the school diploma acquired abroad.²³⁵⁰ The Ministry grants all the rights the student would have had in his own country with the diploma, referring to the continuation of the student's education. Aspects taken into consideration are: the education system in which the diploma was acquired, the length of the education, the educational plan and programs, the right the student gets abroad by acquiring the diploma and other relevant facts. If all the aspects taken into consideration are not covered, this process will be finished by taking exams on required subjects. Along with the application, the student has to present the original diploma, a translation of it made by a certified translator and two copies of it, an education plan and programs the student has followed through, and last but not least, proof of previous education and proof of citizenship. The decision for granting validation or equivalence is made by the Minister, based on the proposition of an expert constituted commission.²³⁵¹ If the minister denies the claim, the student has the right of appeal to the State Commission for resolution of second-instance administrative and employment proceedings.

The Law on secondary education proposes the same regulations regarding diplomas in secondary education, as seen in the Law on primary education.²³⁵²

There is a whole section (n. 12) in the Law on higher education concerning the equivalence and recognition of higher education qualification. The main criteria for equivalence of a foreign university diploma is the status of the higher education institution that has granted that diploma to the student and it is made in accordance with the European Credit Transfer System²³⁵³, as it is said in Article 157 of the Law on higher education. In order to do so, the student has to submit evidence of passed state exam in an institution of higher education. Aside from that document, the student also has to submit a number of documents including his personal information, the chosen study program and other information about his education. This process is led and overseen by the Ministry of education of the Republic of Macedonia. If the claim, for equivalence is denied, the student has the right of appeal to the State Commission for resolution of second-instance administrative and employment proceedings.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

When it comes to the political side of the Republic of Macedonia and the participation of the migrants in its political decisions and their participation in it, the rules and legislatives are very poor by the number but they are strict and direct.

The participation of a person in the Republic of Macedonia in the political decisions and participations is determined by the Constitution of the Republic, more precisely in article 22, in which it's been stated that „every citizen who is 18 years of age acquires the right to vote. The right to vote is equal, general and direct, and is exercised in free elections by secret ballot. The right to vote has been deprived of the persons without legal capacity.“²³⁵⁴ Also article 23 states that every citizen has the right to participate in the performance of the public functions which corresponds with the fact that the legal framework for participation, organization and legitimization in a public official of the state implies with the status of a citizen of the state.²³⁵⁵ In addition to this, article 11 of the Law for political parties states that a member of a political party can only be a citizen of the Republic of Macedonia which is of legal age and with full legal capacity.²³⁵⁶

We can also find regulations in the main law which is applied for the migrants, Law of Asylum and Temporary Protection (2009) in which article 51 points out that they do not have the right to vote, to serve the national army or to establish business and working relationship and to establish Associations of citizens or political parties in cases when by law conditions are provided for the persons who have the citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia. Recognized refugees may acquire the right to own movable property, real estate, to establish a labor relation or to perform an activity, under conditions determined by law regulating this right for foreigners in Republic of Macedonia.²³⁵⁷

Macedonian law does not prohibit participation of migrants in political decisions in their country of origin. Therefore, they are able to participate in political processes in their countries of origin as long as it is allowed by those countries' national legislations.

By all of this, we can conclude that the law and its regulations in the Republic of Macedonia are clearly on this question and are on point that no other person than a citizen of the Republic has the right to participate in political decisions. The right to vote or any other right of legitimate political entities is forbidden for this category of persons, because of reasons that they have either a temporary residence in the country or transit to other destinations. So neither migrants nor persons with temporary stay can enjoy such privileges. Such an opinion has been confirmed also by the Helsinki Committee for Human Rights, that in the existing legal framework of the Republic of Macedonia, persons who are non-citizens have neither political legitimacy and political decisions nor participation in the process of making ones.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

The law on citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia governs the manner and conditions of acquisition and cessation of citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia. As stated in article 3, acquiring citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia is done in a number of ways, and that includes by origin, by birth on the territory on the Republic of Macedonia, international treaties or through naturalisation – the most common route to a migrant obtaining one.²³⁵⁸

For a migrant to be able to gain the right to citizenship, they first must fulfill a number of requirements as stated in article 7, including:

- to be at least 18 years old at the time of application;
- to have had legal registered residence in Macedonia for at least eight years;
- to have an accommodation and permanent source of substance means allowing for material and social security;
- to not have been sentenced to imprisonment of minimum duration of one year in the country of their citizenship for acts punishable according to the regulations of the Republic of Macedonia;
- to not have any criminal proceedings neither in the Republic of Macedonia nor in the country of their citizenship;

²³⁵⁸ Article 3, Law on citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia, Official Gazette of the Republic of Macedonia, no 67/92, 8/2004

- to be fluent in Macedonian to the extent that one can easily communicate in the environment, 7) to not have a measure of prohibition of residence in the Republic of Macedonia;
- to not endanger the national security or defense of the Republic of Macedonia with their admission to citizenship of the Republic of Macedonia;
- to sign an oath to be a loyal citizen of the Republic of Macedonia;
- to provide a release from the previous citizenship or proof that it will be provided after the acquisition of Macedonian citizenship.²³⁵⁹

The procedure of facilitated naturalization applies to three categories of people:

- Individuals with a recognized status of a refugee or stateless individual (article 8)
- Emigrants from the Republic of Macedonia up to the first generation (article 11)
- Foreigners whose spouse is a Macedonian citizen (article 12)²³⁶⁰

It is to be noted that a national of the Republic of Macedonia can hold citizenship of another state; however that citizen is considered exclusively a national of the Republic of Macedonia, unless stated otherwise by an international agreement.

It is to be noted that a national of the Republic of Macedonia can hold citizenship of another state; however that citizen is considered exclusively a national of the Republic of Macedonia, unless stated otherwise by an international agreement. This means that in cases like voting, serving in the military and other citizenship based rights or obligations, that person can only do so as a Macedonian citizen and is recognised solely as one. However, no national legislation covers the specifics of double nationality – it only regulates that a person can possess dual citizenship and any other legislation are bound to them as any other citizen of the country, therefore no additional requirements or regulations are needed.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. Instrument for Pre-accession Assistance

As a candidate country for accession to the European Union, Macedonia is a beneficiary of the Instrument for Pre-accession Assistance (IPA) Funds, which benefits both the EU and the candidate country, aiding its overall improvement and bringing it closer to its accession to the Union.

According to a press release of the European Commission²³⁶¹, a total of 24 million euros have been planned as support for migration-related activities in Macedonia. Under the first assistance phase, IPA I (2007-2013)²³⁶², a total of 12 million have been invested in the renovation of border police stations, the fight against human trafficking and in improving the capacity of the policy in border management. The plans for the second assistance phase, IPA II (2014-2020)²³⁶³, consist of another 12 million Euros intended for the implementation of the EU migration policy in Macedonia. This shall be done through enhancing the infrastructure, working on the current functioning of the visa policy and improving the conditions, both in relation to police stations and the IT equipment available for supporting the asylum and migration policy.

As outlined in the action on IPA II funds for Migration and asylum²³⁶⁴, the specific objective of the funding is to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the national authorities for border control and management of migration flows. The following have been listed as deliverables of the programme: improving the fight against illegal migration and trafficking of human beings; lowering (or diminishing) the number of migrants/asylum seekers who are not treated in line with the international and EU standards; raising the number of cases resolved via the efficient exchange of information and joint investigation.

The more precise activities undertaken include the strengthening of the national capacities in the area of asylum and migration, establishing of a new Reception Centre for illegal migrants, aligning the national systems with the EU and Schengen requirements for border management etc. The mentioned objectives were planned to be achieved through several types of financing, such as direct grants with the International Migration Organization (IOM), twinning contracts, as well as service and supply contracts.

However, EU's support and funding with regard to the integration of migrants covers more areas than the initial plans. The entire region of the so-called Western Balkans and Turkey has been supported by a further, multi-country IPA II programme, with a total budget of 8 million euros. This was intended as initial funding in 2015, to help the region cope with the increase in migration movement as a result of the European migration crisis.

In addition, Republic of Macedonia was one of the beneficiaries of the EU's overall efforts in dealing with the consequences of the Syrian crisis. As a result, together with Serbia it received 17 million euros which should aid in decreasing the negative impact of the crisis in the region.

Finally, Republic of Macedonia is part of the humanitarian aid granted to support refugees and asylum seekers in the region.²³⁶⁵ In 2015, a total of 1.5 million euros was allocated to support the humanitarian partners and provide drinking water, health care and hygiene utilities, shelter and protection to the migrants in the country. Even further funds were granted via the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. The final result of this latest funding was the aid given to more than 4600 people, in the form of food, hygiene parcels, first aid kits, drinkable water, blankets etc.

Furthermore, the EU has launched a Civil Protection Mechanism which several countries of the region, including Serbia, have already activated. Should the need arise, Republic of Macedonia can also decide to join this mechanism in order to minimise the consequences of the Syrian migration crisis.

12.2. Other means of funding

However, the European Union funds do not stop with the exhaustion of the IPA programme. Additional funds have been granted to improve the border and migration management systems in the country. A notable example is the assistance of 10 million euros allocated in 2016 to cover the costs for the border police and guest officers from Serbia and the EU Member States, guarding the southern borders of the country.²³⁶⁶

In addition to the European Union, Republic of Macedonia has been assisted by plenty of programmes and funding from several international organisations and bodies, some of them closely related to the EU. A notable example is the International Organization for Migration (IOM)'s contribution²³⁶⁷ to intensifying the response to the migration flows in the region. This aid includes life-saving assistance, protection and counselling for the migrants and asylum seekers, including support for their eventual return home where required, as well as support for the development of the government systems dealing with migration.

12.3. Conclusion

The European Union and its Member States have provided a great amount of programmes and funding with the aim of improving the integration of migrants in the Republic of Macedonia. Through the Instrument for Pre-accession Assistance, Rep. of Macedonia has received tens of millions of Euros aimed at enhancing the conditions for the migrants, but also at covering the expenses incurred by the local and national authorities in dealing with the migration crisis. The other means of funding have also assisted the country in minimising the consequences of the high flow of refugees, but also in improving their life and guarding their health.

Via the funding received from external factors, Republic of Macedonia has seen the digitalisation of its reception centres, which are now fully computerised, albeit previously providing only manual registration. Arriving migrants are nowadays registered very systematically, using a full ten-digit fingerprinting to confirm their identity. They are issued documents bearing their photograph. All of this helps the authorities in both Macedonia and the other countries in the so-called Western Balkan Route of the migration crisis in the dealing and identification of refugees, and simplifies the passage of the migrants themselves.

The above answer to the question provides sufficient information to conclude that the European Union has provided adequate funding to aid the repercussions of the migration crisis in the region, and consequently in the Republic of Macedonia. However, knowing the country's financial capacity on the one hand, and its direct exposure to thousands of arriving migrants on the other, leaves us with the opinion that further assistance shall be necessary in order to provide a more efficient handling of the migration crisis. Furthermore, an analysis should be conducted into the methods of spending the granted funds, and their exact efficacy.

Overall, it may be concluded that, as one of the key players in the migration crisis in the region, Macedonia is of great importance for the future development of the refugee movement in Europe, and as such should continue to receive both funding and other means of assistance, in order to successfully conclude the migration crisis and mitigate its consequences.

Conclusions

Migration has affected the whole world, as the numbers show that it has dramatically increased in the past years and it is predicted that the numbers will continue to increase. According to the statistics from the State Statistical office, the number of foreigners migrating in the Republic of Macedonia is increasing each year in the past decade.

Republic of Macedonia has signed and ratified numerous conventions concerning migrants' rights guaranteed under its jurisdiction. However, there are also national laws governing migrants' rights which provide the non-citizens with needed conditions for normal life on the states' territory. Nevertheless, there are certain questions which are yet to be regulated with the national laws, but undoubtedly, the main problems that migrants have to face with, are regulated with the existing legislation. Moreover, Republic of Macedonia is a member of the Council of Europe, so the principles given by the European Court of Human Rights in its decisions have a significant influence over the national legislation, shaping it into a harmonized European legislation on questions concerning migration law.

The foreigners are able to obtain asylum, under clearly stated conditions, meaning that the needed protection would be granted for them as long as they are unsafe in their homeland. Once a person is granted asylum, they are also granted social and economical rights.

In order to get the needed help, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy and its agencies are prepared and educated in dealing with foreigners, especially with refugees, as they have numerous problems concerning health, shelter etc.

Migrants that decide to settle in Republic of Macedonia are granted a numerous rights, such as a right to education. However, there are rights which are conditioned with obtaining a certain permit, such as the right to work. A small number of rights are not available for foreigners; however this applies only for political rights. Nonetheless, their participation in political decisions in their country of origin is not prohibited by national law.

According to the information given in this report, we can conclude that even though there are numerous laws which regulate the migrants' rights, certain improvement in the national legislation and in the actual conditions of treating the migrants, especially refugees is needed. However, the role of migration law has become significant in the recent years, therefore, this field of law is yet to be shaped and improved.

Introduction

Following the 2015 migrant crisis, Eurostat shows that the number of irregular migrants has drastically been reduced in the recent years, albeit Malta retains the third largest number of emigrants per capita in the EU. This report seeks to divide the problem of migration into smaller, more graspable concepts and portray how they have been and continue to be tackled by the Maltese Government. This implies that a number of topics will be covered, which include how national and international legislation is safeguarding immigrants' rights and facilitating their journey as well as their stay. With this in mind, the report aims to show that there is no particular ministry in Malta which deals solely with migration. Rather, this is currently falls under the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security, which further divides its tasks into 6 primary departments. Furthermore, case-law has brought out certain flaws in the asylum procedure, even finding Malta in breach of certain Articles of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). These flaws, along with other recommendations have been implemented into Maltese legislation following the aforesaid breach. That being said, this report seeks to shed light on the various programmes and funding granted by the EU, assist with various factors other than asylum and integration, showing rapid progress in the field. The aim of the report is not only to bring about funding given by the EU but rather to show how Malta is tackling multiple issues such as migrant's access to healthcare, migrant children's education (at times being eligible for a supplementary grant), migrants' voting rights and citizenship rights and more. Through such contributions to the problem, Malta has not only been eligible for funding but has been allocated further funding for other projects throughout the island.

1.1. The Legal Framework

The Immigration Act (Chapter 217 of the Laws of Malta), including its subsidiary legislation and amendments pertained therein, transposing EU directives, is the main legal instrument governing immigration in Malta. It pertains to provisions regarding border control, illegal entry, readmission of illegally present third-country nationals and the issuance of residence permits as well as provisions about asylum seekers concerning namely reception conditions.

Asylum is regulated through the Refugees Act (Chapter 420 of the Laws of Malta), as well as its subsidiary legislation and the transposed provisions of the Qualification and Procedures Directives, which provides for the local asylum determination procedure.

Immigration and asylum policy are interlinked with other sectors such as social security, health and employment. In fact, various diverse national bodies and institutions deal with the issue namely:

- The Ministry of Education and Employment – the Employment and Training Corporation, under the portfolio of the Ministry, deals with the processing and issue of employment licenses;
- The Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security – coordinates operations relating to Irregular Migration and Asylum;
- The Ministry for Social Dialogue, Consumer Affairs and Civil Liberties – has controlling executive power in the integration of migrants;
- The Police Special Branch (Immigration Section) – deals with the apprehension, investigation and identification of migrants, removal of illegally staying foreigners, border control and they bear the responsibility of border checks;
- The Detention Services – deal with accommodating immigrants arriving illegally while their claims to stay are considered or their removal is forfeited;
- The Department for Citizenship and Expatriate Affairs – deals with the acquisition of citizenship and residence permits;
- The Central Visa Unit – deals with entry clearance and processing of visas;
- The Immigration Appeals Board – decides appellate cases regarding detention and removal and sees to appeals in relation to requests for visas;
- The Armed Forces of Malta – deal with air and maritime border surveillance as well as search and rescue operations;
- The Office of the Refugee Commissioner – determines asylum applications at first instance;
- The Refugee Appeals Board – decides appeals against Recommendations of the Refugee Commissioner;
- The Agency for the Welfare of Asylum Seekers – provides accommodation and other services for beneficiaries of protection and asylum seekers.

From the above, it is clear that the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security is the major player with respect to irregular immigration and asylum, being also responsible for border control issues, and having the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, the Refugee Appeals Board and the asylum determination bodies, under its portfolio. Irregular Immigration and border control are managed by the Police Immigration Department within the Police Special Branch. Other entities of relevance under this Ministry include the Central Visa Unit and the Citizenship and Expatriate Affairs Department which issues Residence Permits.

1.2. What Does National Legislation State?

1.2.1. The Reception of Asylum Seekers

Regarding asylum procedure and reception conditions, the transposition of the Reception Conditions Directive²³⁶⁸ and the recast Asylum Procedures Directive has reformed key aspects of the reception of asylum seekers in Malta. A notable example would be that detention is now no longer mandatory or consequential to a removal order.²³⁶⁹ The amended Reception Regulations has transposed the six grounds for detention of asylum seekers, provided in the recast Reception Conditions Directive. According to these Regulations, when a detention order of an asylum seeker is not made then alternatives to detention, such as reporting or financial guarantees, may be applied to non-vulnerable applicants for a maximum period of 9 months provided that the risk of absconding is still present.

1.2.2. Access to Asylum Seekers

In accordance with Regulation 16(a) Procedural Regulations, the UNHCR shall have access to asylum applicants, including those in detention, in airports or in port transit zones. There is no equal provision regarding NGOs but legal advisers for applicants can access closed areas such as detention facilities and transit zones and in such a way NGOs can indirectly access asylum applicants. Furthermore Regulation 3(3) (c) Declaration Regulations provides that a person seeking asylum in Malta shall be informed of his right to contact the UNHCR.

1.2.3. Reuniting Family Members

Whilst in the past the residence document given to reuniting family members caused difficulty due to the unequal entitlements given by public service providers because of it, this has been fixed through Legal Notice 150 the Family Reunification Regulations which is based on EU Directive 2003/86 and has also extended the period in which this document can apply, from one to three years.

1.2.4. Illegal Entry

As a consequence of the considerable pressure Malta has faced regarding boat immigrants, in 2002 Malta decriminalized illegal entry. However, such immigrants are subject to administrative detention.²³⁷⁰ The Organisation for the Welfare and Integration of Asylum Seekers was established to deal with the ever growing needs of asylum seekers, whilst the Agency for the ²³⁶⁸ In the dissertation Administrative detention of vulnerable asylum-seekers in the European Union Miriam Rapa discusses existing loopholes in this directive which 'dealt very little with detention and vulnerable asylum seekers'.

²³⁶⁹ Asylum seekers arriving irregularly in Malta are now taken to an Initial Reception Centre (IRC).

²³⁷⁰ In the dissertation 'Less than human: the detention of irregular immigrants in Malta' Daniela Debono discusses how Malta is unusual among states in that it imposes mandatory detention on such migrants and how this can be problematic from a human rights perspective. In the cases of Louled Massoud, Suso Musa and Aden Ahmed the ECtHR found that the right to a speedy remedy under Article 5(4) of the ECHR had been violated since there was no effective and speedy remedy under domestic law for challenging the lawfulness of their detention.

Welfare of Asylum Seekers was established under the Immigration Act, in 2007 and 2009 respectively. Malta joined the Schengen area in December 2007.

1.2.5. Admittance of Third-country Nationals. Admittance of third-country nationals is only allowed if upon entry:

- a valid travel document (passport) and a valid visa are shown;
- documents showing the purpose and conditions of visitation are shown;
- they have sufficient means to support themselves throughout their stay;
- they have not been prohibited by alert on the Schengen Information System;
- they are not a threat to public policy, international security, public health or the international relations of any Member State.²³⁷¹

If any one of the aforementioned conditions are not met, the third-country national may be denied entry by the authorities on the border. The 'principal immigration officer' has the power to grant leave and entry and remain in Malta to any person arriving for a period of up to three months.²³⁷² Third-country nationals who enter and apply for asylum are not removed, but rather, are allowed to remain pending a final decision on their asylum application. Residence permits are issued to third-country nationals who have been authorised to reside for a specific purpose. Residence permits are issued for a validity of maximum one year unless the individual is an exempt person or a long-term resident.

Third-country nationals can acquire Maltese citizenship by registration or naturalization. Persons who have resided continuously for a period of five years may apply for a certificate of naturalization. Third-country nationals wishing to seek employment are required to submit an application form requesting the issuing of an employment license to the relevant authorities before he/she is due to undertake employment in Malta. Third-country nationals will only be granted an employment license in circumstances where no suitable EU citizen is available to fill the vacancy. Refugees and persons are automatically issued a permit and enjoy subsidiary status which allows them to have a full right to work.

Returns are carried out by the Principal Immigration Officer in cooperation with the police. Police escort and charter flight are often required to accompany the deportee.

1.2.6. Asylum and Migration Systems

The Ministry responsible for Home Affairs and the other organisations concerned underwent a steep learning curve since the year 2002 in the areas of irregular immigration and asylum due to the high demand placed on its relatively small organisations and the significant influx of immigrants, many of whom apply for asylum. In the asylum sphere, the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security has invested significantly to maintain the Office of the Refugee

In such case, their application for protection starts to be examined while they are in detention.

Commissioner with sufficient staff that assures quality and efficiency in treating asylum claims. Equally, this has also been the case with the Refugee Appeals Board.

The overall priorities in the area of asylum and irregular immigration lean towards an efficient and fair asylum process, infrastructural work, upgrading of the structures dealing with the reception, joint actions at the border, resettlement and return possibilities.²³⁷³

1.2.7. The right to information

In accordance with Regulation 4(1) of the Procedural Regulations, asylum seekers are to be informed in a language that they understand, or may reasonably be presumed to understand, of the below mentioned procedure as well as their rights and obligations throughout the procedure.²³⁷⁴ Whilst there is no specific way envisaged by the provision for the information to be given, in practice this is usually given by the Immigration Police and personnel working for the Refugee Commissioner.²³⁷⁵

1.3. Procedure

Applications for international protection are to be lodged with the Refugee Commissioner, as the Office of the Refugee Commissioner (RefCom)²³⁷⁶ is the authority responsible for examining and determining applications for international protection at first instance, in accordance with Article 4 Refugees Act. The Refugee Commissioner is the only entity authorised by law to receive applications for international protection.²³⁷⁷

The procedure implemented can either be the regular procedure or the accelerated procedure²³⁷⁸, both implemented by the RefCom, the latter in the case of inadmissible or manifestly unfounded applications. The application may also be prioritised in terms of Regulation 6(8) Procedural Regulations, by the Refugee Commissioner, only in the case that the application is likely to be well-founded, the applicant is vulnerable, or in need of special procedural guarantees, in particular unaccompanied minors.²³⁷⁹

²³⁷⁴ In Kathleen Vella's dissertation Asylum-Seekers In Detention: The Implications Of The Right To A Speedy Remedy To Challenge The Lawfulness Of Detention In Light Of Recent ECtHR Judgements Against Malta, the author claimed the right to information is somewhat limited in Malta since individuals are only given a two-liner stating that they have the right to appeal from the Removal Order and the period through which they can apply.

²³⁷⁵ 'Provision Of Information On The Procedure - Malta' (asylumineurope.org, 2017) <<http://www.asylumineurope.org/reports/country/malta/asylum-procedure/information-asylum-seekers-and-access-ngos-and-unhcr-0>> accessed 24 July 2017.

²³⁷⁶ The RefCom falls under the Ministry responsible also Police, Immigration, Asylum, Local Government Correctional Services and National Security.

²³⁷⁷ 'List of Authorities Intervening in Each Stage of the Procedure (Including Dublin) - Malta | Asylum Information Database' (Asylumineurope.org, 2017) <<http://www.asylumineurope.org/reports/country/malta/asylum-procedure/general/list-authorities-intervening-each-stage-procedure>> accessed 24 July 2017.

²³⁷⁸ All applicants for asylum are interviewed by the Refugee Commissioner although their case might be classified as being inadmissible following an evaluation of their asylum claim. In such cases, the accelerated procedure kicks in at appeal stage.

²³⁷⁹ It is important to note that due to the very few arrivals and asylum applications lately, no cases have been recently prioritised by the RefCom.

The regular procedure²³⁸⁰, which consists of the examination and determination of eligibility for subsidiary protection by the Refugee Commissioner, starts through an application to the RefCom, and a preliminary interview by the RefCom in which the Dublin procedure is implemented by the Dublin Unit, Immigration Police. The former consists of filling in a form called the Preliminary Questionnaire (PQ) which is the formal registration of the asylum seeker's desire to acquire international protection.²³⁸¹

The latter consists of filling in an Application Form similar to the PQ, as well as a recorded interview after which the applicant is informed that he or she will be notified of the decision in due course. The interview, which is conducted by the RefCom or one of his representatives, and in which it is required under national law that there is an interpreter, can be omitted in restrictive circumstances, namely those pertained in the Asylum Procedures Directive.²³⁸²

What can be granted is Refugee status, subsidiary protection, or humanitarian protection. In the case that the application is refused, the asylum seeker has the right to an appeal to the Refugee Appeals Board²³⁸³, in which case he is granted free legal aid²³⁸⁴ to do so, and in which case the decision of the RefCom would be suspended, meaning that an asylum seeker may not be removed from Malta prior to a final decision being taken on his or her appeal (Regulation 12 Procedural Regulations). There is a 2-week time period, upon notification of the Refugee Commissioner's decision, by which the applicant may appeal to the Refugee Appeals Board. The Refugees Act specifies that the Minister may also lodge an appeal against the recommendation at first instance.²³⁸⁵

Whilst the Refugees Act specifies that there is no appeal from the decision of the Refugee Appeals Board, there is a right to legal redress, which does not have a suspensive effect on RefCom's decision, through judicial review at the Civil Court or through filing an application on the basis of breach of fundamental human rights at the Constitutional Court. The latter, in which case there is an alleged breach of fundamental human rights protected under the European ²³⁸⁰ According to the Regulation 6(4) Procedural Regulations, the Refugee Commissioner shall ensure that the examination procedure is concluded within 6 months after the application is filed, a time-period which may be extended in the case of complex issues, for example when there is a large number of simultaneous applications.

²³⁸¹ If, at this stage, an individual provides information that, prima facie, renders him or her eligible for a transfer to another EU Member State in terms of the Dublin III Regulation, the examination of the application for protection is suspended pending the outcome of the Dublin procedure. It is pertinent to note that although the Refugee Commissioner is designated as the head of the Dublin Unit, the immigration police are charged with implementing the Dublin procedure in practice.

²³⁸² This is namely: (a) when the Commissioner is able to make a positive recommendation on the basis of evidence available; or (b) when the applicant is unfit or unable to be interviewed owing to enduring circumstances beyond his control.

²³⁸³ This Board consists of 3 separate chambers each pertaining 4 persons including a chairperson, and it is an administrative review involving the assessment of facts and points of law. The appeal has suspensive effect, even though there is no time limit established by law until when the Board is to take a decision.

²³⁸⁴ One should point out that the Maltese system has been criticised in this regard. In Aden Ahmed vs Malta, the ECtHR was 'struck by the apparent lack of a properly structured system enabling immigration detainees to have concrete access to effective legal aid.'

Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and/or the Maltese Constitution, is the only way the decision can be reviewed in terms of its merits.²³⁸⁶

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. EU Member States

Since the area of immigration is a shared area of competence between the EU and Member States, whilst certain common immigration rules²³⁸⁷ are regulated by the Union institutions, such as EU-wide immigration and visa rules set out in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU)²³⁸⁸, others such as for example residence permit applications are determined by each EU country. A Member can decide on the total number of migrants to be admitted in the Member State for work, conditions behind long-term visas, all final decisions on migrant applications as well as rules to acquire residence and work permits in the case that no EU rules have been adopted on the matter.²³⁸⁹ It is important to note that freedom of movement and residence for persons in the EU is the “cornerstone of Union citizenship” and has in effect brought about the phasing out of internal borders through Schengen agreements, as well as the enactment of Directive 2004/38/EC on the right of EU citizens and their family members to move and reside freely within the EU.²³⁹⁰ This principle has shaped and affected both EU acquis as well as national law.

In Malta, the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security deals with immigration. Under its portfolio the Department of Citizenship and Expatriates grants residence permits and long-term residence permits to non-EU citizens, and is responsible citizenship and immigration state policy. The Central Visa Unit deals with the provisions of the Schengen acquis and is tasked with implementing the proper functioning of the visa issuing procedures. The Central Visa Unit cooperates with the Malta Consular offices and Immigration Police in order to authorize visa

²³⁸⁷ Common measures to date include:

1. EU-wide rules that allow citizens of countries outside the EU to work or study in an EU country. They cover specifically individuals who are: highly-qualified workers, researchers, students, trainees, school pupils or volunteers, intra-corporate transferees and seasonal workers.

2. EU-wide rules that allow citizens of countries outside the EU who are staying legally in an EU country to bring their non-EU family members to live with them and to become long-term residents.

²³⁸⁸ It is important to note that EU-wide immigration rules generally apply in 25 out of the EU Member States with the exceptions of Denmark, which does not apply EU rules relating to immigration, visa and asylum policies, Ireland and the UK which choose whether or not to adopt EU rules on the matter.

issuance to non-EU nationals that require such entry clearance. The Ministry for Foreign Affairs and the Ministry for Education and Employment are also involved in the issue, whilst the Employment and Training Corporation is the authority granting employment licenses to non-EU citizens (with the exception of those with long-term residence status).²³⁹¹

The key legislation governing immigration regarding EU nationals in Malta is:

- The Immigration Act (Chapter 217 of the Laws of Malta;
- Immigration Regulations (Legal Notice 205 of 2004;
- Free Movement of European Union Nationals and their Family Members Order;
- Legal Notice 191 of 2007, as amended by Legal Notices 427 of 2007, 329 of 2011, and 107 of 2012;
- Status of Long-Term Residents (Third Country Nationals) Regulations - Legal Notice. 278 of 2006 as amended by Legal Notice 370 of 2010;
- Family Reunification Regulations - Legal Notice 150 of 2007;
- Conditions of Admission of Third-Country Nationals for the purposes of Studies Regulations - Legal Notice 29 of 2008;
- Third Country Nationals for Scientific Research Purposes (Specific Admittance Procedure) Regulations - Legal Notice 102 of 2008;

According to the Free Movement of European Union Nationals and their Family Members Order (LN 191 of 2007), subject to certain exceptions, “a Union citizen may enter, remain, reside in Malta, seek and take up employment or self-employment therein, and shall enjoy equal treatment with Maltese nationals within the scope of the Treaty”. Subject to certain exceptions, this shall also be applicable to other family members accompanying the Union citizen, the partner of the Union citizen, including those not Union nationals. Exceptions include limitations on grounds of public policy, public security and public health, as well as the termination, refusal or withdrawal of such right in case of abuse of rights or fraud. A Union citizen as well as family members accompanying him may enter and leave Malta with a mere valid identification document.

Article 3 (6) of the Order states that persons not staying in places of accommodation which are covered by article 31 of the Immigration Act applicable to places of accommodation for reward (hotels etc.), need to report their presence to the Principal Immigration Officer within one month of arrival.²³⁹² According to Article 6 of the Order “a Union citizen who has resided legally for a continuous period of five years in Malta” ... “may reside permanently in Malta.” Proof of continuous residence is required.

²³⁹² The Free Movement of European Union Nationals and their Family Members Order (LN 191 of 2007) establishes that an administrative penalty of between twenty-three euro and twenty-nine cents (€23.29) and two hundred and thirty-two euro and ninety-four cents (€232.94) may be imposed in the case that family members do not report their presence at the Police Headquarters.

2.2. Non-EU States

2.2.1. Legal Framework

Whilst historically emigration has been a trend in Malta, since 1990 this has ceased to be the case²³⁹³ and in effect Malta has tried to attract affluent third-country nationals to settle in Malta through permanent residence schemes with advantageous tax rates.²³⁹⁴ The inflow of third-country nationals is regulated by the Immigration Act (Chapter 217 of the Laws of Malta), as well as Immigration Regulations (Legal Notice No. 205 of 2004), which regulate residence permits, and specific EU Directives such as Legal Notice No. 278 of 2005 (Regulation on Long-Term Residents) which transposes the provisions of Council Directive 2003/109/EC.

2.2.2. Visas

As per Article 17 of the Immigration Regulations, “no person who, in terms of the Common Consular Instructions requires a visa to cross a border crossing point, may enter Malta without a visa”. However this is subject to exceptions including holders of diplomatic passports, flight crew and attendants on emergency or rescue flights, amongst others.

As per Article 11 of the Immigration Regulations those who are not exempt must satisfy the following conditions namely:

- Possess a valid passport;
- Possess documents showing the purpose and conditions of their visit;
- Must not be reported as a person to be refused entry;
- Must not be considered a threat to public policy or national security;

If a third-country national does not fulfil these conditions, the Principal Immigration Officer has the discretion to allow such a person to enter on humanitarian grounds or in honor of an international obligation of the Government of Malta (Immigration Regulations, Art. 12). The application for a visa, which may be submitted directly by the applicant or through an Embassy, High Commission or Consulate in Malta dealing with the migrant’s country of origin or residence, is processed by the Immigration Police. In accordance with Article 6(b) of the Immigration Act, the Principal Immigration Officer has the power to grant leave for one to enter and remain in Malta, or grant visas for a period up to three months, as well as enforce further conditions.

There are different types of visas which can qualify as a “valid visa” under Article 11(b) of the Immigration Regulations:

- A single-entry visa, normally issued for one month for tourist visits, particular events and so on;
- A multiple-entry visa, normally granted for a period of three, six or twelve months, is issued for frequent visitors, or those trying to establish a business;

²³⁹⁴ 'Immigration - Legal Malta' (Legal-malta.com, 2017) <<http://www.legal-malta.com/interest/immigration>> accessed 24 July 2017.

- A transit visa in which case the national would be staying in Malta for a maximum time period of 24 hours requiring the proof of tickets to other destinations;
- A student visa in which proof is required that the applicant would be undertaking a full-time education programme in Malta, and which is issued for the length of the academic year.

2.2.3. Residence Permits

In accordance with the Immigration Regulations (2004), residence permits²³⁹⁵ are issued to third-country nationals authorized to stay in Malta for more than three months for employment, self-employment, retirement, study and long-term residence, amongst others. A permanent residence permit which authorises indefinite residence, but precludes the third-country resident from employment or running a business in Malta, can also be obtained if the third-country resident satisfies certain criteria.²³⁹⁶

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

There is no particular ministry in Malta which deals solely with migration, rather, the issue of migration, and by extension, the responsibility of dealing with migrants in Malta, mainly falls under the responsibility of the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security, currently headed by Hon. Dr. Michael Farrugia, although it is aided by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs and Trade Promotion, currently headed by Hon Carmelo Abela. The Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security is tasked with, inter alia, responsibility over the reception and possible returning of asylum seekers and refugees, while the Ministry for Foreign Affairs and Trade Promotion is responsible for the external aspects of irregular immigration and the provision of information for legal migration to Malta.²³⁹⁷

Irregular Migration has been the reason for considerable challenges since 2002, when over 1600 people came to Malta seeking refuge.²³⁹⁸ Hon. Dr. Farrugia's Ministry allocates its tasks to six primary departments; the Armed Forces of Malta (AFM), the Malta Police Force Immigration Section, the Detention Service, the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, the Refugee Appeals Board and the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum Seekers (AWAS). Border control and surveillance are the responsibility of the AFM and of the Malta Police Force Immigration Section.²³⁹⁹ The AFM is also responsible for maritime Search and Rescue (SAR) operations and responsible for the coordination of all SAR operations with third countries within Malta's SAR region.²⁴⁰⁰ The Malta Police Force Immigration Section is also tasked with the running of the Eurodac System²⁴⁰¹ and of the SIRENE Bureau, which is a unit composed of personnel who communicate with Schengen Member States via the Schengen Information System for the sharing and responding of alerts related, inter alia, to aliens, stolen vehicles and firearms.²⁴⁰²

The Detention Service is responsible for the "fair, just and humane treatment of migrants and asylum-seekers"²⁴⁰³. After the initial procedures, in which the AFM hand over all irregular migrants either apprehended or rescued to be medically examined by health professionals and interviewed by the police, asylum seekers who fall under the criteria of Article 8 of the European Commission's Reception Conditions Directive, and those held with a view of deportation, are sent to a detention facility. This Service was set up to cater for the needs of migrants residing at closed accommodation centers while their identity is established and their request for asylum processed, with new legislation capping the detention period to a maximum of three weeks in contrast to the previous capping of 18 months.²⁴⁰⁴ Upon release from such closed accommodation centers, approved asylum seekers will be sent to open accommodation centers.²⁴⁰⁵ There exist alternatives to detention in which, following the initial procedures, vulnerable persons and other asylum seekers who are not subjected to detention are immediately sent to open accommodation centers.²⁴⁰⁶

The applications for international protection in Malta are reviewed by the Office of the Refugee Commissioner. The Office reviews applications which, according to the Dublin Regulation, are the responsibility of the Maltese State and refers applications which do not fall under it, in accordance with the aforementioned Regulation to the Dublin Unit.²⁴⁰⁷ It is the Office's duty to first examine whether the applicant fulfils the criteria stipulated by law to be either granted a Refugee Status or a Subsidiary Protection Status, the latter being a person who does not qualify as a refugee according to the criteria set out by law. Those to whom international protection is given are entitled to; (1) remain in Malta with a 3 year residence permit and allowed freedom of movement, (2) leave and return to Malta without a visa, entitled by a Convention Travel Document, (3) have access to, inter alia, education, employment, accommodation and social welfare and (4) be granted access to already existing evidence of foreign formal training and

The responsibility of applying the relevant national legislation concerning the welfare of asylum seekers and refugees falls under AWAS. This agency was established in 2009 as a Government Agency under the Immigration Act, Chapter 217 of the Laws of Malta. The primary legislation which governs AWAS' operations is the aforementioned Immigration Act and the Refugees Act; Chapter 420 of the Laws of Malta, although it is also tasked with enforcing any other government policy.²⁴¹¹ AWAS' roles include the management of refugee facilities, aid to refugees in the areas of housing, employment, health and the promotion of any government scheme related to voluntary refugee resettlement.²⁴¹² It is also AWAS' responsibility to provide adequate education and training referrals to refugees, such as when it comes to basic language training. Support by this agency also extends to the duty to refer any refugee to counselling or other psychological services if this is asked or deemed to be needed.²⁴¹³ The Migration Policy followed by AWAS and other Departments is set out in the 'Strategy for the Reception of Asylum Seekers and Irregular Migrants'; a document which outlines the applicable legislation, both autochthonous and also that which descended into Maltese law from the European Union and the European Convention on Human Rights, the detention process and medical services available to migrants during their initial reception and their stay at both closed or open centers of accommodation.²⁴¹⁴

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs and Trade Promotion is responsible for the creation and commitment towards international treaties regarding migration. It is also responsible for the provision of necessary information to legal migrants who wish to apply for a residency in Malta.²⁴¹⁵ There also exists the Malta Migrants Association, a network made up of various migrant communities in Malta which aims to educate about life in Malta and to promote integration into Maltese society while highlighting the cultural diversity of migrant groups in Malta.²⁴¹⁶ This association exists under the Ministry for Social Dialogue, Consumer Affairs, and Civil Liberties.

In conclusion, despite the lack of a ministry dedicated specifically to tackling migration, the responsibility for such mainly falls under the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security via its Departments. Due to the fact that migration has increased in most years since the initial spike in 2002,²⁴¹⁷ Malta's EU Presidency in 2017 prioritised the strengthening and streamlining of the Common European Asylum System, creating a more holistic approach towards the aims agreed upon during the Valletta Summit on Migration.²⁴¹⁸

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

The collection of data regarding migration in Malta is the responsibility of the National Statistics Office (NSO). The NSO works in accordance with Article 3 of the European Regulation (EC) No. 862/2007 and compiles annual data on, inter alia, immigrants establishing usual residency in Malta and emigrants moving away from Malta. Collection and analysis of data regarding migration to or from Malta was also done by the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and Maltese asylum trends were also recorded by the UNHCR; the UN Refugee Agency. There has been a steady increase in migration to Malta since 2002, with only few years registering a decrease in migration, the latter becoming a trend in recent years.

Contrary to popular belief, the majority of migrants living in Malta are from the European Union (EU) Member States.²⁴¹⁹ Nonetheless, recent years show an increase in migration from sub-Saharan Africa arriving from the coast of North Africa and, following the Arab Spring together with the still ongoing Syrian Civil War and unrest in Libya, applications for international protection by Syrian and Libyan asylum seekers have also increased.²⁴²⁰ According to data collected by the UNHCR, from the 200 asylum decisions made by the end of February 2017, 90 applicants (47.1%) were granted Subsidiary Protection, 25 applicants (13.1%) granted Refugee Status, 52 applications (27.2%) being closed and 5 applicants (2.6%) were granted protection by The Hague Process on Refugees and Migration (THP). On the other hand, 19 applications (9.9%) were rejected altogether.²⁴²¹ The most prominent nationality of asylum seekers was Libyan (51), although there was a significant number of Somali (39), Syrian (32), Eritrean (27) and Ukrainian (14) applicants, with the other 37 applicants being from other countries.²⁴²²

The number of asylum seekers have fluctuated almost at par with the number of migrant boat arrivals in Malta. Data from 2014 shows that 64% of applicants that year were granted some form of international protection, 17% were rejected and 19% were closed cases.²⁴²³ To those whom international protection was granted, this is usually in the form of Subsidiary Protection.

Data from 2004-2016 show that asylum applications peaked in 2008 with 2607 applications, then plummeting in 2010 when there were only 175 applicants. In 2016 on the other hand, there were around 1733 applications for international protection.²⁴²⁴ From these 1733, around 652 were Libyan applicants, followed by Syrian at 287 and Eritrean at 254, from whom only 8.7% of applications were rejected.²⁴²⁵ The population in open centers has also almost consistently decreased over the years, with 2,220 in 2010 and 673 in 2016.²⁴²⁶

Since Malta's joining of the EU, an increase in migrants from other Member States was recorded, with these people exercising their right to free movement within the union. As of 2013, 5.33% of people residing in Malta were migrants, with 12,840 migrants being EU nationals while 9,626 were third country nationals (TCNs).²⁴²⁷

Despite the fact that the majority of immigrants currently residing in Malta are from other EU Member States, many come to the island's shores through illegal channels, generally out of necessity due to conflict happening in their country of origin.²⁴²⁸

When it comes to a gender divide, there is an equal split between male and female immigrants in Malta, a trend which has persisted since 2009. It should be noted, however, that according to the IOM's Malta: Country Profile, there exists a lack of qualitative research for an explanation of these trends.²⁴²⁹ In most migrant communities, there is a higher number of females to males, with only migrant communities from Italy, Somalia and the broad category of "Other Countries" showing the opposite to be true.²⁴³⁰ Interestingly, migrants from the Russian Federation have been over 70% female, the largest gap from any migrant community. On the other hand, non-EU nationals in Malta have over the years been mostly men, with asylum seekers coming by boat from Africa following this trend. This could be explained by the fact that traveling via illegal channels imposes certain risks, along with the fact that a substantial amount of money would be needed to pay the traffickers. Women suffering from forced migration have to face more challenges than men, namely the raising of the funds needed, the need to be a caretaker to any of her children and the fact that smuggler circles are usually male dominated.²⁴³¹ The largest broad demographic of migrants in Malta is EU males (29%) while the smallest demographic in this regard is TCN females (18%).²⁴³²

On the topic of citizenship, Malta's latest census (2011) had indicated that, at the time, around 35,116 foreign born people lived in Malta.²⁴³³ People from the United Kingdom comprised 30% of all foreign born residents, a reflection of Malta's colonial past. Australian born individuals are the second largest block of foreign born residents, comprising 12% of the migrant population in Malta with Canadian born persons coming in at third with 5%.²⁴³⁴ The largest non EU or Commonwealth nationality was Somalian born individuals who comprised around 3% of the total migrant population in Malta.

After the initial spike of undocumented immigrants in 2002, arrivals of irregular migrants had risen almost consistently although it has decreased in recent years. Migrants arriving by boat also spiked again in 2008 when 2,775 people were brought onto Malta's shores.²⁴³⁵ In recent years however, we have registered an ever-decreasing amount of boat arrivals, with only 25 people in 2016.²⁴³⁶ Those who either don't apply for asylum or are not granted any form of international protection are given an order to leave, with the IOM assisting Malta in the returning of migrants from mainly sub-Saharan African and Asian countries. Resettlement of migrants can also be done via the Dublin Regulation while those granted international protection may be eligible to go to other EU Member States. Since 2008, most migrants were resettled in the US, peaking in 2014 when 577 migrants were resettled there. As of March 2017, 61 migrants have been resettled, all of them finding refuge in the US. Adversely, 80 migrants were resettled in Malta from Italy and Greece in 2016, 52 of them being Eritrean, 27 Syrian and 1 Iraqi.²⁴³⁷

While immigration remains a prevalent issue in Maltese society to this day, trends of emigration from the country have changed from that of the previous century. Having gone through large scale emigrations for decades, especially post World War 2, pockets of Maltese communities nowadays exist in Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom. That being said, there had been a considerable number of return migrant, with the trend subsiding after 1984.²⁴³⁸ More recent figures from Eurostat show that emigration from Malta has the third largest emigrants per capita in the EU, preceded by Luxemburg and Cyprus, with 20 emigrants per 1000 people.²⁴³⁹

Upon the review of the data provided by the IOM and the NSO, one can come to the conclusion that despite migration being a hot topic, statistics show that the number of (irregular) migrants has drastically decreased in recent years. The reasons for this are varied, but are a combination of a more united EU effort in the saving and relocating of irregular migrants especially following the 2015 European Migrant Crisis.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

Besides the importance of dialogue when it comes to such intolerance or other issues relating to migrants, it is of outmost importance for Member States to enforce actions against such bigotry, and therefore upholding decisions by the ECtHR.²⁴⁴⁰

After reviewing the cases brought forward against Malta, one can note various amendments that took place soon hereafter. As embodied in Article 18 of the Charter of the Fundamental Rights of the European Union, it is crucial to reserve the 'right to asylum'. Nonetheless, it is the responsibility of the state to ensure that migrants are safeguarded in a sufficient manner.²⁴⁴¹

A case in point are the detention centers in Malta, which were degrading, and, unlike most of the other member states in Malta, it is imperative that all migrants are detained once arriving to Malta.²⁴⁴² While using such practices, Malta appeared before the ECtHR for various violations leading to infringements of the European Convention of Human Rights.

For instance, in the case of Mohamed Jama v. Malta, the appellant had arrived in Malta as an irregular immigrant. While being detained, the seeker claimed unlawful detention, and additionally, poor conditions while incarcerated that constituted a violation to Article 3 of the ECHR, also having no sufficient remedy following the arrest. The court, found as a result, that there was a violation of Article 5(4) of the ECHR, since no adequate remedy was available to applicant, rejecting the government's claim that constitutional proceedings were effective since such procedure did not suffice to a speedy remedy.²⁴⁴³

In addition, Malta was also held liable for a breach of Article 5(1) of the ECHR, because although the government had sufficient reason to hold the applicant in detention following uncertainty of age, as stipulated in domestic law, when the applicant was held for a further five days after acquiring subordinate protection, that constituted a violation of the ECHR. In this particular case it was also still emphasised that Malta must ensure that the detention centers uphold a certain standard in line with human dignity, since the conditions had still not been of an acceptable standard.²⁴⁴⁴

Moreover in the case Suso Musa v. Malta, a cross-examination took place regarding the detention of an asylum seeker, as well as an investigation into whether he had adequate remedies at hand. This resulted after the appellant was detained, and after the individual applied to asylum, it was denied after a year. Simultaneously, the seekers was also questioning the validity of his detention in front of the Immigration Appeals Board. The court decided that his detention was associated with also Article 14 of the Immigration Act and consequently falling under the first branch of ²⁴⁴² Daniela DeBono, 'Less than human': the detention of irregular immigrants in Malta' (Volume: 55 issue: 2, 1st October 2013)

²⁴⁴³ Article 5 (4) of the ECHR was also held to be breached in the cases of; Louled Massoud v. Malta; Aden Ahmed v. Malta and Suso Musa vs. Malta.

²⁴⁴⁴ Mohamed Jama v. Malta (26th November 2015, ECtHR) App no. 10290/13)

Article 5. Once again the court in conjunction with report from the ICJ and other competent authorities noted that the conditions at the detention centers could add up to ‘inhuman and degrading treatment’.²⁴⁴⁵

Furthermore, it noted that since there was no prospective reason to keep him detained once it was already established that they were not going to be deported, and thus, established a violation of Article 5 paragraph 1 (f). The appellant was also not given a sufficient remedy to question the legitimacy of his detention established in Article 5 paragraph 4 of the ECHR.

Although the court dismissed the plea of the seeker under Article 5 (2) of the ECHR, the court noted that the prolonged detention and conditions of his stay amounted to a violation of Article 5(1), impeaching his right to liberty and security. Additionally, there was also violation of Article 5(4) due to the lack of sufficient and immediate remedies.²⁴⁴⁶

The court suggested that Malta improves the conditions of detention, while giving an adequate remedy for those appellants seeking to uncover whether there is a satisfactory reason for the detention. Consequently, the procedure was reformed, and each case is being investigated on a ‘case by case’ basis, providing more rapid remedies while detention centers have been improved upon. After amendments to the Immigration Act, detention cannot exceed nine months ensuring appropriate measures are taken.²⁴⁴⁷

Another recent case concerning detention concerns Aden Ahmed v. Malta. The case denotes a Somali national who had entered into Malta as an irregular migrant seeking asylum in Malta in 2009. The seeker had been put into detention, while it was alleged that no sufficient reason was given for her removal order. While filing for asylum, the appellant had withdrawn from stating the whole truth out of fear of being sent back and hadn’t retracted the misinformation later on. After her refugee status was dismissed the seeker escaped from detention and approached another Member State in order to ask for asylum and eventually rejoin her family in Sweden. Moreover, once she came to Malta, the authorities found her guilty of escaping detention and misinformation, being granted 6 months imprisonment.

After reviewing the case, the detention centers were first pointed out, ruling that the conditions of the centers were in violation of Article 3 of the ECHR. Once again, the constitutional courts were not seen as a sufficient immediate remedy, and as a result this violates Article 5 (4) since the applicant couldn’t not be presented with other solutions to question her detention. Lastly, the court also held that the Maltese government had been in violation of Article 5 (2) since the seeker was being deprived of liberty since no proceedings were taking place for deportation while she was being detained. As a result, there was no sufficient grounds for the appellant to be detained for 14 and a half months.²⁴⁴⁸

After the aforementioned cases, in 2015, the Chapter 217 of the Immigration Act was amended. As a result, appellants nowadays have the right to be given sufficient reasons to the cause of detention from the competent officer and cannot be detained for more than 9 months. Moreover, the seekers are to be advised on alternative remedies available to them.

In conclusion, Malta has seen various advancements in the laws regarding migration, especially detention of asylum seekers. However, the law still seems to remain vague at times²⁴⁴⁹, especially when relating to statuses given to asylum seekers, which at times are not regulated by law which is publicly available, but rather policies, and therefore still leaving migrants unprotected.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

6.1. Recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) on Integration

Undoubtedly, issues relating to discrimination are intrinsically linked to social and political contexts at that moment in time.²⁴⁵⁰ The ECRI, as an impartial figure, plays a crucial role which is significant in such a framework, analysing each country and identifying obstacles relating to racism and intolerance, suggesting the way forward leading to harmonisation and adequate living for migrants.²⁴⁵¹

When discussing integration it is important to highlight that it requires all individuals of the state to participate, also having an unbiased outlook in order to find an equilibrium between parties. On the other hand, the republic should “...ensure the right of immigrants and newcomers to full participation in the economic, social, cultural and political life of the country, ensuring the protection of these rights to the highest possible degree...”²⁴⁵²

Since 2007, as highlighted in the ECRI report on Malta, an institution was constructed, accountable to affairs relating to the “integrations and welfare of asylum seekers” in collaboration with NGOs through education.

Although such mechanisms are already in place, it was also pointed out that the detention centers in Malta were not of an adequate nature, and in themselves were leading to negative connotations upon migrants, leading to difficulties for them to integrate.²⁴⁵³

Furthermore, as established in the Concluding Report on Malta, after the ECRI had upheld that detention should only be applied only in strict cases, the recommendations had been taken into consideration. Upon amendments to the Immigration Act, detention can only be granted by the Principal Immigration Officer making sure that sufficient reasons are presented upon reviewing the case and prolonged for a period not longer than 9 months. Nonetheless, the appellant may be in the custody of someone else until removed from the country.²⁴⁵⁴

Additionally, the seeker must be provided with enough information on how such detention order can be rebutted, making sure it is in a sufficient language that can be understood by such appellant. Lastly, one may argue that the system has only been somewhat amended, as it is still as was applicable before for other migrants.

To conclude, the ECRI suggested that more efforts are to be made in order to ensure that these individuals seek to integrate. At the moment more projects are taking place with NGOs raising further awareness and opportunities for individuals. Additionally, the European Commission offers various funding opportunities, amongst others the 'Rights, Equality and Citizenship Programme', upholding the principles of Article 21²⁴⁵⁵ while combatting intolerance. As a result, this gives eligible applicants, such as NGOs, the possibility to further raise awareness and opportunities for individuals through financial support and cooperation with the EC.

6.2. Recommendations by National Human Rights Bodies Concerning the Integration of Migrants

The absence of a codified integration policy in Malta can be seen to a threat against integration flourishing. Over and above, it manifests the importance of other human rights bodies to give their input in policies, while suggesting distinct approaches to a progressive embodiment of integration.

Independent bodies that are, separate to states, combatting racism are vital in order to ensure professionals in the field are influencing parties and giving their input in upcoming policies. Consequently, with the launch of the Public Consultation on the National Integration Strategy 2015-2020 which had been launched by the Ministry of Social Dialogue; Consumer Affairs and Civil Liberties, both NGOs and government are working together, bringing forward various policies to be discussed. The main aim is to "promote intercultural relations", while raising awareness and legitimising local communities.²⁴⁵⁶

It is upheld that; "Integration policies should create favorable conditions for migrants' economic, social, cultural and political participation to realise the potential of migration...Integration is an ever evolving process, which requires close monitoring, constant efforts, innovative approaches and bold ideas”²⁴⁵⁷

As a result, this project aims to discuss integration of third Country Nationals, specially dealing with long-term residence, family reunification, citizenship, political participation, health and vulnerable persons amongst others. Meanwhile, utmost importance is given to policy indicators, comparing laws to others across the globe, ensuring that they are safeguarding individuals and that they are of an adequate level.²⁴⁵⁸

While more efforts have been made to address issues relating to integration, inhumane treatment and sufficient remedies, Malta has still lacked to incorporate such issues into its education system. Moreover, asylum seekers in Malta still find it hard to attain self-sufficiency, therefore, finding it hard to find protection, information and to integrate. Due to the lack of support later asylum-seekers are facing poverty, social exclusion and detriment. In addition, there have neither been any offers for language tuition or culture orientation in order to facilitate them to integrate.²⁴⁵⁹

Furthermore, although the Immigration Act, Refugee Act and complementary legislation give a basis for protection given to asylum seekers, other policies and legal mechanisms used are not available to the public; in particular the statuses of THP and THPN. As a result, those falling under such statuses find it hard to get access to healthcare, social security benefits and assistance; finding it hard to earn protection, consequently inhibiting them from integration.²⁴⁶⁰

In conclusion, although one can see progress in the co-operation between the government and human rights NGOs, most submissions are futile and as a result suggestions are not set into action. It is therefore vital to ensure that the state and civil society organisations cultivate themselves, ensuring a way forward in legislating and administering in a non-discriminatory and adequate manner.²⁴⁶¹

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. Introduction

It is well documented that in the European Union, as opposed to other States outside Europe, public healthcare is completely funded by taxes, and thus, it is rather easily accessible by members of the European Union. The main cause behind the costless healthcare in all States' public sectors, including Malta, is that they embrace the most basic fundamental human rights which are deemed universal.

In fact, the World Health Organisation's (WHO) Constitution regulates the access to healthcare; in the very first page of its Constitution, where it is stipulated that "Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity." And "The enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health is one of the fundamental rights of every human being without distinction of race, religion, political belief, economic or social condition."²⁴⁶²

Therefore, it is shown that every single person must have access to healthcare whether the said individual requires healthcare in his/her country of origin or in any other country, regardless of the status of legality in relation to the person's migration. However, in terms of undocumented migrants, it is often regarded that even though they are entitled, some may not entirely be able to enjoy these entitlements²⁴⁶³.

Despite the Government of Malta being bound to venerate International Law and European Law in areas that they regulate, it is necessary for national legislation to yet still be able to regulate access to healthcare within its own parameters, nonetheless. Such access to healthcare is regulated through national means of subsidiary provisions; such as the Refugees Act of 2000, policies, and Health Units²⁴⁶⁴. Nonetheless, national legislation is limited as to what it may regulate, as previously mentioned. Therefore, certain procedures are made compulsory, such as providing medical attention to all immigrants upon arrival²⁴⁶⁵.

7.2. Healthcare Priority: Primary vs. Secondary Care for Undocumented Migrants?

It is rather a conspicuous fact that one of the deficiencies of free healthcare is that a long waiting-list finds itself in the way more often than not, in many countries. Therefore, the issue arises whether discrimination takes place in terms of categorising people in order to have access for health care. A manifestation of such instance is the fact that undocumented migrants only have access to emergency services for healthcare, and not a full usage of access²⁴⁶⁶; it is compulsory that everyone excluding citizens receives a minimum of free secondary medical care²⁴⁶⁷.

Although under the Constitution of the World Health Organisation it is stated that "The enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health is one of the fundamental rights", it is deemed rather impossible to avoid prioritisation; however 'prioritisation' must be detached from ‘discrimination’, meaning strictly that in the case of anyone in need of immediate healthcare, the authority in charge of providing healthcare must prioritise the emergency first, and treat it as primary medical care²⁴⁶⁸. Thus, healthcare prioritisation deems to be rather inevitable in certain circumstances; however the inevitability is a product of leniency and humanity, within the segregation of “racial, religious, political belief, economic or social condition”²⁴⁶⁹, meaning that certain prioritisation are considered as obligatory, such as the access for completely free medical services for children that are unaccompanied or whose parent is an undocumented migrant²⁴⁷⁰.

In spite of the absent legislation regarding undocumented migrants²⁴⁷¹, highly limited and finite legislation is provided for those applying for international protection, and it is worded in a simple manner, yet enabling an applicant to benefit from most tax-funded institutions that a regular citizen would benefit; as stipulated by Article 13(3) of the Maltese Refugees Act — “An applicant for international protection shall have access to state education and training in Malta and to receive state medical care and services.”

Therefore it is perceptible that most procedures regarding undocumented migrants are regulated by policies which are not legally binding under national legislation²⁴⁷², yet qualify to be sufficient.

7.3. Impugning Access or Entitlement

7.3.1. Undocumented Migrants vs. Asylum-Seekers

Despite the fact that undocumented migrants are only provided with an undemanding policy which is not legally binding, issued by the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs and the Ministry for Social Solidarity in 2005, titled ‘Irregular Immigrants, Refugees and Integration, Policy Document’²⁴⁷³, undocumented migrants are necessarily entitled to - access for medical care is still readily available, provided that certain simple conditions are met, such as presenting a ‘Police Number’ or an ‘ID Number’²⁴⁷⁴. Nevertheless, this means that whilst in detention they come across various impediments whilst trying to access primary healthcare²⁴⁷⁵, regardless of the gravity of the situation.

Article 13(3) of Chapter 420 (Refugees Act), which awards the entitlement of education and access to health care for those who applied for international protection, liberates a wide spectrum of continuous steps; perhaps it is at that point that national legislation perceives a migrant as being eligible for primary entitlement. In fact, as opposed to the situation regarding undocumented migrants, the 'Principal Immigration Officer', as per S.L. 420.06 concerning the 'Reception of Asylum-Seekers Regulations'²⁴⁷⁶, must inform the said asylum-seeker of all the benefits and obligations he is subjected to—

“4.(1) The Principal Immigration Officer shall take the necessary steps in order that, within a reasonable time and not exceeding fifteen days from the day an asylum seeker has lodged his application, the asylum seeker shall be informed of any established benefits and of the obligations with which he must comply relating to reception conditions; in this respect the Principal Immigration Officer shall ensure that an applicant is provided with information on organisations or groups of persons that provide specific legal assistance and organisations that might be able to help or inform him concerning the available reception conditions, including health care.”²⁴⁷⁷

Nonetheless, the health of both asylum-seekers as well as undocumented migrants is also taken into account whilst evaluating the expiration of temporary protection. This is stipulated in Chapter 420.05 (Subsidiary Legislation 05) Article 24(1)—

“24. (1) The Principal Immigration Officer shall take the necessary measures concerning the conditions of residence of persons who have enjoyed temporary protection and who cannot, in view of their state of health, reasonably be expected to travel and where they would suffer serious negative effects if their treatment was interrupted; these persons shall not be expelled so long as that situation continues.”²⁴⁷⁸

7.4. Right to Emergency Access: What Qualifies as Emergency Under our National Legislation?

Whilst our national legislation thoroughly identifies certain issues as being part of extremity, it is to be noted that in such content, identifying individually every infirmity that may be a case of emergency, will lead to an exhaustive list; which is not always deemed appropriate for such cases, as new types of situations may arise that are deemed to be in immediate demand for healthcare but are not included in such list.

Article 14(1) of Chapter 420.06 stipulates the types of vulnerability in the field of migration; ranging from vulnerable persons to types of illnesses described in a mild vague manner—

“14.(1) In the implementation of the provisions relating to material reception conditions and health care, including mental health, account shall be taken of the specific situation of vulnerable persons which shall include minors, unaccompanied minors, disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, victims of human trafficking, persons with serious illnesses, persons with mental disorders and persons have been subjected to torture, rape or other serious form of psychological, physical or sexual violence, such as victims of female genital mutilation, found to have special needs after an individual evaluation of their situation. [...] ²⁴⁷⁹.

Undeniably, this rather exhaustive list may be used as a two-fold mechanism to regulate access to healthcare for migrants; in such a way that restrictions may apply to decrease the influx of conjectured access to healthcare (without providing substantial reasons as to why healthcare is demanded as an emergency service), whilst it also provides a suitable mechanism and established guidelines as to evaluating whether an individual should be immediately treated or not. Thus, it (Article 14(1)'s list) can either result in a wrongful decision of not granting emergency services to an individual, or distinctive comprehension of who should be entitled for emergency services and who shouldn't.

7.5. Concluding Remarks

Although the national legislation of Malta is rather ambiguous as to the type of healthcare that should be provided to migrants when compared to other member states²⁴⁸⁰, it is seen that International Law paralleled with European Law, eventually seeps its way through our legislation and policy. A corroboration of this statement may be supplemented with the fact that Maltese legislation and policy, despite the lacunae, is still in line with the Constitution of the World Health Organisation as well as directives issued by the European Union, such as Article 15 of the Council Directive 2003/09/EC²⁴⁸¹ providing the most fundamental right to access healthcare for migrants.

Immigration is no foreign concept to the Maltese Islands, especially in recent years. Malta has essentially been “a country of emigration”²⁴⁸², up until recent developments, specifically upon the nation's accession to the European Union. Malta has consistently sought to accommodate many migrants that cross its path and has made it a point to attempt to further integrate such people into the Maltese society, despite the challenges of discrimination that arise as a result of this. Amongst these migrants are children, who face the issue of possibly being pulled out of school too early due to migration, or perhaps never having had the opportunity to enjoy their right to education in the first place.

Malta has strived to ensure that migrant children are given equal opportunities to children who are citizens of the nation. Many schools across the nation, including both state schools as well as private schools have welcomed refugees and asylum seekers.

The relevant legislation regarding the education of both refugees and asylum seekers is the Refugee Act. Also included in this act are Malta's obligations towards such persons envisaged by the Geneva Convention of 1951 as well as the 1967 Protocol, saying that both an asylum seeker and a refugee "shall also have access to state education and training in Malta."²⁴⁸³

With regards to children of migrant workers, the relevant piece of legislation is the Migrant Workers (Child Education) Regulations.²⁴⁸⁴ Under this law, "children of migrant workers" is defined as any child, who has satisfied the national age requirement for compulsory schooling, who resides in Malta and depends on the migrant worker. However, no mention is made as to whether these children are first generation or second-generation migrants²⁴⁸⁵, specifically, whether they were born in Malta or abroad. It can be argued that this serves as an umbrella term, to cater for both situations.²⁴⁸⁶

This law stipulates that the State is entitled to provide free tuition to such children in relation to state schools and providing the teaching of any of the official languages, Maltese and English, to aid in the acclimatization of the child to the Maltese educational system. The State must also make an effort, where possible, to encourage the "eventual re-integration" of the children into their state of origin by making available the teaching of their mother tongue and the culture of such country.²⁴⁸⁷ It is interesting to note that this only refers to children of migrant workers, and no other law includes such benefit for refugees or asylum seekers.²⁴⁸⁸

On the topic of language learning, Malta prioritizes the education of migrant children to aid in their overall integration into society, and this is done by the Department of Quality and Standards in Education. The procedure to facilitate learning comprises of a programme spanning over a period of six weeks, and whilst such courses are independent of the school that the child attends, this surely comes with its own advantages. The child will be able to learn both Maltese and English by means of basic courses for beginners which will cater for the students on an individual basis, the main aim being that the child has a basic grasp of both languages linguistically, and would, therefore, be able to communicate in real life situations. Students are usually introduced to one language primarily, and most commonly, Maltese is introduced later on at secondary level education, as a second language if it was not their mother tongue.²⁴⁸⁹

One downside to these programmes is the fact that, culturally, such initiatives have been intrinsically made to create an association between the children forming part of the minority group and those having special needs, therefore giving the implication that migrants have difficulties learning or are less willing to participate in the learning process. As noted by Galea, this has “effects on migrants’ access to learning”. Whilst the abovementioned programme for language courses is a good initiative in itself, it presupposes that the migrant students start off at the same educational level as a Maltese national. For this reason, Galea observed that “diversity in education” or “inclusive education” have become largely understood through pedagogies of intervention that aim to address migrant children’s educational needs as a common deficit irrespective of their different lived experiences.²⁴⁹⁰

Migrants, being a minority group from the get-go, are expectedly subject to discrimination not only from individuals, but also sometimes from states themselves. Article 8 of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages²⁴⁹¹, which tackles education, serves ‘to promote the use of a regional or minority language in public life’, whilst not discriminating between students and providing accessible education for all. This has been observed and incorporated into the abovementioned legislation intra lege. The notion of accessibility to education for all children is also recognized in the Common Standards and Procedures for Returning Illegally Staying Third-Country Nationals Regulations²⁴⁹², in that a minor in detention shall still have access to education for as long as they remain in Malta.²⁴⁹³

Recent statistics have shown a worrying number of early school leavers in Malta, however, the state has made it a point to introduce measures that should serve as a prevention. One such measure is to encourage and embrace diversity in education, as done by the National Curriculum Framework, specifically in schools. The Strategic Plan for the Prevention of Early School Leaving in Malta (2014) has encouraged that schools support inclusion, as forming part of the Framework For The Education Strategy For Malta 2014-2024, by training teachers to better understand and create an inclusive environment in the classroom, which also includes devising lesson plans for students which reflect a society which is diverse and incorporates various types of cultures, supporting migrant students psychologically to deal with stress, as well as ensuring that the child is enrolled in a school and given the opportunity to integrate in the school community.²⁴⁹⁴

A predominant concept that has stood the test of time in Malta is the superiority of the Church, which is no exception when it comes to education. The fact that the Catholic religion is thought as a subject in schools, with little or no regard to other forms of religion defeats the purpose of an inclusive education. Although Malta has strived to promote inclusiveness and non-discrimination, this subject remains a part of the compulsory school curriculum of some schools, which will have a negative impact on migrant students who may have different religious views.²⁴⁹⁵

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

This article examines mainly the present situation of migrant learners within the Maltese educational system. Secondly, it portrays how such learners can reap the benefits of inclusion to augment their savoir faire and employability skills. To this effect, the crucial role of both the Ministry for Education and Employment and the National Commission for Further and Higher Education shall be examined in greater detail.

Under Maltese law, primary education is compulsory and in State schools it is free of charge. The Constitution highlights the State's obligation to assist capable and deserving students even if without financial resources.²⁴⁹⁶

Chapter 327 of the Laws of Malta, the Education Act, lays down that it is the right of every citizen of the Republic of Malta to receive education and instruction without any distinction of age, sex, disability, belief or economic means.²⁴⁹⁷ Article 2 of the Protocol 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights provides that 'no person shall be denied the right to education'. This clearly outlines the State's obligations which include inter alia, promotion of education and instruction, the existence of a system of schools and institutions accessible to all Maltese citizens catering for the full development of the whole personality including the ability of every person to work.

The migrants' inalienable rights vis-a-vis education are indeed celebrated in Malta. Over the last years, the Ministry for Education and Employment has introduced various measures to reduce poverty and increase social inclusion. LLAPSI and the Migrant Learners' Unit are the latest initiatives to be introduced to target third country national students. Both the Ministry for Education and Employment and the National Commission for Further Higher Education ensure that such goals are achieved to the full.

9.1. The Ministry for Education and Employment (MEDE)

Under Maltese law, the Minister represents the State and ensures that the national policy on inclusive education is applied in all schools. Initially this policy targeted special needs students with specific learning difficulties. Then, it was applied to cater for migrant students' needs whose numbers did not dovetail. The Ministry for Education and Employment has catered for such lacunas by implementing effective measures. The Students' Maintenance Grants Board (SMGB) is an example of such good practices.

9.1.1. The Students' Maintenance Grants Board (SMGB)

The Government of Malta, provides a one-time grant, a monthly stipend (known as Students' Maintenance Grants) for students in higher education. The Students' Maintenance Grants Scheme operates under a set of regulations and the respective Legal Notice L.N. 308 of 2016 determining eligibility.

In some cases the Supplementary Maintenance Grant (an additional monthly stipend) is issued on proving financial hardship. If applicants present enough evidence to sustain their claim, they receive a favorable reply and consequently are granted the monthly stipend to sustain their studies. Normally, the five years residence entitlement has to be respected to the full, but the SMGB takes into consideration the status or subsidiary long-term residence. The SMGB considers applicants for exemptions such as fees which apply for Non-EU citizens. When applicants apply on the basis of humanitarian conditions, the SMGB waives the five-year clause.

9.2. The National Commission for Further and Higher Education

The National Commission for Further and Higher Education 'fosters its role in the promotion of further and higher education also within the context of internationalisation of education in Malta'.²⁴⁹⁸ Under Maltese law, the National Commission for Further and Higher Education is bound to promote and facilitate access to life-long learning and progression in life-long learning, as well as formulate policies related to the international dimension of further and higher education.²⁴⁹⁹ Articles 64 and 65 bind the Commission to give advice to the Government on any matter which is connected to the further and higher education. When a foreign student applies for higher education in Malta, he is bound to present his foreign school and university qualifications, which are then analysed by this 'independent and consultative agency to government'.²⁵⁰⁰ It is interesting to note that two organisations form the National Commission for Further and Higher Education – Malta Qualifications Council (MQA) combined with the National Commission for Higher Education (NCFHE).

9.2.1. The Malta Qualifications Recognition Information Centre (MQRIC)

The Commission also performs the function of the Malta Qualifications Recognition Information Centre (MQRIC) under the Mutual Recognition of Qualifications Act, as laid down under Maltese Law in Chapter 451 of the Laws of Malta. Being the competent body within the NCFHE that recognises qualifications against the Malta Qualifications Framework (MQF), it has delegated authority to analyse 'a request submitted by an applicant'²⁵⁰¹ and shall notify the applicant of its decision together with the reasons upon which it is based within four months of receipt of all the relevant document'.²⁵⁰²

9.3. Conclusion

In what was probably its most important decision of the 20th century, the U.S. Supreme Court held in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (1954) that to provide racially segregated ('separate but equal') education was in breach of the equal protection of the laws. The Court said unanimously that 'today education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditure for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society.

Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing them for later professional training, and in helping them to adjust normally to his environment. In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity to an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms'.²⁵⁰³ Both the Ministry for Education and Employment and the National Commission for Further Higher Education are ensuring that the internationalisation of education in Malta makes a leap forward and that migrants' rights thrive.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

EU citizens residing in Malta may not only vote in local²⁵⁰⁴ and European parliament elections²⁵⁰⁵, but may also run as candidates for the latter and for municipal elections²⁵⁰⁶. This is in line with EU legislation, which ensures that the same rights are given to all EU citizens in any Member State they wish to migrate to. This is primarily found in Article 22 of the TFEU and was introduced, respectively, in 1993 and 1994²⁵⁰⁷. These rights are also safeguarded by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union²⁵⁰⁸.

Regarding non-EU nationals, the situation is quite different. Whilst Malta is bound by EU legislation to allow a quite wide political involvement and participation, there is no European legal framework when it comes to third country nationals. Certainly, this is an area of law in which the Union does not have competence to act freely and it is up to each Member State to create and amend its own rules and procedures to allow or prohibit this participation. The current situation in Malta is not complex since there has been no legislation, as of yet, relating to third country nationals. Their political rights are not necessarily prohibited but rather, not yet regulated and this in turn, means that for the time being, these migrants are not allowed to participate in local politics in any way. Local legislation has not yet been amended and therefore, the country's position on the matter is not yet known. However, Malta is not alone, as it is only one of a number of countries who are yet to properly tackle this matter.

In 2015, Malta ranked 25th in the Migrant Integration Policy Index²⁵⁰⁹ in the area of political participation and an overall ranking of 33 out of 38 countries, putting the country in the 'slightly unfavorable' range. The report stated that despite Malta promoting and putting equality at the forefront of the integration agenda, the lack of political involvement rights given to third country nationals residing in the country, posing great difficulty for them to fully integrate into society and feel completely welcomed²⁵¹⁰.

As a result of Malta's poor ranking and relatively neutral approach to the idea of reforming the system, the country was put in the spotlight following the publishing of a report by the FRA²⁵¹¹ earlier this year. The report, titled *'Together in the EU - Promoting the Participation of Migrants and their Descendants'*²⁵¹², Malta was put in the same category as Cyprus, Hungary, Poland and for not having any specific integration plan for integration, targeting at third country nationals²⁵¹³. This report attracted a considerable amount of attention and not only made it to the local press, but also drove national authorities to act. So much so, that an article published soon after the publication of the report, the Civil Liberties Ministry stated that *"a national strategy for integration should be published this year"*²⁵¹⁴.

Maltese law enables EU nationals residing in Malta to participate in most aspects of the political process, however, this is only thanks to EU-wide common legislation and this becomes abundantly clear when shedding light on the misfortune that is our current national policy for third country nationals. However, things are looking up (or down – depending on personal opinion) and it may very well be that soon, these migrants may also be able to have a say, no matter how small, in the country's governance

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

The resolution adopted by the United Nations Human Rights Council on 30th June 2016 reaffirmed that the right to a nationality of every human person is a fundamental human right enshrined in, inter alia, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.²⁵¹⁵ In Malta, citizenship is governed by Chapter 188 of the Laws of Malta.²⁵¹⁶ Under Maltese law, although the right to a nationality of every human person is not mentioned in the Constitution, a stateless person can still acquire citizenship via Chapter 188 of the Laws of Malta. However, migrants applying for Maltese Citizenship do not always fall under the definition of 'stateless' and thus the situation of a double nationality may arise if the applicant's original State does not allow dual-citizenship.

The means to acquire citizenship in Malta can be synopsised into two: i) citizenship acquired through a family relation and; ii) citizenship granted to a migrant. The former includes citizenship by birth, descent, marriage and adoption. The latter is more relevant to this paper. In Malta, migrants can acquire Maltese citizenship through naturalisation. Part V of Chapter 188 of the laws of Malta is about citizenship by naturalisation. Article 10(1) of Chapter 188 says that "An alien or a stateless person, being a person of full age and capacity, on making application...may be granted a certificate of naturalisation as a citizen of Malta" if s/he proves the conditions laid down in the subsequent provisos. These provisos include (amongst others) that the applicant has been resident in Malta for twelve months before the submission of the application and that before these twelve months, the applicant has been in Malta for a period which aggregates four years over a span of six years.

According to Article 1 of Chapter 188, the term 'alien' found in Article 10(1) of Chapter 188 means a person who is not a citizen of Malta. Therefore, the requirements mentioned in Article 10(1) are applicable to migrants who are both stateless and non-stateless. From 10(1) it can be observed that for a migrant to be granted Maltese citizenship s/he must prove five years of residing in Malta.

The requirements of Article 10(1) of 188 are different than Chapter 188's Legal Notice 47 of 20142517. This Legal Notice provides that under the Individual Investor Programme (IIP) an applicant can be granted Maltese Citizenship if he proves a genuine link to Malta starting (only) twelve months prior to naturalization. So currently there is a situation where non-paying migrants must be resident in Malta for five years prior to be granted citizenship, whilst those who contribute via the IIP only need to prove a genuine link starting twelve months prior to naturalisation and 6 months of actual residency.

Joanna Selvagi in her thesis titled 'An analytical study of citizenship in relation to the individual investor programme' discusses the amendments brought on through Legal Notice 47 (2004) which "were allegedly goaded on due to the traditional interpretation of citizenship as the bond between an individual and a State"²⁵¹⁸. She notes that since Malta is part of the European Union, the amendments done to the naturalisation laws of Malta will create not only Maltese citizens, but also EU citizens. Selvagi notes that with the IIP programme the 'genuine link' required for acquiring citizenship may be missing. However she admits this 'genuine link' is sufficed through Maltese legislation on residence. Albeit this, she still notes that it is still not clear whether this position has created 'legal fiction'²⁵¹⁹ or not.

The second part of this section concerns double nationality however Part IV of Chapter 188 of the Laws of Malta speaks of 'multiple citizenship' rather than double nationality. Nationality is referred to when giving the definition of "stateless" in Article 1 of Chapter 188.

Article 7 of Chapter 188 of the Laws of Malta says that: 'It shall be lawful for any person to be a citizen of Malta, and at the same time a citizen of another country. 'Malta allows dual nationality without restrictions. However certain States do not allow multiple citizenship and thus the granting of the Maltese citizenship may automatically revoke the applicant's original citizenship.

Eugene Buttigieg in a report²⁵²⁰ on Maltese Citizenship which was done in collaboration with the Edinburgh University Law School gives a conspectus of the legal evolution of dual nationality in Malta. Multiple citizenship legislation was built in three steps: the amendments of 1989, 2000 and 2007. All these amendments were done to the Maltese Citizenship Act (Chapter 188 of the Laws of Malta). Buttigieg notes how the amendments of 2007 protracted multiple citizenship to more recent generations of migrants with Maltese ancestry.

"The ius soli requirement was moved even further up the line of ancestry; provided that somewhere along the applicant's direct line of Maltese ancestry there is an ascendant who was born in Malta of a parent likewise born in Malta, applicants would be entitled to Maltese citizenship even though neither of their parents had been born in Malta."²⁵²¹

The amendments to Maltese laws on dual nationality were mainly targeted to people who had some sort of family relation with a Maltese person rather than focusing on the immigrant who is completely non-related to Malta. However, the fact remains that immigrants who are not related to Malta can still be allowed dual citizenship if the original State of the applicant allows it.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. The desideratum of EU assistance by the Maltese Government regarding the integration of migrants

The Maltese archipelago are easily regarded to be amidst the smallest Member States of the European Union, yet considered to be one of the paramount Member States in certain applicable areas, such as the Integration of Migrants. Engaging simultaneously these two factors eventually results that the Maltese State is constant need of EU assistance²⁵²², to which the EU has evidently agreed to provide.

Nonetheless, when taking into consideration the geographical position of the archipelago, Malta is highly deemed to be in a critical position regarding the Migrant crisis that the European Union is currently facing²⁵²³. In fact, since the amount of intake has rapidly increased from 2015 onwards, where it was reported that Malta had the second largest intake immigrants and migrants in 2015²⁵²⁴, the European Institutes had started to implement various programmes and funding applicable to most Member States, such as —

- The Internal Security Fund (Border and Visa) regarding lawful movement of persons (Subject to the duration from 2014 to 2020)²⁵²⁵ and;
- The Internal Security Fund (Police) sustaining the aforementioned fund in terms of strategic security communicable within cross-borders²⁵²⁶.

This current funding are therefore intertwined within Maltese policy and legislation, in parallel with the rest of EU legislation enforced by the Union itself, in order to specifically cater for the Integration of Migrants on our Islands. Significantly this year, the Maltese Government undertook the Presidency of the Council of the European Union for the term of six months whereby amongst numerous priorities, primitive importance on the issue of Migration was disposed.

12.2. Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund

12.2.1. Integration of Migrants through Ministerial Responsibilities

The European Union, in aid of allocating funds and programs, set up a fund interlacing the previous funds from prior years; such as the Refugee Fund, Integration Fund and the Return Fund²⁵²⁷. Thus, the objective of this fund established by the European Commission²⁵²⁸ aims to integrate the unification of a standard approach towards a Common European Asylum System embraced by all European Member States²⁵²⁹ as well as implementing an essential and legitimate transportation for Migrants. Thus, through means of creating the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF), the EU deems to be permitted to transpose the funding along with its programme to a National level, consequently authorising national ministries to carry out the instructions given.

Despite the fund providing a total of EUR 3.137 Billion, a comprehensive amount of EUR 17 Million was provided for Malta²⁵³⁰ over the term of 6 years. However, the Maltese Government does not solely benefit from the funding provided, but also from the said programme that is ancillary to the funding. In fact, one of the many objectives regarding integration provided by this programme falls under the Maltese Ministry for Social Dialogue, Consumer Affairs and Civil Liberties²⁵³¹; meaning that the integration process is not exclusively applicable for migrants, but applies also to the citizens of Malta in terms of conveying information and education regarding the subject matter. Nonetheless, the workload does not completely rely on the Ministry itself, other Ministerial Departments also aid the integration process. In fact, the Ministry for Education and Employment follows the directives given by this programme in order to ensure diversity amongst Third Country Nationals in areas where the Ministry controls, by providing training and support programmes²⁵³².

In spite of the Ministerial Responsibilities carrying out actions in aid of the AMIF; it is stipulated under Section 4.1 of the 'AMIF, 2014-2020: Eligibility Rules' that various other entities may be eligible applicants, including Voluntary Organisations, NGOs, Private Organisations as well as International Organisations - given that they provide contribution specifically in the area that the AMIF regulates²⁵³³

12.2.2. Aiding Asylum-Seeking Applicants

As previously mentioned, one of the European Commission's main objective for these funding is to develop a system unifying the approach to a Common European Asylum System (CEAS). As a consequence, Malta is deemed to be accountable for a number of obligations enforced by the European Commission, which embraces the four main legal directives of the Common European Asylum System —

- The Dublin II Regulation (EC No: 343/2003);
- The Reception Conditions Directives (2003/9/EC);
- The Asylum Procedures Directive (2005/85/EC);
- The Qualifications Directive (2004/83/EC)²⁵³⁴

Following these rules and regulations as a collective measure enables the Member States to establish the said common approach; however each and every one of them has a single purpose that may be essential for a country to enforce than another; such as the Qualification Directive which deems the Maltese Government to carry out an examination to evaluate whether a person may qualify as a refugee; as it is often regarded that Malta is a 'Gateway to Europe'²⁵³⁵, therefore the Government must take considerable steps and careful actions whilst going through evaluation.

However, following the scrutiny by the Maltese Government, asylum-seekers who are deemed eligible to be transferred in terms of the Dublin Regulation, are provided with a questionnaire that they must fill and are later on provided with international protection in due process whilst the Refugee Commissioner decides upon the final remark on the refugee's faith²⁵³⁶. It is also established that asylum-seekers who are not eligible for international protection as a consequence of ineligibility, subsidiary protections are taken place; such as the Temporary Humanitarian Protection New (THPN)²⁵³⁷ which inclines to carry certain conditions alongside its beneficiaries, including a one year exception to remain in Malta due to specific situations²⁵³⁸

Nevertheless, following these rules and regulation will enable Malta a step closer towards achieving a Common European Asylum System, which was initially recognised in 1995, succeeding alongside other ancillary programmes such as the European Refugee Fund.

12.3. Third Country Nationals (TCNs)

12.3.1. Free Movement of Workers

One of the European Union's mission is to create general space for citizens of the EU, while simultaneously respecting national borders²⁵³⁹. This mission statement is also heavily embraced by the treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, whereby the bestowal of dedicated mechanisms transposed into legislative provisions are adopted accordingly, such as —

- Free movement of Workers: Article 45 of the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU),
- Free movement of Goods: Article 28 of TFEU,
- Free movement of Persons: Article 2 of TFEU.

In spite of these procedural instruments, the European Union may not be able to provide them to every member of the European Union; namely to those referred to as 'third country individuals'²⁵⁴⁰. On the other hand, third country nationals legally residing in a European member state do, however, enjoy an amount of limited rights²⁵⁴¹. In fact, third country national on our island benefit from most mechanisms provided by the EU. Though the Maltese state provides such benefits to third country nationals, it is nonetheless regulated through means aforementioned; especially with regards to the freedom of movement of workers and their families.

12.3.2 European Social Fund (ESF)

The ESF aimed to reintegrate the labour market through means of promoting employment by virtue of investing in the EU's human capital²⁵⁴²; namely young people, licit workers, disadvantaged groups and those seeking employment²⁵⁴³. In fact, one of the priority axes during the ESF studies regarding the Maltese Islands consisted of 'Malta empowering people for more jobs and a better quality of life'²⁵⁴⁴. Therefore, amalgamating the issue of migration which Malta had encountered, and the European Social Fund, results in one inevitably aiding the other. As reported by the European Commission, Malta has spent a total of 9 Million Euro between 2000 and 2006 in aid of supporting migrants and minorities through the European Social Fund²⁵⁴⁵. Initially the ESF created 3 objectives which sought to improve the integration process, such as focusing on promoting the development of regions where the GDP per capita was considered unstable under 75%²⁵⁴⁶, supporting the areas which are still adjusting to an industrial change²⁵⁴⁷ and lastly providing funding in order to establish further solid grounds and improvement for branches which are highly fundamental for the integration for migrants, particularly the education and employment sectors.²⁵⁴⁸

Due to its importance, the last objective was solely funded by the ESF as opposed to the first two which were aided by further subsequent fundings. Henceforth, an parallel Operational Programme (OPII) was set up which primarily expands on the third objective of the Programming Period set up by the ESF, through means of establishing 5 different Priority Axes pertaining more directly to the inclusion of migrants in our society. There 5 Priority Axes are:

- Investing in the employability and adaptability of human capital;
- Towards a more inclusive society;
- Investing in people through education, training and lifelong learning;
- Building the institutional administrative capacity; and
- Technical Assistance.²⁵⁴⁹

In fact, Priority Axis (PA) 1 and 3 are currently considered to be the most primitive tools through which the ESF may aid in obtaining the rest of the Priority Axes where the integration of migrants is concerned. Therefore, all six confirmed operations for the operational programme are based on the aforementioned PAs, whereby the selective ones which are considered to be the most pertinent towards the integration of migrants are the first two which were implemented on the 1st and 9th of January 2016, respectively:

a. Training for Employment: which aims to make the labour-market more dynamic and accessible by helping those seeking to enter into such market by providing advice and educational assistance.

b. Youth Guarantee 2.0: enshrining a similar concept correlating to ‘Training for Employment’ — whereby it is targeting a minority group (namely, youths) of those who are at risk of social exclusion thus leading to unemployability.²⁵⁵⁰

A total sum of €11,908,750 is currently allotted to these PAs which are due 2020. Furthermore, it is easily foreseeable that through these two PAs, the integration of migrants is made easier as the main aim is to eliminate social exclusion. However, despite the good faith of the ESF in namely targeting the minority, such as the migrants; it has not entirely achieved what it has intended to; but has rather moved onto other minority groups. As a matter of fact, around 160,000 Maltese citizens have benefitted from the European Social Fund²⁵⁵¹ as opposed to the low percentage of migrants participating in the ESF between 2007-2008²⁵⁵². Nonetheless it cannot be said to have been a failure, as Malta was not facing a refugee crisis at the time therefore it rendered the issue rather inapplicable.

It must also be added that through the ESF, many barriers have been eliminated prior to the refugee crisis, thus rendering it less severe and providing a smoother transition for integration; such as the elimination of the language barrier whereby assistance was duly being given to those facing this difficulty as well as the benefit of enrolling into a language course — as it is considered fundamental by all PAs.

12.4. Concluding Remarks

Although the Maltese state shows to be in a critical position with regards to the refugee crisis, through means of assistance by the EU, a high level of improvement has been made, criteria have been met and further goals were set. In fact, the number of irregular immigrants have reduced drastically from the initiation of the aforementioned programmes and funding since 2012 and 2013. In 2012, it was stipulated that around 16,617 individuals had entered Malta by boat since 2002²⁵⁵³.

Later on in 2014, when it was presupposed that the policies become more strict, it was shown that very few individuals were able to enter Malta and obtain protection; ²⁵⁵⁴accounting to the fact that through EU assistance, Malta had implemented the correct policies and procedures in terms of assessing such individuals, all in the aid of integrating migrants that are qualified to be provided protection by the State.

Nonetheless, through EU programmes and funding, not only did Malta create a pathway for the easement of the refugee crisis prior to its establishment, but had also aided its very own Maltese nationals in becoming more inclusive and socially accepting. Therefore, the current fundings which are showing rapid progress, are also accumulating to further fundings and programmes as a justified outcome of the ongoing progress Malta is subject to.

Introduction

As with most European countries, migration law has been a hot topic in Dutch news, politics and also in the legal scene for quite a while. This is however nothing new to the Netherlands – over the course of history, Dutch immigration has seen multiple large waves of immigration. From refugees coming from the former Southern Netherlands (under Spanish rule at the time), to those arriving from former colonies in the 1940's, there has nearly always been at least one such wave for every generation.

However, the past is the past, and the current discussion on migration is extensive and politically sensitive on all levels – local, regional, national as well as international. This may lead to miscommunications and misunderstandings, especially when multiple cultures and countries are involved. This contribution will give an objective overview of the current legal framework in the Netherlands, including relevant (case) law and other developments in the area, within the scope of the academic framework of this Legal Research Group.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. A description of the national regulations governing asylum

Various international and European treaties apply in the Netherlands, but in addition to these, asylum law is broadly regulated in Dutch law as well. First of all, the General Administrative Legal Act applies. Asylum law is a special part of administrative law. The consequence of this is that – in principle – the general procedural rules of Dutch administrative law apply. In particular, the most important principles derived from these laws, such as the principle of legal certainty, the principle of equality, the principle of due care and the mandatory balancing of interests apply. The administrative courts have jurisdiction in cases concerning decisions in the field of asylum law.²⁵⁵⁵

Secondly, the Aliens Act 2000 (hereafter: the Aliens Act) applies. This law contains the most important rules of Dutch asylum law and the objective is to regulate as many matters as possible in just one legal instrument. There are provisions on access to the country, lawful stay, enforcement of the rules, measures involving deprivation or limitation of liberty, (forced) departure and deportation as well as legal remedies. Articles 28 through 45 specifically regulate asylum.

With regard to certain subjects, the Alien Act further required more detailed regulation by means of a general administrative measure. This was achieved with the adoption of the Aliens Decree ²⁵⁵⁵ K.M. Zwaan and others, Nederlands Migratierecht (Boom Juridische Uitgevers 2016) 34.

2000 (hereafter: the Aliens Decree). The Aliens Decree covers roughly the same subjects as the Aliens Act, but regulates these matters in more detail. It follows the layout of the Aliens Act. For easier comprehension of the rules, the legislator aimed at limiting the number and different levels of regulation. For that reason, the Aliens Decree contains a lot of substantive norms that were previously covered by different regulations. It also contains various policy rules that were previously written down in different instruments. By moving these rules from these instruments to the Aliens Decree, the rules became legally binding, instead of mere policy rules.²⁵⁵⁶

Besides the Aliens Act and Aliens Decree, there is also the Aliens Regulations 2000 (hereafter: the Aliens Regulations). Both the act and the decree state that certain topics should be set out in more detail in a ministerial regulation and the Aliens Regulations fulfil this requirement. Like the Aliens Decree, the Aliens Regulations cover the same topics as the Aliens Act, and follow the same layout. They contain very few substantive norms, as these are now mostly included in the Aliens Decree.²⁵⁵⁷

The fourth legal instrument governing asylum law is the Aliens Act Implementation Guideline. It is once again an elaboration on the Aliens Act and Aliens Decree, containing the applicable policy rules and implementing instructions.²⁵⁵⁸ Contrary to the previously mentioned legal instruments, the Aliens Act Implementation Guideline does not follow the same layout as the Aliens Act, as it has provisions on education, employment and various other topics the Aliens Act does not cover. Furthermore, relevant in the field of asylum are the working instructions of the Immigration and Naturalisation Service (Immigratie- en Naturalisatiedienst, abbreviated as IND), the government body responsible for dealing with requests for asylum. These instructions cannot be classified as policy rules, as they are procedural instructions that are not meant to replace the provisions of the Aliens Act Implementation Guideline. In certain circumstances, the Immigration and Naturalisation Service employees may derogate from the instructions. However, it follows from the principles of legal certainty that an alien can invoke these instructions before a court if the IND employee has acted contrary to them.²⁵⁵⁹ Finally, two legal instruments that do not specifically regulate asylum but may still be relevant are the Foreign Nationals Employment Act and the Civic Integration Act, which as the names suggest, deal with employment and integration of aliens.

1.2. The procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible

The Ministry of Justice and Security is responsible for the asylum procedure and as mentioned before, has appointed the IND as the executive body that deals with carrying out the procedure for granting asylum. The asylum procedure starts with the registration of the asylum seeker. The alien has to report to the Aliens Police, Identification and Trafficking department, which is located on the application centre in Ter Apel. Due to the large number of requests for asylum, this registration can now not only take place in Ter Apel, but also in Veenhuizen, Budel, Didam, Leusden, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. During the registration, the personal details of the alien are registered and fingerprints are lifted.

The second step in the procedure is the application of the asylum seeker. The asylum seeker signs his/her request for asylum and the IND conducts an application interview to determine the identity, nationality and travel route of the asylum seeker. This is, among other things, done with a view to the possible responsibility of a different country due to the Dublin Regulation. After the registration and application, the rest and preparation period, which is a minimum of 6 days, starts.²⁵⁶⁰ The asylum seeker is transferred to a reception centre and will not be heard by the Immigration and Naturalisation Service, since this period is intended for the asylum seeker to rest and regain strength. The Dutch Council for Refugees will inform the asylum seeker about the course of the procedure and his lawyer will inform him with regard to the contents of the procedure. The rest and preparation period is also the moment for a medical check in order to detect medical issues that need treatment right away or that can have consequences for the asylum procedure. Important to note is that while the minimum duration of the rest and preparation period is 6 days, there is no maximum duration. The period can be extended when there is a large influx of asylum seekers, which is currently the case. The period can consequently take up to 6 months.²⁵⁶¹

After the rest and preparation period, the actual asylum procedure starts. The general asylum procedure takes no more than 8 days, during which the IND conducts two interviews. On the first day, the initial interview takes place. During the initial interview, the asylum seeker will have to elaborate on his identity, nationality and travel route. On the second day of the procedure, the asylum seeker is given time to consult with his lawyer and possibly submit corrections and supplements to the report of the initial hearing, as well as time to prepare for the detailed interview. This detailed interview is scheduled for the third day and is intended to discover the reasons for the asylum seeker to flee his country. The asylum seeker first has the opportunity to tell his story, after which the IND employee will ask questions. On day 4, the asylum and his lawyer will once again have time to submit corrections and supplements. The requirements for a person to be considered for asylum are listed in Article 29, point 1 of the Aliens Act. Under A, the Article refers to the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and states that a person who is a refugee within the meaning of that Convention is eligible for asylum in the Netherlands. Article 1 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees defines a refugee as a person who, owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside of his country of nationality and is unable (or, owing to such fear, unwilling) to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside of the country of his former habitual residence is unable or unwilling to return to it. Under B, Article 29 of the Aliens Act states that a person who has made it plausible that he has well-founded reasons to assume that when deported he faces a real risk of severe harm, can be considered for asylum as well. For this ground under B to apply the severe harm should be due to death penalty or execution, torture, inhumane treatment or punishment or there should be a severe and individual threat to the life of the person as a result of random acts of violence in the context of an armed conflict.

After this procedure, the IND can take a variety of decisions. They can decide that the asylum seeker meets the requirements for a residence permit and grant asylum. It is also possible for them to decide that they need more time for the investigation, after which the request will be handled in the extended asylum procedure. A third possibility is the issuance of an intended decision. This will be the case if, according to the IND, the asylum seeker does not meet the requirements for a residence permit and they intend to reject the application. An asylum seeker who receives an intended decision can consult his lawyer and the lawyer can submit a response in which he contests the grounds for rejection. On day 7 or 8, the IND will take a final decision: they either agree with the response and therefore a residence permit is granted after all (in principle for a period of 5 years, after which the IND determines whether or not the asylum seeker still needs protection) or they need more time for the investigation and as a result, the application is moved to the extended asylum procedure, or the application is rejected and the alien is requested to leave the country.²⁵⁶² In accordance with Article 69 of the Aliens Act, the alien has a legal remedy against this decision, and can apply for judicial review before an administrative court.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Introduction

In addition to the previous paragraphs, international and European sources law play a pivotal role in the area of immigration law. From these legal sources, the Directive 2004/38/EC is of paramount importance. Furthermore, a distinction needs to be made regarding the categories of aliens. Firstly, migrants could opt for a short residence of maximum ninety days. Secondly, they can opt for a longer one, which is called regular residence and lasts longer than ninety days. Thirdly, there is the category of those who are refugees and not immigrants and lastly, there is the category of EU citizens in case they choose to reside in the Netherlands.²⁵⁶³ This distinction is important in order to determine which procedure needs to be followed. The question that arises here is how the immigration from both EU and non-EU Member States is implemented and regulated in the Netherlands. Firstly, the regulation with regard to immigration from EU

Member States is discussed. Secondly, the regulation regarding immigration from non-EU Member States is set out. Finally, conclusions are drawn.

2.2. Immigration from EU Member States

Directive 2004/38/EC deals with the right of movement and residence of EU citizens and their family members.²⁵⁶⁴ The Dutch legislator implemented this Directive in the Aliens Decree.²⁵⁶⁵ EU citizens as well as their family members are allowed to enter, exit and reside in the Netherlands freely, on the condition that they have a valid identity card (ID) or passport.²⁵⁶⁶ Their entry can only be refused by the Minister of Security and Justice (Minister) on the grounds of public policy, public security or public health.²⁵⁶⁷

Regarding the right of residence, a distinction should be drawn between the right of residence and the right of permanent residence. The former relates to the residence of less than three months and to that of three months to five years, whereas the latter refers to residence for a period of five years or more. In order to legally reside in the Netherlands for three months, one needs a valid ID or passport, as stated in Article 8.11. Citizens staying longer than three months need to be workers or self-employed persons in the Netherlands or have sufficient resources and a comprehensive health care insurance for themselves and their family members.²⁵⁶⁸ Pursuant to Article 8.13, these persons need to register to the competent authority in order to apply for a residence document: in this case, the Minister. Together with the application, the alien submits at least a valid passport, a statement on with whom the alien is staying and a document showing his family law governed relation.²⁵⁶⁹ Within six months, the Minister issues the residence document with a validity period of a maximum of five years or a period equal to the intended stay of the alien.²⁵⁷⁰ EU citizens and their family members staying longer than five years in the Netherlands continuously, may acquire the right of permanent residence by virtue of Article 8.17. The right of permanent residence shall be requested by the alien. Some discontinuity in the five years of residence is allowed, for instance interruptions of six months or less, or interruptions for compelling reasons, such as a severe illness or a childbirth.²⁵⁷¹ Under Article 8.18 and 8.23, the residence can only be terminated in case of absence from the Dutch territory for two consecutive years or in case of serious concerns relating to public order, security or health. Finally, no termination shall take place if the alien is a minor or if he has lived in the Netherlands for the past ten years.

2.3. Immigration from Non-EU Member States

Regarding immigration from non-EU Member States, a distinction needs to be drawn between short residence, long residence and residence as a refugee.²⁵⁷² As far as the short stay of less than ninety days is concerned, Article 5 of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement applies instead of the Aliens Act. This article stipulates that the alien should produce documents concerning the purpose of his stay and possess a valid border-crossing document and visa.²⁵⁷³

Aliens who wish to stay longer than ninety days need a regular residence permit.²⁵⁷⁴ The regular residence permit can be divided into a stay for a definite and an indefinite period of time.²⁵⁷⁵ The former relates to a stay of no more than five years, while the latter to more than five years. The request for a permit for a definite time period should be deposited at the IND (the Immigration and Naturalisation Service), pursuant to Article 3.101 of Aliens Decree, or at the Dutch embassy in his/her State according to Article 23 of Aliens Act.²⁵⁷⁶ The conditions can be concluded from Article 16 of Aliens Act, which contains a list of grounds for not granting the residence permit. These include, inter alia, a valid temporary residence permit, a valid border-crossing document and a possession of sufficient resources that are permanent. Article 14 of Aliens Act stipulates that the residence permit for a definite period of time is granted for a specific purpose listed in this Article, such as family reunification or labour. Under Article 14(4) of Aliens Act, the permit is valid for a period of five years or a period equal to the intended stay.

Permits for an indefinite period will be granted, if the alien has stayed legally in the Netherlands for five consecutive years, pursuant to Article 21 of Aliens Act. This Article contains a list of grounds for refusal, for instance, when the alien does not have sufficient resources or he poses a threat to national security. Under Article 22, this permit can be withdrawn in cases of absence of twelve months or if the alien threatens public order or security.

The asylum procedure differs from what was mentioned above, as the ratio hereof is to offer protection to aliens.²⁵⁷⁷ Again, a distinction should be made between a permit for a definite or an indefinite period of time. Regarding the permit for a definite time period, Article 29 of the Aliens Act lists the aliens who are eligible for a permit under the asylum procedure. Namely, those who are a Convention refugee, or who are at a real risk of severe danger such as the death penalty or torture, and to family members of an alien with such residence permit. The refugee has to go to the Aliens Police to determine his identity, after which he can apply for a permit. The alien then gets a rest and preparation period of six days.²⁵⁷⁸ The IND shall, pursuant to Article 30 of the Aliens Act, determine whether the request should be dealt with by the Netherlands or another state (based on the Dublin Regulation). Subsequently, the IND shall determine the admissibility of the application under Article 30a of Aliens Act. If that is the case, the IND shall assess whether it is manifestly ill-founded pursuant to Article 30b, as such applications will always be refused.²⁵⁷⁹ A definite residence permit can be withdrawn if a) incorrect information is provided, b) the alien poses a threat to public order or national security, c) the ground the granting was based on has come to an end or d) the alien has moved from his principal residence.²⁵⁸⁰ The procedure is described more thoroughly in paragraph 1.2.

A permit for an indefinite period of time has, pursuant to Article 34 of Aliens Act, the same grounds for refusal as the definite residence permit. Another ground for refusal is the failing of the civic integration test. The permit can be withdrawn if a) incorrect information is provided, b) the alien is convicted of a felony with imprisonment of three years or more, c) the alien has moved his principal residence or d) the alien poses a threat to public order or national security.²⁵⁸¹ Subsequently, if an alien does not have or no longer has a valid permit, the country of residence must be left within four weeks, out of one's own volition.²⁵⁸² If an alien does not leave the country by himself, they may be deported in accordance with Aliens Act Implementation Guidelines (Vc) A3/6.²⁵⁸³ However, despite their obligation to leave, aliens are not always deported. Firstly, because it is a competence of the Minister to deport aliens and not an obligation.²⁵⁸⁴ Additionally, there are several grounds to not deport an alien. Firstly, aliens cannot be deported as long as this is prevented by their state of health.²⁵⁸⁵ Secondly, an alien cannot be deported when he has submitted a provisional ruling and the alien can wait for the decision in the Netherlands. Thirdly, an alien shall not be deported but with permission of the OM (the Public Prosecution Service) in the event that a criminal prosecution against him is ongoing and has no final ruling yet, the alien has a conviction of a non-suspended custodial sentence which he has not yet served, or a custodial order has been imposed on the alien which has not yet been served.²⁵⁸⁶

2.4. Conclusion

To conclude, it is much easier for EU citizens to migrate than it is for non-EU citizens. The rules concerning immigration of EU citizens are harmonised through Directive 2004/38/EC, which contain only few restrictions on the right to free movement and residence. Aliens almost only need an ID to travel freely within the EU. Non-EU citizens, however, have to comply with more conditions and procedural rules. Not only do they need a valid ID or passport, but they also need documents on the purpose of their stay as well as information of the place and persons they are residing with. The IND plays a major role in this, as it is the competent authority, which predominantly decides upon residence permits. Furthermore, the grounds for refusal and termination are much more limited when it comes to EU citizens.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

Within the Dutch executive branch, the Ministry of Security and Justice (Ministerie van Veiligheid en Justitie) is responsible for the Dutch migration policy.²⁵⁸⁷ Like most, if not all, Dutch national policies, the activities falling under the Dutch migration policy are funded by the Dutch central government. The Organizational Decision of the Ministry of Security and Justice 2015 (Organisatiebesluit Ministerie van Veiligheid en Justitie 2015) lays down the different departments and bodies falling under the Ministry, and their respective powers and tasks.²⁵⁸⁸ Article 2 of the Organizational Decision divides the Ministry in a number of dependent directorate-generals. Each one of these has their own working field. Immigration has been brought under the Directorate-General for Alien Affairs. It has been laid down in the Organisational Decision that this directorate-general is responsible for executing the tasks and responsibilities deriving from the laws and regulations concerning migration and Dutch nationality law contained in the Netherlands Nationality Act (Rijkswet op het Nederlanderschap).²⁵⁸⁹ Furthermore, it is responsible for keeping a regulated and controlled flow of incoming and outgoing migrants. On top of that, the directorate-general is responsible for migrants and asylum-seekers during their stay in the Netherlands.²⁵⁹⁰ Naturally flowing from these assigned tasks, the Directorate-General for Alien Affairs is the body in charge of the chain of admittance, supervision and return of aliens.²⁵⁹¹ Lastly, the directorate-general advises the government on migration law and policy and naturalisation and nationality law.²⁵⁹² The Directorate-General for Alien Affairs, being a department of the Ministry of Justice and Security, is hierarchically falling under the responsibility of the Secretary General of the Ministry. As a result, the Secretary General is responsible for monitoring and evaluating the quality of the services the Directorate-General is providing.²⁵⁹³ Furthermore, the Advisory Committee on Migration Affairs is tasked to advise the Minister of Justice and Security on matters of migration law and migration policies.²⁵⁹⁴

The Directorate-General for Alien Affairs is divided into five dependent bodies and directorates. Four of these are of particular importance for the execution of the Dutch migration policy.²⁵⁹⁵ First of all, the Directorate for Migration Policy (Directie Migratiebeleid) is responsible for the overall policy concerning the admittance of migrants and asylum seekers and their stay and return. When executing this task through its three departments, it must do so from a national and international perspective, and in a socially responsible manner.²⁵⁹⁶

The second directorate, the Directorate Supervision of the Alien Chain (Directie Regie Vreemdelingenketen) is responsible for the proper and efficient execution of the Law on Aliens (Vreemdelingenwet 2000) and Dutch alien policy. By fulfilling its tasks, it supports all bodies and organizations that deal with the processes concerning aliens entering the Netherlands.²⁵⁹⁷

Thirdly, the IND is responsible for the proper implementation of Dutch migration legislation and Dutch nationality law.²⁵⁹⁸ The IND is responsible for handling all immigration and asylum applications and takes care of the naturalisation and integration processes for those immigrants who wish to obtain the Dutch nationality. It is thus the IND who decides whether applications by migrants or asylum seekers shall be accepted or not.²⁵⁹⁹ Being a dependent body under the Ministry of Security and Justice, it does not have any influence on the laws regulating immigration and asylum policy in the Netherlands.

Lastly, the Service for Return and Departure (Dienst Terugkeer en Vertrek) is the body responsible for the execution of the migration regulations that deal with the return of aliens to their home country or a third country. The Service does not have any decisionmaking power itself as it merely executes the task properly.²⁶⁰⁰ As stated in the previous paragraph, the decision to return migrants or asylum seekers to their home country or a third country is made by the IND.

Outside the framework of the Ministry of Justice, a small number of independent bodies exists that also deal with migration. One of them is the Central Organ for the Shelter of Asylum Seekers (Centraal Orgaan Opvang Asielzoekers or COA). This organization has been established by means of a law and is thus a legal person under public law.²⁶⁰¹ The powers of the COA are laid down in its founding law and, by being an independent public administrative body, the COA works within the framework of the Framework Law on Independent Public Administrative Bodies.²⁶⁰² The tasks of the COA include the organization of the shelters for asylum seekers and their placements therein. Furthermore, the Minister of Justice can give additional tasks concerning the shelter of asylum seekers.²⁶⁰³

In case of alleged maltreatment of migrants and/or asylum seekers by one of the bodies above, complaints can be filed at the Ombudsman. This entity is responsible for dealing with complaints brought to it by people who feel mistreated by the Dutch government. The Ombudsman has the task of filing reports on these complaints and to make the government aware of its flaws. It can work on the basis of complaints, but also on its own initiative.²⁶⁰⁴

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

The Immigration and Naturalisation Service (IND) of the Ministry of Security and Justice provides monthly updates on the influx of asylum seekers.²⁶⁰⁵ The most recent one dates June 14, 2017 and provides an overview of the month of May, a month during which the total influx of asylum seekers was 2,806, almost 2% less than the previous month (2,857 in April). Among these 1,162 were first applications, 172 were repeated applications, and 1,472 were entries for family reunification. Syrian refugees remained the largest group among first applicants, and overall as well, represent 60% of the total number of applicants. Afghans were the largest group of repeated applications.²⁶⁰⁶

Additional data on these figures can be accessed via Eurostat data, also available on IND's website.²⁶⁰⁷ According to their Migration and migrant population statistics released in March 2017, which shows an overview of population flows for each member state, the Netherlands counts a total of 166.9 thousand immigrants, among which 61.4 thousands are citizens of non-EU member countries, and 4.6 thousands are stateless.²⁶⁰⁸ Moreover, OECD Stat provides access to the International Migration Database, which monitors inflows and outflows of foreign populations and asylum-seekers.²⁶⁰⁹ Likewise, UNHCR's Population Statistics allow for an exploration of this data per country of origin and country of asylum and many more filters.²⁶¹⁰ The Dutch Council for Refugees (VluchtelingenWerk Nederland) is an independent professional NGO that advocates for the protection of asylum seekers and refugees through personal support and advocacy aimed at their access, reception and participation in society, primarily in the Netherlands. They publish statistics regularly on refugees and asylum seekers who are present in the country. Their comprehensive report for 2016 relies on data from UNHCR, Dutch governmental agencies, such as The Netherlands Institute for Social Research, and Statistics Netherlands (Centraal Bureau Voor de Statistiek, CBS).²⁶¹¹ Similarly, the Employment pointer for Refugees (Werkwijzer Vluchtelingen), an initiative supported by the Social and Economic Council of the Netherlands (Sociaal Economische Raad, SER) presents data based on aggregated data from CBS and IND.²⁶¹² Given the centralized nature of these statistics at the national level via CBS and IND, the figures are identical, or very similar.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. Introduction

The relationship between Dutch national law and International law is of a monist nature. This means that international law is part of the domestic legal order and therefore it is not seen as a different legal sphere. This is clearly indicated in article 93 of the Dutch Constitution, which states that “provisions of treaties and of resolutions by international institutions, which may be binding on all persons by virtue of their contents shall become binding after they have been published.”²⁶¹³ The provision also confirms the possibility for Dutch Courts to directly enforce treaty provisions. As far as the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) is concerned, all substantive rights have acquired a self-executing nature within the Dutch legal order, as the Netherlands is a member of the Council of Europe. Whenever domestic legislation is in conflict with a human rights treaty, the national court is not obligated to follow domestic law.²⁶¹⁴ In fact, the Supreme Court of the Netherlands ruled that interpretations of the ECtHR shall be followed when applying treaty provisions on a national level.²⁶¹⁵ This also applies to judgments rendered against other contracting states before the ECtHR; a few of these cases have had influence on Dutch immigration law.

The vast majority of immigration cases before the ECtHR are litigated under Articles 3 and 8 of the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR). With the prohibition against torture and inhumane treatment (Article 3) and the right to family life (reunification, Article 8) serving as legal bases, a deeper level of understanding is required when it comes to migration law in a European context.

5.2. Case law

Article 3 states that “no one shall be subjected to torture or inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment”. Even though this provision does not directly refer to asylum, applicants have frequently used this provision when States made plans to deport them. The rationale behind this is the fact that many asylum seekers would face a real and imminent threat to inhumane and degrading treatment or torture. This particular provision has influenced the case law relating to the expulsion of asylum seekers who do not qualify as refugees under the Convention with regard to the Status of Refugees of 1951. Since the issuance of Soering v. the United Kingdom judgement, such individuals can rely on Article 3 of the ECHR to prevent expulsion from the Netherlands where it would result in refoulement.²⁶¹⁶ The principle of non-refoulement is a fundamental principle of international law, which prevents asylum seekers from being deported in cases where their “life or freedom would be threatened on account of [their] race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion”.²⁶¹⁷

A landmark case against the Netherlands is the judgment of Salah Sheekh v The Netherlands.²⁶¹⁸ The Somali applicant Salah Sheekh entered the country with a false passport, asking for asylum. He claimed to belong to a minority population group and thus he has been prosecuted in Somalia. His asylum request was declined by the Dutch authorities, who held that Sheekh’s reasons for his flight from Somalia were insufficient to qualify him as a refugee. Additionally, based on a country report on Somalia by the Foreign Ministry, the Minister of Immigration and Integration considered the situation in Somalia to be “not such that the mere fact that a person came from that country was sufficient for refugee recognition”.²⁶¹⁹ The Court stated that Article 3 implies an obligation not to deport an individual to a country if “substantial grounds have been shown for believing that the person in question, if expelled, would face a real risk of being subjected to treatment contrary to Article 3 in the receiving country”.²⁶²⁰ Standard practice of the Dutch government and judicial authorities is based on the argument “that it [can] not necessarily be concluded solely on the basis of the general situation in a country that a particular person [runs] a real risk, but that it [is] required that individuals [show] that they [have] been singled out for persecution”.²⁶²¹ Finally, the Court found that there was a violation of Article 3, ruling that the applicant indeed faced a “real risk” when deported back to his country of origin. The ECtHR clearly took issue with the Dutch assessment procedure, doubting the Foreign Ministry’s report on Somalia, which, in its aftermath, forced the Dutch authority to take this case into serious consideration when deciding asylum cases from that date onwards.²⁶²²

Article 8 of the ECHR has shaped Dutch case law on immigration cases even more substantively than the provision on inhumane and degrading treatment (Article 3). With regard to the acceptance of foreign family members to the Netherlands, the Council of State established a means of decision-making that was based on the judgment of Abdulaziz and others v. the United Kingdom, which concerned the initial granting of residence permits to foreign family members.²⁶²³ The applicants, three lawfully and permanently settled residents of the United Kingdom, wanted to challenge the Government’s refusal to permit their husbands to join or remain with them based on the 1980 immigration rules, which were in force at that time. Accordingly, a refusal of admission by the Dutch authorities did not constitute an interference with family life in terms of Article 8 ECHR because the authorities did not interfere to such a degree that would hinder the exercising of family life.²⁶²⁴

Another significant case against the Netherlands concerning migration law in combination with family life is the case of Jeunesse vs. The Netherlands.²⁶²⁵ The case concerned a Surinamese national who resided in the Netherlands longer than was permitted on the basis of her tourist visa, resulting in illegal residence. The applicant attempted to receive an ordinary residence permit showing that, according to the Court, she was aware of the “precariousness” of the situation. She married a Dutch national and had three children resulting from that marriage and had lived in the Netherlands for 16 years by the time. The Dutch government argued that it could relocate the family, since the children were of adaptable age. The central issue that the Court had to assess was whether the Netherlands failed its positive obligation to grant her a residence permit and thus enabling her to exercise family life on their territory.²⁶²⁶ The Court took the best interests and impact on the family in the potential case they would move back to Suriname into consideration. It also considered the fact that the applicant had been tolerated in the country for a long time, possessed no criminal record and that her children are of Dutch nationality and that they had never been to Suriname, concluding the Netherlands to have acted in violation of Article 8.²⁶²⁷ This is a different approach to a prior judgement with a comparable situation of the applicant. In Useinov v. the Netherlands, the applicant had also lived in the country for a considerable period of time and had no criminal record.²⁶²⁸ The court was of the opinion that no exceptional circumstances were present, that the applicant first entered the Netherlands in 1992 at the age of 27 [and that] he must still have [connections] with the FYR of Macedonia, where he presumably grew up and underwent his schooling".²⁶²⁹ Therefore, it deemed the application inadmissible in that case.

5.3. Conclusion

As the Netherlands is a member of the Council of Europe, it is obliged to follow the provisions of the ECHR, but Dutch courts also strongly implement interpretations of the ECtHR on a national level when litigating immigration cases. While these judgments often concern other Contracting States, and therefore do not pose an obligation to change Dutch immigration legislation, the Dutch authorities have changed their line of reasoning based on several of these cases. Examples of these changes have been brought forward in the previous paragraphs. To conclude, due to the monist nature of the relationship between national and International law, ECtHR case law has had considerable influence on Dutch migration law.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

6.1. Monitoring Activity of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance

The European Commission Against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) is a body of the Council of Europe, which works towards the aim to combat racism and intolerance throughout the European continent.²⁶³⁰ The following paragraphs will provide an overview of the ECRI's recommendations and concerns concerning the latest monitoring cycles regarding the Netherlands.

ECRI reiterates its recommendation that the Dutch authorities introduce a provision to the effect that racist motivation constitutes a specific aggravating circumstance in sentencing.²⁶³¹ However, this central recommendation was not implemented by the Dutch legislature, as observed by the ECRI in its 2016 Monitoring Cycle.²⁶³²

The ECRI, in its 2013 report, previously recommended to the authorities to develop a national strategy and policy against racism and racial discrimination, which tackles – at the national level – certain issues and, more generally, sets out objectives, mechanisms for implementation, monitoring and evaluation.²⁶³³ This recommendation was found to be partially implemented.²⁶³⁴ While it is true that on the one hand, the Dutch authorities set up the National Action Programme on Discrimination in 2010, which is entrusted with the task to combat racial discrimination on the labour market, on the other hand, no general governmental programme was put in place in order to combat discrimination.²⁶³⁵ Additionally, the ECRI acknowledges that a labour sector-specific anti-discrimination plan has been implemented. However, other fields have not been covered by the national measures.²⁶³⁶ Furthermore, the government still leaves a large share of the responsibility to prevent and combat racism and racial discrimination to local authorities.²⁶³⁷

In 2013, the ECRI strongly recommended that the Dutch authorities should address any exploitation of temporary agent workers, who are not permanently resident in the Netherlands, by creating a system of licenses for temporary employment agencies, who regularly inspect them, and ensure that such workers could benefit from the safeguards provided for under the law.²⁶³⁸ It can be affirmed that several steps were taken in the Netherlands in order to counteract the exploitation of temporary foreign workers. A remarkable one is the 2015 Sham Employment Arrangement Act, which was aimed at preventing the underpayment of the aforementioned category of workers.²⁶³⁹ Furthermore, additional enforcement powers were granted to the Social Affairs and Employment Inspectorate consisting in the imposition of fines upon the inspection of temporary employment agencies.²⁶⁴⁰ However, the above-mentioned enforcement powers are quite limited by the impossibility of the Inspectorate to withdraw the non-complying businesses' licenses.²⁶⁴¹

6.2. National Bodies

The following bodies are the main actors, set up by the Dutch government, pursuing the fight against racism and discrimination in the Netherlands.

6.2.1. The National Ombudsman

The National Ombudsman's mandate encompasses the handling of complaints concerning the action of administrative authorities.²⁶⁴² The number of complaints received in 2011 includes circa

700 cases concerning racism and racial discrimination.²⁶⁴³ Even though the Ombudsman's decisions are not binding, the 95% of his/her recommendations (i.e. the need to impose compensation) are taken into serious consideration by the authorities.²⁶⁴⁴ If recommendations relating to important cases are not followed, the Ombudsman may raise the matter with the Parliament.²⁶⁴⁵ However, a non-negligible limitation of the Ombudsman's powers is found in the fact that he/she is not competent to receive complaints on government policy or on the content of laws.²⁶⁴⁶

6.2.2. Local anti-discrimination bureaus

The ECRI notes that the Dutch authorities developed an anti-racism strategy as much as possible at the local level, rather than at the national one.²⁶⁴⁷ This may be observed through the Municipal Anti-discrimination Services Act of 2009, which requires every municipality to provide its inhabitants with access to an anti-discrimination service (ADV) and to set up a nationwide network of ADVs, which strictly collaborates with the police in registering complaints concerning discrimination.²⁶⁴⁸ Thanks to this legal instrument, a dense and well performing network of local ADVs is now in place, as the ADVs of 418 municipalities received a total of 6 794 complaints from residents and non-residents in 2011.²⁶⁴⁹ Notwithstanding the above-mentioned success, the ECRI is concerned about the national budget dedicated to the ADVs.²⁶⁵⁰ The 6.2 million of euros received are clearly insufficient to meet the needs of over 6000 cases received.²⁶⁵¹

6.2.3. Netherlands Institute for Human Rights (NIHR)

The NIHR is entrusted with the task of conducting investigations, reporting and making recommendations on the protection against discrimination, dealing with complaints, and encouraging the ratification and observance of human rights treaties and European and international recommendations on this matter.²⁶⁵² Moreover, it can provide advice on laws and regulations either upon request of the authorities or on its own initiative.²⁶⁵³ In its monitoring cycle of 2016, however, the ECRI has expressed the need for financial independence of the NIHR.²⁶⁵⁴

6.2.4. National Consultation Platform on Minorities (Landelijk Overleg Minderheden: LOM)

Finally, LOM's role consists in discussing policy matters of interest to "ethnic minority groups" with the government three times per year, thereby granting the continuity and functioning of the dialogue between the central government and minority groups.²⁶⁵⁵

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. Introduction

The main article to answer the question how migrants' right to healthcare is regulated is Article 10 of the Aliens Act.²⁶⁵⁶ In particular, subsection one states that migrants, who are not legally residing in the Netherlands, do not have the right to medical provisions or benefit. In subsection two, an exception has been made for medically necessary healthcare, education and for providing free legal aid. But this is only a small fraction of the entire healthcare system in the Netherlands. To give a complete answer to the main question, the following aspects will be covered. Firstly, a small introduction to the Dutch healthcare system is given by highlighting the important acts for this topic. Secondly, it is discussed which people have access to healthcare insurance as healthcare insurance is critical for quality healthcare. Thirdly, the exceptions that are in place for illegal aliens so that they have access to healthcare are analysed. Then, the types of healthcare are mentioned, as well as the different groups, which are entitled to and, finally, a conclusion with the final answer to the research topic is drawn.

7.2. The Dutch healthcare system

To find an answer to this research question, a few Dutch acts are of paramount importance and of those acts, only the relevant clauses will be mentioned. First of all, there is the Healthcare Act,²⁶⁵⁷ which regulates the basic principles of the Dutch healthcare system. It states that everyone who is insured by law is obligated to take out an insurance policy. This act also states which healthcare costs shall be insured. The second one is the Long-Term Health Care Act²⁶⁵⁸. This act regulates who is insured by law for long-term treatments and it also states, further in detail, which forms of healthcare are insured. The third one is the Regulation Health Care Insurance,²⁶⁵⁹ which further regulates what kind of healthcare is insured, but also specifies the medically necessary healthcare for specific groups of migrants who have not gotten insurance.

²⁶⁵⁶ Vreemdelingenwet 2000.

²⁶⁵⁷ Zorgverzekeringswet.

²⁶⁵⁸ Wet langdurige zorg.

²⁶⁵⁹ Regeling zorgverzekering.

And the final one is the Health Care for Migrants Regulation.²⁶⁶⁰ This Act regulates the way in which migrants can access healthcare, the kinds of healthcare the migrants have access to and who is responsible to pay for the costs afterwards.

7.3. Who has access to healthcare insurance?

As mentioned above, the Long-Term Health Care Act states who are and who are not insured by law for long-term health care in the Netherlands. Article 2.1.1 states that residents of the Netherlands are insured by law, as those who work in the Kingdom of the Netherlands under an employment contract. Excluded in subsection two are illegal aliens. This means that migrants, who do not fulfil Article 8 of the Aliens Act,²⁶⁶¹ are not entitled to healthcare insurance.²⁶⁶² Legal migrants, who fulfil one of the subsections of Article 8 of the Aliens Act, are insured by law. This means that they are obligated to take out an insurance policy. When the migrants are under the supervision of COA (the Dutch institute responsible for the intake of migrants), the COA will provide them with a health insurance card by being responsible for the costs of healthcare.²⁶⁶³ The COA will conclude a collective insurance for all the migrants that fall under the Healthcare for Migrants Regulation.²⁶⁶⁴ When the migrants are legally residing in the Netherlands, they are obligated to take out their own insurance policy and therefore they lose the collective insurance of COA. From that stage onwards, the migrants are part of the same healthcare system as any other resident of the Netherlands.²⁶⁶⁵

7.4. Exceptions for illegal aliens

Migrants who do not meet the requirements of Article 8 of the Aliens Act and who are not under the supervision of COA, are not legally residing in the Netherlands. This means that they are not insured by law and therefore cannot take out an insurance policy.²⁶⁶⁶ However, there is an exception for medically necessary healthcare, among other things, in Article 10 subsection 2 of the Aliens Act.²⁶⁶⁷ This provision stipulates that illegal immigrants are liable for the costs of healthcare, unless the health care is medically necessary. Whether a treatment is necessary is subject to the judgement of the healthcare provider.²⁶⁶⁸ The treatments that are insured by the basic healthcare insurance to which all the residents in the Netherlands are entitled, may be qualified as medically necessary, except for in vitro fertilisation and gender treatments.²⁶⁶⁹ In case of medically necessary healthcare, the healthcare provider can apply for compensation of the costs at the government agency CAK (an office with various administrative tasks in the area of health care).²⁶⁷⁰

7.5. Types of healthcare migrants are entitled to

When the migrants are still under the supervision of COA and are therefore entitled to the collective insurance, they have access to nearly all types of healthcare that residents of the Netherlands are entitled to. Excluded are in vitro fertilisation and transgender care.²⁶⁷¹ The types of healthcare can be found in the Healthcare Act and the Long-Term Healthcare Act.²⁶⁷² The main subjects are medical care from a general practitioner and an obstetrician, dental care, pharmaceutical care, access to assisting implements, routine care, general care including maternity care, the stay in a healthcare institute and transportation. Furthermore, migrants have the possibility to bring a translator to an appointment with a physician.

However, some restrictions are in place for migrants. Migrants who are under the supervision of COA are not free to choose their own physician. They are only able to use the contracted healthcare providers. Also, appointments with a general practitioner are expected to last no more than ten minutes. This can be too short in case of more complex healthcare issues.²⁶⁷³

When migrants are legally residing in the Netherlands, they have to take out their own insurance policy. This means that the migrants have now the exact same options for a healthcare insurance as residents do, but it also means that they have to pay for the insurance, that there is an obligatory deductible excess and that they lose their right to a free translator.²⁶⁷⁴

In conclusion, how is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

Migrants under the supervision of COA and legal immigrants have access to essentially the same healthcare as do residents of the Netherlands. Some problems do arise for the migrants under the supervision of COA, mainly due to the fact that they are not free to choose their own physician and that appointments with a general practitioner are scheduled for around 10 minutes. Another problem may arise when the migrant is legally residing in the Netherlands. He may not yet speak Dutch on a sufficient level to explain the problems he might have to a physician, but he no longer has a right to a free translator.

Illegal aliens cannot take out an insurance policy. They have access to medical care, but they are in principle liable for the costs of healthcare. This is not the case when health care is medically necessary. The biggest problem in this case is that this is subject to the judgement of the physician in question. In some cases, this might result in too little medical care because the physician is reticent to provide the necessary care in case the person in question is uninsured.

Thankfully, the Healthcare Regulation²⁶⁷⁵ offers the possibility for financial support for the physician, so that he can make a decision based on medical considerations rather than financial ones.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

8.1. Introduction

Good education is an important basis for the future. The right to education is a fundamental right, which gives children the possibility to develop and explore. This right can be found in Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR. This right does not grant a right for an alien to enter or stay in a given country. In principle, the expulsion of a student does not interfere with Article 2. However, a different treatment exclusively based on nationality could infringe this right to education. In this section, the Dutch educational system for migrant children is briefly summarized. A distinction is drawn between regular immigration law, asylum law and more specifically unaccompanied minor aliens. Between those three, a distinction is drawn between legally residing persons and non-legally residing persons.

8.2. General remarks

Article 23 of the Dutch Constitution does not grant an individual the right to education, but it states that education is in the constant concern of the Government. Detailed rules regarding education can be found in different acts. Children have the right to primary and secondary education, which is described in the Primary Education Act of 1984 and the Secondary Education Act of 1968 respectively. In these acts, the legislator did not make a distinction between nationals and aliens or asylum seekers. Each and every child between the age of 5 and 16 has an obligation to attend school. Children between the age of 16 and 18 have an obligation to obtain a basic qualification. The rules on compulsory education are to be found in the Compulsory Education Act. This also applies to children with a different nationality, asylum seekers and aliens. Every child under the age of 18 is always entitled to education.

In principle, aliens can only be entitled to benefits like education, if they legally reside in the Netherlands. A decision to grant legal residence can be given on grounds for asylum (28 Aliens Act) and on regular grounds (14 Aliens Act). Regular grounds are linked to a certain purpose of residence, like employment or study. If you legally reside in the Netherlands for a period during which the period pending deportation or granting is included, you will have a right to benefits. If you do not legally reside in the Netherlands, you will not have the right to benefits based on the principle, which links eligibility for benefits to residency status. This may be found in Article 10 of the Aliens Act. However, as paragraph 2 states, exceptions are possible regarding education and healthcare. The Netherlands, in compliance with Article 2 of the first Protocol, made such exception for children who are subject to compulsory education. In the next paragraphs, the different categories of migrants are discussed, including whether they have a right to education or not, as well as any problems that could arise.

8.3. Regular immigration law

8.3.1. Children of legally residing parents

If the parents of a migrant child have a residence permit, they have the right to the same benefits as Dutch citizens, which includes the right to education.

8.3.2. Children of non-legally residing parents

In principle, children of non-legally residing parents do not have the right to benefits. However, you can fall back on the exception for compulsory education of Article 10(2) of the Aliens Act. The Compulsory Education Act does not distinguish between nationalities and does not make compulsory education conditional on citizenship or legal residence. However, in order to benefit from the Dutch educational system, the legal residence must be prolonged or be permanent. In practice, this may raise problems. Irregular migrants have to send their children to school and schools have to accept them. However, they might want to stay below the radar because they risk expulsion.

8.4 Asylum law

8.4.1. Children of parents with legal asylum residence

If children of asylum seekers legally reside in the Netherlands on the basis of an asylum residence permit, they enjoy the same benefits as Dutch children, based on the principle linking eligibility for benefits to residency status. In addition, the European Union, in Directive 2003/9/EC, decided that children of asylum seekers should have access to education within three months after the submission of their asylum application. Member States should try to accelerate this process and provide for education as soon as possible. It is not always feasible that children can start education the first day they arrive in the Netherlands. In general, the Netherlands tries to provide for education within 72 hours of their arrival. Most asylum seekers' centres are connected to a (primary) school, but parents can also choose a different school for their children. Municipalities must provide for education to children of school age and can be advised by the Central Organ for the Shelter of Asylum Seekers (COA).

8.4.2. Children of parents without legal asylum residence

In principle, an illegal person does not have the right to benefits, but the exception from Article 10(2) of the Aliens Act kicks in. The children have to go to school, even though the parents might risk expulsion. The Dutch Supreme Court, however, decided that families whose asylum application has been rejected, cannot be put on the streets, because the Government has a duty of care to safeguard the interests of the child. The State must provide for adequate reception and care for the children, which includes the education of the children. In practice, the families will often go to special locations and will be frequently moved. The COA will provide for education, but this might be problematic because of the constant moving and lack of available resources.

In 2015, the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights examined the situation in asylum centres and concluded that education is offered in both the emergency and the regular accommodation. Children of asylum seekers have to start with education 72 hours after their arrival in the Netherlands. However, in asylum centres, it may take weeks or even months before the children can start with education, which could violate the prompt access to education. The Institute concluded that a delay of a few days would be acceptable, but starting education months or even weeks later would violate Article 28 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

8.5. Unaccompanied minor aliens (UMA)

8.5.1. Legally residing unaccompanied minors

The unaccompanied minor can be legally residing in the Netherlands based on a residence permit or a no-fault residence permit. A no-fault residence permit is a special permit for unaccompanied undocumented children that cannot go back to their country of origin due to circumstances that are not their “fault”. It will be granted if the child is under the age of 15, if he filed for an asylum application and if he cannot go back to his country of origin for three years, as a result of circumstances beyond his control. If the minor is legally residing in the Netherlands, they enjoy the same benefits as nationals, including education.

8.5.2. Non-legally residing unaccompanied minors

In principle, illegals do not have a right to benefits. However, the exception of education for children of school age applies. In this case, the child might also be afraid to be expelled. However, the constitutional context plays an important role here. Many treaties safeguard the rights of the child. It may be derived from the ruling of the Dutch Supreme Court that children are in the care of the State and they cannot easily be put on the streets or be expelled. Especially unaccompanied minors are a particular vulnerable group, which is why there is an option to grant a no-fault residence permit.

8.6. Conclusion

Every child in the Netherlands is subject to compulsory education. The admission on primary and secondary schools is not conditional on legal residence. The same rules apply for Dutch children and children of asylum seekers and aliens. On the basis of the principle of linking eligibility for benefits to residency status, legal residence implies entitlement to benefits like education. The flipside of this principle entails that if you do not legally reside in the Netherlands, you do not have a right to benefits. However, the Netherlands made an exception when it comes to education. Every child under the age of 18 is always entitled to education, regardless of the status of legal residence (of the parents). Therefore, migrant children are being equally treated as nationals. They have the right to education. Since the Primary Education Act, Secondary Education Act and Compulsory Education Act also do not distinguish between nationals and migrant children; every school must accept (illegal) migrant children and may not discriminate. If the school would discriminate and for example decline an application, it would violate the different acts mentioned above.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

The governing body of regulations for the Netherlands is diverse and in some ways unique. Firstly, the Netherlands is a full member of the Bologna process since 1999. Generally, diplomas from foreign institutions are handled by the Higher Education Institution (HEI). Before sending their diploma to be translated recognized to the Dutch equivalence rate, an international student can usually find information online beforehand. To illustrate, Tilburg University Law School has an extensive explanation of requirements and equivalences for foreign diplomas for virtually every country. However, each and every country is different. For example, English speaking students coming from Australia, New Zealand or South Africa might expect to be treated equal to each other. This is however not the case, as South African students will always need an academic English exam (such as IELTS), whereas students from the US or UK do not.²⁶⁷⁶

Nuffic is the NARIC Centre (National Academic Recognition Information Centre) and the National ENIC Centre (European Network of Information Centres) in The Netherlands. The European ENIC and NARIC Centers work closely together in developing policy for the recognition of diplomas and degrees, meaning that Nuffic is the central point of contact in the Netherlands for evaluation of foreign qualifications. They advise Dutch higher education institutions on the recognition of foreign qualifications (such as diplomas) based on the principles of the Lisbon Recognition Convention and the EAR manual (European Area of Recognition Project). Nuffic's extensive descriptions of foreign education systems are available for download by the general public as well.

Should one wish to be involved in Nuffic, he or she would go through a six-step procedure which begins when one registers with a Higher Education Institution, sends an application package, and passes the credential evaluation. Once advice is sought, the selection process will commence culminating in the selection decision. Through this process, Nuffic tries to provide a holistic and complete approach in providing a common basis for understanding the particularities in the different national academic fields.²⁶⁷⁷

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

10.1. Introduction

To answer the main question concerning the participation of migrants in political decisions, the following subjects will be addressed. At first, the legal basis for the right to vote in the Netherlands. Secondly, the requirements migrants need to fulfill before they are allowed to vote and the differences with EU-nationals will be addressed. Thirdly, the possibility for migrants to vote in the Netherlands for matters in their country of origin. And finally, forms of redress when migrants are impeded to vote.

10.2. Legal basis for the right to vote

The right to vote in the Netherlands is a fundamental right and is therefore mentioned in the Dutch Constitution in Article 4. Article 4 states that all the Dutch citizens have the right to choose members of public representative bodies (algemeen vertegenwoordigende organen). Articles 54 and 129 of the Constitution further regulate the right to vote for the National Government, the Provincial Council and the Municipal Council and in Article 130, an exception has been made for non-natives to vote for the Municipal Council. The right to vote is set out in more detail in the Elections Act.²⁶⁷⁸ This Act regulates the way the Dutch vote for the different bodies in the Netherlands and elaborates further on their right to vote.

10.3. When are migrants entitled to vote?

Migrants who haven't yet obtained Dutch citizenship aren't allowed to vote for the National Government, this is stated in Articles 4 and 54 of the Dutch Constitution. Furthermore, migrants aren't allowed to vote for the Provincial Council either, this is stated in Articles 4 and 129 of the Dutch Constitution. Migrants who haven't yet obtained Dutch citizenship are allowed to vote for the Municipal Council when they meet certain requirements, this is stated in article 129 and 130 of the Dutch Constitution in combination with Article 10 of the Municipalities Act²⁶⁷⁹ and Article B3 of the Elections Act.²⁶⁸⁰ The requirements to vote are the following, according to Article B3 of the Elections Act. Firstly, the migrant must be a resident of the applicable municipality. Secondly, the migrant must have reached the age of eighteen. Thirdly, the migrant has to be legally residing in the Netherlands according to Article 8 of the Aliens Act,²⁶⁸¹ and finally, the migrant must have resided in the Netherlands for at least five years.

When the migrant at hand is an EU-national, the rules are a bit different. European citizens always have the right to vote for the European Parliament and for the Municipal Council in the Member State of residence to the same extent as national citizens.²⁶⁸² This means that European citizens don't have to reside in the Netherlands for at least 5 years to be able to vote. So, the only requirements for EU-nationals are that they must be eighteen years old and that they reside in the municipality where they want to vote, this is also regulated in Article B3 of the Elections Act.

10.4. Can migrants vote in the Netherlands for matter in their country of origin?

This question is tough to answer, because it is mostly up to the country of origin to offer a way for residents abroad to vote. The Netherlands for example offer different ways for residents abroad to vote, like proxy voting, voting by letter and voting at Dutch embassies.²⁶⁸³ Another example is the way Swiss nationals can vote in the Netherlands for elections in Switzerland. The Swiss government has a website where Swiss nationals can find information concerning their political rights in Switzerland when they are abroad, among other things, and there is a possibility to vote in the Netherlands for matters in Switzerland.²⁶⁸⁴

10.5. Forms of redress

The right to vote in the Netherlands is a constitutional right according to Article 4 of the Constitution. This means that interested parties are able to claim the protection under the Constitution with the judiciary in the Netherlands when their right to vote is impeded.²⁶⁸⁵ Furthermore, the right to vote is mentioned in Article 3 of the first Protocol to the ECHR and in Article 25 of the ICCPR, so there is a possibility of international protection.²⁶⁸⁶ In addition, a migrant who is under employment must be able to vote, the employer must enable the employee to do so. If this is not executed correctly, and the employee hasn't been able to vote due to his employment, the employer can be punished under criminal law according to Article Z9 and J10 of the Elections Act.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. Legal Framework

In conformity with Article 2 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, Dutch nationality shall be regulated by an Act of Parliament.²⁶⁸⁷ Therefore, the requirements for obtaining the Dutch citizenship can be found in a law of 1892. According to this law, the Dutch citizenship follows the principles of “jus sanguinis” (right of blood) instead of those of “jus soli” (right of the soil). Nationality is primarily determined by one or both parents possessing Dutch nationality, rather than being born in the territory of the State.²⁶⁸⁸ A child is Dutch if one of the parents was a Dutch citizen at the time of birth, regardless of the territory of birth.²⁶⁸⁹ With regards to migration law, the subject-matter is to be governed under the Dutch Nationality Act (Rijkswet op het Nederlandschap).²⁶⁹⁰

²⁶⁸⁷ Article 2 The Constitution of the Kingdom of the Netherlands

Under Dutch Law, the term “immigrant” can be broadly defined under the Aliens Act of the Netherlands (Vreemdelingenwet) and includes a wide-ranging category of persons. Section 1(m) defines an alien as “any person who does not have Dutch nationality and who is not treated as a Dutch national by virtue of any provision of law.”²⁶⁹¹ Refugees and asylum seekers,²⁶⁹² as well as a wide-ranging category of individuals that have been granted, on any grounds, residence in the Kingdom of the Netherlands fall under this broad definition.²⁶⁹³ Respectively, the Dutch Aliens Circular (Vreemdelingencirculaire) includes people that have been granted residence for study, temporary or regular employment, highly skilled work, and for family reunification.²⁶⁹⁴ However, the term of “migrant” may deem to exclude nationals of other European Union Member States, as they fall within a separate category with different rights and obligations in terms of the right to work and right of residence.²⁶⁹⁵

For a migrant with no family ties to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, there are several means and conditions which one must satisfy in order to be eligible for acquiring the citizenship of the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Hence, a migrant can seek to follow either a) the optional procedure, a simplified version of the naturalisation process,²⁶⁹⁶ or b) the ordinary naturalisation procedure.²⁶⁹⁷

If one has to choose between these two options, a preference is given to the simplified naturalisation process, as it has a lower entry level barrier and it is a less timely and costly procedure. Following any of abovementioned procedures, the migrant must have previously been awarded a valid residence permit and have lived uninterruptedly in the Kingdom of the Netherlands (the length of residence differs between the procedures). It is noteworthy that the Kingdom of the Netherlands does not consist solely of the Netherlands, but it also encompasses the territories of Aruba, Curaçao and Sint Maarten, and the 3 special municipalities of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba.

11.2. Optional procedure – simplified naturalisation process

This option represents a more expeditious and simplified procedure for acquiring nationality. It is primarily designed to suit individuals that have lived all their life, or a significant part of their life in the Kingdom of the Netherlands, have been married to a Dutch national, or have lost their Dutch nationality at one point in time. In order for the individual to apply for the optional procedure, he or she must go through the process at a local municipality.

Generally speaking, the procedure is not as easy accessible to a migrant as the conditions are quite strict. Hence, among the other situations already prescribed above, an individual with a migratory background must fulfil any of the following conditions in order to be eligible for obtaining citizenship under the optional procedure:

- If the migrant has been married to a Dutch citizen / the registered partner of a Dutch citizen for at least 3 years, and has been living uninterruptedly in the Kingdom of the Netherlands for at least 15 years with a valid residence permit.
- If the migrant is 65 years of age or older and has been uninterruptedly in the Kingdom of the Netherlands for at least 15 years with a valid residence permit.

To sum up, for a migrant, the simplified naturalisation process is not generally accessible. The process is shaped for individual with close family ties to Dutch nationals or otherwise for people with a long history connecting them to the Kingdom of the Netherlands. It is worth mentioning that through the optional procedure, one does not need to renounce his/her other nationality, nor to sit any required language or other integration test.

11.3. The naturalisation procedure

The naturalisation procedure is the more accessible method and with conditions less burdensome for the applicant. It is a method which has been designed for migrants, or people with a smaller connection to the Netherlands to apply and seek to obtain the Dutch nationality.

For a migrant seeking to acquire the Dutch nationality, the best advised method in doing so is through the naturalisation procedure. In order to be eligible for obtaining nationality through the naturalisation process, one must fulfil all of the following conditions:

- The individual should be at least 18 years old.
- The individual should have lived uninterruptedly in the Kingdom of the Netherlands for at least 5 years with a valid residence permit. During this time, the residence permit must have always been extended on time. The residence permit must also be valid during the procedure. In that regard, the residence permit must have been awarded as a permanent and not as a temporary one.²⁶⁹⁸
- The individual must not exhibit a danger to the public, demonstrated by the fact that he or she in the four years preceding the application, the applicant has not been given any custodial sentence, training order, community service order or high monetary penalty.²⁶⁹⁹

²⁶⁹⁸ For reference on what temporary residence permits are, See : <https://ind.nl/en/Pages/temporary-and-non-temporary-purposes-of-stay.aspx>

- The individual should provide evidence that he or she is sufficiently integrated in Dutch society.²⁷⁰⁰

If a migrant fulfils the conditions set forth above, then he or she may seek to apply through the naturalisation procedure. As part of the integration requirements, the migrant must apply and successfully pass a language and integration test. The first test consists of 40 questions concerning, amongst others, questions about the state, income and financial matters, healthcare, residence, traffic, etc. The second test aims to assess whether the migrant speaks, understands, reads and writes the Dutch language at a minimum of A2 level.²⁷⁰¹

Lastly, as part of the process of obtaining Dutch nationality, if all the above requirements are fulfilled, the migrant must seek to renounce all other nationalities. The final step in the process is the attendance of a naturalization ceremony in which the migrant must make a declaration of solidarity.

11.4. Double nationality

The underlying principle in the Dutch Nationality Act is that double nationality is not allowed and that once a person has acquired the Dutch nationality, he or she must renounce any other nationalities and maintain solely the Dutch one. This may be particularly emphasised in the naturalisation procedure. However, in practice certain exemptions are allowed. As was mentioned above, obtaining the Dutch nationality through the optional procedure does not require a migrant to renounce their former nationality.

Article 9 of the Dutch Nationality Act lays down that an application may be refused if “the applicant possessing a foreign nationality has not made every effort to renounce that nationality and/or is not prepared to make such effort after his or her naturalisation, unless this cannot reasonably be expected from him or her.” Hence, if one is looking to obtain nationality through the naturalisation process, the principle that has to be followed is that any other nationality should be renounced.

In conformity with the statement “this cannot reasonably be expected”, several exceptions have been confirmed that would allow for the migrant to maintain his or her previous nationality. Thus, amongst others, one does not have to abide by the requirement of renouncing any previous nationality if:

- The applicant automatically loses the original nationality when becoming a Dutch citizen.
- The country of which the applicant is a national does not allow for renunciation of citizenship.
- The applicant is married to a Dutch citizen.

- The applicant is below the age of 18 years old.
- The applicant is in possession of an asylum residence permit.
- The applicant will incur a significant loss as a result, due to either paying large sums of money to go through the process or losing certain rights.
- The applicant must fulfil the military service before being able to renounce nationality.²⁷⁰²

In the end, all those stated above are examples of events under which it appears to be unreasonable for a migrant to be asked to renounce their original nationality. The maintenance of double nationality is possible under such kind of circumstances, though other situations may also fall within such a scope. However, the burden of proof is upon the shoulders of the applicant in such situation. If proven, such situations constitute an exception from the general rule that the applicant is expected to renounce his or her original nationality when becoming a Dutch citizen.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

The European Union's 2014 census on migrant integration policy index (MIPEX) placed the Netherlands at the 11th place out of 38 survey countries. MIPEX suggests that the Dutch approach to integration barely qualifies as 'slightly favourable' for guaranteeing equal rights and opportunities for immigrants, scoring 60/100.²⁷⁰³

The Central Organ for the Shelter of Asylum Seekers (COA) is responsible for the reception, supervision and departure (from the reception location) of asylum seekers coming to the Netherlands. According to their website: "due to the recent high inflow of asylum seekers, the Netherlands currently does not have enough reception places for them in normal reception centres. That is why asylum seekers are accommodated in (temporary) emergency reception locations with limited facilities."²⁷⁰⁴ COA fulfils its mission and carries out its project with the support of funds and grants. An example is the European Refugee Fund (ERF) of the European Union, which is meant to finance projects for reception and integration of asylum seekers and refugees.²⁷⁰⁵

In 2014, the European Commission inaugurated the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF), which is set up for the period 2014-20, with a total of EUR 3.137 billion for the seven years. The fund should promote the efficient management of migration flows and the implementation, strengthening and development of a common Union approach to asylum and immigration. All EU States except Denmark participate in the implementation of this Fund. In the Netherlands, the granting of AMIF subsidies is administrated by the Agency of Social Affairs and Employment (Agentschap SZW) under the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (Ministerie van Sociale Zaken en Werkgelegenheid).²⁷⁰⁶ According to the latest updates, the deadline for submissions for the current year was 28 March. The results have not been published yet. The subsidies granted for the year 2015 were published in December 2016 as the table below shows (only integration related projects are displayed)²⁷⁰⁷:

Conclusions

In a legal field as diverse as migration law, it will always be difficult to make short conclusions. There will always be an exception, a new development or a different point of view – this is what makes the area so complex and interesting to research. As the questions have been answered in depth in the paragraphs above, this conclusion shall serve only to give a short overview of what was answered.

The Dutch asylum procedure is complex, and extensively regulated. The Immigration and Naturalisation Service does a considerable amount of research on and with the asylum seeker, and has a variety of options on how to close the procedure, which may be contested in different ways by the asylum seeker. The regulations on residence permits are less extensive, though also complex by virtue of their diversity. There is a strong differentiation between the regulations that are applicable to EU citizens, and those that apply for non-EU citizens.

The acquisition of citizenship is even more complicated, as there are multiple naturalisation procedures, which have different requirements and vary slightly in consequence. For example, one must renounce ones previous nationality in order to obtain Dutch nationality through the regular naturalisation procedure, while this is not the case for the simplified procedure.

The authority to deal with migrants is shared between various institutions, falling mostly within the working field of the Ministry of Security and Justice. This includes the Immigration and Naturalisation Service, as well as several directorates. Some independent bodies, like the Central Organ for the Shelter of Asylum Seekers, work within their own, independent sphere.

In the litigation of migration cases, the Dutch authorities adhere strongly to ECtHR rulings, even when the cases concern other Contracting States. However, the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance are largely implemented only to partial extent. The same may be said about the recommendations of national human rights bodies.

Migrant's rights in more specific areas such as health care, education or the right to vote may be found in different places. Whereas the right to health care may be found in a specific regulation (the Health Care for Migrants Regulation), the right to education is found in the more general Aliens Act. Both are however supported by the general Dutch regulations, be it the general Health Care (Insurance) regulations or the general Compulsory Education Act. The right to vote may only be found in one such general Dutch regulation – the Elections Act, as well as in the Constitution.

With regards to the recognition of diplomas, the procedure in the Netherlands is facilitated by Nuffic, which is the central point of information as well as the advisor to the Higher Education Institution. Due to this holistic approach, the procedure is not as scattered as the other procedures mentioned in this contribution.

As for the more statistically oriented areas of this research, the most important numbers of this report were that the Netherlands counted a total of 166.9 thousand immigrants as of March 2017, among which 61.4 thousands were citizens of non-EU member countries, and 4.6 thousands were stateless. It is also interesting to note that the Netherlands received just over €9.250.000 in Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF) subsidies for several integration-oriented recipients.

As stated above, these findings are but a short conclusion on what was brought up in the other paragraphs. Above all, we hope our contribution, as well as this Legal Research Group in general, contributes to a just world, in which there is respect for human dignity and cultural diversity.

Introduction

Migration law is an extensive legal area, including both formal, material and procedural aspects. Migration law is a frequently debated topic in Norwegian politics, and the various governments in office tend to introduce extensive changes to the legal regime regulating migration law.

This report aims to give an overview of how some specific areas of migration law is regulated in Norway. The legal regime is vast, and a complete description of this is impossible. This report will provide a more succinct and concise outline of the questions provided.

Writing this report, we have primarily used Norwegian legislation to map the legal situation regarding the various questions. Moreover, for some legal areas, the applicable directorate or ministry have set regulations, which contain further precisions of the content of the Acts.

The Norwegian legal system contains elements of both common and civil law, and decisions by the Norwegian Supreme Court carries great weight as source of law. Moreover, the preparatory works for the Norwegian acts are recognised as a valid secondary source of law, and these provide useful guidance for understanding the content of the Acts, as these usually are quite succinct.

Other secondary sources include circulars and legal theory, and we have to a large extent utilised governmental websites and guidelines as well.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

Norwegian law contains no explicit right to asylum. There is, however, an implicit right both to seek and enjoy asylum, and a comprehensive body of law that regulates the refugee status determination process related to the granting of asylum. As such, Norwegian regulations governing asylum formally is in line with Article 14 of the Universal Declaration for Human Rights.²⁷⁰⁸ Furthermore, Norway's asylum regulations aim to implement the refugee law and human rights principles enacted in the 1951 Convention on the Status of Refugees (the Refugee Convention) and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), both to which Norway is a signatory. As opposed to its generally dualistic approach to international law, Norway practices sector monism within the field of immigration law, including regulations governing asylum. In practice, this means that in case of national regulations regarding asylum perceived as being in non-compliance with Norway's international obligations, precedence will be given to the international obligation at hand.²⁷⁰⁹

²⁷⁰⁸ The article states that “[e]veryone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution”.

²⁷⁰⁹ Preparatory work Ot.prp. nr. 75 (2006-2007), 401.

Access to seeking and enjoying asylum and the multiple rights and obligations connected to this is primarily regulated by the Immigration Act²⁷¹⁰. The key regulation in terms of asylum is found in Chapter 4 under the headline “Protection” in Section 28 a) and b), titled “Residence permit for foreign nationals in need of protection (asylum)”. Section 28 a) is modelled after Article 1 in the Refugee Convention, while Section b) seeks to meet Norway’s obligations according to ECHR Article 3. Chapter 5 is titled “Right of residence on the grounds of strong humanitarian considerations or a particular connection with Norway” and contains one single paragraph regulating so-called humanitarian protection. Regulations, circulars and instructions passed by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security are key in understanding the actual application of the law.

1.1. The eligibility requirements for a person to be considered for asylum under Norwegian law.

Under Norwegian asylum law, being granted asylum and being granted refugee status is the same. As such, if a person meets the eligibility requirements for being a refugee, asylum is granted. As briefly touched upon above, refugee status in Norway is granted based on two different legal regimes; the Refugee Convention and the ECHR. The Norwegian definition of a refugee is often framed as an extended refugee definition, because it not only applies to people recognised as refugees under the Refugee Convention.

According to the Immigration Act Section 28 a refugee is someone with;

- a well-founded fear of being persecuted due to his or her ethnicity, origin, skin colour, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or for reasons of political opinion, and is unable, or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail for protection from his or her country, or
- without falling within the scope of a) but nevertheless faces real risk of being subjected to death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment upon return.

If granted refugee status, the person is normally given asylum, that is, the right to stay. There are however exceptions from this, and these will be covered in greater detail below.

1.2. The eligibility requirements for a person to be considered for humanitarian protection under Norwegian law.

A person who does not meet the eligibility requirements for being granted asylum, may be granted legal stay in Norway due to strong humanitarian consideration or particular connection with Norway. This is termed as humanitarian protection and is regulated by Section 38 of the Immigration Act. According to the Section, whether there is strong humanitarian consideration, depends on an overall assessment of the person’s situation, where importance is given to:

²⁷¹⁰ Act concerning the entry of foreign nationals into the Kingdom and their presence in the realm 2008 [Utlendingsloven].

- whether the foreign national is a minor who would be without proper care if returned
- has compelling health circumstances
- is subject to social or humanitarian circumstances relating to the return situation
- have been victim of human trafficking

In cases concerning children, the best interests of the child shall be a fundamental consideration. As opposed to decisions made in accordance with Section 28 (1) a and b, importance may be given to considerations relating to immigration control. According to the law, relevant in this regard is:

- possible consequences for the number of applications based on similar grounds,
- social consequences,
- the need for control, and
- respect for the other provisions of the Act.

Another significant difference between Section 28 and 38, is that persons granted residence permit based on a recognition of need of humanitarian protection will not be given the same rights as a person recognised as refugees. Consequently, humanitarian protection may be termed a subsidiary form of protection.

1.3. The Norwegian asylum granting process and the bodies involved.

At an overall level, The Norwegian Directorate of Immigration (UDI) is the central government agency specifically dealing with migration and implementation of the Norwegian government's immigration and refugee policy.²⁷¹¹ In the asylum granting process, UDI is instrumental because it not only serves as the first instance in the decision-making hierarchy, but it is also central in the evolution of interpretation practices within this field of law. In the following, the focus will be on the asylum granting process in Norway.

There are two main processes in which refugees may be granted asylum in Norway, both in which depend on the criteria in either the Immigration Act Section 28 a) or b) being met. The first process depends on the refugee seeking asylum after physically accessing “the realm or the Norwegian border”. The second is initiated upon request by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) or other international organisations when the refugee has left his or her country of origin, but not entered Norway. In the following, these processes will be referred to as the normal procedure and the quota procedure. Only the normal procedure will be presented in depth as the refugee status determination criteria, and the grounds for being granted asylum, are identical in both processes.²⁷¹² Furthermore, even though the UNHCR initiates the quota procedure, it is the Norwegian immigration administration that undertakes the asylum granting process.

In the normal procedure for seeking asylum, different sub-processes apply depending on what country the applicant seeks protection from. The responsibility for receiving and registering the asylum application is placed with the National Police Immigration Service (PU). PU is also responsible for mapping the applicant's travel route, and, in cooperation with Norwegian ID Centre, for investigating the applicant's identity. Based on the PU registration, the application is placed in the appropriate sub-procedure. Although so-called Dublin-cases represent significant exceptions, most asylum seekers will be called to a refugee status determination interview at UDI after being registered with PU²⁷¹³. As already mentioned, UDI serves as the first instance in the asylum granting process. This entails that UDI undertakes the actual status determination process and produces the administrative decision stating whether the asylum seeker is being granted asylum or not, and what rights and duties which rests upon the applicant.²⁷¹⁴ This means that even in cases where the PU registration causes the asylum seeker to be placed in a category that is not called for an asylum interview, UDI will be the responsible body for passing a decision in their case.

²⁷¹¹ For more on the bodies/entities specifically dealing with migrants, see Question 3.

²⁷¹² It should be noted that under Section 35, residence permit may also be granted based on Section 38, however, this is not referred to as asylum. See 1.2 and 1.3.

Asylum seekers should be called for an interview with UDI "at the earliest opportunity, and under any circumstances before an administrative decision is made in the case".²⁷¹⁵ The asylum interview is decisive of the outcome of an asylum application, and while the application is obligated to do "his or her best to present necessary documentation and to assist in obtaining necessary information", UDI also holds an independent responsibility for obtaining necessary and available information about the application before the administrative decision is made.²⁷¹⁶ According to the Immigration Act Section 81 (1), the asylum interview must be undertaken in a language in which the applicant can communicate "adequately".

In sum, the claims presented by the asylum seekers' during the interview are to be assumed as valid by UDI, if the applicant has provided necessary information, is perceived as generally credible and his or her story seems "somewhat likely"²⁷¹⁷. One major difference between the asylum granting process and the procedure to grant humanitarian protection is that while a person can apply asylum, one cannot apply for humanitarian protection. However, if a person is not granted asylum, "the decision-making authority shall on its own initiative consider whether the provisions of Section 38 shall be applied", meaning that UDI and UNE are obligated to consider whether a rejected asylum seeker meets the criteria for humanitarian protection.²⁷¹⁸ Another major difference is that in the assessment of whether to grant a humanitarian protection, importance may be attached to considerations relating to "immigration control", including "possible consequences for the number of applications based on similar grounds", "social consequences" and "the need for control".²⁷¹⁹

In order to assess the asylum seeker's claim, UDI collects information from sources other than those provided by the asylum seeker. The Norwegian Country of Origin Information Centre (Landinfo) is an independent and objective expert body administratively governed by UDI, that ²⁷¹³ The need for protection for an asylum application processed as a Dublin case will not be assessed by the UDI.

²⁷¹⁴ What is a decision according to Norwegian law is regulated by the Act relating to procedure in cases concerning the public administration 1967 [Forvaltningsloven], Section 2.

²⁷¹⁷ See Supreme Court of Norway Rettstidene [2011] 1481, especially section 39-46, where the Supreme Court states that reasonable doubt must be given in favour of the asylum seeker.

²⁷¹⁸ The "single procedure", cf. Immigration Act, Section 28.

²⁷¹⁹ Immigration Act, Section 38 (4).

provides information about social conditions and the human rights situation in countries during the status determination process. In practice, information about the country of origin provided by Landinfo is given considerable weight in individual cases, and even though its researchers never participate in the actual decision-making process, they often serve as expert witnesses in cases being tried either within The Immigration Appeals Board (UNE) or in court.²⁷²⁰

The actual processing time within UDI varies depending on the number of asylum seekers arriving to Norway, what country the applicant seeks protection from, the complexity of the case and political prioritization. For example, if UDI assumes that you are from a country where the inhabitants can get help from their own authorities, the asylum application will be processed and, in most of the cases, rejected within 48 hours.²⁷²¹ In other cases, where the asylum seeker is from Armenia, Bangladesh, Georgia, Belarus, India, Nepal, Russia (ethnic Russians only) or Kosovo (minorities only), their cases will be processed within three weeks.²⁷²² In the non-prioritized cases however, it may take more than one year before a decision is reached by UDI.²⁷²³

Asylum seekers denied asylum and humanitarian protection are entitled to free legal aid, and they may appeal the decisions.²⁷²⁴ At the initial stage, UDI processes the complaint, and if the decision is upheld, the case will be referred to UNE.²⁷²⁵ UNE then decides whether to process the complaint in the Grand Board, or by its secretariat. Cases not raising considerable doubt may be processed by a single Board chair, which entails that the chair delegates the decision to UNE's secretariat.²⁷²⁶

In practice, the majority of decisions are reached after a written complaint process handled by a case worker in the UNE secretariat. Only about five percent of the cases are assessed by UNE's Grand Board. If called to a Grand Board meeting, the asylum seeker may have a right to meet in person and if so, he or she will have a right to bring a lawyer or another authorised representative to the hearing. In the majority of the cases brought to the board, a chair and two members will decide the outcome of the appeal. In some cases, however, a grand board is summoned, and this consists of three Board chairs and four Board members.²⁷²⁷ The Ministry of Justice and Public Security is authorised to instruct both UDI and UNE in regards as to how the law is to be interpreted and in exercise of discretion,²⁷²⁸ and final decisions reached in UNE may be appealed into the court system.²⁷²⁹

1.4. A description of the grounds for exclusion of refugee protection;

Even if a person is considered a refugee according to the Immigration Act, Section 28 a) or b), exclusion from refugee status may happen under certain circumstances. This could be done based on serious criminal offences, on so-called subjective sur place or on what is considered an internal flight alternative.

According to Section 28 (4), refugee status is not to be granted if the person falls within the scope of Article 1D or E of the Refugee Convention, or where there are serious reasons for considering that he or she:

- (a) has committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity, as defined in the international instruments drawn up to make provisions in respect of such crimes,
- (b) has committed a serious non-political crime outside Norway's borders, prior to his or her admission to Norway as a refugee, or
- (c) has been guilty of acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Nor does the right to be recognised as a refugee apply if the foreign national has been convicted by final judgment of a particularly serious crime and for this reason constitutes a threat to Norwegian society. If there are grounds for expelling a foreign national out of regard for fundamental national interests under section 126, second paragraph, section 126, fifth paragraph, applies.

Nor shall a foreign national be entitled to recognition as a refugee if there are grounds for expelling him or her based on fundamental national interests, or the foreign national, having been convicted by final judgment of a particularly serious crime, thereby constitutes a danger to Norwegian society.

Nor shall a foreign national be entitled to recognition as a refugee if the foreign national left his or her country of origin solely in order to avoid penal sanctions for one or more criminal acts that might have been punishable by imprisonment if the acts had been committed in Norway.

Furthermore, the Immigration Act accepts exclusion from refugee status in cases when the person's need for protection has arisen since the applicant left his or her country of origin, and is a result of the applicant's own acts. According to Section 28 (4), when assessing whether an exemption shall be made from the general rule, "particular importance shall be attached to whether the need for protection is due to acts that are punishable under Norwegian law, or whether it seems most likely that the main purpose of the acts was to obtain a residence permit".²⁷³⁰

Norway also considers internal protection as an alternative to granting refugee status. According to Section 28 (5)

"The right to be recognised as a refugee under the first paragraph shall not apply if the foreign national may obtain effective protection in other parts of his or her country of origin than the area from which the applicant has fled, and it is not unreasonable to direct the applicant to seek protection in those parts of his or her country of origin”.

The exclusion clauses are not the same as exceptions from the non-refoulement rule, which is arguably universal, and in any case, seen as absolute in the Norwegian context. In practice, this means that even though a person is excluded from refugee status, as long as the need for protection is still present, the person will not be returned, Section 73, ref. Section 31 (5).

1.5 A description of the grounds for revocation of asylum status.

If a foreign national has already been granted a residence permit as a refugee under section 28, the residence permit may be revoked if the foreign national:

- has voluntarily re-availed himself or herself of the protection of the country of nationality,
- having lost his or her nationality, has voluntarily re-acquired it,
- has acquired a new nationality, and enjoys the protection of the country of his or her new nationality,
- has voluntarily re-established himself or herself in the country which he or she left or outside which he or she remained owing to fear of persecution,
- can no longer refuse to avail himself or herself of the protection of the country of nationality, because the circumstances in connection with which he or she was recognised as a refugee under section 28 or received protection under section 34 are no longer present, or
- is not a national of any country, and because the circumstances as a result of which the foreign national was recognised as a refugee are no longer present, is able to return to the country of former residence. A residence permit shall not be revoked under the first paragraph

(e) or (f) if the foreign national can invoke compelling grounds in connection with prior persecution for rejecting the protection of the country in which he or she has citizenship rights or for refusing to return to the country of former habitual residence.²⁷³¹

According to Section 63, a temporary or permanent residence permit may be revoked if the foreign national has knowingly given incorrect information or failed to disclose matters of material significance for the administrative decision, or where this otherwise follows from general rules of administrative law. A temporary or permanent residence permit may also be revoked where a foreign national who is not a national of a Schengen country is to be expelled from such a country based on an assessment which could have led to expulsion out of regard for fundamental national interests, see section 126, second paragraph.

²⁷³¹ Immigration Act, Section 37.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Definition of a migrant

In general, a migrant is understood as a person who leaves their habitual place to reside somewhere else, either within his or her own country or across international borders. The Immigration Act²⁷³² applies to foreign nationals' admission and their residence in the realm, but Norwegian nationals can be obligated by the Act cf. section 2.

A foreign national is any person who is not a Norwegian national cf. section 5, and a person is Norwegian if he or she is born in Norway and one of his or her parents is a Norwegian citizen or adopted by parents with Norwegian citizenship.²⁷³³

The Immigration Act defines the foreign nationals' status in accordance with the reason for their entry to Norway, whether the purpose is work, education, protection, humanitarian reason or family immigration.

The Immigration Act section 28 regulate migrants' applications for being recognised as a refugee, which is contingent upon a well-founded fear for persecution due to that person's background.²⁷³⁴ As described above, foreign nationals with strong humanitarian consideration, or with special connection to the Norwegian realm, he or she shall be considered as a migrant cf. section 38 first paragraph. Collective protection can also be granted in a mass flight situation cf. section 34.

The spouse of a foreign national who has or will be granted permanent residence permit may be granted admission and permanent residence permit to the realm cf. section 40 first paragraph.

Chapter 13 implements the EFTA Convention on EEA citizens and their families' right to enter and stay in other EU member states. The EEA and EFTA agreements give EEA citizens a more favorable legal position in certain areas of immigration law, as compared to other foreigners moving across borders within the EEA.

EEA members can permanently reside in Norway, provided that the member have resided in Norway for five consecutive years.²⁷³⁵ Rules on residence is replaced by a registration system, but if a family-member of an EEA member is from a third world country, a scheme of residence card is currently applicable.

The chapter must be interpreted in accordance with the interpretation and application of the European Human Rights Court, as well as the practice of the EFTA court.

Nordic foreigners are considered to freely enter the boundaries of each other's countries.²⁷³⁶

2.2. General immigration process

The administrative immigration process is regulated in chapter 11 of the Immigration Act, which regulates both migration decisions in general, as well as asylum decisions in particular.²⁷³⁷

The chapter is divided into three parts, where the first part regulates the general administrative proceeding rules. The second part concerns the application for protection, especially for vulnerable foreign nationals. The third part regards representatives of unaccompanied minors seeking asylum.

Nevertheless, it is the general rules of the Administrative Act²⁷³⁸ that governs administrative proceedings, unless otherwise is said in the Immigration Act²⁷³⁹. This include individual decisions, such as granting visa, residence permit or deportation, while the more specialized chapter 11 of the Immigration Act will supplement the Administration Act.

As an administrative proceeding rule, public officials are obliged to refer to the grounds for the decision. Therefore, the Immigration officials are obliged to send an advance notification and ensure a thorough clarification, by for instance giving the migrant possibility to communicate in a language he or she can speak. Moreover, section 81 of the Immigration Act regards the refugees' right to express their opinions before a decision regarding rejection, expulsion or revocation of residence cards is made.

Section 82 reaffirms the Immigration officials' obligation to provide guidance within their field of competence, namely on the foreign national's right to a representative, legal aid and contact with his or her country's representation.²⁷⁴⁰ In addition, the foreign national is obligated to appear and provide information that may be of importance to the decision unless this conflicts with their need for protection, cf. section 83.

This right of information is extensive and may come in conflict with ECHR art. 8. Therefore, the information must be both necessary and proportional to the case.

According to section 84 A, the Immigration authorities are given right to register, compel and save personal and sensitive information for the return cases. This data can only be used by the body itself for the return case.

Section 84 B excludes employees in child care and asylum institutions from their duty of secrecy to the Immigration office. The access to request data from child care services is limited to information about the origin of country, identity, caregiver, age and vulnerability of the minors.

There are particular requirements for those seeking family reunification, such as information about the sponsors' or the spouses' conduct, DNA testing and age clarification methods.

Section 85 regulates the authorities' right to use information of conduct when dealing with a case in accordance with section 40 (5), which states that if it is most likely that the applicant or the applicants children will be abused or grossly exploited, residence permit can be rejected and 6th, regarding the legal amount of partners, thus applicants and sponsor. likelihood of such crimes is based on information given from the police to the immigration authorities which can prove such crimes to likely happen. The given information must be relevant for the assessment.

Section 86 allows for the immigration authorities to request DNA-testing from both spouses in the assessment of family immigration cases, provided that it is necessary to determine the biological bond. If the person declines the authorities request without a reason ground, it may be used in the assessment of the decision against him.

Section 87 allows for the authorities to request the national foreigner to carry out an age test. If a spouse's children are over the age of 18, they are not considered in the applicant's family immigration. This applies also to applications for residence on humanitarian grounds.

Section 90 regulates the implementation of the decisions, and decisions concerning rejection of status, admissibility and expulsion are prioritized. As earlier described, the foreign nationals are in some cases entitled to free legal aid.²⁷⁴¹ This also applies also for decisions the Ministry decides should be reviewed by Directorate of Immigration.²⁷⁴²

The particular immigration rules in section 93 to 98 concern foreign nationals applying for protection. The foreign nationals shall, without undue delay, be lodged with the police and hand over all identity related documentation, and provide information regarding his or her identity and assist in further information.²⁷⁴³ While the application is being assessed, the applicant shall be offered accommodation.²⁷⁴⁴ After the asylum interview and identity clearance has found place, and there is no question of rejecting the application, the right to take employment may be given.²⁷⁴⁵

2.3. Revocation of residence permit

Foreign nationals who seek individual protection under section 28 or collective protection in a mass flight situation under section 34, their residence permit under section 60 and 62 may be revoked in accordance with the Immigration Act section 37.²⁷⁴⁶

The preparatory works of the section state that the conditions shall be applied carefully,²⁷⁴⁷ and the same is stated by the UNHCR regarding the similar regulation in the Refugee Convention 1 C. In light of this, the Ministry has faced some critique for an increased focus on revocation of residence permit of refugee status and residence permit, especially for Somalian nationals cf. sec. 37 e and f.

In the case of Nunez v. Norway, the ECHR criticized Norway for not taking the child's best interest into sufficient consideration. Although their mother had committed crimes and given incorrect information, the child's interest to stay with their mothers, and the lack of effective decision making, spoke in favour of the residence of the mother.

²⁷⁴⁷ Preparatory work Prp. Nr 75 (2006-07) 419-420.

In a Norwegian Supreme Court case from 2016, a non-Norwegian national got his family unification permit revoked due to his marriage to a Norwegian national being pro forma. This entailed that his children got their residence permits revoked as well, and the court held that the children's permit could not be assessed separately as they initially were granted due to their father's permit.²⁷⁴⁸

As part of the proportional assessment, the ECHR practice has developed a concept of "settled migrants". This entails that those who has been residing in a country for several years, and has not committed any crimes, should not have their residence permit revoked.

The revocation mandate rests on the authorities' discretion to assess whether revocation is proportional. And, unlike the ECHR, the proportionality assessment focuses on the false statements given by foreign nationals when applying for residence, and whether a criminal offence is committed.

Revocation can also be issued if the foreign national is expelled from another Schengen country, based on an assessment of national interest under section 126 second paragraph, cf. section 63 second paragraph.

2.4. Right to leave

Section 64 regulates refugee travel documents and immigrants' passports.

A foreign national who have been granted residence permit under the Immigration Act section 28, shall upon application be granted travel documentation for travels outside Norway, provided no particular reasons contradicts this, cf. section 64 first paragraph.

If the foreign national has travel documents issued from a foreign state, this right applies only where Norway is obliged by international agreement to issue travel documents for refugees cf. section 64 first paragraph.

If the foreign national has, or will be granted, residence permit on for asylum, and not as a refugee, he or she can travel outside of Norway only if the government of his country of origin so warrants. Moreover, there must not be any particular reason against granting such travel documents, and the King may issue regulations for granting immigration passports in other cases.

2.5. Deportation and expulsion regulation

The Immigration Act's provisions for exclusion operate with distinction between foreign nationals that do not hold a residence permit (section 66), foreign nationals that hold a temporary residence permit (section 67), foreign nationals that hold a permanent residence permit (section 68), and foreign nationals born in Norway (section 69).

Section 66 requires the following for expulsion:

- the foreign national has grossly or repeatedly breached one or more provisions of this act, wilfully or grossly negligent has provided materially false or obviously misleading

²⁷⁴⁸ Supreme Court of Norway Rettstidene [2016] 2017-A information in a case regulated by this Act, or evades implementation an administrative decision requiring him or her to leave Norway

- the foreign national has served received penalty for an offence which under Norwegian law is punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding three months for less than five years ago while abroad, or has a special sanction imposed on him due to a criminal offence as mentioned.

If the foreign national applies for residence permit and does not inform about earlier imposed sanctions, under sanction 63 as mentioned above, can be excluded from Norway.

- When the foreign national in Norway has received a penalty or special sanction for an offence that is punishable by imprisonment or for breaching certain sections of the Penal Code Chapter 27 on a minor level.
- When an administrative official in a Schengen country have issued a final deportation or exclusion decision due to lack of complying with the countries provisions regarding entry or residence
- When the foreign national has contravened the General Penal Code Chapter 18 on terrorism, or provided a safe haven for someone whom the foreign national knows have committed such a crime
- When the foreign national's application for protection have been denied assessment due to already having been granted asylum or other form of protection from another country, or if that foreign national has entered Norway after residing in a state or area where the foreign national was not persecuted, cf. 32 a and d.

Unless it would constitute a disproportionate measure, cf. section 70, a foreign national without a residence permit shall be expelled if:

- the foreign national has not complied with the obligation to leave the realm within the time limit given pursuant to section 90, fifth paragraph, or
- the foreign national has not been given a time limit for voluntary return because there is a risk that the foreign national will evade implementation, sf. section 90, fifth paragraph (a), and section 106 a, or
- an application has been dismissed as manifestly unfounded or as a result of materially false or manifestly misleading information, cf. section 90, fifth paragraph (b), or
- the foreign national has been found to pose a threat to public order see section 90, fifth paragraph (c) or fundamental national interests cf. section 129 fifth paragraph

In accordance with section 67, a foreign national holding a temporary residence can be expelled:

- where the foreign national less than five years previously while abroad has served or received a penalty for an offence which under Norwegian law is punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, or
- where the foreign national less than one year previously while in Norway has served or received a penalty or special sanction for an offence which is punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, or for breach of the General Penal Code section 182 first paragraph (riot), section 231 second paragraph (negligent drug violation), section 237 third paragraph (negligent disease transmission), section 262

- (violation of the Marriage act), section 263 (threat), section 305 (sexual offensive behaviour against children under 16), section 374 (gross negligent fraud) or section 380 (gross negligent tax fraud), or
- where the foreign national has served or received a penalty or special sanction for contravention of section 168, 189 second paragraph, 271 first paragraph of the General Civil Penal Code, or
 - where the foreign national has contravened Chapter 18 of the General Civil Penal Code, or has provided a safe haven for a person whom the foreign national knows has committed such a crime.

If the foreign national committed a criminal offence before receiving temporary residence, section 66 first paragraph b and c shall apply correspondingly.

After section 68, a foreign national holding a permanent residence permit, can be expelled if he or she:

- less than five years ago served, or is sentenced to sanction, while abroad, for an offence which under Norwegian law is punishable by imprisonment for a term of or exceeding two years. Where a special sanction has been imposed as result of a criminal offence, the same shall apply.
- less than one year previously while in Norway has served or received a penalty or special sanction for an offence which is punishable by imprisonment for a term of or exceeding two years, or for breaching the sections of the General Penal Code as mentioned under section 67 first paragraph (b).
- has contravened Chapter 18 of the General Penal Code as mentioned in section 67 first paragraph (d).

Where the foreign national committed a criminal offence before receiving permanent residence, as mentioned under section 67 first paragraph, a, b and second paragraph, shall apply correspondingly.

The fundamental condition for the migrants' rights, protection and obligations is whether the foreign national holds a residence permit. Violation of the General Penal Code plays a central part. Although the Directorate of Immigration's decisions have an administrative character, by implementing the Immigration Act and the government's immigration and refugee policy, the punitive character of the General Penal Code impacts the administrative decisions. The degree of impact depends upon the foreign national's residence permit status. In Engel vs NL, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) concluded that the serious punishment for not following orders for an offence was not administrative but punitive in character. The Norwegian Supreme court applies Constitutional Code section 96 in a more formal manner.

Under section 69, Norwegian citizen may not be expelled. A foreign national born in the realm, and subsequently has continuously had a fixed abode here, may not be expelled. Although the sections give a fixed impression of Norwegian immigration law, there are considerations the executive officer may pay attention to Section 70 was also mentioned under section 66 first paragraph f, and it requires the assessment of expulsion to take the disproportionate measure into consideration. The evaluation must take into consideration the degree of seriousness of the offence and the foreign national's connection with the realm against the foreign national concerned or the person's closest family members. In cases concerning children, the child's best interest shall be a fundamental consideration. The King may by regulation made further provisions in respect of the assessment under the first paragraph.

2.6. Migrant status and the right to leave – differences between EU and non-EU members

According to the provisions, all nationals who are not residing in the realm from birth or adoption, or is born in the Norwegian realm but one of the parent are not a Norwegian national, may be granted residence permit where the duration and content depends on the grounds for the entrance.

A foreign national protected by EAA or EFTA convention may, without seeking permission, enter the realm and reside or work for three months, or six months if the foreign national is seeking work.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

As the legislative branch of power, the Norwegian Parliament sets out the legal framework for migration regulation in Norway.²⁷⁴⁹ Chapter 10 of the Immigration Act gives express to the current organisation of Norwegian immigration authority. At the government agency level, overall national responsibility for Norway's refugee, migration and integration policy lays within the Ministry of Justice and Public Security. The ministry regulates the field through regulations, circulars and instructions, in addition to budgets and allocation letters.²⁷⁵⁰ In 2015, the first ever Minister of Immigration and Integration was appointed.²⁷⁵¹

The Norwegian Directorate of Immigration (UDI) is the central government agency that implements and helps to develop the Norwegian government's immigration and refugee policy, while The Directorate of Integration and Diversity (IMDi) is responsible for the actual settlement and integration process.²⁷⁵² The work of IMDi's is regulated by the the Introduction

²⁷⁴⁹ Furthermore, the Norwegian Parliament decides how many refugees to be accepted under the quota procedure initiated by UNHCR, ref. Question 1.

²⁷⁵⁰ It should be noted that under different Governments other ministries have been responsible for the national migration regulation system, i.e; The Ministry of Justice and the Police, The Ministry of Local Government and Regional Development and The Ministry of Labour and Social Inclusion

²⁷⁵¹ Governmental website, <[ELSA Norway](https://www.regjeringen.no/en/aktuelt/endringer-i-regjeringen/id2467606/.>, accessed 30 September 2017<div data-bbox=)

Act.²⁷⁵³ In cases of labour migration, follow-up responsibility rests on the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs and The Service Centres for Foreign Workers (SUA).

At a local level, UDI is responsible for the running of receptions centres for asylum seekers. In practice, these are operated by contractors within the regulatory framework and budget set out by UDI. When granted residence permit, responsibility for the migrant is transferred to IMDi. IMDi has local offices several places in Norway, but is dependent on close collaboration with both public municipality level bodies as well as private businesses and humanitarian organisations.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

4.1. Immigrants

The following statistics are derived from The Norwegian Directorate of Immigrants (UDI) and is based on available figures from 2015, 2016 and 2017. As the majority of third-country nationals immigrate to Norway due to family reunification, protection needs and labour market access, the following presentation will be limited to figures on migration within these categories. In the following, the Directorate of Integration and Diversity's (IMDi) definition of an immigrant as "a person who resides and lives in Norway but is born abroad by foreign-born parents" (my translation) is used.

4.2. Individuals who received a residence permit in Norway in 2016, compared to 2017

To live and work in Norway, individuals from countries outside the EEC-area need a residence permit. In 2016, 44600 persons were granted residence permit, in contrast to 35400 in 2015. The increasing number of residence permits being issued between 2015 and 2016 was not a result of a higher number of people applying for residence permits in 2016, but a result of an increased budget allocation to UDI which led to the number of decisions produced going up.

4.2.1. Family reunification (35% of the residence permits)

Family reunification accounted for a major part of the registered immigration to Norway in 2016, and amounted to a total number of 15 600 persons. These numbers make a 20 % increase from the preceding year. This is a result of increase in resources at UDI, and not the result of more applications.

²⁷⁵³ Act on an introductory programme and Norwegian language instruction for newly arrived immigrant 2003 [introduksjonsloven]

4.2.2. Protection (37% of the residence permits)

16 500 individuals received protection in 2016. This number includes the 800 whose decisions were revised by UNE. Those who received protection by Norway constitute 37% of all residence permits granted in 2016. This represents an increase of 7 700 from 2015, which equals an increase of 87%. Among those who were granted protection, 13 300 were refugees and 3 200 transit migrants.

4.2.3. Labour migration (16% of the residence permits)

Migrant workers represented the third greatest immigrant group in 2016. The 7 100 individuals who were granted work permits accounted for 16% of all residence permits granted that year. The number of migrant workers in 2016 was 600 fewer compared to 2015.

4.3. Refugees

As of August 2017, 9000 refugees have been registered this year, compared to 30 000 during the year-end of 2015/2016. This is the lowest number of refugees immigrating since 1997, according to the UDI²⁷⁵⁴.

UDI's prognosis states an increase of asylum applicants from November 2017, when the Schengen-borders are due to reopen. It is anticipated that immigration due to crisis and war will be a contributing factor to future migration flows, and as a result of this the figures will increase. UDI's prospect for 2017 predicts a number of applicants between 2 000 and 10 000, with a planning figure of 3000 refugees. The previous forecast consisted of a planning figure of 7000, which is consistent with the planning figure for 2018.

4.4. Transit immigration

There are no specific figures on transit immigration to Norway, as these are a part of the general statistics.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

Norway became a member of the Council of Europe in 1943 and ratified the European Convention of Human Rights (hereafter "the Convention") in 1953. Since then the country has had 28 cases before the European Court of Human Rights (hereafter "ECtHR" or "the Court"). The influence of the Court reaches many areas of Norwegian law and society, and the following analysis will look at whether, and how, decisions concerning migrants have changed Norwegian legislation and legal practice.

²⁷⁵⁴ <<https://www.udi.no/aktuelt/laveste-antallet-asylosokere-siden-1997/>>, accessed 30 September 2017.

5.1. The European Convention of Human Rights and General Implementation of ECHR decisions

The Convention for the Protection of Human Rights was made into Norwegian law through the Human Rights Act²⁷⁵⁵ of 1999. Section three of the Act determines that if a Norwegian rule should contradict the Convention, the international law will prevail.

The strong position of the Convention makes its interpretation a vital part of Norwegian law, and the influence of the ECHR over national legislation was for many years a much-debated topic by Norwegian academics. Today, Norwegian Courts use the same principles of interpretation as the ECHR when considering Norwegian cases related to the Convention. The Supreme Court (Høyesterett) has determined that Norwegian values and principles may also be used, in addition to the ones defined by ECHR.²⁷⁵⁶

5.2. The Implementation of Decisions where Norway was the Respondent State

All of the cases that the ECHR has considered concerning Norway, have been closed by final resolution by the Committee of Ministers²⁷⁵⁷. Some cases are significant for migrants because of their effects on Norwegian law and will be studied more closely below.

5.2.1. Case of Nunez vs. Norway 2011²⁷⁵⁸

In this case the Court concluded that the expulsion of Ms Nunez with a two-year re-entry ban was a violation of Art. 8 of the Convention.

Ms Nunez was originally from the Dominican Republic, and had been deported with a re-entry ban of two years. She returned with a different passport only four months after being deported, and she was living in Oslo with her two children until her identity was uncovered. While the ECHR agreed that the applicant's actions were serious, the interests of her young children were more important and expulsion from Norway would infringe on their rights in accordance with Art. 8.

The Nunez-case has been important to the treatment of deportation and family reunification cases in Norway, especially in regards to children's right to be a relevant party in cases that affects them.

In a 2017 Supreme Court verdict concerning loss of citizenship and deportation,²⁷⁵⁹ the judge Utgaard cited the Nunez-case and highlighted how ECtHR's interprets Art. 8 through a weighing of interests, rather than considering family members as a formal party to a case. The case emphasises the importance of attaching sufficient weight to the interest of children, regardless of whether they are considered a party to the case.

²⁷⁵⁹ Supreme Court of Norway Høyesterett [2017] 1130

The Nunez-case was also cited when The Ministry of Justice and Public Security issued a formal instruction²⁷⁶⁰ to UDI on how the Immigration Act section 70 should be interpreted and practised. According to the Ministry, relevant considerations included case processing time and the connection between the child and the parent being deported.

5.3. The Implementation of Decisions where Norway was not the Respondent State

Decisions by the ECHR where Norway was not a respondent state were less likely to have the same direct effect compared to decisions where Norway is a respondent. These decisions do, nevertheless, influence Norwegian legislation through national courts and in a broader sense through academia and legislation.

5.3.1. The Right to Asylum

In a Supreme Court decision from 2015²⁷⁶¹ the court made references to several ECtHR cases when deciding whether a denied application for asylum was unlawful. The Supreme Court applied arguments from both *H. and B. v. The United Kingdom*²⁷⁶², and *Tarakhel v. Switzerland*²⁷⁶³ to their decision.

Furthermore, the Supreme Court made efforts to analyse the Norwegian Immigration Act and ensure that it was in accordance with the Convention and the views of the Court.

Judge Utgaard said in section 82 of the decision that he would consider whether the protection under Art. 3 set forth by the Court required an assessment of the conditions in the country of origin before he considered whether this complied with Norwegian law in section 88:

“...the threshold for the conditions at the place of return according to the convention could be different for internal displacement in the case of children with their parents, or children alone, compared with the threshold for single adults, complies with the provisions of section 28 third paragraph of the Immigration Act”.

This Supreme Court decision has been referred to in lower courts as well as rulings by the Grand Board of UNE.²⁷⁶⁴ The influence of the ECtHR over Norwegian migration policies therefore has potential to reach a wide selection of public bodies involved in migration control and may be considered extensive, even in instances where Norway has not been a respondent state.

Decisions made by the ECHR that concern migrants are, as we have seen, implemented in a variety of ways. Where Norway has been a respondent state, the applicants have received just satisfaction and necessary legal changes are conducted following the decision. For the majority of migrants in Norway though, the courts and various government agencies, provide more immediate decisions that nevertheless considers the viewpoint of the European Court of Human Rights and attempts to ensure the correct interpretation of the Convention.

²⁷⁶⁴ The Immigration Appeals Board.

To summarize, decisions made by the ECHR that concern migrants are implemented in a variety of ways. Where Norway has been a respondent state, the applicants have received just satisfaction and necessary legal changes are conducted following the decision. For the majority of migrants in Norway though, the courts and various government agencies, provide more immediate decisions that nevertheless considers the viewpoint of the European Court of Human Rights and attempts to ensure the correct interpretation of the Convention.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

This is a brief review of the status in Norway concerning racism and integration of migrants. Particularly, how different recommendations from the ECRI and other human right bodies has been implemented into the Norwegian law, justice system and society. This is largely related to Norway's affiliation to international law and directives, and to a large extent how EU directives are incorporated and valued by the legislators.

6.1. Norway on an international level

Norway is not a member of the EU, and is not formally bound by the EU's directions of discrimination. Nevertheless, the state of law in Norway is closely tied to many of EU's member countries and is thus affected by the evolution in EU, both through cooperation with other EU-countries, and through agreements and treaties.

The Schengen-agreement and the Dublin-agreement have great consequences for Norway. Furthermore, Norway has committed itself to sign and ratify EU's directives and agreements that are EEA-relevant, even though not being formally obligated to these regulations.

The non-discrimination package with the EU Framework Directive²⁷⁶⁵ and the EU Racial Discrimination Directive²⁷⁶⁶, which deal with ethnicity, age and disability, are not EEA-relevant. Nevertheless, the Norwegian legislature has determined that national regulations must at a minimum fulfil the standards of the above-mentioned directives.

The factors mentioned above are one of numerous reasons why these regulations are relevant, and emphasize the importance of adjusting to recommendations and international guidelines to maintain the cooperation.

6.2. Implementation of recommendations against racism and intolerance

There are several international control units that issue recommendations to countries based on observations and research. The UN, the Council of Europe and the EU are some of the most ²⁷⁶⁵ Council Directive 2000/78/EC of 27 November 2000 establishing a general framework for equal treatment in employment and occupation.

²⁷⁶⁶ Council Directive 2000/43/EC of 29 June 2000 implementing the principle of equal treatment between persons irrespective of racial or ethnic origin.

well-known units, and also some of the most legitimate ones. However, the implementation of the recommendations is affected by the fact that these points only serve as recommendations. Consequently, it is not for certain that the legislative power in Norway will act very strongly to accommodate them.

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) is a control unit on the matter, and it observes the evolvement in the member States of the Council of Europe. ECRI deals with different aspects of racism and intolerance, as well as integration.

Their latest report on Norway covered the situation of June 2014,²⁷⁶⁷ and this is an important source on the topic. While it contains several recommendations, the report's summary shows that Norway has developed and evolved in many areas in alignment with previous recommendations. Below are some of the recommendations from the ECRI report listed;

Young refugees should receive better access to education.

Better procedures in preparation for immigrants with low educational background and lack of reading and writing abilities, in accordance to the labour market's demands, will need to be identified and conveyed to the local municipalities.

Refugees will receive work permits although they cannot present legal travel documents

These points only serve as recommendations, and as mentioned earlier the legislative power in Norway is not likely to act very strongly to accommodate them.

This is also the situation reflected in the latest report from UN's Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CIRD),²⁷⁶⁸ published September 2017. There is yet to be published a conclusion based on this report, but it seems that the Norwegian government is largely following the previous recommendations despite the fact that there are room for improvement.

6.2.1. Legislation against racism and racial discrimination

Racial discrimination is a major obstacle for successful integration. In example, discrimination in access to the labour market is one area that prevents integration, according to CIRDs report from 2015.²⁷⁶⁹

Through the Ethnicity Anti-Discrimination Act,²⁷⁷⁰ Norway has taken an important step in implementing international guidelines for human rights, racism and intolerance. The law was a result of the EU's programs to fight discrimination, and the purpose of the Act was to bring civil, criminal and administrative law in line with ECRI's General Recommendation no. 7.

The Ethnicity Anti-Discrimination Act will be revoked by the entry of Norwegian Law 2017-06-16-51, which is expected to be effective 01.01.2018. According to the Government, the new law will not result in a substantive change, but combine the regulations that at the moment span four different areas of law.²⁷⁷¹

²⁷⁷⁰ Act relating to a prohibition against discrimination on the basis of ethnicity, religion and belief [Diskrimineringsloven om etnisitet]

²⁷⁷¹ Preparatory Work, Prop. 81 L (2016-2017).

One of ECRI's main concerns is that Norway still has not ratified Protocol No. 12 to the ECHR. The protocol was drawn up because the anti-discrimination protection under Article 14 of the Convention (ECHR) is limited to the rights the Convention protects, while Protocol No. 12 is not. Norway has signed the protocol, but is yet to ratify it despite encouragement from the ECRI.

6.2.2. Integration

In 2011 Norway became a member of the European Migration Network (EMN), an EU network and information system where member states can share and develop information regarding integration of immigrants.

Since the year of 2008, Norway is positioned as a surveillance country for the EU's National Point of Contact on Integration. Norway is the only non-member state involved with this,²⁷⁷² and this gives Norway the opportunity to engage in the field, and share information, knowledge and experience with EU-members.

The recommendations from the different international units serve as guidance, revealing which areas that could- or should be improved. This does not mean that Norway does not seek to improve on the field of integration. Parallel to the focus in Norway, these points are surrounding the area of labour and education, which shows the correlation between national and international goals.

Hence, international guidelines and recommendation mostly works as inspiration and guidance for the Parliament. One example is the OECD's report Making Integration Work.²⁷⁷³ This report summarizes the experiences of the member states and concludes with ten lessons on integration.

The Parliament used these conclusions in the latest white Paper on integration, as well as a guideline for creating goals for future integration policies.²⁷⁷⁴ Participation in the labour market stands out as an important area for Norwegian integration policies, especially among immigrants with a background of refugee.²⁷⁷⁵

Even though Norway has several examples of successful action plans for integration, the Government has experienced criticism from various human right bodies the previous years. According to Pål Nesse, senior advisor in The Norwegian Refugee Council, it seems that the gap between Norway's integration and discrimination acts and the recommendations from national bodies is increasing. Indicative of this is the fact that UNCHR multiple times in 2016 and 2017 has pointed out that Norway, more than before, departs from their recommendations.²⁷⁷⁶

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

The Norwegian Human Rights Act²⁷⁷⁷ gives express to the fundamental human right to health through the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights, the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and UN Convention on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Importantly, Article 12 of the last mentioned convention states that that the States Parties “recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health”. This represents an unequivocal and universal right to health for the citizens in the contracting states.

The right to access to healthcare is more specifically regulated in the Patients' Rights Act²⁷⁷⁸. Its sections 2-1 a. and b. state that all patients have a right to receive necessary healthcare services, and “healthcare” is given a broad definition in sections 1-3 c. and d. Both somatic and mental issues are encompassed by the definition, as well as drug related and dental issues”.²⁷⁷⁹

7.1. Legal requirements for migrants to have access to healthcare services

The term “patient” is defined as any person who approaches the healthcare authorities about healthcare²⁷⁸⁰, and does not seem to differentiate between Norwegian citizens and migrants.

This is further supported by the Immigration Act,²⁷⁸¹ where section 4 implies that everyone legally and permanently residing in Norway will enjoy the same rights as Norwegian citizens.

In accordance with section 2, full access is granted migrants who have stayed, or are planning to stay, in Norway for more than 12 months. The same applies for migrants already accessing the social security programme, or migrants that are a citizen of a country that Norway has a mutual healthcare agreement with. These alternatives presume that the migrants are legally staying in the country.

7.1.1. Migrants irregularly residing in Norway

The Regulation concerning the right to healthcare services for people without permanent stay,²⁷⁸² however, contains some criteria for when non-permanent migrants are granted full access to the Norwegian healthcare system.

²⁷⁸⁰ Patients' Rights Act, section 1-3 a.

²⁷⁸¹ Act concerning the entry of foreign nationals into the Kingdom and their presence in the realm 2008 [Utlendingsloven].

²⁷⁸² Regulation concerning the right to healthcare services for people without permanent stay in the kingdom 2011 [Forskrift om rett til helse- og omsorgstjenester til personer uten fast opphold i riket].

According to the same regulation, migrants irregularly residing in Norway will only have a limited access to the healthcare system. This also applies for undocumented migrants, and it is regulated in sections 3 to 6.

Firstly, all children under the age of 18 years are entitled to receive necessary healthcare, regardless of the legality and duration of their stay in Norway.

Secondly, adults are entitled to necessary healthcare if their condition may result in imminent death, permanently reduced functioning, serious harm or immense pain. Moreover, women have right to healthcare before, during and after childbirth, and right to termination of pregnancy according to the Act concerning termination of pregnancy.²⁷⁸³

Lastly, people who are in 'pressing need' of health care services will also have a right to receive immediate health care.

Anyone in Norway have the right to be evaluated by a specialist healthcare service, and information about their eligibility for receiving the abovementioned healthcare must be given within ten days. The period may be shorter if their condition is considered critical or life threatening.²⁷⁸⁴

For people seeking asylum, this right to access to healthcare is granted from the time they contact the Norwegian government for protection in Norway.²⁷⁸⁵

7.2. Accessibility for immigrants

The Patients' Rights Act section 3-2 states that every patient shall receive sufficient information to have insight of their condition, what the healthcare service involves and of any risks or side-effects. Healthcare personnel can only derogate from this if the patient is in danger of serious harm, or in another life-threatening condition.

Moreover, section 3-5 specifies that the information must be specified in terms of the individual recipient's cultural and linguistic background. The personnel are also required to ensure, in as far as possible, that the patient understands the information, and this may necessitate the use of an interpreter.

These provisions are prerequisites for section 4-1, which states that the healthcare services only can be given with the consent of the patient, and it makes the services better accessible for the immigrants.

UDI has also issued several informational leaflets about healthcare services in various languages²⁷⁸⁶, and the Norwegian government has established a national centre for migration and minority health, NAKMI. The centre promotes knowledge about healthcare among immigrants in Norway, and they raise awareness about particular need of certain immigrant groups amongst Norwegian healthcare personnel.²⁷⁸⁷

Moreover, several Norwegian NGOs focus on migrants' access to healthcare. Two of these are the Church City Mission and the Red Cross which support undocumented migrants in Norway. The organisations inform about their right to access to healthcare, and run a healthcare service at a secret address in Oslo. The Church City Mission is co-founded by the EU Public Health Programme. There are similar healthcare services based on voluntary efforts in several cities in Norway.

Another NGO is the radio channel Voice of Oslo.²⁷⁸⁸ One of their regular programmes provides immigrants with information about available health services, and it is cast in Urdu, Somali and Arabic. Moreover, there are health personnel available for questions during the programmes.

7.3. Equality in health care services

Norway has ratified the UN International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and is obliged to “guarantee the right of everyone, without distinction as to race, colour, or national or ethnic origin, to equality before the law” in accordance with article 5. Moreover, it is specified that this includes the right to “public health, medical care” in point (iv). As mentioned before, this is guaranteed in the Immigration Act section 4, which entails that everyone legally and permanently residing in Norway will enjoy the same rights as Norwegian citizens.

7.3.1. Prohibition against discrimination

The Ethnicity Anti-Discrimination Act²⁷⁸⁹ states that discrimination on the basis of national origin, descent, skin colour and language is prohibited. This includes both direct and indirect unlawful differential treatment.

The provisions are enforced by the Equality and Anti-Discrimination Representatives and the Equality and Anti-Discrimination Tribunal²⁷⁹⁰, which are also responsible of contributing to the implementation of the Act.

These implementing and monitoring bodies operate with a negative burden of proof, as the defendant must substantiate that discrimination did not in fact occur. The plaintiff is entitled to compensation for economic loss, and for non-economic loss to a reasonable extent depending on the circumstances. Moreover, perpetrators of intentional gross breach of the Act can be subject to imprisonment for up to three years. It should be noted that this is subject to a positive burden of proof.

The Norwegian Directorate of Health has also set national strategic goals for equality in health services²⁷⁹¹. There is a public professional board, SOHEMI, that assists them in reaching this, and this board emphasises on linguistic and cultural barriers of certain immigrants group.²⁷⁹²

7.3.2. Specific services for vulnerable migrants

The Norwegian healthcare service has taken several measures to accommodate the needs of migrants in vulnerable positions, and there is a focus on individualised approaches to patients throughout the healthcare legislation.

For example, asylum seekers with special needs are quartered in assisted facilities, and there is a reflection programme for migrants that have been caught up in human trafficking²⁷⁹³. This entails access to free legal aid, individualised assistance, social security and safe accommodation²⁷⁹⁴.

The Directorate also provides individualised programmes for migrants exposed to family-related violence, forced marriage or body mutilation. These encompass specialised healthcare, safe accommodation and free legal aid²⁷⁹⁵.

Examples of other projects include “Seksjon ambulant virksomhet”, where the hospitals focus individual rehabilitation and suicide prevention of traumatised migrants.²⁷⁹⁶

Moreover, the 2010 guideline “Equality and Diversity” has been implemented at Ahus, the hospital with the highest percentage of immigrants in Norway²⁷⁹⁷. They have started a project dedicated to support Tamils in Norway, after rapports show that this is an immigrant group with degrading mental health and troublesome social integration.²⁷⁹⁸

Another vulnerable group of immigrants is the undocumented migrants, and these only have a limited access to the healthcare system. There are, however, several NGOs providing services to undocumented migrants, as mentioned above.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

Every child in Norway has a right to education. The Constitution of the Kingdom of Norway²⁷⁹⁹ states this right in section 109, granting all children the right to primary education, and high school education.

According to the Education Act²⁸⁰⁰ section 2-3 every child is obligated to attend primary school, and has the right to a high school education, both publicly funded.

²⁷⁹⁹ The Constitution of the Kingdom of Norway, Lov av 17. mai 1814 [Kongeriket Norges grunnlov].

²⁸⁰⁰ Act relating to primary and secondary Education, 1998 [Opplæringsloven].

Further, Norway is obligated by several international treaties which further grants educational rights²⁸⁰¹. Among others, notable treaties are the United Nation's Universal Declaration on Human Rights article 26, the UN's Convention on the Rights of the Child articles 28 and 29, and the European Convention on Human Rights Protocol 2 article 2.

The rights granted in the Education Act are non-discriminatory and apply to every child, regardless of their nationality or other conditions. Thus, regular migrant children have the very same rights as other Norwegians.

With regards to irregular or undocumented migrants, the Education Act section 2-1 nr. 2 states that the rights in the Act apply whenever it is likely that the child will stay in Norway for more than three months. According to the preparatory works of the provision, the right applies regardless of whether the children's stay in Norway is legal or not.²⁸⁰²

The process shall be applied as quickly as possible, and no later than one month post arrival. The obligation to attend primary school begins when the child has stayed in Norway for at least three months. The rights in the Act ceases if the child stays outside of Norway for more than three months.

Any discrimination in this regard is illegal, and could be subject to prosecution upon the Anti-Discrimination Act²⁸⁰³ section 6, the Norwegian Constitution section 98, among other provisions.

In Bergen municipality, officials claim newly arrived migrants in school age start attending school less than one month post arrival.²⁸⁰⁴ Migrant children in school age attend the same curriculum and courses as other Norwegian children, while the school often adapt their education to their individual needs.

Further, the Education Act section 1-3 entitles every child to adapt education, where his or her individual preconditions should be considered. How this right is applied is a matter to the municipalities, and thus might be applied differently, as long as they are legal according to the Act.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

The Lisbon Recognition Convention is an international agreement concluded between the member states of the Council of Europe and UNESCO's European region.²⁸⁰⁵ The convention facilitates academic mobility across the member states, and it contains certain criteria and procedures for acknowledging foreign qualifications for higher education.

The convention was ratified by Norway in 1999, and the Norwegian government is obliged to meet its standards regarding routines for assessing foreign school and university diplomas.

This part will explore how this is implemented in relation to the recognition of qualification for enrolling at an institute offering higher education in Norway, and in relation to the recognition of foreign higher education diplomas.

9.1. Recognition of foreign qualifications for enrolling at Norwegian institutes offering higher education

9.1.1. The responsible institution

The body handling all applications to public primary higher education in Norway is Samordna Opptak ("Coordinated Admissions"). This body harmonises all applications and offers assistance to the applicants, and it is therefore the main gateway for people with foreign qualifications to get access to higher education in Norway.

There is also a handful of private institutions offering higher education in Norway. These follow the same procedure as Samordna Opptak regarding the recognition of foreign qualifications, and it will therefore not be accentuated in this article.

9.1.2. Criteria

The legal basis for the admission of foreign qualification to higher education institutions is the Regulation concerning admission to higher education.²⁸⁰⁶ Its three main criteria are included in Section 2-2, which applies to all immigrants, except from other Nordic countries.

Firstly, the applicant must document achieved education equivalent to the Norwegian system. The admission body has issued an extensive list of which baccalaureates automatically qualify, the so-called GSU-list.²⁸⁰⁷

²⁸⁰⁵ Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997.

Secondly, the applicant must be proficient in both English and Norwegian. The GSU-list specifies whether the applicants must undertake separate language tests, and the requirement for Norwegian does not apply for programmes in foreign languages.

Thirdly, all applicants must provide the necessary documents. The admission body has made an overview of which documents are required from the different countries, and this is available online²⁸⁰⁸.

Foreign applicants must fill out and submit a physical form, enclose the relevant documents and subsequently accept a potential offer²⁸⁰⁹.

9.1.3. Special procedures for vulnerable migrants

The admissions body also provides a possibility for accepting applications from migrants who cannot properly document their education or work experience. If necessary, refugees have the option of filling out and submitting a specified form to the admissions body.²⁸¹⁰

9.2. Recognition of foreign certificates of higher education

9.2.1. The responsible institution

In accordance with the Act relating to Universities and University Colleges, the national centre for quality in education, NOKUT, is the main body for recognising foreign higher education.²⁸¹¹ NOKUT also works to ease access to information about both Norwegian and foreign educational systems, and is the national centre for information about the Lisbon Recognition Convention.

9.2.2. Criteria

The Lisbon Recognition Convention article IV.1 states that the contracting parties shall “recognise the higher education qualifications issued by other Parties”, as long as they meet the general requirements to access the programmes of higher education in that other state.

Section 6-1 of the Regulation on quality assurance and quality development in higher education and tertiary vocational education encompass the criteria NOKUT follows when they assess applications for recognition of diplomas for higher education.²⁸¹²

Firstly, the diploma must be sufficiently documented, including its recognition as higher education in the country of origin. NOKUT has specific guidelines for countries that do not have a system for official recognition of higher education²⁸¹³.

²⁸¹² Regulation on quality assurance and quality development in higher education and tertiary vocational education 2010 [Forskrift om kvalitetssikring og kvalitetsutvikling i høyere utdanning og fagskoleutdanning]

Secondly, the educational programme must be equivalent to the Norwegian higher education. The evaluation of this consists of a comparison between the systems of education by NOKUT's professional board, and diplomas may be partially recognised if there are significant differences. Lastly, some specific criteria apply for the different study levels. For instance, a bachelor degree requires three years of higher education while a master's degree requires five years and a piece of independent work.

The procedure for recognising a foreign diploma of higher education is that an application firstly is sent to NOKUT. The professional board then gives information and advice to NOKUT, which will come to a conclusion. The applicant is then informed and may subsequently accept the potential offer.

9.2.3. Special procedures for vulnerable migrants

The Lisbon Recognition Convention article IV.2 states that the contracting parties can provide the holder of a higher education qualification issued in one of the other Parties to obtain an assessment of that qualification, as an alternative procedure to the procedure in IV.1 as described above. This provision is sought incorporated in NOKUT's UVD process for rejected applications, which is especially relevant for refugees and people with similar circumstances.²⁸¹⁴

The UVD process will be available after an initial application has been rejected, and the applicants will then go through an extensive process.

Firstly, NOKUT assesses language documentation and residence permits and if applicable, CV and work experiences. The applicant will then be interviewed by both NOKUT and a professional board in order to confirm that the information provided is likely to be accurate. The applicant will have to do both written and oral assignments in the process.

This will form the basis of the assessment, and the applicant will in the end be informed whether or not he or she holds the qualifications initially asserted.

10.1 The Right to Vote in National Elections

The right to vote in the Parliamentary election is regulated by the Election Act²⁸¹⁵ and is limited to Norwegian citizens. Thus, only migrants who have acquired Norwegian citizenship may vote in national elections.

²⁸¹⁵ Act relating to parliamentary and local government elections 2002 [Valgloven]

The Act declares in section 2-1²⁸¹⁶ that you can vote if you are a Norwegian citizen who will have turned 18 years of age before the end of the election year, who has not lost the right to vote pursuant to Article 53 of the Constitution, and who is, or has ever been registered in the Population Register as resident of Norway.

Employees in the diplomatic corps or consular service and their households are entitled to vote even if they do not satisfy the residential criteria.

Article 53 of the Constitution regulates the loss of voting rights. The right to vote is lost to persons who is sentenced for criminal offences, in accordance with the relevant provisions laid down by the constitution, or who enters the service of a foreign power without the consent of the government.

10.2 The Right to Vote in Municipal and County Council Elections

Norway is a party to the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level, but declared that the convention would not apply to the territory of Svalbard. Section 2-2 of the Election Act supports the voting rights set forth in Article 6 of the convention.

In municipal and county council elections, the following persons are entitled to vote, cf. section 2-2 of the Election Act:

- everyone who is entitled to vote in the parliamentary elections, including those who are not Norwegian citizens, but who otherwise satisfy the requirements, provided that they are
- citizens of other Nordic countries (i.e. Denmark, Iceland, Finland or Sweden) who have turned 18 years of age by the end of the election year, and who have been registered in the Population Register as residents in Norway no later than June 30 in the election year, or
- other foreign citizens who have turned 18 years of age by the end of the election year, and who have been registered in the Population Register as residents in Norway continuously for the last three years prior to the election day.

With regards to the period of residence for foreign nationals, it is a requirement that they have been registered for the past three consecutive years.

Foreigners who have resided in Norway for more than three years may also be elected to the municipal or county council, cf. Election Act section 3-3.

²⁸¹⁶ Election Manual by the Norwegian Ministry of Local Government and Modernisation.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. National Citizenship

A national foreigner can apply for citizenship cf. Norwegian Nationality Act²⁸¹⁷ section 7, once he or she has been granted admission to the country cf. Immigration act chapter 2, upon application has been granted temporary residence permit in accordance with chapter 3 to 6, and upon application has been granted permanent residence permit cf. para 62.

The conditions that must be fulfilled at the time of the administrative decision, is that the applicant:

- has provided documentary evidence of or otherwise clearly established his or her identity, cf. fourth paragraph.

The identity includes name, time of birth and nationality, usually in the form of passport or other documentation with identification as purpose. The validity of the documentation must be highly probable²⁸¹⁸.

- reached the age of 12,

This right applies independently from the parents' citizenships, and releases parents who wish to keep their original citizenship to choose between the consideration of the child and him or herself. The right for the child is also important where one or both of the parents do not meet the conditions laid in this section. And it is also an advantage for children who study abroad to know they can return to Norway without fearing for their residence permit to laps.

- is and will remain a resident of the realm,

This can be difficult to prove; therefore, the applicant must indicate in the application whether he or she intends or is planning to travel abroad, and for what purpose. If the applicant, after being granted citizenship, travels abroad, it will not affect his or her citizenship, unless the intention was present at the time of the administrative decision.

- fulfils the conditions for a settlement permit laid down in section 62 of the Immigration Act,

This condition also reflected the connection to the Norwegian realm. As mentioned earlier, section 62 requires the applicant to have resided in the realm for 3 years. Thus, 3 years is sufficient period of residence to prove connection to Norway and grant permanent residence permit.

- has spent a total of seven years in the realm in the last ten years, with residence or work permits of at least one year's duration, residence during one or more application-processing periods to be included in the seven-year period, cf. fifth paragraph,

This is an objective consideration reflecting the necessity of the connection to the realm, and means that the actual residence, the subjective consideration, is not an issue, as long as the seven years residence is objectively fulfilled. If the applicant has stayed in the realm for a while and then travelled abroad, the different periods of residence shall be counted together. Because of the evidential consideration, the Ministry decided that the calculation of the residence applies from the day residence or work permit of at least one year's duration was granted, but residence based on a permit given for less than one year is not calculated.

This regulation is stricter than the previous law, where actual residence was the main measure and not the legal residence²⁸¹⁹. Nevertheless, the new regulation makes it more predictable to the applicant to orient him or herself regarding the condition.

– satisfies the requirement regarding Norwegian language training laid down in section 8.

This condition is further elaborated under section 8, where 300 hours of Norwegian class is required.²⁸²⁰ This emphasizes the importance of Norwegian language and social studies.

– has not been sentenced to a penalty or special criminal sanction, or has observed the waiting period cf. section 9, and

According to section 9, a person who is sentenced to a penalty or special criminal sanction must undergo a waiting period. If the applicant was given a custodial sentence or a special criminal sanction, the waiting period shall be calculated from the end of the sentence or sanction. In the case of a suspended sentence of imprisonment, the waiting period shall be calculated from the expiry of the probation period. The waiting period shall otherwise be calculated from the date of the criminal act.

– satisfies the requirement regarding release from another nationality laid down in section 10.

This condition will be elaborated further under 11.2.

– The applicant is not entitled to Norwegian nationality pursuant to the first paragraph if this is contrary to the interests of national security or to foreign policy considerations.

According to the Department of Justice, this paragraph is rarely applied and is a narrow exception with a high threshold. It is more common that the application may be suspended until all circumstances are clarified.

If the applicant is granted citizenship, but later becomes a threat to the national security, citizenship cannot be reversed, unless the applicant knowingly has given incorrect information or failed to disclose matters of material significance to the administrative decision, which will make the administrative decision invalid.

If the applicant receives an expulsion decision due to national security in accordance with the Immigration Act section 126, cf. chapter 8, without having committed criminal offence according to Norwegian law, and the identification is not clear or the origin of country does not want to national foreigner to return, residence permit cannot be granted, thus citizenship will automatically be excluded cf. section 7 first paragraph d.

In the opinion of the Ministry, application for citizenship should be refused without awaiting the decision for permanent residence permit cf. Immigration Act section 62, when it is assumed that the interest of national security implies this.

Foreign policy consideration also includes other states' security. If, for instance, a national foreigner seeks refuge in Norway and applies for citizenship, while his or her origin of country wants the applicant extradited, it is politically unfortunate to treat both cases at once. The national foreigner can submit new application after the extradition case is finished.

Residence with permits that would have been given for a period of at least one year, but which were issued for a shorter period, cf. section 60, first paragraph, third sentence, of the Immigration Act, shall be taken into account when calculating residence time, cf. the Citizens' Act, Section 7, first paragraph, letter e, sections 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 18. The same applies to residence permits under the Immigration Act section 60, first paragraph fourth sentence, which forms the basis for permanent residence permit.

With this paragraph, the Ministry decided that the calculation of the residence applies not only from the day residence or work permit of at least one year's duration was granted, but also residence based on a permit given for less than one year.

Sections 7, 11, 12, 15, 16, and 17 regard minors at the age of 12, persons who are married to, a registered partner of, or cohabitant with, a Norwegian national, former Norwegian nationals and stateless persons. Section 18 regards particular groups of applicants, such as in the case of collective migration under the Immigration Act section 34.

Special conditions for refugees may not be set, although they cannot use the citizenship of their country of origin. Refugees in general are granted work and residence permit, asylum and travel documentation which provides a possibility to travel abroad except the origin of country. As refugees inhabiting in the realm, they shall receive consular service and a certain amount of diplomatic protection. Not granting refugees this special condition does not contradict The Council of Europe's Convention of 1997, because the proposed general terms of acquisition are sufficiently favourable to the requirements of the Convention.

The application for nationality shall be accompanied by a comprehensive certificate of good character issued by the police. The said certificate shall also show any offences for which the applicant has been charged or indicted.

The ministry stresses the importance of consequences for violating the country's law and regulations for access to citizenship, in order to prevent criminality. The violations apply to all forms of imprisonment, non-punishable respondents in accordance with criminal law, regardless of how long time it has been since the imposition. This deviates from the rule in section 6 of the Penal Registration Act,²⁸²¹ that certain circumstances are eventually omitted from the police certificate, but is necessary for the awaiting period under section 9 to be enforced, which requires all form of criminal offences and sanctions to be enlightened.

The ministry states that it can be perceived as very unfortunate in relation to the general sense of law if a serious crime committed by an unreasonable perpetrator has no consequences for his or her application for citizenship. The decision will be based on discretion, and the Ministry does not find an absolute barrier to citizenship, such as in Denmark, France, Austria and the United States, desirable.

In the case of severe reactions, one should consider postponing the right to citizenship for as long as it is not practically possible to receive Norwegian citizenship. If the offence is not imposed shortly after arriving in the country, and is not of a particular serious nature, the affaire should not lead to an addition to the ordinary residence period cf. section 9.

²⁸²¹ Act on the treatment of information in the police and prosecution authorities 2010 [Politiregisterloven]

11.2. Double nationality

The primary rule is that a national foreigner who applies for Norwegian citizenship must release him or herself from the original nationality cf. section 7 first paragraph g, which is further elaborated under cf. section 10.

The first paragraph of section 10 regulates the requirement for a solution depending on the possibility of being released of another citizenship. If the applicant cannot be released from any other nationality before the application is granted, the applicant must, within one year of being granted Norwegian nationality, document that he or she has been released from any other nationality. Some countries do not resolve their nationals before another citizenship has been granted, therefore this makes an exemption for applicants from these countries.

If the applicant cannot be released from any other nationality before reaching a certain age, the applicant must within one year after reaching this age document that he or she has been released from any other nationality. In the circumstance of section 7 first paragraph b the conditions for children are wider.

An exemption may be granted if release is deemed to be legally or practically impossible, or for other reasons seems to be unreasonable cf. section 19. This provision regards the fact that the applicant's home country does not resolve its citizens from citizenship, that the solution takes disproportionately long time, or that the solution fee is very high. The provision is not to be understood as a general dispensation act.

If release from any other nationality is not documented before the time limit expires, the provisions regarding revocation set out in section 26, first paragraph, shall apply. This paragraph confirms the primary rule under section 10 first paragraph.

However, this shall not apply if an exception is made from the requirement of release pursuant to section 10, first paragraph, fourth sentence. It would be unreasonable to revoke the citizenship if new circumstances have occurred after Norwegian citizenship is granted, but after the citizenship was granted.

If release from another nationality is documented after the expiry of the time limit prescribed in section 10, first paragraph, revocation may be waived unless special reasons warrant not doing so. This allows exception from recall in accordance with the provision in the first sentence, for cases where the solution is documented, but this is done after the one-year period in section 10.

Special reasons may warrant revocation. Such reasons may be, for example, that a person who have committed criminal offenses submit a release of former citizenship long after the one year period, in order to avoid revocation and possible expulsion from Norway. It must be presumed that renounced citizenship from his or her country will be submitted once a national foreigner applies for Norwegian citizenship, and not wait until a speculated expulsion case will be raised.²⁸²²

²⁸²² Preparatory work, Otprp. Nr.41 (2004-2005) 232.

An administrative decision regarding nationality may be revoked if it is possible to reverse it pursuant to section 35 of the Public Administration Act²⁸²³ or general rules of administrative law. This clarifies that invalid Norwegian citizenship can be revoked.

However, revocation of nationality that is based on incorrect or incomplete information may only be carried out if the applicant has furnished the incorrect information against his or her better judgment or has suppressed circumstances of substantial importance for the decision. Incorrect information being weighted in the decision that the applicant cannot be blamed for, cannot provide grounds for recall.

According to the provision, the decision shall be considered valid until it is revoked. However, the effect occurs from the original time of the acquisition date when the nationality is revoked due to invalidity. The person shall be considered to have never been Norwegian., and this paragraph is based on discretion. Subject to the first paragraph, the provision is not intended to be used as an exception provision. Statelessness does not preclude recall, but may be an important factor in the decision in accordance with the purpose of section 26.

The question of recall for children must be considered separately when the parents' citizenship is called back due to invalidity.²⁸²⁴

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

Norway is not a part of the EU as per this report, and thus is not entitled to be a beneficiary of funds from the EU Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund,²⁸²⁵ or the European Social Fund.²⁸²⁶ Initiatives and measures regarding asylum and migration is funded mainly by the Norwegian State²⁸²⁷.

The Norwegian Directorate of Immigration,²⁸²⁸ is responsible for dealing with immigration to Norway and dealing with integration issues and migrants' needs. The Directorate implements programmes aimed at better integration of migrants. The programmes and the work of the Directorate is funded by the Norwegian State.

The Directorate funds and operates an Introductory programme, which most migrants are obliged by law to attend, according to the Act on an introductory programme and Norwegian language instruction for newly arrived immigrants, the Introduction Act²⁸²⁹ section 2. The programme aims at providing the migrants with fundamental skills in Norwegian language and society, and prepare the migrants for employment in the labour market, or for education in Norway. The programme is adapted for every single individual, taking into consideration their preconditions, language skills and economic situation.

According to the Introductory Act, participation in the programme triggers the right to benefits, currently amounting to NOK 187 268²⁸³⁰ as of May 1 2017, about € 20 000, every year.

Further, the Directorate operates programmes to support employment for newly arrived migrants (i.e. «Jobbsjansen»). In addition, the Norwegian Labour and Welfare Administration, run several programmes for migrants. Several municipalities operate separate local programmes.²⁸³¹ Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) such as the Red Cross²⁸³², the Church City Mission²⁸³³ and the Salvation Army runs separate programmes with the same aim. NGO programmes are often applicable to apply for grants from the Directorate or municipalities to fund their work, or they could be self-funded. Some NGOs might be applicable to apply for support from EU programmes.

Conclusions

This paper shows that migration law in Norway is regulated by an extensive legal regime. As seen in section 2 of this report, the Immigration Act is the principal piece of legislation with regards to the formal, material and procedural immigration process. The Norwegian Directorate of Immigration is the central government agency, and both governmental and non-governmental organisations provide important additional guidance about migrants' rights in Norway, cf. section 4.

Furthermore, the legal areas described in this article are largely based on international conventions. The ECHR is of paramount importance, and as described in section 6, Norway is bound to comply with the case law of the ECtHR. Moreover, international conventions like the Refugee Convention are pivotal in ensuring equal treatment of migrants seeking refuge in the various state parties, cf. section 2.

International agreements also seem to have an increased importance for social and economic rights, such as health, cf. section 8, and education, cf. sections 9 and 10. The Norwegian government is, as we have seen, to a large extent seeking to make the enjoyment of these rights equal for citizens and immigrants, although some concerns are raised regarding the factual accessibility of the services, cf. section 7.

Introduction

In recent years Europe had to face enormous flood of people not only escaping from the areas of conflict in the Middle East but also from states where the standard of living forced many families to seek better life within the borders of European states.

The primary concern of this research is to ascertain the situation of migrants in the Republic of Poland and how does it cope with the current situation in Europe. In this study authors tried to answer main concerns that had arose, that is what are the legal instruments existing in Polish law concerning migrants and what governmental bodies deal with the question of migrants? What are the statistics of migrants arriving to Poland? How does Poland implement the decisions of ECHR and recommendations of European Commission concerning migrants? How does Poland deal with the question of healthcare and education of migrants? Finally, the authors deal also with the question of political participation, citizenship and integration of migrants.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Ideological conditions

Willing to determine the moment that initiated the regulation of the international protection in the Polish legal system, one has to look into the axiology related to the concept of the protection of human rights. Europe was the birthplace of the ideology that united premises from the areas of politics, ethics, and philosophy and that valued highly the significance of freedom and dignity of an individual together with limiting the power of the state.

The present shape of human rights is established on the foundation that has been laid after World War II. They were then proclaimed as a manifesto for peace and strong renouncement of war. The axiological outline of this system was presented by the Charter of the United Nations and was further affirmed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Those documents presented a vista on the human rights that in the following years transformed into an important pillar of the international public law. This transformation marked the beginning of the worldwide universalization of the human rights.²⁸³⁴

Human rights, understood as universal moral laws of a fundamental character,²⁸³⁵ were with time subjected to constitutional regulations in many countries, becoming a foundation of their legal systems — as was the case with Poland.

1.2. Constitution of the Republic of Poland from 1997.

1.2.1. Constitutional right to asylum in the light of international law

The question of the protection of foreigners in the domestic legal system was regulated already in the Constitution of the Republic of Poland from 1997. Article 56 (right to asylum) states the following:

Paragraph 1. Foreigners can use the right to asylum in the Polish Republic according to the rules defined by the statute.

Paragraph 2. A foreigner who comes to the Polish Republic seeking protection from persecution may be granted the status of a refugee according to the binding treaties signed by the Polish Republic.

Both those paragraphs refer to different legal acts. The rules governing the granting of an asylum, mentioned by the paragraph 1, are defined by a statute from the 13th of June 2003 about granting foreigners protection on the territory of the Polish Republic. Paragraph 2 does not point to any specific treaties and its style suggests that Poland has been bounded by treaties that regulated the question of granting foreigners with the status of a refugee even before the effective Constitution came into force. In fact, Poland was a side in the Geneva Conventions and the 1967 New York Protocol before 1997 — thanks to this knowledge we may assume that the law of the art. 56 paragraph 2 is a positive reference to those acts.²⁸³⁶ This vague mentioning of “binding treaties” allows for future signing of other treaties concerning international protection, without the need of interfering with the Constitution. This interpretation of the discussed law encompasses also European Union regulations (including art. 18 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, affirming the right to asylum, and art. 78 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, concerning the collaborative policy in the areas of protection and asylum).

Accepting this regulation results in establishing a constitutional law of the same standards as in the ratified treaties and in the European Union law making. The Constitution may not be limited by domestic statutes in any way that would be noncompliant with the treaties.²⁸³⁷

1.2.2. Exercising the constitutional rights and freedoms

From the perspective of foreigners, art. 37 of the Constitution describes another important regulation:

Paragraph 1. Those governed by the Polish Republic are free to exercise their rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution.

Paragraph 2. Exceptions from this rule, regarding the foreigners, are defined by a statute.

In a democratic state of law the limitation of the foreigner’s rights may only take place in the areas of political and social rights.²⁸³⁸ In this case, the constitution does not exclude any of the rights — it only signifies that possible exceptions in exercising the constitutional rights and freedoms may apply only to foreigners. Nevertheless, fundamental laws regarding the essence of the human dignity may not be limited in any way. Any limitations are acceptable only on the grounds of a democratic state of law, equality, and other constitutional rules.²⁸³⁹

1.3. Procedure for granting asylum

1.3.1 The asylum statute

The statute from the 13th of June 2003 about granting foreigners protection on the territory of the Polish Republic (further referred to as “the asylum statute”) foresees four ways of providing protection: granting the status of a refugee, granting complementary protection, granting asylum, granting temporary protection.

The first chapter of the third part of the asylum statute is devoted to granting asylum. Art. 90 of this statute allows for granting a foreigner with an asylum within the Polish Republic if such a step is necessary to protect him and if granting asylum is beneficial for the Polish Republic. For an asylum to be granted, a special form must be submitted with the following information:

- background information on an applicant and on a represented person, allowing for carrying on the proceedings;
- naming the home country of the applicant and of a represented person;
- describing the essential events that led to applying for an asylum.

The form for granting an asylum will not be considered if an applicant will not allow for being photographed and for sampling his fingerprints. If the applicant is currently abroad, he is obliged to attach his photography to the form — his fingerprints are then sampled after his arrival to the territory of the Polish Republic on the basis of a domestic visa issued for those applying for an asylum. If an applying foreigner is residing on the territory of Poland, the process of sampling his fingerprints and photographing him is organized by the commander of the Border Patrol unit that operates in the area of Warsaw.

While applying for an asylum, a foreigner may also submit a form for people for whom he provides (for a spouse, for unmarried children, for children born during the process of application). Applying in the name of others requires their written consent, which is equal in force to granting the applicant the authorization to represent others in the case of granting international protection.

With the exception of cases proceeded as urgent (details of these proceedings are defined by art. 39 of the asylum statute), the application process should not take more than six months from the day of submitting an application. In exceptional cases (with extraordinary levels of complicatedness, large number of applications submitted over a short period of time, tardiness on the side of an applicant), the process may be extended up to fifteen months.

The duties of an applicant over the course of proceedings regarding granting the international protection are detailed in art. 41 of the statute:

²⁸³⁹ Orzeczenie Trybunału Konstytucyjnego z dnia 15 listopada 2000 r. (sygn. P 12/99) [Polish]

- providing necessary information to define the actual state of affairs, especially regarding the applicant's age, his prior experiences that may influence the case, his identity, citizenship, relatives, countries and places of prior residence, prior applications for an asylum, routes he travelled and the causes for applying for international protection.
- sharing any evidence that prove the circumstances pointed out in the application form
- being present when summoned by the unit that carries out the proceedings in order to submit clarifications or to participate in an interview.

1.3.2. Administrative proceedings

Proceedings in the case of granting an asylum are conducted in accordance with the statute from the 14th of June 1960, The Code of Administrative Proceedings. Lex specialis regarding the general administrative proceedings is composed of the norms stated in the asylum statute and in the statute from the 12th of December 2013 about foreigners (regulating the questions of visas, entering and residing on the territory of Poland, leaving this territory, and applying detention). Nevertheless, those acts do not introduce essential modifications, they only adjust the procedure to the needs of proceedings regarding granting international protection. As is stated by Barbara Kowalczyk, such solution is rooted in the “character of an asylum as a form of protection limited to a single country, tied to the idea of a state's sovereignty that can't be regulated by and binding treaties”²⁸⁴⁰.

1.4. Officials responsible for the asylum procedure

The central unit of the state administration that is concerned with granting foreigners an asylum within the Polish Republic is the Head of the Office for Foreigners.²⁸⁴¹ Granting or denying asylum requires an approval of the minister responsible for foreign affairs. This requirement is justified by the possibility of a situation when granting someone with an asylum will affect the relations between the countries.

In the case of a negative decision on an asylum, the applicant may request re-examination of the application. Head of the Office for Foreigners is responsible for reconsidering the application. The person seeking protection subsequently has the possibility of setting up a case in the administrative court. It will follow the usual procedure provided for other proceedings in administrative court. The unfavorable decision does not close the way to apply for protection or another form of legalization of residence on other grounds.

The asylum law does not specify any reasons that could exclude the right to asylum. The only prerequisites, which should be guided by the decision are: the need to provide protection to the applicant and the important interests of the Polish Republic. This gives the discretion of responsible authorities. A person who has received asylum loses that right when he or she pursues an activity directed against the defense or the security of the State or the security and public order. Depriving asylum also occurs when the reasons for which it was granted no longer exists²⁸⁴².

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

In Poland the difference between immigrants is mostly made on the basis of citizenship and nationality. As the EU member, Poland implements the law that promotes EU citizens over the third states' citizens. However, the family members of EU citizens are treated in a manner that rather resembles the regulations on EU citizens. Therefore, the family members of EU citizens who are not necessarily EU citizens as well as those who come from the EU would be presented in the part dedicated to the Immigration from EU Member States. For the purposes of EU citizens, their family members are defined as their spouse, ascendants and descendants as well as ascendants and descendants of their spouse.²⁸⁴³ The most popular Polish definition of the emigrant states it is the foreigner who for the economic reasons is heading voluntarily and legally to another country with the aim to temporarily or permanently locate its interest on this territory.²⁸⁴⁴

2.1. Immigration from EU Member States

A fundament of the immigration from EU Member States is surely the EU law.²⁸⁴⁵ The Polish basic implementation is an Act of July 14 2006.²⁸⁴⁶

2.1.1. Ground Rules of the Immigration from EU Member States

It is a well-known rule that anyone crossing the border should have a travel document. However, if the EU citizen or its family member cannot present travel documents or other documents confirming their identity, they may present another proof. What is essential is that these characteristics must raise no doubts as to their authenticity.

2.1.2. Admission into the Polish Territory

The EU citizen or the family member who is not EU citizen can be refused the entry into the Polish territory, when its entry to the register of the foreigners whose residence on the Polish territory is undesirable is in force; or its residence in Poland could constitute a threat to state defence or security, to the protection of safety and public order or to public health. The decision on the refusal of entry into the Polish territory is immediately enforceable. If the family member who is not EU citizen is refused the entry into the Polish territory basing on the arguments related to the security, the decision is accompanied by the decision on the annulment of the visa.²⁸⁴⁷

2.1.3. The Right of Residence

Without fulfilling any additional requirements, the EU citizen and the family member who is not EU citizen can reside in Poland up to 3 months. EU citizen who entered the Polish territory with the aim of searching for a job can reside for up to 6 months, unless it proves after this period that it actively continues to look for a job and has an actual chance to be hired.²⁸⁴⁸ During that time, EU citizen is obliged to have a valid travel document or other valid document proving his identity and citizenship; the family member who is not EU citizen is obliged to have a valid travel document.²⁸⁴⁹

The EU citizen has the right to reside for the period longer than 3 months if it is an employee or the person working at its own account on the Polish territory or is a spouse of the Polish citizen. The same applies to the EU citizens who have sufficient financial means to support themselves and their family members on the Polish territory so as not to create burden for the social assistance or who study or participate in vocational training in Poland and fulfil the insurance requirements. If the aim of the residence in Poland is to work, the EU citizen to whom the restrictions on access to the labour market apply, receives the right of residence for the period longer than 3 months after receiving a promise of the work permit on Polish territory.²⁸⁵⁰ It is worth to mention that the marriage is controlled on the basis of specific requirements for it to fulfil.²⁸⁵¹

The EU citizen that ceased to be an employee or the person working on its own account, maintains its right of residence if this situation is a result of the periodical inability to work caused by a disease or accident, it is the case of unwilling unemployment that is confirmed in the register of unemployed run by the employment office or the EU citizen undertakes education or vocational training. In some cases of unwilling unemployment, it is possible to obtain extension of 6 months of the right of residence.²⁸⁵² The right of residence either regular and extended covers the family member who joins the EU citizen or resides with it on the Polish territory. However, the right attributed to the EU citizen because of its studies or trainings is limited to its spouse and child remaining on its or spouse's maintenance who joins the citizen or resides with it in Poland.²⁸⁵³

In case of a divorce, marriage annulment, death or departure from Poland of the EU citizen who has the right of residence, its family member maintains the right of residence. The rules of how the family member who is not an EU citizen maintains the right of residence are specified in the act, with additional requirements. Additionally, in case of death or departure of the EU citizen with the right of residence, the child of the EU citizen residing and learning or studying in Poland and the parent who has the custody over it, regardless their citizenship, maintain the right of residence until the end of the child's education or studies. The same applies to the child of an EU citizen who was an employee on the Polish territory but did not maintain the right of residence if the child resides to learn or study on the Polish territory.²⁸⁵⁴

If the residence on the Polish territory is longer than 3 months, then the EU citizen is obliged to register its residence and the family member who is not an EU citizen is obliged to obtain a residence card of the family member of the EU citizen. This obligation does not concern the EU citizen who is searching for a job for 6 months or more if it proves that it still actively searches for the job and there is an actual chance that it will be hired. The family member who is not an EU citizen must have the residence card for the EU citizen's family member which confirms its right of residence on the Polish territory and authorizes with the valid travel document to cross the border multiple times without a visa. The residence card of the family member is valid for 5 years.²⁸⁵⁵

2.1.4. Permanent Residence

The EU citizen acquires the right of permanent residence after 5 years of uninterrupted residence on the Polish territory. The family member who is not an EU citizen acquires the right of permanent residence after 5 years of uninterrupted residence on the Polish territory with the EU citizen. The family members both who are and are not EU citizens and resided on the Polish territory for the uninterrupted period of 5 years and maintained the right of residence – acquire a right of permanent residence as well.²⁸⁵⁶ It is possible to be granted the right of permanent residence before the end of 5-year-long period of residence when the specific requirements for employees or persons working on its own behalf are satisfied.²⁸⁵⁷

The requirement of providing the work or other activity for profit on its own behalf and account in Poland in this regard is also fulfilled when it is provided in another member state. The specific unwilling absences or independent from the person are included in the period of work.²⁸⁵⁸

The right of permanent residence granted to an employee or a person working on its own account is obtained by its family member, regardless its citizenship. In case of death of its death before being granted the right of permanent residence, the family member who resided with it in

Poland on the day of its death obtains the right of permanent residence, regardless its citizenship.²⁸⁵⁹

The residence on the Polish territory is considered as undisrupted when temporary absences did not exceed 6 months a year in total. The exceed is allowed if the absence was for the compulsory military service or because of an important personal situation (especially pregnancy, childbirth, illness, studies, vocational training), delegation, which requires a residence outside Polish territory, under the condition that this period is no longer than 12 consecutive months. The residence is always disrupted by the decision on expulsion.²⁸⁶⁰

The permanent residence card of the family member of the EU citizen confirms its right of permanent residence on the Polish territory and authorizes it along with the valid travel document to cross the border without the visa. This card is valid for 10 years.²⁸⁶¹

2.1.5 Decision on Expulsion from Polish Territory

The EU citizen or its family member who does not have a permanent residence right can be expelled if their residence constitutes a threat to state defence or security or protection of security and public order or public health.²⁸⁶² If they have the permanent residence permit, the decision on expulsion can be issued if they pose a serious threat to state defence or security or protection of security and public order.²⁸⁶³ If the EU citizen resides in Poland for more than 10 years, the decision on expulsion can be issued only if the said threat is made through a threat to peace, humanity, sovereignty or defence of Republic of Poland or because of the terrorist activities.²⁸⁶⁴

The decision on expulsion of EU citizen or its family member orders to leave Polish territory within the time limit of no less than 31 days. If the level of threat requires it, in the decision on expulsion, it is ordered to execute it by force by bringing the EU citizen or its family member to the border of the country where it is expelled or to the airport or seaport of this country. In such case, the time limit can be shorter than 31 days. Moreover, the execution by force is ordered also when the EU citizen or its family member does not leave Polish territory within the set time limit.²⁸⁶⁵

2.2. Immigration from Non-EU Countries

The basic Polish law in this area is the Foreigners Act of December 12 2013.²⁸⁶⁶ It covers multiple areas of the situation of foreigners in Poland. The EU citizens are not considered foreigners in this act. The entire law in this matter is based on the citizen-foreigners dichotomy.²⁸⁶⁷

2.2.1. Ground Rules for the Immigration from the Countries outside the EU

Each foreigner who crosses the border is obliged to have a valid travel document, a valid visa or other valid document authorising him to enter the Polish territory and to reside at this territory, if it's obligatory and a permit to enter another country or permit to reside in another country if such permits are obligatory in case of transit passing.²⁸⁶⁸ Apart from the document obligations, foreigners that enter the territory of Republic of Poland are obliged to justify the aim and conditions of their planned residence, have and present on request documents confirming their insurance and sufficient financial means. The foreigner may present an invitation as a document confirming that it has financial means sufficient to cover the costs of the planned residence on the Polish territory, including the costs of accommodation and alimentation and to cover the costs of the return journey or accommodation and costs of transit to the third country that allows entry.²⁸⁶⁹ The Act consists of a detailed list of who an inviting person might be.

A national visa authorizes to enter the Polish territory and authorizes continuous residence on it or to the several residences on this territory that follow each other and totally lasts no more than 90 days during the validity of visa. The allowed aim of issuing the visa are listed in the Act.²⁸⁷⁰

The visa issued with the aim to execute work can be issued to the foreigner who presents the work permit or written statement of the employer about the intention to hire the foreigner if the work permit is not obligatory. It is issued for the period of the residence corresponding to the period indicated in the permit or statement but not longer than the period dedicated to this type of visa.²⁸⁷¹

2.2.2. Temporary Residence

The temporary residence permit is given on the foreigner's motion, if it fulfils the requirements determined basing on the declared aim of residence and the circumstances which are the grounds for the application justify its residence on the Polish territory for a period longer than 3 months. The temporary residence permits are given for the period indispensable to achieve the aim of the foreigner's residence on the Polish territory, but no longer than 3 years.²⁸⁷²

The temporary residence and work permit is granted when the aim of the residence is to execute work and the foreigner fulfils jointly the conditions regarding the insurance, earnings, accommodation, moreover, its new position cannot be occupied by the local labour market and its remuneration determined in the contract cannot be lower than the amount of remuneration for the comparable work for the same amount of time a week or on the comparable position.²⁸⁷³

Except for the above-mentioned permits for temporary residence there are also specific temporary residence permits such as for studying, running business activity or conducting a scientific research. Each of them has a different procedure and the foreigners are granted various separate means of challenge. Cases must be analysed separately and then it might be assessed whether more detailed regulations apply. It causes problems for those who are not fluent in Polish and Polish law.²⁸⁷⁴

The permanent residence permit is granted for the indefinite period, on the foreigner's application, if it is the child of the foreigner granted appropriate permit or Polish citizen who is under its custody in determined periods; if it has Polish origin and plans to reside and live on the Polish territory permanently; if it is married to Polish citizen for 3 years before filing the application and fulfils requirements of uninterrupted stay; if it is a victim of human trafficking and remained on the Polish territory for at least a year on the grounds of the temporary residence permit for victims of human trafficking before applying for the permanent residence permit, cooperated with the law enforcement authorities and justified its fears of returning to its country of origin; if it stayed in Poland for uninterrupted period of at least 5 years basing on its refugee status, supplementary protection or permit for humanitarian reasons; if it stayed on Polish territory for at least 10 years on the grounds of the tolerated residence permit in cases specified in the act²⁸⁷⁵; if it was granted an asylum on Polish territory or if it has a valid Pole Card and it intends to live on the Polish territory.²⁸⁷⁶

It is checked whether granting the permanent residence permit would not constitute a threat to the state defence or security or protection of security and public order. Moreover, if the basis for the application is marriage with the Polish citizen, its authenticity is also verified.²⁸⁷⁷

The residence of the foreigner that is the basis to grant the permanent residence permit is considered as uninterrupted if none of the absences was longer than 6 months and all absences in total did not exceed 10 months unless the absence was caused by professional or studying reasons, special personal situation or accompanying the foreigner: by its spouse or a minor child.²⁸⁷⁸

The main difference between the foreigners who obtained the permanent residence permit and citizens is that only the permanent residence permit may be retracted or annulled by the administrative decision.²⁸⁷⁹

2.2.4. Decision on Obligating the Foreigner to Leave Polish Territory

Each foreigner is obliged to leave Polish territory before the expiry of the time period for which it is authorized to stay in Poland. Moreover, the foreigner is obliged to leave Polish territory within 30 days from the day of the refusal to extend the visa, to grant temporary or permanent residence permission, EU long-term resident permission or of the withdrawal of these permissions. The same applies to the refusal to grant a refugee status or supplementary protection or deprivation of these rights and withdrawal of the permit for humanitarian reasons.²⁸⁸⁰

The basis for the decision obliging the foreigner to leave Poland would be, among others, residing on Polish territory without a valid visa or any other valid documents authorizing its stay, not leaving Polish territory after the authorized time for residence, working without the obligatory work permit, not having sufficient financial means to cover the costs of residence in Poland, return journey or transit, crossing the border contrary to the law, further residence of the foreigner in Poland would constitute a threat to public health.²⁸⁸¹

The decision determines the time limit for voluntary return of between 15 and 30 days from the day of delivery of the decision. This time limit is not set if there is a possibility of foreigner's escape or it is required by the state defence or security reasons or protection of safety and public order. If the decision does not have the time limit, it is immediately enforceable.²⁸⁸²

If the foreigner does not leave Polish territory within the determined time limit, the time limit was not set or after the decision was issued: the possibility of the foreigner's escape occurred or further residence constitutes a threat to state defence or security or protection of security and public order, the decision is due to the execution by force. The execution by force is made by bringing the foreigner to the border or to the airport or seaport of the country of destination.²⁸⁸³

Summing up, it is noticeable that the regulations regarding EU and non-EU citizens vary in Polish legal system. It is easier to enter Polish territory being EU citizen or its family member and the conditions of their expulsion are milder. Finally, it should be noted that all the decisions described in this part can be appealed to the higher instance of the administrative hierarchy and then can be subject to the judicial review. However, the issuance of visa by consuls is excluded from the judicial review which was questioned before the CJEU and, depending on the judgement, it might change in the near future.²⁸⁸⁴

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

3.1. Office for Foreigners

The agency that plays a vital role in Poland is the Office for Foreigners. It was established in 2007 in place of the Office for Repatriation and Foreigners. Presently art. 8 of the Statute from the 12th of December 2013 about foreigners²⁸⁸⁵ is the basis on which the Office is operating. This Statute defines the Office to be a part of the public service through which the Head of the Office for Foreigners executes his statutory assignments. Among those, outlined in the art. 6 of the above mentioned statute, is monitoring foreigners entering the territory of the Polish Republic, their transit through this territory, their residence, exit, bestowing them with the status of a refugee²⁸⁸⁶, providing them with supplementary protection, accepting their residence due to humanitarian reasons, granting them a tolerated residence permit, providing them with asylum, or granting them temporary protection. The work of Head of the Office for Foreigners is supervised by the Minister responsible for the internal affairs, currently the Minister of the Interior and Administration²⁸⁸⁷. The Office is operating on the basis of its by-law that was appended to the Minister's of the Interior and Administration Executive Order number 1, decreed on the 5th of January 2017 in order to proclaim the by-law of the Office for Foreigners.²⁸⁸⁸ It divides the Office onto organizational cells that operate under the direct command of the Head of the Office for Foreigners. The detailed scope of the tasks undertaken by the organizational cells of the Office and the way in which they are organized is defined by the Executive Order number 4, decreed by the Head of the Office for Foreigners on the 6th of March 2017 in order to establish the organizational design of the Office for Foreigners.²⁸⁸⁹

3.2. Council for Refugees' Affairs

Council for Refugees' Affairs belongs to the public service operating under art. 89p of the Statute from the 13th of June 2003 about granting foreigners protection on the territory of the Polish Republic.²⁸⁹⁰ Council's task is to hear appeals and complaints about the decisions made by the Head of the Office for Foreigners in cases regarding granting the status of a refugee. What is more, Council is the organ of the public administration that recommences legal action, cancels, changes, or declares as invalid its own decisions and resolutions. Moreover, the Council deals with gathering information on the home countries of foreigners or cooperation with other agencies working in the area of migration and refugees. The by-law of the Council for Refugees' Affairs is granted by the Prime Minister, who also appoints and recalls Council's members.

3.3. Voivode

Polish Republic consists of 16 voivodeships — in each of those operates a Provincial Office, headed by a voivode who is a subject executing the goals of the public administration on the level of a single province. He is a representative of the Council of Ministers, called on the basis of the Statute from the 23rd of January 2009 about voivodeships and public administration of the level of a voivodeship.²⁸⁹¹ Voivodes are appointed and recalled by the Prime Minister at the request of the Minister responsible for the internal affairs, currently the Minister of the Interior and Administration. Because of this fact, the supervision and control over a voivode is exerted by the Prime Minister and an appropriate minister. The complete scope of a voivode's duties is derived from individual statutes. For example, the Statute from the 12th of December 2013 about foreigners states that a voivode's duty is to issue or deny temporary residence permits, and to issue special foreigner's documents such as a permanent residence card, a Polish traveling permit for a foreigner, and a document asserting one's right for a tolerated residence, called "permit for tolerated stay". Voivode's additional competences arise from the Statute from the 28th of July 2011 about legalizing the residence of some of the foreigners on the territory of the Polish Republic and about altering the statute about granting foreigners protection on the territory of the Polish Republic and about foreigners.²⁸⁹² He may issue permissions for residence for a definite stay for those foreigners, who illegally reside on the territory of the Polish Republic, or deny them. In case of denying a permission, a foreigner is allowed to appeal from this decision to the Head of the Office for Foreigners. Because of a broad scope of a voivode's duties in the area of foreigners' rights, Provincial Offices were equipped with special Departments for Citizen's and Foreigner's affairs. For example in the Małopolskie Voivodeship the Department for Citizen's and Foreigner's affairs was created on the basis of the by-law of the Małopolska Provincial Office in Cracow stated by the Małopolskie Voivode in an Executive Order.²⁸⁹³

3.4. Consul

A consul is described as a Polish official operating outside the borders of the Polish Republic. Art. 1 of the Statute from the 25th of June 2015 about the consular law²⁸⁹⁴ outlines the basic scope of the duties of a consul. Among those duties lies protecting the interests of both the Polish Republic and its citizens living abroad, strengthening the bond between the Polish Republic and its citizens (together with the people of Polish descent living in the receiving country), and supporting the economical, scholar, scientific, and cultural cooperation between the Polish Republic and the receiving country. In their dealings, consuls respond directly to the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Art. 18 of the above mentioned statute enumerates a more detailed spectrum of a consul's duties. They are mostly concerned with sustaining the relationships with the receiving country and caring for the interests of Polish citizens living abroad. Nevertheless, this spectrum is not limited and may be broadened by specific competences granted through individual statutes. Even art. 21 of the above mentioned statute introduces the possibility for European Union's citizens to receive the help of Polish consuls as if they were Polish citizens. According to art. 66 of the Statute from the 12th of December 2013 about the foreigners, a consul is responsible for issuing or denying a Polish visa. This document, according to the art. 59 of the above mentioned statute allows for entering the territory of the Polish Republic and staying there (during one or many spells) for a total maximum number of 90 days during the validity of a visa. Consul is a characteristic subject in light of foreigners and migrants, as he permanently resides outside of the state's borders and, in a way, performs the selection of individuals who express a will to arrive to the territory of the Polish Republic. Nonetheless, he is not concerned with the stay of foreigners in Poland or their particular rights.

3.5. Border Guard

According to art. 1 paragraph 1 of the Statute from the 12th of October 1990 about the Border Guard²⁸⁹⁵, this unit is defined as a formation created to protect the state border, to control the movement across the border, and to counteract illegal migration. It is within their competences to enforce the law regarding the foreigners entering the territory of the Polish Republic, to recognize, analyze, and combat migrational dangers, such as the criminal side of the illegal migration. Border Guard is also obliged to cooperate with subjects and organs dealing with granting foreigners permits for entering or staying in the Polish Republic — this cooperation encompasses executing legal actions requested by those subjects and organs, for example issuing permissions for crossing the state border such as visas.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

4.1. Growing number of economic immigrants

Poland is becoming a place for more and more immigrants. The number of aliens who have a residence permit has exceeded 300,000 this year. Most of them are citizens of the neighboring countries of Poland, culturally close; Ukrainians and Belarusians. This group includes economic immigrants as well as refugees looking for asylum on the Polish territory.

In the first half of this year, foreigners paid 89,000. applications for a residence permit in Poland. That's up by 42%. compared with the first half of last year, and compared with 2015 - by 87%. Interestingly, the overwhelming majority is seeking legalization for a temporary stay, and only 11 percent of applications are for permanent residence.

The immigration of Ukrainians to Poland and the fact that most of them are no longer evidence of the circulation of these immigrants. The growing tendency of its causes lies in the difficult economic situation of Ukrainians, which is the result of the economic crisis in Ukraine and the ongoing war since 2014. Most of them come to Poland for a few months, often working illegally, and the money they send to their families in their home country. Together, they sent in their homes 5 billion dollars (1.16 billion euros) in their homes.^{4.3} Refugees seeking protection in Poland.

The number of refugees in Poland, which in various forms received protection of the Polish state, is 5534 persons.

By the end of the first half of 2017, over 3,000 people applied for international protection, a decrease of 60% over the previous year. These conclusions do not come from the newcomers arriving in Europe from the Middle East or North Africa, but from the former Soviet Union. As many as 71 percent of these requests were made by representatives of the Chechen minority fleeing the authoritarian rule of the Kadyrov regime. What is regrettable, only 8% of all asylum applications received a positive decision.

4.2. Educational Immigration to Poland

Currently there are 57,199 foreign students studying in 157 countries, representing 4.1% of all students. And again worth pointing out, most of them are Ukrainians (53 percent of all foreign students). Representatives from Belarus, Spain, Sweden and Norway are also followed.

4.3. Characteristics of migration to Poland

Poland is a place of migration mainly of representatives of countries neighboring Poland. This is due to the poor economic situation of these states and sometimes war or persecution as in the case of Ukraine or the Chechens. It is also characteristic that a large number of these people do not apply for legalization of permanent residence, but immigration is a temporary solution for the domestic budget. Poland is also becoming more and more attractive for groups of students who want to study on the Vistula. The overwhelming majority are European students, and only a handful of them are Asian students.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. Main body

The question of migrants applying for asylum or for international protection is not a new issue for Poland. Yearly thousands of foreigners apply for the migrant status in Poland. The record year was 2013, where over 15 thousand applications were filed. However, since numerous conflicts emerged ex. in Syria the flow of migrants in Europe increased significantly. Still, one of the biggest groups of migrants that arrive to Poland are refugees from Chechnya.

5.1.1. Implementation of European Court of Human Rights' decisions.

The obligation of the members of the Council of Europe to implement the judgements of the European Court of Human Rights stems from Art. 46 of European Convention on Human Rights.²⁸⁹⁶

In 2007 Polish Prime Minister established a special interministerial Committee for matters of the European Court of Human Rights, which deals with the execution of Court's judgements in respect of Poland.²⁸⁹⁷ Committees' tasks are drafting governmental official position in regard to individual complaints and decisions made by the ECHR. What is more, the Committee analyses parliamentary bills in context of their compliance with the convention and also formulates proposals of appropriate actions that should be made by Poland.²⁸⁹⁸

In February 2014 Polish Parliament as one of the first in Europe decided to constitute a permanent subcommittee for the enforcement of the European Court of Human Rights' judgements by Poland which was widely approved by the Council of Europe.²⁸⁹⁹

5.2.2. Terespol border crossing

The main passage for migrants is Terespol border crossing. In this year, a Chechnyan refugee was seeking asylum in Poland. He attempted to submit an asylum application 27 times, however the Polish Border Guard refused in every case to grant him international protection.²⁹⁰⁰ On 8th June in the morning the foreigner's attorney Sylwia Grzegorzczuk-Abram sent documents to the ECHR confirming that he was tortured and persecuted in his home country. In that situation ECHR used interim measures which are considered as 'urgent measures' and apply only where there is 'an imminent risk of irreparable damage'.²⁹⁰¹

The Court's decision came to Polish Ministry of Foreign Affairs within hours. Polish Border Guards ignored the Court's order and sent him back to Belarus. A day later, the Chechnyan made another attempt to cross the Polish border, now equipped with the ECHR decision. The Border Guard also this time refused him to enter Poland. What is more, they took from him the decision of the ECHR. Polish Ministry of Foreign Affairs claim that the Chechnyan refugee did not fulfil conditions required for applying for the asylum since he was escaping the Chechnyan law authorities.²⁹⁰²

What is more, the Ministry claims that the refugee did not cross the Polish border, so he could not be expelled from the country. Contrary to that claim, Grzegorzczuk-Abram claims that since the Polish authorities, that is the Border Guard, handled his case, the Chechnyan was under Polish jurisdiction. Thus, Polish authorities violated article 2.1 of ICCPR and Article 1 of the ECHR Convention.

The decision made by Polish authorities is harshly opposing to non-refoulement principle enshrined in Article 33 of 1951 Geneva Convention which prohibits expulsion or returning of a refugee 'where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion'²⁹⁰³. What is more, such actions constitute violation of Article 34 of the European Convention on Human Rights. HFHR also points that 'the behaviour of the Border Guard officers working at the Terespol station, who refused to receive the foreigner in Poland despite having been ordered to do so by the ECtHR, may also be treated as an abuse of a public official's powers, the offence under Article 231 of the Polish Criminal Code'²⁹⁰⁴. in both cases the Court stated that sending back a person seeking for asylum to the state of origin where a person would be persecuted clearly violates provisions set in ECHR Convention. Recently an analogous situation occurred on the Terespol border crossing. The Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights has filed a submission to the European Court of Human Rights to apply interim measures regarding the situation of three Syrian refugees who were applying for international protection on the border crossing in Terespol. The border guards refused to grant a passage to Poland, despite the fact that under European law refugees escaping from the area of conflict have rights to obtain help in Poland. On 20th July the ECHR decided to apply the interim measures and urged Poland authorities not to send them back to Belarus. Regardless of that, the border guards refused three Syrians to enter Poland and had them sent back to Belarus. This burning problem was also highlighted by Amnesty International, Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights and Human Rights Watch who declared that 'The European Commission should take actions against Poland sending back to Belarus people seeking for international protection.' In their assessment, actions taken by Polish authorities violate human rights, EU law and decisions made by ECHR.²⁹⁰⁶ Human rights organisations raise that since the year 2016 Polish authorities are impeding the entrance of migrants and are sending them back to Belarus, in which there is no protection mechanism. Migrants from Chechnya and other Central Asia states are then sent to countries from which they've fled, thus they are endangered of torture and inhumane treatment in their home countries.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

According to the recommendations of Polish Commissioner for Human Rights which were stipulated in his statement to Prime Minister 5th of October 2015 r., Polish authorities should focus on encouraging migrants to stay in Poland, not to treat it as 'transit state'. They should provide them opportunities for integration with Polish society as well as possibility to learn Polish, open educational paths and enable professional career. Poland should create kind of attitude towards migration issues which is recognized as 'Culture of Receiving'. Together with recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance it formulates kind of 'map' for Polish authorities responsible for preparations and implementations of migration policy. Cooperation between public and local authorities, civic society and of course migrants itself is necessary to fulfil these recommendations.

One of the most important issues concerning migration policy is integration of migrants with local society. Refugees centres in Poland are located outside the cities, far from the cultural centres, universities and work places. Integration cannot be effective in such circumstances. Consequently they are excluded from the society, they experience troubles with creating relations with locals, learning Polish language and entering into labour market. What is more, they do not have the possibility to experience Polish culture and traditions.

European Court of Justice, in the case Saciri C-79/13 (ECLI:EU:C:2014:103), highlighted the fact that financial support must be sufficient to ensure worthy level of live and appropriate for health situation of a person. Referring to the Court of Justice recommendations, Commissioner for Human Rights demands that the level of financial support should be adapted to individual needs as well as renting and living costs. There is Individual Integration Program in Poland which lasts one year however surviving with the budget (from 420 PLN to 1149 PLN per month) provided by Polish government through this program is practically impossible, especially for the foreigner who does not have anybody to support him, does not know the language and very often has traumatic past. The reality force numerous of them to seek for illegal jobs and live in flats with very low standard. European Commission against Racism and Intolerance additionally recommended that Polish authorities should increase the length of the individual integration programmes for persons under international protection so as to be able to 'resolve the problems of language proficiency and acquisition of the basic skills needed to find employment'.²⁹⁰⁷ According to numerous specialists and non-governmental organizations, one year given is not enough to achieve three main aims of Individual Integration Program which are: learning Polish language, finding well paid job and becoming economically independent and integrating with Polish society. However Polish government did not decide to change neither the length of the program nor amount of money. Worth mentioning is also the lack of social workers who could provide effective individual integration support to achieved above mentioned aims.

Difference between the theory coming from recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of Polish national human rights bodies is also visible in the access to labour market for migrants. People who obtained refugee status in Poland can work without any specific permission under the same conditions as Polish citizens. Equality in access to labour market should mean also equality in access to mechanisms of employers' protection. One of the most important rules stipulated in Polish Labour Code is prohibition of discrimination. Theoretically this rule is applicable to all employers and means that they should be treated equal, regardless of their sex, religion, origin, colour of the skin etc. but also regardless of the fact if they are migrants or Polish citizens. However it applies only to employment contracts but not temporary ones, the protection of migrants is only theoretical. Precarious agreements are still used much more often in relations with migrants, especially these coming from low income states. Numerous employers are afraid of hiring foreigners because of language barrier and cultural differences. The reason of such situation can be also low legal awareness in this topic. A huge negligence is visible from the side of government but also local authorities who seem disregard refugees living in their administrative districts and not to consider them as equal citizens. In consequence they neither consider them as potential employers nor provide any professional training or activation offer for them - there is lack of practical courses that would make their integration process easier. Centres of Family Aid in Warsaw and Lublin are two exceptions that are worth mentioning. The situation that repeats very often is that the majority of responsibility of national and local authorities is transferred to non-governmental organizations that provides language courses, professional and legal consulting services etc. This is for sure not the optimal situation and some legal changes must be undertaken.

Apart from formal issues with integration, migrants experience many problems of social nature. There is lots of negative opinions about migrants in the mentality of Polish society, mainly provoked by false information in media. Lack of strategic approach to this issue prolong their integration process, make it harder and more complicated.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. Subjects Entitled to Healthcare Benefits Financed from Public Funds.

The right to access healthcare financed from public funds is regulated in the Article 2 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds (Dz.U. 2004 nr 210 poz. 2135). According to the Act the subjects entitled to this benefits are persons covered by general health insurance and persons other than those covered by general health insurance which have their place of residence in the territory of Republic of Poland or have been granted a refugee status or supplementary protection or a temporary residence permit. The permit must be granted in conjunction with being in the territory of Republic of Poland or being in this territory in order to reconnect with a family and are members of the family of a foreigner residing in the territory of Republic of Poland in connection with granting him a refugee status or supplementary protection. Also they have to meet the income criteria from the Article 8 of the Act of 12 March – On Social Assistance (Dz.U. 2004 nr 64 poz. 593) and do not apply under the circumstances underlined in the Art. 12 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds on the same terms and within the limits set for those covered by insurance. There are also two special categories that are entitled to this benefits. First one are persons other than those previously described which are under 18 years old and have Polish citizenship or have a place of residence in the territory of Republic of Poland and have been granted a refugee status or supplementary protection or a temporary residence permit in conjunction with being in the territory of Republic of Poland or being in this territory in order to reconnect with a family and are members of the family of a foreigner residing in the territory of Republic of Poland in connection with granting him a refugee status or supplementary protection. Second category are persons other than those previously described that have a place of residence in the territory of Poland and are in the period of pregnancy, childbirth or puerperium and have Polish citizenship or have been granted in the Republic of Poland a refugee status or supplementary protection or a temporary residence permit in conjunction with being in the territory of Republic of Poland or being in this territory in order to reconnect with a family and are members of the family of a foreigner residing in the territory of Republic of Poland in connection with granting him a refugee status or supplementary protection.²⁹⁰⁸

7.2. Categories of Subjects Covered by General Health Insurance.

The category of subjects covered by general health insurance has many subdivisions. Some of them grant the access to healthcare benefits financed from public funds to migrants that meet specified requirements on the basis of international agreements and special institutions. Subjects are divided into two main groups.

First main group are persons covered by general health insurance. These are persons that have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states. They also have to reside on the territory of one of the European Union member states or one of the European Free Trade Association member states. Another category covered by Polish general health insurance are persons that do not have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states that stay on the territory of the Republic of Poland on the basis of visa to work, temporary residence permit (with exclusion of permits granted upon the obligation to appear personally before a judicial body, extraordinary personal circumstances that require the presence of a foreigner on the territory of the Republic of Poland or matters of Republic of Poland that require the presence of a foreigner on its territory²⁹⁰⁹), permanent residence permit, residence permit of a long-term resident of the European Union, permission to stay for humanitarian reasons or permission for tolerated stay. Next three groups covered by Polish general health insurance are persons that have been granted by the Republic of Poland a refugee status, complementary protection or are using temporary protection on its territory, persons that do not have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states that legally reside on the territory of European Union member state or European Free Trade Association member state (with exclusion of the Republic of Poland if they are a subject to the obligatory health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds or are a subject to the voluntary health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the same Act) and persons that have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states, that do not reside on the territory of one of the European Union member states or one of the European Free Trade Association member states and are a subject to the obligatory health insurance in the territory of Republic of Poland.²⁹¹⁰

Second group is called as “also covered by general health” and these are students and PhD students who study in the Republic of Poland and graduates who are taking obligatory internships in the Republic of Poland that do not have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states (with exclusion of persons that are legally residing on the territory of European Union member state or European Free Trade Association member state if they are a subject to the obligatory health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds or are a subject to the voluntary health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the same Act). Another category of persons also covered are members of religious orders and members of higher clergy and theological seminaries, postulants, novices and juniors of religious orders and their counterparts that do not have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states (with exclusion of persons that are legally residing on the territory of European Union member state or European Free Trade Association member state if they are a subject to the obligatory health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds or are a subject to the voluntary health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the same Act). They also have to stay in the territory of Republic of Poland on the basis of visa to work, temporary residence permit, permanent residence permit, residence permit of a long-term resident of the European Union, permission to stay for humanitarian reasons, permission for tolerated stay or have been granted by the Republic of Poland a refugee status, supplementary protection or are using temporary protection on its territory and their family members if they are residing on the territory of the Republic of Poland and are not a subject to health insurance described in the Article 66 Section 1 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds with reservation of the Article 66 Section 2 and 3 of the same Act. Next category of those also covered consists of persons taking adaptive internships and their family members if they are residing on the territory of European Union member state or European Free Trade Association member state and they are not a subject to health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 Section 1 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds with reservation of the Article 66 Section 2 and 3 of the same Act. Last category from this Section covered by general health insurance are persons taking Polish language courses and preparatory courses in order to study in Polish that are described in the Act of 27 July 2005 – Law on Higher Education and do not have citizenship of one of the European Union member states or citizenship of one of the European Free Trade Association member states (with exclusion of persons that are legally residing on the territory of European Union member state or European Free Trade Association member state if they are a subject to the obligatory health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the Act of 27 August 2004 – On Health Care Benefits Financed From Public Funds or are a subject to the voluntary health insurance in accordance with the Article 66 of the same Act).²⁹¹¹

7.3. Regulations Concerning Irregular Migrants' Right to Access Healthcare.

Generally irregular migrants' residing on the territory of Republic of Poland are not entitled to public healthcare. From this rule there are exceptions. The first are foreigners placed in guarded facilities or persons in custody for expulsion and they are entitled to free health services, which also include free medicines and sanitary articles.²⁹¹² The second exception entitles unaccompanied minors who are placed in foster care or childcare centers, foreigners applying for refugee status, resettled or relocated foreigners in case of danger to their lives or health and foreigners benefiting from temporary protection to healthcare that is financed from the public funds.²⁹¹³ Also there are situations when health benefits are free for all foreigners. These are health services provided for the purpose of combating infections and communicable diseases and causally related to these infections and infectious diseases (including quarantine, sanitary and epidemiological surveillance, sanitary-epidemiological studies and vaccination against infectious diseases), health care services for mentally ill or mentally handicapped people (patients in hospitals also receive free medical treatment, medical supplies and supplies), drug treatment services for alcohol addicts and drug treatment services for drug addicts.²⁹¹⁴

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

8.1. Polish educational system.

8.1.1. Legal bases of the Polish educational system.

The shape of the Polish educational system derives from both national and international legal acts. Among them the most important are: Protocol nr. 1 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (especially art. 2), the Constitution of Poland, the Statute about the educational system, the Statute about higher education, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. According to all of those acts, a child's right for education is universal. Article 2 of the Protocol nr. 1 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms states that nobody can be stripped of his right for education. Fulfilling its role in the areas of upbringing and education, the State recognizes parents' right for providing their children with a type of education that agrees with their own religious and philosophical beliefs. What is more, art. 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states that all its signatories recognize a child's right for education. Countries that signed the convention also pledge to make elementary education mandatory and free of tuition for everybody, to support middle education in all of its forms, to take steps towards improving the accessibility of higher education, to inform children about various possible educational and professional choices, and to take steps towards diminishing the number of children who resign from the educational system. Signing countries are also obliged to support their international cooperation in the area of education with a particular focus on decreasing ignorance and illiteracy. The convention is also obliging countries to facilitate the access to scientific and technological knowledge and to innovative teaching methods. Similarly, the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union states that the right for education must be universal, meaning that education should be tuition-free, what is stated by the art. 14 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. However, regarding the Polish the educational system, the most essential legal act is the basic law that states in its art. 70 that every person governed by the Polish Republic has the right for education. This law encompasses Polish citizens as well as foreigners who are residing on the Polish Republic's territory, regardless of the legal basis of their stay. This article signals also the existence of individual statutes regulating the way in which the Polish educational system operates, such as the statute about the educational system and the statute about higher education. Those statutes define the organization of education through all its levels.

8.1.2. Structure of the Polish educational system

According to the Polish lawmaking, the education obligation exists on the whole territory of the Polish Republic.²⁹¹⁵ This obligation is a broad concept that encompasses both the compulsory period of a one-year pre-school preparation and the subsequent years of participation in the educational system. The compulsory period of a one-year pre-school preparation commences in the calendar year in which a child has its sixth birthday — this is stated in the art. 14 of the statute about the educational system. According to art. 15 of the same statute, the education obligation of a child begins with the commencement of the academic year of the same calendar year in which a child has its seventh birthday. This obligation continues up to the day when a child finishes a middle school, but no longer than the child's eighteenth birthday. According to the art. 2 of the statute about the educational system, this obligation encompasses kindergartens and schools: primary, secondary, upper-secondary, and artistic. It is relevant because while considering the problem of migrating children and their access to education, one has to focus on the basic elements of the Polish educational system: kindergartens, primary schools, secondary schools, and upper-secondary schools. As it was stated beforehand, a kindergarten works as a preparation for commencing education in the primary school. Presently, primary schools consist of a six-year period of education that ends with a six-grader's exam. The next stage — middle school — also ends with an exam, in this case a middle school exam. However, on the 1st of September 2017 middle schools will be liquidated and the duration of the primary stage of education will be extended to eight years instead of six. According to the art. 1 paragraph 21 of the statute about the educational system that will come into life on the 1st of September 2017, primary school pupils will be passing the eight-grader's exam. Article 7 of the statute about the local governments of municipalities says that establishing and supervising public primary schools belongs to the tasks of municipalities.

8.2. Accessing the Polish educational system by migrants' children

8.2.1. Kindergarten

According to the paragraph 3 of the Executive Order of the Minister of Education from the 9th of September 2016 about teaching individuals who are not Polish citizens and individuals who are Polish citizens but were taught by schools that functioned in the educational systems of other countries, individuals who are not Polish citizens may benefit from education and tutelage in all kinds of public kindergartens on the same terms as Polish citizens. They are also subject to the same rights and duties. Attending private kindergartens (not governed by the state) depends on fulfilling the requirements stated by the kindergarten's board.²⁹¹⁶

8.2.2. Primary, secondary, and upper-secondary schools.

Foreigners attend public primary, secondary and upper-secondary schools on the same terms as Polish citizens, as they are also subsumed under the education obligation. According to art. 94a of the statute about the educational system, individuals who are not Polish citizens and who are obliged to gain education may benefit from education and tutelage in all kinds of public kindergartens on the same terms as Polish citizens until their eighteenth birthday or until they finish an upper-secondary school. Similarly to the case of kindergartens, foreigners who are residing on the Polish Republic's territory, regardless of the legal basis of their stay, have the same right for education as Polish citizens²⁹¹⁷. Depending on the child's age or its educational level, the requirements that must be met in order for the child to attend a certain school and class are detailed by paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Executive Order of the Minister of Education from the 9th of September 2016. According to those paragraphs, the deciding factor is the distance between the school and a child's place of stay. When a child is at the verge of commencing its education in a primary school, this distance plays the deciding role in assigning it to a proper educational unit. When a child is old enough to attend grades between second and sixth, assigning it with a spot in a school is still decided by the distance, although this factor is then supported by certain documents. According to the before mentioned Executive Order of the Minister of Education paragraph 2 point 3, these documents are: a diploma, certificate or other document proving finishing a school or another stage of education abroad; a certificate issued by a school abroad attesting that a child has attended school and pointing out the last grade that a pupil has finished in a foreign school; a document attesting the sum of years that a pupil spent at school. If defining this period is impossible on the basis of the presented certificates, a parent or a pupil of age must present a written declaration that states the amount of years through which he participated in the educational system. If one cannot present such documents, the school board may decide to accept a student on the basis of an interview, as is stated by the paragraph 13 of the Executive Order of the Minister of Education from the 9th of September 2016. According to the paragraph 5 of the same Executive Order, an analogous situation occurs in the case of pupils who are old enough to attend middle school. In the case of upper-secondary schools, a student that comes from abroad is qualified to an appropriate grade or an appropriate semester and accepted in a public high school on the basis of presented diplomas and certificates that attest his prior participation in the educational system. The distance between the school and a pupil's place of stay is no longer relevant in this case, what is stated by the paragraph 6 of the same Executive Order. Foreigners are obliged to realize the same scope of general education as Polish students, regardless of the school they attend. The scope of education, as well as the requirements that foreign students are facing, are adjusted to their needs and lowered capabilities deriving from their lack of fluency in Polish. The modification of a scope of education is usually performed by the teachers themselves²⁹¹⁸. According to the paragraph 17 of the Executive Order, foreign students who fall under the education obligation, do not speak Polish (or speak it at an insufficient level), need an adjustment of the educational process, and an adjustment of the educational form, may receive a special preparatory faculty in the school that they attend. Classes within the preparatory faculty are conducted by teachers responsible for certain subjects who may be supported by aids who have the command of the student's first language. Education in the preparatory faculty is realized in accordance with the scope of education realized by the school and is adjusted to the educational and developmental needs of its students, as well as to their psychophysical capabilities. According to the paragraph 18 of the same Executive Order, the agency that governs a public school may organize within its premises special Polish language classes that are free of tuition. Those classes may be designed for individuals or groups of students and must take at least two hours per week in order to allow them to gain a sufficient command of Polish that will allow them to participate in regular classes. If a teacher of a certain subject states that a foreign student needs to catch up with the material, this student may attend compensatory classes that take place outside of the regular school schedule and that are organized by the agency that governs the school, as stated in the paragraph 19 of the Executive Order.

8.3. Executing the Right for Education of Underaged Foreigners Residing in the Foreigners' Centers

8.3.1. Underages Residing in Foreigners' Centers Applying for the Status of a Refugee

Foreigners' centers for those applying for the status of a refugee are a form of social aid that Poland provides for immigrants who seek protection from being persecuted in their home countries. First and foremost, they provide foreigners with lodging, board, medical and material aid. Foreigners stay in those centers until the proceedings regarding granting them status of refugees are not finished. These centers also provide classes for children and youngsters — these classes are usually carried out by teachers from schools attended by the underaged residents of those centers. The classes focus mainly on learning Polish, but also on helping children in solving their home assignments. These centers are also organizing compensatory classes, most often from English and knowledge about culture. Most of the centers also host special kindergartens with a staff of volunteering pedagogues, foreign women living within the centers, or pedagogues in cooperation with the inhabitants. All foreigners who attend school receive handbooks and school accessories that are donated by the Office for Foreigners in cooperation with their appropriate center. All parents are also allowed to ask the Office for Foreigners for funding special, paid classes for their children, as long as those classes may actually affect a child's development in a specified area. In most of the centers, the education obligation is realized by the majority of children. Children who are admitted into the center near the end of the school year are the exception from this rule. The biggest problem faced by children living in those centers is their mobility that often forces them to cease education in one school and resume it in another one. Schools' headmasters point out that very rarely a single child stays in one center (and in one school) for more than a year, what in turn disrupts a stable educational process.²⁹¹⁹

8.3.2. Underages Residing in Guarded Foreigners' Centers

Guarded foreigners' center is a precautionary measure that is used when a legal action is taken against a foreigner, aiming at banishing him from the territory of the Polish Republic and when there is a risk that an individual will escape; when a verdict has been passed about banishing an individual from the territory of the Polish Republic but without a leaving date; when a foreigner has not left the territory of the Polish Republic in the due time, defined by a deportation verdict; or when an individual has attempted to or has already illegally crossed the Polish border. The decision to place an individual in a guarded foreigners' center must be made by court. One's stay in such center may last up to 60 days with a possible extension to 90 days. Court is also in power to extend the stay of a foreigner in such center on the basis of art. 89 of the statute about granting foreigners protection on the territory of the Polish Republic. Foreigners lodged in those centers, including children, have a limited freedom of movement and are constantly surveilled by the Border Guard. Those centers are organizing classes for children and youngsters, usually in cooperation with local schools that are left with the task of designing those classes. The shape of the classes, the activities that are undertaken, their timetables and scope vary among different centers. Most often those classes are carried out for all the children residing in the center, without dividing them into age groups. Those classes focus on providing general knowledge, although some of the centers divide their classes into thematic areas, e.g. humanistic, mathematical, or concerning the natural world. The main problem with teaching foreigners who reside in guarded centers is the lack of legislative regulations defining this type of education, outlining the tasks that schools have to carry out or pointing out the funding of these classes. The fact that schools take part in the process of educating foreigners and the form of this participation are the effects of a prevalent practice.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

The rule of the article 191a of the act on the tertiary education²⁹²⁰ that was introduced into the Polish legal order on the 18th of March 2011²⁹²¹ regulates the area of recognizing diplomas issued by foreign universities on the territory of the Republic of Poland. The solution proposed by the act views foreign diplomas as equal to those issued by the domestic universities. According to the paragraph 1 of the discussed act, diplomas that are considered to be equal to those coming from Polish universities come from tertiary education institutions operating on the area of:

- a member state of the European Union
- a member state of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development
- a member state of the European Free Trade Association that at the same time is a party of the European Economic Area agreement.

It needs to be noted that at the moment of writing this publication, the list of countries that issue diplomas regarded as equal to those obtained from Polish institutions consists of: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Chile, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Spain, Netherlands, Ireland, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Canada, South Korea, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Latvia, Malta, Mexico, Germany, Norway, New Zealand, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, United States of America, Switzerland, Sweden, Turkey, Hungary, Great Britain and Italy.

87Act of 27th of July 2005 regarding Higher Education 2005, [Ustawa z dnia 27 lipca 2005 r. - Prawo o szkolnictwie wyższym].

88 (Act of 18 March 2011 amending the act Law regarding Higher Education, academic degrees, academic titles) 2011, [Ustawa z dnia 18 marca 2011 r. o zmianie ustawy - Prawo o szkolnictwie wyższym, ustawy o stopniach naukowych i tytule naukowym oraz o stopniach i tytule w zakresie sztuki oraz o zmianie niektórych innych ustaw].

The lawmaker offered also a solution to the problems arising from the differences in the modes and quality of education that occur between the Polish and foreign institutions. In the latter part of the paragraph 1 art. 191 of the act, the lawmaker states that: (i) a diploma issued by a foreign institution that affirms graduation from the 3-year program is considered as a proof of having finished the undergraduate course; (ii) completing a foreign graduate course or a unified program of at least 4 years is a proof of having finished the postgraduate course (providing that the course is considered as such in the country that issues the diploma). The above mentioned solution allows for using foreign diplomas coming from “acclaimed” universities in countries that have signed international treaties with Poland.

Nevertheless, not every diploma issued by a foreign university that resides in one of the named countries may be acknowledged on the territory of Poland. In order for a diploma to be valid in the Polish Republic, the issuing institution must be accredited in the country in which it resides and operates. To evade possible uncertainties about the nature and status of the issuing institution, the website²⁹²² of the Ministry of Science and Higher Education has published an au courant list of foreign universities that are accredited — at the moment of writing this article, the list consists of 2758 institutions.

A person using a foreign diploma, issued by an accredited university, will not have to take any other measures to legitimize this document and will be able to use it freely on the territory of Poland. What is more, the diploma will be regarded as equal to its counterpart in the Polish system of education.²⁹²³

However, if the credibility of the presented document is doubtful for the interested party, it may be verified. In order to do so, the interested party has to submit a motion to the Minister of Science and Higher Education, who, in the space of 21 days from the date of submitting the motion, will issue his opinion or certification, assessing the validity of a diploma in question.

Aside from stating foreign diplomas to be equal with those issued by Polish institutions ex lege, the Polish act is also foreseeing the possibility of recognizing a foreign diploma through the process of nostrification. Those methods may not be used simultaneously or interchangeably.²⁹²⁴

Nostrification of a diploma — defining its Polish counterpart — falls under the competences of (i) the council of a school's faculty that has the legitimation to grant the degree of a doctor in a given field and (ii) the council of a school's faculty that has the legitimation to grant the habilitation in a given field. The shape of the procedure of nostrification is defined through the regulation issued by the Minister of Science and Higher Education²⁹²⁵.

Nostrification procedure beings with submitting a proper motion to one of the above mentioned councils. Examination of those motions must be paid for — the cost of those process is stated by the director of a given council. Paying this fee is indispensable, but may be alleviated if the subject is in a poor financial condition. Alleviation may be done only after submitting a proper motion to the director of a given council. As a result of the council's proceedings, a decision is made to acknowledge or to dismiss the foreign diploma.

Higher education obtained through graduation from a course conducted by a foreign institution may be accompanied by obtaining a vocational degree that, under special circumstances, may be considered as equal with the Polish vocational degree. If their equivalence is not affirmed, the title holder may still use it on the territory of the Republic of Poland in its original form, but may not use the perks coming from obtaining its Polish counterpart.

Rules defining the recognition of vocational degrees obtained outside of Poland are defined in the act from the 22nd of December 2015 on the rules of recognizing vocational qualifications gained in the member states of European Union.²⁹²⁶ The act encompasses vocational qualification obtained in:

- a member state of the European Union
- a member state of the European Free Trade Association that at the same time is a party of the European Economic Area agreement
- the Swiss Confederation.

The procedure of recognizing the vocational qualification is commenced upon the motion of the interested party that has to be submitted to the proper institution, pointed out in the act²⁹²⁷, that grants the vocational qualifications and professional licenses for those, who earned them on the territory of Poland. The discussed motion is submitted, in Polish, on a special form prepared by the Ministry of Science and Higher Education.

The motion²⁹²⁸ has to contain the following information: (i) first name (names), last name, date and place of birth of the petitioner; (ii) petitioner's nationality; (iii) definition of the regulated profession or activity, its form, and the duration of time in which the petitioner was performing the profession or activity in a member state; (iv) possessed qualifications or licenses; (v) obtained training courses; (vi) enumeration of documents attached to the motion. The documents mentioned in the last point are defined over the course of proceedings²⁹²⁹ - together with the appropriate copy of a form. It needs to be noted that all documents linked to the procedure of recognizing one's vocational qualifications should be submitted in Polish or together with their Polish translation. An appropriate body gives then its verdict over the space of three months from the moment of submitting all the necessary documents, but in exceptional cases this period may be extended by a month. If giving a verdict depends on the outcome of a qualifying period or a qualifying exam, the date of passing a verdict becomes suspended until the petitioner submits the assessment of possessed skills. A qualifying period or a qualifying exam are essential if an appropriate body decides that it will base its decision on an outcome of such assessment. The conditions under which a qualifying period or a qualifying exam will take place, together with their cost, are defined in a regulation issued by a minister responsible for an area corresponding to examined qualifications necessary to perform a regulated profession.

A list of regulated professions is now shared on a dedicated website²⁹³⁰ hosted by the European Commission — presently, it consists of 350 entries regarding the professions that are regulated on the territory of Poland.

10.1. Characteristics of the right

Presently, the participation of foreigners in the political life assumes three, most popular forms. The first of them bases on granting the active and passive right to vote in local and regional elections. The second of them allows foreigners to join political parties and other organizations operating within the public sphere, together with workers' unions and foundations. The third form bases on the promotion of advisory bodies and using them for providing opinions or as consultants.²⁹³¹ The aspect of participation of foreigners' in the public sphere is underdeveloped in Poland. The notion is not a subject of wide discussion, and the discussion regarding the third form — that of advisory bodies — is almost non-existing. According to the MIPEX (Migrant Integration Policy Index) ranking from the 2010 that examined all the European Union countries, Poland took the 30th spot, being second to last.²⁹³² According to a document that was cancelled in March 2016, called "Poland's Migrational Policy" and passed in 2012, one of the goals was to create an environment that would promote immigrants' active existence in the civil society. The document was cancelled without a substitution, and the Polish Commissioner for Human Rights has submitted an enquiry to the Ministry of Internal Affairs, asking for new guidelines regarding the migrational policy.

10.2. Election law

10.2.1. Election law on the level of a state

Election law on the level of a state in Poland, both active and passive, is restricted to Polish citizens only. Such state of affairs derives directly from the Constitution of Poland which gives the right to elect the President of the Republic of Poland, deputies, senators, and members of the local governments solely to Polish citizens.²⁹³³ Regulations regarding this matter may also be found in the Parliament's and Senate's Electoral System and in the Electoral Code.

10.2.2. Election law on the local level

This law was subjected to change in 2004 in the light of Poland's membership in the European Union. As a consequence of adjusting the state law to the European Union's law,²⁹³⁴ election law was broadened on the local level. Regarding the local government election on the level of a municipality, active and passive right to vote was granted to the citizens of European Union member countries who permanently reside on the area of a given community. The broadening of a passive right to vote was done with the omission of the possibility for a foreigner to run for a post of a chief executive officer of a municipality. What is more, Poland did not ratify, and probably will not ratify, the Convention on the participation of foreigners in the public life on the local level from the 5th of February 1992. This convention grants the right to vote in local elections for those foreigners who have been living in a given country for a period of 5 years.²⁹³⁵

10.2.3. Foreigners from the EU countries

Foreigners who are citizens of EU member countries may take part in the elections to the European Parliament. This regulation derives directly from the art. 39 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, and is copied in the art. 10, point 2 of the Electoral Code. In the case of European Parliament elections, a foreigner must remember to enlist himself to the registry of voters in a municipal office corresponding to the person's place of residence. After being enlisted in a Polish registry of voters, a person cannot take part in the European Parliament elections in a different country, not even in his/hers country of birth. Active right to vote in the European Parliament elections is possessed by every EU citizen who is above 18 years of age, was not stripped of his public rights, and was not incapacitated by a binding juridical verdict. Foreigners coming from the EU countries were also granted the right to vote in local referendums, as according to the Act on the local referendum, the right to participation is granted to all those who are permanently residing on the territory of a given unit of a local government and have an active voting right.²⁹³⁶

²⁹³⁶Act of 15 September 2000 (Local referendum), art. 3,[Ustawa z dnia 15 września 2000 r. o referendum lokalnym].

10.2.4. Foreigners from outside the EU

Foreigners from the third countries have no voting right in Poland, even in the local referendums. The lack of voting rights does not derive from regulations stated in the Constitution of Poland, what was asserted by the verdict of a Constitutional Tribunal.²⁹³⁷ The Constitution states that a local government's community is created by the collective of inhabitants of a territorial unit.²⁹³⁸ Because of that, the nationality or citizenship of a foreigner are irrelevant. Nevertheless, foreigners coming from outside the EU are not granted with these rights. It is needed to say that a regulation from art. 132 point 3 of the Electoral Code says that contributions to the organization's electoral committee and the electors' electoral committee may come only from Polish citizens. Due to this, not all subjects possessing passive voting right are equal and for some of them it is difficult to actually exercise the rights they have been granted.²⁹³⁹

10.3. Right to associate

10.3.1. Political parties

Poland is a side in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Art. 22 of this Covenant says that a siding state must provide everyone with a freedom to form associations. This freedom is also relevant when it comes to creating and joining workers' unions. This regulation derives from the Constitution of Poland and grants the right to associate to everyone.²⁹⁴⁰ Art. 11 of the Constitution of Poland and art. 2 of the Act on political parties preordain that the right to form and join political parties is given only to Polish citizens.

10.3.2. Associations

Foreigners who reside permanently on the territory of Poland are granted with the right to form unions and associations. They can both join already existing ones' (if such a possibility is acknowledged in the statute) and form new ones on the same basis, as Polish citizens. This derives directly from the regulation mentioned in the art. 4 point 1 of the Act on associations. Point 2 of this article defines the situation of foreigners who do not reside permanently on the territory of Poland — they can join only those associations, whose statutes allow them do so.

10.3.3. Foundations

The right to establishing foundations on the territory of Poland is granted to every natural person, without considering his or hers citizenship and place of residence — this according to art.2 point 1 of the Act on foundations. The right to associate in workers' unions and employers' unions was granted to all subjects who, respectively, are workers or employers, in the art.2 of the Act on workers' unions. This law is not restricted to Polish citizens, thus also applying to foreigners.

10.3.4. Freedom of assembly

Freedom of assembly was regulated by the Act on assemblies, passed in 2015. According to the regulations stated in this act, the right to take part in, or organize and assemble, is granted to every person that is capable of undertaking legal actions, thus treating equally foreigners and Polish citizens.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. Acquisition of citizenship

In Republic of Poland there are few ways to acquire Polish citizenship. Regulations on acquiring citizenship of Republic of Poland are described in the Act on Polish Citizenship . Dz.U. 2012 poz. 161 Ustawa o obywatelstwie polskim [Polish]

11.1.1. Acquisition of Polish citizenship by law

Ius Sanguinis - the Polish citizenship is acquired by birth from parents, if at least one parent has Polish nationality, the child is entitled to have this nationality as well.

Ius Soli - right of the soil applies only in case when the birth takes place on territory of Poland and parents are unknown or their nationality is undefined or either do not have any citizenship.

Adoption - a child is entitled to have Polish citizenship in case of adoption by a person or people of this nationality, only if the adoption took place before the age 16 of the child. In this case, it is assumed that the adopted child acquired Polish citizenship on the day of birth. Such a child acquires Polish citizenship by power of law.

11.1.2. Granting Polish citizenship

Upon the request, the President of the Republic of Poland may grant a foreigner, Polish citizenship. The President of the Republic of Poland is not limited in his constitutional powers by any conditions and may grant Polish citizenship to any foreigner. Polish citizenship of both parents includes children under their parental responsibility. In case the child is over 16 years old, the citizenship may be granted with his own consent. All the conditions of granting Polish citizenship are described in Chapter 3 of the Act.

The request should include:

- basic data of the applicant (foreigner)
- address of residence
- information about parents
- information about family members who have Polish citizenship
- information on the possession of Polish citizenship in the past and on its loss
- information on sources of income, professional achievements, social and political activity

- information on polish language knowledge
- data of spouse
- information if the applicant has applied for polish citizenship in the past
- justification

Respectively the request of parents who have underage child should additionally include data of the child.

Elements which should be attached to the request:

- documents confirming information contained in the application
- pictures of applicants

The Minister of Internal and Administration specifies the request form.

Requests form for all types of acquisition of polish citizenship have to contain above informations. The recognition of the application has no specific deadline.

11.1.3. Recognition as a Polish citizen

Foreigns living in Poland on the basis of specific permits, are entitle to apply for Polish citizenship if by living in Poland for a long time legally:

- have integrated themselves with the Polish society,
- have learned polish language,
- have provided themselves with housing and livelihoods,
- respect Polish legal order and do not pose a threat to the national defense or national security.

In particular: refugees, persons without citizenship, children and spouses of Polish citizens and people with Polish origin.

Citizenship is recognized on request. The decision of recognition as a Polish citizen is taken by the Voivode. An appeal body to recognize the decision is the Minister of Interior and Administration. In special cases, a minister's decision may be appealed to an Administrative Court.

Pursuant to Article 30 section 1 of the Polish Citizenship Act, Polish law presents seven situations of a foreigner in which this person can be considered as a Polish citizen.

a) A person who has been living on the territory of the Republic of Poland for at least 3 years continuously,

- has a permit to settle,
- has a long-term EU resident permission, or permanent resident permit,
- has a constant source of income,
- can prove that is legally entitled to the occupied dwelling

b) The situation is simmlar to the situation a), but in case the foreigner has got only one out of three kind of permissions to stay, need to prove his life in Poland for at least 10 years.

c) A foreigner, who has been living in Poland for at least 2 years and being for minimum 3 years married to a Polish citizen, or does not have any nationality.

d) A person with the refugee status granted in the Republic of Poland, who based on permit to sattle has been living in Poland continuously for at least 2 years.

- e) Underage foreigner, whose one parent is a Polish citizen (who has received the Polish citizenship after the birth of the child), living legally in Poland, under the condition that the second parent, not being a Polish citizen, has agreed to the citizenship recognition of the child.
- f) Underage foreigner, who has been living in Poland legally and whose at least one parent has restored Polish citizenship. The recognition may occur under the condition that the second parent, not being a Polish citizen, has agreed to the citizenship recognition of the child.
- g) A foreigner who has been living for at least a year in Poland, on the basis of a permanent residence permit, which he obtained in relation with Polish origin or the possession of Karta Polaka a Pole's Card.

In all those cases excluding underage children the applicant for citizenship is obligated to evident knowledge of Polish language. The knowledge of the language must be confirmed by the official document.

The request should be rejected if the acquisition of Polish citizenship could be a threat to the protection of public security and order.

11.1.4. Restoration of Polish citizenship

The institution of restoration of citizenship appeared in the Polish legal order in 2012. It was created due to the issues of people who have had Polish citizenship in the past and lost it before year 1999. To introduce restoration will be necessary to recall Polish historical and political context. In 1939 Poland was attacked by Germany and Soviet Union and after the IInd World War Poland and another East-European countries came under the control of Soviet Union. The legal order imposed on us predicted the loss of citizenship for soldiers who failed against communists for the independence of Poland. Some of the people have lost their Polish citizenship due to the right to only one citizenship. Simultaneously with acquisition of citizenship of another country, they were losing Polish citizenship. Finally the government of Independent Third Polish Republic decided to gratify all the people who have been deprived of Polish citizenship by the government controlled by Soviet Union, and allowed the restoration of citizenship.

Polish citizenship is restored by the administrative decision of the Minister of the Internal and Administration, upon the request. The application form includes biography, address of the last place of residence in the territory of the Republic of Poland before the loss of Polish citizenship, and information about the circumstances of the loss of citizenship. The request should be rejected if the applicant acted to the detriment of Poland, especially its independence and sovereignty, or participated in the violation of human rights. The Minister is obligated to consult his decision with government security institutions.

All the information about possibilities of acquisition of Polish citizenship can be found in English language on the website of Polish Ministry of the Interior and Administration, although all the application forms are available only in Polish language. Any documents issued in foreign language should include a copy translated by sworn translator or translation approved by the consul.

11.2. Possibility of Double Nationality

In 1960s Polish People's Republic (current Republic of Poland) has signed agreements with some countries from East part of Europe to avoid double citizenship. Those agreements were terminated in the 1990s and the early 21st century. Only the new Act on Polish citizenship from 2009 introduces official possibility of having double citizenship.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. Europe 2020

The European Union in the Europe 2020 Strategy has defined its strategic goals and development priorities. On this basis, the so-called Horizontal Policies were developed. Each project that should be realized within European Funds is evaluated in the context of compliance with three core policies.²⁹⁴¹

- Sustainable Development-The Union is committed to ensuring that Europe's economic development is not at the expense of the environment. In addition, the Union promotes rational and economical use of natural resources and environmental protection by reducing gaseous emissions or promoting the use of environmentally friendly technologies.
- Equal opportunities - Projects co-financed by European funds should be compatible with equal opportunities policy. This means ensuring equal treatment for women and men. No discrimination based on age, opinion, origin, religion or disability is allowed.
- Information society - The realization of information society policy is the dissemination of modern informational technologies in everyday life of citizens, enterprises and public administration.

The total amount of funds allocated to Member States in 2014-2020 for regional policy will exceed 351 billion euros, so more than one third of the total expenditure of the European Union, of which the Republic of Poland will receive 82.5 billion euros. The Minister of Development is responsible for the implementation of European Funds in Poland. It is his task to coordinate the implementation of assumptions stemming from the most important document describing, how and for what the European Funds will be used between 2014 and 2020.

12.1.1. Supported areas

Much of the draft of the Partnership Agreement is devoted to thematic areas around which future programs support will be concentrated. According to the European Commission, these will be 11 thematic objectives.²⁹⁴²

- Support for research, technological development and innovation (eg co-financing innovative solutions in enterprises, research infrastructures of scientific units);
- Increasing the use of information and communication technologies (eg support for computerization of enterprises, development of e-services);
- Increasing the competitiveness of small and medium enterprises (eg new investments in companies);
- Supporting the transition to a low-carbon economy in all sectors (eg renewable energy investments);
- Promoting adaptation to climate change, risk management (eg supporting flood infrastructure);
- Environmental protection and the promotion of resource efficiency (eg co-financing of investments in water waste management and waste management);
- Promotion of sustainable transport (eg financing of road construction, development of ecological transport);
- Support for employment and mobility of workers (eg start-ups, training for employees);
- Support for social inclusion and the fight against poverty (eg support for people at risk of exclusion by integration and creation of social infrastructure);
- Investing in education, skills and lifelong learning (eg kindergarten, extracurricular, adult courses);
- Strengthening of institutional capacity and effectiveness of public administration (eg administrative administration, training for civil servants).

Access to funds from individual operational programs has different categories of entities. Beneficiaries of EU structural funds assistance may be companies (especially small and medium-sized enterprises), public institutions, associations and individuals. Structural funds assistance may also be sought by foreign companies based in Europe. For instance, the largest Operational Program Infrastructure and Environment is largely implemented through the implementation of major infrastructural investments, making the so-called „big projects”. These are projects worth over € 30 billion for environmental projects and more than € 50 billion for other projects whose implementation - due to its value and key character for the country – requires approval by the European Commission. Therefore, most funds from this program go to government administration, large enterprises or local government units, although applicants for funds under various activities of this program can also be entrepreneurs, health care institutions, NGOs or churches and religious organizations.

12.1.2. Criteria for participation of migrants in the projects

Foreigners may be participants of the projects if they meet the criteria for the project. Nevertheless, when the foreigners are qualified for the project, special attention should be paid to persons having a temporary or permanent residence card in the country, (the reasons for which a foreigner resides in Poland). If the reasons are such as: continuing work in the territory of Poland, performing work by a foreigner delegated by a foreign employer in Poland, conducting business activity in Poland, starting or continuing studies in Poland in stationary mode. Some projects also offer the opportunity to benefit from EU in support and activation of passive or unemployed people. Foreigners who run business in Poland or are partners in commercial companies have the right to apply for support from EU Structural Funds for their enterprise²⁹⁴³.

12.2. Projects addressed to migrants

12.2.1. National projects

Within the framework of the European Funds Program 2014-2020 some of the announced competitions were carried out, with particular focus on the target group of foreigners residing in Poland.

Department of European Social Fund Implementation In MPiPS Acting as an Intermediate Body for Measure 2.4 Modernizing public and private employment services and better aligning them to the needs of the labor market POWER announced in 2015 a project implementation competition, which will provide a tool for assessing the quality of public employment services of local, regional and central services in the area of the simplified system of employment of foreigners and the concept of its implementation. The applicant (Leader) or Partner in the project, according to the access criterion, needs to be a scientific unit. The amount of funds destined for co-financing projects within the framework of the competition amounted to PLN 3,000,000. The level of co-financing was 100%.²⁹⁴⁴

National Center for Research and Development announced in 2016 the recruitment of applications for co-financing of projects under Measure 3.3 for International Training Programs, contest No. 1 / MPK / POWER / 3.3 / 2016. Funds could be sought by higher education (public or non-public). Co-financing could be provided for the implementation of projects involving: the implementation of programs in foreign languages addressed to students from Poland and to foreigners; implementation of international study programs and organization of international summer schools in Poland enabling foreign students to study and enabling Polish people to study in an international environment ; the inclusion of lecturers from abroad who

The Mazowieckie Voivodeship Board is the Managing Authority for the Regional Operational Program for Mazowieckie Voivodeship 2014-2020 (ROP VM). Within the ROP VM, the Investment Priority 9i Active Inclusion envisages the implementation of Measure 9.1 This is the social-occupational activation of excluded people and counteracting social exclusion, which aims to improve the employability of people excluded and at risk of exclusion and prevent social exclusion and poverty. In the target action, the target group includes, among others persons or families benefiting from social assistance under the Social Welfare Act of 12 March 2004 or eligible for social assistance, which means meeting at least one of the conditions set out in Article 7 of the Law of 12 March 2004 about social help. The content of Article 7 of the Social Welfare Act states that social assistance is provided to people and families due to difficulties in the integration of foreigners who have obtained refugee status in the Republic of Poland, supplementary protection or temporary residence permit granted in connection with the circumstance referred to in Art. 159 sec. 1 pt. 1 lit. C or d of the Act of 12 December 2013 on Foreigners. Accordingly, foreigners in situations defined in the Act may be supported by the European Social Fund within ROP VM.

The Warsaw Family Assistance Center has received co-financing for the implementation of a project co-financed by the European Social Fund within the framework of the Mazowieckie Vivodship Regional Operational Program for the years 2014-2020. "Support - Activation – Inclusion". The goal of the project is to increase the level of social inclusion and employment prospects for 285 people at risk of exclusion within the 21 months of the project. 50 people (17.5% of the total target group) are foreigners with international protection. The project is being implemented from 01.01.2017 to 30.09.2018²⁹⁴⁶.

12.2.2. EU projects

EU competence in the field of integration is limited. Existing instruments include the European Migration Forum (formerly known as the European Integration Forum); website about integration; and a network of national contact points for integration. In July 2011, the Commission adopted a European integration program for third-country nationals. In June 2016, the Commission presented an action plan covering a framework of action and concrete initiatives to support Member States' actions for the integration of around 20 million third-country nationals legally residing in the EU²⁹⁴⁷.

The Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (FAMI) is a European Union fund established for 2014-2020. It replaced three funds from the SOLID General Program - Solidarity and Management of Migration Flows: European Fund for the Integration of Third-country Nationals

(EFIO/TN), European Refugee Fund (ERF) and European return Fund (ErF). The overall objective of FAMI has been defined as contributing to the effective management of migration flows and to the implementation, strengthening and development of a common policy on asylum, complementary and temporary protection and a common immigration policy fully respecting the rights and principles enshrined in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (EU). This will be achieved through specific objectives, which is by strengthening and developing a common European asylum system, supporting legal migration to Member States according to their needs, improving effective return strategies for their countries of origin and strengthening solidarity and sharing of responsibilities among Member States through cooperation. Within the specific objectives, the so-called National targets, equal for all Member States were singled out.

12.3. Integration of Third-Country Nationals programme

Funding will be available for the following activities to integrate persons in need of international protection who have been relocated from another Member State or resettled from outside the EU: for people resettled from outside the EU – clearly linked pre-departure and post-arrival activities; for people relocated from another Member State – post-arrival activities building on pre-departure information activities; and activities to prepare host communities for the arrival of relocated or resettled people.

The objectives are to support: pre-departure activities aimed at preparing resettled third country nationals for their life in the EU; these should serve as a basis for subsequent post-arrival activities; specific post-arrival activities, especially building on/deepening pre-departure activities and enabling effective integration of resettled and relocated people; and; capacity-building in the receiving communities, in particular for service-providers and potential employers.

12.4. EU Specific Object

In the new financial perspective, the activities carried out by the Member States themselves (as defined in the National Program) have been clearly separated from collective actions - transnational and implemented within the framework of the so- Special Action, but targeted to the same target group that consists of : people owning refugee status or status of person in need of subsidiary protection; applicants for refugee status or subsidiary protection who have not yet received a final decision; persons profiting from temporary protection; persons who are resettled or have been resettled to a Member State or who are transferred or have been transferred from a Member State.

The European Commission uses the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund to call for applications, which include:

- Strengthening and developing all aspects of the Common European Asylum System;
- Support for legal migration to Member States in line with their economic and social needs and promoting the effective integration of non-EU citizens;

- Developing fair and effective return strategies in Member States that contribute to combating illegal immigration, with emphasis on sustainability and stability of return and effective readmission in countries of origin and transit;
- Increase of solidarity and sharing responsibilities between Member States, especially the countries most affected by migration.

Conclusions

The Republic of Poland as one of the European states faces the problem of migration which emerged in last years. It has to be stressed that Polish legal system regulates laws that serve as a protection for migrants. Rights of the foreigners are protected by provisions enshrined in the Polish Constitution.

What is more, Polish regulations grant a foreigner an asylum if it is necessary to protect the person and its beneficial for the Republic of Poland. Polish law treats immigration from EU member states and non-EU states in a different way.

The Office of Foreigners is the main body coping with issues concerning migrants.

Many migrants that are coming to Poland are of Ukrainian origin, but also a vast group of Chechens seek asylum in Polish territory.

One of Poland's main issue is the implementation of interim measures applied by the European Court of Human Rights. Several recent border cases prove that Polish authorities should improve the situation on the Polish border and act accordingly to the Court's decisions. Additionally, Polish authorities should put more effort into creating conditions that could allow migrants to integrate more with the Polish community.

On the other hand, Polish health care system which financed from the public funds is available for a broad spectrum of subjects including people migrating from other States.

Also Polish educational system allow migrants' children to participate in it on the same rules like Polish citizens and provides free education for all people. Polish law protects people irrespective of their country of origin. Polish educational system also honors foreign diplomas that fulfill conditions specified in Polish legal system regulations.

When it comes to election rights only citizens of Poland can participate in elections on national level. However after the implementation of the EU laws permanent residents can vote in local elections. Still, people without EU citizenship are not granted voting rights on the Polish territory. That is why participation of foreigners in political life in Poland is limited and underdeveloped.

There are several ways to acquire a Polish citizenship and what is more, Polish law allows citizens to have double citizenship.

Largest possibilities for integration and support of migrants are provided by the European Funds enacted under the Europe 2020 Strategy. From all Member States, Poland received the highest co-financing, which exceeded twice the second largest co-financing in terms of volume received by Italy. Such great support gives the opportunity to make an active use of the funds for all of the purposes that the program is dedicated to. Beginning with support for education, research conducted in scientific centers, business development, to the activation of the unemployed and threatened with exclusion. The organization of a competition under a given program and to its purpose depends entirely on the institution of the Member State concerned, but it may be any foreign national staying legally in the territory of the State, with particular reference to when the foreigners are the target group of the program concerned.

Introduction

"Migration law is a human aspiration for dignity, safety and a better future. It is part of the social fabric, part of our very own make-up as a human family" (Ban Ki-moon). This quote reflects perfectly why migration law is so important in our present day. Refugees or asylum seekers are ordinary people, unlucky enough to have been born in a troubled zone.

For this reason, Romania supported the EU regulations on migration and decided to join forces with the European Union to help in this cause. The following research will thoroughly present how Romanian legislation deals with the problem of migration from both the perspective of national and international law.

We examined laws which regulate these issues in our country, in accordance with the international law, as well as statistics and case law which provide concrete examples for a comprehensive understanding of the matter. We also examine the status of the asylees in Romania, what rights they have and how they are treated by our national law.

We aim with this research for the reader to understand, how Romania governs the whole principle of migration and what measures it takes to be in compliance with the international and European regulations on migration law.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. The Concept of Asylum

In the doctrine, it has been stated that the notion of "asylum"²⁹⁴⁸ rather refers to certain places, surfaces or territories, where a person cannot be arrested because that certain place is protected by a supernatural, national, divine or human force.²⁹⁴⁹

1.2. Asylum Seekers and Asylee

The asylum seeker is not defined by any Romanian law. From the doctrine, it can be deduced that the asylum seekers can be foreigners which, in their home country, are subjects of persecution for their political, democratic or humanitarian activities and that take refuge on the territory of another state.²⁹⁵⁰ Someone who has received a positive decision on his or her asylum claim is called a refugee.²⁹⁵¹

²⁹⁴⁸ The word "asylum" is of Latin origin and it is formed from the Greek word "asilon", which is a form of the adjective "asylos" (inviolable). Therefore, asylum means "protection against persecution", "a safe place", "a place where one can find refugee, shelter";

²⁹⁴⁹ A. Grahl-Madsen, The Status of Refugees in International Law, vol. II – Asylum, Entry and Sojourn, A.W. Sijthoff, Leiden, 1972, 3;

Another opinion states that the asylum seeker is a private individual that, in his home country, is persecuted for his activities in favour of humanity, progress and peace.²⁹⁵²

The asylee is a private individual which was granted asylum, in accordance to the rules provided by international judicial instruments and internal normative deeds. The asylee is, therefore, a former asylum seeker that has gained a right to asylum with all the rights and duties it assumes.

1.3. The Status of the Asylee in Romanian Law

For the first time in Romania's history, by the Law n. 122/2006 (henceforth referred to as Law), the status of the asylee has been regulated.

At the moment of the Law's elaboration, the humanitarian protection was regulated in sync with the international disposals, but after Romania joined the European Union, the EU acquis was integrated into the Law.

When it came into effect, the Law transposed the Directives 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2003/86/EC, 2004/83/EC and 2005/85/EC. For example, the Asylum Procedures Directive 2005/85/EC establishes that all procedures of this kind from the court of first instance must be identical in all EU states. Among other regulations, the Directive also instills a standard judicial procedure and an accelerated one and the right of the asylum seeker to judicial assistance. These regulations were transposed into the Law, which proves that the national legislation on the right to asylum took major steps in the right direction.

According to Article 3 from the Law, the central authority responsible for implementing Romania's policies in this domain is the National Office for Refugees, under the command of the Ministry of Internal Affairs.

The access to the asylum procedure is granted to all foreign citizens or stateless persons that are on Romanian soil or at the border, from the moment of the request, which must be written or spoken. It is necessary for the solicitor to request clearly the protection of the Romanian State.

The Law is applicable without discrimination, and with the exceptions of a few situations, the asylum seeker cannot be banished or extradited.

While addressing the request, the principle of family unity will be respected and all decisions regarding underage children will take into consideration the principle of his superior cause.

All information and documents regarding the asylum requests are confidential.

The decision regarding the request of asylum is taken after individually examining every request and after consulting information from the asylee's home country. Against the rejection of the asylum request, there is the possibility of a complaint and the seeker is granted the assumption of good faith with all the legal consequences it involves.

Article 17 of the Law states the rights of an asylum seeker, such as: the right to be assisted by an attorney in any phase of the procedure, the right to a translator in any phase of the procedure, the right to access the information contained in his file, the right to protection of his personal data, the right to be granted a temporary identification document and so on.

Article 19 of the Law regulates the obligations of the asylum seeker, whom is compelled to: present to the authorities exhaustive and real information about himself and his request, put forward all the documents relevant to his situation at the State's disposal, follow all the competent authority's requests, respect and oblige to the laws of the Romanian State and so on.

1.4. The Procedure for Granting Asylum

The Law provides two kinds of procedures: the ordinary procedure and the accelerated procedure.

The ordinary procedure is triggered by a written or spoken request, which must be drafted in Romanian. If the solicitor is under age of 18 years old, the request must be filed by the legal representative.

Once the request is filed, fingerprints are taken and then the seeker is interviewed in order to determine the form of protection required.

The National Office for Refugees is responsible for the interview and the decision of admitting or rejecting the asylum request. The disposal has to be taken in a maximum of 30 days. Once the decision is taken, and if the request is admitted, then the form of protection is established.

If the request is rejected, a complaint can be addressed to the General Inspectorate of Immigrations. Afterwards, the final decision will be made by a court of justice in a maximum time frame of 30 days. The judicial disposal decision may be challenged with appeal in a 5 days term which will be solved in a 30 days term from his registration by the court which grants the second degree of jurisdiction.

The accelerated procedure is utilized for blatantly groundless requests or for requests of persons that represent a certain danger to national security or the public order according to Romanian law.

A complaint can be made against the decision in a term of 2 days from communication. During the period in which the complaint is judged, the asylum seeker can remain in the Romanian territory. The complaint has to be solved in a maximum of 10 days and the decision is final therefore it is not subject to an appeal, being definitive.

According to Article 98 of the Law, the right to asylum ceases in a few cases exhaustively enumerated by the article, such as: the asylee voluntarily reinstated himself under the protection of the country of which he's a citizen, after he lost his citizenship he voluntarily regained it, he gained a new citizenship and is under the protection of the State he gained it from and so on.

Article 100 of the Law states that the right to asylum is annulled in the following scenarios: the asylee gave false statements, left out certain facts or used false documents, which were decisive in granting the protection and there are no other reasons to maintain the status or if it was discovered – after granting the protection – that the asylee was under one of the situations presented by Article 25 (for example: he committed a crime against peace and humanity or a war crime, he committed a severe crime outside of Romania, before entering Romanian soil and so on).

1.5. Special Procedures

The Dublin Procedure's main goal is to determine one single EU Member State to be responsible for examining a request for international protection that was presented in one of them by a third country national or a stateless person. Therefore, the Dublin Regulation can be applied only when an asylum seeker makes such a request to a Member State. In Romania, the following main cases have fallen under The Dublin Procedure's appliance: the asylum seeker makes a request for international protection in Romania and after the background check it is found that he has already made a request to another Member State or it is found that he was seized for an illegal entrance in another Member State or it is found that he possesses a visa/another residence document, legally issued by another Member State that previously allowed him to enter the territory of the Member States, even if these documents were not effectively used; another possibility is that the asylum seeker is illegally on Romanian soil and after the background check it is found that he had already made a request for international protection in another Member State.²⁹⁵³

After one Member State takes responsibility for the asylum seeker, he/she will be transferred to that State where the international procedures will be applied. The transfer term is between 6 and 18 months.

Another special procedure sensu lato is tolerance²⁹⁵⁴, regulated by the Emergency Decree n. 194/2002 (henceforth referred to as Decree). It covers the situation in which the General Inspectorate for Immigrations can tolerate one's staying on the Romanian territory, if that person is not a Romanian citizen, nor a citizen of an EU or EEA Member State and he/she can't leave the Romanian territory because of objective motives. The objective motives the Decree refers to include, but are not limited to: being criminally charged and the judge establishes a ban on leaving the city/country, the public custody instilled against someone ends, the enforcement of the obligation to return was suspended, when one's presence is temporary required on Romania's territory because of important public interests and so on.

In order to be granted tolerance, the applicant has to make a written request and provide the authorities with the documents that serve as proof to the applicant's motives for not leaving the country.

If the motives for which one was granted tolerance cease to exist, the tolerance ceases as well.

The non-granting of the tolerance on the territory of Romania can be contested within 5 days of communication, at the Territorial Court of Appeal. The court shall give its ruling within 30 days, the court ruling being final.

The asylum procedure for unaccompanied minors, asylum seekers, is also a special one. Unaccompanied minors become asylum seekers from the moment they make written or oral request to the competent authorities. Asylum requests of unaccompanied minors will always be processed in ordinary procedure. For unaccompanied minors, requesting asylum is a precondition for automatic access to the territory, thereby ensuring access to the asylum procedure. Solving asylum applications from unaccompanied minors will be prioritized. Unaccompanied minors who have requested the protection of the Romanian State are not liable for illegal entry or stay on Romanian territory.

If the asylum request from an unaccompanied minor is made to other competent authorities, the General Inspectorate for Immigration - Asylum and Integration Directorate will be immediately informed and it will ensure transporting the applicant to the Inspectorate's specialized asylum structure, a body competent to analyze the request. The unaccompanied minor shall be issued with a provisional certificate stating a temporary identity document and shall be provided with the transport to the competent Inspectorate structure where the formalities referred to in the above paragraph are to be carried out.

Asylum seekers will be given a personal file and will be photographed and imprinted (fingerprints will not be made for minors under 14). Asylum seekers will also be informed of their rights and obligations as well as of the asylum procedure. At the time of filing the asylum application, asylum seekers will be issued with a temporary ID document (for unaccompanied minors, this document will be issued after their registration with the Inspectorate).

Unaccompanied minors who received a form of protection in Romania according to the law, based on a definitive and irrevocable decision are taken in the system of child protection services, organized by the county councils or local councils of Bucharest districts.

If the demand of the unaccompanied minor on granting a form of protection under the law was rejected by a final ruling, minors will be taken by the General Directorate of Social Assistance and Child Protection, which will take the steps required by law to establish a protection measure for him and inform the General Inspectorate for Immigration - the Migration Department about his situation, according to the law.

1.6. Romania and the EU Emergency Relocation Mechanism

In its European Agenda on Migration presented on May 13 2015, the Commission proposed a series of immediate actions to address the unprecedented influx of migrants on the EU's southern borders, and the large numbers of tragic deaths of people attempting to cross the Mediterranean irregularly.

The European Commission proposed to use the emergency response mechanism under Article 78 (3) of the TFEU for the first time in order to set up a temporary relocation scheme applying to a total of 40 000 persons (from states with an average asylum recognition rate of above 75%) in need of international protection, arrived in either Italy (24 000) or Greece (16 000) after 15 April 2015 (no retroactivity).

The relocation from Italy and Greece to other EU Member States would take place over the period of 2 years in accordance with a distribution key based on four criteria: i) the national GDP (40%), ii) size of the population (40%), iii) unemployment level (10%) and iv) the number of asylum-seekers already hosted (10%). Thus, the proposed decision entails a limited and temporary derogation to the provisions of the Dublin Regulation as regards the criteria for determining the State responsible for examining an asylum application.

The Parliament also proposed that asylum seekers should be given the possibility, before they are relocated from Italy and Greece, to rank Member States by order of preference, according to criteria such as family, social and cultural ties, such as language skills, previous stays, studies and work experience.

On May 18 2017, the European Parliament issued a resolution, urging Member States to fulfill their obligations on relocation. The Parliament acknowledged that some progress had been made, but expressed its disappointment regarding the unfulfilled commitments of Member States to solidarity and responsibility sharing. It called on the Member States to give priority to the relocation of unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable applicants.²⁹⁵⁵

As of October 19 2017²⁹⁵⁶, Romania has formally pledged 2,182 places and has effectively relocated 45 refugees from Italy, 683 from Greece and has 3,452 remaining places to fulfill in order to meet its commitment. At the same time, Romania relocated 11 Syrian citizens, on the basis of the agreement between the European Union and Turkey.²⁹⁵⁷

Romania has six accommodation centers for asylum seekers in Timișoara, Galați, Rădăuți, Șomcuta Mare, Giurgiu and Bucharest. Romania is not a preferred destination for refugees and some people who were officially asylum seekers in Romania have been caught while trying to leave the country illegally in the last year.²⁹⁵⁸

Romania's Minister of External Affairs, Teodor Melescanu, has recently declared that an offer has been made to relocate to Romania 1942 refugees from Italy and Greece.²⁹⁵⁹

Although a recent article has shown that only 0.1% of total asylum seekers in EU apply for Romania²⁹⁶⁰, the country is making great strides in complying with the EU regulations and respecting its commitment to the Emergency Relocation Mechanism.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. General

Once Romania joined the European Union, the principle of freedom of movement has led to the absolutely need for change regarding certain legislation in order for Romania not to discriminate its citizens in its treatment towards European Member States citizens, amendment which caused differential treatment between citizens from European Union member states in comparison to citizens of states which were not members of the European Union.

Nowadays, Romania's most important law on the matter of status of the foreign citizens on its territory is represented by the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 (henceforth referred to as EO), republished in 2008. This provision in particular does not apply to them because Article 2 (1) a) states that a foreign citizen is the one whom does not hold Romanian citizenship or the citizenship of an European Union member state, therefore it means that EU citizens have overall an similar regime to the native Romanian citizens.

As stated before, citizens from EU Member States are granted the same rights and of course the same obligations as a Romanian national given the existence of the concept of "European citizenship" stated for the first time in the Maastricht Treaty.

Under the national law the concept of immigrant is not defined in anyway, remaining for the doctrine to clarify this aspect.

The eligibility requirements to enter the Romanian State described by Article 6 of the EO are as follows:

- The person has a valid permission act which grants him/her the right to cross the border;
- The person possesses a Romanian visa issued in accordance with the EO or possesses a valid residence permit;
- They present reliable documents in order to justify the reason for their staying and the resources they have in order to financially support themselves in Romania;
- They prove by reasonable means that they will gain access to the State of destination, or that they will leave the Romanian territory (in case of transit);
- They do not belong to the category of undesired persons or the ones whose access on the Romanian territory has been prohibited;
- They have not previously infringed the purpose of their visa or tried to enter Romanian territory using false documents;
- Their names have not been mentioned in the Schengen Information System in order to stop their entrance;
- They are not a threat for the national security.

Also, it is compulsory for the non-EU citizens to provide the Romanian authorities (within 3 days after legally crossing the Romanian border) with all the information regarding his/hers identity.

2.2. Immigration Regarding Non-EU Citizens

EO no. 194/2002 regulates certain types of visas which are necessary in order to spend time on the Romanian territory. In this context, the most relevant is the long-term visa because it directly implies that a non-EU citizen is going to spend a long amount of time in Romania. This resonates with the concept of immigration, for it can become the first step for non-EU citizens to reside in our country.

2.2.1. Long Term Visa

Long term visa can be obtained for 90 days by the citizens of non-EU States, for the following reasons:

- To develop commercial activities;
- Exercise a profession under a special law if it is permitted;
- Subordinated labor;
- Studies;
- To reunite family;
- Religious or humanitarian activities;
- Other reasons.

The reasons mentioned above should be doubled by the conditions stated in Article 27 of the EO and by a submitted application. The non-EU citizens can receive a long term visa if they enter the Romanian territory legally as stated in Article 6, or their entrance on the Romanian territory, it is not prohibited according to Article 8 or, their application for the visa was not refused and they have not been banned from entering another EU Member State's territory.

2.2.2. License for Permanent Residence

2.2.2.1. Common Case

Another step for immigration is obtaining the license/permit for a permanent residence, which grants the non-EU citizen almost all the rights of a Romanian national, except the right to vote.

The conditions for obtaining such a license/permit are:

- Legal and continuous residence on the Romanian territory;
- Can support himself/herself financially, at least at the level of the minimum wage;
- Has paid the social contributions to the State;
- Holds a residence;
- Is able to speak Romanian on a medium level;
- Does not represent a security threat for the State.

According to article 75 of the EO, the non-EU citizens will receive an equal treatment in matter of access to working places, studies at all levels, social security, health insurance, tax deduction, access to the public services, freedom of association, and finally they can establish their residence in Romania or change it on the same base as the Romanian citizens.

2.2.2.2. Vulnerable People

Under Article 130 of the EO, citizens of the non-EU States, which were victims of the crimes mentioned in Article 141 benefit from a special treatment, as they can obtain their license even if they illegally entered the Romanian State. However, their application must be made by a district attorney or a judge, under the following conditions:

- The person showed clear intention to cooperate with the Romanian authorities;
- The connection with the person who convinced them to commit the crime ceased;
- The license is opportune for judicial investigation;

- Their presence on the Romanian territory will not affect public order or security of the State.

Another vulnerable category consists of unaccompanied infants. Their rights to obtain temporary license is conditioned by the following formalities:

- Authorities determine their identity and the way they entered the State;
- They ensure the legal representation in order to take care of them and also grant them accommodation for their stay;
- Authorities try to identify their parents;
- Children are able to access the educational system;
- If their parents are not located in Romania the child will be sent to them;
- And if, finally, the parents are not identified, the child obtains the right to obtain temporary license to remain on the Romanian territory.

2.2.3. Admission, Benefits and Obligations

The Romanian policy on this matter is the integration of these people by guaranteeing them access to economic, cultural and social life.

In order to fully integrate them, the Romanian State can organise:

- Courses for learning the Romanian language;
- Courses in order to polish their professional abilities;
- Ensure their full information on the matter of rights and obligations;
- Courses in order to learn history, culture, civilization, and the Romanian law system;
- Meetings with Romanian citizens in order to better understand each other.

Also, the Romanian authorities shall cooperate with different international NGOs in order to better integrate the individuals into the Romanian social life.

The particular obligations the immigrant must respect are the following:

- He/she has to communicate any changes regarding his/her personal life such as change of citizenship, marriage, newborn child, death of a family member on the Romanian territory;
- Any change regarding his/her workplace;
- Loss or change of the passport.

If he/she changes his/her residence he/she must inform in maximum 15 days the Romanian Immigration Office in order to take evidence. Also, if the passport is lost or stolen he/she has to inform the authorities within 40 hours.

2.2.4. Exclusion of Migration Status

The Romanian visa can be cancelled in several situations:

- If the visa was issued by mistake although the person did not meet the conditions in order to obtain it;
- Visa was obtained on the ground of false documents;
- Non-EU citizens tried to introduce on the Romanian territory other non-EU citizens or helped them during their stay;

- They infringed regulations regarding Romanian border.

In other situations, visa can be revoked on the following basis:

- Non-EU citizens do not meet all the requirements anymore (the requirements that were necessary to obtain the visa in the first place);
- The purpose for which the visa has been accorded has not been respected;
- After obtaining the visa, they are declared undesired on the Romanian territory.

2.2.5. Expulsion

In order to apply this legal punishment, the person has to commit a crime mentioned in the Romanian Criminal Code. In such a case, the judge has the possibility to accord him public custody before being expelled from the country. What must be mentioned is that expulsion is prohibited if the life of the individual would be at risk in the specific State where he/she should be sent to.

Also, under Article 96 EO, Romania has to respect the decisions of expulsion of strangers from other EU Member States in the following cases:

- The decision of departure is taken for security matters:
 - The individual was convicted for committing a crime for which the Romanian Criminal Code states more than 1 year of deprivation of liberty;
 - There is proof which shows that the individual wants to initiate or continue an activity which threatens the security of the EU Member States;
- The individual did not respect the conditions of his/her entrance on the territory of the State.

2.3. Immigration Regarding Citizens of EU Member States

Citizens from EU Member States are granted the same rights and of course the same obligations as a Romanian national, given the existence of the concept of "European citizenship". Therefore, the treatment of the EU citizens is fully assimilated to the Romanian citizens.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

The public authority dealing with migrants in Romania is the General Inspectorate for Immigration, which was set up under the authority of Ministry of Internal Affairs in 2012. The institution is not new however, it was preceded by the Authority for Aliens and The National Refugee Office until 2007 and then, after a vast institutional reform by the Romanian office for immigration which unified under the same authority the responsibilities in the field of migration control and asylum.

On June 20 2007, the Government Emergency Order n. 55 and the Government Decision n. 369 created the legal framework for the establishment and competence of the Romanian Office for Immigration, which has been later redefined as The General Inspectorate for Immigration through Government Decision n. 838/2012 (referred from here by as the Inspectorate).

The inspectorate is a specialized structure of the central public administration with juridical personality that operates under the authority of the Ministry of Internal Affairs. The Inspectorate's activity is considered public service and its goal is to serve the people and the community and also to support other institutions in putting law into practice. The person in charge is a general inspector appointed by an order of the Internal Affairs minister and has the ability to give out dispositions that have a juridical value. A secretary of state coordinates the activity and supports the general inspector's work.

The main responsibilities of the inspectorate regarding the implementation in Romania of policies in the fields of migration, asylum, aliens integration into the society as well as adopting relevant legislation. These goals are mainly carried out by the activity of the general inspector who is able to give out dispositions and by the executive personnel composed of police officers, public workers and other contract based employees.

Among the inspector's main assignments concerning migration there are:

- Grants visas for the entrance in Romania of aliens and approves invitations and family reunification requests according to the law;
- Grants work permits for the purpose of obtaining the right of staying for work purpose;
- Reviews the requests for obtaining the right of staying and where the criteria is met he grants this right or he prologues it according to the legislation;
- Enrolls the residency on Romanian territory of citizens from EU and EEA and their families and grants permanent residence to EU/EEA citizens and their families;
- Annuls or revokes the right of staying or limits the residency right according to the laws;
- Gives out legal documents attesting identity, staying, residency or other travel documents;
- Establishes interdictions at the entry in the country.

Asylum related attributions include:

- Registers, analyses and solves asylum requests on an administrative level;
- Sends out to the competent courts complaints from asylum seekers and sends them out copies of the files in question;
- Decides upon granting access on Romanian territory for asylum seekers who have filled a request at border control offices for entering the country;
- Can decide on sending the alien to a safe third party country and works with border police in order to arrange that the aliens get there safe.

Given the importance of this authority in the field of migration, the Inspectorate has an active role in elaborating the national strategy for immigration and implementing it through annual action plans. Moreover, it can elaborate, implement and monitor projects with external financing through its special departments. The Inspectorate has attributions in coordinating other public authorities both at central and territorial level that are also involved in the social integration of aliens who have previously acquired a form of protection in Romania or a right of staying and that of citizens of EU/EEA. The Inspectorate can also store and check personal data about the aliens and can conduct studies and researches in order to improve its activity.

One important component of the institution are the external collaborations. This being said, the Inspectorate is in good relations not only with the Ministry of Internal Affairs, which patronizes it, but also with various other authorities and organisations. Among these, there are foreign institutions with the same activity and international organisations, diplomatic missions and accredited offices in Romania, the UNHCR (United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees), the International Organisation for Migration and other non-governmental organisations involved with migration and refugees topics.

The Inspectorate draws its finances from the State budget through the budget of the Ministry of Internal Affairs, as well through other sources approved by the law. Moreover, the Inspectorate can use the money and goods that have other sources of provenience, such as donations or sponsorships obtained through internal or international agreements.

As far as ways of redressing are concerned, the foreigners who consider themselves wronged by the General Inspector's dispositions can challenge said documents in court. The competence in this matter belongs to the Court of Appeal in whose jurisdiction the territorial structure of the Inspectorate has its headquarters. The terms for filing a complaint vary depending on the type of legal document that is challenged. For example, if the request to be tolerated on the territory of Romania is denied by the Inspectorate, the term for filing a complaint is 5 days which start to be counted from the day the decision was communicated to the person in question. Regarding asylum related requests, they are solved by the Inspectorate through decisions. Against these decisions, the person who has an interest can file a complaint which is solved by a court in first instance. The complainant has all the ways of redressing from common law, meaning he/she can appeal the decision.

If a person considers that the personnel of the Inspectorate had a wrong conduct while on duty, he/she can sue the Inspectorate and the Romanian State. During trial the person would have to prove that the conditions of civil tort liability. These conditions are: the existence of a prejudice, the existence of an illicit deed, the causality report between them and the guilt in the form of negligence, imprudence or intention belonging to the person who caused the prejudice.

With a view to assure a better cohesion between EU actions and internal actions, Government Decision n. 780 from September 20 2015 establishes a National Strategy regarding Migration (referred to as "the Strategy" from hereby) for the years 2015-2018 which comprises the steps to follow concerning migration and authorities who monitor the process. One of the breakthroughs of this law was the creation of the Coordinating Group for the implementation of the National Strategy regarding migration (referred to as the Group from hereby). The activity of the Group is led by the secretary of state who also coordinates the activity of The Inspectorate.

The main responsibilities within the Group include:

- Coordinating the activities within the institutions that have activities in the field of migration, ensuring that the objectives of the Strategy are carried out and that Romania respects its obligations and commitments;
- Monitoring the implementation of communitarian and international practices in the field;
- Quarterly evaluation or every time it is necessary of the stage of the Strategy;
- Annually elaboration of reports regarding the evolution of the migration phenomenon and based on them the proposal of new directions and plans for action.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

Romania has registered during the period between January 1 2012 and December 31 2016 a total of 8690 asylum applications, 2510 of which in 2012.²⁹⁶¹ The beginning of 2017 already counts 613 requests registered during the first three months of the year. All these applications come from people of more than 65 different citizenships, but more than a half of these people have their origins in Afghanistan, Republic of Iraq and Syrian Arab Republic.²⁹⁶²

The number of first-time applicants during the past years is as follows: in 2016: 1855 out of 1880, in 2015: 1225 out of 1260, in 2014: 1500 out of 1545, in 2013: 1405 out of 1495 and in 2012: 2420 out of 2510.²⁹⁶³ These numbers represent the harsh reality: there are constantly plenty of people in need of asylum.

Person granted refugee status means a person covered by a decision granting refugee status taken by administrative or judicial bodies during the reference period.

Refugee status means status as defined in Article 2 (e) of Directive 2011/95/EC within the meaning of Article 1 of the Geneva Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of July 28 1951, as amended by the New York Protocol of January 31 1967.

According to the Article 2 (d) of the Directive 2011/95/EC, refugee means a third country national who, owing to a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership of a particular social group, is outside the country of nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country, or a stateless person, who, being outside of the country of former habitual residence for the same reasons as mentioned above, is unable or, owing to such fear, unwilling to return to it.²⁹⁶⁴

Person granted subsidiary protection status means a person covered by a decision granting subsidiary protection status, taken by administrative or judicial bodies during the reference period.

Subsidiary protection status means status as defined in Article 2 (g) of Directive 2011/95/EC. According to Article 2 (f) of the Directive, person eligible for subsidiary protection means a third country national or a stateless person who does not qualify as a refugee but in respect of whom substantial grounds have been shown for believing that the person concerned, if returned to his or her country of citizenship, or in the case of a stateless person, to his or her country of former habitual residence, would face a real risk of suffering serious harm and is unable, or, owing to such risk, unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country.

First instance decision means a decision made in response to an asylum application at the first instance level of the asylum procedure²⁹⁶⁵, while final decision on appeal means a decision granted at the final instance of administrative/judicial asylum procedure and which results from the appeal lodged by the asylum seeker rejected in the preceding stage of the procedure.²⁹⁶⁶

2016 concluded with a number of 820 positive decisions divided in 605 granting refugee status and 215 granting subsidiary protection.²⁹⁶⁷ Those decisions have been given both in first instance (805 out of a total of 1295) and as final decisions on appeal (15 out of a total of 115).²⁹⁶⁸ More than a half (61%) of those whose applications have been accepted are from Syria, while the second and the third place are occupied by migrants from Iraq (17%) and Eritrea (5%).²⁹⁶⁹

In 2015, there were given 480 positive decisions in first instance and 45 on appeal, significantly less than the year before (2014), when there were 740 positive decisions in first instance and 35 on appeal. 2013 counts the most positive decisions from the last years: 915 in first instance and 925 on appeal, while 2012 counts the least: 230 in first instance and 275 on appeal.

According to an UNHCR statistic regarding the sex of the persons of concern, there are about twice as much men than women looking for asylum in Romania.²⁹⁷⁰ The most of these people are between 18 and 59 years old, according to the same statistics.

Romania is not a much demanded country in terms of immigration. Considering its infrastructure, economy, work and integration possibilities it is not a popular choice among asylum-seekers, refugees or other protected category of people. Migratory flows tend to lead to Western Europe and to the more developed countries. Usually these people avoid Romania, simply because of the geographical position. After having been built so many wire-fences on different borders (e.g. Hungary) many migrants changed their route to cross from Serbia to Romania and then to continue their way to Western Europe.

Emergency Transit Centre (ETC) Timisoara, Europe's first evacuation facility, opened its doors in May 2008 as part of a Tripartite Agreement between Romania, UNHCR, and International Organization for Migration (IOM). With a capacity to host up to 200 people, the facility provides temporary shelter to refugees who need immediate evacuation from their first country of refuge.²⁹⁷¹

According to the authorities, in 2015, Romania was running six reception centres for refugees, with a total capacity of 1,500 places.²⁹⁷²

On July 2 2015 the Romanian Government adopted the Memorandum regarding the conclusions of the European Council on June 25. This document stated that Romania must relocate 1705 people through the relocation mechanism and 80 people through the extra-EU relocation program.²⁹⁷³ According to the relocation scheme from September 2015, Romania was supposed to welcome 585 people from Italy and 1890 from Greece.²⁹⁷⁴

According to the tenth report on relocation and resettlement (from March 2 2017) Romania has relocated very few individuals so far.²⁹⁷⁵ A European report presented by the European Parliament on May 16 2017 shows that there have been relocated only 586 refugees out of 4180 that were allocated to Romania.²⁹⁷⁶

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

In Romania, there have been 3 visits of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and other forms of punishment or Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CPT) following which the CPT expressed his demand of several changes regarding this domain in 3 different reports. In the last visit (2006) concerning the detention centre for foreigners in Otopeni as well as in different premises of detention for foreigners in the area of International Airport of Bucharest-Otopeni (Henri Coanda), the Committee examined the measures taken by the Romanian authorities as a result of its two first visits (in 1999 and 2002). The Romanian Government sent a response concerning how the demands of the CPT were accomplished after the Committee's visit to Romania from June 8-19 2006.

Analysing the implementation of the decisions taken by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants at national level, we should take into account the latest response of the Government regarding the conditions of detention of foreigners who want to cross our border, as well as 3 important cases: Lupsa v Romania (case n. 10337/04), Kaya v Romania (case n. 33970/05) and Abmed v Romania (case n. 34621/03). Moreover, it is important to mention that, in general, the recommendations have been respected and implemented at national level, considering that Romania does not confront with a large number of refugees so far.

In the 3 cases mentioned above, Romania was convicted to pay to the injured part moral damages during 3 months, according with the European Court of Human Rights case-law and competence. The last case, Abmed v Romania, has a particular importance because, following the response of the Court concerning a violation of Article 1 of Protocol n. 7 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms response which was similar in the other two cases (Lupsa v Romania and Kaya v Romania, where the authorities did not provide the applicants with the slightest information regarding the reason they were declared undesirable on Romanian territory, nor any indication about the facts of which the applicant was accused), the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 regarding the regime of foreigners in Romania [Ordonanța de Urgență Guvernului României nr. 194/2002 privind regimul străinilor in România] was amended by the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 56/2007 regarding the employment and detachment of foreigners on the territory of Romania [Ordonanța de Urgență a Guvernului României nr. 56/2007 privind încadrarea în muncă și detașarea străinilor pe teritoriul României], as an implementation of the decision taken by the European Court of Human Rights. In fact, in the case Abmed v Romania, an Iranian man named Hamdoon Ahmed Ahmed was declared as an undesirable person on the Romania's territory taking into account the provisions of the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 which was applicable at the time of the facts. Moreover, the prosecutor in charge admitted that there was enough evidence to sustain the fact that his actions were a cause of endanger for the security of the state. In all of the 3 cases, the complainants were completely integrated on the Romanian society. They were living in Romania for at least 10 years and they were occupying important positions in the society, for example in the case Abmed v Romania, Hamdoon Ahmed was the administrator of a commercial society in Romania, or in the case Lupşa v Romania, the Serbo-Montenegrin Dorjel Lupşa was a Yugoslav citizen who established in Romania a society who had like object the commercialization of the coffee.

Moreover, as a consequence of the decision taken by the Court in the case Abmed v Romania, the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 102/2000 concerning the status and regime of refugees in Romania [Ordonanța de Urgență Guvernului României nr. 102/2000 privind statutul și regimul refugiaților în România] which was applicable at the time of the facts, was repealed by the Law n. 122/2006 concerning the asylum in Romania [Legea nr. 122/2006 privind azilul în România] which also suffered subsequent modifications until the current form.

From the last visit in 2002 concerning the detention centre for foreigners in Otopeni as well as in different premises of detention for foreigners in the area of International Airport of Bucharest-Otopeni (Henri Coanda), the CTP affirms in 2006, after the examination of the conditions in which foreign nationals could be detained in the transit area, that the legal framework governing the detention of foreign nationals has changed significantly since the 2002 visit. The Court mentions the amendments to the law from 2001 regarding foreigners : Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 mentioned above, Law n. 357/2003 regarding the approval of the law n. 194/2002 on the regime of aliens in Romania [Legea nr. 357/2003 privind aprobarea Ordonanței de Urgență Guvernului României nr. 194/2002 privind regimul străinilor în România] and Law n. 482/2004 regarding the modification and completion of Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 on the regime of aliens in Romania [Legea nr. 482/2004 pentru modificarea și completarea Ordonanței de Urgență a Guvernului nr. 194/2002 privind regimul străinilor în România]. As a consequence, there has been introduced at the time a judicial review of the detention of foreign nationals and the suspensive nature of any appeal against a removal order, time limits for the detention of foreign nationals : foreign nationals subject to an administrative deportation decision could be detained for a maximum period of six months and those who were sentenced to a judicial expulsion after serving a sentence of imprisonment may, in anticipation of their remoteness, be kept in detention for a maximum of two years. If the aliens concerned cannot be deported within the above time limits, they must be released and they will receive, on a temporary basis, the status of tolerated people. The new law at the time allowed the indefinite detention of foreign nationals (including asylum seekers and refugees recognized as such) which are declared undesirable because of the threat they pose to national security. Also, foreigners who have applied for asylum upon arrival at an international airport in Romania are, based on the new law, subject to a procedure for asylum at the border. Under this procedure, asylum seekers are in principle required to stay in the transit areas. However, if there is no final decision within twenty days, they are automatically allowed to enter the territory subject to the ordinary asylum procedure and Romanian (while being accommodated in an open reception centre). Nevertheless, the detention centre for foreigners from Otopeni has expanded considerably since the last visit in 2002 by the construction of a new building.

The response of the Government after the visit from 2006 concerning the conditions in which foreign nationals could be detained in the transit area should also be considered. Romania opened a number of transit accommodation centres in 2000 for the medium-term (maximum 20 days) administrative detention of people who request asylum at the border. Six transit facilities were in operation by 2006. One of them is the Bucharest-Baneasa International Airport (CPT 2006), as well as the Bucharest Henri Coanda Airport (CPT 2006), a facility at the Constanta Harbour and a centre in Romanesti, at the border with Moldova.

Among the important changes, the Government refers to the transfer, within the shortest time, in a proper centre of any national stranger who may be placed in custody for an extended period in the area of transit from the Airport International Bucharest – Baneasa. The report also contains information regarding the insurance of necessary conditions for foreigners in the Centre as the right to receive three visits each week, half an hour each, the right to see a doctor or a psychologist, the right to take advantage of the assistance offered by NGOs and the services of a lawyer. If necessary, they can be transferred to a medical unit nearby. Also, the information ensures that at the Otopeni hosting centre are hired a doctor, 4 medical assistants and a psychologist, all full-time. The psychologist makes daily assessments, writing psychological observation for each hosted foreigner.

The schedule was also changed. The foreigners are hosted separately, by categories, but the daily program is currently taking place in common for all foreigners. In the report from 2006, the Government also affirmed the intentions of buying 20 radio and TV devices in 2007.

According to the new modifications from 2006, all the foreigners whom are subjected to an administrative decision of expulsion are, at the entrance in the Centre, subjected to medical examination.

In case of isolation, in each cell for the implementation of the measure of isolation was mounted a bed set in the floor, equipped with mattresses and lingerie. The foreigners from the isolation have now access to an hour of free time for daily exercise.

Moreover, the rules of procedure of the centre provides the following penalties: verbal warning, work to the benefit of the centre such as cleaning the spaces intended for cultural and sporting activities, ban, for a limited period of time, from sporting, educational and cultural activities, and other benefits. The isolation is arranged for a period of 24 hours by the head of the centre or his legal substitute, which is required to announce the leadership of the authority for foreigners on the taking of these measures and the reasons that led to these measures. Coercive measures such as immobilization and putting the handcuffs are arranged by the head of the centre or his legal substitute only if foreign behaviour endangers the lives of other inmates or the staff of the centre.

Last but not least, there can be mentioned 2 of the latest law-cases of the ECHR, such as N.M. v. Romania, (case n. 75325/11 from May 10 2015) in which the Court found the applicant's complaints under Articles 5 Para 2, 6 and 13 in conjunction with Article 3 to be inadmissible and therefore rejected them, and S.C. v. Romania (case n. 9356/11 from 10 February 2015) in which the Court decides that there has been a violation of the Article 5 (1) f) and ordered the applicant to be compensated.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

Compared to international migration and taking into consideration that work appears to be less attractive to immigrants, Romania is considered a very interesting country considering the point of view of transit opportunities and a country of emigration. In other words, the migration of Romanian workforce is the dominant national characteristic²⁹⁷⁷ at the present moment. However, in accordance to the conclusions of the “Immigration and asylum in Romania – 2006”, carried out by the Interministerial Group for the Coordination of Implementation of National Strategy on Migration²⁹⁷⁸, the integration of Romania into the structures of the European Union would lead to an increased number of migrants in Romania.

Among the findings of the experts who conducted this research:

- As regards the interest of foreigners to visit Romania - for tourism or business - there has been a significant increase in the number of applications for short-stay visas (mostly foreign citizens with a high trend towards migration);
- The number of foreigners who have applied for work visas of long or temporary stay has increased in 2006 and 2007 with +27% and 57%, respectively. A fact which proves that Romania, originally a country of transit, becomes a destination country for migrants;
- Source countries with regard to migration continue to be The Republic of Moldova, Turkey and China, these countries of origin of a large majority of those who have carried out commercial activities in Romania²⁹⁷⁹;
- There has been a significant increase in the number of foreigners who got married to the Romanian citizens and of those who have their temporary residence in Romania: 17 % of the total number of visa applications;
- The number of foreigners currently residing in Romania, only 0.2% of the population of Romania, reduced in comparison with other Member States - the number of foreign employees represents only 0.58% of the total labour force in Romania and has no negative effects on the national labour market. Despite taking into account the liberalization of the labour market, as well as the gradual increase in the active population in Romania, it had been estimated that 200,000 - 300,000 foreigners would work in Romania in 2013-2015.

In this context, Romania, through its institutions and bodies with powers in this field, shall effectively engage itself in the management of migration, respecting European policies. In this regard, we would like to point out that in December 2005 the European Parliament adopted the Global Approach to the Migrations: priorities for actions centered on Africa and the Mediterranean based on a sharing of responsibilities between the Member States and Third countries.

This comprehensive approach, which defines policies and a coherent action, refers to a wide range of problems regarding migrations and covers the multiple areas of action: development, employment, but also justice, freedom and security. The results of this strategy have already been evaluated²⁹⁸⁰ in the Conclusion of the European Commission that the actions need to be further increased within the framework of a comprehensive approach, to establish a common policy on migration and a common asylum policy, to combat immigration, to ensure fair treatment for immigrants and partnerships with countries of origin and transit.

The creation of an effective and unitary legislative framework is a priority for the Parliament of Romania. Among the adoptions in 2007, there can be mentioned: The Strategy And the Action Plan on Migration, The National Commission for the Management of an Integrated Border in 2007-2010, The National Strategy for Combating Trafficking of Persons, The Laws Regulating in Romania, The Laws for the Organization and Operation of the Ministry of the Interior and the Administrative Reform and so on.

At the same time, Romania implies constant concern and sustained effort of its institutions with the aim of harmonization and implementation of the acquis communautaire in the fields of Justice, Home Affairs and Freedom of the Movement of Persons, taking into account the fact that Romania has 2000 kilometres of the outer border of the Union. At present, the task of ensuring effective border control and monitoring Romania's eastern border, to combat migration, illegal trafficking and the trafficking of human beings, represent priorities and important challenges for Romania.

It is necessary to emphasize that it is a global approach to this phenomenon, integrating economic, social and demographic factors and involving broad participation and input from NGOs, media and local communities, which is most appropriate for building the necessary links between the institutional and the socio-cultural dimensions of migration.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

According to the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights, there is no express right to health care, although it is an aspect of moral and physical integrity that falls within Article 8 which guarantees the right to respect for private and family life.

Similarly, the Convention does not guarantee the right to any specific health care standard or the right of access to medical treatment under certain circumstances, but the responsibility of a ²⁹⁸⁰ Communication from the Commission to the Council and the European Parliament “The global approach to Issue of migration a year later: towards a comprehensive European policy on migration” COM (2006) 735 final, Brussels, 30.11.2006, <<http://eur-lex.europa.eu/legal-content/en/TXT/?uri=celex:52007DC0248>>, accessed on May 3 2017, 15:40.

Member State, in accordance to the provisions of the Convention, may still be engaged if it is demonstrated that the authorities from a Member State endanger a person's life through acts or omissions that denied him/her health care services that are otherwise available to the entire population.

Article 34 from the Constitution of Romania establishes the right to health, where the State is obliged to take measures to ensure hygiene and public health, to organize a system of health insurance, accidents, maternity and recovery, to control the medical practices and paramedical activities, as well as other measures for the protection of the physical and mental health of the persons which are established according to the law.

The Romanian legislation states that everyone is entitled to receive medical assistance under the same conditions as any Romanian citizen, according to Law n. 95/2006. In Romania, citizens must seek medical insurance to receive full medical services.

There are also situations where health insurance is provided free of charge, namely: people under age of 18, students without an income, aged between 18 and 26, handicapped people that possess a certificate that states the handicap, pregnant women that do not have a stable income greater than/equal to the minimum wage on the economy, the individual has no income but his/her spouse has health insurance (co-incurred). Also, if one is legally employed, the employer has the obligation to pay a contribution to the insurance system.

Asylum seekers healthcare is provided by healthcare centres of accommodation of the General Inspectorate for Immigration which constantly monitors the health of asylum seekers and, in case of sickness provides primary care and free treatment. For people who suffer from acute or chronic life threatening, they benefit of emergency Services.

The applicability of the Charter is limited to those aspects which fall within the European Union law. EU Charter does not make distinction on grounds of nationality but subjects the exercise of the right to healthcare base on the national law and practices there for the EU regulations have subsidiary applicability.

Law n. 95/2006 regarding health reform states the categories of public institutions which have the obligation to ensure a certain level of healthcare, and, also the categories of persons who can benefit from health insurance with or without the contribution under the same conditions as the Romanian citizens.

Article 1 of the abovementioned law states that all Romanian citizens domiciled in the country, as well as foreign citizens and stateless persons who have applied for and obtained the extension of the temporary residence right or are domiciled in Romania and are proved by this law conclude an insurance contract with the health insurance houses, directly or through an employer, the model of which is established by an order of the President of CNAS (National Health Insurance House) with the approval of the board of directors”.

Paragraph two from the same legal provision also mentions the quality of insured and insurance right ceases with the loss of the right to domicile or stay in Romania.

Also, the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 94/2002 regarding the foreigner's regime in Romania stipulates that in order to request or extend the right to stay in the country the foreigner has to prove the health insurance.

There are exceptions to these provisions, and here are mentioned the persons who have obtained a form of protection in Romania and are subject to the Law n. 122/2006 on political asylum in Romania.

They are required to ensure compliance with the law on health care reform, but are not obliged to provide annually the proof of health insurance to the General Inspectorate for Immigration. Therefore, all foreigners in third countries with temporary or long-term residence in Romania have the obligation to have a health insurance regardless of the purpose of their stay and the legal status, for example: people with a form of protection in Romania or foreigners coming to work.

The discrimination of a person or group of people on the grounds of belonging to a particular race, nationality, ethnicity, religion by refusing access to public health services, such as the choice of family doctor, healthcare, health insurance or emergency services, constitutes contravention according the provisions of Law n. 137/2000 Article 10 b)²⁹⁸¹.

Under the Family Reunification Directive, stated by the Article 7 (1) b) and c) the sponsor of the reunification may be required to prove that he has a health insurance for himself and his members which covers all the risks normally covered by the nationals of the member state concerned, and sufficient resources to alienate herself and her family members without recourse to the social assistance system of the member state concerned.

Article 5 (1) b) from the “Long-Term Residents Directive” (Directive 2003/109/EC) provides that, before granting long-term resident status, third-country nationals and family members are required to provide evidence of health insurance covering all risks that are normally covered by the host state of their own citizens. Also, they must demonstrate that they have stable and regular resources sufficient to support themselves and their family members without resorting to the social assistance system in that state.

Individuals that have acquired long-term resident status have the right to equal treatment with nationals of the host Member State with regard to national security, national assistance and social protection, as defined by national law.²⁹⁸²

Recital 13 of the Directive 2003/109/EC stipulates that in the case of social assistance, the possibility of limiting long-term residents' benefits to basic benefits must be understood so that the concept covers at least the minimum subsistence income, sickness or pregnancy benefit, for child-care and long-term care. The modalities of granting these allowances must be determined by the internal legislation.

In conclusion, both asylum seekers, recognised refugees and people enjoying subsidiary protection have the right to equal access to healthcare as well as State citizens, this being mentioned and established in the national legislation of the State. They also benefit from and have the right to emergency medical care, treatment for serious illness as well as social and medical assistance for people with special needs.

Our legislation also strictly prohibits any form of discrimination; for example the Government Ordinance n. 137 from August 31, 2000. When there is a case of discrimination, the National Council for Combating Discrimination can be petitioned by the injured person. The petition may be formulated in writing and sent to the National Council for Combating Discrimination by one of the legal means (post, e-mail, and fax) or may be made orally by audience note. The Council can take notice of any situation, announcement or event for which there is evidence of the existence of facts which involve committing an act of discrimination. National Council on Combating Discrimination is an administrative-judicial authority that has the competence to investigate, detect and sanction the facts of discrimination. It is competent to receive petitions on discrimination on any criteria.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

According to Article 2 of the First Protocol to the European Convention of Human Rights, no person should abridge of the right to education in the exercise of any functions which it is assumed in relation to education and to teaching, the State should respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.

In a democratic society, the right to education, which is indispensable to the furtherance of human rights, plays a fundamental role in the development of society.²⁹⁸³ Over the years, children's rights have been placed first; the right to education, the right to good development, the right to health and not only, have been the focus of the European Conventions. Children's rights are protected by a variety of international human rights instruments and committees that control compliance with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.²⁹⁸⁴

They claim that non-discrimination requirements also apply to asylum seekers and migrants in regular and irregular situations.

According to Article 17 Part II from the European Social Charter (Revised), Member States have the obligation to provide effective access to education for children irregularly placed on their territory as it provides to any other child.²⁹⁸⁵ The Romanian State must assist foreigners with the right to stay in Romania in order to integrate them into economic, social and cultural life. In the legislation of our State, the superior interest of the children prevails.²⁹⁸⁶

Article 3 (6) of Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2006 on the aliens' regime in Romania, republished in 2008, provides that foreigners in education of all grades have access without restriction to school activities and training in society.

In order to facilitate the access to the Romanian educational system, the minors who are asylum seekers benefit, free of charge during a school year, from a preparatory course for enrollment in the national education system. The preparatory course stipulated in paragraph (1) is organized by the Ministerul Educatiei, Cercetarii, Tineretului si Sportului (Ministry of Education, Research, Youth and Sports), in collaboration with the National Refugee Office.

The minor asylum seeker is enrolled in the preparatory course within 3 months from the date of the application for asylum. At the end of the course of initiation in Romanian, an evaluation commission, whose composition and functioning is established by order of the Ministerul Educatiei, Cercetarii, Tineretului si Sportului (Ministry of Education, Research, Youth and Sports), appreciates the level of knowledge of the Romanian language and establishes the registration of minors who have acquired a form of protection in Romania, in the corresponding year of study.

Romanian education is based on the principle of equity. Article 2 Para. 4 of the National Education Law (Law n. 1/2011) states that the State guarantees to the citizens of Romania equal rights of access to all levels and forms of pre-university and higher education, as well as to lifelong learning without any form of discrimination. Equally, the same provisions apply to minors who request or benefit from a form of protection in Romania, as well as to foreign or stateless persons with a right of legal residence, provisions recorded in Article 2 (6) of the aforementioned law.

At the same time, various countries nationals recognized as long-term residents under the Long-Term Residents Directive (Directive 2003/109/EC) enjoy equal treatment with citizens of the EU Member States in access to education, training and scholarships, as well as the recognition of qualifications - referred to in Article 11. They also have the right to travel to other EU Member States for legal education and training purposes - referred to in Article 14²⁹⁸⁷.

According to Article 11 of the Government Ordinance n. 137/2000, refusal of access (to a system of State or private education) to any person or group of persons at any form, level and level, because of their belonging to a particular race or nationality is sanctioned. These provisions apply to all phases or stages in the education system, including admission or enrollment in educational establishments or institutions and the assessment or examination of knowledge²⁹⁸⁸.

In accordance with Article 12 (3) of the “Free Movement Directive” (2003/109/EC), under certain conditions, third-country institutions are children of EEA nationals who have the right to stay in order to continue or complete their studies, including after the EEA deceased or left the territory of that State.

These children have the right to be accompanied by the parent in whose custody they are, until they complete the studies program.

In conclusion, the access to education of children is an essential one, most of them having a vital role in the development and drawing of the personality of each. Protecting children's rights in education comes naturally and as a matter of priority in every democratic society, which is why the refusal of education gives birth to the vulnerability of a child. That is why states have made this a priority, because without access to education the world of a child is half naked, a world without questions, without answers, a world without critical thinking.

That is why in our legislation, there are non-discrimination laws that prohibit in any form discrimination against migrant children and parents or guardians, like Law n. 272/2004 on the protection and promotion of children's rights and the Government Ordinance n. 137/2000, which prohibits any form of discrimination.

When the parent, or the child suspects, is discriminated against in any form, they can address the National Council for Combating Discrimination, through a complaint.

Because children rights is a matter of priority in our legislation, migrants children benefit of the same school curriculum as for national children as well, migrant children benefit free of charge, during a school year, a preparatory course for enrollment in the national education system, during the course of learning the Romanian language, minors can be enrolled as audiences in the education system.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

In Romania, the process through which the diplomas acquired from foreign schools and universities are recognized, is handled by the National Centre for Recognition and Equivalence of Diplomas (CNRED), agency that is coordinated by the Ministry of Education.

CNRED recognizes automatically or by applying compensatory measures (tests for measuring the knowledge/ exams for differences or internships for adaptation) if there are substantial differences.²⁹⁸⁹

In order to gain recognition for the grades from 1 to 10, the student has to undergo the next steps:

- A formal request (a standard application);

²⁹⁸⁹ Ordin n. 4022/14.05.2008, [Ordinul privind aprobarea metodologiei de recunoaștere a diplomelor și certificatelor obținute la absolvirea studiilor universitare de nivel licență, master sau postuniversitare la instituții acreditate de învățământ superior din străinătate];

- A transcript of the grades issued by the educational establishment from wherein the child comes, with the necessary specifications about the classes the child took and its grades- copies and legal translations;
- Available identity document – copy²⁹⁹⁰.

The file containing the documents aforementioned will be submitted either to the county board of education or to the educational establishment in which the student studies or wishes to study.²⁹⁹¹ The staff of the county board of education that is qualified in this sense will evaluate the transcript of grades and to establish in which grade the child should be placed. No equivalence will be needed if the educational system from the country from wherein the child comes has correspondence in the Romanian educational system.

If the parent/s or the guardian/s wish, they can forward a written request for their child to be put in an inferior grade, if they consider necessary.²⁹⁹²

For equivalence of pre-university study periods graduated abroad (XI-XII), there are necessary the same documents as stated previously at the recognition of the 1 – 10 grades, with the exception that the file can be also submitted to the Ministry of National Education Registration Office.

For recognition of diplomas for holders of long-term/permanent residency permit in UE, EEA and Swiss Confederation, for admission to undergraduate programs, the next documents must be submitted to the university or Ministry of National Education Registration Office:

- Application form;
- Proof of having completed secondary school (high school diploma/certificate) : copy for documents in Romanian/ English/ French/ Spanish/ Italian or copy and an official translation in Romanian for documents in other languages;
- Proof of having completed all secondary school levels (transcript of high school years/certificate of each level), the copies being translated as written in the previous point;
- Identification paper - copy (passport or identity card);
- Proof of payment for evaluation fee - 50 RON – copy.

Moreover, it is necessary for the future student to bring, if his/her country is part of the Hague Apostille, a document from the competent authorities will be needed.

If the country of origin of the future student is not part of the Hague Apostille²⁹⁹³, the diplomas shall be authenticated or accompanied by an authentication certificate from the competent authorities in the issuing countries. Legalization/authentication is done by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs from the issuing country and the issuing country's Embassy/Consular Office in Romania; for countries where Romania does not have a diplomatic mission or countries which do not have diplomatic missions in Romania, the study documents shall be legalized by the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs from the issuing country.

Legalization/authentication exemption is allowed under the law of an international treaty to which Romania is party or on a reciprocity basis.

The authentication process shall not be longer than 30 days and a certificate shall be issued by the CNRED.

The equivalence of vocational or post-secondary diplomas awarded abroad will be recognized by submitting the application at the Ministry of National Education Registration Office:

- Application form;
- Post-secondary school diploma / professional/vocational diploma – copies or legalized translated copies if the documents are not issued in an international language;
- Study document for previous school cycle – copy;
- Proof of having completed all study levels (transcript of all years/certificate of each level including course description and skills acquired); study document showing the name of completed courses, length of study, course descriptions and skills acquired – copies or legalized translated copies if the documents are not issued in an international language;
- Identification papers - copy (passport or identity card).

The procedure concerning the existence or inexistence of a Hague Apostille is the same as the aforementioned one.

With the equivalence of diplomas form the pre-university diplomas, following the procedures explained previously, the refugees will be able to access the labour market in Romania.

University study recognition for refugees²⁹⁹⁴, in order to access the labour market must be recognised by the Ministry of National Education Registration Office. For this to happen, one must submit a file containing the following documents:

- Application form;
- Study document to be recognised– copies or legalized translated copies if the documents are not issued in an international language;
- Academic transcripts- in the case of regulated professions and in the situation of the recognition of specialization or when the field of study is not clearly mentioned in the diploma - copies or legalized translated copies if the documents are not issued in an international language;
- To practice regulated professions in Romania (if the study document is obtained in third country's): syllabus of courses/full description of courses, postgraduate diplomas-copy, if the document is issued in English/French/Spanish/Italian or copy and authorized translation into Romanian language if it is issued in other languages;
- Identification papers - copy (passport or identity card).

The procedure concerning the existence or inexistence of a Hague Apostille is the same as the aforementioned one.

If any of the previously listed authentication or recognition of diplomas or certificates is lost or partial or complete damage of the certificate, a duplicate can be issued upon submission of official request and the following documents: copy of the diploma which was recognized, copy of personal identity document, evaluation fee of 50 RON, a notary statement regarding the loss or damage of the certificate – original.

Any of the CNRED's decision on recognition can be appealed once within 45 working days from the day the applicant received the decision. CNRED issues an answer within 60 working days. The time span indicated above may be extended if considerable research is required and an information is given to the applicant via post or email.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

Firstly, the relevant Romanian legislation framework does not use the term migrant, instead making the distinction between citizen and non-citizen (aliens and stateless persons). An alien is a person who does not have either Romanian citizenship or the citizenship of a Member State of the European Union, European Economic Area or the citizenship of the Swiss Confederation²⁹⁹⁵. Thus, the category of migrants is limited to citizens of the so-called “third party” states in the European Union's' legislation.

From the category of migrants, the aliens (i.e. citizens of a third party state) do have the right of association, but not to the extent of the right of association as envisioned in the Constitution of Romania. Whereas the Constitution allows citizens (and, thus, to those assimilated to them) to freely associate into political parties, trade unions and other forms of associations²⁹⁹⁶, the right of association stipulated for aliens is much more restrictive. While the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194/2002 speaks about the equal treatment of aliens and stateless persons²⁹⁹⁷, this equal treatment is limited to certain rights, which may also be stipulated in a restricted form in comparison to the constitutional rights the citizens have. Thus, the right of association is only stipulated for aliens that have obtained a long-term residence permit²⁹⁹⁸, which can associate in trade unions or professional organizations²⁹⁹⁹. The right of association, limited to apolitical and non-lucrative associations, as well as trade unions³⁰⁰⁰ is also stipulated for the alien or stateless person who has been granted the refugee status or subsidiary protection.

However, the right of association is not granted to all aliens, but only to stateless persons who have obtained the refugee status or subsidiary protection, and is only limited to apolitical and non-lucrative associations, such as trade unions and professional organizations.

²⁹⁹⁵ Article 2 of the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194, 2002, [Articolul 2 din OUG nr. 194/2002];

²⁹⁹⁶ Article 40 of the Constitution of Romania, 2003, [Articolul 10 din Constituția României];

²⁹⁹⁷ Article 80 of the Government Emergency Ordinance n. 194, 2002 [Articolul 80 din OUG nr. 194/2002];

²⁹⁹⁸ Ibid., Article 2 Letter d); ²⁹⁹⁹ Ibid., Article 80, Para. 1, Letter h); ³⁰⁰⁰ Article 20, Letter k) of the Law n. 122, 2006, [Articolul 20 Lit. k) din Legea nr. 122/2006].

As for the electoral rights, they are only stipulated by Constitution and laws for citizens of Romania and Member States of the European Union, European Economic Area and the Swiss Confederation (which are not considered aliens, being assimilated to Romanian citizens). Aliens and stateless persons have neither the right to vote nor to be elected in any function or position. These rights can only be achieved by acquiring Romanian citizenship or the citizenship of a Member State of the European Union, European Economic Area or the Swiss Confederation.

Romanian citizenship is granted if the restrictive conditions stipulated by the Romanian Citizenship Law, the first of which is to either be born and reside, at the date of the application, on Romanian territory or, if not born in Romania, to have been residing for at least 8 years – or, if married and cohabitating with a Romanian citizen – at least 5 years since the date of marriage³⁰⁰¹.

However, these due dates may be reduced to as much as half if the applicant is either and internationally renowned personality, citizen of a Member State of the European Union, has been granted refugee status or has invested more than 1 million Euros in Romania³⁰⁰².

In case of being unlawfully impeded to participate in any decision-making process, the migrants who do possess the above mentioned rights are protected by either contraventional or criminal legislation.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

Article 5 of the Constitution states that “the Romanian citizenship is acquired, kept or lost according to the organic law”.

The citizen is the private individual that owns at least a citizenship. The citizenship is that quality of a private individual which expresses the permanent social-economic, political and legal relations between the private individual and the State, proving the individual's pertaining to a State and which grants the individual the possibility of being the holder of all the rights and duties regulated by the Constitution and the laws.³⁰⁰³

At the moment, the citizenship must not be confused with the term “nationality” which refers to one's ethnic origin.³⁰⁰⁴

The quality of foreigner marks a private individual who is not a citizen of a State or is stateless. In most cases, the Constitution and laws of a State determine whether an individual is a foreigner or not. In principle, they have less rights and can assume less duties than the citizens of the State in question.³⁰⁰⁵

³⁰⁰¹ Article 8 of the Law n. 21, 1991, [Articolul 8 din Legea nr. 21/1991];

³⁰⁰² Article 8, Para. 2, Law n. 21, 1991 [Articolul 8 Paragraful 2 din Legea nr. 21/1991];

³⁰⁰⁵ Gheorghe Iancu, Vlad Alexandru Iancu, Dreptul de Așil. Privire Comparativă cu Statutul Juridic al Refugiatului, Ed. Universul Juridic, București, 2015, 13.

In Romania, it results from the Constitution and Law n. 21/1991 that the acquisition of Romanian citizenship is not conditioned in any way by the loss of the citizenship of another State. Also, our legislation admits double or multiple citizenship.

According to Articles 1 and 2 of Law no. 21/1991(henceforth referred to as Law), the Romanian citizenship is the bond of an individual to the Romanian State and the means of attainment are those presented in this Law.

According to Article 4 of the Law, the Romanian citizenship can be acquired through birth, adoption and release through request. Obviously only the former two options are available for migrants.

Article 6 of the Law states that the Romanian citizenship is acquired through adoption by the child who's a foreign citizen or a stateless person, if the adopters are Romanian citizens. In case the adoptee is major, his consent is necessary. There is a fiction created according to which the child is presumed born in that family.

Also, the Romanian citizenship can be released through request to the foreign citizen or the stateless individual if that person meets the following criteria:

- The individual must be a major;
- The individual resides on Romanian territory for at least 8 years or if he's married to and lives with a Romanian citizen, for at least 5 years since the date of the matrimony. If a person left the territory for more than 6 months, that year isn't taken into consideration;
- Proves through behaviour, actions and attitude, loyalty to the Romanian State and doesn't attempt or support actions against the law order or the national security;
- Has the legal means for a decent life, according to the laws governing that matter;
- Is well known for his good behaviour and was not convicted in Romania or in any other country for a crime that makes him unworthy of being a Romanian citizen;
- Knows the Romanian language and has elementary notions of the Romanian culture, enough to integrate himself/herself in the country's social life;
- Knows the Constitution and the National Anthem.

If the criteria is met, a request is formulated, solved by the President of the National Authority for Citizenship.

If the request is admitted, the individual is invited to take the oath and from that moment on he/she becomes a Romanian citizen.

If the request is denied, the President's order is subject to appeal in a maximum of 15 days at the Bucharest Court of Law. The decision of Bucharest Court of Law can be challenged at the Bucharest Court of Appeal.

Article 10 of the Law states that the Romanian citizenship can also be granted to persons that lost it while allowing them to keep their foreign citizenship and giving them the option of maintaining their residence in a foreign country. They have to meet the same criteria as those mentioned above, with the exception of the first one and the last two.

But given the fact that a lot of countries do not allow double citizenship, the Romanian State cannot guarantee individuals the "safety" of their other citizenship.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

The European Union has an important role in Romania with regard to migration issues. The legislation of the European Union and its practices greatly influence the development of refugee protection mechanisms.

Through the Agreement between the European Union and Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein for the European Economic Area (EEA) Financial Mechanism 2009-2014 Romania has benefited from a financial assistance of 190 million Euros. 170.310 Euros of this amount have been invested in the cooperation in the field of illegal migration and protection of human rights. Among others, the expected outcome of this programme aims to improve and to promote the practices for admission of refugees. This project's promoter is the General Inspectorate of Border Police.

The project entitled "ICAR - Centre of Resources and Services for Migrants" (May 1st 2015 - April 30th 2016) has been funded of EEA Grants 2009-2014 under the NGO Fund in Romania. The project has been developed in partnership with the West RVTS Resources Centre in Bergen, Norway. The purpose of the project was to fulfil the need of social services for different categories of foreigner (mostly asylum seekers), offering a special attention to vulnerable people. Since 1992, ICAR (a non-governmental foundation) focused on providing free medical, psychological, social and legal assistance to those who, for political reasons, experienced the harsh repression of totalitarian regimes.

In 2002, ICAR Foundation has extended its target population to refugees and asylum seekers, survivors of human rights violations in their country of origin. For this purpose, collaboration protocols were signed with the United Nation High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), local authorities and institutions. They organize psychosocial counselling sessions, Romanian language classes, cultural orientation sessions and different social activities for asylum seekers and refugees living in the foundation's centres.

From 2012, ICAR has outreached offices in all the reception and accommodation centres of the Romanian Immigration Office throughout the country: Bucuresti, Galati, Radauti, Timisoara, Somcuta Mare, Giurgiu. The geographical expansion was possible due to the project "Specific social and psychological assistance for asylum seekers in Romania", ref. n. ERF/09.01/02.01, financed through the General Program "Solidarity and Management of Migration Flows" – European Refugee Fund.

According to the organizations' annual reports, ICAR Foundation's activity from 2007 to 2014 benefitted of financial support from EU as follows:

- In 2007, 173336 Euros from the European Commission (through the European Initiative for Democracy and Human Rights);
- In 2008, 180.281 Euros from the European Commission (through the European Initiative for Democracy and Human Rights), 6.028 Euros from International

- Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims and 6.000 Euros from The Royal Netherlands Embassy in Bucharest (through MATRA-KAP program);
- In 2009, 54,290 Euros from the European Union (EU);
 - In 2012, 122.377 Euros from the European Commission (EC);
 - In 2013, 122.377 Euros from the European Commission (EC);
 - In 2014, 53.000 Euros from the European Union (EU) and European Economic Area (EEA) Grants of 64.000 €.

On October 14 2015, the Romanian Government approved a law project that is transposing Directive 2013/33/ EU into national law. This directive aims to improve reception standards for asylum seekers. This would increase the asylum seeker's allowance to 1,117 RON for summer and to 1,185 RON for the winter period. It also regulates the possibility that, in case of exceeding the accommodation capacity in special refugee centres, asylum seekers may benefit, within the limits of the funds, from a sum of money in order to rent a living space for a period of maximum 12 months.

The Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund is the continuation of the three funds implemented in the 2007-2013 as a financial exercise, namely the European Return Fund, the European Fund for the Integration of Third-Country Nationals and the European Refugee Fund.

The National Program for the “Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund” was elaborated on the basis of Regulation (EU) no. 514/2014 of the European Parliament and of the Council of April 16 2014 laying down general provisions on the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund and the Financial Instrument for Police Cooperation, Crime Prevention and Combating and Crisis Management, in order to coordinate practical cooperation on asylum between Member States, support Member States facing particular pressure on their asylum systems and contribute to the implementation of the Common European Asylum System. The total amount allocated to this fund is of 21,915,877 Euros (EU funds).

Conclusions

This report has mainly focused on providing information about the legal and economical tools Romanian legislation provides in regard with the issue of immigration and asylum seekers.

As the statistics presented in the report show, Romania has registered between 2012 and 2016 a total number of 8690 asylum applications. The beginning of 2017 already counts 613 requests registered during the first three months of the year.

Even though the term of “asylee” has only been defined by doctrine means, the status of an asylum seeker has been regulated by Law no. 122/2006, which transposes the Directives 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2003/86/EC, 2004/83/EC and 2005/85/CE. As Article 3 of this law states, the authority responsible for implementing Romania’s policies in the area of asylum is the National Office for Refugees, under the command of the Ministry of Internal Affairs. The procedure for granting asylum is open to all foreign citizens or stateless persons that are on Romanian soil or at the border, without discrimination. With very few exceptions, the asylum seeker cannot be banished or extradited and the principle of family unity will be rigorously respected. Law no. 122/2006 provides both an ordinary procedure and an accelerated one. It also states the rights and the obligations of an asylum seeker, the cases in which asylum ceases or it can be annulled. Other special asylum procedures applicable are as follows: The Dublin Procedure, tolerance and the procedure for unaccompanied minors.

In terms of immigration, both from EU and non-EU states, Romanian legislation has been put up to date with the European legislation through EO no. 194/2002, republished in 2008 which thoroughly regulates all the aspects concerning the matter of immigration: obtaining a long term visa, obtaining a licence for permanent residence, the right to leave, expulsion, exclusion of migrant status. As we may observe from the content of the law, the previously mentioned procedures only apply to non-EU immigrants, as EU citizens do possess the same rights as Romanian citizens.

The public authority dealing with migrants is the General Inspectorate for Immigration that operates under the authority of the Ministry of Internal Affairs. It focuses mainly on implementing the EU policies in the fields of migration, asylum, aliens integration into the society, adopting relevant legislation and elaborating the national strategy on this matter.

Throughout the years, a major role in connection with immigrants and asylum seekers at a national level was played by the European Court of Human Rights. The Court has issued a number of decisions that were meant to revamp the legislation in order to further enhance it and steer the system in the right direction. Fortunately, Romania respected and implemented most of the recommendations. It has also implemented the recommendations of the European Commission by adopting: The Strategy And the Action Plan on Migration, The National Commission for the Management of an Integrated Border in 2007-2010, The National Strategy for Combating Trafficking of Persons, The Laws Regulating in Romania, The Laws for the Organization and Operation of the Ministry of the Interior and the Administrative Reform.

Another major role regarding the integration of immigrants was played by the European Union. Through the Agreement between EU, Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein for the European Economic Area (EEA), Romania has benefited from a financial assistance of 190 million Euros. 170.310 Euros of this amount have been invested in a project entitled "ICAR - Centre of Resources and Services for Migrants" that aims to respond to the uncovered need for basic and social services among vulnerable migrants (asylum seekers, refugees, non EU-nationals).

Another matter of priority in the Romanian migration system is children's rights, with emphasis on their unrestricted access to education, based on the principle of equity. As a consequence, minors who request or benefit from a form of protection in Romania, as well as foreign or stateless persons with a right of legal residence, are guaranteed equal rights of access to all levels and forms of pre-university and higher education, as well as to lifelong learning without any form of discrimination (Article 2 (4) and (6) of the National Education Law 1/2011). According to Article 11 of GO 137/2000, refusal of access to a system of state or private education to any person or group of persons at any form and level because of their belonging to a particular race, nationality, ethnicity, religion is sanctioned. In case an immigrant has acquired a diploma from a foreign school and wishes that it is recognised by the Romanian authorities, he/she must undergo a certain procedure which is handled by the National Centre for Recognition and Equivalence of Diplomas (CNRED), coordinated by the Ministry of Education. The authority recognizes the diploma automatically or by applying compensatory measures (tests for measuring the knowledge/ exams for differences or internships for adaptation) if there are substantial differences. Different procedures apply, depending on the State where the immigrant has completed his/her studies.

In terms of political aspects, migrants are subject to restrictions in certain fields. The right of association in trade unions or professional organizations is only stipulated for aliens that have obtained a long-term residence permit. For the persons who have been granted the refugee status or subsidiary protection, the right of association is being limited to apolitical and non-lucrative associations, as well as trade unions. As for the electoral rights, aliens and stateless persons have neither the right to vote nor to be elected in any function or position. However, they may achieve this right by acquiring Romanian citizenship or the citizenship of a member state of the European Union, European Economic Area or the Swiss Confederation. Romanian citizenship can be obtained either by adoption or by release through request, after undergoing the procedure that has been detailed in the previous pages. It is not conditioned in any way by the loss of the citizenship of another State and discrimination by any criteria is also prohibited.

To conclude, immigration is an issue that our society is confronting with nowadays, alongside many other States. The number of refugees and asylum seekers has increased dramatically in the previous years due to political and economical changes. Whether they choose to leave their country of origin due to worsening conditions, persecution or simply because they are on the lookout for a better life, Romania, as a democratic State and State Member of the EU has the obligation to integrate and support them through this process of transition. As stated throughout the report, our state does possess and applies all the legal tools in order to guarantee the rights of these individuals.

Introduction

In the present research we are going to study different aspects of migration law in accordance to the Russian Federation. First of all, we consider the regulations concerning the right to asylum and the procedure for granting it. According to this topic, we discuss the refugee status and temporary asylum in Russia. Then we define the difference in the legal regulation of immigration between the EU states citizens and the Non-EU states citizens.

Secondly, we give a description of the authorities dealing with migrants, and specifically of the legal framework that these authorities follow. The profound research on the framework concerning the migration law is given throughout all the work, as well as the statistics regarding migrants in Russia (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transit migrants).

Concerning the international law, we study the implementation of the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights at national level, as well as the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance. We also give a profound description of the migrants' rights (i.e. their political and economic rights).

The research mostly observes the national level in regard to migration law of the Russian Federation. At this level we study the migrants' right to access to healthcare and how it is regulated within the national legislation. We also observe the right of the migrants' children to education under Article 2 of the First Protocol to the ECHR, considering different level of education. We present a profound research on the procedure of acquisition of the Russian citizenship by migrants and the possibility of double nationality.

These are the main topics presented and observed in the research with references to the legal framework and statistics. In conclusion there are the results of our research concerning migration law in the Russian Federation.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Description of the National Regulations Governing Asylum

In the Russian Federation the right to asylum distinguishes three:

- the right to political asylum;
- the right to be regarded as a refugee, and
- the right to temporary asylum.

Migration is governed by federal legislation. The major principles of refugee status and temporary asylum policies are defined by the Constitution of the Russian Federation (the “Constitution”) [Конституция Российской Федерации] and legislative acts, which regulate the entry and registration of foreign nationals and stateless persons in the Russian Federation (“Russia”). They are as follows:

- Federal Law n. 109-FZ of July 18 2006 “On Entry into and Exit from the Russian Federation, Migration Registration of Foreign Nationals and Stateless Persons” (the “Federal Law on Migration Registration”) [О миграционном учете иностранных граждан и лиц без гражданства в Российской Федерации];
- Federal Law n. 4528-I of February 19 1993 “On Refugees” (the “Federal Law on Refugees”) [О беженцах];
- Federal Law n. 115-FZ of July 25 2002 "On Legal Status of Foreign Citizens and Citizenship" (the “Federal Law on Legal Status of Foreign Citizens”) [О правовом положении иностранных граждан в Российской Федерации].

Procedural issues are resolved by a set of government resolutions and regulations, including Resolution n.274 of April 9 2001 “On Granting Temporary Asylum in the Territory of the Russian Federation” of the Russian Government” (the “Government Resolution”) [О предоставлении временного убежища на территории Российской Федерации].

1.1.1. The Right to Political Asylum

The right to political asylum means that a person can enter the territory of Russia and remain there without deportation. Article 63 of the Constitution states that Russia shall grant political asylum to foreign nationals and stateless persons according to the universally recognized provisions of international law.

The issue of political asylum is regulated by Presidential Decree n.746 of July 21 1997 “On approval of the regulations on the procedure for granting political asylum by the Russian Federation” (the “Presidential Decree”) [Об утверждении Положения о порядке предоставления Российской Федерацией политического убежища]. The particularity of this right is that a person who considers himself/herself as a political refugee should have already been persecuted or been at risk of being persecuted in the state of his/her citizenship or in the usual residence for his/her social and/or political activity and/or convictions. Such social/political activities or convictions must not contradict the democratic principles recognized by international community and international law.³⁰⁰⁶ As a rule, the right to political asylum is also provided to family members of the person who got political asylum.

1.1.2 The Right to be Regarded as a Refugee

A refugee is a person who, owing to the well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons connected to his/her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion, is outside of the country of his/her nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself/herself of the protection of that country.³⁰⁰⁷

³⁰⁰⁶ Presidential Decree, art. 4.

³⁰⁰⁷ Federal Law on Refugees, art. 1.

1.1.3. The Right to Temporary Asylum

Temporary asylum can be granted to a person, whose application for a refugee status was denied. He or she still cannot be expelled from the territory of Russia for humanitarian reasons. Humanitarian reasons may constitute the following:

- being subjected to tortures;
- being subjected to arbitrary deprivation of life and freedom, and
- being subjected to access to emergency medical assistance in case of severe health problems.

Granting of political asylum in the territory of Russia is regulated by the Presidential Decree. Petitions accepted by foreign missions are examined by the Ministry of Internal Affairs of Russia which makes decisions on them.

During the application consideration period the applicant is given a certificate of consideration of the application for being recognized as a refugee. This certificate is the document proving the identity of the applicant and gives him/her the right to stay on the territory of Russia during the application consideration period, and the possibility to appeal against refusal to be recognized as a refugee.

1.2. What Is the Procedure for Granting Asylum and Who Is Responsible?

1.2.1. Refugee Status

The basic method for protecting foreign nationals and stateless persons within the territory of Russia is to recognize them as refugees. According to Russian legislation a refugee is a person who:

- is not a citizen of Russia;
- is to be found outside the country of his/her origin because of the well-founded fear of becoming a victim of persecution for his/her race, religion, citizenship, national or social identity or political conviction, and
- is unable or unwilling to avail himself/herself of the protection of his/her country due to such fear, or having lost his/her nationality and staying beyond the country of his/her former place of residence as a result of similar developments, cannot return to it and does not wish to do so because of such fear.³⁰⁰⁸

This definition is almost entirely the same as to that found in the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees.³⁰⁰⁹

The Federal Law on Refugees states that a person who has expressed the wish to be recognized as a refugee and who has attained the age of 18 can apply for a refugee status. It can be done either personally or through an authorized representative via a diplomatic mission or a consulate office of Russia in his/her place of residence or outside the state of his/her nationality.³⁰¹⁰

³⁰⁰⁸ Federal Law on Refugees, art. 1.

³⁰⁰⁹ Convention and Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, July 28 1951 (Convention) & January 31 1967 (Protocol).

³⁰¹⁰ Federal Law on Refugees, art. 4.1.

Foreign nationals or stateless persons can also apply for recognition as a refugee at a checkpoint on the state border of Russia. If they are forced to cross the Russian border illegally, potential refugees must apply for a respective status within 24-hour period after crossing the border at a checkpoint or beyond it. This can be done 1) at the federal executive body in charge of security dealing with the border service; 2) at the regional agency of the federal executive body for internal affairs or 3) at the regional agency of the federal executive body dealing with the migration service.³⁰¹¹

According to Russian legislation applications for the refugee status must be filed by all adult applicants and by unaccompanied minors.³⁰¹² The ensuing procedure for determining the refugee status comprises two stages: 1) the preliminary examination of an application for granting the refugee status³⁰¹³, and 2) consideration on the merits.³⁰¹⁴

1.2.1.1. First Stage of the Refugee Status Recognizing Procedure

During the first stage of the refugee status procedure the authorities define whether conditions that constitute the grounds for recognizing a person as a refugee are present or absent. The waiting period for applicants who are outside of Russia is one month starting from the date the application is received by the diplomatic mission or the consulate office.³⁰¹⁵ For those who apply for the refugee status at a border checkpoint or inside the Russian territory, this stage takes up to five business days to be completed.³⁰¹⁶

Following the results of the preliminary examination of the application the person is either given a certificate stating that his or her application has been received or a notice of refusal of the application. This certificate serves as the document that identifies the person who is seeking for a refugee status.³⁰¹⁷

After receiving the certificate, applicants must surrender their national (civil) passport and/or other identification documents. Submission of the refugee status application changes legal status of a petitioner and entitles him/her to certain rights, such as:

- the right to have an interpreter;
- the right to receive a lump-sum grant for every family member accompanying the applicant (the amount varies but must be no less than one hundred rubles (approximately US$1.41) per person);
- the right to receive a place to live in a temporary accommodation center, where a refugee and his/her family can receive food and medical aid, and
- the right to receive vocational training and job placement assistance.³⁰¹⁸.

³⁰¹⁷ ibid., art. 4.7.

³⁰¹⁸ ibid., art. 6.1.

Those who have received the certificate are required to undergo a mandatory medical examination. Refusal to undergo medical examination can become the ground for the denial of a petitioner's application.³⁰¹⁹

1.2.1.2. Second Stage of the Refugee Status Recognizing Procedure

During the second stage of the refugee status recognizing procedure the authorities carry out more detailed review of information presented in the application. The decision on granting a refugee status must be made based on:

- interviewing the applicant and verifying the truthfulness of the information provided by this person and his/her family members;
- reviewing information about the applicant in the possession of Russian authorities and evaluating the circumstances of the applicant's arrival into Russia, and
- reviewing the grounds for his/her staying within the country.

The law does not limit the number of interviews that may be requested from the applicant to clarify the facts he/she has provided.³⁰²⁰

Following the results of the examination of the application, the decision is taken either to grant the refugee status or to deny the refugee status application.³⁰²¹ If the refugee status is granted, the applicant is provided with a refugee certificate that replaces all his/her former documents, including foreign IDs, and serves as the only identification document recognized by Russian authorities. The refugee certificate is valid throughout the whole territory of Russia and gives a refugee the right to stay within the territory of the country. Information about the children of the refugees is contained in the certificate of one of the parents.

Persons recognized as refugees, including accompanying family members, are entitled to the following rights:

- Information about their rights and responsibilities through translation services if required, including assistance with document processing;
- Travel allowance and baggage shipment to the assigned place of their residence;
- Protection by the Ministry of Internal Affairs at the place of temporary accommodation to ensure their safety;
- Food and public utilities in the centers of temporary accommodation;
- Access to housing paid from the special fund for temporary accommodation;
- Medical assistance in the amount equal to that received by Russian citizens;
- Vocational training and job placement assistance;
- Employment or the opportunity to establish their own business;
- Social protection and social security;
- Participation in public activities.

1.2.2. Temporary Asylum

Apart from granting refugee status, Russia provides individuals with the possibility of obtaining temporary asylum, which, according to the Federal Law on Refugees, creates the possibility for a foreign national or a stateless person to stay temporarily in Russia.³⁰²²

Temporary asylum can be granted to a foreigner whose application for the refugee status was denied but who cannot be expelled from the territory of Russia for humanitarian reasons.³⁰²³ However, the law does not specify what motives or reasons can be regarded as humanitarian. Granting temporary asylum for humanitarian reasons falls within the discretion of the decision-making body.

To receive temporary asylum in Russia, a foreign national or a stateless person must file an application. Upon receiving the application, the applicant is given a certificate indicating that he/she has applied for temporary asylum in the country, which gives him/her the official right to stay in the territory of Russia. The term of consideration of the application is up to three months.³⁰²⁴

All applicants are subject to fingerprinting conducted simultaneously with the submission of their application³⁰²⁵ and to a compulsory medical examination. They are required to meet certain health standards to be eligible for asylum.³⁰²⁶

As for the grounds for revocation of the asylum status, a person loses temporary asylum:

- due to the elimination of the circumstances which warrant granting them temporary asylum;
- upon receiving the right to permanent residence in the territory of Russia or the acquisition of Russian citizenship or citizenship of another country;
- upon departure to a place of residence outside the territory of Russia.³⁰²⁷

The revocation's decision is not subject to appeal. Also, Russian legislation does not prohibit the submission of another application for getting temporary asylum if the previous petition has been denied.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

In Russia there is no special legal definition of the term migrant. According to art 1 of the Federal Law on Migration Registration it can be stipulated that migrants are 'foreign citizens and stateless persons carrying out displacements, related to their entry to Russia, transit through Russia, movement throughout Russia in selecting and change the place of residence within the territory of the Russia or their leaving the territory of Russia'.

³⁰²⁷ Federal Law on Refugees, art. 12.

There is a general immigration policy which establishes the rules for all people entering the country, regardless where do they come from – both from EU member states and non-EU states. The Federal Law on Migration Registration governs the procedure of entry into and exit from Russia for foreign citizens and stateless persons, the documents legalization, and issuance procedures.

According to the statutory provisions herein foreign citizens might not get the permission to enter the territory of Russia,³⁰²⁸ and there might different reasoning for such situations:³⁰²⁹

- if a person has violated the rules of crossing the state border of Russia, customs rules, sanitary regulations at a checkpoint on the state border – the entry will be denied until the irregularity is eliminated;³⁰³⁰
- if a person has provided deliberately false information on himself or herself or about the purpose of his/her stay in Russia;³⁰³¹
- if a person has been held accountable under the administrative law in compliance with the legislation of Russia for two or more times in the last three years;³⁰³²
- if a person takes part in the activity of foreign or international non-governmental organization, which was considered unacceptable in the territory of Russia³⁰³³.

The grounds for denial of permission to enter Russia for a foreign citizen or a stateless person are stipulated in article 27 of the Federal Law on Migration Registration. They are as follows: 1) when considering the purpose of ensuring the defensive capability or security of the state or public order or protecting the health of the general public;³⁰³⁴ 2) a foreign citizen or a stateless person has an unremoved or unexpunged conviction for a grave or especially grave crime committed in the territory of Russia or abroad, which is deemed a crime under federal law;³⁰³⁵ and other cases.

As for procedure for the legalization and issuance of documents for entry into Russia, article 24 of the Federal Law on Migration Registration states that foreign citizens may enter and exit from the Russia if they have a visa issued on the basis of valid identification documents that are recognized as such by Russia, unless otherwise stipulated by the Federal Law on Migration Registration, international treaties of Russia or Presidential decrees.

Chapter IV of the Federal Law on Migration Registration establishes the grounds for:

- the visa issuance to a foreign citizen;³⁰³⁶
- the type of visa depending on the aims³⁰³⁷ and numbers³⁰³⁸ of the entry;
- subjects authorized to prolong validity of visa.³⁰³⁹

³⁰³⁷ ibid, art. 25.1.

Having obtained the required documents, upon entering Russia a foreign citizen or a stateless person must receive and fill in a migration card – this document contains information about a foreign national who enters Russia and also serves as an instrument of control over his temporary stay in Russia. The text of a migration card has got the English language translation.³⁰⁴⁰

According to the “Rules for the Use of Migration Cards” [Правила использования миграционной карты], migration card slips shall be issued to foreign nationals upon their entrance to Russia free of charge by the officials of the immigration (border) control organs or by representatives of the transport service organizations which organise the entrance of foreign nationals into Russia.³⁰⁴¹

The migration card must be submitted at the checkpoint on the state border of Russia upon exiting of the abovementioned foreign citizen or stateless person out of the territory of Russia. The format of migration cards, the procedure and financing measures for supplying migration card are established by Government Resolution n. 413 of August 16 2004.

After entering Russia, a foreign citizen or a stateless person must register with the Migration Register, which records and consolidates all data on foreign citizens and stateless people (together with their travelling within the territory of Russia).³⁰⁴² The general procedure for such registration is notification.³⁰⁴³ It means that a foreign citizen is obliged to notify the migration registration body about his/her arrival (with some exceptions).

To maintain a migration status, migrants must get a special permit for a temporary residence or a residence permit at the place of residence or at the place of their staying on the territory of Russia.³⁰⁴⁴

According to part 2 of article 31 of the Federal Law on Migration Registration, if a permit for a temporary residence or a residence permit issued to a foreign citizen is cancelled, this foreign citizen is obliged to leave Russia within 15 days. Thus, the obligation to leave Russia is the same as exclusion of a migration status.

The legislation of Russia does not have a single list of grounds for exclusion of migration status. There are grounds for the cancellation of a permit for a temporary residence and the cancellation of a residence permit, which largely copy each other. For example, if a migrant comes out for a forcible change of the foundations of the constitutional system of Russia, or creates by other actions a threat to the security of Russia or to the citizens Russia).

Migrants as well as citizens of Russia have the right to leave the territory of Russia. According to article 24 of Federal Law n. 114-FZ, foreign citizens may leave Russia if they have a Russian visa, or the other valid documents, which are recognized as such by Russia, unless international treaties of Russia provide for otherwise (for example, document identifying and residence permit).

³⁰⁴³ ibid, part 2 art. 4.

It is worth noting that the exit from Russia for foreign citizens or stateless persons may be restricted. It occurs, e.g. in the situations when foreign citizens or stateless persons have not fulfilled their obligations to pay taxes provided for by the Russian legislation.

Apart from the general immigration procedure applicable to EU-members and non-EU-members, there are some regulations which govern the entry of citizens of certain states or other special categories.

A period of temporary stay in Russia for a foreign citizen, who has arrived with compliance to visa-free regime, cannot exceed 90 days during each 180 day period³⁰⁴⁵.

Also there is Decree of the President of Russia n. 637 “About assistance measures for voluntary resettlement to Russia of compatriots living abroad” of June 22 2006 which approves the State Program for the Promotion of Voluntary Resettlement to Russia of Compatriots Living Abroad. According to Article 1 of the Federal Law n. 99-FZ “On State policy of Russia respecting compatriots abroad” of 24 May 1999 compatriots are people who were born in the same state, who are living or were living in it and possessing common language, history, cultural heritage, traditions and customs, and also who are descendants of such people in a straight descending line. This policy is aimed to consolidate compatriots living abroad with needs to develop Russian regions.

To sum up, there is general regulation of immigration in Russia, concerning all people who enter the territory of Russia. Other specific procedures for individual categories of people (based on nationality or activity intended to be performed in the territory of Russia) could be established by bilateral treaties. Furthermore, Russia allows compatriots to resettle back into the territory of Russia by a simplified procedure.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

In Russia legislation there are no concepts like immigrant or migrant worker, but such terms as “Russian citizen”, “foreign citizen” and “foreign citizen working on temporary labour hiring”. On definition accepted in Russian statistics as legal immigrants (or long-term foreign migrants) in Russia can be considered foreign citizens who received residence permit, permission for temporary residing for a term of more than 9 months, as well as moving to Russia to permanent stay (that is, receiving Russia citizenship).³⁰⁴⁹

In the legislation the following status of foreign citizens in Russia territory is accepted:

- temporary foreign citizen staying in Russia is arrived to Russia on the grounds of visa either in order not requiring visas and receiving migration card but not seeking for living or permission for temporary residing (the term of stay in Russia is limited by 90 days during 180 days);
- temporary foreign citizen living in Russia is receiving permission for temporary residing (for example, at employment);

³⁰⁴⁹ The Operational Monitoring of The Economic Situation in Russia [2016] Gaidar Institute for Economic Policy 23 [Russian]

– foreign citizen constantly living in Russia - receiving residence permit.

In 2000s the level of external migration flows increased substantially, while the level of internal migrations of the population in Russia had lowered. At the same time the number of foreign citizens totally residing in Russia at the beginning of 2015 accounted for 10.9 million persons, most of them were inhabitants of CIS and the Ukraine of working age, with visa-free mode of entry to Russia.³⁰⁵⁰

After the beginning of economic growth in the country in 2000s, the main part of migration flow was presented by foreign migrant workers. Most of the foreigners temporarily residing in Russia are citizens from the least developed CIS countries, predominantly from the Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Tadjikistan, Kirghizia, Moldova. Employers use their desperate situation, using their labour with by violating the legislation (not issuing them any permission for work, not paying taxes).

Migrant workers from the republics of Central Asia often do not speak any Russian, do not have a profession.

Until 2002 in Russia there was no appropriate legislation on minimum standards of migration. Among states not entering CIS, the largest number of migrants to Russia come from China, as well as Vietnam, Afghanistan, Turkey.

In the first quarter of 2010 the number of migrants from CIS states-members started reducing. For citizens of EAEU countries-members (Kazakhstan, Belarus, Armenia, Kirghizia) it is not required to get the work permits for work in Russia, they have the same labour rights as Russian citizens do. Increase of migration was observed in exchange with Republic Moldova, the Ukraine, Azerbaijan, Tadjikistan.³⁰⁵¹

For 9 months of 2013 3,3 million of foreign labour migrants arrived to Moscow and Moscow area, and 2,5 million of labour migrants - to St. Petersburg and Leningrad Oblast.³⁰⁵²

Illegal migration is astonishing according to the statistics. In 2000 21,2 million of foreign citizens drove to Russia and 17,9 million of persons left. In 2004 - 21,2 and 20,8 million persons, in 2005 - 20,9 and 19,8 million persons, in 2006 - 21,2 and 19,9 million persons, respectively. Many foreigners who drove to Russia, remain subsequently in Russian territory with infringement of migration legislation and go to the category of illegal migrants.³⁰⁵³

According to the UN report published in 2002, Russia was on the second place (after the USA) with the number of legal and illegal migrants living in the country territory. According to appreciation of UN experts there are more than 13 million of such persons in Russia - 9 % of the population.

According to data of the Russian Federal Migration Service in November 2014 there were illegally in Russia territory about 3 million foreign citizens who considerably exceeded the term of legal stay on the territory of Russia (90 days).

In the first quarter of 2010, pursuant to the Russian Federal Migration Service units, the status of forced settler or refugee was received by 853 persons (in the first quarter 2009 - 2516 persons).

According to the data of the Russian Federal Migration Service, on April 1 2010 in the country 56,7 thousand forced settlers and refugees were totaled. More than 35 % of them (19,8 thousand) accounted for the former Kazakhstan inhabitants, 19 % (10,6 thousand) - Georgia, 12 % (7,0 thousand) - Uzbekistan, 5 % (3,0 thousand) - Tajikistan. More than 12 thousand persons (21 %) moved inside Russia from regions with unstable political atmosphere.

The process of settlement of forced migrants goes on in all subjects of Russia. The largest number of forced settlers and refugees went to Republic Northern Ossetia - Alanya, 6,5 thousand (10,7 thousand persons) - to Republic Ingushetia, 2,8 thousand - to Belgorod area, from 2,0 thousand to 1,6 thousand - to Samara and Orenburg area, Krasnodar and Stavropol Territory, from 1,3 to 1,1 thousand - to Nizhniy Novgorod area, Altay territory, Kemerovo, Novosibirsk and Volgograd area. Thus, we can conclude that the main flow of migrants falls on large cities and megacities.

Starting from July 1 2014 the Federal migration service of Russia granted status of refugees to 325 thousand of forced settlers from the Ukraine.

With the increase of rates of migration crisis Russia became the key transit of illegal migrants and refugees on their way from Middle East and Northern Africa to European countries. For the last few months, according to Finnish authorities about a thousand of Middle East settlers went through Russia to Finland. In Norway they numbered 700 illegal migrants who arrived through Russian territory.³⁰⁵⁴

According to data of UN, by the beginning of 2016 more than 5 million Syrian citizens were forced to leave their country on the look-out for safety. In the territory of Russia as of April 5 2016, according to data of The Federal migration service of Russia there were 7096 Syrian citizens.

For past year this number decreased (on April 5 2015 there were 8205 persons). To this number embassy officers with families, and those who arrived before conflict, constantly live and work in Russia, and do not seek for refuge.

During the year of 2015 5,000 refugees, primarily Syrian citizens, left Russia through the border point in Murmanskaya area and moved to Norway. This process continued until November 2015, when Norway tightened its border crossing policy, Norwegian authorities sent back to Russia those Syrian citizens, who had legal status.

However, a large number of Syrian citizens stayed in Norway. There is also statistics on 500 refugees who departed to Finland the similar way. This looks like a reason for reduction of the number of Syrian citizens in Russian territory, though small flow of Syrian citizens to Russia still proceeds.³⁰⁵⁵

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

The actions of the European Court on Human Rights (the “ECHR”) in respect of Russia are determined by the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms³⁰⁵⁶ (the “Convention”), the Constitution and other federal legislation.

Now that Russia has ratified the Convention of 1950, it has entered into respective commitments including the enforcement of judgements of the ECHR. According to the article 1 of Federal Law n.54 of March 03 1998 “On the Ratification of the Convention on Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and its Protocols” [О ратификации Конвенции о защите прав человека и основных свобод и протоколов к ней] the ECHR resolutions are compulsory for Russia if they are given on cases in connection with alleged violations of its commitments on the Convention of the 1950 by Russia.

According to para 11 of Resolution of the Plenum of the Supreme Court n.5-P of October 10 2003 the final resolutions of the ECHR are binding for all public authorities of Russia including the courts.

Russia promotes mandatory resolutions of the ECHR for the Russian national law and law enforcement. Binding power of the ECHR decisions for the national legal system is closely connected with an issue of Russian state sovereignty. That is why positions of the ECHR are not always identical to the opinion of the Constitutional Court of Russia. Furthermore, para 2.2 of the Decision of the Constitutional Court of Russia n.21-P of July 14 2015 enshrined the priority of the Constitution of Russia over the ECHR decisions because of state sovereignty.

The Constitutional Court of Russia is the public authority which (upon requests of the federal executive authority) addresses the issue of the enforcement of the resolutions given by international bodies defending human rights and freedoms.³⁰⁵⁷ That is why the opinion of the Constitutional Court of Russia is the key to the issue of enforcement of ECHR resolutions and changing the Russian legislation. That is the reason for the following reviewing and comparison of the opinions of the ECHR and positions of the Russian law (including the decisions of the Constitutional Court of Russia) on main issues related to migrants.

5.1. The Problem of Correlation of the Right of Each Person to Respect for Private and Family Life and Compulsory Measures of the State in Migration Policy

The position of the ECHR is as follows. Article 8 of the Convention recognizes the right of everyone to respect for his private and family life (para 1) and does not allow public authorities to interfere with the exercise of this right, except as provided in para 2.

According to the ECHR position the above normative provisions do not interfere the state control of the foreigner’s entry and their stay in the territory of the state in accordance with the norms of international law and its treaty obligations. In matters of immigration art 8 or any other

³⁰⁵⁶ Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on November 4 1950

³⁰⁵⁷ Federal Constitutional Law n.1-FKZ of July 21 1994, para 3.2 art 3

provision of the of the Convention cannot be regarded as implying a duty on the state to respect the choice of the country of cohabitation that couples do and to allow the reunification of family members in its territory.³⁰⁵⁸

The ECHR came to the conclusion that the Convention does not guarantee foreigners the right to enter a certain country or to reside in its territory and not be expelled and that the state's responsibility for ensuring public order obliges it to control the entry to the country; at the same time such decisions should be justified by an urgent social need and correspond to a legitimate aim as they may violate the right to respect for private and family life protected in a democratic society by art 8 of the Convention.³⁰⁵⁹

Concerning the admissibility of expulsion in a democratic society the ECHR noted that the importance given to certain criteria would be different depending on the circumstances of the particular case and that the state has certain limits of discretion, since it is connected with the need to establish fair balance between competing interests of an individual and society as a whole. According to the ECHR position administrative expulsion from the country can be regarded as an interference with a person's right to respect for his family life but which does not entail a violation of this article as long as it is justified within the meaning of its para 2.³⁰⁶⁰

It is worth noting that the Constitutional Court expressed its position only on family life in contrast to the ECHR which expressed its position regarding both private and family life. According to the position of the Constitutional Court family and family life are values that are protected by the Constitution of Russia and international treaties of Russia, but they do not have absolute advantages in all cases over other constitutionally significant values and the existence of families does not provide foreign citizens with undisputed immunity from legal and effective coercive measures in the field of migration policy which are commensurate with the dangers of migration offenses (especially mass ones) and practices of avoiding liability.

Within the permissible limits stipulated by the constitutional and international legal norms, by the boundaries of the legislative as well as the law enforcement and, above all, judicial discretion, Russia has the right to decide whether a certain type of migration offenses creates an urgent social need in the current situation for the compulsory expulsion of aliens who committed these offenses and whether its application is acceptable to persons with family responsibilities.

To sum up when solving the problem of the correlation of the right of every person to respect for private and family life and compulsory measures of the state in the part of migration policy the Constitutional Court of Russia often uses the practice of the ECHR as arguments for its decision³⁰⁶¹ which means the coincidence of the positions of the European Court of Human Rights and the Constitutional Court of Russia in part of the state's right to enforce coercive measures against persons with family responsibilities, for example, expulsion from Russia. The similarity of positions is based on the fact that the Constitutional Court gives a similar interpretation to the provisions of the Convention as well as the ECHR on the family life and the legislation of Russia meets international standards, therefore changes are not required.

5.2. The Problem of Period of Detention in Specialized Institutions for Persons Who are Subject to Compulsory Expulsion Outside Russia

From January 2014 to June 2015 the ECHR has issued 7 resolutions which were connected with the problem of period of detention in specialized institutions for persons who are subject to compulsory expulsion outside Russia stated in the judgment of the European Court of April 18 2013 in the case of Azimov v. Russia, application n.67474 / 11, including judgments: see Ismailov v. Russia, judgment of April 17 2014, application n.20110/13; see Akram Karimov v. Russia, judgment of May 28 2014, application n.62892/12; see Egamberdiyev v. Russia, judgment of June 26 2014, application n.34742/13; see Rakhimov v. Russia, judgment of July 10 2014, application n.50552/13; see Kim v. Russia, judgment of July 17 2014, application n.44260/13; see Eshonkulov v. Russia, judgment of January 15 2015, application n.68900/13; see Khalikov v. Russia, judgment of February 26 2015, application n.66373/13.

The ECHR found violations by Russian authorities of Article 5, subpara 1 and 4 of the Convention in connection with the unlawful deprivation of freedom of applicants in the course of administrative expulsion procedures expressed in the absence in the court's order of information about certain detention time in the center of temporary detention for foreign citizens and in fact the excessively long detention of the applicants. At the same time attention is paid to the lack of norms in the Russian legislation that stipulate the time of limitation of freedom for administrative expulsion and deportation as well as lack of the norms regulating the procedure for appeal the legality of application of this measure.

At the same time the arguments of the Russian authorities that the detention time in specialized institutions for administrative expulsion is limited by the deadline established by Russian legislation for the enforcement of resolution to an administrative infraction were dismissed. It is noted that the specified detention time in specialized institutions in any case cannot be recognized as proportional, because in fact it can exceed the maximum term for serving one's punishment in the form of administrative arrest and make up to two years. In this regard attention is drawn to the fact that the restrictive measure aimed at the execution of administrative punishment should not be punitive and be more severe than the maximum administrative penalty that provides for the limitation of freedom (administrative arrest).

Thus, the ECHR has established a stable legal position according to which the detention in specialized institutions for administrative expulsion equals to imprisonment within the meaning of Article 5 of the Convention and must comply with the requirements set forth in it. Such requirements include the reasonableness and proportionality of the relevant restrictive measure, the mandatory setting by the court of a clear reasoned period for its application, taking into account the real possibility of administrative expulsion or deportation and the possibility for appeal the legality of the relevant judgment.

In connection with the judgments above the ECHR in the Report with results of monitoring of law enforcement in Russia for 2015 in particular in Appendix n.5 “The List of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in connection with which it is necessary to amend the legislation of Russia” (as of August 20 2016) states that: “At present it seems necessary to prepare by the Ministry of Internal Affairs of Russia (taking into account the transfer of functions of the FMS of Russia) changes in the current legislation taking into account the conclusions of the European Court of Human Rights and the proposals of the competent bodies of state power with regard to establishment of: maximum detention time in specialized institutions for administrative expulsion and deportation; the grounds and procedure for establishing, extending and suspending the detention time in relevant institution; the procedure for appeal a decision to place a person in a specialized institution for the purpose of administrative expulsion and a decision to extend the detention time in specialized institutions for administrative expulsion...”

As for the position of the Constitutional Court of Russia in the Judgment of May 23 2017 n.14-P “On Verification of the Constitutionality of the Provisions of Articles 31.7 and 31.9 of the Code of Administrative Offenses of Russia in connection with the complaint of the person without citizenship N.G. Moshiladze” refers to the position of the ECHR regarding the interpretation of Article 5 of the Convention according which “...the place and conditions of detention must be acceptable and its duration should not exceed the time which is necessary to achieve the goal pursued (see Azimov v. Russia, judgment of April 18 2013; Ismailov v. Russia, judgment of April 17 2014, etc.)”.

At the same time the Constitutional Court notes in the judgment that in Russia at the moment persons who are subject to compulsory expulsion outside Russia may be detained in specialized institutions prior to their actual transfer across the State border of Russia, while the detention of such persons in a special institution may continue before the expiration of the statute of limitations for the execution of the administrative expulsion outside Russia, which is two years.

In addition the uncertainty about the duration of the detention is exacerbated by the absence of rules providing for judicial review. Here the Constitutional Court also appeals to the position of the European Court of Human Rights which notes that for the persons liable to be expelled during their detention in a special institution it is important to guarantee their right of judicial review for the legality of the application of this restrictive measure to them. In addition the Constitutional Court points out that «in the opinion of the ECHR...the court's appointment of this measure restricting the freedom of the person being expelled without specifying a specific time for its application in conjunction together with the impossibility of review the question of the legitimate of detention in a special institution entails the restriction of the right to freedom and personal inviolability; this, in turn, gives the detention in a special institution the punitive character (see Kim v. Russia, judgment of July 17 2014; Eshonkulov v. Russia, judgment of January 15 2015; Khalikov v. Russia, judgment of February 26 2015; etc.). In the operative part of the judgment the Constitutional Court recognizes the need to amend Russian legislation on this issue.

Therefore, it can be stated that the Constitutional Court of Russia considering the problem of the detention time in a specialized institution of persons who are subject to compulsory expulsion outside Russia refers to the judgments of the ECHR concerning this issue, appeals to the position of the ECHR and gives the similar argument when considering this issue. In addition, the Russian legislation also establishes a list of judgments of the ECHR according to which it is necessary to amend Russian legislation and provide for a set of measures which are necessary for realization of the ECHR judgments at the national level.

5.3. The Issue of Migrants' Political Rights

There is an issue with political rights of migrants. Russian legislation contain two categories of migrants at that case: migrants, who do not have Russian citizenship and migrants, who have Russian citizenship together with foreign state citizenship as well as the residential permit or other document certifying the right of the citizen of Russia to permanently reside in the territory of the foreign state. Every category has some restrictions in political rights comparing with Russian citizens.

The Constitution of Russia guarantees for the first group the right to association, including the right to create trade unions for the protection of his or her interests³⁰⁶², the freedom of ideas and speech³⁰⁶³.

According to art 32 of the Constitution the second group must obtain not only the rights of the first group, but also the right to participate in managing state affairs both directly and through their representatives³⁰⁶⁴. This includes the right to elect, be elected to bodies of state power and to local self-government bodies, to participate in referenda.

However, the Federal Law n.67-FZ of July 12 2002 “On basic guarantees of electoral rights and the right of citizens of Russia to participate in the referendum” establishes restrictions higher than in the Constitution. The Law deprives the citizens of Russia with the foreign state citizenship as well as the residential permit or other document certifying the right of the citizen of Russia to permanently reside in the territory of the foreign state of the right to be elected to bodies of state power and local self-government bodies.³⁰⁶⁵

³⁰⁶² The Constitution of the Russian Federation, pt 1 art 30

³⁰⁶³ ibid, pt 1 art 29

³⁰⁶⁴ ibid, pt 1 art 32

Nowadays Russia is the only state of Council of Europe that has this kind of restrictive regulation on political rights of its citizens. This issue became the subject of consideration after the Russian politician Vladimir Kara Murza attempted to challenge the constitutionality of Art 31 of this federal law. He wanted to take part in the election to Moscow Oblast's Duma in 2006, but was dismissed from election's candidates list because he had not only Russian citizenship, but also citizenship of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. After that he tried to defend his right to be elected, but the Russian Constitutional Court declined his complaint. The Russian Constitutional Court backed up its position with the argument that people with foreign state citizenship have the political and legal bond with a different state, which can be the obstacle in the realisation of the principle of independence³⁰⁶⁶. Today the ECHR is considering the Kara Murza's complaint.

5.4. The Conclusion

In general the opinion of Russia about the most important issues of migrants is the same with positions of the ECHR. If there are contradictions or detection of violations of human rights, Russia pays attention for it and implements the decisions of the ECHR to its legislation.

But it is appropriate to focus on the fact that the Constitution Russia is considered to be more important than the decisions of the ECHR because of state sovereignty. It means that enforcement of ECHR judgements will always depend on accordance to the principles and foundations of the Constitution of Russia.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (the “ECRI”) has regularly submitted recommendations to Russia. The Commission conducted monitoring and published a report on the situation in Russia.³⁰⁶⁷

In its third report, ECRI strongly encouraged Russia authorities to take all necessary steps to facilitate the legalisation regulating the situation of non-nationals working illegally in the country and to take all necessary measures to protect foreign workers in an irregular situation from any forms of exploitation by employers and members of the police. ECRI strongly recommends that the authorities review the quota system with a view, in particular, to increasing quotas and reducing the costs for employers of obtaining work permits for foreign workers. They should also explore new mechanisms for the legalisation of irregular migrants in all categories and in all sectors of work. Finally, they should take more resolute action against breaches of labour regulations on the part of employers, along with measures to address corruption in this field.

In 2013 ECRI recommended that Russia would sign and ratify the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families. At the moment these recommendations have not yet been implemented by Russia.

ECRI was informed that a very small number of complaints from migrants had been received among the registered by the Federal Commissioner for Human Rights indicating that there was no information on or trust in this institution.

ECRI notes that it is very expensive for the employers to obtain a work permit for foreign workers which holds back some employers. Thus, it turns out that the violation of labor regulation and the basic rights of migrants occurs on a large scale. Unlawful migrants, naturally, do not want to report abuses because of fear of deportation from Russia. The ECRI is deeply concerned by reports describing the mass distribution of the lower class of migrant workers who have become one of the most vulnerable groups in Russia today.

ECRI calls on the authorities to consider the possibility of creating a special commissioner or department in the existing structure of the Human Rights Ombudsman, to specifically address the problems faced by labor migrants. At the moment there is no such special post.

ECRI strongly recommended that the authorities organise an awareness raising campaign for the public on the importance for the country of Russia's migrant work force, to promote a positive image of migrants and to stress the necessity of respecting their rights and treating them with dignity.

ECRI calls on the authorities of Russia to implement to adapt the state migration policy which includes integration measures such as language training, advice and assistance in obtaining social benefits and security, training and other measures to promote labor market integration, as well as appropriate training for officials dealing with immigrants matters. And although Russia is taking some steps in this area, there has been no significant progress.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

Within the Russian legislation there are a few laws governing the migrant's right to access to healthcare. The right to medical care for foreign citizens residing and staying in the territory of Russia is established by the legislation of Russia and the relevant international treaties of Russia:

- Federal Law n. 323 of November 21 2011 “On the Fundamentals of Healthcare for Citizens in Russia”;

- Federal Law n.115 of July 25 2002 “On Legal Status of Foreign Citizens in Russia”;
- Federal Law n.326 of November 29 2010 “On Compulsory Medical Insurance in Russia”.

The procedure for providing medical assistance to foreign citizens is determined by the Government of Russia, particularly, by the Resolution of the Government of Russia n.186 of March 06 2013 “On Approval of the Rules for the Provision of Medical Assistance to Foreign Citizens in the Territory of Russia”. Persons without citizenship permanently residing in Russia enjoy the right to medical assistance on an equal basis with citizens of Russia, unless otherwise stipulated by international treaties of Russia³⁰⁶⁸.

In Russia the types of medical assistance include:

- Primary health care;
- Specialized, including high-tech, medical assistance;
- Ambulance, including an ambulance specialized medical assistance;
- Palliative medical assistance; and
- The following forms of medical assistance are recognized: emergency, urgent and planned³⁰⁶⁹.

Medical assistance to foreign citizens temporarily residing or permanently residing in Russia is rendered by medical and other organizations, regardless of their organizational and legal form, as well as by individual entrepreneurs engaged in medical activities.

In accordance with Resolution of the Government of Russia n.186 of March 06 2013 “On Approval of the Rules for the Provision of Medical Assistance to Foreign Citizens in the Territory of Russia” medical assistance in emergency form with sudden acute illnesses, conditions, exacerbation of chronic diseases, which pose a threat to the life of the patient, is rendered free of charge to foreign citizens by medical organizations. Medical assistance in urgent form (with exception of ambulance, including an ambulance specialized, medical assistance, which is provided to foreign citizens for diseases, accidents, injuries, poisonings and other conditions requiring urgent medical intervention. Medical organizations of the state and municipal health systems provide this kind of medical assistance to foreign citizens free of charge.) and the planned form is provided to foreign citizens in accordance with contracts for the provision of paid medical services or contracts (policy) of voluntary medical insurance and (or) contracts in the field of compulsory medical insurance. Foreign citizens who are insured persons in accordance with the Federal Law "On Compulsory Medical Insurance in Russia" have the right to free medical assistance in the framework of compulsory medical insurance.

The insured persons are citizens of Russia, permanently or temporarily residing in Russia foreign citizens, stateless persons (with the exception of highly qualified specialists and members of their families, as well as foreign citizens who work in Russia in accordance with Article 13.5 of the ³⁰⁶⁸ Federal Law n.323 of November 21 2011 “On the Fundamentals of Health Care of Citizens in the Russian Federation”, art 19.

Federal Law n.115 of July 25 2002 “On Legal Status of Foreign Citizens in Russia”) as well as persons entitled to medical assistance in accordance with the Federal Law on Refugees³⁰⁷⁰:

- working under an employment contract, including heads of organizations who are the sole participants (founders), members of organizations, owners of their property, or civil-law contract, the subject of which is the performance of work, the provision of services, under an author's contract, and authors receiving payments and other remuneration under agreements on alienation of the exclusive right to works of science, literature, art, publishing license agreements, licensing agreements on granting the right to use the work of science, literature, art;
- independently providing themselves with work (individual entrepreneurs engaged in private practice, notaries, lawyers, arbitration managers);
- who are members of peasant (farmer) farms;
- who are members of the family (clan) communities of the indigenous small-numbered peoples of the North, Siberia and the Far East of Russia living in the regions of the North, Siberia and the Far East of Russia engaged in traditional economic activities;
- unemployed citizens:
 - children from the day of birth until they reach the age of 18;
 - non-working pensioners, regardless of the reason for the appointment of a pension;
 - citizens who are enrolled in full-time education in professional educational organizations and educational organizations of higher education;
 - unemployed citizens registered in accordance with the legislation on employment;
 - one of the parents or guardian involved in the care of the child before reaching the age of three;
 - able-bodied citizens engaged in the care of disabled children, disabled invalids of the I group, persons who have reached the age of 80;
 - other citizens who do not work under an employment contract and are not indicated in subparagraphs "a" - "e" of this paragraph, with the exception of servicemen and persons equated to them in the organization of medical assistance.

A highly qualified specialist and members of his or her family who are foreign citizens and who have arrived in Russia must have a policy of medical insurance in force in the territory of Russia or must have the right on the basis of a relevant agreement concluded by the employer or the customer with the medical organization for the receipt primary health assistance and specialized medical assistance. The provision of these guarantees for the receipt by the highly qualified specialist and members of his or her family of the medical assistance during the validity period of the employment contract signed with this highly qualified specialist or a civil law contract for the performance of work (rendering services) is an obligatory condition of the employment contract or an essential condition of the specified civil contract for the performance of works (rendering of services)³⁰⁷¹.

Foreign citizens, who are sent by a foreign commercial organization registered in the territory of a Member State of the World Trade Organization for the purpose of carrying out work in the territory of Russia and who have arrived in Russia must have a policy of medical insurance in force in the territory of Russia or must have the right on the basis of a relevant agreement signed by the employer with the medical organization for the receipt of a primary health assistance and specialized medical assistance³⁰⁷².

In general, when carrying out work, a foreign employee must have a contract (policy) of voluntary medical insurance in force in the territory of Russia or be entitled to receive medical assistance on the basis of an agreement signed with the employer or a customer with a medical organization for the provision of a paid medical service to a foreign employee. A contract (policy) of voluntary medical insurance or an agreement signed by the employer or a customer with a medical organization for the provision of a paid medical service to a foreign employee must ensure that the foreign employer receives primary health assistance and specialized medical assistance in an emergency form³⁰⁷³.

Moreover, medical assistance in the planned form is provided on condition that the foreign citizen provides written guarantees for the performance of the obligation to pay the actual cost of medical services or the prepayment of medical services on the basis of the anticipated volume of provision of these services as well as the necessary medical documentation (an extract from the medical history, clinical, radiological, laboratory and other data) when it is available³⁰⁷⁴. After completion of the treatment of a foreign citizen at his or her address or at the address of a legal entity or natural person, representing the interests of the foreign citizen, an extract from the medical documentation with an indication of the period of medical assistance in the medical organization, as well as the measures taken to prevent, diagnose, treatment and medical rehabilitation are sent³⁰⁷⁵.

The situation with migrants' right to access to healthcare in Russia is not very easy. Medical assistance to migrants is provided in different volumes and under different conditions depending on legal status of the migrant. Persons who have residence permit receive full medical assistance, on a par with Russian citizens. Foreign citizens who do not hold a residence permit have the right to benefit from free medical assistance only in the volume which will help prevent direct life threat. Obviously, given their lack of legal protection, they come mostly for emergency medical assistance, meaning, when the pressure is too high and they have no other way out. Pregnant women are in the most difficult situation as they can be registered with a doctor only for a fee. While delivery can be qualified as extreme condition when assistance is to be provided for free, medical observation throughout the pregnancy is qualified as planned medical services which are provided to foreign citizens with a fee.

Unlike emergency, planned medical assistance can be obtained with a fee, either at private clinics, or public clinics which have the right to provide medical services on paid basis. Self-treatment has become the most popular way for migrants to solve their health issues; the next popular way is appealing to paid medical services. Purchasing individual health insurance is not very common which is explained by the non-profitability of such expenses, whereas there is a possibility to request doctor's services for a fee when it is necessary.

Since paid medical services are often viewed as inaccessible for financial reasons, migrants may use other alternative options: for example, go back to the country of origin where medical services are cheaper. However, it is considered to be too expensive to organize a trip home in order to visit a doctor, therefore doctor visits are sometimes combined with trips home for vacation.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

Russia is a State Party to the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989 and it establishes the right to education (in particular for children) at the constitutional level. Part 1 of art 43 of the Constitution sets out that everyone has the right to education. According to art 1 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child the Constitution guarantees general access and free-of-charge basis of pre-school, secondary and higher vocational education in state or municipal educational establishments and at enterprises.³⁰⁷⁶

Also it establishes that everyone has the right to receive free higher education in a state or municipal educational establishment and at an enterprise on a competition basis.³⁰⁷⁷ Pursuant to part 3 of art 62 of the Constitution foreign nationals and stateless persons are vested in Russia the rights and obligations pari passu with Russian citizens.

Thus, the Constitution provides absolute equality of access to education for everyone, including children of migrants.

Such legal rules are also reflected in international treaties which Russia is party to. For example, "The Agreement of the Eurasian Economic Union" signed in Astana on May 29 2014 (hereinafter — "The Agreement of the Eurasian Economic Union") establishes that children of a worker of a Member State residing together with the worker in the territory of the state of employment shall be entitled to attend pre-school institutions and receive education in accordance with the legislation of the state of employment.³⁰⁷⁸

Specific provisions about the procedures for obtaining education are contained in federal laws and other regulatory acts. The main law in this sphere is Federal Law n.273-FZ of December 29

³⁰⁷⁶ The Constitution, pt 2 art 43

³⁰⁷⁷ ibid, pt 3 art 43

³⁰⁷⁸ The Agreement of the Eurasian Economic Union (signed in Astana on May 29 2014), pt. 5 art. 98

2012 “On Education in Russia”. This law is based on principle that “the right for education in Russia is guaranteed regardless of gender, race, nationality, language, origin, property, social status and official position, attitude to religion, belief, membership in social organisations and also other circumstances”.³⁰⁷⁹

Besides this, the law guarantees accessible for all and free-of-charge education in accordance with federal state educational standards, if a person is educated for the first time.³⁰⁸⁰ Nevertheless, there are common rules, which are required for all foreign citizens, which are temporary located in the territory of Russia. Part 2 of art 5 of the Federal Law n.109-FZ of July 18 2006 “On Migration Registration of Foreign Citizens and Stateless Persons in Russia” establishes that a foreign citizen, in the case of staying in the place of residence, is required to register on such terms and conditions, which are established in accordance with this Federal Law or an international treaty of Russia.

Thus, registration is imperative for legal staying on the territory of Russia. Without fulfilling this requirement, the right to education cannot be exercised. Such requirement has been introduced in the interests of the host state. That is why migrant children should provide the necessary documentation to prove the validity of their staying on the territory of Russia. It the only condition which differs citizens and non-citizens of Russia in the issue of the access to education.

There is a famous case Timishev v. Russia of December 13 2005 which addresses the issue of access to education which is guaranteed by the Convention of 1950 and the Convention on the Rights of the Child. In this situation the education rights of claimant’s children were unlawfully restricted when the competent public authorities refused to admit claimant’s children to the school demanding a registration at the place of residence. Such refusal is unacceptable.

According to the Russian law the rights and freedoms of citizens are non-derogable on the basis of the registration by place of residence. Also, Federal Law n.273-FZ of December 29 2012 “On Education in Russia” guarantees the right to education regardless of the registration by place of residence.

Para. 66 of the ECHR resolution in the case of Timishev establishes that the Convention of 1950 and its Protocols do not tolerate denial of the right to education. Russia authorities have confirmed that the Russian law does not allow to make a dependence between the right to education and parents’ registration at the place of residence. This ECHR decision pointed out that such requirement leads to restriction of the right and this is unacceptable.

The Constitutional Court of Russia does not have any special decisions in this way, because there are no such restrictions in the Russian law. In this situation it is more important to de-facto remove violations which restrict access to education.

Thus, the ECHR has paid attention to the violation of domestic legislation about the right to education of migrants’ children. This fact was recognised by Russia (de jure the right was not violated, but de facto the children were not able to enter the school because of unlawful claims for the documents). Pursuant to ECHR decision the clear instructions were issued in order to avoid further violations of any legislation.

³⁰⁷⁹ Federal Law n. 273-FZ of December 29 2012 “On Education in the Russian Federation”, pt 2 art 5

As the legislation of Russia abides by the Convention on the Rights of the Child which indicates primary, secondary, general, vocational and higher education, let us consider the procedure for access to each of them in more details.

8.1. Primary and Secondary Education

Russian education system is divided into general, professional, additional and professional education³⁰⁸¹ and Russia establishes the following levels of general education:

- pre-school education,
- primary general education,
- basic general education,
- secondary general education.³⁰⁸²

The procedure for entering the school for children is the same - in accordance with their age and level of current educational background.³⁰⁸³

Admission of foreign citizens and stateless persons, including compatriots living abroad, to an organisation providing educational activities (the “OEA”) for training at general educational programs at the expense of the federal budget, budgets of the constituent entities of Russia and local budgets is carried out in accordance with international treaties (for example, part 8 of art 98 of “The Agreement of the Eurasian Economic Union”, Federal Law n.273-FZ of December 29 2012 “On Education in Russia” and Order of the Ministry of Education and Science of Russia n.32 of January 22 2014 “On Approval of the Procedure for Admission of Citizens for Education on the Educational Programs of Primary General, Basic General and Secondary General Education” (the “Order”)).

In accordance with paragraph 9 of the Order citizens are admitted to the OEA on the basis of a personal application of the parent (legal representative), providing the original identity document of a foreign citizen or a stateless person in Russia in accordance with Article 10 of the Federal Law of July 25 2002 n. 115-FZ “On Legal Status of Foreign Citizens in Russia”. The model application form is placed on the information board and (or) on the official OEA website on the Internet. The OAE can receive applications in the form of an electronic document, using information and telecommunications networks.

For admission to the OEA parents (legal representatives) of children who are foreign citizens or stateless persons should additionally present the document, confirming the relationship of the applicant (or legality of representation of the child’s rights) with these children and the document, confirming the applicant’s right to stay in Russia. Foreign citizens and stateless persons submit all documents in Russian language or with a certified translation into Russian.

According to paragraph 11 of the Order when applying for admission to the OEA for obtaining a secondary general education the certificate of basic general education of a standard form is ³⁰⁸¹ Ibid, pt 2 art 10.

³⁰⁸² ibid, pt 4 art 27.

³⁰⁸³ ibid, pt 1 and pt 3 art 67.

provided.³⁰⁸⁴ Requirement to provide any other documents as a basis for admission of children to the OEA is not allowed.³⁰⁸⁵

Acceptance of applications for the first grade of the OEA for citizens, living in a particular territory, begins no later than on February 1 and ends no later than on June 30 of the current year. Enrollment in the OEA is made by the administrative act of the OEA within seven working days after receiving all the documents. For children who do not live in a particular territory, acceptance of applications for the first class starts on July 1 of the current year and lasts until filling vacancies, but not later than September 5 of this year. The OEA which has completed admission to the first class of all children, living in a particular territory, accept children, who do not live in a particular territory, before July 1³⁰⁸⁶.

For the convenience of parents (legal representatives) of children the OEA establishes a schedule for acceptance of documents, depending on the address of registration at the place of residence (stay)³⁰⁸⁷.

Therefore, the right of every child to education in Russia can be enforced from the moment when the applicant has submitted all necessary documents for child admission to the educational organization.

8.2. Secondary Vocational Education

The procedure of the admission to the program of secondary vocational education for foreign citizens is established in Order n. 36 of the Ministry of Education and Science of Russia of January 23 2014 “On Approval of the Procedure for Admission to Training on Educational Programs of Secondary Vocational Education”.

Admission to educational organisations for the secondary vocational education is implemented by application of people who have general basic or general secondary education, if there are no other rules in Federal Law n. 273-FZ ”On Education in Russia”.³⁰⁸⁸

Acceptance of documents starts not later than June 20 of the current year. Receiving of applications for full-time education in educational organisations lasts till August.¹⁵ In case of any vacant places the acceptance is extended till November 25 of the current year. Receiving of applications for studying on specialties (professional) educational programs which requires from applicants certain creativity, physical or psychological abilities lasts till August 10.

The period of receiving applications for other forms of learning (blended, distance) is fixed in the admission policy of the educational organization.³⁰⁸⁹ The applications are submitted in Russian language.

The list of documents for foreign citizen applicants can be seen in Article 21.2 of the Order of the Ministry of Education and Science of Russia n. 36 of January 23 2014.³⁰⁹⁰

The applicants can send their applications and all necessary documents by postal service and also in electronic form if such ability is provided by the educational organization.³⁰⁹¹

8.3. Higher Education

Pursuant to part 3 of art62 of the Constitution foreign citizens and stateless persons are vested in Russia the rights and obligations on the equal terms with the Russian citizens. In accordance with Paragraph 1 of the Order of the Ministry of Education and Science n. 50 of January 14 2003 “On acceptance to state educational establishments of higher vocational training (higher educational establishments) of Russia” there are accepted the citizens of Russia, the citizens of Belarus, persons without citizenship, compatriots abroad, as well as foreign citizens.

Documents should be submitted within the working period of selection committees at higher educational establishments.

A foreign citizen applying for baccalaureate or specialist degree program presents an official document detailing his or her previous education issued by the foreign state (general education or vocational training).

For training on master’s degree programs foreign citizens should have the bachelor's degree or specialist's diploma with higher vocational training or specialist's diploma or the document of foreign state about education equivalent in Russia to the bachelor's degree or to the specialist's diploma with higher vocational training or a specialist's diploma.

For candidates to postgraduate programs it is also necessary to submit copies of a specialist diploma or a diploma of the master of science / arts and extracts from academic records or from the sheet of investigated subjects with evaluations (numbers), as well as the list of published scientific works (if there are such).

To the candidates arriving for improvement of professional skills it is preferable to have training visit (plan) program.

Pursuant to Resolution of the Government of Russia n.638 of August 25 2008 “On cooperation with foreign countries in education area” foreign students of federal state educational establishments of higher and secondary vocational training should receive state scholarship during all period of training, not depending on their progress. Besides foreign students should be supplied by the places in a hall on the same conditions as if they are the citizens of Russia trained at state-funded place. Foreign students are considered as both the citizens of foreign states and compatriots living abroad.

Particularities of admission to higher educational establishments of foreign nationals and stateless persons are declared by Order of the Ministry of Education and Science n.1147 of October 14 2015 “On acceptance for training on educational programs of higher education - bachelor degree programs, specialist degree programs, master degree programs”.

Pursuant to the Order³⁰⁹² foreign nationals and stateless persons have the right to higher education at the expense of federal budgetary allocations with accordance to international contracts of Russia, federal laws or quota set by the Government of Russia (hereinafter quota for education of foreign citizens) as well as at the expense of natural persons and legal entities pursuant to contracts about rendering of paid educational services.

Foreign citizens and stateless persons being compatriots living abroad have the right to get higher education on the equal terms with the citizens of Russia by fulfilling the conditions of following requirements provided in art 17 of Federal law n.99-FZ of May 24 1999 “On state policy of Russia with regard to compatriots abroad” (hereinafter the Federal law n.99-FZ).

In the application for training a foreign national or a stateless person indicates the details of the document proving his or her identity, either document proving identity of a foreign citizen in Russia or a person without citizenship in Russia in accordance with art 10 of Federal law n.115-FZ of July 25 2002 “On legal status of foreign citizens in Russia” (hereinafter the document proving identity of foreign citizen). Pursuant to subparagraph 1 of part 68 of the “Order”, he or she is also required to submit a copy of the document proving identity, citizenship, or the document proving identity of a foreign citizen.

Admission of foreign nationals and stateless persons to training on educational programs containing national security information is implemented only within the limits of quota for education of foreign citizens following the requirements provided by the legislation of Russia on state secret.

Pursuant to part 5 of art 10 of Federal law n. 273-FZ of December 29 2012 “On education in Russia” the following levels of higher education are established:

- higher education - bachelor degree program;
- higher education - specialist degree program, master's degree program;
- higher education - top-qualification personnel training.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

Russia is a participant of the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997 since July 1 2000. Recognition in Russia of education and qualifications received in a foreign country is carried out on the basis of art 107 of the Federal Law "On Education in Russia" (the “Federal Law on Education”) of December 29 2012.

³⁰⁹² Order of the Ministry of Education and Science n.1147 of October 14 2015 “On acceptance for training on educational programs of higher education - bachelor degree programs, specialist degree programs, master degree programs”, para 132.

The recognition in Russia of a foreign education is understood as the official confirmation of significance (level) of education received in a foreign state with the granting of academic, professional and other rights to their holder.

Academic recognition allows to continue education in Russian educational institutions or scientific organizations. Professional recognition allows you to carry out professional activities in the territory of Russia.

Recognition of foreign education is carried out in accordance with the legislation of Russia and international treaties of Russia governing the recognition and establishment of the equivalence of foreign education³⁰⁹³.

Russia recognizes foreign education received in foreign educational organizations, the list of which is established by the Government of Russia (the “List”)³⁰⁹⁴. The criteria for inclusion of foreign educational organizations in this list were approved by Resolution of the Government of Russia n.660 of August 5 2013. The said criteria are as follows:

- a foreign educational organization is included into top 300 Universities of the Academic Ranking of World Universities, QS World University Rankings and the Times Higher Education World University Rankings at the same time;
- a foreign educational organization is not located in the territories of states with which Russia has concluded any international treaties regarding the regulation of the issues of recognition and establishment of equivalence of education received in a foreign country.

If a diploma from a foreign organisation is included in the List, the holder of such diploma has to translate it into the Russian language and legalize it (to provide an apostille or a consular legalization).³⁰⁹⁵

If an education is not subject to an international treaty or has not been received in an organization from the List it is not recognized in the territory of Russia without passing the recognition procedure.

In other cases there might be a special recognition procedure. A person has to apply to the special body on control and supervision in education (the “Rosobrnadzor”) for recognition of foreign education in writing or via the Internet. The Rosobrnadzor conducts an examination which assesses the level of education and determines the equivalence of academic and professional rights. By results of this examination the Rosobrnadzor decides on the recognition or refusal of it. For the issuance of the certificate of education recognition there set a state fee.

The holders of foreign education recognized in Russia are provided with the same academic and professional rights as for holders of relevant education received in Russia.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

According to the Russian legislation there are following categories of existing in Russia:

- foreign citizens;
- foreign citizens permanently residing in Russia;
- migrants who have Russian citizenship and foreign state citizenship as well as the residential permit or other document certifying the right of the citizen of Russia to permanently reside in the territory of the foreign state.

Each category has got some restrictions in exercising their political rights in comparison with the Russian citizens.

General principle that defines legal status of foreign citizens in Russian Federation is the principle of national regime. According to that principle legal status of foreign citizens in Russia correlates with the legal status of Russian citizens. This principle was legislated in the Russian Constitution and confirmed in Federal Law n.115-FZ of July 25 2002 “On legal status of foreign citizens in Russia”. But there are a lot of exceptions from that rule. Most of them are doing with political rights of foreigners. Establishment of this kind of regulation is argued by potential possibility for negative influence on sovereignty. Nowadays a lot of representatives of Russian doctrine declare the regulation as archaic.

Constitution of Russia guarantees foreign citizens the right to association including the right to create trade unions for protection of his or her interests³⁰⁹⁶, the freedom of ideas and speech³⁰⁹⁷.

Foreign citizens permanently resident in Russia are allowed to participate narrowly in political life of the state: “under international treaties of Russia and in accordance with due legal procedure, foreign citizens who permanently reside in the territory of a relevant municipal formation shall have the right to elect and be elected to bodies of local self-government, be involved in other electoral activities in such elections and participate in a local referendum on the same conditions as citizens of Russia”.⁵ This right was confirmed in Federal Law n.131-FZ of October 6 2003 “On general principles of organization of local self-government in Russia”, Federal Law n.115-FZ of July 25 2002 “On legal status of foreign citizens in Russia”. Moreover, foreign citizens can conclude a contract for doing military service.³⁰⁹⁸

According to art 32 of the Constitution the second group of emigrants have the right to participate in managing state affairs both directly and through their representatives.³⁰⁹⁹ It includes the the right to elect, be elected to state bodies of power and local self-government bodies, to participate in referenda.

However, Federal Law n.67-FZ of July 12 2002 “On basic guarantees of electoral rights and the right of citizens of Russia to participate in the referendum” establishes higher than Constitution restrictions. The Law deprives the citizens of Russia with the foreign state citizenship as well as the residential permit or other document certifying the right of the citizen of Russia to permanently reside in the territory of a foreign state of the right to be elected to state bodies of power and local self-government bodies.⁵ Nowadays Russia is the only state of Council of Europe that has this kind of restrictive regulation on political rights of its citizens.

Russian politician Kara Murza tried to defend his right to be elected after he was dismissed from election. For more details please refer to Question 5.

10.1. The Procedure of Participation of Migrants in Political Decisions

Foreign citizens in Russia do not have the right to elect and be elected to federal bodies of state power, bodies of state power of subject of the federation, and also participate in the referendum of Russia and referenda of the subjects of Russia. Foreign citizens permanently residing in Russia in cases and according to the procedure provided by federal laws have the right to elect and be elected to local self-government bodies, as well as to participate in a local referendum.³¹⁰⁰

These provisions are specified in paragraph 6 of art 3, paragraph 10 of art 4 of Federal Law n.67 of June 12 2002 “On Basic Guarantees of Electoral Rights and the Right to Participate in a Referendum of Citizens of Russia”, according to which foreign citizens (with the exception of foreign citizens, permanently residing in the territory of the respective municipal formation, and having the right to elect and be elected to local self-government bodies, participate in other electoral activities in the said elections, and also participate in local referendum on the same terms as the citizens of Russia), stateless persons, foreign organizations, international organizations and international public movements, noncommercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent, shall not have the right to carry out activities conducive to or obstructing the nomination of candidates, lists of candidates, electing registered candidates, bringing up an initiative to hold a referendum and holding a referendum, achieving a certain result in the elections, referendum, as well as other forms of participation in election campaigns, referendum campaigns. Participation in election campaigns, referendum campaigns of these individuals and representatives of these organizations as foreign (international) observers is regulated in accordance with federal law.

If on the basis of an international treaty of Russia foreign citizens have the right to participate in elections to local self-government bodies and a local referendum, foreign citizens, who have reached on the voting day the age of 18 years, permanently residing in the territory of the municipal formation in which the said elections or referendum are held and not falling under the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 4 of the Federal Law n.67 of June 12 2002 “On Basic Guarantees of Electoral Rights and the Right to Participate in a Referendum of Citizens of Russia”, according to which «they do not have the right to elect, to be elected, to carry out other electoral actions, to participate in a referendum, citizens recognized by the court as incompetent or contained in prison by a court decision», are entered in the voting list, the list of participants of the referendum.

³¹⁰⁰ Federal Law on the Legal Status, art 12

It should be noted that, in addition to the above categories of persons, citizens of Russia, who have the citizenship of a foreign state or a residence permit or other document that confirms the right to permanent residence of a citizen of Russia in the territory of a foreign state, are not eligible to be elected. These citizens have the right to be elected to local self-government bodies, if it is required by an international treaty of Russia. This provision is specified in paragraph 5.1 of art 3 of Federal Law n.19 of January 10 2003 “On Elections of the President of Russia”, paragraph 7 of art 4 of the Federal Law n.20 of February 22 2014 “On Elections of Deputies of the State Duma of the Federal Assembly of Russia”.

Moreover, according to subparagraph «a» of paragraph 8 of art 29 of Federal Law n.67 of June 12 2002 “On Basic Guarantees of Electoral Rights and the Right to Participate in a Referendum of Citizens of Russia” in the event of the loss of the citizenship of Russia by a member of the commission, the acquisition by him or her of the citizenship of a foreign state or the receipt of a residence permit or other document confirming the right of permanent residence of a citizen of Russia in the territory of a foreign state, the powers of a member of the commission with a decisive vote shall be discontinued immediately.

This is also regulated by Federal Law n. 131 of October 06 2003 “On general principles of local self-government in Russia” which says that the powers of the head of the municipality; of the head of the local administration, carried out on the basis of contract ; of the deputy, member of the elected body of local self-government, an elected official of local self-government are discontinued early in the event of dismissal of Russian Federation citizenship, dismissal of citizenship of a foreign state, which is the party to the international treaty of Russia, according to which the foreign citizen has the right to be elected to the local self-government bodies, to acquire the citizenship of a foreign state or to obtain a residence permit or other document confirming the right to permanent residence of a citizen of Russia in the territory of the foreign state, that is not a party to an international treaty of Russia, in accordance with which the citizen of Russia, having the citizenship of a foreign state, has the right to be elected to the local self-government bodies.

Foreign citizens, stateless persons, foreign legal entities is also prohibited to conduct a campaign agitation, agitation on the referendum questions, to produce and distribute any campaign materials”, and foreign citizenship is prohibited to make donations to the election funds of candidates, registered candidates, electoral associations, referendum funds, with the exception of foreign citizens, permanently residing in the territory of the respective municipal formation, and having the right to elect and be elected to local self-government bodies, participate in other electoral activities in the said elections, and also participate in local referendum on the same terms as the citizens of Russia.

10.2. Migrants' Opportunity to Participate in Their Country of Residence the Same Way as in Their Country of Origin

The Constitutions of the EU-states include provisions providing the opportunity of the right to vote and to be elected in the municipal elections for EU-citizens in the place of residence, regardless of the nationality of the country.

There are similar rules in the legislation of Russia in some of the federal laws for the citizens who permanently reside in the territory of a relevant municipal formation. Part 2 of art 12 of Federal Law n.115-FZ of July 25 2002 “On the Legal Status of Foreign Citizens in Russia” establishes that foreign citizens who permanently reside in the territory of Russia have the right to elect and be elected to the local self-government and to participate in the local referendum in the cases and under the procedures specified by the federal laws.

The only case when a foreign citizen can vote and be elected in Russia is local government elections. Paragraph 10 of art 4 of Federal Law n.67-FZ of June 12 2002 “On Basic Guarantees of Electoral Rights and the Right of Citizens of Russia to Participate in a Referendum” establishes:

“Under international treaties of Russia and in accordance with due legal procedure, foreign citizens who permanently reside in the territory of a relevant municipal formation shall have the right to elect and be elected to bodies of local self-government, be involved in other electoral activities in such elections, and participate in a local referendum on the same conditions as citizens of Russia”.

Thus, it is not required to have the citizenship of Russia for the exercise of electoral rights in such case, but it is required confirmation of the permanently residence in the territory of a relevant municipal formation.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. How Can Migrants Acquire Citizenship in the Country?

According to art 6 of the Constitution the citizenship of Russia must be acquired and terminated according to federal law. The grounds for the acquisition of Russian Federation citizenship are established by article 11 of Federal Law n.62-FZ of May 31 2002 “On Russia Citizenship” (the “Law on Russian Citizenship”):

- by virtue of birth;
- as the result of being admitted for Russia citizenship;
- as the result of reinstatement of Russia citizenship;
- on other grounds set out in the present Federal Law or an international treaty of Russia (for instance, choosing citizenship in the case of a change of the State Border of Russia).

Migrants can acquire citizenship of Russia on general terms or through a simplified procedure. In accordance with general terms of admission into Russian Federation citizenship foreign citizens and stateless persons who have reached the age of 18 and have dispositive capacity are entitled to file a naturalisation application asking for Russian Federation citizenship on the condition that the said citizens and persons:³¹⁰¹

- have been residing in the territory of Russia since the day when they received a residence permit and to the day when they file a naturalisation application asking for Russian Federation citizenship for five years without a break, except as provided in part 2 of Article 13 FZ “On Russian Federation Citizenship” – one year.
- undertake to observe the Constitution of Russia and the legislation of Russia;
- have a legal source of means of subsistence;
- have filed applications with the competent body of the foreign state whereby they waived their other citizenship. No waiver of foreign citizenship is required if this is envisaged by an international treaty of Russia or the present Federal Law or if the waiver of another citizenship is impossible due to reasons beyond the person's control;
- are in command of the Russian language.³¹⁰²
- When applying for Russia citizenship together with the application there are submitted the following documents:
 - residence permit, except for some cases listed in paragraph 10 of the Decree n.1325;
 - one of the documents confirming the existence of a legal source of means of subsistence (for example, a certificate of income of an individual);
 - a document confirming the application of the applicant of the waiver other citizenship or the impossibility of waiver other citizenship, or a copy of the applicant's application with a notarized signature of the applicant;
 - a document confirming the knowledge of Russian language at a level sufficient to communicate verbally and in writing in a language environment (for example, a document on education (not lower than the basic general education). From the provision of the said document are exempt men who have reached the age of 65 and women over the age of 60 years; incapacitated persons; invalids of the I group.

Persons for whom a period of residence in the territory of Russia is set at one year must submit together with said documents additional documents confirming their status (for example, a person, who recognized as a refugee in accordance with the legislation of Russia, must submit a document confirming his recognition as a refugee). A special list of documents is also provided for servicemen applying for Russia citizenship.

The exception from the general terms (this exception from the general terms is not a simplified procedure) is the one established in part 4 of art 13 for citizens of the states, which had formed a part of the USSR, serving at least three years in the Armed Forces of Russia and in other forces, military units or bodies on a contractual basis.

A simplified procedure of admission into Russian Federation citizenship is established for some foreign citizens and stateless persons, the categories of which are listed in Article 14 FZ “On ³¹⁰¹ The application form was approved by the Decree n.1325 of the President of the Russian Federation of November 14 2002 “On approval of the Regulations on the Procedure for Considering the Issues of the Citizenship of the Russian Federation” (hereinafter - Decree n.1325).

³¹⁰² The procedure for assessing the level of knowledge of the Russian language shall be established by regulations on the procedure for considering issues concerning Russian Federation citizenship.

Russian Federation Citizenship” (for instance, persons, who have at least one parent who is the Russian citizen and resides on Russian Federation territory; have had USSR citizenship, and having resided and residing in the states that had formed a part of the USSR, have not become citizens of these states and as a result remain stateless persons (part 1). It should be noted that the “Agreement between the Republic of Belarus, the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic and Russia on the simplified manner for acquiring citizenship” (signed in Moscow on February 26 1999) continues to operate.

11.2. Double Nationality

There is a possibility of double nationality in Russia. According to part 1 of art 62 of the Constitution a citizen of Russia may have the citizenship of a foreign State (dual citizenship) according to the federal law or an international agreement of Russia. Pt 2 art 62 of the Constitution establishes that the possession of a foreign citizenship by a citizen of Russia shall not derogate his rights and freedoms and shall not free him from the obligations stipulated by the Russian citizenship, unless otherwise provided for by the federal law or an international agreement of Russia. Importantly, a citizen of Russia may not be deprived of his or her citizenship or of the right to change it.³¹⁰³

According to the paragraph 1 of art 6 of the Federal Law on the Citizenship of Russia, a citizen of Russia who also possesses another citizenship shall be regarded by Russia as a citizen of Russia only, except for the cases specified in an internal treaty of Russia or federal law.

The acquisition of another citizenship by a citizen of Russia shall not entail termination of the citizenship of Russia.³¹⁰⁴ Said provisions cover the Russian citizens, who acquired the nationality of a foreign State. These rules are not applicable to the foreign citizens who want to acquire the nationality of Russia. There is a differentiated approach of the Russian legislator to the Russian and foreign citizens in the issue of double nationality.

As mentioned earlier, a citizen of Russia is able to acquire citizenship of a foreign state without losing her or his origin nationality. If a foreign citizen wants to acquire a citizenship of Russia he/she must apply to competent authority of foreign State for renunciation of current another citizenship. No waiver of foreign citizenship is required if this is envisaged by an international treaty of Russia or by the present Federal Law or if the waiver of another citizenship is impossible due to reasons beyond the person’s control.³¹⁰⁵

Thus, a citizen of Russia has an opportunity of double nationality. In the case of acquirement citizenship of Russia by a foreign citizen, he or she should renounce of current another citizenship.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

Russia is not a part to any of EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants. The main reason of it is that Russia is not a member state of the European Union.

However, Russia is a participant of the Eurasian Economic Union (EEU) which includes such countries as Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kirgisia. The EEU have the programmes of integration of labor migrants. The main issues of these programmes are the rights of migrants to employment, social and pension security and medical care.

Conclusions

Here is the list of the main findings of each section of our report:

1. We have researched how the right to asylum is regulated in national law, as well as given a description of the procedure for granting asylum. The definitions of refugee status and temporary asylum concerning Russia have been given, and the difference between them has been estimated.
2. The difference in the regulation of immigration from EU member states and Non-EU member states has been established. According to the Russian legislation there is no difference between the immigration from either of these two groups of states, though there are some specific aspects concerning the immigration from previous USSR member states.
3. The authorities dealing with migrants, as well as the description of their framework have been observed. The research on the framework concerning migration law is followed throughout the report, and the modern statistics on the topic complements it.
4. We have researched the implementation of the decisions be the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants, as well as the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance, and have come to the conclusion that the national legislation has more significance in Russia concerning migration law than the international legislation.
5. In regard to the migrants' right to access to healthcare, we have researched how it is regulated within the national legislation. The situation in this sphere is quite positive, since the right of everyone to healthcare is established in the Constitution of the Russian Federation.
6. We have observed the situation with the right to education of the migrants' children concerning different levels of education (i.e. primary and secondary education, secondary vocational education, higher education). In regard to this topic, we have also established if the foreign school and university diplomas are recognized in Russia.
7. The research on the migrants' rights would not be complete without the observation of their political rights, so we have established if the migrants are legally allowed to participate in political decisions, as well as the ways they can express their political positions. The procedure of participation of migrants in political decision is not always the same as the procedure for the citizens, though there are some similarities.

8. We have profoundly researched the topic of acquisition of the Russian citizenship by migrants and established the procedure for that, as well as found out if there is a possibility of double nationality. The last but not the least, we have observed the participation of the Russian Federation in programmes with regard to the integration of migrants.

Introduction

Republic of Slovenia is geographically located on the external border of the Schengen area, which is important in terms of the security and the aspect of monitoring migration flows that take place across its territory.

From historical perspective, migrants in Slovenia were linked to massive forced migrations as a consequence of warfare on the territory of the former Yugoslavia. In 1991, Slovenia and Croatia declared their independence forcing many individuals and large groups of people to flee and leave everything behind, as their lives were in great danger due to their ethnicity.

In the light of recent migration crisis, Slovenia was intensely monitoring the situation in the region and was in frequent contact with neighbour countries. By September 2015, more than 1500 migrants entered the country, the number was growing fast, as some countries closed their borders. To respond to high demands of accepting migrants, Slovenia built a 16-kilometer long fence on its border with Croatia, causing a severe response from the public. In months to come, we were faced with many challenges that led the country to limit the number of migrants – only those who were to continue their way towards Austria or Germany, and to impose quotas.

It is with our immense pleasure to be given the opportunity to present our national legislation in the area of migrations in this report.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Bodies/entities involved throughout the asylum granting process

Asylum seeker may express the intention to submit an asylum application to anybody, but the body responsible for the asylum procedure throughout the whole period is the Ministry of the Interior, the Department for International Protection. The police are in charge of identifying the person and determining the way of entering into the country. The police also deliver a person to an asylum centre. A state official issues a card, which also serves as a permit for a person to stay in a country.

1.2. Requirements for asylum

The Status of a Refugee is granted to a person, who has reasonable and credible evidence that he or she is endangered due to their race, religion, nationality, political beliefs or membership of a particular social group in their country of origin. The decision on the recognition of a refugee status has upon notification an effect of a permanent residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia.³¹⁰⁶

The Subsidiary Protection is granted to a person that does not qualify for the refugee status but provides justifiable and authentic reasons that serious harm would be inflicted upon him or her, should he or she return to his or her country of origin (such as death penalty or execution, torture, or inhuman or degrading treatment). Subsidiary protection is also granted for serious and individual threats against life or freedom of the applicant due to arbitrary violence in situations of international or internal armed conflict in the country of origin. The decision on the recognition of subsidiary protection has upon notification an effect of a temporary residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia, for as long as the protection lasts.³¹⁰⁷

1.3. A general description of the procedure to grant humanitarian protection

Aliens shall as soon as possible after the entry in the Republic of Slovenia at any local or State body express an intention to file an application for international protection. Thereafter, the police investigate their identity and the way of entering the Republic of Slovenia, and deliver them to an asylum centre, where he or she is to file an application for international protection. Before filing the application, an alien is properly informed about the procedure and their rights in a language that they understand. The filing of the application also takes place in the presence of a translator or interpreter.³¹⁰⁸

After the application for international protection has been filed, the applicant is accommodated in an asylum centre, where they have the right to material reception conditions, which, in addition to accommodation, also includes food, clothing and footwear, and means of personal hygiene. The applicant can be, as necessary, also moved to appropriate institutions or to a private accommodation upon fulfilling the requirements, for which they can be in special circumstances granted financial assistance.³¹⁰⁹

The Rules on Rights of Applicants for International Protection further determine rights and obligations of applicants for international protection: the right to reside in Slovenia, the right to follow the procedure in a language that the applicant understands, the right to information, the right to material supply in case of accommodation in an asylum centre, the right to financial assistance in case of accommodation on a private address, the right to free legal assistance in procedures at the administrative and supreme court, the right to necessary healthcare, the right to education, the right of access to the labour market, the right to humanitarian aid, pocket money. Applicants for international protection³¹¹⁰ have the right to reside in the Republic of Slovenia from the day of filing their application until the final decision on their application. This right allows them to move freely on the territory of the Republic of Slovenia. Immediately after the application has been filed, a State official issues a card for applicants for international protection, which also serves as a permit to stay in the Republic of Slovenia until the enforceability of the decision on the international protection. With a valid card the applicant exercises his or her rights.³¹¹¹

In the course of taking a decision on the recognition of international protection at the Administrative and Supreme Court, the applicants have the right to free legal assistance, which is provided by refugee counsellors, nominated by the minister of justice. In case of a recognition of international protection, the applicant is granted the right to participation in integration measures, carried out by the Government Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants.

The application to grant humanitarian protection is filed in general.

The treatment of vulnerable persons with special needs is very generally described in the Decree on the Methods and Conditions for Ensuring the Rights of Persons with International Protection in Article 3. The ministry decides on whether the nature of specific needs calls for adjustment of the procedure, and provides the person with assistance of a relevant expert, who helps them take part in the proceedings of international protection, for example an interpreter for deaf persons.

Article 70 of the Act on International Protection determines that an appeal is possible to the administrative court: within 15 days against the decision, taken in general procedure, and within 8 days in fast procedure. The administrative court shall take decision in 30 days. According to Article 72, an appeal to the Constitutional Court is possible in 15 days since the issuance of the decision, in which an organ decides on a person's rights.

1.4. Grounds for exclusion of refugee protection

In the event of a negative decision, the alien is, in accordance with the Aliens Act, handed over to the police and the Aliens Centre in Postojna, which carries out the procedure of return to their country of origin.³¹¹²

Status of a refugee is, according to Paragraph 1 of Article 31 of the Act on International Protection, not granted: (i) to an applicant, who is already protected by an organ or an agency of the UN, except if it had ceased for any reason, (ii) in case of sufficient grounds to believe that an applicant committed a crime against peace, war crime or crime against humanity, (iii) in case of sufficient grounds to believe that an applicant had prior to entering the Republic of Slovenia committed a grave crime of non-political nature in another country, (iv) in case of sufficient grounds to believe that he or she committed acts that contravene the principles of the UN, (v) in case of sufficient grounds for handling an applicant as dangerous for the safety of the Republic of Slovenia, (vi) after the final judgment for a grave crime an applicant presents danger to the Republic of Slovenia.

1.5. Grounds for revocation of asylum status

Status of subsidiary protection is, according to Paragraph 2 of Article 31, not granted to an applicant, for whom there exist sufficient grounds to believe: (i) that he or she committed a crime against peace, war crime or crime against humanity, as defined in international documents, ³¹¹¹ Ibid.

³¹¹² Act on International Protection, Article 30 and subsequent.

(ii) that he or she committed a grave crime, (iii) that he or she committed crimes that contravene the principles of the UN, (iv) after the final judgment for a grave crime an applicant presents danger to the Republic of Slovenia.

Article 67 determines the conditions, under which the protection ceases: (i) in case an applicant voluntarily accepts the protection of the country of their citizenship, (ii) after the loss of their citizenship, he or she voluntarily acquires it again, (iii) an applicant acquires a new citizenship and enjoys protection of that country, (iv) an applicant voluntarily re-accommodates in the country he or she has left in the first place, (v) there no longer exist conditions for their status of refugee and can hence no longer deny the protection of their country of citizenship, (vi) an applicant can as a stateless person return to the country of their common residency, as there no longer exist conditions, due to which he or she was granted the refugee status.

1.6. Return and expulsion of an alien

The Aliens Act generally determines the conditions for return and expulsion of an alien in Article 64 in cases of an illegal residency. According to Article 69, an alien is removed from the Republic of Slovenia by virtue of a decision on return, and is carried out by the police, who escorts them to the State border.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Definition of a migrant and description of general immigration process

An alien is, according to Aliens Act, every person that does not have citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia. Normally, an alien needs a valid identification document, if she or he wishes to enter through a Slovenian border – especially on the border with Croatia, which is an external border of the EU. Entry can be denied based on the Schengen Borders Code.

Article 5 determines that the government of the Republic of Slovenia has the power to decide quotas, how many residence permits can be issued each year for both citizens of EU and non-EU member States. The entry to the territory of the Republic of Slovenia at the outer border is permitted only at the determined border passages.³¹¹³ Within the inner borders of the EU, the passage is permitted with no border control. In case of bigger flows of immigrants, the government can act within its power determined in the newly adopted Articles 10a and 10b, described above. Citizens of non-EU member states that are going to reside in the Republic of Slovenia for 90 days and up to one year, need a visa for the time of the expected residency.³¹¹⁴ The visa for long-term residency can be issued to family members of the EU citizens and Slovenian citizens as a family reunion, to diplomats, to students and higher education professors, if there is commercial or cultural interest of the Republic of Slovenia, to athletes and coaches, to foreign reporters, and to priests and establishers of charity and humanitarian organisations.³¹¹⁵

The application is to be submitted by an alien maximum 3 months before the arrival.³¹¹⁶

2.2. Right to admission

The entry to the territory of the Republic of Slovenia at the outer border is permitted only at the determined border passages. Within the inner borders of the EU, the passage is permitted with no border control. In case of bigger flows of immigrants, the government can act within its power determined in the newly adopted Articles 10a and 10b, described above. Citizens of non-EU member States that are going to reside in the Republic of Slovenia for 90 days and up to one year, need a visa for the time of the expected residency. The visa for long-term residency can be issued to family members of the EU citizens and Slovenian citizens as a family reunion, to diplomats, to students and higher education professors, if there is commercial or cultural interest of the Republic of Slovenia, to athletes and coaches, to foreign reporters, and to priests and establishers of charity and humanitarian organisations. The application is to be submitted by an alien maximum 3 months before the arrival.

Articles 47a and 47b determine the right of family reunion of migrants that enjoy international protection in a form of asylum or subsidiary protection, given that they existed as a family already before the entry of a refugee on the territory of the Republic of Slovenia.

The above provisions are similarly used for citizens of EU member States. However, Article 118 tells that those persons need neither visa nor residence permit to enter and live in the Republic of Slovenia. They are on the other hand required to report their residency in the Republic of Slovenia, if they live on the territory for 90 days or more for the purpose of work, study, family reunion etc.³¹¹⁷ After 5 years, a person can be granted an unlimited permanent residence permit.³¹¹⁸

There are no specific rights defined in the act that legal residents would enjoy, hence they enjoy the same rights as citizens of the Republic of Slovenia and can move freely in and out of the country.

The Ministry of Interior financially supports the process of integration of aliens that are not EU citizens. Under Article 106 of the Aliens Act, they have the right to include in the programmes that enable them quick integration in cultural, commercial and social life in the Republic of Slovenia. Those include: learning the Slovene language (for free), getting familiar with the Slovenian history, culture and constitutional order, programmes of interactions with the Slovenes and information on their integration into the society.

2.3. Right to remain – grounds for exclusion of migration status

Under Paragraph 1, Article 57 of the Aliens Act, a temporary residence permit shall cease if: its validity expires or, if it is revoked, the alien is resigned, an alien in the Republic of Slovenia has been pronounced a final secondary sanction for the expulsion of an alien from the State, or if an alien has been expelled as a legal consequence of conviction under the provisions of the Penal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia, No. 55/08 and 50/12), or if the alien is the second an EU member State pronounced a final decision on expulsion, which would result in it being removed from the Republic of Slovenia, the alien renounces the permit, as from the date of the statement on the renunciation of the temporary residence permit, foreigner acquires citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, the alien obtains a permanent residence permit, an extension of the temporary residence permit is issued to an alien prior to expiry of the license, issue a further temporary residence permit or certificate of registration of residence, an alien dies. Paragraph 2 declares that in addition to the grounds referred to in the preceding paragraph, the EU Blue Card and the temporary residence permit of a family member of the EU Blue Card holder shall cease to be valid if an alien in another EU member State acquires an EU Blue Card or a temporary residence permit for a family member of the EU Blue Card holder.

³¹¹⁵ Article 20 ibid.

³¹¹⁶ Article 22 of the Aliens Act.

Under paragraph 3, a permanent residence permit shall cease to be valid if: the license has been revoked, the alien is resigned, an alien in the Republic of Slovenia has been pronounced a final secondary sanction for the expulsion of an alien from the State, or if an alien has been expelled as a legal consequence of conviction under the provisions of the Penal Code (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia, No. 55/08 and 50/12), or if the alien is the second an EU member State pronounced a final decision on expulsion, which would result in it being removed from the Republic of Slovenia, the alien renounces the permit, as from the date of the statement of renunciation of the permit for permanent residence, foreigner acquires citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, the alien is emigrating or if he remains outside the territory of the EU member States for a continuous period of one year or longer, unless he is sent for work, study or treatment, the alien is emigrating or staying outside the territory of the Republic of Slovenia for a continuous period of six years or more, with occasional, short-term returns to the Republic of Slovenia for a period of up to 90 days, not interrupting that period, an alien in another EU member State obtains a long-term resident status, an alien dies.

Paragraph 4 states that the EU Blue Card holder's permanent residence permit or the permanent residence permit issued to the family member of the EU Blue Card holder shall cease to be valid for all reasons referred to in the preceding paragraph, and in the case of the sixth indent of the preceding paragraph only if the alien is out of work or if he remains outside territory of the EU member States for two years or more.

Under Paragraph 5, a permanent residence permit issued to a refugee's family member shall cease to have effect if the refugee is terminated or is deprived of his status and for the reasons set forth in paragraph 3 of this Article, unless the refugee acquires the nationality of the Republic of Slovenia or dies.

2.4. Right to leave

In general, migrants can move freely given that they have legal residency in the Republic of Slovenia. However, there are certain requirements with regard to the length of their continuous stay, for example if they want to apply for citizenship (discussed below).

All aliens shall abide by the Slovenian Constitution, all laws in the Republic of Slovenia, and measures of State organs.³¹¹⁹

All aliens shall move freely within the inner borders of the Republic of Slovenia and EU, and only at the internationally recognised borders for going outside of the EU, for which they need to carry a passport or ID.³¹²⁰

2.5. Regulation of deportation and/or exclusion of migrants

Article 138 of the Aliens Act determines that, when an EU citizen or a family member, who refuses to leave Slovenia voluntarily, shall be deported from the country. Namely, when he or she has been convicted by the final secondary sanction of expulsion from the country, or if the alien is ordered expulsion as a legal consequence of a conviction under the provisions of the Penal Code; when their residence permit has been cancelled; when their residence permit is not granted or expired.

Cases of removal on the basis of illegal residency of an alien from the territory of the Republic of Slovenia are described in the section above (question 1).

2.6. Differences between EU nationals and non-EU nationals

The above provisions are similarly used for citizens of EU member States. However, Article 118 tells that those persons need neither visa nor residence permit to enter and live in the Republic of Slovenia. They are on the other hand required to report their residency in the Republic of Slovenia, if they live on the territory for 90 days or more for the purpose of work, study, family reunion etc.³¹²¹ After 5 years, a person can be granted an unlimited permanent residence permit.³¹²²

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

The main authorities dealing with immigrants in the Republic of Slovenia are the Ministry of the Interior, Police and Government Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants.

The Government Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants was established by a decree, which was issued by the Government of the Republic of Slovenia. Within the scope of its competences, the aim of the Office is to monitor immigration and refugee issues, provide initiatives and proposals regarding accommodation and care as well as to ensure the financial, organizational, personnel and administrative-technical functioning of the Office.

³¹¹⁹ Article 4 of the Aliens Act.

³¹²⁰ Article 6 and 7 of the Aliens Act.

³¹²¹ Article 119 of the Aliens Act.

³¹²² Article 126 ibid.

The Police were established with the Police Act (the Act was later annulled and replaced by Police Tasks and Powers Act in January 2013). The aim of the Slovenian police is to ensure a constant and long-lasting effective safety of people in the Republic of Slovenia and to make people feel safe.

The Police are entrusted with conducting State border control, managing irregular migration and foreigner affairs. Police tasks are as follows: control of cross-border movement, State border protection, investigation of criminal offences and violations taking place at the State border and investigation of border incidents, prevention of irregular migration, performance of operational tasks related to immigrant/foreigner legislation, decisions related to crossing of the State border and coordination of activities of the Centre for Foreigners (migrant detention centre).

Control of the national border, of which one section also constitutes the external Schengen border, is carried out by police officers in line with the European and national regulations. In addition to the national legislation, Slovenia also has the duty to comply with international obligations arising from the Schengen Agreement and bilateral interstate agreements. For the execution of these tasks Slovenian police have been properly trained and equipped in accordance with the Schengen standards.³¹²³

The main task of the Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants is taking care of the accommodation and care of foreigners who are allowed to stay in Slovenia, displaced persons, persons with temporary protection, applicants for the international protection and persons with international protections. The Office also takes care of the integration of certain groups of migrants, covering all aspects of migrant integration into the society: housing, health care, integration into educational and work processes. An important task of the Office is also the organisation and management of capacities (asylum homes, integration houses and accommodation centres) for the accommodation and care of persons granted temporary protection, displaced persons, foreigners who are allowed to stay in Slovenia, applicants for international protection and persons with recognised international protections. The Office monitors immigration and refugee issues, provides initiatives and proposals on the organisation of accommodation and care and ensures the financial, organisational and administrative-technical functioning of the Office.

The Ministry of the Interior carries out tasks in the following fields of work: administrative internal affairs, area of migration and integration of aliens, tasks in the field of police and other security tasks, tasks of the Police as well as tasks of the Inspectorate of the Republic of Slovenia for the Interior.

The Slovenian police is a body within the Ministry of the Interior. The police perform their tasks at three levels: state, regional and local level. The police headquarters are in Ljubljana and are organised in three levels: general police management, police management and police stations.

Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants was established as a separate government service stemmed from the need for targeted and supervised action in the field of care for migrants entering the territory of the Republic of Slovenia. The office is run by a Director of the Office, who is responsible to the Secretary General of the Government.

The Government Office for the Care and Integration of Migrants is funded from the state budget. The estimated total financial plan of the Office for 2017 thus amounts to EUR 4,315,768.47, estimated for the period from the beginning of the Office's activities (1 June 2017).³¹²⁴

The Police and the Ministry for Interior are also funded from the state budget.

The Police is under full, systematic and planned supervision performed by the Ministry of Interior. The supervision shall determine the legality, professionalism and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the exercise of police powers, the performance of the tasks of the police and the implementation of the minister's policies. Supervision can be carried out directly by inspecting documents or other material in police units, talking to police officers, other police officers or individuals, and by directly observing the performance of tasks at a particular site. Upon completion of the surveillance, a report on the findings, which may also contain proposals for the elimination of the identified deficiencies, shall be made.

Complaints against police officers are solved on two levels: in a conciliation procedure with the heads of the organisational units of the police or before the Senate of the Ministry for Interior.

In a conciliation procedure, the appeal is dealt with in a police unit whereby the act or omission of a police officer's act in violating the police orders occurred.

The senate is assembled by a three-member panel composed of a Minister's authorised representative (appointed by a Minister's decision) and two representatives of the public. A representative of the public shall be appointed by the Minister of Interior on the proposal of local communities or civil society organisations, professional public and non-governmental organisations.

Slovenian Ministry of Justice.³¹³³ The main purpose was to establish a more efficient mechanism and better transparency in implementing the ECtHR judgments, and consequently a better protection of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the rule of law in Slovenia. It will require a better cooperation between State organs and is a big step forward.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

Conclusions on Slovenia³¹³⁴ (adopted on 23 June 2017) do not provide any information regarding the implementation of the ECRI recommendations from 2014.

In its third report³¹³⁵, ECRI strongly recommended that the Slovenian authorities ratify the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level and furthermore recommended ratification of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families.

In Fourth report³¹³⁶ on Slovenia ECRI reiterated its recommendation that the Slovenian authorities sign and ratify the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families.

In Fourth report on Slovenia, ECRI reiterated its recommendation that the Slovenian authorities: ensure that free legal aid is available to asylum seekers from the outset of the asylum proceedings, reinstate the full financial support for asylum seekers living outside the Asylum Home in private accommodation, take steps to speed up the asylum procedure, improve the treatment and accommodation of unaccompanied minors and ensure that good quality interpretation is provided in all cases where it is required by asylum seekers and that all persons residing lawfully in Slovenia, regardless of their citizenship, and including persons granted international protection, have access to social housing.

The Government Communication Office³¹³⁷ conducts awareness activities for tolerance and communication of refugee issues. It designs communication models for various possible scenarios, participates in the preparation of key messages and the coordination of public relations advisors and a list of key speakers by sector, provides support to the operational group of government, monitors developments in the EU and documents related to communicating these topics through an informal group for crisis communication with the EU Presidency.

In addition, non-governmental organizations are providing different trainings on different topics connected to migrations, mutual tolerance and dialogue.

Ecological Cultural Society for a Better World organised workshops "It hurts the world, it hurts me too!" to contribute to the co-creation and promotion of an open society capable of social solidarity, mutual tolerance and intercultural dialogue. The Peace Institute conducted a series of workshops on hate speech, media and migration in secondary schools. Project Through the eyes of the refugee, carried out by the Society Humanitas, provided the experience of the uncertain and too often tragic journey of refugees for school children. The Terra Verra Society organized workshops for furniture design within the framework of the "Youth Refugee Project". Slovenian Philanthropy, in cooperation with organisation Key conducted two workshops on human trafficking for unaccompanied minors.³¹³⁸

The Human Rights Ombudsman of the Republic of Slovenia³¹³⁹ is a constitutional category that does not fall under the executive, judicial or legislative branch of authority. The Ombudsman is therefore not part of any mechanism of authority, but rather acts as an overseer of authority since as an institution it restricts its capricious encroachment of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Ombudsman is in his work not only limited to handling complaints on direct violations of human rights and freedoms defined in the constitution, moreover, it may act in any case whatsoever dealing with a violation of any right of an individual arising from a holder of authority.

He can also intervene in the case of unfair and poor state administration in relation to the individual. If the aforementioned is considered, it can have a significant impact on the development and increase in legal and administrative culture between holders of authority and the individual.

Human rights ombudsman is autonomous and independent agency in relation towards the State bodies.

In accordance with the law, the Human Rights Ombudsman regulates its organisation and work in rules and regulations and other general enactments. In the rules and regulations, the ombudsman has provided that a service of the Human Rights Ombudsman is organised within the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman, which is headed by the general secretary of the ombudsman.

Recommendations³¹⁴⁰ made by the Ombudsman described below were applicable in the time of the refugee crisis. Slovenia is no longer on the main migration route, there are currently 259 asylum seekers in Slovenia and almost all of them are in asylum homes.

Following different activities by the Ombudsman, several changes were introduced in Slovenia regarding entry of refugees/migrants; one new entry point and two exit points to the Republic of Austria were established, which enabled better organisation. Situation for refugees/migrants improved as centres had been heated, mobile sanitary containers, beds, blankets provided. In addition, hot meals, the possibility of replacing clothing and footwear, health care was provided. Cooperation between representatives of police and non-governmental organisations was improved, which offered, among other things, assistance in merging families. There was also a change in the fact that the entry centre was led by police representatives, and the exit centre was representatives of the Civil Protection, which greatly facilitated the organisation's work. In the framework of international cooperation, Slovenian police officers received help by police officers from other European countries (e.g. the Czech Republic, Hungary).

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

Slovenian legislation divides persons with access to healthcare into two categories: migrants and persons asking for asylum or international protection.

With regard to migrants, subject to the new Aliens Act, access to healthcare depends on whether they have health insurance or not. Slovenian health care system determines two sorts of health insurances; compulsory and complementary, where the latter provides for additional coverage. Compulsory health insurance is subject to The Law of Healthcare and Health Insurance, while complementary is subject to both The Law of Healthcare and Health Insurance and The Law of Insurance. According to Article 15 of The Law of Healthcare and Health Insurance, the insured people are, among others, persons who are employed in the Republic of Slovenia, persons with permanent residency in Slovenia, recipients of financial assistance under the regulations on the protection of combatants, if they are not insured in any other State, and also citizens of the Republic of Slovenia and foreigners with permanent residence permits under the law that regulates the exercise of rights from public funds, granted the right to payment of contributions for compulsory insurance. If you want to be insured but are not employed or do not meet other requirements, you can also pay it by yourself. In all those cases, you have health insurance and you are entitled to healthcare treatment under the same conditions as other Slovenians.

Additionally, together with the insured person, an employee's health insurance covers also family members.

For migrants seeking asylum or international protection, the right to access to healthcare in Slovenia is regulated with the International Protection Act. According to Article 86, applicants have the right to urgent treatment, which includes emergency medical treatment and emergency transportation, should the doctor decide so. According to that article, applicants also have the right to emergency dental assistance. Furthermore, they have the right to emergency medical treatment, which includes: preservation of vital functions, stopping major bleeding or prevent bleeding, prevent sudden deterioration of health, which could result in permanent damage to individual organs or vital functions, the treatment of shock, services for chronic diseases and conditions, the omission of which would directly and in a short time lead to disability and other permanent injuries or death, the treatment of febrile conditions and prevention of the spread of infection that could lead to a septic state, the treatment and prevention of poisoning, the treatment of bone fractures, sprains and other injuries, where emergency medical assistance is needed, substances with positive and intermediate sheets, in accordance with the list of interchangeable drugs that have a prescription for the treatment of those diseases and conditions. Health care for persons with recognised international protection is determined in Article 98 of International Protection Act. These persons have health insurance based on recognised international protection, if they are not insured on any other basis. Children that were granted international protection are entitled to health care to the same extent and subject to the same conditions as children that have a compulsory health insurance as family members. Same goes for children who attend school after age of 18, but only by the end of education or if they reach the age of 26 first.

Irregularly residing migrants do not themselves have access to free health services. The rule of equality with Slovenian citizens is not applicable to them, except for children who are entitled to free health services based on United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. They are also usually not secured, as they can not be if they are not employed, unless they have tourist insurance. In accordance with Article 24 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child and Article 12 of the United Nations Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination women should have the right to free pregnancies postpartum care and nursing during childbirth, while children are the same access to healthcare as citizens, including with vaccination.

Information on these services are provided by the Ministry of Healthcare and are available at the Asylum Centre of the Republic of Slovenia and at the Centre for Foreigners.

The healthcare of the asylum seeker shall comprise: the right to emergency medical assistance and emergency salvage transport following a doctor's decision and the right to emergency dental care; the right to emergency treatment following the decision of a treating physician, comprising: preserving vital functions, stopping major bleeding or preventing bleeding; the prevention of a sudden deterioration of the state of health which could lead to permanent damage to individual organs or life functions; treatment of shock; services in chronic diseases and conditions, the abandonment of which would lead, directly and in a shorter time, to disability, other permanent health defects or death; treating haemorrhagic conditions and preventing the spread of an infection that could lead to septicaemia; treatment or prevention of poisoning; treatment of fractures of bones or wounds and other injuries in which medical intervention is necessary; medicinal products with positive lists prescribed by prescription for the treatment of those diseases and conditions; the right to health care for women: contraceptives, termination of pregnancy, medical care in pregnancy and childbirth.³¹⁴¹

If they have a basic health insurance, then they enjoy the same services as Slovenian citizens with basic health insurance. If they also have complementary insurance, then they enjoy the same access as Slovenian citizens, who have complementary insurance.

Article 86 of International Protection Act determines special healthcare rights for women, where contraception, abortion, health care during pregnancy and childbirth are included. If a person is vulnerable or has special needs, and under special circumstances also other applicants, he or she has the right to additional health services, where psychotherapeutic assistance, if it is approved and established by the Commission from the fourth paragraph of the said article, is included.

Minor applicants and applicants as unaccompanied minors are entitled to health to the same extent as children who have a compulsory health insurance as family members. Children, attending school after the age of 18, are entitled to health care in the same extent. They are entitled to health care up until they finish school, but only up to the age of 26.

In Slovenia, discrimination is prohibited by the Constitution. According to Article 14, every person has the same rights regardless of nationality, colour of skin, gender, etc. If discrimination occurs, Slovenia has a special body Human Rights Ombudsman, the Advocate of the Principle of Equality and Protection Against Discrimination Act.

The Ombudsman's influence is informal. It is an office without any responsibility for authoritative decision-making; therefore, its power rests on cooperation with the public. The Ombudsman does not use the argument of power, but the power of argument. These arguments, however, are presented through various methods of communication with the public. The employees in the Ombudsman's Office make it a priority to establish relations with various stakeholders. The Ombudsman's basic task is to address initiatives; therefore, initiators are among the most important target stakeholders.

When addressing initiatives and resolving systemic difficulties encountered during this exercise, the Ombudsman enters into relations with national bodies, local government bodies, and public authorities.

Civil society can serve as the Ombudsman's source of information on violations and/or a partner in proactive campaigns. It is also a source of potential initiators and therefore it is the central point to which awareness-raising and empowerment campaigns are directed.

Mass media are also a source of information that the Ombudsman's office can use for its own initiatives; because both mass media and the Ombudsman are engaged in monitoring the activities of public authorities, the media are a greatly appreciated partner in awareness-raising. In performing this role, the mass media hold up a mirror to the Ombudsman; however, they themselves are also potential violators of individuals' rights, particularly the right to privacy.

³¹⁴¹ Article 24 of the Rules on the modalities and conditions for ensuring the rights of asylum seekers and aliens who have been granted a special form of protection

In cooperation with similar foreign institutions and international and intergovernmental organisations, the Ombudsman acquires information and know-how in protecting human rights and liberties, and transfers this know-how and experience to other stakeholders.³¹⁴²

The Advocate of the Principle of Equality³¹⁴³ is the Slovenian national Equality body and independent and autonomous state institution with a mandate to prevent and eliminate discrimination. Its main tasks are related to awareness raising and promotion of equality, support and assistance to victims of discrimination as well as non-binding decision-making with recommendation issuing regarding the reported cases of discrimination on various grounds. The Advocate of the Principle of Equality was established as an independent and autonomous national equality body in 2016 with the Protection against Discrimination Act. The new Advocate of the Principle of Equality (Head of equality body) was elected in October 2016, by the national parliament, upon the proposal of the President of the Republic, on the basis of the Protection against Discrimination Act.

Until 2016, the Advocate used to be a special post, not a legal entity and is nominated by the Government for a fixed period of 5 years. The Advocate's position and mandate is regulated by the Act. The Advocate first operated within the Office for Equal Opportunities (hereby and after OEO) which was established in February 2001 by the decision of the government (internal organisational act) as a successor of the former Office for Women's Policy (originally established in July 1992). OEO's duties were predominantly concerned with policy making in gender mainstreaming. OEO was abolished in April 2012 and its task are now performed by the Ministry of Labour, Family, Social Affairs and Equal Opportunities.³¹⁴⁴

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

The foundations for the right to education of migrant children were set up in 2007, when the Strategy for the Integration of Children, Students and Students of Migrants into the System of Education in the Republic of Slovenia was adopted, previously with the Roma Education and Training Strategy in the Republic of Slovenia (2004 and later with the Guidelines for the Education of Children of Foreigners in Kindergartens and Schools (2009), supplemented as the Guidelines for the Integration of Children of Immigrants in Kindergartens and Schools (2012) and the Code of Intercultural Dialogue for Adult Education (2010).³¹⁴⁵

³¹⁴⁵ Republika Slovenija, Ministrstvo za izobraževanje, znanost in šport, VKLJUČEVANJE OTROK PRISELJENCEV V SLOVENSKI VZGOJNO-IZOBRAŽEVALNI SISTEM,

The strategy for involving children, pupils and students of migrants in the system of education in Slovenia, states that according to the provisions of the law on education, the children of foreign nationals residing in the Republic of Slovenia have the right to enrol in elementary and secondary schools under the same conditions as children of Slovenian citizens. Citizens of other EU Member States, Slovenes without Slovenian citizenship and refugees can be educated under the same conditions as Slovenian citizens, while other foreign nationals are on the principle of reciprocity (on the basis of international agreements, the Minister of Education determines the number of enrolment places for these students). In the law on kindergartens, children of foreign nationals are not specifically mentioned, but the law states that pre-school education is conducted according to the principles of equal opportunities for children and parents, taking into account the differences between children and the right to choose and different.

Children of illegal migrants may be prevented from enrolling in free elementary school as they can not provide the necessary official documents, such as a valid license for residence, birth certificate or medical records. Nevertheless, in accordance with Article 28 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child free primary education should be guaranteed to all children.

Migrant pupils are entitled to be given information about different options and programmes, offered by Slovenian secondary education during their primary education or at the time of following their further education.

Their school curriculum is the same as for other national children, but they are given additional lessons in Slovenian language. In certain cases, they are allowed to listen to lessons in their mother tongue.

Within the framework of the guidelines and ideas for kindergartens, the concern for learning the Slovene language is envisaged, but without a detailed breakdown as it is written for primary / secondary schools and boarding schools. Consequently, additional technical assistance for teaching Slovene is provided only for schooling children.

The Ministry of Education, Science and Sport, provides the schools that have included migrant pupils in the first and second year of schooling with hours of additional professional help in learning Slovene. The current legislation (Article 81 of the Law on Organisation and Financing of Education and Training) provides a normative basis for the provision of funds from the state budget, both for the study of Slovene as well as for the teaching of the mother tongue for immigrant students and pupils involved in regular primary and secondary education.

Additional professional assistance is provided to immigrant pupils who are studying in the Republic of Slovenia for the first year, but since the school year 2010/2011 this kind of assistance is provided also to immigrant pupils in the second year of schooling. On the basis of the applications received from the schools for the approval of the hours for immigrant pupils, it is evident that in the first year about one thousand children are enrolled and in the second year of education there are 500 to 800 immigrant children with a trend of increasing this number.

<http://www.mizs.gov.si/si/vkljucevanje_priseljencev_v_sistem_vzgoje_in_izobrazevanja/splosno/>, accessed 29 June 2017 [Slovenian].

By providing means for learning Slovene, the Ministry also enables and supports the implementation of the teaching of mother tongues and cultures. For several years, some elementary schools for immigrant pupils have been teaching classes in Albanian, Bosnian, Finnish, Croatian, Macedonian, German, Dutch, Serbian, Russian and Ukrainian.

In 2008, the Rules on the Assessment of Knowledge and the Advancement of Primary School Students included a provision that allowed the possibility of adjusting the assessment for immigrant pupils. In accordance with the Rules on the Assessment of Knowledge and the Advancement of Primary School Students, students and pupils who are foreign citizens or stateless persons residing in the Republic of Slovenia may, in agreement with their parents, adapt the methods and deadlines for assessing knowledge, the number of grades and other. Knowledge of an immigrant pupil can be assessed according to his progress in achieving the objectives or standards of knowledge defined in the curriculum. Adjustments are decided by the teacher assembly. Adjustments for assessing knowledge take up to two school years. Pupils immigrants from other countries may not be assessed from individual subjects at the end of the school year in which they are enrolled in primary school in the Republic of Slovenia for the first time, and progress to the next grade. The teacher council chooses on the proposal of the teacher.

Pupils migrants from other countries whose mother tongue is not Slovene and are first to be enrolled in elementary school in the Republic of Slovenia in grades 6 and 9, carry out national checking of knowledge on a voluntary basis during the school year. The Rules on Norms and Standards for the Implementation of Educational Programs and Educational Programs in the Field of Secondary Education stipulate in Article 16 the obligation to organise a Slovenian language course for students who, due to ignorance or lack of knowledge of Slovene, need language and help with the language, taking into account professional assessments by the teacher on the level of their knowledge and understanding of the Slovene language. The criteria for forming groups is the number of students enrolled in the previous paragraph of this article and the expert's assessment of the level of their knowledge and understanding of the Slovenian language: up to 6 students, regardless of their language skills: mixed group - intensive 35-hours course; 7 to 12 students, regardless of their language skills: mixed group – 70-hours course; up to 16 students with the same (pre) knowledge of the language: homogeneous group – 70-hours course.

For pupils, the school organizes a course only for the first two years of their education in the Republic of Slovenia.

Concerning the discrimination of migrant children, Slovenia is bound by the Directive Implementing the Principle of Equal Treatment of Persons Irrespective of Racial or Ethnic Origin (2000/43 / EC), which establishes guidelines for combating discrimination based on racial or ethnic origin in various fields, including in education.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

Slovenian law follows the ratified Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the Europe Region. Hence, Slovenia has established a body for the evaluation of education, called ENIC-NARIC centre, the jurisdiction of which is determined by the Recognition and Evaluation of Education Act.

In Slovenia, we have two different types of recognition; one is for different matters, and the other for continuing education in Slovenia.

According to Article 14 of the Recognition and Evaluation of Education Act, the second procedure starts with a submission of claim on the prescribed form. The form needs to be submitted to the educational institutions in the Republic of Slovenia, where the applicant wants to continue their education. Minister for Higher Education prescribes, which documents need to be submitted in addition to the prescribed form. In case there is doubt about the authenticity of the list of education, a verification from the original issuer or other competent authority of the country of origin of the certificate or diploma will be asked. During the procedure, also comparison of the criteria set out in Article 16 of this law verifies the placement of foreign education in the country of origin and determine eligibility for access to the desired educational program. In case where only a part of the education was completed, only this part will be inspected for the recognition for the purpose of continuing education in Slovenia. The educational institution shall issue a decision and hand it to the applicant within two months from the date that complete application was received. In case when foreign education was completed but substantial differences in the scope and level of completed educational program compared with the Slovenian educational program are shown, the applicant can get the opportunity to continue his/her education, as he would get recognition of a partly completed education.

The other procedure is an assessment of education. According to Article 7 of the Recognition and Evaluation of Education Act, ENIC-NARIC body will issue an opinion on the education if an application by an applicant has been submitted. Opinion shall be issued within two months from receiving the complete application or upon the expiry of the time limit for the supplementation of the document according to the second paragraph of this Article. Where the assessment of education referred to in the third or fourth paragraph of Article 5 is required to be made (i.e. education that is attested through the certificate of fully completed education at the tertiary education level shall not be subject to education assessment, if such education lasts less than one semester or half year, or is assessed with less than 30 credits according to the European Credit Transfer System (ECTS), or if education attested through supporting documents of completed language, computer and other courses, professional examinations, vocational qualifications and other vocational and professional training shall not be subject to education assessment), or in a case not involving education that is to be attested through a certificate of a fully completed education, the ENIC-NARIC centre shall return the documentation and notify the applicant that such education is not the subject to assessment under this act.

In case where the request relates to the assessment of education to be attested through a certificate of education that had already been the subject of assessment, the ENIC-NARIC centre shall return the documentation and send a notification informing the applicant that the education is not the subject of assessment unless the applicant submits new information in the meaning of the third (information on the status of education institution and education program), fourth (information on education attained, field or discipline of education, and its level in the country of origin), fifth (information on the obtained name, title or designated level of education or education program in the country of origin) and sixth (information on the rights obtained on the basis of education in the country of origin) indents of Article 8 of this Act. All documents in the procedure for the assessment of education, including the opinion issued, will be sent to the applicant by registered mail with the notice of receipt. In case where it is established that the opinion contains an obvious error in writing or numbers, the ENIC-NARIC centre shall, ex officio or at the proposal of an applicant, rectify the error on its own by issuing a corrected, new opinion, which shall replace the preceding one.

ENIC-NARIS centre is a body for the evaluation of education, when an obvious error is made in writing or numbers, the ENIC-NARIC centre shall also replace the mistaken document. Educational institution is obligated to accept the submitted form and provide a decision within 2 months. Minister for Higher Education determines which documents need to be submitted with an application.

According to Article 18 the ministries responsible for primary, secondary, tertiary and higher education to provide expert support to ENIC-NARIC centre and educational institutions in the exercise of its functions under this Act.

Slovenia does not predict any special procedures for refugees/asylum seekers or other vulnerable migrants.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

Migrants will have the possibility to participate and vote after they obtain the citizenship, obtaining the status of a person recognised under the custom or law as being a legal member of a sovereign State. The Slovenian legislation allows migrants to participate in elections to the municipal councils, but not for mayors. The law doesn't allow migrants to vote at National elections (presidential and parliamentary) and take part as regular members of political parties. Nevertheless, the EU nationals are allowed to vote at the European Parliament elections.

The exclusion of migrants from participating in political decisions in Slovenia is determined by law, in any case migrants have the rights to the People's initiative as Slovenia is a democratic republic³¹⁴⁶.

Procedures that may facilitate the participation of migrants in political decisions in their country of origin, depend on the country of origin.

There are no forms of redress if migrants cannot participate like citizens with citizenship in political decisions in their country of residence (considering Slovenia). It depends on the law of the country of origin.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

Migrants can acquire citizenship in Republic of Slovenia by naturalisation. According to Article 10 of the Citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia Act, the competent authority can, at its discretion, adopt the person applying for naturalisation to the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, if this is in accordance with national interests. Besides, the applicant must meet the following conditions: the age of at least 18 years of age, release from the current citizenship or if the applicant can prove that he/she will be, if he/she will get the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, the person has actually been living in Slovenia for 10 years, of which the last 5 years before submitting an application in Slovenia continuously, and has a lawful status of an alien, the person has a guaranteed permanent source of income in at least the amount that enables material and social security to him/her and to persons who he/she must support, the person has a command of the Slovene language for the purposes of everyday communication, which he/she shall prove with a certificate verifying that he/she passed a basic level exam in Slovenia, the person has not been sentenced to a prison sentence longer than three months, nor conditionally sentenced to prison sentence with probation longer than one year, the person's residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia has not been annulled, the person's naturalisation poses no threat to the public order, security or defence of the State, the person has settled all tax obligations, persons need to give an oath to respect the free democratic constitutional order according to the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia.

Furthermore, Article 12 of the aforementioned Act prescribes adoption under facilitated circumstances. Thus, the competent authority may, if it is in accordance with the national interests, with discretion adopt the Slovenian emigrants and their descendants to the fourth generation in a straight line to the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, if they have actually lived in Slovenia for at least one year prior to submitting the application, and if they have lawful status of an alien together with meeting the requirements from 1 (he is 18 years old), 4 (the person has a guaranteed permanent source of income in at least the amount that enables material and social security to him/her and to persons who he/she must support), 5 (the person has a command of the Slovene language for the purposes of everyday communication, which he/she shall prove with a certificate verifying that he/she passed a basic level exam in Slovenia), 6 (the person has not been sentenced to a prison sentence longer than three months, nor conditionally sentenced to prison sentence with probation longer than one year), 7 (the person's residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia has not been annulled), 8 (the person's naturalisation poses no threat to the public order, security or defence of the State), 9 (the person has settled all tax obligations), and 10 (persons need to give an oath to respect the free democratic constitutional order according to the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia) point of the first paragraph of Article 10 of the same Act. The competent authority may also, if it is in accordance with national interests, with discretion adopt to the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia a person, who have been married to a citizen of the Republic of Slovenia for at least three years, if they actually lived in Slovenia uninterruptedly for at least one year prior to submitting the application, if the applicant has a lawful status of an alien and meets the requirements determined in 1 (he is 18 years old), 2 (release form the current citizenship or if the applicant can prove that he/she will be, if he/she will get the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia), 3 (the person has actually been living in Slovenia for 10 years, of which the last 5 years before submitting an application in Slovenia continuously, and has a lawful status of an alien), 4 (the person has a guaranteed permanent source of income in at least the amount that enables material and social security to him/her and to persons who he/she must support), 5 (the person has a command of the Slovene language for the purposes of everyday communication, which he/she shall prove with a certificate verifying that he/she passed a basic level exam in Slovenia), 6 (the person has not been sentenced to a prison sentence longer than three months, nor conditionally sentenced to prison sentence with probation longer than one year), 7 (the person's residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia has not been annulled), 8 (the person's naturalisation poses no threat to the public order, security or defence of the State), 9 (the person has settled all tax obligations), and 10 (persons need to give an oath to respect the free democratic constitutional order according to the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia) point of the first paragraph of Article 10 of this law. It is considered that the continued residence requirement is met even if the person has not been physically present in the territory of the Republic of Slovenia due to the reasons, which on their side or on side of the spouse do not count as a break of the stay. Circumstances under which, despite the fact that the applicant was absent for continued residence are fulfilled, are determined by the Government of the Republic of Slovenia.

The competent authority may also under discretion adopt the person to citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, if it is in the national interest, an applicant with a refugee status recognised under the applicable law, if they had actually lived in Slovenia uninterruptedly for five years before submitting an application, and if he/she meets the conditions described in points 1 (is 18 years old), 4 (has a guaranteed permanent source of income in at least the amount that enables material and social security to him/her and to persons who he/she must support), 5 (has command of the Slovene language for the purposes of everyday communication, which he/she shall prove with a certificate verifying that he/she passed a basic level exam in Slovenia), 6 (has not been sentenced to a prison sentence longer than three months, nor conditionally sentenced to prison sentence with probation longer than one year), 7 (the person's residence permit in the Republic of Slovenia has not been annulled), 8 (the person's naturalisation poses no threat to the public order, security or defence of the State), 9 (the person has settled all tax obligations), and 10 (they need to give an oath to respect the free democratic constitutional order according to the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia) of the first paragraph of Article 10 of this law. Same goes for applicants without citizenship (stateless persons).

In certain circumstances it is allowed to have double citizenship, such as in the case of admission of a minor child into the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia on the basis of Article 14 of the Citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia Act, Slovenia does not prescribe the condition that the child has a remission from previous citizenship. Legislation also does not foresee that such person should later renounce his previous citizenship or decide between Slovenian and foreign citizenship. Same applies when alien is accepting into the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia in the context of extraordinary naturalization, the applicant is allowed to maintain the current citizenship. Furthermore, when acquiring citizenship by birth, it is possible to obtain dual citizenship in cases where the child is born in a mixed law, because citizenship is acquired according to this principle by parents. Thus, the child can acquire the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia according to the parent who is a citizen of the Republic of Slovenia, and in accordance with the regulations of the state of which the parent is a citizen, he can acquire the citizenship of that country according to the other parent. Because when acquiring citizenship by birth, Slovenia has no influence on the prevention of dual citizenship. The emergence of dual citizenship is the result of the same or similar forms of citizenship in different countries.

Finally, Slovenian legislation does not prescribe an automatic loss of Slovenian citizenship in cases when a Slovenian citizen acquires the citizenship of a foreign country. No country can interfere with the sovereignty of another country, which is why Slovenia cannot recognize citizenship of a foreign country. It is up to the foreign country whether they will ask the applicant to give up her/his Slovenian citizenship in the procedure for acquiring its citizenship. For the avoidance of dual citizenship, most countries require that their citizenship is terminated either voluntarily or automatically.

The administrative unit is competent for the conduct of the procedure for the acquisition of Slovenian citizenship. The ministry responsible for internal affairs is the audit authority in these procedures.

The filing of an application is the basic condition for the initiation of the procedure for the admission to Slovenian citizenship. By signing the application, the applicant confirms that he or she has decided to obtain Slovenian citizenship out of his or her own free will.

The application can be filed with any administrative unit. The administrative unit in the area in which the applicant has registered permanent or temporary residence is competent for the conduct of the procedure and making a decision in this matter. A curriculum vitae and supporting documents on the fulfilment of the conditions laid down by law need to be enclosed in the application. The administrative body checks ex officio whether the following conditions are met: the residence of the person in the Republic of Slovenia has not been annulled, the admission of the person to the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia does not represent a threat to the public order, security or defence of the country, no criminal proceedings are in progress against the person in the Republic of Slovenia and the person was not convicted by final judgement for a criminal offence in the Republic of Slovenia, the person was issued a work permit for the Republic of Slovenia, the tax liabilities of the person are paid (in compliance with special consent from the person).

A positive decision of the administrative unit allowing a person to obtain citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia or an assurance that the administrative unit has decided that the person is to be admitted to the citizenship of the Republic of Slovenia, if he or she submits the decision on release from his or her current citizenship within two years, must be submitted to audit by the ministry responsible for internal affairs. If the ministry responsible for internal affairs gives its consent to the decision or assurance of the administrative unit, the decision forms the basis for the acquisition of citizenship, and the assurance forms the basis for the lodging of the application for release from the current citizenship. If the decision or assurance in the audit procedure is issued by the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Slovenia, an audit is not required.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

In performing its tasks in 2015 the Migration Office cooperated with responsible state bodies, locally responsible centres for social work, administrative units, and national as well as international organisations and non-governmental organisations.

The report puts an emphasis on the most important activities performed in 2015 by the Migration Office. These are the modifications of the legislation concerning aliens and international protection, preparation of a special national plan for a rapid response in case of an increased number of international protection applicants; preparation and implementation of the relocation plan for 587 persons; provision of statistics in the area of legal migration, international protection and integration; overview of programmes performed by resources from European Integration Fund (EIF) for third country nationals from 2007-2013 and the European Refugee Fund from 2008-2013 (ERF), as well as the preparation and monitoring of the programmes regarding the new financial perspective 2014-2020. Within its regular tasks the Migration Office actively participated also in the implementation of the yearly European Migration Network programme (EMN), European Asylum Support Office (EASO) and National Contact Point for Integration (NCPI).

In 2015, Slovenia began to draw on the European resources from a new financial perspective – European Asylum Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF). In 2014 Migration office participated in the preparation of the preparation of the AMIF National Programme approved on 18 March 2015 by the Slovenian Government. The projects defined in the plan are sorted by contents, so called special objectives and each objective refers to a specific type of EU policies which is under the basic regulations financed through AMIF. It is envisaged to implement the measures concerning international protection, legal migration and return of third-country nationals that illegally reside in Slovenia. Drawing on AMIF resources is planned for the period 2015-2022 in the amount of EUR 22.632.669,00. Slovenia is supposed to contribute EUR 4.305.192,00.³¹⁴⁷

In 2015, Slovenia has started implementing the programmes for providing integration assistance to a larger group of aliens. For the performance of courses »Initial Integration of Immigrants« in the period of three years EUR 1.365.000,00 were allocated.

Performance of the programme Initial Integration of Immigrants and a programme adopted based on a publicity applicable programme of Slovenia as the second and foreign language.

For migrants Slovenia organise language courses, the name of the program is “Začetna integracija priseljencev or ZIP”. The program is focused to learn the Slovenian language, but during the lessons migrants come in touch with Slovenia history, culture and Slovenian Constitution. For those migrants, which are present at least 80 % of the programme (60+) or 120 or 180 hours, the Republic of Slovenia pays the participation of the examination for Slovenian language at first step.

The program ZIP is one of the base programmes, which Slovenia is offering to migrants to help them by the integration.

In 2016 Republic of Slovenia devoted to the ZIP programme EUR 748.863,19 (tax included). In that period 1.765 persons have taken part in the programme, 40,62% men and 59,38% women.

In the first six months in 2017 for the program ZIP were spent EUR 320.512,82 (tax included).

In that period 527 people take part at the program ZIP, 43,45 % men and 56,55 % women.

The program ZIP is organized by contract partners, normally by Human Universities and language schools.

The participation at the first examinations, in year 2016 Republic of Slovenia paid for 1,031 persons, with the cost of EUR 123.782,00 (tax included). In the first semester of 2017 the participation at the first examination was paid for 504 persons, with the cost of EUR 61.456,00 (tax included).

The second program, which does not directly argue migrants, started in July 2016 and will continue for 18 months. The purposed of the program is to help the communication between migrants and health workers. The prevision of the amount for this program was EUR 99.239,67 (tax included). The first year was created a multi-language manual for the communication in health, and it helps workers to communicate in seven languages. There were also organised trainings for health workers. The program is organized by the Philosophical faculty Ljubljana Universe with partners (one of them is also the Medical faculty).

The costs of the programmes are partially covered by the Republic of Slovenia and the rest from AMIF. Partners are chosen through public orders.

Conclusions

In Republic of Slovenia, an asylum seeker shall express an intention to file an application for an asylum to anyone, but the body responsible for the asylum procedure is the Ministry of the Interior, specifically the Department for International Protection. They are assisted by other institutions, such as the police, which is in charge of identifying the person and determining the way of entering into the country. The police also deliver a person to an asylum centre. Afterwards, a State official issues a card, which also serves as a permit for a person to stay in the country.

Due to high numbers of asylum seekers entering the country, Slovenia has the power to decide quotas – how many residence permits can be issued annually to EU and non-EU citizens. Nevertheless, there are several institutions that provide that one's rights are respected, such as the Human Rights Ombudsman and the Office of the Government of the Republic of Slovenia for Equal Opportunities.

Position of migrants is subject to several acts, as prescribed above. Nevertheless, the European Court of Human Rights has not issued any judgment regarding migration and asylum in Slovenia. In the future, Slovenia has yet to follow the recommendations given by the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance as they did not provide any information regarding the process by 23 June 2017. Country has been advised to ratify the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level, and International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as free legal aid and full financial support for asylum seekers living in private accommodation.

Introduction

The following work is an investigation carried out by young researchers belonging to the legal research group of ELSA Spain in relation to migration law and the questions raised by its regulation in Spanish law.

Today, the troubled geopolitical circumstances in some countries of the Middle East, such as Syria and Afghanistan, have triggered a migration flow as Europe has not seen since the Second World War. European countries face waves of migration and the management of these issues requires strong and rational regulation to prevent defenselessness, abuse or human rights violations of these people. Spain also has a relevant history regarding migration, as it has alternated the roles of sending and receiving country throughout its history. But this time the Spanish legislator is facing a much more complex situation, mainly due to the backgrounds of the refugees and the great diversity that exists among them all.

The Spanish constitution, which is relatively recent in comparison with the constitutions of other Council of Europe member countries, refers to the right of asylum, but delegates its development to laws. For this reason, information is provided on Spanish legal texts as well as judgments and norms with legal status. With this paper, we aim to provide an answer to the main problems raised by the development of Spanish migration law and to analyze the most important problems it faces. For this reason, information is provided on Spanish legal texts as well as judgments and norms with legal status.

We hope it will be as enlightening and enriching for you as it has been for us.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum.

The right to asylum in Spain is set forth under Article 13.4 of the Constitution, which provides the terms under which citizens from other countries and stateless persons may enjoy the right to asylum in Spain will be determined by law. In 1978, Spain signed the 1951 Geneva Convention and the 1967 New York Protocol. Law 5/1984 of March 26th was passed as mandated by the Constitution, governing the right to asylum and refugee status. Said standard of law was amended by Law 9/1994 of May 19th. Subsequently, Law 12/2009 of October 30th was enacted, governing the right to asylum and subsidiary protection (LRASP), which entered effect on November 20, 2009³¹⁴⁸. LRASP was amended by Law 2/2014 of March 25th, which has added a paragraph to Article 40.1 for fully incorporating Article 2.j) of Directive 2011/95/EU of December 13th³¹⁴⁹.

The LRASP provides three types of international protection: conventional asylum for refugees, subsidiary protection, and exceptional protection for humanitarian reasons³¹⁵⁰.

Under the LRASP a refugee is an individual from a non-EU country with a well-founded fear of being persecuted in his or her country for reasons of race, religion, nationality, political opinion, membership of a certain social group, gender, or sexual orientation, who is outside his or her country of nationality and, because of such fears, may not or does not want to return to his or her country. The status of refugee may also be granted to a stateless individual who is away from his or her country of habitual residence for the same fears, and may not or does not want to return to that country³¹⁵¹.

The LRASP provides that foreigners who do not qualify as refugees may obtain subsidiary protection if there are reasons to believe that if they return to their country they would be exposed to a genuine risk of suffering any of the following³¹⁵²:

- a death sentence
- torture or inhuman or degrading treatment, or
- serious threats against their life or integrity because of indiscriminate violence.

In addition to conventional refugee status and subsidiary protection, the LRASP provides an additional international exceptional protection for humanitarian reasons to those that do not meet the requirements of the two previous categories. Exceptional protection may be granted to those who are in a vulnerable situation, such as minors; unaccompanied minors; the disabled or elderly; pregnant women; single parents with minors; individuals who have been tortured, raped, or subjected to any other serious forms of psychological or physical violence; and victims of human trafficking. In these cases, the government may grant authorization to remain in the country under the general immigration rules³¹⁵³.

1.2. What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

Access to the asylum procedure on the part of all those persons who may need international protection is one of the greatest challenges facing the Spanish and European system. Law 12/2009 makes no mention as to the locations at which the applications for international protection can be lodged. Royal Decree 203/1995 of February 10th, in force regarding all that

1.2.1. Application Procedure on Spanish Territory

First, any applications which do not correspond to Spain but to another EU country are not admitted, as are those which are repetitions of previous applications, or those submitted by nationals of other Member States.

If the person is on Spanish territory, he or she must apply for international protection within a period of one month from his entry into Spain or from the moment the events justifying his request began. Moreover, he must submit the application in person. If he cannot do this for physical or legal reasons, he may authorize another person to do it on his behalf.

Secondly, this individual will have to attend an interview in which he must answer a series of questions regarding his personal data, and in which he must explain all the reasons for which he is applying for international protection and how he arrived in Spain. The interview will be conducted by a manager who will tell him what to do and help him to complete it to establish all the relevant facts.

Finally, this person will be notified within one month as to whether his application has been admitted or not and, if admitted, if an urgent procedure will be applied. If his application is not admitted for processing, he must leave Spain, unless he is authorized to stay. In addition, in case his application is not admitted, he may appeal to the courts.

1.2.2. Application Procedure at the Spanish Border

If the person has submitted his application at the Spanish Border, he must remain there until a decision has been made regarding his application. The authorities must decide within four days. If his application is admitted, he may enter Spain. If his application is not admitted or is rejected, he may request a re-examination of his case (called a case review) within two days from the moment he is informed of the non-admittance. The authorities will have two days to respond. If the appeal is rejected, he must leave Spain.

1.2.3. Who decides over international protection applications?

All applications, regardless of who submits them, are examined by the Office of Asylum and Refuge. In addition, the decisions are made by the Ministry of the Interior. For decisions on applications admitted for processing, the Ministry of the Interior decides at the proposal of the Interministerial Commission for Asylum and Refuge³¹⁵⁶.

The OAR (Office of Asylum and Refuge) may reject any application for international protection if Spain does not have jurisdiction to process the petition in accordance with international agreements; when the application does not meet the legal requirements for its processing; when the applicant already has refugee status in another state; when the applicant comes from a safe third country; when the application is a resubmission of a previous one already denied; and when the applicant is a national of another EU country³¹⁵⁷.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

For the last 15 years, the political, sociological and legal context of the immigration has radically changed. The general rights and freedoms of migrants in Spain are regulated in the first title of the “LO 4/2000”. This law introduced decisive changes to the former existing law axed around the immigrant integration, by widening the rights of the regulars’ immigrants and recognizing a respectable number of rights to the immigrants without documents.

The direct reference to migration contained in the Spanish Constitution of 1978 is scarce. This mention is limited to its Article 13.1 CE ‘Migrants in Spain will enjoy the same public freedoms that are guaranteed in this Title, in the terms that Treaties and Laws stipulate’. The legislator is by this means submitted to interpret and configure migrant’s rights and freedoms in accordance with the contents of International Treaties like the European Agreement on Human Rights. In this sense, the Spanish Constitutional Court wanted to clarify the protection that Migrants’ rights are provided with under Spanish legislation: Although all migrants’ rights and freedoms are configured by Law, they are still constitutional rights and in consequence, shall be provided with constitutional protection.

2.1. Right to admission

All legal provisions regarding the issue of non-European migrant’s right to admission and the general immigration process in the country of Spain are stated in the Ley Orgánica 4/2000. Its Article 25 LOE establishes the different requirements that shall be fulfilled by all migrants trying to enter the country. As a special procedure for vulnerable persons, those requirements will not be applied to migrants that request to be protected by the right of asylum at the time of their entrance into the country.

³¹⁵⁷ LRASP art. 20.1, B.O.E., Oct. 31, 2009, <http://www.boe.es/boe/dias/2009/10/31/pdfs/BOE-A-2009-17242.pdf>

The enumeration of the requirements is developed as follows: All migrants that claim to enter Spain shall do it through the authorized access points; and they must enter with a passport or any other travel document that confirms their identity and that is considered valid according to the international agreements subscribed by Spain (Article 25.1 LOE). Additionally, migrants must provide all the documents that are legally stipulated as necessary to justify the aim and reason of the stay in the country, and also give credit to having or being able to obtain a sufficient mean of profit to sustain themselves. This same article establishes an exception to this general rule: when exceptional circumstances recommend doing so, it will be possible to authorize the entrance of migrants that do not fulfill the necessary requirements.

Diverse types of visas are sued by the Spanish Institutions. Article 25 bis LOE lists the typology of visas that will allow the entrance and stay in the country: a) Transit visa; b) Stay visa: authorizes a continued stay or consecutive stays of a maximum total period of months per semester; c) Residence visa: allows to reside but does not authorize migrants to work or practice any profession; d) Residence and work visa: allows the entrance and stay for a maximum period of 3 months. Before the end of that period, migrants under this type of visa must have started the labor or professional activity they were previously authorized to perform. It will also be necessary that the worker be assigned a social security number before the end of that period of 3 months; e) Studies visa: allows to stay in Spain with the purpose of carrying out courses, studies, investigation programmes, exchange programmes, volunteering programmes or non-remunerated internships; f) Investigation visa: allows the migrant to stay in Spain to develop an investigation programme as long as an agreement has previously been signed with an investigation institution.

Regarding the regulation of the expedition of the visas to enter Spain, Article 27.1 LOE states that the visas 'will be requested and issued in the Diplomatic Missions and Consular Offices of Spain, except in the case that any other provision establishes otherwise'. However, requesting a visa following the applicable administrative requirements does not necessary result in the solicitor being granted the authorization to enter the country. The issue of the visa might be rejected under specific circumstances, but the rejection to issue certain visas (as stay visas or transit visas) must state the grounds on which it stands (Article 27 LOE).

Lastly, entrance in the country can be denied on the Article 26 grounds. It might seem obvious that migrants that have been banished from the country are not able to enter back in Spain until the end of the prohibition, but all those other migrants that do not fulfill the requirements stated in Article 25 will be denied the entrance as well. In this last case migrants will be informed of the available appeals and will be provided with legal assistance if it was needed (Article 26.2).

2.2. Right to remain in the country

Upon admission in the country all migrants are entitled to the Constitutional protection of their rights under the terms that Article 13.1 CE sets. According to Article 29 LOE, migrants can remain in Spain in the situation of stay or residency. It is important to differentiate between those two terms because both situations authorize migrants to remain in the country for a different amount of time, and might grant migrants a different legal status or involve work permissions.

The condition of “Stay” allows migrants to remain in Spanish territory for a period of time that shall not be longer than 90 days (3 months). When that period expires, in order to remain in the country, it will be necessary to obtain a residency permission or a “Stay term” extent (Article 30.1,2 LOE). International students and migrants undertaking exchange or volunteering programmes will be subject to this condition of “Stay”.

In the other hand, under the condition of “Residence”, those migrants who are residency permission holders, shall be considered legal residents of Spain (Article 30 bis). Residence can be either temporary or permanent. Article 31 states that temporary residence “allows to remain in Spain for a period that might vary between a minimum of 90 days and a maximum period of 5 years”. This type of authorization does not involve a permission to work. Migrants must prove that they have enough income or resources to sustain themselves. Long-term residency allows migrants to reside and work in Spain for an indefinite term, in ‘equal conditions with Spanish nationals’ (Article 32.1). Those migrants who have had temporary residence in Spain –or any other Member State- for 5 continued years have the right to obtain a long-term residency permission (Article 32.2). Spanish legislation also recognizes a migrant’s right to obtain a long-term residency permission in Spain even when migrants been issued a long-term residency permission in another Member State.

2.3. Right to leave the country

The right to leave the country is regulated under Article 28, which declares that ‘the exit from Spanish territory will be free with the exception of what is stated in the Criminal Code and other circumstances that could be regulated in this Law. Only when public health or national security is at risk will the Minister of Interior have the legal authority to dictate prohibitions of exit. These prohibitions must always be individually dictated. Apart from this, no obligations need be complied with if immigrants voluntarily wish to leave the country.

Next section, Article 28.3, adds that the exit from Spanish territory will be mandatory when: ‘a) a court order commands the exit from the country, in accordance with the Criminal Code; b) an expulsion or return order has been issued by an administrative resolution, in accordance to this Law; c) working migrants agree to return to their countries within a certain period, and that timeline has expired’³¹⁵⁸.

The last situation, the expulsion of migrants, implies the prohibition to enter Spanish territory and every other country that has signed an agreement with Spain on this matter. In addition to this, the EU has a set of rules and policies that cover this issue. The Charter of Fundamental Rights prohibit collective expulsion and the removal of individuals if there is a risk to their life or of other serious harm³¹⁵⁹.

³¹⁵⁹ Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (2000/C 364/01)

2.4. Differences between EU members and non-EU members.

In 2015, while 2,7 million immigrants from third countries came into the EU only 1,9 million of European Union residents migrated to a different EU State³¹⁶⁰. This unevenness clashes with the real situation that third countries migrants face when they enter the European Union. The rights of third-country nationals entering or staying the EU are often not respected. This is sometimes because of insufficient implementation of legislation, poor knowledge of fundamental rights, or inadequately trained civil servants, and sometimes simply due to discrimination and xenophobia³¹⁶¹.

Specific Migration regulation will be applicable to all nationals from the Member States and from every State that is a party to the EES Agreement. These provisions have been implemented in Spain under the 'Real Decreto 240/2007'³¹⁶².

While most provisions of the general migration regulation are directed to every particular migrant, the 'Real Decreto 240/2007' shall also be applicable, in equal conditions, to the family members of European citizens regarding of their own nationality, with the only requirement that the purpose of their entry is to reunite or join their European family members (Article 1.2).

European citizens will not need to use a passport nor a visa to enter Spanish territory, since Article 4 establishes that a national identity document will be enough³¹⁶³. All citizens subject to this regulation have a right to exit Spain and enter a different Member State (Article 5). Every time an Exit request is rejected, such resolution must state the reasons behind it (Article 5.3).

Finally, the grounds for rejection of the European Citizens Migration rights are much more reduced than in the general legislation. These grounds might be: public security, public health, and other provisions of the Criminal Code (Article 15). The lack of the requested documentation will not be a reason for such rejection, since Article 4.4 states the obligation of the public authorities to provide European citizens with helpful information to obtain the lacking documentation they will need to enter the country.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

As for this subject, the Spanish Government has its own General Secretary for Immigration and Emigration, which is integrated inside the framework of the Employment and Social Security Ministry³¹⁶⁴.

Therefore, starting with the Employment and Social Security Ministry, it is the one in charge of the proposal and execution of the Government's politics in matter of employment and social security, as well as the migration politics. Its organization chart consists, as disposed in Article 8 of the Royal Decree 424/2016³¹⁶⁵, November 11th, of:

- The Minister. Main organ of the Ministry. Its main functions are those also assigned to the Ministry previously stated.
- The Minister's Cabinet. Its functions are the immediate assistance to the Minister in the development of its own functions.
- Secretary of State of Employment. The functions assigned consist in developing the government's politics regarding labor relations and employment
- Secretary of State of Social Security. Its main functions are those consisting in the direction of the Government's politics regarding social security, as well as the control of the collaborator entities of the Social Security.
- General Secretary of Immigration and Emigration. In charge of developing the Government's politics regarding migration.
- Sub secretary of Employment and Social Security. It takes charge of the ordinary representation of the Ministry and the direction of its services.

As we can see, the functions of the Ministry are wide and diverse, but since our focus is the one in charge of the Migration policy, we'll be focusing now in the General Secretary of Immigration and Emigration.

We'll be focusing again in the organization chart and main functions of the General Secretary, but, now, we'll have a deeper look at it.

As for the organization chart, established in the Royal Decree 703/2017³¹⁶⁶, July 7th, it goes as it follows:

- The General Secretary
- A Technical Office
- The General Direction of Migrations, in which are included:
 - Permanent Observatory of Immigration
 - General Subdirection of Immigration
 - General Subdirection of Immigrants Integration
 - General Subdirection of Emigration

³¹⁶⁶ <https://www.boe.es/buscar/act.php?id=BOE-A-2017-7979#dd>

- The Spanish Observatory of Racism and Xenophobia
- Two more General Subdirections dependant of the General Secretary:
 - General Subdirection of Planification and Economic Management
 - General Subdirection of Legal Regime

Focusing now on the functions of each of these organisms, these are also explicated in the aforementioned Royal Decree 703/2017, July 7th, and they are:

- General Secretary: Developing the Government's politic regarding immigration and emigration
- Technical Office: Supporting and assisting the General Secretary of Migration
- General Direction of Migrations and the General Subdirections dependant of it: major functions related to the coordination of policies application regarding both immigration and emigration, as well as budgetary and economic matters and integration of migrants' concerns.
- Spanish Observatory of Racism and Xenophobia: its main functions are those related to the recompilation and analysis of all the available information related to racism and xenophobia, in order to recognize the situation and its possible evolution, in order to fight them, as well as the promotion of principle of no discrimination.
- General Subdirection of Planification and Economic Management: mainly, it focuses on the planification of the actuations of economic content, as well as the elaboration of budgetary preliminary projects.
- General Subdirection of Legal Regime: elaboration of legal projects and reports of subjects related to immigration and emigration, as well as the production of legal proposals related with the elaboration, approval, transposition and aplication of European or International rules of migration

All in all, this was a brief exposition of both the main organisms dealing with migration and its main functions. As well as in every other aspect regarding the Public Administration, a well-coordinated organization chart, in which each organism develops its functions properly and responsibly. This aspect becomes even more important in such a delicated matter as the migration is. Specially, focusing on a proper integration and well-being of the immigrants becomes key in the migration policy, so the proper coordination becomes even more important than it would be in other fields.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

4.1. Current national situation

According to the last population figures, presented by the National Statistics Institute (INE), there were 46,440,099 residents in Spain on 1st of January 2016 and 4,417,517 immigrants among them, representing 9.51% of the total population.

The European Union is the origin of almost half of the foreign residents. There are 1.9 million nationals of other member states living in Spain (44,78% of the total immigration). Among them Rumanians are the most important group, being 15.73% of the total immigrant population and the biggest foreign community in Spain. Nationals from other states of the European Union are also remarkable, mainly British (6.7%), Italians (4.33%), Germans (3.22%), Bulgarians (2.9%), Portuguese (2.31%) and French (2.28%).

Outside the European Union, Latin America and Africa are the regions where most immigrants come from, with almost equivalent significance. There are roughly 950,000 Latin Americans living in Spain, which correspond to a 21.45% of the total immigrant population. On the other hand, there are 929,258 African nationals (21.04% of the immigrants).

Many Latin American countries have an important quantity of nationals in Spain. The main ones being Ecuador (3.60%), Colombia (3.08%), Bolivia (2.03%), Argentina (1.61%), Dominican Republic (1.41%), Peru (1.39%) and Brazil (1.3%).

Morocco is by far the African country with more nationals dwelling in Spain. Reaching 15.4 % of the total immigrants, Moroccans are the second biggest foreign nationality in Spain. Immigration from other countries in Africa is less significant, e.g. Argelia (1.23%), Senegal (1.1%) or Nigeria (0.79%).

The biggest group from other parts of the world is the Chinese (3.9%). Ukrainians, Russians and Pakistanis are also noticeable.

The overall sex distribution of immigrants is roughly balanced between men and women. However, there are huge differences depending on the origin of the immigrants.

The proportion of women is higher for Latin American immigrants. Among them, female immigrants are 57% and the percentage is higher than 70% in countries like Nicaragua, Honduras or Paraguay. On the contrary, most of the immigrants coming from Africa are men (57% of African immigrants). The proportion of male immigrants from countries like Mali, Senegal or Gambia is more than 70%.

Sex distribution among immigrants from the EU and from China is quite balanced, with no more than 3% percental variation between sexes. As for Russian immigrants, 66% of them are women.

Considering the age, the distribution of immigrant population is quite different to what can be observed in Spanish nationals.

A quarter the immigrant population is aged between 30-39. The subsequent more numerous ranges of age are those being 40 to 49 and 20 to 29. About 20% of immigrants are under 19 years old. It can also be noted that in 2016 there were 46,193 foreigners authorised to stay in Spain for studying, roughly half of them being Latin American nationals.

Only 5% are older than 69, however, there are important differences depending of the origin of the immigrants. In this period of life, only immigrants from the European Union are a significant group, being 75% of the oldest immigrants.

4.2. Trends in Migratory Flows

During the 20th century immigration was not very significant, with only 1.86% of immigrant population in 1999. Flows began to grow very fast in the late 90s, reaching a peak in 2008, when 750,000 immigrants moved to the country.

In the context of economic crisis, the flow of immigrants coming to Spain has been notably reduced in the last years and the number of those leaving has increased. Therefore, from 2010 to 2015 immigrant population in Spain was decreasing. By the end of this period there were 1,017,452 immigrants less.

On the other hand, emigration of Spanish nationals has increased during the last years. The peak was reached in 2015 when 94,645 Spaniards moved abroad. In 2016, 86,112 Spaniards emigrated. About half of them went to other countries of the European Union, mainly the United Kingdom, France and Germany. Approximately 30,000 people emigrated to Latin America, the principal destinations being Ecuador, Colombia, Mexico and Argentina. The number of Spanish emigrants coming back does not compensate the number of emigrants and, therefore, the net migration rate of Spanish nationals has remained negative since 2008, reaching -23,540 in 2016.

This Spanish emigration, together with the depart of immigrants resulted in a global negative net migration rate from 2008 to 2015. The lowest rate was reached in 2013, when the difference between immigrants and emigrants was -251,531. In 2015 the rate was still negative but almost insignificant, with a rate of -1,761. The situation changed in 2016, when the net migration rate was 89,126.

4.3. Regional situation

Immigrants are not equally distributed along the territory. Catalonia is the community with the biggest number of immigrants, more than a million, equivalent to 13.6% of the population. After Catalonia, the places which receive more immigration are Madrid, Valencian Community, Andalusia, Canary Island and Murcia. It is remarkable that Balearic Islands is the region with the highest proportion of foreigners, who are 17% of the total population.

The regions where there are less immigrants are Cantabria, Extremadura, La Rioja and Asturias. Therefore, most of the immigrant population (81%) is concentrated in the Mediterranean coast, Madrid and the Islands.

4.4. Asylum

The number of asylum applications in Spain increased rapidly in the last years, specially in 2015, but it remains relatively low if compared to other countries of the European Union. In 2016, 15,755 applications were submitted to the Spanish authorities and there were 20,365 people with a pending application by the end of 2016. During that year 6,855 applications were decided positively on first instance

4.5. Acquisition of Spanish Nationality

It must be noted that immigrant population partially decreased because of the acquisition of Spanish Nationality of the foreigners. In fact, almost 2 million people among current Spanish nationals were born abroad.

In 2016, 92,783 people were granted the Spanish nationality. Those with previous Moroccan population were the most important group, followed by Bolivians, Ecuadorians and Colombians.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

Being a frontier country is not easy. States should find a balance between security and the legitimate right of people to seek another future, away from extreme poverty, political persecution, wars, or climate change. Part of the society would be pleased with a welcome policy, but some sectors may see migrants as “the others” This thinking sometimes is the result of the fear policy that in some periods of history has been spread out like a highly contagious virus. Why are people afraid of them? Are “the others” different to us? Could “the others” also be afraid? They could be afraid, for example, of living in their home countries. In one way or another, that discussion is taking place every day in Spain. Its proximity to Africa, even with two cities on that continent, has made Spain an important player in the implementation of the decisions of the ECHR.

The analysis of the implementation of the decisions of the ECHR would be focused on two decisions in which Spain, as respondent State, has been condemned for a violation of the Convention. When a violation is produced, the entire system is tested³¹⁶⁷. Is Spain able to fix a violation of the Convention properly? It could be said that nowadays, a full implementation of the ECHR decisions is closer. In 2015, an important amendment was introduced in the Civil Procedure Law (LEC)³¹⁶⁸ and on the Court Law (LOPJ)³¹⁶⁹: article 510.2 of LEC and article 5. BIS of LOPJ due to the case *Del Río Prada v. Spain*³¹⁷⁰. These amendments allow that if no other measure can be taken to rectify the declared violation by the ECHR, a procedure of revision of firm judgments may be requested before the Spanish Supreme Court³¹⁷¹.

The first case to analyse deals with alyssum seekers of Sahrawi origin, *AC and Others v. Spain*³¹⁷² (application no 6528/11). The applicants were thirty international protection seekers who had arrived on makeshift boats on the coast of the Canary Islands between January 2011 and August 2012. They lodged applications for international protection and after being considered and reconsidered, they were rejected. The applicants applied for judicial review and asked for a stay of execution orders to their deportations, at least until their judicial reviews were solved.

³¹⁶⁷ This was the structure of analysis established by Luis López Guerra, judge of the ECHR, in the book: Alcácer Guirao, R., Beladiez Rojo, M. and Sánchez Tomás, J. (2013). Conflicto y diálogo con Europa. Las condenas a España del Tribunal Europeo de Derechos Humanos. Cizur Menor (Navarra): Thomson Reuters, pp.28-36.

³¹⁷⁰ Del Río Prada v Spain [2013]42750/09 (ECHR).

³¹⁷¹ When there is no other possible measure to finish with the effects of the violation, the Supreme Court (Tribunal Supremo) has the competence to reopen the case. By now, it is only an article because since its introduction there has not been successfully used.

³¹⁷² AC and Other v Spain [2014] 6528/11 (ECHR)

Audiencia Nacional³¹⁷³, after a first provisional suspension of the removal procedure, rejected the applications for a stay of execution. All the applicants petitioned the ECHR for interim measures under Rule 39 of the Rules of the Court³¹⁷⁴, alleging ill treatment by the Moroccan authorities and that they felt threatened, not only on grounds of physical assault on themselves but also on their family members by way of reprisals. The Court decided that the applicants should not be removed for the duration of the proceedings; Spain should permit the applicants to remain within its territory.³¹⁷⁵

The court found that the article 13 (right to an effective remedy) had been breached. The concept of an effective remedy requires the possibility of suspending the implementation of a removal order. Otherwise, the hypothetical acceptance of their protection orders would have no effects. The applicants' fears as to violations of their human rights in their country of origin did not appear irrational to the judges³¹⁷⁶.

The action report submitted by the Kingdom of Spain explaining the measures adopted after this procedure was a proof a correct execution³¹⁷⁷. The individual implementation consisted of ensuring legal the applicants' residence in Spain, and furnishing them ad hoc ID documents with a specific note on the police database not to expel them in any event until the final decisions were adopted. Some of the applicants appealed before the Supreme Court and their administrative acts were declared null and void due to procedural shortcomings, so they had a new asylum procedure from the initial stage.

Beyond that individual implementation, there was a general implementation measure: a change in the jurisprudence applied to asylum seekers. According to the national legislation,³¹⁷⁸ there were three possibilities once an asylum protection order is submitted: non-admission, denegation - when it is inconsistent or when there is no enough evidence- or the ordinary procedure - if the claim meets the minimum formal requirements. In AC and other vs Spain the migrants' petitions have been classified under the denegation form, thus they got deportation orders, even their procedure had not finished since that specific procedure means stayed expulsion until there is a judicial review or an interim measure.

The Supreme Court, using well established case law, stated that the denegation procedure should only be used under a strict interpretation of its requirements, as ordinary procedure must be the general rule. Through this new argumentation, other cases have been successfully revised.³¹⁷⁹

But, what could happen if the asylum seekers had no chance to make a claim for an international protection order because they were directly expelled? That situation is examined in the ND and ³¹⁷³ Audiencia Nacional is national court that has between other competences, the one for revising government decisions regarding asylum seekers.

NT vs Spain.³¹⁸⁰ On the 13th August 2014, ND and NT, both Ivorian migrants, tried to cross the frontier in Melilla, one of the African cities of Spain. The frontier there consists of three fences. The two applicants managed to pass the first two fences, but they were intercepted on the third one. The Spanish police arrested and expelled them to Morocco within a group of 75 migrants. They were not granted any procedure, nor any lawyer or translator. On the 2nd December 2014, both applicants managed to enter to Melilla. When the case was examined before the ECHR, in July 2015, the first migrant had already been expelled to Mali, and the other was under a deportation process.

Since 1st April 2015, there has been a law amendment made on Organic Law 4/2000 about the rights and freedoms of migrants in Spain that allow an especial procedure for aliens on the frontiers in Ceuta and Melilla. In brief, it states that migrants at these frontiers, if they are intercepted while crossing all the fences, they could be expelled in order to prevent their irregular entrance in Spain.³¹⁸¹

The ECHR mentions the reports from the Committee for prevention of Torture and ACNUR that point out the situation of automatic expulsions in that frontier. The decision of the court was that it did not have enough information to make a final decision, so it postponed the examination of Protocol 4 in relation with article 4 and 13 until the Kingdom of Spain provides more information.³¹⁸²

Even there is no final decision into this judgement, it has an important relevance because of its probable outcome. The institution of the Ombudsman³¹⁸³ has recognized that there is a new procedure only in the cities of Ceuta and Melilla and recommended the government the developed the law amendment introduced, ensuring that the necessity of international protection is fulfilled. The government rejected these recommendations, arguing that its aim is to protect the Police working on that frontier and reach a balance between its right and duty to guarantee the national security, and the International Law. Some previous cases examined before the ECHR like Conka vs Belgium (2002), Gebremedhing vs France (2007), Hirsi Jamaa and others vs Italy (2012) or De Souza Ribeiro vs France (2012) can anticipate the result of ND and NT vs Spain.³¹⁸⁴ As it could be expected, on the 3rd October 2017, during the writing of this article, the Court concluded that there had been a violation of Article 13 of the Convention taken together with Article 4 of Protocol No. 4 to the Convention and that Spain was to pay each of the applicants 5,000 euros. The Spanish Government announced the appeal before the Grand Chamber.³¹⁸⁵

In the first case, we see an example of an adequate implementation for the applicants, but also how a general remedy was established. In the second one, at issue is that Spain has likely legislated against well established and clear rights and principles recognized by the ECHR. Now the Grand Chamber would have the last word, but in the meanwhile, many migrant's rights may be breached.

6. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

In Spain, the access to healthcare used to be universal³¹⁸⁶. The country was traditionally considered one of the world's most inclusive health systems before the financial crisis, but in 2012 a Royal-Decree law significantly limited access to care for the uninsured and undocumented migrants, an increasing number of patients are unable to pay for treatment³¹⁸⁷.

Prior to the entry into force of this provision and its regulatory development, foreigners registered in the register of the municipality in which they had their habitual domicile, regardless of their administrative status, were entitled to Social Security healthcare with the same extent, content and regime as that provided for in the Régimen General de la Seguridad Social (General Scheme of Social Security), i.e. free of charge in cases where foreigners lack sufficient economic resources³¹⁸⁸. However, Royal Decree-law n. 16, passed on April 20 2012³¹⁸⁹ (urgent measures to insure the sustainability of the National Health System and improve the quality and security) [Medidas urgentes para garantizar la sostenibilidad del Sistema Nacional de Salud y mejorar la calidad y seguridad de sus prestaciones] constituted a turning point in that process. This law, that entry into force September 1 2012³¹⁹⁰ dictates the withdrawal of medical cards for undocumented immigrants older than 18 (with the only three exceptions: pregnant women, those affected by infectious diseases and those in need of emergency care). The context of economic crisis facilitated the adoption of a series of reforms in the healthcare sector in the country, among which we can include the Royal-Decree law, passed by the central government, and which should limit the range of coverage of the 17 Servicios de Salud dependientes de las comunidades autónomas (Regional Healthcare Services)³¹⁹¹.

The Royal Decree n. 1192, passed on August 3 2012 (condition of insured and beneficiary for the purposes of healthcare in Spain, charged to public funds, through the National Health System) [Condición de asegurado y de beneficiario a efectos de la asistencia sanitaria en España, con cargo a fondos públicos, a través del Sistema Nacional de Salud], more clearly defined the new rules to establish eligibility to the National Health System:

- “insured persons” (workers, pensioners, unemployed persons receiving benefits, and job seekers)
- “beneficiaries” (spouses and siblings - younger than 26- of “insured” persons).
- A series of groups were thus officially excluded from the National Health System, including, but not limited to, undocumented migrants older than 18 (with the exception of pregnant women). At this issue, it is necessary to point out the particular situation of the subjects that have the status of refugees. Since the very first moment they apply requesting for international protection, they are integrated into the public health system and receive benefits under the same conditions as all Spaniards³¹⁹². This is because as it is disposed in additional disposition n.4 Royal Decree n. 1192, passed on August 3 2012, the applicants for international protection whose stay in Spain has been authorized for this reason will receive, as long as they remain in this situation, the necessary health care that will include emergency care and basic treatment of diseases³¹⁹³.

In October 2012, Consejo Interterritorial del Sistema Nacional de Salud (Interterritorial Council of the Spanish Healthcare System) approved the government proposal to establish an insurance scheme so that those excluded from the National Health System could buy their way into the system for an annual premium of 710 € (1,864 € if older than 65)³¹⁹⁴.

These regulations should have meant the exclusion of undocumented migrants from the 17 Regional Healthcare Services³¹⁹⁵, but the complex articulation of the multilevel structure that characterizes the Spanish state supposed, however, an extremely uneven application of this measure: explicitly ignored by some, partly implemented by others, literally applied by a third group of regional governments³¹⁹⁶. Nowadays, several autonomous regions have implemented regulations to improve the access to healthcare for undocumented migrants³¹⁹⁷. It was: explicitly ignored by Andalusia and Asturias; partly implemented by Aragon, Basque Country, Canary Islands, Cantabria, Catalonia, Extremadura, Galicia, Navarre and Valencia; applied with certain exceptions by Madrid, Balearic islands, Castile-Leon, Murcia and Rioja; and strictly enforced by Castile-La Mancha³¹⁹⁸.

It is also relevant that this decree was challenged by the Parlamento de la Comunidad Foral de Navarra (Parliament of the Chartered Community of Navarre) in the Constitutional Court appeal on the grounds of unconstitutionality n. 4123 July 24 2012. However, this appeal was rejected in the judgement of the Constitutional Court n. 139 of July 21 2016³¹⁹⁹, restricting access to free health care for undocumented migrants including primary healthcare, was constitutional. According to statistics, this reform has taken away the health care cards from 748,835 migrants, removing or seriously limiting their access to the health system³²⁰⁰.

Different non-governmental organizations (NGOs) such as Amnesty International or Doctors of the World, affirm that the judgment of the Constitutional Court "consolidates" the exclusion of free healthcare for migrants in an irregular administrative situation, while "ignoring" the international human rights treaties signed by Spain. These organizations recall that more than a dozen mechanisms of the United Nations and the Council of Europe have described health reform as a "regrettable novelty" or "contrary to the principle of non-discrimination" and have urged Spain to re-establish the universality of the right to health³²⁰¹.

Less than three years after this legislation was passed, the national government reconsidered its effectiveness, partly as a result of certain high-profile cases of lack of adequate medical treatment to undocumented migrants, the wide variety in the practices of the Servicios de Salud dependientes de las comunidades autónomas (Regional Healthcare Services), and the recognition that no savings could be directly attributed to it³²⁰². Since September 2 2015 there has been a proposal from the Consejo Interterritorial del Sistema Nacional de Salud (Interterritorial Council of the Spanish Healthcare System) to extend primary care to undocumented migrants. The proposed agreement refers specifically to the minimum criteria for inclusion in social and healthcare programmes of the autonomous communities of foreigners not registered or authorized as residents in Spain who lack economic resources. 7. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

The process of recognition of foreign school and university diplomas in Spain is foreseen in national law and national administrative norms. This regulation is coherent with the international law ratified by Spain like the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997³²⁰⁵, and European Union law, particularly Directives 2005/36/EC and 2013/55/EU, on the recognition of professional qualification.

7.1. Recognition of foreign university diplomas

Foreign university diplomas might be object of two different processes of recognition in Spain³²⁰⁶. The recognition for academic purposes, equivalencia, declares the equivalence of the foreign diplomas to those which could be obtained in Spanish universities in all aspects, except for the professional qualification to exercise regulated professions which the diploma might entail. On the other hand, a professional recognition, homologación, is needed to practice certain regulated professions, like doctors, lawyers, engineers, architects and vets, among others. Partial recognition is also possible, after a process of convalidación, which recognises successfully passed some courses of a certain degree.

The procedure is started by the applicant³²⁰⁷. A report will be drafted within three months by the National Agency for Quality Assessment and Accreditation (ANECA)³²⁰⁸. Criteria like the equivalence of the level of studies, duration or competences acquired, among others, will be ³²⁰⁷ The request is started before the Ministry of Education, Science and Sport. It can also be handed out in any other administration, public registry or post office, which will send the documents to the competent authorities. The content of the solicitude varies depending of the kind of diploma to be recognised. In any case, it must include the official title which is to be recognised, an academic certificate and some proof of identity. All documents must be official, legalised under The Hague Convention (except for EEE countries) and translated to Spanish.

taken into consideration³²⁰⁹. This report can be favourable to the recognition, conditionally favourable asking for some extra requirements, or unfavourable. Considering the report, the Subdirección General de Títulos, Convalidaciones y Hologaciones, an organ of the Spanish Ministry of Education, will resolve the issue. It can either reject or declare the recognition with can be subject to some conditions in the case of professional recognition³²¹⁰.

The term of the procedure is 6 months, however when the report is not send after three months the term is suspended³²¹¹. For the recognition, a fee will be requested³²¹².

There is no special procedure for refugees recognising their diplomas. However, when the refugee status has been officially declared the documents required for the recognition do not need to be legalised.

7.1.1. Recognition for academic purposes

The Recognition for academic purposes declares the equivalence of foreign titles of Bachelor's Degree or Master's degree to a Spanish qualification. The foreign title will have the same effects as a national one except for the professional qualification in regulated profession, for which the professional recognition homologación of the title is needed.

7.1.2. Recognition for professional purposes

The recognition of a foreign title for professional purposes is declared after a process of homologación in the case of regulated professions, which are those for which a certain university diploma is required. Some of the regulated professions in Spain are doctors, vets, nurses, dentists, engineers, architects, teachers or lawyers. Special requirements are established for each regulated profession by administrative norms (royal decrees or orders).

The recognition can be conditional and further requirements might be needed when certain lacks are detected in the foreign title compared to the Spanish one. This condition might be a test of attitude, an internship, a project or the attendance of certain courses. The time to achieve these requirements is 6 years after the resolution.

There is a special procedure for the recognition of European Union members' diplomas for the exercise of a profession -reconocimiento para el ejercicio de profesiones-, under Directive 2005/36/EC and Directive 2013/55/EU. These European norms harmonise certain aspects of the degrees to ease the movement of persons and services within the European Union.

7.1.3. Recognition of PHD diplomas

The recognition of a PHD title is attributed to the universities, under the procedures foreseen in their internal norms³²¹³. This recognition does not imply the recognition of any other diplomas. Therefore, if needed, the Bachelor's or Master's degree would be recognised under the normal procedures.

7.2. Recognition of foreign school diplomas

The main procedures for recognition of non-university education are included in the Royal Decree 104/1988. There are other administrative regulations concerning certain issues like the competent authorities dealing with the processes, the requirements and standards of recognition, establishing specialities for certain countries, etc.

The extent of the recognition may vary. It can be complete or partial. The complete recognition declares the equivalence of a foreign titles to one obtained in a Spanish school, after a process of homologación. If the conditions for an homologación are not met, a partial recognition or convalidación might be granted. In this case, some subjects or modules needed for the diplomas to be obtained will be recognised and the student will be able to continue studying to complete the rest of the modules.

No recognition is needed to continue primary or secondary compulsory education (ESO³²¹⁴) in Spain after having studied in a foreign country. Neither is there necessity of recognition to join courses for which the secondary education is not required.

Foreign school titles subjected to recognition include secondary education, Baccalaureate, vocational or technical diplomas, artistic or sports diplomas...

The process is started³²¹⁵ by the applicant asking for the recognition. To initiate the procedure a fee must be paid³²¹⁶. The procedure shall finish within the next three months³²¹⁷. The competent authorities to solve the request are the areas of *Alta Inspección de Educación*³²¹⁸, which are organs of the autonomous communities, or in some cases the Subdirección General de Títulos, Convalidaciones y Hologaciones, which is an organ of the Spanish Ministry of Education, Culture and Sport³²¹⁹. Furthermore, for residents in Galicia³²²⁰, Catalonia³²²¹ and Vasque Country³²²² the regional administration fully oversees these procedures.

³²¹⁴ Secondary Compulsory Education (Educación Secundaria Obligatoria, ESO) is composed of four academic years (1st to 4th), usually covering ages teenagers from 12 to 16 years old. The completion of the ESO period allows the student to join a vocational course or the two-year Bachillerato.

³²¹⁵ The request can be started before the competent authority for the procedure or handed out in any other administration, public registry or post office, which will send the documents to the competent authorities. The content of the solicitude varies depending of the kind of title to be recognised. In any case, it must include the official title which is to be recognised, the qualifications and some prove of identity and nationality. All documents must be official, legalised under The Hague Convention (except for EEE countries) and translated to Spanish.

³²¹⁶ The recognition of secondary education is free of charge. The recognition of other diplomas of non-university levels requires the payment of a fee of 48.30 euros.

³²¹⁷ The procedure might be extended if the documents handed out by the applicant are not sufficient and new documents are requested outside Spain. Art. 11 Royal Decree 10 (sobre homologación y convalidación de títulos y estudios extranjeros de educación no universitaria) 1988.

³²¹⁸ Art. 9.2 Royal Decree 10 (sobre homologación y convalidación de títulos y estudios extranjeros de educación no universitaria) 1988.

There are different criteria to grant or deny the request. First, international treaties and conventions must be taken into consideration. Secondly, if there are none of the previous, the Ministry tables of equivalence should be analysed³²²³. These tables foresee the correspondence to the Spanish system of foreign titles from many different countries. They are created considering not only the similarity of contents or duration of the courses but also the treatment granted to Spanish diplomas in the foreign country. In the unlikely case that the foreign titles are not included in any of the two previous sources, an ad hoc Commission will be formed³²²⁴. In this case, the national Subdirección General will draft a resolution.

8. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

Political participation of migrants in their host country facilitates their social inclusion in society. Awareness of the socio-structural facets of migration has made inclusion of migrants become something more than a rhetorical part of political discourse in Spain³²²⁵. It has often been argued that social inclusion should be a basic dimension of immigration policy, but it was not since recently that evidence emerged showing that the process of joint construction implied by social inclusion policy does not only have cultural or socioeconomic dimensions but also a political one³²²⁶.

Research focusing on how migrants are made part of Spanish political processes is currently scarce. In the past, the majority of studies on the political behaviour of migrants revealed that, in general, they find themselves at a disadvantage when it comes to defending their interests within the public sphere. Reasons that were found to give rise to such challenges included reduced access to valuable socioeconomic resources, difficult social mobility, spatial segregation and discrimination in comparison with the majority society³²²⁷.

It is convenient to first describe what is meant by 'political participation', as the term allows for an array of different definitions. For the purpose of this report, it refers to the actions established by the law to allow citizens to take part in the political process and its results. In any case, political participation requires an action undertaken in a public or collective sphere by each individual. Therefore, many different actions can be included in this definition.

8.1. European framework

8.1.1. Convention on the participation of foreigners in public life

This Convention regulates rights connected to political participation of foreigners on a European level. It departs from three basic premises: first, migration movements in Europe are generalized social facts; second, it refers to residents, that is, to foreigners legally living in a different country with permanent residence status. Third, it recognizes the challenges related to the inclusion of foreigners in their host society, especially within their local community. Furthermore, the Convention is based on the principles of equality and non-discrimination, of equal assumption of rights and duties in the community.

Party states agreed on the need to improve the social inclusion of foreigners in the local community, especially through increasing their possibilities to participate in local public affairs. In this regard, they committed to eliminating any obstacles that could challenge the creation of consultative bodies representing foreigners³²²⁸. Thus, three types of measures should be adopted: to ensure the connection between local authorities and foreign residents; to offer a forum of discussion and formulation of opinions of foreigners in local political life and to promote their integration in collective life.

Following the Convention, each party state commits to granting the right to vote and to be elected in local elections to all residents as long as they comply with the conditions applied to nationals and they have legally resided in the concerned state during the five years preceding the elections. States may make an exception regarding the right to be elected to allow foreigners to run for election. Furthermore, they can authorize the right to vote and to be elected to foreigners who have been living in the country for less than five years and decide in which local elections foreigners will participate, as they all have different local governance structures.

8.1.2. European Convention on Human Rights

The European Convention on Human Rights does not make any reference to the rights of migrants. However, it establishes that party states are entitled to impose restrictions to the political participation of foreigners³²²⁹. Furthermore, it states the commitment of party states to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature³²³⁰. This stipulation seems to circumscribe the right to free, periodic and secret elections to nationals (“the people”). The European Court of Human Rights has stated on different occasions that the configuration of the right to elect and to be elected in local elections is to be regulated by the national law. Therefore, each party state has full freedom to decide whether foreigners will be entitled to vote and/or to run for election.

8.1.3. Treaty on European Union

The Treaty on European Union gives European citizenship to every national of a member state³²³¹. The European citizenship carries rights which are added to those attached to each country's national citizenship. Two of them are closely linked to political participation: the right to elect and to be elected in the municipal elections of the state in which a European citizen lives³²³² and to vote in the elections to the European Parliament³²³³. Materializing these rights demanded their development through community secondary legislation, apart from member states adopting legislative measures of transposition.

8.1.4. Directives

The modalities for exercising the right to vote and the right to run for election in the European parliamentary elections for European citizens living in a member state of which they are not nationals are regulated by the Directive 93/109/CE, which establishes the conditions required to be a holder of those rights (i.e. to be a European citizen, to live in the member state where he or she is going to vote or run for election and to comply with the same conditions required to nationals of his or hers country of residence), the freedom regarding the member state in which the right can be exercised (i.e. either the state of which they are a national or the state in which they live) but forbidding double votes and the duty to register on the electoral roll.

Participation of immigrants in municipal elections is regulated by Directive 96/30/CE. This Directive did not intend to harmonize the different electoral systems present in member states, but to unify the conditions required for exercising the right to vote and to run for election in local elections. With this purpose, it regulates the proceeding for inscription in the electoral roll of the member state of which the subject is a resident, although, in contrast with what was established for the European parliamentary elections, this time double votes and double candidatures are allowed in the member state of residence and origin except for the generic incompatibilities which already existed beforehand.

8.2. The Spanish national context

8.2.1. The Spanish Constitution of 1978

8.2.1.1. Impact of 'national sovereignty'

The political participation of immigrants in Spain is limited by national sovereignty. As stated by the Spanish Constitution: "national sovereignty resides in the Spanish people"³²³⁴. In this regard, the Constitutional Court stated in its resolution of 1st of July 1992, that the municipal elections do not imply an exercise of national sovereignty, as municipalities do not have competencies granted by the Spanish Constitution or by the Autonomic Statutes, which are the bearers of

³²³¹ Treaty on the European Union 2007, s 19

³²³² Ibid, s 19(1)

³²³³ Ibid, s 19(2)

³²³⁴ Constitución Española 1978, s 1(2)

national sovereignty³²³⁵. The stipulation thus refers to the legislative power and therefore would exclude foreigners from elections to the Congress and the Senate, as well as from those for Legislative Assemblies of the regions. However, regions and municipalities distribute the competences related to political participation³²³⁶. Therefore, regions can adapt the regulations for participation of foreigners in their elections. Moreover, the Spanish Constitution enables for an exception to be made if three requirements are fulfilled: first, that it only concerns the right to vote and to be elected in local elections; second, that it is established by the ordinary law or by a treaty and lastly, that it follows the criteria of reciprocity.

8.2.1.2. The constitutional rights to vote and to run for election

The rights to vote and to run for election are regulated by the Spanish Constitution of 1978, which states that only Spanish citizens will hold the rights [...], unless, based on reciprocity criteria, the rights to vote and to be elected in local elections could be granted by the law or a treaty³²³⁷.

A distinction shall be made between the rights to political participation of migrants from the European Union and non-EU migrants in Spain, as the exercise of the rights to vote and to run for election is different in each case. European citizens hold the right to run for local elections, as established by Directive 94/80/CE. As for the right to vote, they must comply with the following requirements: a) to be registered in the municipality where they intend to cast their vote; b) to be registered in the electoral roll; c) to declare their will to vote in the local elections through a formal declaration for which they can apply at the relevant town hall; d) to be older than 18 years of age on the voting date and to have full capacity to vote. In contrast, non-EU citizens do not hold the right to run for election. However, they will hold the right to vote if there is a valid reciprocity treaty between their country of origin and Spain³²³⁸.

8.3. Reciprocity treaties

Foreigners living in Spain can hold the right to vote and to be elected in local elections according to the conditions established in the Spanish Constitution, in international treaties and in the law³²³⁹. Therefore, both the Spanish Constitution and the national Electoral law allow nationals of non-member states to take part in local elections as long as their participation is authorized through an international treaty or through the Law. Up to date, Spain has signed reciprocity treaties with South Korea, Trinidad and Tobago, Bolivia, Colombia, Chile, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Iceland, Norway, Cape Verde and New Zealand³²⁴⁰. The conditions required to nationals of each state are established by each treaty. Immigrants usually must a) hold a valid Spanish residence permit; b) have lived in Spain legally and uninterruptedly for at least the five previous years before being registered in the electoral roll and c) exercise the right to vote in the municipality where they have registered. Furthermore, being registered in the electoral roll for foreign residents in Spain is a compulsory requirement. Such registration will be made upon application and within the period established in each election.

9 How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

9.1. Citizenship under Spanish legislation.

Nationality is the most intense legal link between a person and the state community, and comprises more than a mere authorization of work and residency. It is the legal link between a person and the State, and constitutes both a Fundamental right and the basis of the personal statute of every individual. Article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights establishes that “everyone has the right to a nationality” and that “no one shall ever be deprived of his nationality not denied the right to change his nationality”.

On the grounds of this relation, individuals feature a series of rights that can be demanded to the State they are citizens from. In return, the State shall impose the observance of certain duties and obligations. Citizenship plays a chief role as the necessary condition to access to the diplomatic protection of a national of a State when he or she is abroad. All nationals of a State have a right to receive advice and protection when in a foreign country.

The laws that regulate the way citizenship can be acquired or lost are subject to public law (ius cogens). Private individuals can not decree how or when they shall be entitled to become a citizen of a different country. Although under Spanish legislation the acquisition of nationality in origin is imposed to the citizen, in line with the aforementioned provision, nationality can be modified. According to the Article 11.2 of the Spanish Constitution, Spanish citizens by origin cannot lose their Spanish nationality unless it is by free will. On top of these issues, the national law comprises situations of acquisition of nationality by foreign citizens, loss of nationality under certain circumstances and the requirements for both conserving the acquired nationality and recovering it after it was lost (Article 11.1 of the Spanish Constitution).

9.2. Ways to acquire citizenship.

Spanish nationality is acquired, conserved and, under certain conditions, even lost in accordance to what law stipulates. The different ways to acquire citizenship are listed in the Civil Code of Spain (CC hereinafter).

9.2.1. Citizenship by origin.

According to the Article 17 C.C. the following persons shall be considered citizens by origin: those who are born from a Spanish mother or father; those born from foreign parents if, at least one of them was born in Spain; those born in Spain from foreign parents, only if both parents are stateless, or if neither of their national legislations attribute citizenship to the child; those born in Spain whose parents are unknown; all underage children who are adopted by a Spanish citizen.

9.2.2. Citizenship “de facto”; “Posesión de estado”.

Every person who has continuously possessed and utilised the Spanish nationality for at least 10 years, in good faith (without having knowledge of the error), and on the grounds of a registered title.

Nevertheless, the same article sets certain requirements that must be met in order to obtain citizenship this way. The solicitor must have maintained an active behavior in such possession and utilization. He must have acted accordingly to his duties as a Spanish citizen, and must have enjoyed his rights as such.

9.2.3. Citizenship by residence.

One of the ways to acquire Spanish nationality is based on residence. This way request at least 10 years of continuous and legal residence in the country immediately prior to the formal request (Article 22.1 CC). In certain cases, the required residence period will be reduced:

- (Article 22.1 CC) 5 years: “for those who have obtained the condition of refugee”.
- (Article 22.1 CC) 2 years: “for citizens of Ibero-American countries, Andorra, the Philippines, Equatorial Guinea, Portugal. Also, for people of Sephardi origins.
- (Article 22.2 CC) 1 year: for those born in Spanish territory.

For those who did not exercise their right to obtain the Spanish nationality by option.

For those who have been subject to tutelage, foster care, or custody by a Spanish citizen or institution for 2 consecutive years.

For the widow or widower of a Spanish citizen, as long as at the time of decease their divorce or separation was not clear.

For those born outside of the country, but from parents or grandparents who were Spanish in origin”.

Those who formally request to acquire Spanish citizenship must give credit to their civilised behaviour and sufficient integration in the Spanish society (Article 22.4 CC).

9.2.4. Citizenship by Letter “Carta de naturaleza”.

This way of acquiring nationality is granted ex-gratia. Only the Government, after valuing exceptional circumstances in each case, has the legal authority to grant it by “Real Decreto” (Article 21.1 CC). Like every other case of nationality acquisition, a formal request of the applicant will be necessary. The request is only a formal requirement, since it will only the Government who shall decide if the “exceptional circumstances” are fulfilled.

9.2.5. Citizenship by option or choice.

Citizenship by option is a benefit that our legislation offers to migrants under certain conditions, as a faster way to acquire Spanish citizenship. The migrants that have the right to obtain citizenship this way are (Article 20 CC): “those who are or have been subject to PATRIA POTESTAD of a Spanish citizen; those whose mother or father was Spanish and born in Spain; those whose FILIACION was established as an adult, with a timeline of 2 years since that FILIACION took place; those whose adoption by a Spanish citizen took place as an adult, in this case there is also a timeline of 2 years and the solicitant will obtain citizenship by origin”.

9.2.6. General requirements.

All acquisitions following the methods of option, letter, or residence, need to fulfill extraordinary requirements in order to be considered valid (Article 23 CC). Every solicitant older than 14 years old, must swear fidelity to the King and the Constitution. All solicitants –except those who can choose to have a double nationality- must RENUNCIAR their previous nationality. Lastly, all acquisitions must be registered in the Spanish Civil Register.

9.2.7. Double nationality under Spanish legislation.

The national law recognizes certain situations of double nationality, based on “special and particular links or community relations certain countries have or used to have with Spain” (Article 11.3 of the Spanish Constitution). This article also establishes that even if those same countries do not recognize a reciprocal right, Spanish citizens will be able to naturalize in that foreign country and not lose their origin nationality.

Double nationality will result in the existence of a double legal link. That person will be a citizen to both countries, enjoying the legal condition of citizenship in equal conditions to all citizens.

People under double citizenship are not simultaneously subject to both countries legislations. Spanish law has articulated methods to establish which legislation will be applied. In this sense, most double-nationality Agreements articulate the legal address as the reference to establish the legislation that shall be applicable. Citizens with double-nationality will only be subject to one legislation at a time: the legislation of the country where they have established their legal address at.

Currently, the countries that have signed such Agreements with Spain are: all ibero-American countries, Andorra, the Philipines, Ecuatorial Guinea and Portugal. The ibero-American countries are those where the Spanish or Portuguese are the official languages. In this sense, Puerto Rico is considered an Ibero-American country, but Haiti, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and Guyana are not.

10. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

There are different European programmes regarding the integration of migrant. The most relevant that affects to Spain are:

10.1. Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF)

The Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund promotes efficient management of migration flows and the implementation, strengthening and development of a common EU approach to asylum and integration. It is dedicated to the highest level of solidarity and responsibility-sharing between Member States, with a particular focus on those most affected by migration. All European Union States except Denmark participate in the implementation of this Fund³²⁴¹. This General Programme consisted of four instruments: External Borders Fund (EBF), European Return Fund (RF), European Refugee Fund (ERF) and European Fund for the Integration of third-country nationals (EIF)³²⁴².

In absolute terms, Spain according to the AMIF allocation by Member State funding period 2014-2020³²⁴³, is the five European Union country with receives more funds³²⁴⁴, with the basic allocation for Spain under this fund is more than 257 million of euros³²⁴⁵. One of the main topics in our country will be favour the integration, raising awareness of the risks of female genital mutilation with a view to preventing this practice, particularly within sub-Saharan immigrant communities³²⁴⁶.

The first version of the National AMIF Program for the 2014-20 period, was approved by the Commission Decision of July 31 2015. From the information furnished by the Ministry for Employment and Social Security, it follows that the AMIF co-finances the projects up to 75 % of their total cost³²⁴⁷. The Spanish government has a 372 million euros budget allocated by AMIF to host refugees between 2015 and 2020. For the first year of implementation, the country received 26 million euros of the 55 it had budgeted. This money was intended to mainly fund the refugee reception programme centrally managed by the Spanish government but almost half of it was spent on expulsions and detention centres of foreigners, which is also one of the AMIF objectives in Spain. No data have been made available for 2016 yet³²⁴⁸.

10.2. European Social Fund

The European Social Fund promotes elevated levels of employment and job quality while combating poverty, enhancing social inclusion and promoting gender equality, non-discrimination and equal opportunities. The ESF will be of particular benefit to disadvantaged people, such as migrants, ethnic minorities and marginalized communities³²⁴⁹. During the last operational programme period “Fight Against Discrimination”, that runs between 2007-2013, a total of 218 million of euros from this fund were been directed towards the integration of migrants in Spain³²⁵⁰. The ESF contribution against discrimination in Spain embraced a variety of actions: training of professionals dealing with migrants or awareness raising and delivery of seminars about immigration, Roma and integration³²⁵¹. Building on the good experiences and results from the 2007-2013 programme, the new ESF programme that includes investments on migrants and refugee-related issues for the 2014-2020 period³²⁵² is set up to help the groups of the population furthest away from the labor market and most at risk of discrimination³²⁵³.

10.3. European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)

The ERDF provides financial support for the reduction of economic, social and territorial disparities and thus strengthens cohesion in the EU. Social integration of migrants can be subsumed under the social inclusion and poverty reduction pillar. During the last programme

Conclusions

During this magnificent project, we have been able to observe the reality of immigration and its derivatives in our legal system. Whether as ways to acquire nationality, the right to asylum

The main news, the most up-to-date statistics about: i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transit-migrants, trends in migratory flows.

We have been able to observe that the migration that looks at Europe and within it is found with a series of regulations, whether at the national, community, ECHR, CSE and other international obligations that are contracted by the member states. of the European Union.

Beginning with the asylum application is explained by articles 18 of the charter of fundamental rights and article 78 of the treaty of operation of the European Union that the right to asylum is envisaged to be requested, fulfilling the obligations that states have imposed since the 1951 Geneva Convention.

Beginning with the Geneva Convention itself, which in Article 33 guarantees the protection of the application of the articles that regulate fundamental rights, they are considered basic in their compliance, after this there are certain turns to Article 18, explaining that no means are provided to facilitate the arrival of asylum seekers.

In many cases it is sometimes necessary to request the right to asylum when they have entered irregularly into the states in which they are going to apply.

From there we went to the request for obtaining health care, circulation, education and recognition of it in our country and community legislation:

-sanity: article 13 of the cse regulates the right to medical assistance, this right is applicable to migrants in an irregular situation. The charter of fundamental rights does not include the right to health, but the right to protection of health, regulates access to health care for various categories of nationals of other countries and requires some national laws to apply for health insurance to be granted a certain condition, etc.

-education: examining article 2 of the first cedh protocol, we find the existence of the right to education and discrimination based on reasons of national origin is totally prohibited. The right to primary and secondary education is guaranteed, in principle. Article 17 of the cse exposes, together with articles 18 and 19, the right to education.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights states in article 14 that everyone has the right to education and has the possibility of receiving compulsory education free of charge. All children who are from third countries in the European Union except those who are only for a short period of time have this right. The refugee convention (and the acquis of the European Union) in its article 22.1 sets out the right to education of children who apply for asylum or those who have been granted refugee or subsidiary protected status.

We conclude that there is a great variety of national, community and international norms and laws regarding this issue and we must focus on helping as much as possible to end this type of situation or at least improve as much as possible so that these people You have to leave aside your places of residence obtain rights to live in a dignified way.

Introduction

Sweden has long been known for its solidarity with the world's refugees and for being a country with respect of human rights. This has been reflected in the country's migration policy which has been perceived as particularly generous and is one of the reasons why people fleeing political oppression in Chile, Argentina and Iran chose to come to Sweden in the 1970s and 1980s. Following the Balkan conflict during the 1990s, people also fled to Sweden in order to seek protection from persecution. As a result of Sweden's accession to the European Union in 1995, this policy has become increasingly restrictive due to the harmonization procedure of the Member States national legislations regulating asylum and migration.³²⁵⁵

Regardless of this development, Sweden's core objectives behind its migration policy remained the same, based primarily on national considerations and values. Sweden has repeatedly chosen to legislate above the minimum level required by EU law. For example, Sweden expanded the group of people that qualify for obtaining a residence permit and broadened the possibility for family reunification. The right to asylum has continuously enjoyed high protection in Sweden due to similar opinions of its importance on the political arena where the two main parties, the Social Democrats [Socialdemokraterna] and the Conservative Party [Moderaterna], held practically the same views on how Sweden should regulate migration. This political reality paved the way for the comprehensive reform of the Aliens Act 2005:716 [Utlänningslag] conducted in 2005.³²⁵⁶

In 2010, the right-wing party Sweden Democrats [Sverigedemokraterna], made their way into the Swedish Parliament. Their populist agenda mainly focus on limiting migration to Sweden, since it is claimed to be the reason of everything that is wrong with the Swedish Society.³²⁵⁷

A lot has happened since the election of 2010 and the "migration crisis" has made an impact on Sweden's migration policy. In 2016, a temporary law that limits the possibility to obtain a residence permit in Sweden was introduced. The Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden 2016:752 [Lag om tillfälliga begränsningar av möjligheten att få uppehållstillstånd i Sverige] is applicable until summer of 2019 and the incentives behind the legislation was the high number of refugees that came to Sweden in 2015 and the implications it had on the functioning of the Swedish Society.³²⁵⁸ In addition to this, Sweden reinstated border controls in the end of 2015 as a necessary measure due to the serious threat to public order and national security caused by the increased immigration to Sweden.³²⁵⁹

It remains to be seen what will happen when the Temporary Act cease to apply but the growing support of the Sweden Democrats and the increase of preference for a more restrictive migration policy in general public opinion indicates an unclear future for Sweden's previously generous migration and asylum policy.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Swedish Regulations Governing Asylum

1.1.1. The Aliens Act

The Aliens Act of 2005 is the main legislative instrument regulating migration in Sweden. It contains definitions, general provisions and conditions concerning aliens' right to enter, reside and work in Sweden and regulates, inter alia, the right to asylum.³²⁶⁰ The Act was reformed in 2010 due to the Qualification Directive³²⁶¹ to reflect the Directive's regulation of status. In this reform, Sweden also chose to divide the complementary protection into two separate groups, persons in need of subsidiary protection and persons otherwise in need of protection where the former originates from the Qualification Directive and the latter from previous Swedish migration law.³²⁶²

The definition of a refugee, as stated in ch 4 art 1 of the Aliens Act, originates from Article 1A2 of the 1951 Refugee Convention³²⁶³ and the Qualification Directive. It only differs in terms of Sweden's addition of gender and sexual orientation as grounds of protection. The Article reads as follows:

In this Act 'refugee' means an alien who

- is outside the country of the alien's nationality, because he or she feels a well-founded fear of persecution on grounds of race, nationality, religious or political belief, or on grounds of gender, sexual orientation or other membership of a particular social group and
- is unable, or because of his or her fear is unwilling, to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country.

³²⁶² Alexandra Segenstedt och Rebecca Stern, Vad krävs för att få skydd? (Svenska Röda korset 2011) p. 9 [Swedish].

³²⁶³ Convention relating to the Status of Refugees.

The definition of people in need of subsidiary protection, as stated in ch 4 art 2 of the Aliens Act, is based on the Qualification Directive.

Sweden has, as previously mentioned, chosen to protect another group of people besides refugees and persons in need of subsidiary protection, namely persons otherwise in need of protection. The definition of this group can be found in ch 4 art 2 a of the Aliens Act. This definition encompasses aliens that are outside their country of origin because he or she is unable to return and needs protection due to an external or internal armed conflict, other severe conflicts, having a well-founded fear of being subjected to serious abuses or environmental disasters in their country of origin. The term 'other severe conflicts' can for example refer to situations of political instability where the rule of law and the people's human rights can not be guaranteed. The conflict can be between different sections of the population as well as a class of the population against the government. In addition, there needs to be causation between the abuse that the alien risk being subjected to and the severe conflict in question.³²⁶⁴ The number of people being granted a residence permit based on this provision is very low. During 2015, it was only 229 persons, which is mostly due to the fact that it overlaps with the provision on subsidiary protection.³²⁶⁵

Asylum is defined in ch 1 art 3 of the Aliens Act, as a residence permit granted to someone who qualify as a refugee or a person in need of subsidiary protection. In ch 1 art 12, it is stated that an application based on the protected group of persons otherwise in need of protection should be regarded as an application for asylum. Refugees, persons in need of subsidiary protection and persons otherwise in need of protection have the right to a residence permit and asylum, according to ch 5 art 1 of the Aliens Act. It is also stated there that, as a general rule, residence permits should be permanent.

Even if it would not be possible to establish a belonging to a protected group, it is still possible to be granted a residence permit if an overall assessment concludes that there are extraordinary distressing circumstances which should allow the alien to stay in Sweden, as stated in ch 5 art 6 of the Aliens Act. In the assessment, the alien's health condition, acclimatisation to Sweden and the situation in the country of origin is to be considered. The requirements are less strict if a child is involved, as the circumstances then have to be particularly distressing. The Migration Court of Appeal stated in MIG 2007:17 that it should be applied restrictive since it is a derogating provision. In MIG 2010:23, the Migration Court of Appeal granted a person a permanent residence permit due to extraordinary distressing circumstances. She was suffering from blood cancer which would, if not treated, change into acute leukemia. The medical treatment was not available through official channels in her country of origin while it was available in Sweden. In MIG 2009:9, an unaccompanied child was granted a permanent residence permit due to the risk of seriously harming his psychosocial development if he would be returned to his country of origin.

A person who qualifies for any of the abovementioned protection grounds can be excluded from protection if there is serious reason to believe that he or she has committed any of the acts mentioned in ch 4 art 2 b-c of the Aliens Act. Article 2 b originates from the 1951 Refugee Convention and the Qualification Directive and Article 2 c originates only from the latter. They were both implemented into Swedish legislation in the year of 2009. The grounds for exclusion for a refugee are crimes against peace, war crimes, crimes against humanity, as defined in the international instruments drawn up to make provision in respect of such crimes, serious non-political crimes outside the country of refugee prior to his or her admission to that country or acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations as set out in the Preamble and Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations, as stated in ch 4 art 2 b of the Aliens Act. The grounds for exclusion of a person in need of subsidiary protection or a person otherwise in need of protection is stated in ch 4 art 2 c of the Aliens Act and are basically the same as for refugees except when it comes to 'serious non-political crimes'. For this category of asylum seekers, it is sufficient that there is serious reason to believe that the person has committed a serious crime, irrespective of location and classification. It is also possible to exclude a person on the basis of danger to national security.

A person can lose its protection status through revocation if it is clear that he or she should not be considered a refugee, a person in need of subsidiary protection or a person otherwise in need of protection, pursuant to ch 5 art 5 b of the Aliens Act. The circumstances which granted a person protection must be outdated or changed in a substantial and permanent manner, in order for revocation to be relevant. If a person in some way show that he or she intends to use the country of origin's protection again, for example by obtaining a new national passport or by requesting to get an old one back from the Migration Agency, it can lead to a revocation process.³²⁶⁶

1.1.2. Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of Being Granted a Residence Permit in Sweden

The Aliens Act has, as mentioned in the introduction, been temporarily replaced by the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden which is applicable until the summer of 2019. The act constitutes a restriction of the possibility of being granted a residence permit in Sweden and ensures that Swedish asylum legislations reflects the minimum level required by EU law and international law. The main changes introduced by this legislation will be explained below.

Firstly, residence permits will only be granted refugees and persons in need of subsidiary protection hence excluding the third group, persons otherwise in need of protection, which is stated in art 4 of the act. This is primarily explained by referring to EU law, which does not require Member States to protect this specific group. It is therefore a legitimate measure to ensure that Swedish asylum legislation reflects the minimum level required by EU law and international conventions.³²⁶⁷ Article 5 specifies that granted residence permits shall be temporary and expire within three years if a person qualify as a refugee, unless national security or public order require that the period of validity must be shorter. If a renewal has been granted, it shall last for 13 months. A residence permit for a person in need of subsidiary protection shall last for 13 months and a renewal shall last for two years, unless national security and public order requires the period to be shorter. The renewal will only be granted if the grounds for protection still remains. The negative consequences of not granting permanent residence permits, as brought up by several consultation bodies, are discussed in the government bill but the general outcome is that it is necessary for Sweden to restrict its asylum legislation temporarily to cope with the large amount of people fleeing to Sweden.³²⁶⁸

A permanent residence permit may be granted when a temporary permit expires, provided the person can support themselves. If the person is under the age of 25, he or she needs to have finished upper secondary education or equivalent, as stated in art 17. A permanent residence permit may also, in accordance with art 18, be granted to a child if, after an overall assessment, there is such extraordinary distressing circumstances related to a permanent health issue that it is absolutely necessary to grant a permanent permit.

The right to a residence permit due to exceptionally or particularly distressing circumstances has been limited to cases when a refusal of entry or expelling of that person would contravene a Swedish commitment under a convention, which is stated in art 11 of the act. Besides these restrictions, the temporary act contains provisions that limit the right to family reunification, tougher maintenance requirements and other general limitations to the Swedish asylum legislations.³²⁶⁹

1.1.3. The Aliens Ordinance

The Swedish Parliament has delegated its legislative authority to the government in several matters concerning migration which has resulted in ordinances such as the Aliens Ordinance 2006:97 [Utlänningsförordningen]. It contains both procedural and material provisions that regulates the area of migration in Sweden.³²⁷⁰ cases of granting and withdrawal of refugee status. The first version was incorporated into Swedish legislation through the reform in 2010. The recast version of the Directive has recently been incorporated, which required changes in several Swedish laws.³²⁷²

1.2.2. The Swedish Migration Agency

The main decision-making authority in migration procedures is the Swedish Migration Agency [Migrationsverket], who receives all applications for residence permit from aliens currently residing in Sweden according to ch 3 art 20 of the Aliens Ordinance. The Migration Agency also, pursuant to ch 5 art 20 of the Aliens Act, decides on the granting of residence permits to asylum seekers who completed their asylum investigation, where the applicant state their reasons for seeking asylum.

In asylum cases involving children, the Migration Agency needs to specifically consider the child's best interest, as stated in ch 1 art 10 of the Aliens Act. They also need to take the child's health condition and maturity into account and adjust the procedure thereafter. Children also have the right to be heard, as long as it is not inappropriate, pursuant to ch 1 art 11 of the Aliens Act. A child's reasons for seeking asylum should be examined independently from their parents.³²⁷³

The asylum procedure is regulated by the Administrative Procedure Act 1986:223 [Förvaltningslag], as well as chapter 13 of the Aliens Act. The first instance for reviewing asylum applications is the Migration Agency, or in some cases the Swedish Police Authorities [Polismyndigheten], who must be presented with all relevant circumstances and claimed documents. Both authorities are responsible in guaranteeing that they have sufficient information to make a well-founded decision, due to their enquiry responsibility.³²⁷⁴ When the Swedish Migration Agency has examined the case, a written notice explaining the decision and the reasons for that decision must be delivered, pursuant to ch 13 art 10 of the Aliens Act.

If an application for asylum has been rejected and the Migration Agency has decided on a refusal of entry with immediate effect, the applicant needs to leave Sweden immediately, even if he or she has appealed the decision. However, if the Migration Agency has decided upon removal by expulsion the applicant is allowed to remain in Sweden during the appeal process. A decision on refusal of entry with immediate effect can only be made within 3 months from when the first asylum application was done in Sweden, in accordance with ch 8 art 5 of the Aliens Act. The competent authority is the Swedish Migration Agency but it is possible for the Swedish Police Authorities to give a decision on refusal of entry with immediate effect, as long as the case do not concern an alien who is applying for asylum here, or an alien with a close relative who is applying for asylum here and a few other cases, as stated in ch 8 art 17 of the Aliens Act.

1.2.3. The Migration Courts and the Migration Court of Appeal

The Swedish Migration Agency's decision of expulsion or deportation, rejection of an application or revocation of a residence permit may be appealed to a Migration Court, as stated in ch 14 art 3 of the Aliens Act. The Migration Court informs the Swedish Migration Agency for them to reconsider their decision. If they choose to uphold the original decision, the Migration Court will examine the case.

The judgement of the Migration Court may be appealed to the Migration Court of Appeal according to ch 16 art 9 of the Aliens Act. For a case to be examined by the highest court it needs to receive a review permit which will only be granted if it is vital to the application of law that the Migration Court of Appeal decides the case at issue or if there is some special reason to adjudicate the appeal in accordance with ch 16 art 12 of the Aliens Act. If a request for a review permit are rejected, the ruling of the Migration Court will be upheld and it is not possible to appeal further. If a request for a review permit is granted the Migration Court of Appeal will examine the case and its judgment will be precedent and guiding for future asylum cases. A judgement by the highest instance cannot be appealed domestically.³²⁷⁵ The proceedings before the Migration Courts and the Migration Court of Appeal are regulated by the Administrative Court Procedure Act 1971:291 [Förvaltningsprocesslag] and chapter 16 of the Aliens Act.

When a decision on refusal of entry with immediate effect or expulsion has come into force and there is no possibility to appeal further, the applicant must leave Sweden. In the decision, there shall be a set time limit in which the applicant needs to leave Sweden voluntarily. The time limit is two weeks for a decision on refusal of entry and four weeks if it is a decision on expulsion, pursuant to ch 8 art 21 of the Aliens Act. After this time, the applicant will no longer have the right to financial support or a place to live. The Migration Agency have the power to forward a case to the police if they feel that the enforcement of a decision needs their assistance. If an applicant is not available, the police have the right to track that person down and to use force.³²⁷⁶ This may also lead to a re-entry ban, issued by the Migration Agency. This means that the person cannot travel to the Schengen area for a certain amount of time with a maximum of five years. This period can be extended if the alien constitutes a threat to public order and security, in accordance with ch 8 art 24 of the Aliens Act. It is also possible that the decision on refusal of entry with immediate effect or expulsion is combined with a re-entry ban from the beginning. This would be the case if the prerequisites for issuing a time limit, when the alien can return voluntarily, is not fulfilled, pursuant to ch 8 art 23 of the Aliens Act. For example, if there is a risk that the person will depart or if he or she constitutes a threat to public order and national security, as stated in ch 8 art 21 of the Aliens Act.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

Immigration from EU member states and non-EU states is regulated under the Aliens Act and under the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden. The above-mentioned acts are the main legislation in this field and will be the focus of this section.³²⁷⁷

2.1. The Right of Residence

The right of residence means that citizens from the EU and their family members may stay in Sweden for more than three months without a residence permit.³²⁷⁸ The provisions of this right are based on the Directive 2004/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.³²⁷⁹ According to ch 3a art 3 of the Aliens Act, EU-citizens have the right of residence if they are employed, self-employed, students or have sufficient means to support themselves. EU-citizens which have come to Sweden to apply for a job and have a real chance to get an employment also have the right of residence. EU citizens require a valid passport or ID card showing their citizenship when entering Sweden, but they do not need to apply for any permit when moving to Sweden.³²⁸⁰

Family members of EU-citizens who themselves have a citizenship within the EU are also entitled to live and work in Sweden without a residence permit.³²⁸¹ The right of residence for family members is dependent on whether the EU-citizen has a right of residence according to ch 3a art 3 of the Aliens Act. According to ch 3a art 2a of the Aliens Act, a family member to an EU-citizen is someone with a family relation established through cohabitation, marriage or parenthood, but may also include other relatives in need of financial or medical support.

2.2. Residence Permit

According to ch 5 of the Aliens Act, there are four grounds for granting a residence permit. A residence permit may be granted due to a need for protection, ties to Sweden, exceptionally distressing circumstances or work, study and similar activities. These will be explained individually below.

³²⁸¹ Aliens Act 2005:716 ch 3a art 4.

2.2.1. Persons Who are Entitled to a Residence Permit for Reasons of Protection

There are three groups of persons in need of protection in the Aliens Act: refugees, persons in need of subsidiary protection and those in need of other protection.³²⁸² The first two groups are mentioned in the Directive 2011/95/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 December 2011 on standards for the qualification of third-country nationals or stateless persons as beneficiaries of international protection, for a uniform status for refugees or for persons eligible for subsidiary protection, and for the content of the protection granted. Consequently, these two grounds are common to all the EU member states. The third group, persons in need for other protection, is only included in Swedish legislation.³²⁸³ In accordance with ch 5 art 1 of the Aliens Act, refugees and persons otherwise in need of protection who are in Sweden are entitled to a residence permit.

In ch 4 art 1 of the Aliens Act, a refugee is defined as an alien who is outside their country of origin due to a well-founded fear of persecution due to personal characteristics or affiliation to particular groups or due to an unwillingness to avail themselves to the protection of that country. This applies both when the authorities in the country themselves are responsible for the persecution and when the authorities are unable or unwilling to offer protection against persecution from other individuals or groups. A person who is considered as a refugee will be granted a refugee status declaration, an internationally recognised status based on the UN Refugee Convention and the EU regulations and directives.³²⁸⁴ In accordance with art 5 para 2 of the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden, a residence permit with a limit of three years is currently granted to those with refugee status.

According to ch 4 art 2 of the Aliens Act, a person deemed in need of subsidiary protection is one who feels a well-founded fear of being subjected to capital or corporal punishment, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment. Those who need protection due to being unable to return to their country of origin because of internal or external armed conflict, other severe conflicts or environmental disasters occurring, as well as those having a well-founded fear of being subjected to serious abuses are included under this definition.³²⁸⁵ An alien will be granted a subsidiary protection status declaration, if he or she is assessed as in need of subsidiary protection.³²⁸⁶ According to art 5 para 3 of the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden, persons with a protection status declaration are normally given a residence permit for 13 months.

Asylum seekers may be granted a residence permit even if they do not need protection from persecution, in exceptional cases. This requires extraordinary circumstances that are directly linked to their personal situation, (for example, people with very serious health issues or people subjected to human trafficking) indicating that a decision to deny residence permit would conflict with Sweden's international obligations.³²⁸⁷ Nonetheless, this provision is not currently applicable according to art 5 para 1 of the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden.

2.2.2. Residence Permit on the Grounds of Ties to Sweden

A citizen of a non-EU country that wants to move to a family member in Sweden is required to have a residence permit.³²⁸⁸ According to chap 5 art 3 para 1 of the Aliens Act, a citizen of a non-EU country is entitled to receive a residence permit if he or she is married to, has entered a registered partnership, or is the cohabiting partner of someone who lives in Sweden. Additionally, the family member in Sweden must be a Swedish citizen or have a permanent residence permit or a residence permit for at least one year and have well-founded prospects to be granted a permanent residence permit.³²⁸⁹ The marriage or the partnership should be registered at the Swedish Tax Agency.³²⁹⁰ Apart from this, a person wishing to move in with a relative in Sweden must fulfill the maintenance requirement. The person that the applicant is going to live with in Sweden must be able to support both. When the applicant moves to Sweden, the receiving partner must also have a home of a sufficient size and standard for both to live in.³²⁹¹

According to ch 5 art 3a para 1 a non-EU citizen can be granted a residence permit if he or she is planning to marry or become the cohabiting partner of someone living in Sweden. The relationship should consider being serious. The maintenance requirement mentioned above is applicable in this situation as well.

2.2.3. Residence Permit on Grounds of Work, Studies or Other Means of Support

In accordance with ch 5 art 5 of the Aliens Act, an alien may be granted a permanent residence permit if he or she for the past five years held a residence permit for work in a total of four years. An alien may also be granted a residence permit if having other means of support than employment, such as business activities, as long as the alien is able to conduct the activities in question.³²⁹²

2.2.4. Residence Permit on Grounds of Exceptionally Distressing Circumstances

If an alien cannot be granted a residence permit on other grounds, a permit may be granted to an alien if an overall assessment of the situation discovers exceptionally distressing circumstances which should allow the alien to stay in Sweden. When making this assessment, one shall pay particular attention to the alien's state of health, his or her adaptation to Sweden and his or her situation in the country of origin.³²⁹³

2.3. Work Permit (Arbetsstillstånd)

In accordance with ch 2 art 7 of the Aliens Act, a work permit is a permit to work in Sweden. In order to work in Sweden for reasons of employment here or abroad, an alien must have a work permit. A work permit shall be granted for a certain period, it may refer to a certain profession and other necessary conditions can be attached.³²⁹⁴ A work permit may be granted to an alien if he or she has an offer of employment in Sweden. The employment must enable the alien to support himself or herself and the terms of employment such as the pay, insurance and other terms shall not be worse than the terms that follow from Swedish collective agreements or practice within the profession or sector.³²⁹⁵

According to ch 6 art 2a para 1 of the Aliens Act, a work permit cannot be granted for a longer period than two years. Nor can it be granted for a longer period than the period of employment. The first work permit of two years shall be linked to a particular employer and refer to a certain profession. After the first two years, the permit shall only be linked to a particular profession.³²⁹⁶ In accordance with ch 6 art 4, if an alien wants to have a work permit, he or she must apply and be granted such a permit before entering the country.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

3.1. The Swedish Migration Agency

In Sweden, the Migration Agency³²⁹⁷ is the central administrative authority in the area of asylum.³²⁹⁸ Legal provisions and instructions governing the Migration Agency's work are mainly found in the Alien's Act of 2005³²⁹⁹ and the 2006 Ordinance³³⁰⁰. The Migration Agency is the only authority responsible for registering asylum applications. Hence, it has the main task of considering applications concerning a foreigner's right to stay in Sweden, such as asylum, visa or the right to get a Swedish citizenship. Consequently, the Agency's tasks in the field of migration vary. It has special units for different types of applications, for example reception, work permits, family reunification and asylum.

The parliament and the government set the asylum policy.³³⁰¹ The Agency is under the Ministry of Justice, it reports to and cooperates with the Ministry of Justice. According to the Swedish constitution, the Agency is independent of the parliament and the government, both of which are prohibited to affect individual decisions of the Agency.³³⁰² The Migration Agency's funding is derived from the State budget. The State funding for migration also covers costs for legal representatives in asylum-matters, judicial review and the expedition of the rejected and expelled asylum-seekers.³³⁰³

One of the Agency's main responsibilities is to ensure an effective and individual case management in accordance with the Swedish Alien and Citizenship Act. Furthermore, the Agency provides asylum-seekers with housing and maintenance support during the asylum process. Once an asylum-seeker's application is rejected, the Agency takes an active part in the process of the asylum-seeker's repatriation.³³⁰⁴ Thus, the Aliens Act together with the Law on Reception of Asylum Seekers and Others³³⁰⁵ are the main legislative acts relevant to asylum procedures, reception conditions and detention.

The Aliens Act was reformed in 2006, introducing a new institutional system where the Migration Agency takes first instance decisions and appeals are considered at two levels in the administrative courts. Previously, an appeal was made before the appeal committee, being the last instance. One of the main purposes behind the abolishment of the committee of appeal was to increase legal certainty. Now, if an asylum-seeker's application is rejected by the Migration Agency, he or she may lodge an appeal before one of Sweden's four Migration Courts.³³⁰⁶ The appeal has suspensive effect under the regular procedure, unless the case is manifestly unfounded. The Migration Courts are special divisions of the County Administrative Courts in Stockholm, Gothenburg, Luleå and Malmö. If the asylum-seeker is not satisfied with the Migration Court's determination, he or she is given the possibility to lodge an appeal before the Migration Court of Appeal.³³⁰⁷ The procedure differs from the Migration Courts, as a leave to appeal has to be requested in order for the Migration Court of Appeal to consider the case.³³⁰⁸

The Migration Court of Appeal is the final instance and its decisions play a powerful role for the

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

4.1. Migration Statistics in Sweden

Sweden has ever since the 50's and 60's been an immigration country with refugees from Germany, the Nordic countries and the Baltics. After the end of World War II and at the end of the 60s, Sweden became the host country for labour immigration. The 80's was the decade of asylum-seekers, mainly from Iraq, Iran, Libya and Turkey, while the 90's was the decade of asylum-seekers from the Balkans. The refugee crisis in 2015 led to 162 877 asylum-seekers in Sweden, with a Syrians being the vast majority.³³¹⁰

During the last six months, the total amount of asylum-seekers in Sweden has reached 11 423, of which 6 888 are men, 4 535 are women and 593 are unaccompanied minors. During April, the number of asylum-seekers was as low as 1584 while it increased to 2 350 in June. The largest groups of asylum-seekers are Syrians, Iraqis and Afghans.³³¹¹ There is a clear reduction in the number of asylum applications, in particular compared with the year of 2015 when the refugee crisis reached its peak, and the number of asylum-seekers reached 162 877.³³¹² A decrease in the number of asylum applications was already noticeable in the year of 2016, when the Migration Agency received totally 28 939 asylum applications.³³¹³ To date, a total amount of 27 826 decisions were taken by the Migration Agency during the year of 2017, whereof 40 percent granted a residence permit.³³¹⁴ Furthermore, a total of 49 085 persons were granted residence permit by extension in 2016, compared with 43 414 in 2015, of which 34 percent were relatives to Swedish citizens.³³¹⁵

As for stateless persons, according to estimates from 2010 there are between 10 000 to 35 000 stateless persons living in Sweden, of which 3 000 are children.³³¹⁶

In 2013, a total of 27 000 work permits were granted. The largest categories of non-EU/EEA citizens who were granted work permits were citizens from Thailand, India, China and Syria. One of the most common occupational categories of migrant workers in 2013 was computer specialists and in 2014, 5 percent of Sweden's computer specialists consisted of migrant workers.³³¹⁷

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. The Convention and Swedish Migration Law

The European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms³³¹⁸ was incorporated into Swedish law 1994, a law which came into force 1995.³³¹⁹ Before 1995 the legal status of the Convention was debated and uncertain since Sweden is considered a dualist state.³³²⁰ It was argued that Swedish courts and administrative agencies were under no direct obligation to follow the Convention before it had been incorporated into national law.³³²¹ The Swedish parliament was under the impression that an incorporation was unnecessary since Swedish law already fulfilled the requirements of the Convention.³³²² In the 1980's the European Court of Human Rights³³²³ found Sweden to be in breach of the Convention in several judgements.³³²⁴ Those judgements in combination with other factors, such as Sweden's application of membership to the EU and other Nordic states incorporating the Convention, contributed to the legislator incorporating the Convention and therefore clarifying its legal status.³³²⁵ Between 1959 and 2016 Sweden was the respondent state in 149 judgements, whereof 60 were judgements finding at least one violation.³³²⁶

In July 20 2016, the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden came into force.³³²⁷ Its purpose was to reduce the number of asylum seekers in Sweden by adapting the Swedish regulations to the minimum requirements of EU-law and international conventions.³³²⁸

To avoid violating international conventions, the law contains a prerequisite which states that residence permits based on exceptionally or particularly distressing circumstances may only be granted if refusing entry to or expelling the person would contravene a Swedish commitment under a convention. This also applies to family reunification of asylum seekers deemed eligible for subsidiary protection.³³²⁹ The convention commitment primarily considered in this case is the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.³³³⁰

This prerequisite means that the Convention and the decisions of the ECHR has become even more important to those deemed eligible for subsidiary protection seeking residence permit on the grounds of right to family reunification and those seeking it on the grounds of exceptional or particularly distressing circumstances, since a contravention of the Convention or other Swedish commitments is the only possibility of being granted residence permits. Since the temporary law was enforced quite recently, there are not many precedents or established practices on how it should be applied.³³³¹

5.2. ECtHR Decisions Implemented through National Court Practice

Many ECtHR decisions regarding migration law are related to article 3 (prohibition of torture and non-refoulement) and article 8 (right to respect for private and family life) of the Convention. These are some of the recent decisions from the ECtHR regarding article 3 and 8 that has had an impact on migration law in Sweden and has been implemented through its national court practice. In the cases referred below the national courts was taking the ECtHR's reasoning into account when adjudicating similar cases at a national level.

5.2.1. Court Practice Regarding Article 8 - Right to Respect for Private and Family Life

Article 8 is often relevant in court practice since deportation of a person, or rejection of an application for residence permit may constitute an infringement of the article if the person has a private and/or family life in Sweden.

In MIG 2012:13, the question was whether an adult man who had been in Sweden for nine years, whereof four illegally, suffered from exceptionally or particularly distressing circumstances that could have granted him a residence permit according to the Swedish Aliens Act, ch 5, art ³³³⁰ Government Bill prop. 2015/16:174, Temporary Restrictions of the Possibility of being granted a Residence Permit in Sweden, pp. 51-52.

³³³¹ See for example recent cases from lower instance Case nr UM 828-16, UM 3992-16, UM 10276-16 [May 10 2017] Migration Court of Sweden [Swedish] regarding article 8 of the convention; Case nr 8551-16 [June 19 2017] Migration Court of Sweden [Swedish] regarding article 3 of the Convention. In this case residence was granted on principles set out in Paposhvili v Belgium App no 41738/10 (ECtHR, December 13 2016).

6.³³³² The Migration Court of Appeal had previously stated that when granting residence on the grounds of particularly distressing circumstances due to adaptation to Sweden according to the Aliens Act, ch 5, art 6, only periods of legal stay would be considered for adults.³³³³ But in MIG 2012:13 the court established a new practice. The possibility of granting residence according to the Aliens Act, ch 5, art 6, due to long periods of residence was very limited in previous court practice.³³³⁴ However, the court stated that article 8 of the Convention and its interpretation by the ECtHR must be considered when assessing the Aliens Act. The Migration Court of Appeal thereafter stated that also illegal periods of residence should be considered when assessing if a foreigner has established a private or family life by referring to ECtHR decision A.A. v UK, stating that the ECtHR does not seem to make any difference between legal and illegal periods of residence in this case.³³³⁵

Since the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of Being Granted a Residence Permit in Sweden came into force, a residence permit based on exceptionally or particularly distressing circumstances according to the Aliens Act ch 5, art 6, can only be granted if not doing so would contravene a Swedish commitment under a convention. Therefore, when a foreigner applies for a residence permit on the grounds of a relationship to family members, the ECtHR court practice is relevant to assess which kinds of relationships constitutes a family life according to article 8 of the Convention. The case of Senchishak v Finland is about an elderly woman who wanted to reunite with her adult daughter living in Finland.³³³⁶ The ECtHR decision confirms the court practice that there is no family life between elderly parents and their adult children if there are no additional factors of independence other than normal emotional ties.³³³⁷ This decision has been implemented into national court practice by MIG 2015:12.³³³⁸ The Migration Court of Appeal based their argumentation on whether denying reunification would constitute a violation of article 8 on the court practice criteria established in Senchishak v Finland mentioned above.

5.2.2. Court Practice Regarding Article 3 - Prohibition of Torture

The case referred to below is about Swedish courts and authorities executing an ECtHR judgment which found Sweden in breach of a right enshrined in the Convention. Sweden was the respondent state in R.C. v Sweden, which concerned an Iranian citizen who applied for refugee status since he had been subjected to torture because of his political activities.³³³⁹ R.C. provided a medical certificate from a general doctor, supporting his claims of torture. The Swedish Migration Agency did not consider that the certificate proved that R.C. had been subjected to torture in Iran, therefore it would not be a violation of article 3 to reject his application for asylum. According to the Swedish authorities, R.C. had to provide an expert opinion. The ECtHR states that there is a general principle that national authorities are the most suitable to assess questions about facts and credibility. But in this case, the ECtHR disagrees with the Swedish authorities' assessment of R.C.'s credibility when it comes to the claims of torture. Since the medical certificate provided by R.C. was a rather strong indication that the cause of his injuries might have been torture, the authorities were seen as responsible in obtaining an expert opinion, according to the general principle of the benefit of the doubt.³³⁴⁰ The applicant made no claim for pecuniary or non-pecuniary damages and the ECtHR decision has been implemented through court practice.³³⁴¹ The case has also been referred in the Swedish Migration Agency's legal opinion [rättsliga ställningstagande], which is a legal document providing legal guidance for the Migration Agency on how to assess reliability and credibility.³³⁴²

5.3. Summary of the Implementation of Decisions by the ECtHR at National Level

In Sweden, implementation of ECtHR decisions can be made through courts reinterpreting national law on appeal, reopening of cases, awarding damages and interim injunctions [inhibition] in cases involving deportation.³³⁴³ In general, and as shown by the cases referred above, Swedish courts frequently refers to ECtHR decisions in their judgements. In cases where Sweden is the respondent state, as in R.C. v Sweden, courts are particularly careful in implementing the judgements of the ECtHR and decisions are always followed by national courts either by making new legal assessments or interpretations of national law. To summarize, since the incorporation of the Convention, national courts have consistently been implementing decisions by the ECtHR.³³⁴⁴ References to ECtHR decisions are common, also when they concern other states than Sweden, such as A.A. v UK mentioned above. In future court practice such references will probably increase within the field of migration law because of the new temporary law which makes a possible contravention of the Convention the only possibility of being granting residence permits for many asylum seekers.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

In the following chapter, it is explained how Sweden has implemented recommendations to make the integration of migrants into society easier. Firstly, it is explained how language and other similar challenges have been handled in Sweden to make integration efficient. Secondly, it is explained which ways there are for migrants to participate in society, find their place and integrate.

6.1. Language

Language is an important factor when someone is integrating into a society. Learning Swedish gives migrants a better possibility to find a job and makes it easier for them to study at different levels of education in Sweden. There are programs that help migrants learn Swedish, for example Swedish for migrants [Svenska för invandrare] (SFI). In SFI, migrants are also taught about Swedish culture, society and working in Sweden. SFI courses have different levels depending on previous Swedish skills. The main objective of SFI is to help migrants learn Swedish, leading to integration into the society as fast as possible. Knowledge of Swedish is important, as it is almost exclusively used in all areas of work and education in Sweden.

6.1.1. Right to Information

Public authorities mainly use Swedish, but are recommended to translate documents to a language that the private person understands, in case the individual does not understand Swedish. According to the Administrative Procedure Act Sec 8 there should be arrangements for an interpreter, if necessary.

6.2. Participation

The possibility to participate in different aspects of society is assured by constitutional and other laws. The following chapter explains how Sweden has ensured the participation in education and through employment. These measures prevent segregation and gives migrants the means to integrate into society faster.

6.2.1. Constitutional Laws

The Instrument of Government 1974:152 [Regeringsformen] is a constitutional law which guarantees equal rights to individuals and prohibits authorities to exercise discrimination when they are fulfilling their responsibilities.³³⁴⁵ Other rights expressed within the Instrument of Government are freedom of speech, right to information, freedom of assembly, freedom of demonstration, right to form associations and freedom of religion.³³⁴⁶ Some of the constitutional rights may be limited, but that can only be done in accordance with law.³³⁴⁷ Also, the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) has been fully implemented into Swedish law, leading to a stronger protection of human rights for persons in Sweden.

The Freedom of the Press Act 1949:105 [Tryckfrihetsförordningen] gives every Swedish citizen the right to spread and receive information in printed text without obstruction from ³³⁴⁵ The Instrument of Government Ch 1 Sec 9.

³³⁴⁶ Ibid. Ch 2 Sec 1 Pt 1.

authorities.³³⁴⁸ In the Freedom of the Press Act, no differences are made between foreigners and Swedish citizens unless an exception is made in another law or ordinance.³³⁴⁹

The Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression 1991:1469 [Yttrandefrihetsgrundlagen] gives every Swedish citizen the right to spread information, thoughts and feelings in radio, television, databases etc. This is done to ensure a free debate.³³⁵⁰ Similar to the Freedom of the Press Act, no differences are made in the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression between foreigners and Swedish citizens, unless another law or ordinance makes an exception.³³⁵¹

6.2.2. Education

According to the Education Act 2010:800 [Skollagen] every child living in Sweden has the right to attend school, which is also compulsory.³³⁵² This obligation includes all children between seven and eighteen years old or those who completed ninth grade of elementary school.³³⁵³ The responsibility to ensure that the obligation is fulfilled is held by guardians and the municipality of residence.³³⁵⁴ Children of minority groups are not placed in separate classes. Pupils with difficulties in speaking Swedish can get support from a person who speaks the same foreign language as the pupil, as well as Swedish. Everyone may continue to upper secondary school and university after completing the compulsory ninth grade. Racism is not allowed in schools and schools should actively prevent racism. Teachers and staff are responsible for reporting insulting behaviour to headmasters. The headmaster, in turn, is responsible for reporting this to the chief who must create a plan to prevent similar incidents in the future.³³⁵⁵ If a school fails to prevent racism, the school can become obliged to pay damages.³³⁵⁶

6.2.3. Employment

It is not allowed to discriminate job applicants, trainees or workers because of their nationality, language, gender, religion, disability, sexual orientation or age.³³⁵⁷ According to the Discrimination Act 2008:567 [Diskrimineringslagen] Ch 2 Sec 2, it is allowed to set requirements that are necessary to be fulfilled in order to be able to do the work. These exceptions always require an objectively legitimate purpose. Both direct and indirect discrimination are prohibited.³³⁵⁸ According to the Penal Code 1962:700 [Brottsbalken] an enterpriser is not allowed to discriminate anyone by applying different terms for different nationalities, religions, ethnicities or races.

6.2.4. Combating Hate Speech

Hate speech is prohibited, with penalties varying from fines and up to two years in prison. Aggravated forms of hate speech may be punished with a prison sentence, from six months up to four years.³³⁵⁹ When featuring in other crimes, racist motives are considered aggravating circumstances and may affect whether a crime is considered to be normal or aggravated.³³⁶⁰ If aggravated form of crime is not sentenced because of racist motive, it will then affect length of penalty inside penalty scale for normal form of crime.³³⁶¹

6.2.5. Policing

Racial profiling is prohibited according to Police Data Act 2010:361 [Polisdatalagen] Ch 2 Sec 10 which states that gathering information about a person only based on race, ethnicity, political opinions, religion, membership of workers' union, health or sexuality is not allowed. If information about a person is collected for other purposes, it is allowed to use even this kind of information for completion, as long as it is absolutely necessary for the purpose.

6.3. Implementation of ECRI Recommendations

Sweden has only partially implemented recommendations to adopt a plan of action to address residential segregation in Sweden as a matter of urgency. There is still no overall national Action Plan to address the issue. Sweden has provided support for cooperation between several public service agencies and municipalities. The government has allocated 100,000,000 SEK for urban development initiatives in 2013 and additional 100,000,000 SEK in 2014. The Equality Ombudsman has been asked to relocate the agency offices to vulnerable areas. Several local government offices are preparing to relocate to these areas in order to support local businesses.³³⁶²

Sweden has implemented recommendation to give free medical care to children, pregnant women and persons with acute conditions or suffering from serious infectious diseases who does not have residence permit or who have not applied asylum. The Act on Health and Medical Care for Certain Aliens Residing in Sweden without the Necessary Permits (2013:407) gives these people same right to medical care as asylum seekers. Asylum-seeking children get the same health and medical care as children who are resident in the country.³³⁶³

Recommendation to implement measures to resolve all family reunification problems arising due to difficulties in obtaining identity papers in the country of origin has been implemented partially. Steps towards resolving family reunification problems have been taken and some positive results have been achieved. These measures are currently not regulated by law and that is why ECRI considers this recommendation implemented only partially.³³⁶⁴

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. The General Provisions for Swedish Healthcare

The Swedish central government, county councils and municipalities share the responsibility for health and medical care in the country. While the central government sets the general principles through legislations, the healthcare is decentralized and thus the main responsibility of the county councils.³³⁶⁵ The legislation that specifically regulates how healthcare should be organised and run is the Health and Medical Services Act 2017:30 [Hälso- och sjukvårdslag], while the Patient Safety Act 2010:659 [Patientsäkerhetslag] regulates the responsibilities of healthcare providers. According to ch 3 art 1 of the Health and Medical Services Act, the fundamental goal of Swedish healthcare is that everyone in Sweden receives good and safe healthcare on equal terms. The care shall be given with equality and respect for the individual's dignity, and those with the greatest need for treatment shall be prioritised. The possibility of receiving healthcare should thus not be affected by factors such as age, sex, ability of initiative, education, ability to pay, nationality or cultural differences.³³⁶⁶ The extent of healthcare that a county is obliged to provide depends on the individual's residence or migrant status, and is divided into three levels; complete essential healthcare, healthcare that cannot wait and emergency healthcare.³³⁶⁷ In the following paragraphs these three types of healthcare and their addressees will be presented in detail.

7.1.1. Permanent Residents in Sweden

According to ch 8 art 1 and 4 of the Health and Medical Services Act, a county administration is obliged to provide complete essential healthcare to permanent residents of the county, while only outpatient care, i.e. care that does not require an overnight stay at a hospital, must be provided to permanent residents of another county in Sweden. Migrants who are granted residence permits lasting longer than 12 months will be registered in the Swedish Population Register and thus considered permanent residents in the county where they live.³³⁶⁸ They have the same right to complete essential healthcare as other residents under the non-discrimination principle in ch 3 art 1. The healthcare is subsidized through taxes, but the county councils may set certain patient's fees.

7.1.2. EU-citizens

As a member of the EU, Sweden is part of the common coordination of social security implemented through Regulation (EC) No 883/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the coordination of social security systems. Citizens of the EU, the EEA and Switzerland, who are insured for healthcare benefits in their home country but stay temporarily in Sweden, are entitled to the same sickness benefits as permanent residents of Sweden according to article 17. Furthermore, article 4 of the regulation grants these persons a right to equality of treatment, which thereby prohibits Swedish healthcare providers from any kind of discrimination in providing these healthcare benefits. In national legislation, ch 8 act 2 of the Health and Medical Services Act grants the right to complete essential healthcare to those who are entitled to sickness benefits by the regulation, in case of illness or motherhood. The healthcare in question shall be provided in the county where the person in question is working or where he or she is registered as job-seeker.³³⁶⁹

7.1.3. Persons who stay within a county without being residents

Those who fall ill but are not permanent residents in the county council where the emergency occurs, have the right to receive essential emergency healthcare, ch 8 art 4 of the Health and Medical Services Act. This means that both those who live in another county, or don't live in Sweden at all, are granted this basic level of healthcare. Anyone who travels to Sweden and reside here temporarily, for example as a tourist or for business, is thereby granted this level of basic healthcare. Healthcare received under this right is not subsidized and the patients must pay the total cost of the medical treatment. However, healthcare personnel is not allowed to deny emergency healthcare even if the patients are, or seem to be, unable to pay.³³⁷⁰ Although this law sets the minimum level and right to receive emergency healthcare when visiting a county in Sweden where you do not live, certain groups of migrants have separate legislations which regulate their right to healthcare access.

7.1.4. Non-discrimination

In the Discrimination Act 2008:567 [Diskrimineringslagen], it is explicitly stated in Ch 2 Art 13 that discrimination is prohibited within the health care system. Although asylum status is not a ground for discrimination, the legislation prohibits discrimination based on sex, transgender identity or expression, ethnicity, religion or other belief, disability, sexual orientation or age. If a migrant has been discriminated in the health care system on one of these grounds, he or she can file a report with the Equality Ombudsman, which works on behalf on the government to combat discrimination, ch 4 art 1. Furthermore, patients who believe they have been sustained an injury after receiving or being denied health care, for example due to discriminatory treatment, can file a report with the Health and Social Care Inspectorate according to ch 7 art 10 of the Patient Safety Act. The inspection can result in criticism and proposals to the health care provider according to ch 7 art 24, or even suspension of a license to practice, ch 8 art 3.

7.2. Special Regulations for Migrants

7.2.1. Asylum Seekers

The right to healthcare for asylum seekers in Sweden is regulated through the Health and Medical Care for Asylum Seekers and Others Act 2008:344 [Lagen om hälso- och sjukvård åt asylsökande m.fl.]. Art 6 of this law grants asylum seekers the right to “healthcare that cannot wait”, as well as maternity and childbirth care, contraceptive advice and abortion. “Healthcare that cannot wait” is a term specific to Swedish legislation that encompasses a wider scope of treatment than emergency healthcare, and will be discussed further in section 7.2.3. According to art 4, the same scope of treatment is also granted those who have been notified a decision of rejection of asylum or deportation but not yet left the country. However, this does not apply if the affected person stays hidden to prevent the decision from being enforced.³³⁷¹ Contrary to adult asylum seekers, those under 18 are entitled to the same range of healthcare granted permanent residents of the county in accordance to the Health and Medical Services Act.³³⁷² As previously described, this means that they are guaranteed complete essential healthcare.

The healthcare that asylum seekers receive is subsidized by taxes, but the patients are charged with patient’s fees just like permanent residents. The fees for asylum seekers are generally lower than the ordinary fees.³³⁷³ If children who are permanent residents of the county are exempt from patient’s fees, then children who have applied for asylum are exempt from these fees as well.³³⁷⁴

7.2.2. Irregular Migrants

Before 2013, the healthcare of irregular immigrants, i.e. those who stay in Sweden without applying for the necessary residence permits or who have been denied residence permit and stay hidden to avoid expulsion, remained unregulated by law. Each county council could develop their own set of guidelines. As a consequence, different principles and guidelines were in place in different parts of the country, resulting in varying access to healthcare for those who stayed in the country without the necessary permits.³³⁷⁵ On July 1 2013, the Health Care for Certain Foreigners Who Stay in Sweden Without the Necessary Permits Act 2013:407 [Lag om hälso- och sjukvård till vissa utlänningar som vistas i Sverige utan nödvändiga tillstånd] came into force. This meant that irregular migrants became entitled to the same extent of healthcare as asylum seekers. Irregular migrants are thus entitled to “healthcare that cannot wait” as well as maternity and childbirth care, contraceptive advice and abortion.³³⁷⁶ County councils may however offer healthcare beyond this minimum level.³³⁷⁷ Children under 18 without permits are entitled to complete essential healthcare.³³⁷⁸ Patient's fees remain on the same levels as those of asylum seekers.³³⁷⁹

7.2.3. The Scope of Entitlement – Healthcare that Cannot Wait

The meaning of “healthcare that cannot wait” is discussed in the legislative history of the law and is defined as treatments to illness and injuries which can cause severe consequences if they go untreated even for a moderate period of time.³³⁸⁰ The term encompasses a wider scope of treatment than emergency care, and covers both somatic, psychiatric and dental care.³³⁸¹ Despite this definition, the term remains imprecise and the legislator has left it to the health professional to determine if healthcare should be provided in each respective case. As a consequence, many within the profession have expressed concern and criticism towards the vague legal term, claiming it can cause both discretionary and unequal treatment.³³⁸² The National Board of Health and Welfare has attempted to clarify the term and the scope of entitlement, but concluded in a comprehensive report in 2014 that although the vagueness of the term could jeopardize patient security, it would not be ethically or medically possible to specify the term with an exact list of which illnesses or injuries are covered. The scope of entitlement of asylum seekers and irregular migrants thereby remains a decision for the caregiver in each specific case.³³⁸³

7.2.4. Health Assessment

Member states of the EU may require a medical screening for asylum seekers on public health grounds according to article 13 of Directive 2013/33/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 Laying Down Standards for the Reception of Applicants for International Protection. This provision has not been incorporated into the Swedish legislation. However, the county councils are obliged to offer both asylum seekers and irregular migrants a voluntary health assessment.³³⁸⁴ According to the National Board of Health and Welfare, the assessment is offered to identify possible ill health and need for contraception measures, but also in order to inform the asylum seeker about his or her right to healthcare.³³⁸⁵ The healthcare

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

Children staying in Sweden have the right to education according to 7 chapter 2 art. and 29 chapter 2 art. 2 paragraph School Act 2010:800 [Skollagen]. The group entitled to claim this right includes both registered³³⁸⁷ and unregistered³³⁸⁸ children, as well as children waiting for granted asylum. Even children whose application for asylum has been rejected have the right to education.³³⁸⁹ This group of children will in the following text be referred to as migrant children. Thus, almost all children living in Sweden has the right to education under the national legislation.³³⁹⁰ This, partly, complies with the right to education in article 2 of Protocol no. 1 in the ECHR due to the regulations that denies children staying in Sweden on a residence permit shorter than a year schooling.

Several researches have shown the importance of schooling.³³⁹¹ Despite this, several studies indicate a lower participation of asylum-seeking and unauthorized children, as well as children staying on a residence permit, than medium values for the country as a whole.³³⁹²³³⁹³

8.1. The Number of Migrant Children and the Right to Education

Sweden has a municipally governed school system, where individual municipalities are responsible for providing education to those living in their territory. However, subjects and learning goals are decided by the Swedish National Agency for Education.

What separates migrant children from children who are registered in the public system is that migrant children do not have compulsory schooling. All migrant children do, however, have the right to participate in both primary and secondary education if the child or his or her parents so wish. As a consequence, the number of asylum-seeking children staying in a municipality does ³³⁸⁷ Registered children are all the children who either are Swedish citizens, asylum or residence permit seekers. At the beginning of 2013 around 14 000 asylum-seeking children stayed in Sweden. See Swedish School Inspectorate, 'Asylum-Seeking Children's Rights to Education', p. 5.

³³⁸⁸ Unauthorized children are children who never applied for an asylum or a residence permit and whom the authorities therefore have no register of. In 2013 approximately 2000-3000 unauthorised children stayed in Sweden.

³³⁸⁹ In 2013 around 1 500 children whose application got denied stayed in Sweden.

³³⁹⁰ The ones that do not have the right to go to school are the ones staying in Sweden on a residence permit shorter than a year.

³³⁹¹ For example, SOU 2010:5, 'Schooling for all Children' and SOU 2007:34, 'Schooling for Children to be Rejected or Expelled'.

not necessarily coincide with the number of children participating in education.³³⁹⁴ The question of how many migrant children there are in a municipality appears to be very complex. The fact that municipalities do not always have the opportunity to know which children are staying in the municipality makes it difficult to offer education to them.³³⁹⁵

The municipality where a migrant child lives is obliged to offer schooling within a month from the day the child arrived at the municipality, chapter 4 art. 1a School Ordinance 2011:185 [Skolförordningen]. Here is also stated that the child is entitled to an education which complies with the provisions of the regulation. Amongst other things, this means that the child has the right to an education with the same content and scope and the same special support that Swedish citizens receive. These rights apply even if the child is given a decision of rejection or expulsion, and are valid until the child leaves the country, according to chapter 29 art. 4 School Act.

Access to education is of great importance to the child, whether he or she can stay in Sweden or not.³³⁹⁶ If the children are to receive the education they are entitled to, their prior knowledge must be charted and assessed. The school is also responsible for ensuring that all pupils receive an individually adapted education, planning their pupil's development and supervise it throughout the school period. For migrant children, it means that they will, for example, be offered education and study in their mother-tongue and a customised study program, if necessary. As with everyone else, it is of great importance that the child will get the guidance and stimulus necessary for their learning and personal development, to develop as far as possible according to their educational goals, chapter 3 art. 3 School Act.³³⁹⁷

The Swedish Migration Board is the authority responsible for examining applications from immigrants in Sweden. Despite this, The Swedish Migration Board is not obligated to notify municipalities, and the lack of legal obligation to do so prohibit the Migration Board from sending personal data regarding asylum seekers to a municipality without consent from the individuals themselves. The Swedish Migration Board does offer asylum seeking families assistance in communicating information about their children to the municipality, which is mandatory when offering education.

This means that the municipalities currently do not automatically get to know about all migrant children that are staying in their territory. Migrant children are not required to attend school and therefore do not need to make themselves known. As a consequence, there may be children who remain unknown, especially if the municipality is lacking central coordination. To respond to the law's requirement to offer migrant children education within one month, it is important that the municipalities become aware of the fact that those children are staying in the municipality.

³³⁹⁴ In a study from 2015 the Swedish Migration Agency stated that between 20-32 % more children lived in the municipalities than the number of children than were enrolled in school at the same time. The variation in numbers depended on the municipalities. Swedish School Inspectorate, 2015.

8.1.1. Individual Assessment of the Need for Education

Identifying and assessing the prior knowledge of migrant children is a prerequisite for the pupils to receive the education they are entitled to under the school regulations. How children become aware of the fact that they have a right to education varies.³³⁹⁸ Most municipalities seek out the migrant children in some way, which may be done by other parties than the committee of education.³³⁹⁹

It is common for municipalities to survey the children's previous schooling and knowledge. Some do it at a first meeting, such as an enrolment call, while others do so when the student has arrived at the school.³⁴⁰⁰ The assessment of whether a migrant child should start at a national program or in an opening program is rarely reported before the child is enrolled in school. Nearly all of the municipalities with migrant children in upper secondary education state that they initially invite them to commence studies in a language introduction program. Afterward, they can switch to another introductory program or a national program³⁴⁰¹.

8.1.2. Time, Content and Special Support

The municipalities do some form of individual assessment of what a migrant child needs from education. This is the right of the individual child, and the starting point at the primary school should always be that the child will be taught in all subjects. Not even half of the municipalities offer such education today. Instead, some form of customised education is offered. There is also a significantly higher number of this group that have customised studies than for the country's students overall. The situation is often worse for the migrant children participating in upper secondary school than for those participating in primary school. It should also be noted that compared to those involved in primary school, there may be a significant reduction in participation in education, fewer subject to full-time studies and fewer municipalities offering mother tongue education to asylum seekers in upper secondary school.³⁴⁰²

Some migrant children participate in education where only other migrant children participate, for example at a school that has been started only for migrant children. At least 11 percent of the children in elementary school and at least 4 percent in the upper secondary school participate in this kind of education³⁴⁰³. Also, most municipalities state that the migrant children do not move to another class or school, which means that their education does not change and they continue to participate in schooling with other new arrivals.³⁴⁰⁴ It is apparent that a higher proportion of children in elementary school are offered the amount of education stated in regulations than what is the case with children in upper secondary school.³⁴⁰⁵ The offer of hours per day varies according to the age of the children. Most municipalities offer teaching hours by the school regulations, but some municipalities deviate. At least, some children are offered education for one hour a day at primary school³⁴⁰⁶. This is motivated by individually adapted studies to suit the student's needs.³⁴⁰⁷

In the upper secondary school, 28 municipalities do not offer the regulated full time on a national program³⁴⁰⁸. The municipalities who do not offer full-time education indicate that there is no staff available as the main reasons. Some primary school's municipalities state that they had been acting according to the principle of prioritizing the best interest of the child and that the children could not initially study full-time.³⁴⁰⁹

It is also far from all migrant children who are offered a primary education covering all subjects. 44 percent of municipalities offer the regulated amount of hours and offer migrant children the same education as children who are registered; this covers just under 40 percent of the children concerned. This means that more than half do not receive education in all subjects.³⁴¹⁰

For the migrant children involved in language introduction, it is most common for the municipality to find individual solutions. This means that they can read both the elementary school subjects and upper secondary school courses based on the level of education they have participated in before coming to Sweden. It is also apparent that a greater proportion of the migrant children study elementary school subjects and single high school courses. 40 municipalities state that the migrant children only read the subjects of the elementary school.³⁴¹¹

Many municipalities claim that they are cautious about offering migrant children education in special school, and often state that the reason is that it is hard to carry out the investigations required to ensure what could be special needs of the child. When an investigation is deemed to be necessary, it is made when the child has attended school for a while, and then in initial contact with the child. However, some migrant children participate in special education. Based on information provided by the Swedish School Inspectorate [Skolverket], 1 percent of the students in primary school participate in special education, while 2 percent of the pupils in upper secondary school do so.³⁴¹²

8.2. Education in the Student's Mother Tongue

Education in the child's mother-tongue is not a compulsory subject, but should be offered to the students entitled to it under the regulation, 14-15 art. Language Act 2009:600 [Språklagen] and chapter 10 art. 4 and art. 7, chapter 11 art. 6 and art. 10, chapter 15 art. 19 School Act, provided that the municipality can get a suitable teacher and that the school has at least five students with the same language as a mother tongue. This applies to both primary and secondary schools.

³⁴⁰⁷ Swedish School Inspectorate, Education for Asylum-Seeking Children and Children Staying in the Country Without Permission 2015, p. 23.

³⁴⁰⁸ It should however be noted that most of these student participate in language introduction, which is not time-regulated in the same way.

³⁴¹⁰ Ibid.

Most municipalities state that they always offer migrant children mother tongue education, or that they offer according to the school regulation and the upper secondary school regulation. However, not all migrant children are offered mother tongue education. Fewer municipalities provide mother-tongue education at upper secondary school than at elementary school.³⁴¹³

8.2.1. Access to Special Support in the Student's Mother Tongue

Special support should be offered to migrants in the same way as it is to other children who are attending a school in the municipality. The problem seems to be greater in secondary school than primary school. It is also apparent that there is a higher proportion of municipalities who indicate that they do not offer or do not know if they offer special support for migrant children in upper secondary school than there are those that offer the services at primary school.³⁴¹⁴

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

9.1. Recognition Through National Law

9.1.1. The Act on Recognition of Professional Qualifications

The Directive on Recognition of Professional Qualifications (2005/36/EC) establishes rules of automatic recognition of professional qualifications obtained in another member state. The recognition allows the holder of such qualifications to pursue the same profession in other EEA states. The directive has been transposed in Swedish national law by Act on the Recognition of Professional Qualifications 2016:145 [lag om erkännande av yrkeskvalifikationer]. As stated in art. 1, this act also incorporates Directive 2013/55/EU amending directive 2005/26/EC on the recognition of professional qualifications into Swedish legislation.

Recognition of professional qualifications is vital because it gives workers access to regulated professions in Sweden, if they have the right qualifications for that profession from another member state. A worker with recognised professional qualifications gains the right to practice a regulated profession in Sweden under the same conditions as if the qualification were acquired in Sweden. Art. 8 states that the recognition is made by a decision of recognition or by issuing a European Professional Card (EPC). At the moment, the EPC is only available for a few professions.³⁴¹⁵ Furthermore, the act states in art. 15 and 16 that a person's qualifications will be recognised automatically, if the person possesses the certificate of proficiency needed or another proof of their qualifications that are required in another state within the EEA or in Switzerland, if the competence is applicable to a common training framework or a common training test. As stated in art. 5 p. 10, automatic recognition means that no evaluation or comparison of a person's qualifications is needed.

³⁴¹⁵ 'European Professional Card (EPC)' (Europa.eu, April 18 2017). The available professions are nurse responsible for general care, pharmacist, mountain guide, physiotherapist and real estate agent. <http://europa.eu/youreurope/citizens/work/professional-qualifications/european-professional-card/index_en.htm> Accessed 6 July 2017.

The act has especially made it easier for people with healthcare qualifications to work in other EEA countries and Switzerland.³⁴¹⁶ However, qualifications obtained outside the EEA or Switzerland who has not yet been recognised by another state within this area are not covered by the act.³⁴¹⁷

9.1.2. The Higher Education Ordinance

Sweden is a member of the Council of Europe, and thus Sweden is also bound by the Lisbon Recognition Convention. In contrast to the Directive on recognition of professional qualifications, the convention is applicable to member states of the council of Europe, member states of the UNESCO Europe region as well as other states outside these regions, with the condition that the state in question has been invited to be entrusted with the adoption of the convention.³⁴¹⁸ The Recognition Convention has been incorporated into the Higher Education Ordinance 1993:100 [Högskoleförordningen] since 2001.³⁴¹⁹ The core of the convention is that qualifications shall be recognised unless they are significantly different from the national equivalent. This means that if the differences are so great that it would create a hindrance for continued studies or work in the receiving country, it is not a requirement to recognise the qualifications.³⁴²⁰ It is this core that has been implemented by the act. The act is only of help to those who has completed their education in Scandinavia, Finland, Iceland or in states that have signed the convention.³⁴²¹ As a result, most asylum seekers in Sweden do not benefit from these advantages, as their country of origin has not ratified the convention. Nonetheless, the people who miss out on the legal effects of the convention may still have the opportunity to receive a recognition statement from the Council for Higher Education, see 9.2.2 below.

9.2. Practical procedures

9.2.1. Regulated Professions

Some professions are regulated by law to have certain requirements, so qualifications obtained in another nation must be formally recognised before they can be used to legally practice such professions in Sweden. According to the Act on the Recognition of Professional Qualifications art. 4, the act is not applicable on professions that are specifically regulated in other acts, if these acts are based on other EU legal documents than the Directive on Recognition of Professional Qualifications.³⁴²² If neither the Higher Education Ordinance nor the Act on Recognition of Professional Qualifications are applicable, a profession is regulated by Swedish law and it is specifically legislated that a certain degree, identification or another formal authorization is needed for that profession, it is the competent authority that is tasked with evaluating foreign qualifications, see 9.2.2 below.³⁴²³

9.2.2. Competent Authority Applications

To work or study in Sweden, a recognition statement can always aid the applicant. This statement is a document that shows that a person's qualifications are equivalent to the qualifications needed in Sweden.³⁴²⁴ The Council for Higher Education (UHR) is generally responsible for evaluating qualifications from a higher education, post-secondary vocational education or upper secondary education that have been obtained abroad and comparing them to the Swedish education system. The statement briefly describes which Swedish degree is the equivalent to the applicant's qualifications, or what level of post-secondary vocational education it corresponds to. The applicant can use the statement when applying for work in Sweden. Even if the statement is not mandatory, with some exceptions, it can be of great help because it shows future employers what the Swedish equivalent of the applicant's degree is. Evaluations are based on mutual regulations regarding the recognition of the qualifications. The time required to issue the statement is approximately five to eight months for higher education and post-secondary vocational education and two to four months for upper-secondary education.³⁴²⁵ The evaluation is mostly based on the applicant's personal diplomas and curriculums. Only documents from a recognised centre of learning³⁴²⁶ can be considered, and the documents validity is ensured before a statement can be issued.³⁴²⁷

For professions that are regulated by law however, it is the competent authority that has the task of evaluating the applicant's qualifications. In Sweden, there are 88 regulated professions. To practice a regulated profession, an applicant must contact the authority who is responsible for overseeing that profession. This means that if a person for example wants a teacher certification in Sweden, he or she must contact the Swedish National Agency for Education, not UHR, to have his or hers qualifications evaluated.³⁴²⁸ Which authority is responsible for what professions

³⁴²² For example, the professional title 'lawyer' is regulated by The Swedish Code of Judicial Procedure 1942:740 [Rättegångsbalken] Ch 8 Para 2. This is allowed due to the Establishment Directive 98/5/EC and Council Directive 77/249/EEC to Facilitate the Effective Exercise by Lawyers of Freedom to Provide Services.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

10.1. The Swedish Parliament (Riksdag)

According to chapter 3 article 2 of the Swedish Instrument of Government 1974:152 [Regeringsformen], every Swedish citizen who is above eighteen years of age is eligible to vote, regardless whether he or she lives in Sweden or not, as long as the person is in an electoral roll. If the citizen is not in Sweden at the time for the election, he or she may vote abroad at one of the embassies or consulates, or through post.³⁴³³ Conversely, this means that a migrant who is not a Swedish citizen cannot vote in elections for the Swedish Parliament.³⁴³⁴

10.2. Regional and Municipal Elections

Sweden has a strong tradition of regional and municipal sovereignty, where a lot of power is given to the regional and local municipalities. Healthcare, education and social services are examples of matters handled on this level.³⁴³⁵ Aliens were banned from partaking in political activities until the middle of the 1950s. In 1975, Sweden was the first Western European country which allowed foreign nationals to vote in municipal and regional elections.³⁴³⁶ During the three first elections in Sweden, a lot of surveys were done to research the demographics of voting immigrants. It was found that the voters were well-informed, and often well settled into the society on a socio-economic level, which the researchers found was not unique due to the tendency that political participation often is connected to being well-integrated in the society.³⁴³⁷ The right to vote in regional and municipal elections is regulated in the Local Government Act 1991:900 [Kommunallagen]. The right to vote is regulated in ch 2 art 2. You do not have to be a Swedish citizen to be eligible to vote in the elections for the regional and local municipalities. Citizens of Iceland, Norway or from a country within the EU as well as long-term registered residents in Sweden without a Swedish citizenship may vote in such elections. You may register in Sweden as an alien if you fulfil the criteria of the Population Registration Act 1991:481 [Folkbokföringslagen], regardless of whether you have right of residence based on that you are a refugee or have obtained the right of residence through other forms of migration.

10.3. Elections to the European Parliament

The first criteria for being allowed to vote in elections to the European Parliament, is that you have to be above 18 years of age on the day of the election to the European Parliament. The second criteria is that you have to be either a Swedish citizen who is or has been registered in Sweden, or an EU citizen who is registered in Sweden. If you are an EU citizen, you have to notify the regional authorities to be in the electoral roll.³⁴³⁸ This means that if you are a refugee or a migrant with a residence permit based on for example studies or family ties, but from a third country outside the EU, you cannot vote in the elections to the European Parliament even if you reside within the EU and the politics affect you and your daily life on a personal level.

10.4. Eligibility to be Elected

In order to be able to be elected to the Swedish governments, the requirements regarding citizenship and residence that corresponds to the rules on suffrage³⁴³⁹, and according to Chapter 2 art 20 of the Elections Act 2005:837 [Vallagen], explicit consent regarding the candidacy has to be given.³⁴⁴⁰ This means that you cannot be elected to the Swedish parliament if you aren't a Swedish citizen. In order to represent Sweden in the European Parliament you have to be an EU citizen, 18 years old and be registered in Sweden.³⁴⁴¹

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. National Legislation

In Sweden, the possibility to acquire citizenship is regulated in the Swedish Citizenship Act 2001:82 [lag om svenskt medborgarskap]³⁴⁴², where it is stated that: ‘This law regulates how a person becomes and ceases to be a Swedish citizen’.³⁴⁴³

11.1.1. Citizenship for Adults

According to the Citizenship Act para 11, migrants have the possibility to apply for and be granted citizenship, to become naturalised, if certain conditions are fulfilled. Firstly, he or she must provide proof of his or her identity. As a main rule the assessment of the identity includes an assessment of name, age and citizenship.³⁴⁴⁴ It may occasionally be difficult to determine the citizenship of the applicant due to circumstances beyond his or her control. When assessing the identity of an applicant, the main issues to investigate is however whether he or she can prove his or her identity in an acceptable manner³⁴⁴⁵ and can provide the authorities with photocopied documents. Therefore, several insufficient documents can be evaluated as sufficient evidence of the applicant's identity in a collective assessment.³⁴⁴⁶ Secondly, the applicant must have reached the age of eighteen.

Thirdly, the applicant must have a permanent Swedish residence permit, with exception for citizens in other Scandinavian countries. For applicants from Scandinavian countries it is sufficient if they have been domiciled in Sweden for at least two years. Citizens in the EEA with a time-restricted Swedish residence permit of at least five years' length are considered equivalent to holders of a permanent residence permit.³⁴⁴⁷ Stateless persons or refugees, must have been domiciled in Sweden at least the previous four years, while other aliens must have been domiciled at least the previous five years.³⁴⁴⁸ The concept of residence means an actual and permanent domicile with a residence permit, which indicates that the stay in Sweden is and has been legal.³⁴⁴⁹ It is not required that the applicant must have been within the borders of Sweden for the entire residence period: shorter family visits, holidays etc. is not considered to break the required period of residence in Sweden.³⁴⁵⁰

³⁴⁴⁵ There is no specific definition of what constitute an acceptable manner, but as a main rule the photocopied documents should be trusted and issued reliably from the point of view of identity.

Lastly, it is required that the applicant has led and can be expected to lead a respectable life. The assessment of a respectable life mainly concerns an evaluation of a criminal past, which can lead to a time extension before an applicant can be granted a Swedish citizenship.³⁴⁵¹

If the conditions set out above are not fulfilled, there is still a possibility for an applicant to be naturalised. An applicant may be naturalised if he or she formerly held Swedish citizenship, is married or living in conditions resembling marriage with a Swedish citizen or if there are special reasons for granting citizenship.³⁴⁵² One example of such special reason is that Sweden can benefit from the fact that the applicant is granted Swedish citizenship, for example if the applicant is a scholar, he or she can be viewed as contributing to Swedish research and therefore Sweden can benefit from granting him or her Swedish citizenship.³⁴⁵³

11.1.2. Citizenship for Children

The general rule in Sweden is that Swedish citizenship is based on the principle of jus sanguinis, which means that a child acquires Swedish citizenship through birth if the parent of the child is a Swedish citizen or if a deceased parent was a Swedish citizen.³⁴⁵⁴ Therefore, children born in Sweden to foreign parents do not acquire Swedish citizenship at birth. However, they can become Swedish citizens later if certain conditions are fulfilled. A child can acquire Swedish citizenship by notification made by the guardian or guardians if the following conditions are fulfilled.³⁴⁵⁵ Firstly, the child must hold a permanent Swedish residence permit. Secondly, the child must have been domiciled in Sweden for at least five years. For stateless children, this time limit is reduced to at least three years. Thirdly, a notification must be made before the child reaches the age of eighteen. If the child has reached the age of twelve and already holds a foreign citizenship, it is required that the child gives its consent to hold the Swedish citizenship, unless the child is prevented to do so because of long-term impediment.³⁴⁵⁶ A child born in Sweden who is considered stateless can acquire Swedish citizenship by notification of guardian or guardians if the child holds permanent residence permit and is domiciled in Sweden.³⁴⁵⁷ Through the possibility to acquire citizenship for stateless children, Sweden fulfil its international obligations under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.³⁴⁵⁸

11.2. Double Nationality

In 1997, the Swedish government decided to attend a parliamentary committee with the main task to review and investigate certain issues concerning the Citizenship Act.³⁴⁵⁹ Previously, the cornerstone of the Swedish legislation concerning citizenship was that double nationalities should be avoided, therefore the purpose of several provisions in the act was to limit the possibility of holding dual nationalities. When drafting the proposition bill to a new updated Citizenship Act, Sweden also decided to quit the Convention on the Reduction of Cases of Multiple Nationality and on Military Obligations in Cases of Multiple Nationality³⁴⁶⁰, which also limited the possibility to retain the previous nationality when entering citizenship in another contracting state.³⁴⁶¹ The new, updated Citizenship Act entered into force on the 1 July 2001 without the previous limitations. Since then, Swedish law allows the holding of double nationalities, provided that the other country does not forbid its citizens to have double nationalities.³⁴⁶²

11.3. The procedure to obtain citizenship

In order to apply for Swedish citizenship the applicant needs to send an application to the Swedish Migration Agency. The application document is available online. The applicant can fill in the document online or access it online and fill it in by hand. The application document includes questions about personal data, about family situation, work etc.³⁴⁶³ Once the application document is completed the applicant needs to sign it and send it in by post.³⁴⁶⁴ The majority of applications also include a fee of 1500 Swedish crowns; the fee needs to be paid in advance and a receipt of the payment needs to be attached to the application in order for the Agency to process the application.³⁴⁶⁵ In addition, documents such as the original homeland passport, travel documents, alien passport and previously issued passports, need to be attached in the application. If the applicant lacks such documents, he or she needs to attach other original identity documents from the home country. If there exist several such documents it is important to number them in the matching order stated in the application document. Finally, documents that certify the applicant's age, whether the applicant has a permanent Swedish residence permit, the time of the residence in Sweden as well as any proof that the applicants has led a respectable life in Sweden are necessary so that the Migration Agency can assess whether the requirements for citizenship stated above are fulfilled. Once the Agency made a decision concerning the application it will be sent to the registered address of the applicant. If the applicant is granted Swedish citizenship the Agency contact the Swedish Tax Agency. If the applicant is denied Swedish citizenship he or she can appeal against it within three weeks from the date they

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. Persons from Third Countries

The funding by the EU is divided depending on where the migrant is originally from. The funding and programmes are more focused on migrated persons from so-called third countries, countries which are not a member state in the EU. Since 2014, a relatively new funding, the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF), created by the EU is giving funding to projects that help persons from third countries to integrate in the society they are living in. The goal of AMIF is to secure a long-lasting sustainable migration policy which will protect the right of asylum and ease movements for persons within the framework of regulated immigration.³⁴⁶⁹ AMIF are co-financing projects within the fields of asylum, integration and legal migration and returns. The target group are persons from third countries and the co-financing is up to 75 %.³⁴⁷⁰ There are two regulations issued by the European Commission and the Council that regulate this funding, Regulation No. 514/2014 which is laying down the general provisions on the AMIF and on the instrument on financial support for police cooperation, preventing and combating crimes and crisis management. In Regulation No. 514/2014, it is established how to define an “action” and that it is the responsible authority of the national programme that will be the authority to approve if the action (or project) has accomplished the requirements to apply for the funding.³⁴⁷¹ In the Regulation, there are also provisions for the Member States on how to act and the goals to achieve when using the funding. Regulation No. 516/2014 is establishing the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund. There is also a regulation that was put into force in Sweden, SFS 2014/538, regulating the administration of AMIF. It is a supplementary regulation for the national administrative authorities.

There is also a national program in Sweden regulating how the funding from AMIF can be used in Sweden. The program is called the Sweden’s National Program for AMIF. In this program, it states that the Swedish Migration Agency is the responsible authority for the funding, which means that they will be the authority that grant projects access to the Fund. The department that works with AMIF has an independent position within the Migration Agency and is separated from all other departments in the Agency.³⁴⁷² In the summary of the national program, the national goals for Sweden are mentioned. These goals are to improve the migration process and put more efforts into developing integration. To succeed with this, they want to maintain a high flexibility during the whole program period.³⁴⁷³ The funding from AMIF is divided as follows: 42 % to projects regarding asylum, 46 % to projects regarding integration and legal migration and 12 % for returnees.³⁴⁷⁴ Organisations which may apply for the funding include national and regional authorities, independent organisations, companies, educational and research institutes as well as employer and employee organisations. Private persons are not eligible for AMIF funding.³⁴⁷⁵

12.2. Persons from Within the European Union

Projects concerning persons from the EU may receive funding similar to AMIF through the Swedish European Social Council. It is a national authority administering all types of EU funding which organisations in Sweden may apply to for funding of their projects.³⁴⁷⁶ The European Social Fund supports projects of different social type and focus, such as integration, equality and non-discrimination. The goals for the projects can be e.g. sustainable employment, social participation and education.³⁴⁷⁷ The target group does not have to be persons from third countries, which means that projects regarding people who migrated from another EU member state may also apply to the European Social Fund through the Swedish European Social Council.

12.3. The Fundings

The Integration Fund (2007-2013) that was the forerunner to AMIF, had a budget of EUR 825 million. The Fund was mainly implemented in EU countries by shared management but 7% of the Funding's money went to community actions.³⁴⁷⁸ AMIF has a budget of EUR 3.137 billion³⁴⁷⁹. Sweden has benefitted from both these funds by getting projects funded by the Funds. Some examples of projects that has received money from AMIF is Lobben, that will work with education and leader management within the world of Sports. It's an opportunity for people that

Conclusions

Traditionally, Sweden has been an immigration country for refugees from Germany, the Nordic Country and the Baltics following the world wars. In the 60's, labour immigration was the main reason for people coming to Sweden, while asylum seekers were more common in the 80's and 90's. During to the refugee crisis in 2015, a total of 162 877 persons applied for asylum in Sweden.

The Swedish Aliens Act of 2005 was reformed to conform with the Qualification Directive in 2010. The Aliens Act regulates immigration from both EU member states and EU non-member states. Anyone from a state which is not an EU member may apply for a residence permit on the grounds of protection. If a person is not granted the status of refugee or a person in need of subsidiary protection, there is a possibility for him/her to be granted protection on the grounds of being a person otherwise in need of protection if there is e.g. an armed conflict, natural disaster or political conflict in his/her country of origin. Anyone qualifying as one of these three categories is granted a residence permit. There is also a possibility of receiving a residence permit if there are extraordinary distressing circumstances, e.g. health issues which should allow the alien to stay in Sweden.

Following the refugee crisis, the Act on Temporary Restricting the Possibility of Being Granted a Residence Permit in Sweden has temporarily replaced the Aliens Act and will be in force until 2019. The purpose of the Act is to reduce the number of asylum seekers. This temporary legislation reflects the minimum level required by EU law and international law. One result of this is that persons otherwise in need of protection may no longer be granted a residence permit. Another result is that residence permits are only granted for a period of three years. A permanent residence permit may be granted after the temporary one expires, if the person is able to support themselves.

Immigrants have access to school and work in similar ways as the native population. According to the Education Act, every child living in Sweden is entitled to attend school, which is also compulsory. The municipality in charge of the school should also offer migrant children education in their mother-tongue. Employers are not allowed to discriminate job applicants, trainees or workers because of their nationality, according to the Discrimination Act.

Citizens of the EU are entitled to the same health care benefits in Sweden as they are in their country of origin. Persons who are not residents in Sweden or the EU are granted a basic level of emergency health care. Asylum seekers are granted health care that cannot wait and pay the same amount as a Swedish citizen would.

To receive a Swedish citizenship, the alien must have legally resided in Sweden for four or five years, be eighteen years old and have led and be expected to lead a respectable life. Another way of receiving a citizenship is through marriage or domestic partnership with a Swedish citizen. It is also possible to obtain a double citizenship.

Introduction

Migration has a dual nature of being a question of both domestic and international concern.³⁴⁸¹ The great variety of applicable norms reflect the multifaceted dimensions of migration³⁴⁸² in the international context. On the other hand, all sovereign states choose to regulate the entry of citizens of other countries.³⁴⁸³ When we look at the domestic dimension, Turkey is not only a migrant-sending country, but it is also a country with migrant-receiving and transit country characteristics.³⁴⁸⁴ The recent official statistics, which will be presented in the Report with details, highlight that Turkish Migration Law is significantly important due to the high concentration of migrants in the country.

Even though there are certain attempts to develop a more structured legislation in migration law in the recent years, with a new Law on Foreigners and International Protection and its derivative regulations, there is still a considerable need for further changes not only in the legislation but also in practice in the field of migration law. The elasticity and speed in line with the international standards are of vital needs of the current legal framework of Turkish Migration Law.

On the basis of these international standards, there lies human rights law especially at the point where migration law touches refugee law. In this context, the role of European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) is highly critical in shaping the current legal system with decisions to be discussed in the Report.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Description on the National Law Governing Asylum

In addition to legal documents of the 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol by United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNCHR)³⁴⁸⁵, which are considered as a part of the national legal system according to Article 90 of the Turkish Constitution, the main regulation on the right to asylum is found in the Law on the Foreigners and International Protection³⁴⁸⁶, entered into force on April 11 2014.

The main principles of the Law on the Foreigners and International Protection are: (1) The Principle of Non-Refoulement, (2) Waiver of reciprocity principle for stateless persons and foreigners under international protection and (3) The rights provided for the asylum-seekers not exceeding the rights of the Turkish citizens.³⁴⁸⁷

The prescribed law outlines 3 distinct status for asylum-seekers as refugees, conditional refugees and subsidiary protection under international protection.³⁴⁸⁸ However, the mass movements, especially after Iran – Iraq War, Yugoslavian and lastly Syrian Civil Wars³⁴⁸⁹, requiring a different status for the effective protection of asylum-seekers under the principle of Non-Refoulement is regulated separately under Article 91 of the Law n. 6458.

This temporary protection status, in line with the UNCHR Conclusion on International Cooperation and Burden and Responsibility Sharing in Mass Influx Situations³⁴⁹⁰, that is applied to millions of refugees in Turkey (more accurate statistics will be analysed below under the 4th question) is 'provided for foreigners who have been forced to leave their country, cannot return to the country that they have left, and have arrived at or crossed the borders of Turkey in a mass influx situation seeking immediate and temporary protection'³⁴⁹¹.

In the temporary protection status, authorities are responsible for the asylum-seekers' basic needs as social services, translation services, IDs, travel documents, access to primary and secondary education and work permits.³⁴⁹² Asylum-seekers under temporary protection can be obliged to live in a certain center or other location aiming to prevent the economic and social costs of the crowd in Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir, which was already a governmental policy for the citizens.

The first status provided under right to asylum, as necessary for the Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), other than the temporary protection is refugee status: A person who as a result of events occurring in European countries and owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his or her nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his or her former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it shall be recognized as a refugee.³⁴⁹³

Even though the geographical restriction of the responsibilities regarding the international protection of refugees seen above in Article 61 is legitimate under 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol, because of its non-realistic assumptions, caused another status of conditional refugee³⁴⁹⁴, which is provided for people who satisfy all the conditions in Article 61 excluding the geographical origin.

The last status, subsidiary protection, is for foreigners or stateless persons who do not qualify for the other 2 international protection statuses but would (1) be sentenced to death penalty, (2) face torture, and lastly, (3) face serious threat because of indiscriminate violence in armed conflict.³⁴⁹⁵

1.2. What is the Procedure for Granting Asylum and Who is Responsible?

The administrative authority responsible for granting asylum is regulated under the Law on the Foreigners and International Protection as Directorate General of the Migration Management,³⁴⁹⁶ which is the national migration foundation under the Ministry of Interior.

Humanitarian protection, regulated differently in the Law No. 6458³⁴⁹⁷, is provided by humanitarian residence permit, with a maximum duration of one year, for which renewal is possible.³⁴⁹⁸ In order to get a humanitarian residence permit, one of the situations described as numerus clausus in art. 46 of Law n. 6458 should be an issue. Besides, approval of Ministry of Interior is required and any other conditions for other types of residence permits are not necessary. Foreigners should be registered in the pre-established centers with the address based registration system in 20 days after the issuance.³⁴⁹⁹

The special program designed for the vulnerable groups with a protection different than humanitarian protection is temporary protection and in order for asylum-seekers, especially Syrians, to get international or temporary protection, the admission procedures in Turkey described by UNCHR is generally as follows³⁵⁰⁰:

- Pre-registration by the Alien's Police.
- Registration to the Directorate General in the provenance they want to register in. (There are centers in almost every city)
- In case of having no documents, the registration will be based on the testimony.
- Approaching the Provincial Directorate in 30 days (might be extended) to receive the Temporary Protection Identification Document (TPID).

According to the art. 64 of Law n. 6458, exclusion from international protection will take place if (1) the applicant also receives protection or assistance from UN (excluding UNHCR), (2) country of former residence has rights and obligations, and (3) there is a strong evidence to believe that applicants are guilty of offences specified in para 1 art 1 of the Convention. Directorate General shall issue the decision of exclusion from international protection, in any types, on an individual basis.

Besides, the grounds of refusal of granting asylum is regulated in the art. 72 of Law n. 6458 as: (1) repetition of the same application without providing a different reason, (2) application without presenting a well-founded reason or, after the refusal of the application without presenting any different reason, (3) arrival from a country where the possibility to enjoy sufficient and effective protection including protection against refoulement, and lastly (4) arrival from a safe third country in which it would have been possible to lodge an international protection claim that could have resulted in the granting of appropriate protection in compliance with the Convention.

On the other hand, a granted protection can be revoked as art. 85 of Law n. 6458 shows. The grounds for this is regulated under the assumption that the person is no longer in need of the protection. It would be possible, therefore, to revoke the protection status if the separately regulated reasons for different protections are disappeared. For example, if a stateless person starts to enjoy the protection of her/his country of residence, the protection provided under Law n. 6458 is revoked.

The refusal or exclusion decisions are subject to administrative review and judicial appeal. "The concerned person, his/her legal representative or lawyer may appeal to the International Protection Assessment Commission within ten days as of the notifications."³⁵⁰¹ Besides, since every administrative decision can be challenged in the courts according to the Turkish Constitution³⁵⁰², actions against the decisions of Directorate of Migration Management can also be brought and all the rights to appeal is also regulated under Turkish Civil Procedural Law³⁵⁰³.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Definition of Migrant Under Turkish Law

Under Turkish Law, there are two aspects of the term migrant. Even though one dimension of the term has a broader sense as it is understood in international law, the other dimension, with a narrower sense defines migrant differently.

The concept of migration in its narrower sense is defined in the Settlement Law, which states: "Migrant: People who come from Turkish lineage or bounded by the Turkish culture, came personally or collectively to Turkey with the aim of settlement and accepted under this law.” Based on this regulation, it can be clearly seen that in order to be a migrant in Turkish law, a person must be Turkish or related to Turkish culture. Therefore, in order to avoid any confusions, it should be stated that the term migrant should be understood as it is in international migration law.

Although there is no certain definition of the term “migrant” in international extent, under Turkish Law, it is regulated.³⁵⁰⁴ However, still, it cannot be claimed that there is a certain regulation about the concept of migration since it is only regulated in the Settlement Law, not under the Law on Foreigners and International Protection. In other words, it can be stated that a migrant differs from a refugee since the migrant is completely self-enforced without any coercion to move into Turkey. At this point, there is no difference between EU citizens and others. All of them are bounded by the same regulation.

However, as explained above, due to the geographical restrictions Turkey put in the 1951 Geneva Convention and its 1967 Protocol, a person can get the status of a “refugee” only if she comes from one of the EU member states. Therefore, there is a certain difference in terms of one of the aspects of the term migrant. Since refugee problem is regarded as one of the most problematic issues in international community for the recent years, this restriction, is highly criticized in Turkish Migration Law doctrine.

2.2. General Immigration Process in Turkish Law

In the Law on Foreigners and International Protection, it is regulated that: “The purpose of this Law is to regulate the principles and procedures with regard to foreigners’ entry into, stay in and exit from Turkey, and the scope and implementation of the protection to be provided for foreigners who seek protection from Turkey, and the establishment, duties, mandate and responsibilities of the Directorate General of Migration Management under the Ministry of Interior.” In the same law, it is also defined that the term of migration as “regular migration whereby foreigners’ legally enter into, stay in or exit from Turkey as well as irregular migration whereby foreigners enter into, stay in or exit from Turkey through illegal channels and work in Turkey without a permit; as well as international protection.” As a consequence, this law also defines foreigner; “a person who does not have citizenship bond with the Republic of Turkey”. Undoubtedly, the law-maker do not provide any difference between the EU citizens and others. Generally, as the first step of immigration, “foreigners who would stay in Turkey beyond the duration of a visa or a visa exemption or, [in any case] longer than ninety days should obtain a residence permit.”³⁵⁰⁵ A residence permit can be for short or long term.

2.3. Right to Admission

In the Article 7 Law on Foreigners and International Protection it is stated;

³⁵⁰⁴ Ergin Ergül Uluslararası Hukuk ve Türk Mevzuatında Yabancı Kavramı ve Türleri [2012] <<http://www.tid.gov.tr/Makaleler/Uluslararası%C4%B1%20Hukuk%20ve%20T%C3%BCrk%20Mevzuat%C4%B1nda%20Yabanc%C4%B1%20Kavram%C4%B1%20ve%20T%C3%BCrleri.pdf>> accessed August 24 2017 [Turkish].

³⁵⁰⁵ ibid.

- Foreigners who shall be refused to enter into Turkey and turned are those:
 - who do not hold a passport, a travel document, a visa or, a residence or a work permit or, such documents or permits has been obtained deceptively or, such documents or permits are false;
 - whose passport or travel document expires sixty days prior to the expiry date of the visa, visa exemption or the residence permit;
 - without prejudice to paragraph two of Article 15, foreigners listed in paragraph one of Article 15 even if they are exempted from a visa.
- Actions in connection with this Article shall be notified to foreigners who are refused entry. This notification shall also include information on how foreigners would effectively exercise their right of appeal against the decision as well as other legal rights and obligations applicable to the process.

2.4. Right to Stay

“According to Turkish law, if you are unable to return to your home country, because of a fear of

- being persecuted on account of your race, your religion, your political opinion, your nationality or your membership to a particular social group,
- or indiscriminate violence arising from a situation of international or domestic armed conflict,
- or being subjected to death penalty or torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, you have the right to stay in Turkey on the basis of an “international protection status” which will be granted to you by the Government of Turkey”³⁵⁰⁶

Therefore, if you are an immigrant in Turkey, there must be a reason to make you stay. It is possible to get a residence permit, or being protected by a different status (international protection status).

2.5. Right to Leave

As the Article 2 of Protocol No. 4 to the ECHR declares that “everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own”³⁵⁰⁷. Although right to leave is not absolute, since “No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are in accordance with law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the maintenance of ordre public, for the prevention of crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.” This is also one of the borders of the freedom in every aspect. To sum up, in Turkish Law, this general principle of the international law is accepted in terms of Migration Law.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

3.1. Legislation Until Ratification of the Law on Foreigners and International Protection in 2013

Until the ratification of The Law on Foreigners and International Protection (LFIP) by Turkish Parliament on April 4 2013, Turkish migration law's keystone acts were Settlement Law of June 14 1934, Passport Law, Law Related to Residence and Travel of Foreigners in Turkey of 1950 and 1994 Regulation. Following the population inflow to Turkey during Iran – Iraq war between 1988 – 1991 and Gulf War between 1990 – 1991 paved the way to the preparation of 1994 Regulation on Procedures and Principles Applicable to Foreigners Seeking Asylum in Turkey or Foreigners Claiming Residence from Turkey to Seek Asylum in Another Country and Collective Refuge for Asylum in Turkey or Possible Population Movements.³⁵⁰⁸ Nevertheless, these acts were not enough to manage population movements in and out of Turkey and this caused an increase in a number of ECHR decisions against Turkey.³⁵⁰⁹

During mentioned time frame, migration management in Turkey had been done by several governmental bodies taking different roles in the management process. Most significant ones were the Ministry of Interior's Directorate General of Security Affairs, Foreigners' Department of the Directorate General of Security Affairs and governorates. Monitoring foreigners entering to and going out from Turkey, controlling illegal entries to the country and handling deportation process if necessary were among the duties of the mentioned agencies.³⁵¹⁰

3.2. Law of Foreigners and International Protection, Migration Policies Board and Directorate General of Migration Management

As the number of foreigners entering Turkey for reasons such as seeking asylum, obtaining a long-term residence permit or work permit etc. increase through the years, Turkey gradually turned into a target country from a transit country in terms of migration. Hence the legislation became outdated and could not answer both Turkey's and foreigner's needs. In addition, Turkey's accession process to the European Union required conditions regarding migration and human rights. Several European Court of Human Rights decisions, most importantly Jabari v. Turkey, played a role in the drafting process of the LFIP.³⁵¹¹ Also, lacking a public authority solely working on migration management was considered as a setback for Turkey.³⁵¹² For the reasons stated, two new bodies established under Ministry of Interior; Migration Policies Board and Directorate General of Migration Management.

3.2.1. Migration Policies Board

One of the two institutions established with the Law of Foreigners and International Protection's fifth part is the Migration Policies Board. The Board convenes at least once a year upon the call of the chairman, the Minister of Interior, and consists of undersecretaries of the Ministry of Family and Social Policies, Ministry for European Union, Ministry of Labour and Social Security, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Interior, Ministry of Culture and Tourism, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of National Education, Ministry of Health, and Ministry of Transport, Maritime and Communications as well as the President of the Presidency of the Turks Abroad and Related Communities and the Director General for Migration Management. The board bears duties such as determination of the migration policies of Turkey and supervision their implementation, development of measures and methods to implement in case of a mass population influx, determination of principles and procedures concerning foreigners to be admitted en masse to Turkey on humanitarian grounds and the entry into and stay of such foreigners in Turkey, making decisions about the foreign workforce needed in Turkey and determining the conditions of the long-term residence permits to be issued to foreigners.³⁵¹³

3.2.2. Directorate General of Migration Management

Directorate General of Migration Management (DGMM) is the main government agency dealing with migrants in Turkey. It is established under the Ministry of Interior and aims to implement migration policies and strategies and coordinate other migration-related agencies and organizations. DGMM handles the process related to the entry into, stay in and exit from of foreigners in Turkey as well as their removal, international protection, temporary protection and the protection of victims of human trafficking.³⁵¹⁴ DGMM is organized on three levels; central, provincial and overseas.³⁵¹⁵ Directorate General has departments listed under article 108. Those are; Foreigners Department, International Protection Department, Department of Victims of Human Trafficking, Migration Policies and Projects Department, Harmonization and Communications Department, Information Technologies Department, International Affairs Department, Strategy Development Department, Human Resources Department, Support Services Department, Training Department and Legal Counsellor.

3.2.2.1. Duties and Mandate of the Directorate General

The duties and mandate of the Directorate General are listed under the article 104 of LFIP. those duties are:

- Developing legislative and administrative capacity, developing policies and strategies about migration and implementing them
- provide secretariat services for the Migration Policies Board and follow up on the implementation of the decisions of the Board
- Carrying out activities and actions related to migration – This includes monitoring the population flow to Turkey and prepare necessary documents and identity cards described in the directive on the application of LFIP and keeping migration-related statistics.³⁵¹⁶
- Carrying out duties assigned to the Ministry pursuant to the Settlement Law
- Carrying out activities and actions for the protection of victims of human trafficking – in order to prevent and fight human trafficking, to identify the human trafficking victims and to protect them, and conduct their returns, DGMM can work in cooperation with ministries, municipalities, non-governmental or intergovernmental organizations and higher education bodies. DGMM carries out the residence permit procedures of human trafficking victims as well as providing shelter for them. In addition, DGMM runs a call line (157), especially for human trafficking victims.³⁵¹⁷
- Determining stateless persons in Turkey and carry-out activities and actions related to such persons – DGMM determines whether a person is stateless or not by obtaining necessary documents from the country which stateless person was once a citizen if applicable and coordinates with governorates in the stateless person identity card providing process.
- Carrying out activities and actions related to harmonization – Harmonization mentioned in article 104 can be interpreted as integration. In order to achieve integration goals, DGMM runs a variety of activities with the cooperation of local institutions in different cities e.g. meeting with women and children.³⁵¹⁸³⁵¹⁹ Also, DGMM has an integration programme just for children called ‘MUYU’.³⁵²⁰
- Carrying out activities and actions related to temporary protection – DGMM controls the whole process from identifying the foreigner to giving them a temporary protection.³⁵²¹

- ensure coordination among law enforcement units and relevant public institutions and agencies, develop measures, and follow up on the implementation of such measures to combat irregular migration
- assist public institutions and agencies in scheduling and developing projects related to migration, evaluate and approve projects, monitor the work and on-going projects, support the implementation of such work and projects to ensure their compliance with international standards

Duties stated above are as listed in LFIP article 104 but as the 104/i article indicates that DGMM's duties are not limited to those and may increase with other laws, directives and regulations. Hence it can be said that DGMM is the main body that deals with all aspects of migration to Turkey.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

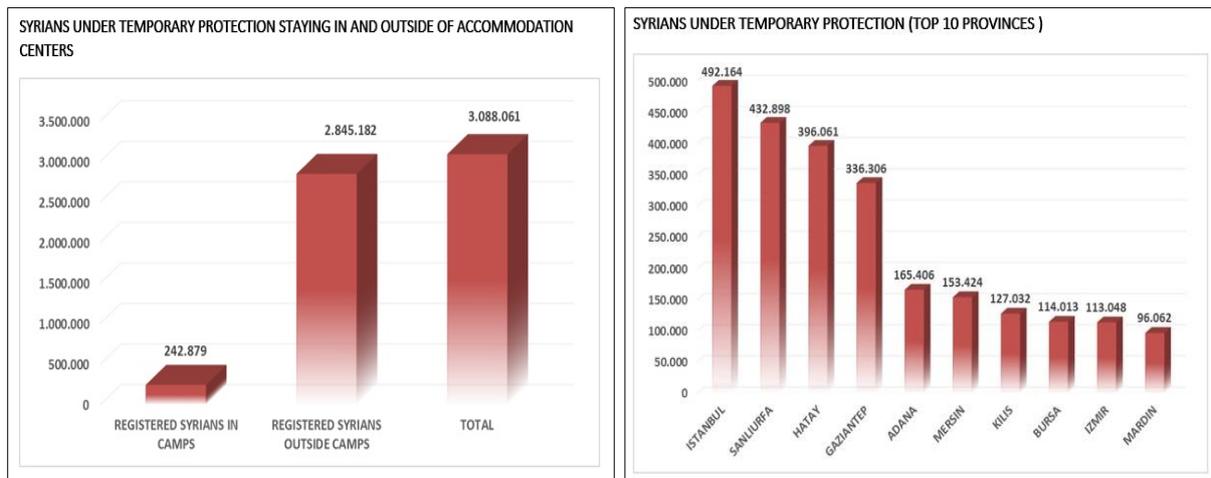

According to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees António Guterres “ Turkey has now become the biggest refugee-hosting country in the world.”.³⁵²² The recent statistics are regarding migrants in Turkey illustrates that 4,61 % of population of Turkey which is 3.6 million people are refugees in total. It can be seen from the graph that there has been a significant increase in the population over Syrians with temporary protection status since 2011 to 2017. ³⁵²³

4.1. Statistics Regarding Temporary Protection

Temporary protection, regulated as a status in the Article 91 of the Law on the Foreigners and International Protection³⁵²⁴, means ‘A procedure of exceptional character to provide, in the event of a mass influx or imminent mass influx of displaced persons (...) immediate and temporary protection to such persons’³⁵²⁵

The most important status provided for asylum seekers is temporary status because there are 3.088.061 Syrians (constituting the contemporary mass influx of displaced persons) under temporary protection in Turkey as of 13 July 2017 as can be seen in the figure above left³⁵²⁶.

One of the main problems about temporary protection that can be seen thorough the statistical data presented by the government is the accommodation of Syrians. As can be seen in figure above right³⁵²⁷, Syrian asylum seekers who are registered to the Directorate General for Migration Management in accommodation centers are only 7.87%. Even though a planned management of the difficulties regarding temporary protection requires the accommodation centers to be more prioritized, 92,13% of Syrian refugees are outside the centers and distributed in the country in a way that is illustrated above in figure above right.³⁵²⁸

³⁵²⁸ ibid

As shown above, Syrians accommodating outside the centers and in Istanbul is 492,154 constituting the 15,1 % of all. This is mainly problematic since İstanbul is already hosting a population of 14,8 million³⁵²⁹ with serious infrastructural problems trying to meet the needs of the crowd even without any parameters regarding migration.

Other than the statistics regarding migrants in terms of temporary protection, there are also people who are applying for international protection for the statuses of migrant, conditional migrant and subsidiary protection.³⁵³⁰

Figure above³⁵³¹, presenting number of international protection applications per year also shows an increase in recent years, especially starting from 2014. In the last data on 2016, number of applicants is 66.167. When compared to temporary protection data above, it is possible to state that temporary protection holds the most important role in Turkey in terms of the recent movements.

Other statistics about international protection shows that Iraq with 31.523, Afghanistan with 21.445 and Iran with 11.172³⁵³² is the top three nationalities for the number of international protection applications in Turkey as shown figure right³⁵³³.

What is more problematic is irregular migrants under international protection which is recorded as 174.466³⁵³⁴. This irregular migration movement does not only aggravate the secure registrations through and out the borders but also causes social problems both for the foreigners and Turkish citizens with a dramatic dimension of the subject matter.

2017 as 123, in 2016 as 181 and in 2015 as 108 showing a sharp increase since 2014.³⁵³⁵ Even though the data for 2017 seems to resemble a decline, in fact the data for 2017 is as of 13 July 2017, meaning the data is only for half the year and there is an unfortunate possibility for increase in the number.

Besides, another important point to mention about the migration statistics is shown in figure above visualizing migration projects developed by EU and bilateral corporation and whether they are completed or in an ongoing or preparatory status. Even though the most important aspect of migration statistics is constituted by Syrian refugees and the explanations regarding them is made in correlation under this, the statistics are formal migration statistics including educationally-purposed or economic migrants.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

5.1. Binding of Court's Decisions

The decisions of the court are binding on the States; but they are not self-executing in the domestic law. The States are monitored by The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe³⁵³⁶ and the binding is fulfilled by the monitoring. However, there is not any obligation to execute the court decisions except that the Council's political sanctions to obey the rules even at last the expulsion from The Council.

5.2. Interim Measures

The Court could make an interim measure decision, particularly for migrants against expulsion orders. At first times, some various opinions are whether interim measure decisions are binding the States or not, because the decision-making authority about interim measures decisions are arranged in the Rules of Court³⁵³⁷, not in Convention. First-time in Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey case, The Court make a decision that the interim measures decisions are binding the States:

³⁵³⁵ ibid

³⁵³⁶ European Convention of Human Rights, Article 46.

93. In its judgment of 6 February 2003, the Chamber found as follows:

- “110. ... any State Party to the Convention to which interim measures have been indicated in order to avoid irreparable harm being caused to the victim of an alleged violation must comply with those measures and refrain from any act or omission that will undermine the authority and effectiveness of the final judgment.
- 111. Consequently, by failing to comply with the interim measures indicated by the Court under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court, Turkey is in breach of its obligations under Article 34 of the Convention.”³⁵³⁸

5.3. Just Satisfaction

According to ECHR³⁵³⁹ and The Rules of Court³⁵⁴⁰, The Court could award the amount of compensation for the damages in the violation. The State is obliged to ensure payment of the amounts and The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe is monitoring this process. To obtain an award of just satisfaction, applicant must make a specific claim to that effect.³⁵⁴¹ This is an important condition for trials.

In the cases about the migrants³⁵⁴², The Court award the compensations when the violation has occurred.

5.4. Effect on the Turkish Domestic Law

Beyond The Court's compensation and interim measures for immigrants, it has also made decisions that open the door to some regulations in the Turkish legal system. If the non-self-execution situation of the Court's decisions is taken into account, it is evident that these effects are encouraging. At this point, some decisions are considerable to worth making.

5.4.1. Jabari v. Turkey ³⁵⁴³

The applicant, Jabari, is an Iranian. She was arrested in Iran in 1997 because was in a relationship with a married man. She was released a few days later and entered Turkey illegally. After unsuccessfully trying to reach Canada via France, where she was apprehended, she was arrested in Turkey in February 1998.³⁵⁴⁴

She made an application for asylum, but it was rejected because of the five-day time-limit. In detention, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) granted a refugee status to her out of the fear of persecution, death penalty after a possible deportation to Iran.

The court assessed that a short time limit for submitting an application for asylum is against the protection of the fundamental value embodied in Article 3.³⁵⁴⁵ After this decision, The Turkish government has changed the five-day time-limit in domestic law legislation³⁵⁴⁶ as ten day time limit. Afterwards, the Administrative Courts has waived the time-limit and accept the applications. Finally, in 2006, the legislation has changed as “apply without delay”. Today, the applications usually don’t get rejected thereby time-limit.

5.4.2. Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey³⁵⁴⁷

The applicants are two Uzbek nationals. Under international arrest warrant, Turkish police arrested the men and the government decided to deport them because of request of the Uzbek government. At this time, The Court make an interim measure decision to prevent the implementation of the deportation decisions of the Turkish government. However, two men has deported by Turkish government providing that the two men will never expose to inhuman treatment and death penalty by Uzbekistan. However, the two men were sentenced to long-time prison.

The court assessed that an interim measure decision of The Court is binding the state. Even though there is a bilateral agreement on extradition, the state is responsible to The Court. Besides according to Article 1 of ECHR:

The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in Section I of this Convention.

In the circumstances, Turkey has two sides conflict as both convention and bilateral agreement terms, because of inadequacy in the domestic law. In the bilateral agreement on extradition between Turkey and Uzbekistan, there were not any condition like never be exposed to inhuman treatment and death penalty.

Also, there were not any legislation to prevent inhuman treatment and death penalty on extradition in the Turkish Criminal Law. However, in 2005, Turkey changed³⁵⁴⁸ the Criminal Law and added the legislation prevent inhuman treatment and death penalty on extraditions.

As a result, ECHR is an optional mechanism to prevent the human rights violations. As long as Turkey take the Court decisions into consideration, it might inspire more solution to prevent human rights violations, especially for migrants.

European Court of Human Rights decisions concerning migrants are implemented as interim measures and compensation for damages. They are highly important because European Court of Human Rights is the interpreter of European Convention on Human Rights which is protected

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

Migrants actively contribute to the economic, social and cultural development of European societies. Their successful integration into society in the host country is the key to maximizing the opportunities of legal migration and making the most of the contributions that immigration can make to EU development. Although Member States are primarily responsible for integration, the EU is supporting national and local policies with policy coordination, exchange of knowledge and financial resources. The distinct climate of intolerance and racism in Europe is having a negative impact on the integration process of migrants.³⁵⁴⁹

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI), established by the Council of Europe, is an independent human rights monitoring body specialized in questions relating to racism and intolerance.³⁵⁵⁰ It is composed of independent and impartial members appointed on the basis of their moral authority and recognized expertise in dealing with racism, xenophobia, antisemitism and intolerance. In the framework of its statutory activities, ECRI conducts country monitoring work, which analyses the situation in each of the member States regarding racism and intolerance and draws up suggestions and proposals for dealing with the problems identified.

What is also clear is that some policies of European states undermine integration, while many policies in place to promote it are not being effectively implemented. There are many countries in Europe that where migrants are marginalized - through negative media reporting, political antipathy, insecure legal status, a lack of educational and employment opportunities, and/or hostility from local communities - there is less integration. Those who feel threatened or excluded from the host society, instead of striving to belong, may seek to emphasize their difference through isolating themselves in their own communities and may also be more open to radical influences.

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) prepares reports that shows us the situation in countries that they gave recommendation before. In Turkey the need for comprehensive integration policies has increased in recent years, as it has not only evolved from a country of emigration to a country of immigration, but has also become the country hosting the largest number of refugees in the world. The recent report indicates that;

Not only non-nationals, but also linguistic, religious and ethnic minority groups are in need of integration policies in Turkey. As such policies cannot be drawn up without reliable estimates of the size of these groups, the authorities should build up reliable data in this field.³⁵⁵¹

³⁵⁴⁹ ECRE The Way Forward Towards the Integration of Refugees in Europe 2005

³⁵⁵⁰ ECRI Report on Turkey (5th Monitoring Cycle) p7

³⁵⁵¹ ibid 26

By adopting the Law on Foreigners and International Protection (LFIP) in 2013³⁵⁵², Turkey has established a new framework for the integration of migrants and refugees and implemented an interim follow-up recommendation from ECRI's fourth report. The law regulates entry into, stay in and exit from Turkey and contains rules on foreign nationals and international protection. The importance of enrolling children with migration backgrounds in preschool in order to ensure that they learn the language of instruction and acquire sufficient knowledge about the country before entering the school system is also very important for Turkey. So Turkish authorities tried to enrol as many as they can but they are so many children that still needs enrolling.³⁵⁵³

The new authority responsible for the integration of migrants is tasked with preventing xenophobia and hate speech. But it is difficult to assess the impact of existing integration policies, as Turkey has no system of integration indicators. The authorities should swiftly complete the development of a strategy and action plans on integration, develop a set of integration indicators and mobilize all possible resources to ensure the strategy's implementation, in particular with regard to the schooling of children.

ECRI recommends that the Turkish authorities develop, while strictly respecting the principles of confidentiality and voluntary self-identification, statistical data and a set of indicators to evaluate and improve the integration and living conditions of the beneficiary³⁵⁵⁴ as of integration policies in core areas such as education, employment, health and housing

Turkish Red Crescent, as well as national human rights bodies, carries out humanitarian aid activities for all foreigners registered in the borders of our country without any language, religion or race discrimination. Besides, there are certain attempts in this respect trying to facilitate educational services.³⁵⁵⁵

Turkish Red Crescent Directorate for Migration and Refugees Services; The Ministry of Interior works in cooperation and coordination with the General Directorate of Migration Administration, AFAD, Ministry of Family and Social Policy, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC) and United Nations agencies. In this context, we are responsible for the provision of services for integration and integration, as well as the provision of cash and cash assistance, projects and programs for all foreigners registered in our country and living in need of assistance. Kızılay Kart (smart cards distributed for the same and cash aid purposes), child protection / child-friendly areas (psychosocial support and skill development activities for 4-18 age group), community centers (vocational and language courses for adult and child population outside the camp) services provided in the centers of acceptance, accommodation and return (as well as psychosocial support, protection, referral and advocacy activities) and border assistance activities (sending from the border points of humanitarian aid donated for delivery to Syria), as well as services provided by the Turkish Red Crescent Migration and Refugee Services Directorate.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

The right of health is described as a social right and protected by the constitution of Turkish Republic. The government should provide healthcare services to the community if its financial sources are available.¹ In the meantime, people who want to benefit from health opportunities should pay the required charge regularly. After that, they will be under the protection of general insurance system.

According to the Law of Social Security and General Health Insurance n. 5510 Art. 123, asylum seekers and refugees can benefit from the general health care system. Due to Turkey's limiting classification regime on statutes, refugee means migrants who are coming from European Countries.² For this reason, only refugees in this category can benefit from the healthcare system free of charge.

As it is mentioned in Law of Foreigners and International Protection n. 6458 in the Article 89/3/c, all migrants are liable to the Law of Social Security and General Health Insurance n. 5510 which remarks that insurance charges and expenses will be covered by Turkish government.² Not only the owners of the protection are stated in the statute n. 6458, but also the applicants can be protected in this way.³⁵⁵⁶

Nevertheless, all applicants of international protection can benefit from general health insurance of the government freely. The protection starts instantly in the 'application date'. As a principle, applications should have been made to the governorships in the provinces. In some cases, the applications can be made to police offices in the country border; these applications should have been transported to governorships immediately.² (Law of Foreigners and International Protection n. 6458 Art. 65)

As a result, people who are coming from European countries or others can benefit from general health insurance system in Turkey as if they are Turkish citizens. An application made to the relevant centres for political asylum or immigration is the only provision for the aforesaid protection.

In some cases, migrants are treated as tourists in healthcare organizations.² This is an illegal implementation of the national legislation. For that reason, the health care organizations should provide the healthcare opportunities to all of them. All foreigners have access to specific information about the services which includes healthcare services in Turkey as well. They can reach via phone from Turkey or abroad to the 'Foreigners Communication Centers' which provides Turkish, English, Arabic, Russian, Persian and German language services 7 days and 24 hours.

Syrians, who are named as "owner of temporary protection" can reach medical support and care free of charge in the institutions of the Ministry of Health Department of Turkey. Moreover, health care services for emergency situations are provided to everyone who lives or stays in Turkey. Apart from being referred as a patient to another medical institution or in case of emergency situations, getting service from private hospitals is not possible. In some provinces, a few paramedics can speak Arabic in the Migrant Healthcare Centers. UNHCR and its partners provide consultancy and aid services to people with serious health problems.² The aspects of medical and health support for the owners of temporary protection are defined in Temporary Protection Regulations Art. 27.

For the migrants who entered the country illegally and didn't or couldn't apply for international protection of Turkish government can face with issues while they are reaching the healthcare system.³⁵⁵⁷ However, irregular migrants can still benefit from healthcare services even though they are found to be irregularly entered or residing in Turkey. These migrants have been sent to the Repatriation Centers. People who are located on the Repatriation Centers can apply to police offices near to them to benefit from the healthcare system. However, the government has to provide emergency and basic healthcare services in these centers for free for those who can't provide financial opportunity. (Law on Foreigners and International Protection n. 6458 Art. 59)

Turkey guaranteed protecting the people's right to live, physical and mental health during their 'stay' in the country due to international agreements. For this reason, this order can't be changed by national legislation.² Therefore, people who didn't or couldn't apply for protection from the government should be able to reach the healthcare system even though there is no regulation in national law.

Either the international agreements that Turkey is a part of or the national legislation system in Turkey provides access to the healthcare system for the refugees, conditional refugees, owners of primary protection and secondary protection and asylum seekers. They have the right to reach all primary and emergency healthcare system as they are Turkish citizens.

The Turkish legal system has non-discrimination laws and judicial decisions due to the increased number of refugees who entered the country to prohibit discriminatory behaviours against migrants in Turkey. Foreigners' and migrants' rights are protected by the 'Human Rights and Equality Law n.6701' through the Human Rights and Equality Foundation.

Turkish Criminal Law Art. 122 prohibits discrimination strictly. Additionally, the Turkish Constitution Art. 10 forbids whole sorts of discrimination. Generally, to prove the discrimination is not an easy process for the victims. Therefore, the protection Turkish law requires may not be succeeded at the end of the lawsuit process.¹⁰ There are plenty of non-governmental organizations which provide free psychological support and services to the migrants who need help.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

Before directly elaborating on the given question, it would be beneficial to examine the definitions of the terms 'child' and 'education' under the Turkish legislation, in order to set the frame of the outputs.

Article 90 of the Constitution provides the basis of international law in national law, by stating that ratified international agreements have the force of law, and in case of a conflict between an international agreement concerning fundamental rights and freedoms, and the laws due to differences in provisions on the same matter, the provisions of international agreements shall prevail.³⁵⁵⁸

In accordance with that, Convention on the Rights of the Child, which has the effect of law due to the ratification law numbered 4058; defines the child as "every human being below the age of eighteen years unless under the law applicable to the child, majority is attained earlier."³⁵⁵⁹ The same perspective is remained under the Criminal Code is defining a minor, "any person not attained the age of eighteen."³⁵⁶⁰ Even not maintaining an explicit definition, Civil Code and Labour Law use the similar references to describe child as the ones below the age of eighteen.³⁵⁶¹

Right to education is a social right enshrined on the constitutional level and regulated under various national and international mechanisms, the most prominent one being the Article 2 of Protocol No.1 of the European Convention on Human Rights and the relevant case-law. From the perspective of the European Court of Human Rights, the right to education concerns elementary schooling, secondary education, higher education and specialized courses as well.³⁵⁶² Also, it must be noted that the right guaranteed in Article 2 of Protocol No.1 are children, but also adults or indeed any person wishing to benefit from the right to education.³⁵⁶³ Under the Article 42 of the Constitution, titled "Right and duty of education" such right is enshrined without distinction on the basis of nationality or migration status.³⁵⁶⁴

Turkish national legislation guarantees the right to receive primary and secondary education free of charge, not depending on the migration status of the child in question. According to the Communiqué numbered 2014/21 on foreigners' access to education issued by the Ministry of National Education; foreigners under the Temporary Protection are subjected to deliver education in state schools or temporary education centres, which are determined by the provincial education directorate.³⁵⁶⁵ Procedure for enrolment is regulated by each province on the placement of the child and the grade determination. Grade determination is mainly based on Temporary education centres are exclusively created for Syrian children and are placed usually near to the camps and urban areas. The centres teach in Arabic and use a modified version of the Syrian curriculum, at the end of the school terms, these centres provide a certificate showing the completion status and the grades.³⁵⁶⁷ Refugee families residing in camps are required to apply to the Provincial Education Directorates for the enrolment and determination of the status of the child. In the case of the absence of the temporary education centres, families are able to sign their children to the state schools. Procedure for the enrolment to the state schools remains the same, in regards to the application to the Provincial Education Directorates.³⁵⁶⁸ It must be further noted that, according to the general notice of the Ministry of Education issued to the 23 large cities of Turkey, at the end of the year of 2017, temporary education centres are planned to be closed and replaced entirely by the state schools.³⁵⁶⁹

According to the Law on Foreigners and International Protection numbered 6458, a residence permit, (ikamet) a temporary protection identification document, or Foreigners Identification Card is needed for the registration procedure to the educational institutions.³⁵⁷⁰ In the case of the completed entry of an application that has not been resulted yet, families are able to enrol their children on status of 'guest students' which is open for an amendment after the results.

Migrants and refugees in Turkey have the opportunity to apply to higher education as long as they met the academic and linguistic criterion tested by the Foreign Student Examination.³⁵⁷¹ (Yabancı Öğrenci Sınavı) Foreign Student Examination is hold exclusively by each university and charged from the student. It is also possible to acquire a bursary, student loan and/or dormitory by an application to the Higher Education Credit and Hostels Institution, even if none of them are guaranteed due to the competitive applications.³⁵⁷²

Apart from the formal education, persons may attend to free of charge courses, hold by Public Education Centres (Halk Eğitim Merkezleri) on Turkish language courses, skills, hobby and vocational courses. A temporary protection identity document is required at minimum to register, and based on local demand, new courses may open on different subjects.³⁵⁷³

Syrian refugees may attend Turkish language courses and skills, hobby and vocational courses offered by Public Education Centres (Halk Eğitim) free of charge.³⁵⁷⁴ A temporary protection identity document is required in order to be registered for courses offered by Halk Eğitim. demand. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security has indicated that persons under Temporary Protection may participate in skills training programmes offered by Turkish Labour Agency (ISKUR). It is expected that more information will be available in the coming months as to which courses and programmes will be open to Syrian refugees.

The law numbered 6458 also bifurcates on the different variations of residence permit, ikamet, into 6 different types, which is determinative for the education opportunities of the foreigners.³⁵⁷⁵ Directly related to the topic, family residence permit, aile ikamet izni, provides primary and secondary education for the migrant children free of charge, and without further ado.³⁵⁷⁶ For the ones above the age of 18, it is required to acquire a student residence permit, öğrenci ikamet izni, to benefit from all levels of educational system, given for each year.³⁵⁷⁷ For the irregular migrants, it is exclusively stated that Ministry of Education shall take appropriate measures for the education services³⁵⁷⁸; however it would be safe to state that the informative system of the provision is not functioning to its very best.

Discrimination on the basis of migration status is covered under the racial discrimination provision before the Courts, and is open for administrative courts to determine whether there is a practice against the equality provision, Article 10 of the Constitution³⁵⁷⁹. Regardless of the migration status of the person, parents or their guardians are capable to bring a case before the first instance administrative courts.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

Right to education is one of the fundamental rights of people which is regulated in Turkish Constitution under the social and economic rights. Article 42 paragraph 1 of the Turkish constitution states that; “No one shall be deprived of the right of education.” This means that not only Turkish citizens, but everyone else has the right to education under Turkish law.

Turkey is a party to some international agreements concerning the recognition procedure and it should be noted that according to the Turkish constitution, agreements governing the fundamental rights shall prevail Turkish national law.

In the case of a conflict between international agreements, duly put into effect, concerning fundamental rights and freedoms and the laws; due to differences in provisions on the same matter, the provisions of international agreements shall prevail. (Turkish Constitution, Art. 90 para 5)

³⁵⁷⁹ Constitution of the Republic of Turkey, Article 10.

One of the international agreements that Turkey is a party of is the Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region (Lisbon Agreement). The Lisbon Agreement was ratified on 18/10/2006 published in the Turkish official gazette dated December 17 2006.

And to implement the Lisbon agreement, the council of Europe and UNESCO have established the ENIC (European Network of National Information Centers on academic recognition and mobility) and the NARIC (National Academic Recognition Information Centers) network. Since then, the ENIC / NARIC Centre of Turkey has started to cooperate with The Council of Higher Education Accreditation Unit.

Lisbon Agreement sets some of the basic principles for qualification such as good faith, transparency, reliability, compliance, providing adequate and clear information. Parties shall recognize the qualification unless there is a substantial difference sought about general requirements of qualifications.

Under Lisbon convention, it is binding that states cannot discriminate between applicants for the reasons of nationality, religion, gender etc. If a person is a refugee, or in a refugee-like situation, the concerned party shall take all the necessary steps within conformity of its national law and regulations even if the qualifications of the person cannot be proven through documentary evidence. The Council of Higher Education offers a qualification test named Level and Competence placement system (SYBS) for the ones who wants to get their diploma recognition. These tests might be done by the Council of Higher Education itself, or the concerned university/school by their standards. The Council of Higher Education also created a new policy; there are designated universities which will have extra quota for Syrian refugees.

Foreign school and university diploma recognition procedure is conducted by The Council of Higher Education in Republic of Turkey. There are three different types of Associate's, Bachelor's and Master's Degrees recognition which are accreditation, recognition and equivalence.

Accreditation is a general system which targets to establish national and international higher education system standards (quality, efficiency, etc.)³⁵⁸⁰ This system aims to help facilitate and accelerate the process of mutual recognition between higher education institutions and compare diplomas and titles easier, according to its standards.

Article 3 of Regulation on the Recognition of Foreign Higher Education Diplomas in Turkey states that recognition means 'Acceptance of the diploma by the higher education institution and program as authorized by the competent authorities of the country in which it operates or by the quality assurance and accreditation bodies authorized by these institutions and by the Higher Education Council as an institution and program authorized to award academic degrees'. The presidency of The Council of Higher Education holds the right not to recognize foreign higher education institutions while considering; Institution in question must be recognized by the competent authority by the country of its registration and the institution has to be the authorized to issue diplomas. It needs to be accredited by certified quality assurance agencies and it has to be recognized by the Council of Higher Education.

³⁵⁸⁰ The Council of Higher Education <<http://www.yok.gov.tr/web/denklikbirimi>>

Equivalence is the determination of diplomatic compatibility between a higher education institution in Turkey and a foreign higher education institution recognized by the Higher Education Council.

Equivalence procedure of foreign diplomas is based on Recognition and Equivalence Regulation for Diplomas of Overseas Higher Education, The Lisbon Convention and Higher Education Execution and General Assembly Decisions. The Regulation of Turkish Qualifications Framework was published in the official gazette dated 19.11.2015 (Under Coordination of Vocational Qualifications Authority- VQA).

The national credits and / or the total number of ECTS required for graduation should be equivalent to the Turkish higher education program in terms of knowledge, skills and competence to be acquired. If not, whether it is or is not “equivalent to Turkish higher education” in terms of education level is examined.

Citizens of the Republic of Turkey who graduated from associate, undergraduate or graduate programs of universities abroad or Foreign nationals who graduated from associate, undergraduate or graduate programs of universities abroad can may apply to the application process. Foreign nationals who are to apply for a master's degree or doctoral degree do not need to apply for equivalency except in medicine related fields. They can apply for a post-graduate education application by taking the Recognition Written by Higher Education Institutions from the Establishment of Interest.³⁵⁸¹

Regulations on Recognition and equivalence of foreign higher education diplomas, states the necessary documents under part 2 (original, translated and notarized school diploma/certificate, petition which explains the reasons of recognition etc.) for recognition and evaluation process. All the documents stated necessary, according to this regulation, must be submitted completely to the authorized board of Council of Higher Education. This submission needs to be handed over to the Board in person or in the case of submitting a power of attorney issued by the notary public. Based on the country of registry of the applicant, required documents may vary.

After the submission process, there is a preliminary examination process of the documents. In this step, the board will decide whether the documents are complete, and if not, the board will ask to the applicant to complete the necessary documents. Also, the board may ask additional paperwork if necessary. After that, documents will be evaluated by equivalence commission. Then the execution board will make the final decision and will notice the applicant.

Currently, there is no special recognition procedure for refugees/asylum-seekers. They have to go through as the same procedure as migrants. But the³⁵⁸² United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) recently announced that European Union, the Government of Turkey, UNHCR and the Presidency for Turks Abroad and Related Communities (YTB) will work together to help refugees along the way to university education, recognition and help to increase access to quality higher education for refugees.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

10.1. Regulations in National Legislation

The main legislation in regard to migrants is the Law No. 6458 on Foreigners and International Protection. Section 3 of the Law, with the headline “Rights and Obligations”, regulates foreigners’ rights such as access to assistance and services and access to labour market.³⁵⁸³ Unfortunately, political rights of foreigners are not regulated neither in this nor any other legislation. It is implicitly indicated through Article 68 of the Constitution of Republic Turkey that only Turkish citizens may take part in political decisions: “Citizens have the right to form political parties and duly join and withdraw from them.³⁵⁸⁴ One must be over eighteen years of age to become a member of a party.” The aforementioned provision is reinforced in Article 5 of the Law No. 2820 on Political Parties which mentions that citizens have rights to form political parties.³⁵⁸⁵

10.2. Integration Process

Settling in another country for a migrant is the beginning of the processes of getting into a new life. Yet, regardless of time and place, one shall be fully adapted to the environment and feel accepted by the society as well. Therefore, as a migrant settle in a country, integration process begins. The term integration does not have a universal definition, yet it is a matter of the utmost importance and be roughly defined as the process in which a migrant is accepted by the society where political participation is one of main parts.

The constitution and the Law No. 2820 mention citizens’ political rights, however, it does not cove migrant’ political rights neither in these legislations nor in the Law on Foreigners and International Protection. Hence, it may be concluded that migrants in Turkey are not allowed to take part in political decision therefore, they “cannot join political parties and cannot have their own associations or media unless one of the directors is a Turkish national.”³⁵⁸⁶ Migrant Integration Policy Index published a comparative table listing political participation of migrants according to countries:

³⁵⁸³ Law n. 6458 (On Foreigners and International Protection) 2012 (Yabancılar ve Uluslararası Koruma Kanunu)

³⁵⁸⁴ Law No. 2709 (Constitution of the Republic of Turkey) 1982 (Türkiye Cumhuriyeti Anayasası)

TU	None	None	None	None	Foreign Citizens' Council (Alanya)

(Migrant Policy Index)

Table 1 clearly shows country's lacking support on migrants' political participation. Although there is a council where migrants are represented, Migrant Policy Group's report on Turkey's national policy on migrants' indicates that "Foreign Citizens' Councils are underdeveloped and weak" because it "exists at the initiative of the mayor, without its own legal basis."³⁵⁸⁷ Furthermore, according to MIPEX's index which compares countries scores in regard to political rights provided to migrants, Turkey ranked 36 out 38 countries, with a score of 11. Below is a chart that was obtained from Migration Policy Group's Report, showing Turkey's scores regarding its national policy for migrants' political participation:

³⁵⁸⁷ Migration Policy Group, 'Turkey: A Integration Policy Index assessment' (Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights, October 2013) <<http://www.osce.org/odihr/118158?download=true>> accessed 22 July 2017 (English).

Within the scope of data collected, it could be concluded that integration process of immigrants in Turkey remains incomplete. Although the Law No. 6458 protects immigrants' civic rights, a huge part of the integration process is completely ignored.

Despite the limited political rights granted to them, foreigners are obliged to pay attention to the political order of the country and to avoid behaviours that may disrupt public order.³⁵⁸⁸ Article 54 of Law on Foreigners and International Protection stipulates cases where foreigners might be deported. Accordingly, foreigners who exhibit behaviour which potentially threatens public order can be deported from the country.³⁵⁸⁹ Therefore, it should be stated that the obligations imposed on foreigners are far more comprehensive compared to the political rights granted to them.

10.3. Closing Comments

Excluding migrants from political participation would indeed have several outcomes. Firstly, as stated above, half-integration of migrants into society is in question and is remarkably a serious issue. This, of course, means reduced standard of living for migrants as they are not adapted to or completely integrated into the society. One of findings gathered in Workshop on Migration and Integration which is conducted by the government shows that migrants want to have a say in political decisions. From a broader perspective, they justifiably want to have electoral rights supported by the government.³⁵⁹⁰ The said Workshop report also expresses that EU citizens will be given electoral rights when Turkey becomes a member of EU. Despite this positive report of the workshop, it is still doubtful whether Turkey is in favour of giving the EU citizens the right to be elected and elected. Such that Turkey has not signed the Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level. The agreement provided broad rights for immigrants in order for them to be active in public life. In fact, Article 6 of the Convention obliged each party “to grant to every foreign resident the right to vote and to stand for election in the local authority elections”.³⁵⁹¹ Turkey has refused to be a party to the Convention and has proved that it is not intended to grant EU citizens the right to vote and to stand for election.

On December 2015, UN conducted a research in regard to countries’ international migrant stock, where total population of countries and percentage of international migrants of the total population were estimated.³⁵⁹² Statistics have shown that 3.8% of Turkey’s total population consists of migrants. Therefore, it must be emphasized that such large proportion of Turkey’s population is prohibited to have electoral rights and have substantially restricted political involvement.

Dr. Werner Bauer touched on the importance of the matter in a panel which was held by Friedrich Ebert Foundation and concerned “Political Participation of Migrant in Germany”, expressed that excluding migrants from political participation would affect as an explosive substance.³⁵⁹³

To conclude, migrants in Turkey do not have electoral rights and thus their political participation is roughly supported and protected. Workshop on Migration and Integration promises migrants’ to have their electoral rights once Turkey’s accession to EU materializes. However, participating in politics of their country of residence is a substantive right for migrants and thus it shall be independent from Turkey’s international policies. Integration process will remain to be incomplete and insufficient, unless Turkey further develops its national policy regarding migrants’ political participation.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. The Concept of Turkish Citizenship

The concept of ‘Turkish citizenship’ is a much debated and sensitive notion in the fields of Turkish constitutional law and Turkish nationality law. It is inclusively formed in Turkish constitution because of its extensive judicial, political and sociological backgrounds. According to Turkish Constitution Article 66/1, ‘Each person that has the citizenship bond is Turkish’. In the same article, it is guaranteed in the constitutional level by stating that fulfilling the conditions is enough to acquire citizenship. It basically depends on understanding of subjective nationality which gives priority to how the person feels instead of religious, linguistic or racial characteristics.³⁵⁹⁴

Besides, in the general preamble of 5901 numbered Turkish Citizenship Act, it is determined as 'legal bond between the person and the government'³⁵⁹⁵. This preamble based on the concept of 'nationality' in the European Convention on Nationality³⁵⁹⁶. Although, Republic of Turkey has not signed this convention yet, in the preamble it is clearly seen that Republic of Turkey has turned its face to European Union and western democracies in the 21st century and aims to be an important state in the globalizing world.³⁵⁹⁷ As a result of globalization, it is a fact that applications for acquisition of Turkish citizenship is dramatically increased in parallel with increasing transportation facilities. It is highly important that acquisition for the migrants who contributes to economic and social life as the developed countries.

11.2. Acquisition of Turkish Citizenship

In Turkish Citizenship Act, there is not any direct regulation of acquisition of Turkish citizenship for migrants. From this point, it can be confirmed that competent authority, adoption and right of choice are the ways of acquisition of Turkish citizenship for foreigners as for migrants³⁵⁹⁸. Most of them are by the way of competent authority and it can be general or exceptional. A person who demands for citizenship from competent authority by general way has to fulfil the conditions in article 11 and to apply to the authority. These conditions are being adult and examinant according to his legislations, continuous residing 5 years in Turkey until the application moment, having intentional behaviours, not having a serious health problem, having moral values, speaking Turkish adequately, having enough salary or job for himself and those who has to earn them keep and not having an impeding condition for national security and public order.³⁵⁹⁹ Competent authority, which is Ministry of Interior, has the power of discretion.³⁶⁰⁰

Furthermore, without owing the conditions that stand in article 11, they can acquire citizenship exceptionally. They are stated as the persons who bring industrial plant to Turkey, contributes to scientific, technological, economic, social, sportive, cultural or artistic fields or expectation of contribution and have reasoned request by the related ministries, the persons who have the residence permit according to 6458 numbered Foreigners and International Protection Act article 31/1(j) and the migrants that have turquoise card, their wives, not examinant children or conjunctive foreign children, the persons who is considered necessary and the persons who accepted as “göçmen”. And they must not have any impeding conditions for national security and public order. They can only acquire citizenship with request of ministry and confirmation of Council of Ministers.³⁶⁰¹

In European Convention on Nationality, it is made point that each person has the right of nationality³⁶⁰². Concordantly, acquiring an another citizenship is made possible in Turkish legislation and it has not an impact on Turkish citizenship.³⁶⁰³ Turkish law is enforced for a person who have more than one citizenship and one of his/her citizenships is Turkish. This rights can be accepted also for migrants.³⁶⁰⁴ Additionally, there have been no need to have an permission from competent authority to have double citizenship since the new legislation. There is an another point that must be highlighted is that there can be one more condition for gaining Turkish citizenship. This condition is leaving the previous citizenship and it is left to authority to decide.³⁶⁰⁵ It means it is not an obligatory condition for those who fulfil the other conditions. And power of discretion does not mean looking for a condition which does not take part in the act.³⁶⁰⁶ Although the competent authority have the power of discretion, this power must be used in the context of constitutional guarantee and the principle of the state of law. According to Turkish Constitution Article 66/3, there is nothing demanded for acquisition of citizenship except for the conditions which take part in the Act. Additionally, it should not be forgotten that this power is used for the citizens of the states which looks for leaving Turkish citizenship to acquire their citizenship as 'equal treatment in return'.³⁶⁰⁷

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

"The current refugee crisis is a challenge of global dimensions. We have to work hand in hand with our partners and neighbouring countries beyond EU borders which are most affected."
Johannes Hahn, Commissioner for European Neighbourhood Policy and Enlargement Negotiations

12.1. Background

In 1950, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) undertook the task of protecting the rights and well-being of refugees to protect refugees and solve refugee problems worldwide by directing and coordinating international activities. United Nations agency has been trying to use everyone's right to seek asylum and the right to secure asylum in another country with option that voluntarily return home, integrate locally, or settle in a third country. However, due to the complexity of today's global refugee crisis, original interventions, aid effectiveness principles and mechanisms are no longer sufficient to provide lasting solutions. At the same time, as long as many countries have their borders closed to refugees, they perceive the large waves of immigrants as a threat to national security and stability, especially with the rise of growing Jihad terrorism, in general, the chances of resettlement of a refugee become less likely.³⁶⁰⁸ The political and social crisis that started in Syria in 2011 turned into a civil war. Several armed groups are fighting with the government of Syrian and each other and which leads one of the biggest humanitarian crises in the world. More than 400,000 people died and 11 million were forced out of their homes.³⁶⁰⁹ With the escalation of the war in Syria, EU countries have begun to close their borders to prevent refugees from transitioning to their own countries. Syrian refugees in Lebanon, Turkey and Jordan are increased more likely to stay there. In this case, the economic and social conditions of those countries were affected from the crisis, and in many cases costs increased due to limited resources. Although the international community has promised to help, the fact that the sources do not address the long term, the situation of many refugees settling in and surviving their lives becomes more difficult than ever.³⁶¹⁰

12.2. Turkey's Approach

Turkey's The geographical location of the Turkey provides a rescue and transit country for many refugees. There are refugees living in Turkey outside the Syrians and Iraqis, Afghanistan, Iran, Somalia and other nations, making it the world's largest refugee host.

As a result of an unprecedented migration from the civil war in Syria, Turkey hosts more than 3 million immigrants in the world. So many immigrant receiving and lived in Turkey with 2.8 million registered immigrants while 10% are living in the camps established by the government and 90% live in urban and rural areas outside of the camps.³⁶¹¹ These camps are generally located in South East Anatolian Region of country. Refugees in the camps where 260,000 people live, activities on health education are carried out by Disaster and Emergency Management Presidency(AFAD). Though the state has no responsibility for the refugees living outside the camps, they can easily access to the education and health services. However, for many, access to these basic facilities is often limited to a variety of reasons, such as problems with registration in local authorities and language disability.³⁶¹²

12.3. How was the Financial Aid Initially Implemented?

In 2015, the European Union and its Member States decided to revise their political and financial activities to support Turkey, which is in the effort to host in terms of refugees. Then, with the conscious of common responsibility, only cooperation based on referrals between the European Union and Turkey was decided within the framework of 29 November 2015 EU-Turkey Declaration. In addition to this development, in the summit which was held on the same day the EU-Turkey Joint Action Plan (JAP) has been engaged which deals with the outcome of the Syrian conflict with Turkey and intended to address that the current crisis of migration in two ways: (1) assisting Syrians and supporting the Turkish hosting communities, and (2) strengthening co-operation to prevent irregular migration.³⁶¹³ In 2015, additional financing was needed to support the refugees in Turkey, the Council of Europe was actively engaged and the European Union Organization for Multiculturalism was established. But The EU Facility for Refugees, which supports the EU in many ways, is a coordinating establishment operating in the amount of € 3 billion for the years of the 2016-2017 to ensure the need of the refugees and the states hosting them. 3 billion euros is composing of 1 billion euros from the EU budget and € 2 billion from the EU Member States. Thanks to the funds that it provides, it focuses on many areas such as education, health and socio-economic. As of June 2017, 48 projects have been signed between Turkey and the EU and € 811 million has been paid. Within the scope of Turkish Refugees Center Facility, the total amount allocated for humanitarian and non-humanitarian activities is € 2.9 billion. All the Member States have submitted € 2 billion of contribution margin as that they promised. Up to now, more than € 1.5 billion of contracts have been executed to 46 projects, of which € 777 million has been paid. Total amount reserved for Refugee Opportunities in Turkey on humanitarian and nonhuman activities is currently € 2.2 billion.³⁶¹⁴

The European Commission signed a grant agreement worth €600 million in September 2016. The half of the agreement is for education and the other half is for health. Through this agreement may be provided nearly half a million Syrian children have access to education. As a result of the establishment of more than 500 health facilities, more than 2 million people are able to receive health services. In addition, rehabilitation mental health services are offered to a million people. There are a total of € 200 million in agreements for the construction of 70 new schools that 50.000 Syrian children can take advantage of. Another important project that ends in August 2017 is the "social integration of refugees through vocational training". The asylum seekers in the risk group were given the opportunity to reach continuous vocational trainings, these trainings were increased in the process and Turkish language education was given to all of them. As a result of these trainings, employers and asylum seekers trained were matched. Integration of asylum seekers has also accelerated with this project.

A 3 billion-euro package, which is part of the action plan negotiated with the EU, which will help build a sustainable future for the refugees in the country, can help relieve the situation of refugees in the country. Although there are very few documents on how to use this fund, the EU has accepted to pay this alliance fund package, which is accepted on the negotiating framework. There is still a set of disputes as to who will control the package of benefits and how it will be under surveillance. This grant in aid should not only be used to strengthen the boundaries, but also something must be done on behalf of more human and developmental. In addition to the uncertainties, it is not exactly predictable what will happen when the aid is over. As long as there are no sustainable and long-term solutions to the needs of refugees so that just to help with the money, it will not remove this big problem.³⁶¹⁵

12.4. What should the EU do?

The EU and all member states must show solidarity with refugees. This solidarity should not only be give lip-service but should be increased with more projects and assistance. First, we need to adopt more alternative policies responsively to human rights for save people in difficult situations from a dangerous area on a safe under the coordinated approach. The capacities of states that open their doors to many refugees, such as Turkey, should be contributed to their development in every sense. By taking into account that human life is important to everything, the political crises between the states themselves should never be a threat to the trimming of funding assistance on the refugee issue. The governments of EU must be fair in the midst of an international crisis and wherever the refugees are they should be under their responsibility to live in peace.³⁶¹⁶

Conclusions

In the Turkish Migration Law, especially after Iran – Iraq War, Yugoslavian and lastly Syrian Civil Wars, mass movements hold the most important place in legal doctrine and require a different status for the effective protection of asylum-seekers under the principle of Non-Refoulement, which is provided by temporary protection status rather than the other the statuses in international protection. Even though the geographical restriction of the responsibilities regarding the international protection of refugees is legitimate under 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol it is highly criticized of being non-realistic in assumptions.

After the ratification of the Law on Foreigners and International Protection (LFIP) in 2013, which is the main legislation for migration law in Turkey, Directorate General of Migration Management (DGMM) is established and since then, it is the main institution to oversee the processes related to migration and migrants. Directorate General's duties are determined in the fourth section of LFIP and varies from granting secondary protection to dealing with stateless persons, from keeping statistics to conduct integration programmes.

The recent statistics by the DGMM are regarding migrants in Turkey illustrates that 4,61 % of population of Turkey which is 3.6 million people are only refugees with temporary protection status in total. Number of Syrians who has been status as temporary protection has increased from 14.237 to 3.088.061 since 2012, right after Arabian spring begin. Apart from them, it can be demonstrated in graphs that international protection shows Iraq with 31.523, Afghanistan with 21.445 and Iran with 11.172 is the top three nationalities for the number of international protection applications in Turkey. Therefore, it would be accurate to state that impact of Turkish Migration Law to the total migrants is significantly high even though it requires certain changes in terms of protection of migrant rights, as discussed in the report as citizenship, economic, social and political rights.

Though Turkish Domestic Law, made an important progress after the decisions European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants, which are implemented as interim measures and compensation for damages for especially right to fair trial, and prohibition of torture, the general result of the Turkey Report demonstrates that further improvements are vitally required.

Introduction

The total number of international migrants today is estimated by both the United Nations 2015 Migration Report and the Pew Research Center at 244 million, or roughly three percent of global population — the highest number of people on the move ever recorded, and a 41% increase compared to the year 2000 .

As we can see in the text Nowadays, migration became an important part in the life of society. It is linked to global issues including economic growth, poverty, and human rights. Migration can have many social and economic benefits but also presents different challenges. It involves not only right to asylum but education, immigration to another country and social life at all.

Under the international acts and national legislation, in this report we highlighted the basic requirements for granting an asylum; the process of applying for citizenship and getting it; the main rights which foreigners and stateless persons have being in the territory of Ukraine; and which national authorities are responsible for such activities.

1. How is the right to asylum regulated in national law? Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum; What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

1.1. Give a description of the national regulations governing asylum.

Under the Article 26 of Constitution of Ukraine, the general principle is to set out that ‘foreigners and stateless persons may be granted asylum by law established procedure’³⁶¹⁷. According to the provisions of the Constitution, it is incumbent upon President of Ukraine to adopt decisions on the granting of asylum.³⁶¹⁸ Constitution of Ukraine is the supreme law in Ukraine and has a direct effect. Laws and other legal acts need to comply with it.

Having regard to the national statutory acts, it should be noted that the legal status of asylum seekers is mostly regulated by following laws:

- the Law of Ukraine ‘On Refugees and Persons in Need of Complementary and Temporary Protection’³⁶¹⁹ (hereafter: the Refugee Law);
- the Law of Ukraine ‘On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons’³⁶²⁰ (hereafter: the Foreigners and Stateless Persons Law).

The Refugee Law is the principal legislation governing refugee matters in Ukraine. It brought about remarkable changes in the regulation of procedure of obtaining the refugee status and, for ³⁶¹⁷ Law n. 254к/96-ВР (Constitution of Ukraine) 1996 [Конституція України] Art. 26.

³⁶¹⁸ ibid Art. 106.

³⁶¹⁹ Law n. 3671-VI (On Refugees and Persons in Need of Complementary and Temporary Protection) 2011 [Про біженців та осіб, які потребують додаткового або тимчасового захисту].

³⁶²⁰ Law n. 3773-VI (On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons) 2011 [Про правовий статус іноземців та осіб без громадянства].

the first time, fixed the status of persons in need of protection in Ukrainian legislation. This statutory act includes a definition of the term 'refugee' and 'person in need of complementary protection' (Art. 1) that is in compliance with provisions of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (hereafter: the 1951 Convention). Moreover, the Refugee Law regulates procedure of applying for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection (Art. 5), cessation and withdrawal of the refugee status or the status of a person in need of complementary protection and cancellation of decision on recognition as a person with above mentioned status (Art. 11), rights of a person who is recognised as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection (Art. 15). It also includes the principle of family unity (Art. 4) and a safe third country definition (Art. 1).

The Foreigners and Stateless Persons Law set forth auxiliary provisions concerning the right to asylum. There we may find grounds for stay of stateless persons recognised as refugees in Ukraine or granted asylum in Ukraine (Art. 4), the right to recognition of a foreigner or a stateless person as refugee – a person who requires complimentary protection, and provision of temporary protection (Art. 6). Besides, it includes provisions on voluntary return of foreigners and stateless persons who received notice of refusal to recognize them as refugees or persons requiring additional protection (Art. 25).

Apart from the national legislation, Ukraine also is a signatory to the 1951 Convention³⁶²¹ and its 1967 Protocol. Ukraine ratified the Convention and the Protocol without reservations on 10 January 2002. The Law of Ukraine 'On International Agreements' n. 1906-IV of 29 June 2004 requires that international treaties, which require ratification, to be adopted in the form of a law with text of this international treaty as an integral part. It is worth noting that the authorities are often reluctant to apply international law directly, but prefer to wait for ratification relevant legislation.

1.2. What is the procedure for granting asylum and who is responsible?

Under Decree n. 360 of Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine 'Regulation on the State Migration Service of Ukraine'³⁶²² (hereafter: the Regulation) has been set forth. According to the Regulation, the State Migration Service of Ukraine (hereafter: the SMS) is a central body of executive power, whose activity is directed and coordinated by the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine via the Minister of Internal Affairs of Ukraine.

Pursuant to paragraph 4 of the Regulation, the SMS makes decisions on granting, loss, deprivation and withdrawal of refugee status and other forms of protection in Ukraine. In addition, it is within the scope of the SMS's authority to address complaints on decisions to refuse an acceptance of application with respect to recognition of a person as a refugee; on refusal to process documents for solving the issue of recognition as a refugee or as a person in need of complementary protection; on cancellation of above mentioned decisions if such decisions are adopted with violation of the relevant legislation.

³⁶²² Decree n. 360 of Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine (Regulation on the State Migration Service of Ukraine) 2014 [Положення про Державну міграційну службу України].

As it is evident from the analysis provided above, a person ought to apply to the SMS if he (she) wishes to be recognised as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection. It is the only institution that is authorised to grant legal rights to stay in Ukraine. If the SMS recognises an individual as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection, he (she) will receive a legal status and protection in Ukraine.

The procedure for granting asylum is prescribed in the Refugee Law. A person who, intending to be recognised as a refugee in Ukraine or a person in need of complementary protection, crossed the Ukrainian state border in compliance with procedures set by the legislation of Ukraine, must apply to the respective migration service authority for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection, within five working days (Art. 5, para. 1).

If such person is legally entering Ukraine with an intention to seek asylum, he (she) should indicate his (her) intention to the State Border Guard Service as the purpose of his (her) travel to Ukraine. The official will explain him (her) where and how this person should apply for asylum in Ukraine. The SMS may refuse his (her) application if it is filed late. However, the individual can also explain the reasons why he (her) is applying late, such as if he (she) was seeking legal advice or was ill.

On the other hand, an individual who, intending to be recognised as a refugee in Ukraine or a person in need of complementary protection, illegally crossed the state border when entering Ukraine, must immediately apply to the respective migration service authority for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection (Art. 5, pt. 1). If such person submitted the above mentioned application to an officer of the Border Guard Service of Ukraine during the illegal crossing of the border, he (she) is obliged to explain to the officer reasons of the illegal crossing of the state border of Ukraine.

If such person has no identity documents, or if such documents are false, he (she) must specify this fact in an explanation and give an account of reasons for the said situation. If a person giving such explanation does not speak Ukrainian or Russian, the State Border Guard Service authority must provide an interpreter from the language, which such person can speak. After explanations are given, the State Border Guard Service of Ukraine's officers transfer the person who applied for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection to a representative of the migration service authority within 24 hours (Art. 5, pt. 2).

Processing documents for solving the issue of recognising as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection is executed on the ground of the application for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection.

Such application must be submitted personally by a foreigner or a stateless person or by his (her) legal representative to the migration service authority in the Autonomous Republic of Crimea, oblasts, cities of Kyiv and Sevastopol according to the place of applicant's temporary stay (Art. 7, para. 1).

It should be noted that Ukrainian legislation does not provide criteria to consider for asylum. The Refugee Law has provisions which are not allowed a person an opportunity to become a refugee. Under the Article 6 a person cannot be recognized as a refugee or a person in needs of complementary protection in such cases³⁶²³:

- if he (she) committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity as defined in international law;
- if he (she) committed a non-political crime outside Ukraine before arriving in Ukraine for the purpose of being recognized as a refugee or a person who needs of complementary protection if such act, by the Criminal Code of Ukraine, is serious or particularly serious crimes;
- if he (she) is found guilty of acts contrary to the principles of the United Nations;
- if he (she) recognizing as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection in another country;
- if he (she) was in a third safe country and arrived in Ukraine with the intent recognizing as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection.

Subsequently, the migration service authority, that took a foreigner's or stateless person's application for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection into consideration, issues to the applicant a certificate on an application for protection in Ukraine and register the applicant.

Within fifteen working days after the registration of the application day, the migration service authority shall conduct an interview with the applicant, check information indicated in the application and other documents, ask for complementary information and decide upon processing documents for solving the issue of recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection, or refusal to process documents for solving the above-mentioned issue (Art. 8, para. 1).

It is necessary to note that the application for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection is considered by the migration service authorities in the Autonomous Republic of Crimea, oblasts, and cities of Kyiv and Sevastopol within two months following the day of decision on processing the documents solving the issue of recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection. The Head of the migration service authority may extend the consideration period based on substantiated request of the officer, who consider the application, but for the period not exceeding three months (Art. 9, para. 1).

The applicant should mention infant children who stay with him (her) in the territory of Ukraine (applicant's family members or those under the applicant's care or in guardianship) in application form, as well as whose recognition as refugees or persons in need of complementary protection is agreed by the applicant in writing in the application.

Finally, decisions on the application for recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection is made by the specially authorised central executive migration authority within one month following the receipt of the applicant's personal file and written conclusion of migration service authority that considered the application. The head of the specially authorized central executive migration authority may extend the decision-making period for three months at most (Art. 10, para. 1).

³⁶²³ Ibid Art.6

Moreover, there is also a possibility to appeal against decisions on refugee status or complementary protection. Such decisions of the SMS on refusal to accept the application on recognition as a refugee or as a person in need of complementary protection; on refusal to process documents for solving the issue of recognition as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection may be appealed against at the specially authorised central executive migration authority within five working days following the receipt of a notification of refusal, as well as to court (Art. 12, para. 1).

In conclusion, it is necessary to mention grounds of losing and deprivation of refugee status and complementary protection and the abolition of a decision to recognize a person as a refugee or a person who needs of complementary protection. Under the Article 11 of the Refugee Law refugee status and complementary protection are lost if the person is³⁶²⁴:

- voluntarily again used the protection of the country of citizenship;
- has acquired the citizenship of Ukraine or has voluntarily acquired the citizenship which he (she) had before or acquired the citizenship of another state and enjoys its protection;
- voluntarily returned to the country he (she) left or outside of which he (she) was the victim of persecution due to justified fears;
- being a stateless person can return to the country of his earlier permanent residence, since the circumstances in which he (she) recognising as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection no longer exists;
- has received a shelter or permission to permanently live in another country;
- cannot refuse to use the country's protection of its civic affairs, since the circumstances on the basis of which the person was recognized as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection no longer exists.

In case if a person engaging in activities that constitute a threat to national security, public order, and the health of the population of Ukraine, he (she) is deprived of refugee status or complementary protection as well as. Such status can be also cancelled if a person has submitted false information, has submitted false documents that have become grounds for a person recognising as a refugee or a person who needs complementary protection.

The procedure for cancelling this status is quite difficult. Firstly, authorized officials of a central executive body implementing a state policy in the field of refugees and persons requiring complementary or temporary protection shall submit to the central executive authority a submission about the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection or the abolition of a decision to recognize a person as a refugee, or a person who needs complementary protection on his or her own initiative.

In the submission on the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection or the revocation of a decision to recognize a person as a refugee or a person who needs complementary protection, the circumstances and attached documents confirming the existence of grounds for the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection or for the cancelling a decision to recognize a person as a refugee or a person in need of complementary protection.

The second step is that decision on the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection or the revocation of a decision to recognize a person as a refugee or a person who needs complementary protection is taken by the central executive body implementing the state policy in the field of refugees and persons requiring complementary or temporary protection upon filing authorized officials of the central executive body within a month from the date of receipt of the submission and his personal affairs. The term of the decision may be extended by the head of the central executive authority, which implements the state policy in the field of refugees and persons requiring complementary or temporary protection, but not more than three months.

On the basis of the comprehensive study and appraisal of documents and materials, the central executive authority, implementing the state policy in the field of refugees and persons needs complementary or temporary protection, decides on the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection, as well as the revocation of the recognition decision a person who is a refugee or a person who needs complementary protection or a lack of grounds for the loss or deprivation of refugee status or complementary protection or the abolition of a decision to recognize a person as a refugee or a person who needs complementary protection.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

Ukraine does not have any special legal acts which regulate separately immigration from EU member states and non-EU states. The main legal act that establishes a procedure for immigration to Ukraine for foreigners is the Law of Ukraine 'On immigration'. Current act concerns to all foreign states.

According to the Ukrainian legislation, foreigners should have the specific grounds to immigrate to Ukraine. These grounds are listed in the Article 4 of the Law of Ukraine 'On immigration'³⁶²⁵. Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine determined an immigration quote every year in conformity with Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine 'On Approval of the Procedure for the Formation of the Immigration Quota, Procedure for Submission of Applications for the Grant of Immigration Permits and Applications for its Abolition and Compliance' n. 1983 of 26 December 2002.

Based on the Article 4 of this act, quote is given to the following categories of immigrants:

- scientists and cultural workers whose immigration corresponds to the interests of Ukraine;
- highly qualified specialists and workers who are needed badly for the Ukrainian economy;

³⁶²⁵ Law n. 2491-III (On immigration) 2001 [Про імміграцію].

- persons who made an investment into the Ukrainian economy by foreign currency on the amount not less than 100 000 USD. Such an investment should be duly registered in accordance with the prescribed procedure;
- persons who are either brother or sister, grandfather or grandmother, or grandchild of the Ukrainian national;
- persons who previously possessed the Ukrainian citizenship;
- parents / spouse of the immigrant and his/her minor children;
- persons who continuously resided in Ukraine during three years from the day when the status of refugee or asylum were granted to them;
- persons who served in the Armed Forces of Ukraine three and more years³⁶²⁶.

In 2016 government decided to shorten number of quotes. In 2015 the maximum number of quotes was 6215 for all categories combined, but in 2016 the maximum number was just 4583³⁶²⁷.

Furthermore, the act has a category of persons who do not fall under the quote. This means that the legislation does not set a clear figure. The category includes:

- one of the spouses if another spouse is the Ukrainian national and marriage between them was registered more than two years ago, children and parents of the Ukrainian nationals;
- persons who are guardians or trustees of the Ukrainian nationals or are under the guardianship of the Ukrainian nationals;
- persons who have the right to become a citizen of Ukraine on the basis of territorial origin;
- persons whose immigration is a state interest for Ukraine;
- foreign Ukrainians, the spouse of such foreign Ukrainians, their children if they stay jointly in Ukraine.

Article 9 of the Law 'On Immigration' provides that applications for immigration permit should be submitted:

- by the persons who permanently reside abroad – to the Ukrainian diplomatic and consular missions at the place of permanent residence;
- by the persons who stay in Ukraine on legal grounds – to the authorized authorities (State Migration Service) at the place of residence.

Applicant should submit an application for immigration permit personally to the respective state authority. In the case of reasonable excuse (sickness of the applicant etc.) the application can be sent by post or submitted by another person with notary attested authorization letter for this purpose.

Minors and incapable persons cannot submit an application by themselves. In this case the application for immigration permit can be submitted by their legal representatives (parents, guardian and custodian).

³⁶²⁶ ibid Art. 4.

³⁶²⁷ Taras Doronyuk, 'Імміграційні квоти в Україні' (31 March 2016) <https://cedos.org.ua/uk/migration/immihratsiini-kvoty-v-ukraini> [Ukrainian].

Under Ukrainian legislation there is some features related to parents with minor children. If one of the parents immigrates with minor, he (she) should provide a notary attested statement from his spouse stating that this spouse has no objection against immigration of children with the second parent. If such consent could not be given, the parent should obtain an official order from the concerned authorities allowing children to stay with this parent. Such an order should be legalized by consular post of Ukraine unless other is prescribed by the international Treaty of Ukraine.

Applicant need to add the following documents with an application (Art. 9):

- three photos;
- copy of identification document;
- document containing information on place of residence;
- information on family composition (copies of birth certificate, marriage certificate, adoption or guardianship documents etc.);
- medical document confirming that the person does not suffer from chronic alcoholism, toxicomania, narcomania or infection disease list of which is defined by concerned central body on health issues.

All documents issued by the competent authorities of the foreign states must be legalised unless otherwise is prescribed by the international treaties of Ukraine. Copies of such documents and written confirmation of consent for immigration should be notary attested. The documents which data can be changed should be submitted within 6 months from the date of issuance.

In case of envisaged any fees by the Ukrainian legislation for the purposes of granting an immigration permit, the document confirming payment should be attached to the application for immigration permit.

In the event if any of the mentioned documents in not submitted by the applicant, an application for immigration permit cannot be accepted.

The processing time for application shall not exceed 1 year from the date when such application was submitted.

In addition to this it is worth saying about reasons, because of which person cannot receive immigration permit. The following reasons (Art. 10):

- persons sentenced to imprisonment for more than one year for the commission of actions that, according to the laws of Ukraine, are recognized as a crime, if the conviction is not extinguished and not removed;
- persons who have committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity as defined in international law, or are being sought in connection with the commission of an act that is recognized as a serious crime in accordance with the laws of Ukraine or has been notified of suspicion of commission a criminal offense, the pre-trial investigation of which has not been completed;
- persons who suffer from chronic alcoholism, toxicomania, narcomania or infection disease list of which is defined by concerned central body on health issues in Ukraine;
- persons who has consciously submitted untruthful information;

- persons who are prohibited from entering the territory of Ukraine on the basis of the law;
- in other cases established by the laws of Ukraine.

In accordance with the Article 11 of the Law of Ukraine 'On Immigration' diplomatic or consular mission of Ukraine issues long term visa to person who permanently resides abroad and got immigration permission.

After arriving to Ukraine the immigrant should submit an application for obtaining Permanent Residence Certificate (document which confirms the right of the foreigner or stateless person to permanently reside in Ukraine) to the concerned regional migration authorities at the place of immigrant's residence. A copy of applicant's passport containing immigration visa and a copy of immigration permit should be attached.

Permanent Residence Certificate shall be issued within 1 week from the date of receiving the application by concerned immigration authorities.

Finally, some words about cancelling the immigration permit. The main reasons, because of which an immigrant may lose permission for immigration, are he (she) has been sentenced to imprisonment for at least one year in Ukraine and the verdict has come to legal effect, the actions of the immigrant constitute a threat to the national security and public order in Ukraine and if it is necessary for health protection, protection of rights and legitimate interests of citizens of Ukraine (Art. 12).

As we can observe in connection with the stated text, it is not a difficult thing for foreigners to move to Ukraine for permanent residence.

It should be noted how foreigners can leave the territory of Ukraine and conditions they need to follow. Ukrainian legislation includes specific provisions which do not allow foreigners to leave the country.

Paragraph 2 of the Article 22 of Law of Ukraine 'On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons' has such provisions as: a) foreigner is informed of a suspicion of a criminal offense or a criminal case is considered by a court - before the end of criminal proceedings; b) foreigner is convicted of a criminal offense - to serve a sentence or release from punishment; c) if the departure of foreigner contradicts the interests of ensuring the national security of Ukraine - until the termination of circumstances which preventing departure.

Over the Paragraph 3, the departure of a foreigner may be suspended temporarily by a decision of the court. It means that he (she) needs to fulfil his property obligations to individuals or legal entities in Ukraine³⁶²⁸.

In other cases, foreigners can leave the country freely and they have not got any obligations according to this.

Also Law of Ukraine 'On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons' regulates both of deportation and expulsion.

According to the Article 26 foreigner or stateless person can be deported to the country of origin in case of violation of the legislation on the legal status of foreigners and stateless persons or if their actions run counter to the interests of ensuring the national security of Ukraine or the protection of public order.³⁶²⁹

³⁶²⁸ ibid art.22

Such decisions are made by the central executive authority which provides state's politics in migration area. Foreigner or stateless person must leave the country in term determined in the decision. Under the Paragraph 1, the term cannot exceed 30 days from the day when the decision was made. Also it may be accompanied by a ban on further entry into Ukraine for a term of three years. Foreigner or stateless person is required to leave the territory on his (her) own.

Nevertheless, there are two exceptions to the rule: a) it does not apply to foreigners and stateless persons under the age of 18; b) it does not apply to foreigners and stateless persons who are covered by the Foreigners and Stateless Persons Law³⁶³⁰.

The Article 30 establishes an expulsion of foreigners. The central executive authority can expel a foreigner or stateless person in case if he (she) does not leave the state in term prescribed by the authority decision.³⁶³¹

The central authority brings an action to the administrative court and after that, the court passes a resolution to expel the foreigner or stateless person. Such persons are banned from further entry into Ukraine for a term of five years.

Like in the previous Article, this rule does not apply to foreigners and stateless persons who are covered by Refugee Law too.

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

3.1. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants?

Ukraine has government agency specifically dealing with migrants which called State Migration Service of Ukraine (the SMS). This agency is central body of executive power which activity is directed and coordinated by Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine via the Minister of Internal Affairs. The main activities of the SMS related to the state policy in migration area (immigration and emigration), and also counteracting illegal migration, citizenship, asylum seekers and other categories of migrants defined by the legislation (pt. 1 of the Regulations).

The structure of State Migration Service of Ukraine divided into four blocks³⁶³². Each of them work in the special area and have different responsibilities.

The second bloc is made up of territorial bodies such as Head Departments of DMS in Kyiv and big regions and Departments in different regions throughout Ukraine.

The third and fourth blocks represent Posts of temporary stay of foreigners and stateless persons and Posts of temporary placement of refugees, respectively. These Posts are state institutions which intended to temporarily hold foreigners, stateless persons and refugees.

There is one special state enterprise called "Document". The main purpose of the enterprise is introduction new services and standards for the provision of migratory and passport services, as well as attracting funds for the creation of modern conditions for servicing related to resolving issues in the migration field.

3.2. If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

The performance of State Migration Service of Ukraine is based on such legal acts (pt. 2):

- Constitution of Ukraine;
- Laws of Ukraine;

- to receive from the state bodies and local self-government bodies, enterprises, institutions and organizations, as well as from citizens and different associations, information, documents and materials which are necessary to perform tasks assigned to the Service;

In according to the legislation, the State Migration Service of Ukraine carries out its powers directly and through its territorial bodies and subdivisions.

While the SMS performing the assigned tasks, it interacts with other state bodies, subsidiary bodies and services created by the President of Ukraine, temporary consultative, advisory and other subsidiary bodies established by the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine, local self-government bodies, citizens' associations, trade unions and employers' organizations, relevant bodies of foreign states and international organizations, as well as enterprises, institutions and organizations.

Monitoring of service quality delivered making the Association of Ukrainian Human Rights Monitors on Law Enforcement (hereafter – the Association UMDPL). The monitoring carries out using the following methods by the Association UMDPL:

- analysis of media materials on the activity of the SMS of Ukraine;
- visiting of office premises of the migration service with a free access regime;

As we can see, the State Migration Service of Ukraine is doing immense work in the area of migration (immigration and emigration), also counteracting illegal migration, which contributes to the country's security and the normal life of citizens.

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

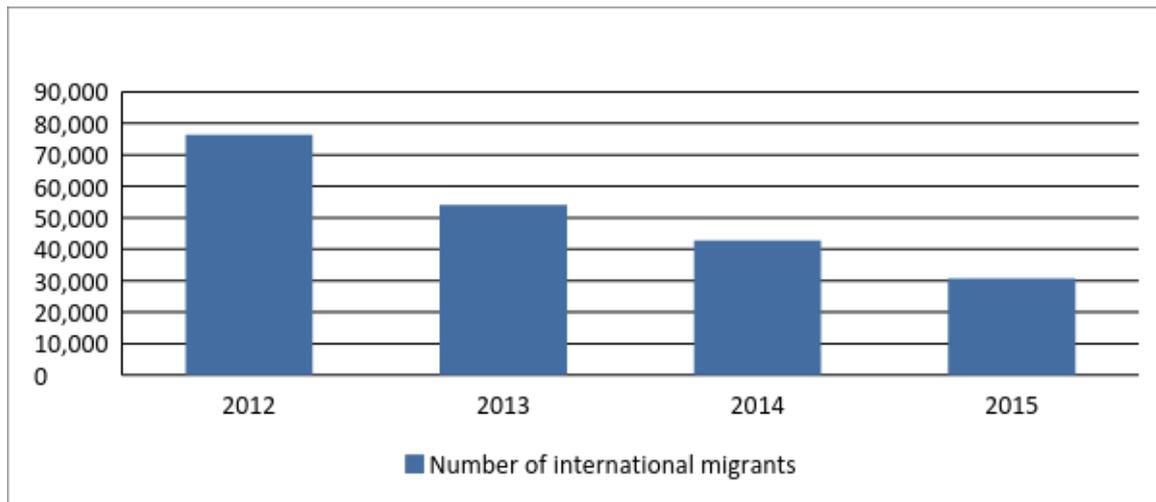

The main agency which is responsible for keeping statistics and presenting statistical data in Ukraine is State Statistics Service of Ukraine. Activities of the agency are regulated by Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine via Minister of Economic Development and Trade of Ukraine³⁶³⁴. State Migration Service of Ukraine process information about migration and migrants on the territory of the state and transfer it to the Statistics Service.

According to the latest data of State Statistics Service of Ukraine during the period from 2012 to 2015 number of migrants decreased and this process has not stopped. It depends on events in 2013-2014, which called Euromaidan, included different demonstrations and protests all over the country, and hostilities on the East of Ukraine. All these reasons led to economic crisis and decline in living standards, that is why foreigners do not interested in immigration to Ukraine³⁶³⁵. Table below shows data of migrants in the last few years.

³⁶³³ The Association of Ukrainian Human Rights Monitors on Law Enforcement, Звіт за результатами всеукраїнського громадського моніторингу якості надання адміністративних послуг Державною міграційною службою України (2014) <http://umdpl.info/wp-content/uploads/2016/08/Zvit-za-rezultatamy-monitoryngovoyi-kampaniyi-DMS.pdf> [Ukrainian], 2.

Concerning to border crossings by foreigners, its number decrease in last years too. In 2013 was 26 million border crossings but in 2015 was only half of that encountered, about 13 million.

The situation about immigrants – foreigners who live with a permanent residence permit – is not satisfying too. Just 250 thousands immigrants live in Ukraine, which is less than 1 percent of the population.

It should be noted that the largest number of immigrants are citizens of the post-Soviet states. Over half of them received permits for permanent residence in the country on the basis of close family ties with Ukrainian citizens.

A separate group of foreigners in Ukraine is refugees and people, who have received complementary protection. Implementation of complementary protection in 2011, tense situation in Afghanistan and war in Syria have caused a certain increase in the number of refugees and users of complementary protection in 2012-2015. These circumstances led to increasing the number of applications for entry into the shelter. Mostly, asylum seekers came to Ukraine from Afghanistan and Syria. However, the number of refugees in Ukraine remains low ³⁶³⁶ ibid 24.

In conclusion a few words about trends in migratory flows. It would be more legitimate to assume that as a result of the deterioration of the economic situation in Ukraine, triggered by the military conflict, and of a devaluation of income to the EU. One should bear in mind that Ukraine closed 2014 with the 7% GDP drop. In the first and the second quarter of 2015, a drop in GDP was recorded of 17% and 14%. All this has contributed to a major decline in the level of real income earned by Ukrainian citizens. This stimulated labour migration, which in the late 1990's became a mass phenomenon and a source of income for many families.

Labour migration reduces tensions in the labour market. If there were no employment opportunities abroad, the number of the unemployed would have more than doubled.

According to various surveys, the wages of migrant workers abroad are three to four times higher than the average wage in Ukraine. The funds earned by labour migrants are mainly used for consumption, which improves life quality of families of migrants, reduces poverty and stimulates economic development. According to the study of migrant monetary flows to Ukraine and their impact on the country's development conducted by IOM in 2014-2015, migrants' remittances to Ukraine accounted for nearly half of the budget of households with long-term migrant workers, and 60% of the budget of households with short-term migrant workers³⁶³⁷.

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

Ukraine ratified the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms in 1997. In this way, it undertook to comply with all the provisions of the Convention on the territory of the country and to prevent violations of these provisions, as well as to grant it the status of part of the national legislation and began the process of implementation of this international treaty into the national legal order.

The Convention is governed by the Law of Ukraine "On Implementation of the Judgments and Practice of the European Court of Human Rights". In particular, the Article 2 provides a reference to the Article 46 of the Convention, which states that the obligation of the State is to comply with the decisions of the European Court of Human Rights³⁶³⁸. This norm was introduced with the necessity to cut the causes of Ukraine's violation of the Convention and the protocols thereto, as well as the introduction of European human rights standards in Ukrainian law and administrative practice, with the creation of prerequisites for reducing the number of applications to the European Court of Human Rights against Ukraine.

Consequently, the decisions of the European Court should form an ideological and legal basis for the administration of justice in Ukraine.

³⁶³⁷ Marta Jaroszewicz, The migration of Ukrainians in times of crisis (2015) <https://www.osw.waw.pl/en/publikacje/osw-commentary/2015-10-19/migration-ukrainians-times-crisis>.

³⁶³⁸ Law n. 3477-15 (On Implementation of the Judgments and Practice of the European Court of Human Rights) 2006 [Про виконання рішень та застосування практики Європейського суду з прав людини].

According to the above, the courts of Ukraine should rely on the ECHR's judgments on migrants and make amendments. However, it does not happen in practice.

According to Ukrainian legislation and ECHR, decisions of European Court of Human Rights are binding for Ukraine. At the same time, the Ukrainian government has not done any special steps to make sure the compliance with ECHR practice in respect to migrant's issues.

For example, Ukrainian legislation has non-complaint rules of seeking protection in Ukraine due to strong bureaucratization and absence of affective procedural guarantees of protection of the applicants' rights which should be considered as non-compliance with Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy. Also Ukrainian legislation doesn't have a good regulation of the assessment of the applications mentioned above which cause a negligence in respect to evidence about human rights situation in the country of the applicant's origin, ignorance of the burden of proof and principle of the benefit of the doubt in such cases contrary to Signh and Others v. Belgium and R.C. v. Sweden. And this is just a few examples of the discrepancy between court decisions and Ukrainian legislation.

Everything else, Ukraine is not very popular among foreigners. This situation has resulted from a number of factors, including the war in the East, the annexation of the Crimea and the unstable economic situation. All of this pushes foreign citizens to immigrate to Ukraine, and the practice of applying the judgments of the European Court on migrants is very poorly demonstrated.

Nowadays, Ukraine cannot meet European standards for the international treaties application and properly protect the rights and freedoms of people and citizens.

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) is independent human rights monitoring body specialised in combating racism, discrimination, xenophobia, antisemitism and intolerance. It publishes recommendations and reports on Council of Europe's member states. Ukraine is included in this list of member states, thus ECRI recommendations concern it too.

In the last few years, development of migration policy of Ukraine is definitely accelerated. Based in this and according to international obligations, Ukraine should provide the protection of newcomers' rights and guarantee the equality of the citizens of Ukraine. Because of a number of reasons, including lack of language and culture knowledge, foreigners are too vulnerable to violating their rights and the possibility of their protection. That is why ECRI gave recommendations related to the integration of migrants in Ukrainian society³⁶³⁹.

The first recommendation related to the defined body that will in future be responsible for coordinating the authorities' work on combating racism and racial discrimination and ensures that their staffs have strong expertise in the anti-discrimination field.

³⁶³⁹ Olena Malynovska, Міграційна політика в Україні: формування, зміст, відповідність сучасним вимогам (2014) http://www.ier.com.ua/files/publications/Policy_Briefing_Series/PB_01_migration_2013_ukr.pdf [Ukrainian].

According to outlined above, in June 2014, the Ukrainian Cabinet set up a Council for Inter-Ethnic Cohesion, intended to act as an advisory body to the Ukrainian Cabinet. Also in June 2014 the Ukrainian Cabinet created the post of Government Agent on Ethno-National Policy Issues, whose role is to promote the protection of the rights of national minorities and indigenous populations and the preservation of the cohesion and unity of Ukrainian society³⁶⁴⁰. The Government Agent is responsible, inter alia, for submitting proposals to the Council for Inter-Ethnic Cohesion on improving ethno-national policies, on improving the work of governmental bodies and the interaction between them and the Ukrainian Cabinet, and on measures to promote tolerance.

Finally, in September 2014, the Ukrainian Cabinet approved by decree the remit of the Ministry of Culture. The Ministry is, in particular, responsible for taking measures to promote tolerance within Ukrainian society and preventing incitement to hatred and to ethnic discrimination.³⁶⁴¹

ECRI noted that the Parliamentary Commissioner for Human Rights has qualified staff with training in issues pertaining to racism and racial discrimination and has organised numerous training sessions on the prevention and combating of discrimination for various groups, including legal experts, judges, representatives of the law enforcement agencies and representatives of NGOs.

As to the Council for inter-ethnic cohesion, ECRI notes that that body – comprising representatives of various ministries, experts, scientists, the Government Agent on Ethno-National Policy Issues and representatives of the various ethnic minorities – is first and foremost a body that facilitates relations between the government and those minorities³⁶⁴².

The second recommendation was implied to urge the Ukrainian authorities to ensure that a fair and effective refugee status determination procedure is in place at all times and that the final structure intended to exercise these functions is established as soon as possible. In accordance with this, decree No. 405/2011 of the President of Ukraine, issued in April 2011 and approving the Regulation on the State Migration Service (SMS), the SMS has become the executive's main body responsible for migration issues, under the supervision of the Ministry of the Interior and the State Committee for Nationalities and Religion. Furthermore, a new law on refugees and persons needing complementary or temporary protection in Ukraine came into force in September 2011.

That law introduces protection for persons under threat of the death penalty, torture or inhuman or degrading treatment in their country of origin. Nevertheless, ECRI considers that the placing of the State Migration Service under the supervision of the Ministry of the Interior cannot provide a guarantee of fair application of the refugee status determination procedure required by its recommendation, as tends to be shown by the fact that, at central level, the team responsible for these matters is also responsible for other duties, such as those connected with the reception of refugees at open centres and the detention of migrants in an unlawful situation at the centres provided for that purpose³⁶⁴³.

And the last one related to establish an independent body empowered to receive complaints against police officers; it refers to its General Policy Recommendation No. 11, which contains a number of specific guidelines in this respect. In this case, Ukrainian authorities told that “internal security units” responsible, inter alia, for monitoring compliance with the law by representatives of law enforcement agencies. In this context, those units were required to deal with complaints lodged by citizens. They collected information about the cases submitted to them and sent relevant evidence to the prosecution service or the Security Service of Ukraine.

ECRI takes due note of these initiatives, but considers that they are insufficient in the light of its recommendation. Firstly, the remit of those units confers on them the role of monitoring compliance with the law: the protection of human rights and the fight against racism and racial discrimination are not explicitly included. ECRI also considers that the placing of those units under the supervision of a ministry cannot guarantee the independence that such a body must enjoy in order to be able to carry out its duties impartially.

For these reasons, ECRI concludes that its recommendation has been partially implemented³⁶⁴⁴.

Unfortunately, nothing has changed since that time. Moreover, the 5th cycle of monitoring of ECRI mentioned that the Action Plan for Integration of Migrants into Ukrainian Society for 2011-2015 have not been updated to cover the period after 2015, although the State Migration Service has been working for several years on a new migration policy up to 2025³⁶⁴⁵.

Migrants still face numerous problems in Ukraine such as residence registration, as landlords are often reluctant to register foreigners renting their property, and this hinders access to education, healthcare, and administrative services. The above-mentioned study also indicates that foreigners frequently pay higher rent than Ukrainian nationals. And no public housing assistance is available to immigrants.

The integration in the area of communication is not good too. Over two-thirds attended language courses and have certificates, although the current network of facilities that offer Ukrainian language courses is described as inadequate. Further, 80% of immigrants are employed, but only 40% work legally, mostly in trade, services, and construction.

Over a quarter of the participants in the survey reported experiencing problems accessing health care, mainly because migrants are required to pay for services, including emergency medical assistance. Only about 40% reported having medical insurance cover.

Furthermore, migrants also suffer from negative attitude towards foreigners and discrimination and xenophobia on the part of public officials have been reported.

In view of the fact that Ukraine has a growing migrant population due to its strategic location between the European Union and the Russian Federation, ECRI considers that steps should be taken to address the concerns raised above.

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

Migrants' right to access to healthcare is regulated by following legal acts:

- the Law of Ukraine n. 2801-XII 'Bases of the legislation of Ukraine on health care' (1992);
- the Law of Ukraine n. 3773-VI 'On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons' (2011);
- Resolution of Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine n. 121 'Procedure for providing medical assistance to foreigners and stateless persons [...] ' (2014).

According to the Article 3 of Law of Ukraine 'On the Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons' foreigners and stateless persons make use of the same rights, freedoms and responsibilities as Ukrainian citizens (pt. 1) and have the right to recognize their legal personality and fundamental human rights and freedoms (pt. 2)³⁶⁴⁶. In addition to this, the Article 11 of the Law 'Bases of the legislation of Ukraine on health care' establishes that foreigners and stateless persons have the same rights and responsibilities in healthcare area like citizens of Ukraine³⁶⁴⁷.

Main act which regulate the procedure for providing medical assistance is Resolution of Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine 'Procedure for providing medical assistance to foreigners and stateless people [...]'. This act contains provisions on how the non-citizens of Ukraine can receive necessary medical aid.

In the begging, we should start with the necessary rule. Under the Article 33 of Law of Ukraine 'Bases of the legislation of Ukraine on health care' medical aid providing by the medical indications by professionally trained medical staff who are in labour relations with healthcare institutions, providing medical help according to the license obtained by the law³⁶⁴⁸. No other person can offer the medical aid.

According to the Article 39 of this law, a patient who has reached adulthood has the right to receive correct and complete information about his (her) health, including access to relevant medical documents on his (her) health. The medical officer is obliged to give the patient in accessible form with information about his state of health, the purpose of conducting the proposed research and medical measures, the forecast of the possible development of the disease, including the risk to life and health as well as³⁶⁴⁹.

In this regard, medical and emergency aid for foreigners and stateless persons, who are temporarily located on the territory of Ukraine, is provided for a fee, if Constitution of Ukraine or International Acts are not providing otherwise. The fee of medical aid is determined by the healthcare institution that provided it, in the order established by the Ministry of Health (pt. 2).

³⁶⁴⁸ ibid Art.33

³⁶⁴⁹ ibid Art.39

The fee can be carried out in cashless form (for example, credit card) or in cash in national currency³⁶⁵⁰.

Exception from this rule makes up foreigners and stateless person who permanently reside in the territory of Ukraine. That is why they can receive aid at the expense of budget funds provided for this purpose in the state and local budgets (pt. 3)³⁶⁵¹. Furthermore, medical examination of foreigners and stateless persons, who have applied for recognition of refugee, or a person, who needs additional protection, foreigners and stateless persons, in respect of whom a decision has been made to issue documents for resolving the issue of recognition as a refugee, or a person in need of additional protection, and provision of emergency medical care is carried out free of charge, at the expense of budget funds provided in the state and local budgets too.

Under the Ukrainian legislation framework foreigners and stateless persons, who are temporarily staying on the territory of Ukraine, should to have health insurance policy, which guarantees the payment of medical care (insurance contract). If foreigner wants to receive a certificate for temporary residence in Ukraine specified document is necessary too.

Insurance contract may be entered into with insurer-resident or non-resident insurer. In case of conclusion agreement on mutual recognition of insurance contracts between insurer-resident and non-resident insurer, the guarantee of payment of required medical care shall be carried out by the resident insurer in the presence of insurance contract. Also payment of medical aid may be provided by companies coordinating the provision of medical care in Ukraine, which specified in the insurance contract.

In the event of absence of insurance for a foreigner or stateless person, as well as inability to confirm the right to receive free medical care in Ukraine, the payment of provided medical aid is carried out by foreigner or stateless person on his (her) own. If the cost of health care exceeds the sum insured, the foreigner or stateless person pays the difference to the health care institution.

It is useful to note that every case of medical assistance to foreigners and stateless persons must be registered in the health care institution that provided needed medical care.

Another law that is worth mentioning is the Law of Ukraine 'On Emergency Medical Aid'. Especially the Article 3 suggests free, available, timely and high quality emergency medical aid to citizens of Ukraine and any other person. Foreigners and stateless persons, as well as individuals who have been taken into custody or who have been sentenced in the form of deprivation of liberty, are provided with emergency medical aid in accordance with the procedure established by the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine (pt. 1)³⁶⁵².

Part 2 of this Article provides with the rights every citizen of Ukraine and any other person have. They are:

- to make emergency medical aid calls;
- apply for emergency medical assistance to the nearest emergency department or other health care institution that can provide such assistance;
- notify the treating physician or the nearest healthcare provider, regardless of the form of ownership and subordination of his (her) urgent condition or the urgent condition of another person.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

In regard to this issue, it is essential to take into consideration two aspects: right to education of external migrants and right to education of internal migrants (internally displaced people due to war in Eastern Ukraine and annexation of Crimea).

8.1. Right to education of external migrants

Under the Article 26 of the Constitution of Ukraine, foreigners and stateless persons who are in Ukraine on legal grounds enjoy the same rights and freedoms and also bear the same duties as citizens of Ukraine, with³⁶⁵³ the exceptions established by the Constitution, laws or international treaties of Ukraine.

Constitution of Ukraine guarantees the right to education to everyone. According to the Article 53, the State ensures accessible and free pre-school, complete general secondary, vocational and higher education in state and communal educational establishments; the development of pre-school, complete general secondary, extra-curricular, vocational, higher and post-graduate education, various forms of instruction; the provision of state scholarships and privileges to pupils and students³⁶⁵⁴.

In respect to foreigners and stateless persons, Ukrainian legislation covers all the guarantees stated above except the free higher education in in state and communal educational establishments.³⁶⁵⁵

According to the Article 15 of the Law of Ukraine on Refugees and Persons in need of Complementary or Temporary Protection in Ukraine, a person who has been recognized as a refugee or as a person in need of complementary protection shall enjoy, on a par with the Ukrainian citizens, the rights to education.³⁶⁵⁶

In addition, the Article 20 of the Law states that a minor who has been granted temporary protection shall have the right to upbringing and education at the public and community pre-school, secondary and vocational institutions in accordance with the procedure established by the specially authorized central executive educational authority.

According to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Ukraine, International students have opportunity to study in more than 240 universities in Ukraine and gain the specialization in different scientific fields. The main languages of instructions in Ukrainian Higher Educational Institutions (HEIs) are Ukrainian, Russian or English. Every year higher educational establishments welcome students from more than 150 countries.³⁶⁵⁷

According to the research, one of the most important problem that migrants face (including children) is a lack of Ukrainian language courses which is an obstacle of effective integration.³⁶⁵⁸

8.2. Right to education of internally displaced persons

Article 7 of the Law of Ukraine On guaranteeing the rights and freedoms of citizens and on the legal regime on the temporarily occupied territory of Ukraine covers ensuring the rights of citizens residing on the temporarily occupied territory or persons resettled from it for employment, pensions, mandatory state social security and social services, and education.

Under the law, foreigners and stateless persons who permanently live in Ukraine, refugees or persons in need of complementary protection who legally stay in Ukraine and live on the temporarily occupied territory of Ukraine, has the right to continue their studies on the territory of other regions in order, established under the Law of Ukraine «On higher education». At the same time, the categories of people mentioned above has the right to pre-school, out-of-school, complete general secondary, vocational and higher education.³⁶⁵⁹

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

9.1. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country?

Procedure of recognising foreign school and university diplomas called nostrification. It aims to provide citizens' rights and rights of foreigners, who gained education abroad, related to continuing education and professional activities in Ukraine³⁶⁶⁰.

Decree of Ministry of Education and Science of Ukraine n. 504 'The Order of recognising degrees of higher education gained in foreign higher educational institutions'³⁶⁶¹ (2015) is a principle legal act in Ukraine which regulates the procedure of recognising educational document.

This procedure is performed by higher educational institution (in case of enrolment for continue studying or to a post of scientific and pedagogical worker to specific higher educational institution) and the Ministry of Education and Science of Ukraine (for the purpose of employment or continuing education in the territory of Ukraine).

The procedure of recognising includes: authentication of documents, confirmation of the status of educational institution and educational programme, appraisal of qualifications, and the establishment of equivalence to educational degrees in Ukraine, academic and professional rights. As a result, the holder of foreign educational documents receives a certificate which confirms the right to continue education or employment on a specialty in a higher educational institution of Ukraine. The issuance of such a certificate is carried out on the basis of a decision of the competent authority - a higher educational institution or the Ministry of Education and Science of Ukraine.

In 1999 Ukraine ratified the Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region (hereafter: 'The Lisbon Recognition Convention')³⁶⁶², that is why the procedure of recognising foreign educational documents became easier. Due to this reason, foreign students have more opportunities to study in Ukraine.

According to the provisions of The Lisbon Recognition Convention holders of qualifications awarded by one party have appropriate access to the assessment of these qualifications, which is carried out by the relevant authority at their request. In this connection, any discrimination against the applicant is prohibited (Art. 3)³⁶⁶³.

³⁶⁶³ ibid Art. 3.

9.2. What are the practical procedures?

First of all, recognition begins with the application of the person submitted to the competent authority (it can be higher educational institute or the Ministry of Education and Science)³⁶⁶⁴.

Applicant should to submit the following documents:

- certified copy of the Document and its translation into Ukrainian in accordance with the procedure established by law;
- certified copy of the annex to the Document and its translation into Ukrainian and other necessary documents in accordance with the procedure established by law.
- All of these documents should be certified in the country of origin (e.g. stamping "Apostille").
- copies of documents on the previous education (if necessary);
- copies of documents certifying the identity of the applicant;
- an application;
- the consent of the owner of the Document for the processing of his personal data in accordance with the Law of Ukraine 'On Protection of Personal Data'.

Moreover, this procedure became easier now and the applicant has the right to file non-certified documents, as well as to file the documents in electronic form in digital format. It gives more opportunities to foreign students.

The procedure of recognising the Document for the purpose of continuing education is carried out by the competent authority – higher educational institution³⁶⁶⁵.

This procedure includes such stages as:

- authentication of the Document and its annex;
- confirmation of the status of the educational institution and the Program;
- qualifications assessment or assessment of period of educating specified in the Document, equivalence to educational degrees in Ukraine, academic and professional rights.

Authentication of the document may be done in one of the following ways:

- check the presence of an "Apostille" stamp if it confirms the authenticity of the document in the country of origin, and verifies the details of the Apostille in the relevant register;
- verification in the educational documents register, if such register is introduced by the country of origin of the document or educational institution that issued it;
- sending a request for additional information about the authenticity of the documents to relevant official bodies and educational institutions of other states.

It is necessary to check the statues of the educational institution and the Programme. Checking is held in (1) national official sources like registries of accreditation bodies, ministries of education, associations of education quality assurance agencies, official national publications; (2) international official sources; (3) sending a request to the relevant competent authorities.

Also, higher educational institutions provides comparative analysis which should take into account the degree attributed to the Document and its place in the national education system; the content and scope of the Program (expected results of studying in an academic programme, the number of credits or academic hours); the quality of the Programme or the educational institution that provided the qualification; the profile of the Programme or the educational institution that provided the qualification; academic and professional rights that are provided by the Document.

In the most cases, the Document becomes valid on the territory of Ukraine. Many foreign students have already gone through this procedure and study in Ukrainian higher education institutions.

10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

Answering this question, it should be noted that all Ukrainian citizens have certain political rights. The list of these rights is provided by Constitution of Ukraine:

- citizens have the right to take part in the management of public affairs, national and local referendums, the right to elect and be elected to representative bodies of state power and local self-government (art. 38)³⁶⁶⁶;
- citizens have the right to gather peacefully, without weapons and to hold meetings, rallies, campaigns and demonstrations, about which bodies of executive power or local self-government are notified (art. 39)³⁶⁶⁷;
- citizens have the right to freedom of association in political parties and public organizations for the exercise and protection of their rights and freedoms, and for the satisfaction of political, economic, social, cultural and other interests. Citizens have the right to participate in trade unions in order to protect their labour and socio-economic rights and interests (art. 36)³⁶⁶⁸;

Checking each right, the structure may be divided into different elements which closely related to each other.

The main of all is the right to take part in the management of public affairs. Constituent elements of this Constitutional right are: a) the right to take part in the management of public affairs; b) the right to take part in the national and local referendums; c) the right to elect and be elected to representative bodies of state power and local self-government.

³⁶⁶⁶ ibid Art. 38

³⁶⁶⁷ ibid Art. 39

³⁶⁶⁸ ibid Art. 36

The legislation establishes that only citizens of Ukraine, who have reached the age of 18 and who are not recognized as incapacitated by the court, can fulfil mentioned rights.

Describing the right to hold meetings, rallies, campaigns and demonstrations, it is worth paying attention to the provisions of Article 39 of the Constitution of Ukraine. Paragraph 1 states that citizens have the right to assemble peacefully without weapons and to hold meetings, rallies, campaigns and demonstrations, about which advance bodies of executive power or local self-government are informed about in advance. Although this provision does not clearly talk about foreigners and stateless persons they allow taking part in such events.

And the last Constitutional right is taking part in political parties and public organizations. The main provisions follow:

- citizens of Ukraine have the right to freedom of association in political parties and public organizations for the realization and protection of their rights and freedoms and the satisfaction of political, economic, social, cultural and other interests;
 - political parties in Ukraine contribute to the formation and expression of political will of citizens, participate in elections;
- only citizens of Ukraine can be members of political parties;
- citizens have the right to participate in trade unions in order to protect their labour and socio-economic rights and interests.

Such situation is fully justified. It depends on the fact that migrants are citizens of another country and do not have a direct political and legal relationship with our state, therefore, they cannot interfere in the activities of this sphere of public life. These provisions regard stateless persons as well as.

As a result, we can see that migrants have no right to participate in political life in our country as in the country of their origin.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country?

The acquisition of Ukrainian citizenship is mainly regulated by two normative acts:

- The Law of Ukraine n. 2235-III 'On Ukrainian Citizenship' (2001);
- Decree of the President of Ukraine n. 215 'Procedure for the processing of applications for citizenship and implementation of decision taken' (2001).

To be eligible for the citizenship of Ukraine a migrant must satisfy six requirements listed in Article 9 of the Law 'On Ukrainian Citizenship':³⁶⁶⁹

³⁶⁶⁹ Law n. 2235-III (On Ukrainian Citizenship) 2001 [Про громадянство України], Art 9.

№	Requirements	Exceptions
1	Recognition and observance of the Ukrainian Constitution and the laws of Ukraine
2	Filing of a declaration of absence of foreign citizenship (for stateless persons) or an obligation to renunciate foreign citizenship (for foreigners). Foreigners have to fulfil this obligation within two years from the date of Ukrainian citizenship registration	citizens of countries whose legislation envisages automatic termination of citizenship once a foreign citizenship is acquired, or when international treaties with Ukraine stipulate such simultaneous termination; foreigners granted refugee status or asylum in Ukraine shall file a declaration of renunciation of foreign citizenship.
3	Continuous lawful residence in the territory of Ukraine for the past 5 years	foreigners or stateless persons married to Ukrainian citizens for over 2 years; foreigners or stateless persons, who were married to a citizen of Ukraine over two years in case of marriage termination due to the death of the spouse; persons granted refugee status or asylum in Ukraine – 3 years of residence from the date of granting the status; persons who entered Ukraine as stateless persons – 3 years from the date of entry to Ukraine; foreigners or stateless persons who are undergoing contractual military service in the armed forces of Ukraine – 3 years from the date a contract entered into force.
4	Receipt of a permit for immigration	persons granted refugee status or asylum in Ukraine; foreigners or stateless persons undergoing contractual military service in the armed forces of Ukraine; foreigners and stateless persons if they have arrived in Ukraine for permanent residence before the effective date of the Law of Ukraine 'On Immigration' and are in possession of former Soviet passports in 1974 format with entries to the effect that they have a permanent or temporary registration in the territory of Ukraine or were issued a permanent residence permit certificate; persons with outstanding merits before Ukraine; foreigners or stateless persons undergoing military service in the armed forces of Ukraine and granted state award; persons whose admission to the citizenship of Ukraine is of a national interest to Ukraine.

5	Command of the official language or understanding it to a degree sufficient for adequate communication	physically handicapped individuals (blind, deaf, mute); persons with outstanding merits before Ukraine; foreigners or stateless persons undergoing military service in the armed forces of Ukraine and granted state award; persons whose admission to the citizenship of Ukraine is of a national interest to Ukraine.
6	Presence of legitimate sources of subsistence	persons granted refugee status or asylum in Ukraine; persons with outstanding merits before Ukraine; foreigners or stateless persons undergoing military service in the armed forces of Ukraine and granted state award; persons whose admission to the citizenship of Ukraine is of a national interest to Ukraine.

Additionally, pursuant to Article 9 of the Law 'On Ukrainian Citizenship' a person shall not be admitted to the citizenship of Ukraine, if this person:

- has committed a crime against humanity or an act of genocide;
- is sentenced to confinement in Ukraine for commitment of serious or grave crime (until serving the term or when acquitted) taking into account the level of threat to national security of the state;
- has perpetrated acts outside Ukraine qualified as serious or grave criminal offences under Ukraine's legislation.

Provided that a person satisfies eligibility conditions, he (she) should submit an application with necessary supporting documents to the territorial department of the State Migration Service at the place of his (her) residence.

The list of documents is prescribed the 'Procedure for the processing of applications for citizenship and implementation of decision taken' and depends on particular circumstances of each person.³⁶⁷⁰ The most common set of documents include:

- three photos (sized 35 x 45 mm);
- declaration of absence of foreign citizenship (for stateless persons) or an obligation to renunciate foreign citizenship (for foreigners);
- document confirming continuous lawful residence in the territory of Ukraine for the past 5 years;
- copy of document certifying the receipt of a permit for immigration;
- document confirming the knowledge of Ukrainian language issued in Ukraine by the head of educational institution, local government or executive body of local council;
- document confirming the presence of legitimate sources of subsistence during six months preceding the application. In alternative, a person can submit a document confirming the availability of financial savings on a bank account, which has to be not less than the amount of 12-times subsistence minimum for one person.³⁶⁷¹

The competent authorities are obliged to take a final decision within a year from the date of application.³⁶⁷²

11.2. Is there a possibility of double nationality?

Article 4 of the Ukrainian Constitution unequivocally stipulates that there shall be a single form of citizenship in Ukraine.³⁶⁷³ However, the Law 'On Ukrainian Citizenship' defines this principle as follows:

Single citizenship – is the citizenship of Ukraine that excludes a possibility of citizenship of any territorial units of Ukraine. If a citizen of Ukraine has acquired the citizenship of another state or more than one other state, such person shall be treated only as a citizen of Ukraine in legal relations with Ukraine. If a foreigner has acquired the citizenship of Ukraine, he (she) shall be treated only as a citizen of Ukraine in legal relations with Ukraine.³⁶⁷⁴

Thus, the interpretation of single citizenship principle by Ukrainian legislation creates a possibility of double nationality.

On the other hand, Article 19 of the Law 'On Ukrainian Citizenship' provides for the loss of Ukrainian citizenship if a citizen of Ukraine, after coming of legal age, voluntarily acquires foreign citizenship. The Law further explains that voluntary acquisition of citizenship shall be understood as all cases when a citizen of Ukraine submits an application for the citizenship of another state in accordance with procedure, established by the national legislation of the relevant ³⁶⁷¹ As of July 2017, the required amount equals UAH 20,208 (1,684*12).

³⁶⁷² Decree of the President of Ukraine n. 215 (Procedure for the Processing of Applications for Citizenship and Implementation of Decision Taken) 2001 [Порядок провадження за заявами та поданнями з питань громадянства України та виконання прийнятих рішень], Art. 112.

state.³⁶⁷⁵ This excludes, for example, instances of children simultaneously becoming citizens of Ukraine and of another country at birth or automatic acquirement of foreign citizenship after marrying a foreigner. Therefore, the double nationality of Ukrainian citizen is in conformity with the legislation of Ukraine, unless the nationality of another state was acquired voluntarily.

Moreover, the laws of Ukraine do not contain sanctions for those who are in possession of several citizenships. Even when Ukrainian citizen acquires another nationality, the loss of Ukrainian one is not automatic. It is only effective after the President of Ukraine has issued a decree.³⁶⁷⁶ Since there is no procedure established by law to determine persons with another citizenship, the instances of the loss of Ukrainian citizenship on the ground of double nationality are virtually non-existent. The only known case is the loss of citizenship³⁶⁷⁷ by Andrii Artemenko³⁶⁷⁸ and Olexandr Borovik.³⁶⁷⁹ There are strong allegations that this decision was politically-motivated.³⁶⁸⁰

In conclusion, despite the unconditional constitutional principle of single citizenship, its interpretation in Ukrainian legislation deviates from the wording of Constitution and allows the possibility of double nationality.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

One of the EU's requirements within the framework of Visa Liberalisation Action Plan was the introduction of integration policy for migrants.³⁶⁸¹ For these purposes, Ukrainian authorities prepared the 'Action Plan on Integration of Migrants in Ukraine and the Reintegration of Ukrainian Migrants'.³⁶⁸²

The conflict in eastern Ukraine, which urged around 2.8 million people to flee the affected areas,³⁶⁸³ created a wave of internal migration. Since 2014, the EU has given over EUR 399 million in humanitarian and early recovery aid to help persons affected by the conflict.³⁶⁸⁴ Apart from that, the EU supports initiatives to facilitate the integration of internally displaced persons (IDPs) into local communities. As a part of its programme 'Support to Ukraine's Regional Development Policy' (2013-2016) the EU provided financial support to local authorities in the form of grants between EUR 200 000 and EUR 2 million (the total allocation was EUR 17 million).³⁶⁸⁵ As a result, 18 projects were funded in 14 regions of Ukraine; within these initiatives, IDPs were provided with work and education, medical and psychological support.³⁶⁸⁶

Conclusions

The original motivation for this research was a desire to show how migration is regulated by national legislation of Ukraine and to highlight the main features of moving to Ukraine.

In conclusion of this research, it can be mentioned that Ukrainian legislation should be improved to respond to the international legal acts, which exist now. Although national legislation provides opportunities and quite easy process for foreigners and stateless persons to stay in the territory of Ukraine, it still contains difficulties in the implementation of this process.

One of the main difficulties is that the information of migration needs to be more accessible for non-Ukrainian people. It means the legal acts should be officially translated into other common languages and be updated with last amendments.

The second main difficulty is related to the terms. In practice, the migration processes regarding foreigners and stateless persons take much more time processing necessary documents. It causes that the number of foreigners do not undergo through all of these and illegally stay in Ukraine.

It should be noted that court practice is poor to deal with foreigners and stateless persons. Courts need to pay more attention to this and implement present international practice to raise their knowledge in this area.

Finally, Ukrainian government and legislation bodies need to reconsider national policy towards migrants and make it easier to exercise.

Introduction

Migration law in the United Kingdom ('UK') can be perceived through various lenses. From a global perspective, the UK is a responsible international law actor, having ratified key international treaties such as the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1950 European Convention on Human Rights. Due to its dualist legal system, however, such agreements are not effective in domestic law unless and until approved by Parliament. From the perspective of the European Union ('EU'), the UK is a Member State subject to the EU doctrine of direct effect, with a duty to implement EU instruments such as the Procedures Directive 2005/85/EC on minimum standards for granting and withdrawing refugee status. Nevertheless, in view of Brexit, the status of EU law in the UK is now uncertain. Significantly, from an individual perspective, migrants may find that their rights vary according to their status as either an EU/EEA national, a Commonwealth citizen, or a third country national; although domestic legislation such as the Equality Act 2010 and the Human Rights Act 1998 permeate these varying regimes.

What is clear is that this area of law is rapidly changing, which is perhaps a reflection of ongoing domestic issues. The drive for development can be seen as a response to the contention surrounding certain policies, such as access to public healthcare, which is contingent on immigration status, and the 'deport first appeal later' policy, regulated by Section 94B of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. That said, as will be seen, the UK has also been commended for pioneering projects such as the Syrian Vulnerable Persons Resettlement Programme, launched in 2014 as a response to the Syrian Refugee Crisis, and the European Qualifications Passport for Refugees, launched as a pilot scheme in 2017 in collaboration with Norway. In this context, a considered appreciation of the abovementioned perspectives facilitates a greater understanding of the multiplicity of issues faced in the UK, and how its law has been and may yet be shaped as a result thereof.

1.1. Regulation of Asylum in the UK

As a common-law jurisdiction, the UK regulates immigration through a mixture of conventions, statutes, rules, guidance and case law. The UK comprises of four countries— England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Following devolution, the latter three have been granted legislative rights in a number of areas. Immigration control, however, remains a 'reserved matter' and as such is the responsibility of the UK Parliament in Westminster.³⁶⁸⁷

The UK is signatory to the 1951 United Nations' Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees ('Geneva Convention') and its 1967 Protocol, and has ratified both. UK national laws are also, and remain, subject to the European Convention on Human Rights ('ECHR'). Leaving the EU will not, therefore, relieve the UK from its obligations under international law and regional human rights law, although the applicability of the latter largely depends on any potential withdrawal from the ECHR.³⁶⁸⁸ Furthermore, the fear remains that the experience of applying for asylum in Britain may significantly deteriorate following Brexit.³⁶⁸⁹

The statutory regime governing the asylum determination system in the UK is predominantly contained in the UK Immigration Rules.³⁶⁹⁰ The Rules are divided into different sections with Part 11 governing the right to asylum. Due to the changing nature of asylum politics and policies, the Rules are updated on regular basis and the latest substantial amendments were made in December 2016.

1.1.1. Bodies Responsible for Asylum

The Secretary of State for the Home Department ('SSHHD'), along with her ministerial department, the Home Office, is responsible for matters such as asylum, nationality and border control laws, amongst many others including policing, crime and counter-terrorism. Of the various departments within the Home Office, UK Visas and Immigration ('UKVI') is responsible for processing asylum applications and making decisions on behalf of the SSHHD. When deciding an outcome of the asylum application, the UKVI caseworkers must follow the Asylum Policy Instructions issued by the SSHHD.³⁶⁹¹

1.1.2. Eligibility for Asylum

Part 11 of the Immigration Rules, in paragraph 334, sets out the requirements in order to be considered for asylum. First, and foremost, one must be claiming asylum as a refugee.³⁶⁹² A refugee is any person who 'owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it.³⁶⁹³ Prosecution on the basis of sexual orientation and/or gender identity has been recognised as part of the ground of ‘membership of a particular social group’.³⁶⁹⁴

Second, a person claiming asylum in the UK must do so either at port of entry (such as an airport) or ‘in-country’ (at an asylum screening unit³⁶⁹⁵).³⁶⁹⁶ The UK does not, as a rule, consider an asylum application made from abroad. This was clarified in 2011: ‘the UK’s international obligations under the [1951 Geneva] Convention do not extend to the consideration of asylum applications lodged abroad and there is no provision in our Immigration Rules for someone abroad to be given permission to travel to the UK to seek asylum. [...] No applications will be considered by a UK visa-issuing post or by the UK Border Agency pending a review of the policy and guidance.’³⁶⁹⁷

Third, the recent changes to the Immigration Rules taking effect in November 2015 introduced a presumption that asylum claims by EU nationals are inadmissible and will not be considered unless exceptional circumstances are shown.³⁶⁹⁸

Finally, in addition to the above, the SSHD will grant asylum if she is satisfied that the asylum seeker is—

- There are no reasonable grounds for regarding him as a danger to the security of the United Kingdom;
- Having been convicted by a final judgment of a particularly serious crime, he does not constitute danger to the community of the United Kingdom; and
- Refusing his application would result in him being required to go in breach of the 1951 Geneva Convention, to a country in which his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership of a particular social group.³⁶⁹⁹

Section 55 of the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009 requires the Home Office to carry out its immigration and asylum functions in a way that takes into account the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in the UK.³⁷⁰⁰ In addition, case law makes it clear that children’s welfare must be a primary consideration.³⁷⁰¹ Children over the age of 12 are a subject to an interview (with a responsible adult present) and can only be removed if adequate care is in place in their country of return. If no such arrangement is possible they are given leave to remain until they are 17 and a half years old. Persons under the age of 18 are placed in the care of a local authority.³⁷⁰²

1.2. Procedure for Granting Asylum or Humanitarian Protection

Regardless of whether a person claims asylum at a designated place in country or at a port of entry, he/she will be subject to a screening interview where his/her fingerprints will be taken. Following a screening interview, a decision is taken whether to detain the applicant or admit them on temporary admission. The majority of asylum applicants who are not detained at that point are placed into an initial accommodation centre before longer-term living arrangements are made, and being assigned an appointment for their asylum interview. Following this initial interview, the case will be referred to the UKVI where every claim is considered 'on an individual, objective and impartial basis'.³⁷⁰³

If the application is either clearly unfounded, or the applicant passed through a safe third country en route, the application will be denied and the applicant will either face removal or be subject to humanitarian protection. A safe country is one in which the life or freedom of the asylum applicant would not be threatened (within the meaning of Article 33(1)(A) of the 1951 Geneva Convention which prohibits refoulement, prohibits states from returning individuals to countries in which they are at risk of certain forms of harm) and the government of which would not send the applicant elsewhere in the manner contrary to the principles of the Convention.³⁷⁰⁴

The central, binding EU instrument for the implementation of the 'safe country' concept is the 2003 Convention determining the State responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the Member State by a third-country national, also known as the Dublin Convention. The Dublin Convention established that the responsibility for hearing and accommodating the needs of an asylum seeker lies with the first Member State with which the asylum applicant established contact.³⁷⁰⁵ In 2003, the Dublin Convention was replaced by the Dublin II Regulation,³⁷⁰⁶ replaced a second time in 2013 by the Dublin III Regulation³⁷⁰⁷ which has been in force since January 1 2014. The EU has recognised that countries such as Italy and Greece cannot cope with the number of asylum seekers reaching their coasts, not to mention the number of them being returned and as such the EU is working on a reform of the Dublin Convention.³⁷⁰⁸ As an island State on the periphery of the EU, the UK is a net beneficiary of the Dublin III Regulation and has so far expressed an interest in continuing to participate in it.

Schedule 3 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants etc.) Act 2004 gives the domestic framework for making third country decisions. All constituent countries of the European Economic Area ('EEA') and Switzerland are deemed as safe based on three factors—

- The applicant will not face persecution contrary to the 1951 Geneva Convention in that country;
- The country will not send the applicant to another country where there is risk of such persecution; and
- The country will not send the applicant to another country if the removal would give rise to the risk of a human rights violation.

The SSHD is also obliged to certify that a human rights appeal against removal to the 'safe country' will be unfounded. In other words, if the SSHD believes that the applicant has no claim under Article 8 ECHR (right to family and/or private life) or Article 3 ECHR (degrading treatment), for example, she will make a decision to remove such an individual. The only judicial forum in which the certificate may be challenged is the judicial review.³⁷¹⁰

Following a screening interview an asylum applicant will be invited to an asylum interview (if he/she is not deemed to have passed a 'safe country'). The asylum interview is the opportunity for the applicant to present the reasons for why he/she should be granted refugee protection. In order to ascertain the nature of the claim, a case worker will look at all the material factors surrounding the claim: the facts relating to the country of origin,³⁷¹¹ personal circumstances and background of the applicants, any documents provided by them, their behaviour since leaving the country of origin and their eligibility to receive asylum in a different country.³⁷¹²

The grant of asylum or of humanitarian protection gives the individual a permission to stay in the UK for five years; this is known as 'leave to remain'. After the five years, a refugee is eligible to apply to settle in the UK.³⁷¹³ Refugee status will not be granted to those ineligible or those whose application has not been adequately substantiated. In addition, it may not be granted if the applicant failed to disclose all the material facts of his/her case; failed to report to an immigration officer for an interview; or left the UK without previous authorisation.³⁷¹⁴

1.2.1. Humanitarian Protection

Those who do not meet the above criteria may still be entitled to humanitarian protection.³⁷¹⁵ Humanitarian protection is offered to those individuals who may be at risk of serious harm if

The EU's Procedures Directive 2005/85/EC sets minimum standards for Member States for granting and withdrawing refugee status. It has been transposed into UK law through the Asylum (Procedures) Regulations 2007 and Paragraph 327 of the Immigration Rules. 1.2.2. Syrian Vulnerable Persons Resettlement Programme ('VPRP')

The VPRP was first established in early 2014 in order to provide a route for selected Syrians to come to the UK. It was considerably extended following a pledge made by the then-Prime Minister, David Cameron, to accept 20,000 Syrian refugees by 2020.³⁷¹⁶ The eligibility criteria were extended to include all those recognised as vulnerable such as the elderly, the disabled and victims of sexual violence and torture. This scheme resettles refugees who have fled from the conflict to the countries bordering Syria. Those selected for the VPRP are granted humanitarian protection status for a period of five years, with permission to work and access to public funds. As of July 1 2017, all those admitted to the UK under the VPRP will be granted refugee status. Of course, it is also possible for Syrians to claim asylum upon or after arrival to the UK outside the VPRP.

1.2.3. Refusal of Asylum and the Appeal Process³⁷¹⁷

In recent years, the right to an in-country appeal following the refusal of a claim has been significantly curtailed by measures contained in the Immigration Acts 2014 and 2016. It is no longer possible, in many circumstances regarding human right claims, to appeal the Home Office decision while in the UK. Rather than appeal the decision, an applicant who does not want to leave will now have to seek an administrative review or a judicial review, both of which can be very expensive.³⁷¹⁸

One can nevertheless appeal from within the UK if he/she has the legal right to do so. What follows is an appeal application to the First-tier Tribunal (Immigration and Asylum Chamber), where a tribunal judge listens to both the claimant and the Home Office presenting officer before making a decision. If the appeal fails one may still seek permission to appeal to the Upper

1.2.4. Exclusion from the Refugee Protection

'Refugee' status is not available where a person is currently in receipt of protection of assistance from organs or agencies of the United Nations ('UN') other than the UN High Commissioner for Refugees ('UNHCR'), or is recognised by national authorities as having the rights and obligations which are attached to the possession of the nationality.³⁷²⁰ The SSHD also has powers to exclude a person from accessing refugee protection in certain circumstances, namely where the person has committed crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity.³⁷²¹ Similarly, Article 12 of the European Council Directive 2004/83/EC sets out the circumstances in which Member States will exclude a third country national from being a refugee. The Directive has been transposed into UK law through The Refugee or Person in Need of International Protection (Qualification) Regulations 2006 and the Immigration Rules.

1.2.5. Revocation of Asylum Status

Refugee status may be revoked for one or more of the reasons set out in the Immigration Rules. If more than one of the following situations arise, then revocation on all grounds must be considered and addressed as part of the decision—

- i) Geneva Convention ceases to apply (Paragraph 339A(i)-(vi));
- ii) Exclusion from the Geneva Convention (Paragraph 339AA);
- iii) Misrepresentation of facts decisive to the grant of refugee status (Paragraph 339AB); or
- iv) Danger to the UK (Paragraph 339AC(i)-(ii)).

The SSHD has a duty to notify a person in writing that his/her status is being reconsidered and the reasons for it. The individual will then have an opportunity to submit a written statement highlighting why his/her refugee status should not be revoked.³⁷²²

1.2.6. Removal from and Re-entry to the UK

Individuals whose claims have been refused and who are in the UK illegally may be subject to a removal. In instances concerning criminal behaviour or when an individual's removal is conducive to the public good a deportation order will be made.³⁷²³ This law is governed by the Immigration Act 1971 as amended in 2016. The Border Force is responsible for removing the individuals who do not have legal status in the UK. An individual may subject themselves to a voluntary removal or they may be detained and removed forcibly to the country of origin or a country of their citizenship.

The SSHD can impose re-entry bans to those who have previously breached immigration law and have been consequently removed or deported from the UK. Bans can last one, two, five or ten years. The law governing entry bans is contained in paragraphs A320 and 320(7B) of Part 13 of the Immigration Rules. There is no ban imposed on those who have overstayed for 30 days or less but have left the UK voluntarily at no expense to the Home Office. A one year ban is imposed on those who have entered illegally, overstayed, breached the condition(s) attached to their leave or used deception in the UK but have left the UK voluntarily at no expense to the Home Office. If they left at the expense of the Home Office (within 6 months of the removal notice) then a two-year ban will be imposed. A five-year ban will be inflicted on those who have taken more than six months to leave voluntarily and those who have been foreremoved from the UK as a condition of a caution. A ten-year ban will be enforced if one was removed involuntarily. In deportation cases, re-entry to the UK will be refused if a person was convicted of an offence and sentenced to more than four years' imprisonment. If the sentence was less than four years, but more than 12 months, then a five-year ban is imposed. For sentences of less than 12 months, re-entry will be refused unless more than five years have passed since the end of the sentence.

2. How does your national law regulate immigration from EU member states and non-EU states?

2.1. Immigration

The foundation of immigration law in the UK is the Immigration Act 1971 which governs the rights to enter and remain in the country, the appeals process, and immigration-related criminal proceedings. Several statutory instruments complement to this statute, such as the British Nationality Act 1981, the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 and the Immigration Act 2016. These statutes, together with a series of procedural rules and guidance issued by the Home Office, regulate immigration in the UK.

2.1.1. EU/EEA Nationals

The Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2016 ('Immigration Regulations') are a separate set of rules encompassed within the Immigration Act 2016, which, in compliance with the Citizens' Rights Directive 2004/38/EC, recognises the right of EU citizens and nationals from Liechtenstein, Iceland, Norway and Switzerland to move and reside freely within the UK. These citizens do not need a document to confirm their residence status in the UK as they are entitled to the right of admission (Section 11), the right of residence (Sections 14-16), a registration certificate (Sections 17-22), and access to family permits (Section 12). According to this Act, EU/EEA nationals have the right to reside in the UK for as long as the person remains as 'qualified person', namely a 'person who is an EEA national and in the United Kingdom as a job seeker, worker, self-employed person, self-sufficient person or student'.³⁷²⁴

For any EU/EEA national interested in acquiring British nationality, the applicant must be in possession of a permanent residence certificate or card.³⁷²⁵ For this purpose, he/she is required to have permanent residence, which can be obtained if the person concerned 'has resided in the United Kingdom in accordance with domestic Regulations for a continuous period of five years'.³⁷²⁶

2.1.2. Non-EU Nationals

2.1.2.1 Commonwealth Nationals

The right of abode is a statutory right that exempts from immigration controls any Commonwealth nationals that meet the conditions established in the Immigration Act 1971. According to Section 2(1)(b), the right applies to those who 'immediately before the commencement of the British Nationality Act 1981 was a Commonwealth citizen [...] and has not ceased to be a Commonwealth citizen in the meanwhile'. As an exception to this rule, 'if a married woman lost her Commonwealth citizen status on independence, she may still have a claim to the right of abode under section 2(2) of the Act if, as a Commonwealth citizen, she has at any time been married to a person who, at the time of the marriage, had the right of abode'.³⁷²⁷ The Immigration Act 1971 was amended by the British Nationality Act 1981 which included a list of the Commonwealth countries.³⁷²⁸ Therefore, following the re-admission of Pakistan and South Africa into the Commonwealth in 1989 and 1994 respectively, their citizens did not acquire the right of abode.³⁷²⁹ By contrast, Zimbabwe and The Gambia have withdrawn politically from the Commonwealth, but these two countries are included in the BNA Commonwealth countries list and their nationals can continue to enjoy the right of abode in the UK as Commonwealth citizens.³⁷³⁰

2.1.2.2. Other Non-EU/EEA Nationals

Nationals from outside the EU/EEA and Commonwealth countries are subject to immigration controls. An example of these controls is the entry clearance procedure used to check whether a person qualifies under the Immigration Rules for entry into the UK before his/her arrival.³⁷³¹

Although this procedure is not mandatory³⁷³² in all cases, the immigration officer at the port of entry has the final authority to give or deny the entrance of someone into UK territory.³⁷³³

As stated in the Immigration Rules, immigrants who do not have the right of abode, and who are not entitled to enter or remain in the UK as stated in the provisions of the EEA Regulations, require 'leave to enter' the UK.³⁷³⁴ According to Sections 3 and 4 of the Immigration Act 1971, some immigrants may receive leave to enter for a limited period under certain specific conditions, such as a restriction of work/occupation or studies in the UK or a requirement to maintain and accommodate him/herself, and any dependants, without recourse to public funds.

For those wishing to enter the UK for work, study or investment-related reasons, the points-based five tier visa classification is the common route to access. Under this scheme, visas are divided into five tiers depending on the reasons underlying the applicant's claim—

- Tier 1 visas are for 'high-value migrants', namely entrepreneurs, investors, and migrants who fall within the scope of the 'exceptional talent' visa;
- Tier 2 visas are for those who have been offered a skilled job in the UK;
- Tier 3 visas are for low-skilled workers during periods of labour shortage (currently suspended);
- Tier 4 visas are for students over the age of 16; and
- Tier 5 visas are for temporary workers, a category which is divided into six sub-tiers for creative and sports workers, charity workers, religious workers, and workers within the youth mobility scheme open to young people from other countries that have reciprocal arrangements with the UK.

Visas will be granted to those that fulfil the requirements set out by the Home Office. Even though visas are granted for a finite period, visa holders may be able to apply for 'Further Leave to Remain' to extend their stay.³⁷³⁵ It is possible for these migrants to obtain British nationality, the most common way being through naturalisation.³⁷³⁶ Leave to enter or remain will be rejected for those who provide false documents or do not provide the required documents; those who are subject to a deportation order; and those who have been convicted of an offence or have previously breached immigration laws. Rejection may also be justified on the grounds that there is a material change in the circumstances of the request or the SSHD considers deportation to be conducive to the public good.³⁷³⁷

2.2. Enforced Departure

According to the UK Immigration Rules, there are three categories of enforced departure: deportation, administrative removal, and voluntary departure.

2.2.1. EU/EEA Nationals

EU/EEA nationals may be deprived of their right of residence and subject to deportation if the SSHD considers the measure justified on the grounds of public policy, public security, or public health.³⁷³⁸ EU/EEA nationals and any family members may be detained whilst a decision to deport is pending criminal casework.³⁷³⁹ Once a deportation order enters into force, and notification has been given to the person(s), free movement rights are restricted and exit is required.³⁷⁴⁰ EU/EEA nationals have one month to leave voluntarily, or the removal will be enforced by the Home Office. Individuals subject to a deportation order will not be allowed to enter the territory of the UK until the relevant order has been revoked.³⁷⁴¹ A deportation order is subject to appeal under the terms of the Immigration Regulations.³⁷⁴²

EU/EEA citizens may also be subject to administrative removal where deportation is not a suitable measure.³⁷⁴³ Administrative removal applies when a person has no right to reside because he/she failed to exercise Treaty rights as required, ceased to be a member of a family of EU/EEA nationals, or gained his/her rights on the basis of a marriage of convenience. It also arises in the case of a misuse of a right to reside, engaging in conduct contrary to a qualified person, sleeping rough, or attempting to enter the UK within 12 months of previously being removed. It is not possible to detain EU/EEA nationals and any family members whilst a decision to remove in this manner is pending.³⁷⁴⁴

Voluntary departure is also available before removal, whereby the person concerned has to contact the Voluntary Returns Service and provide the required personal information and travel details.³⁷⁴⁵ No assisted voluntary return is available for EU/EEA nationals or Swiss nationals unless the person has a letter from UKVI confirming that he/she is a victim of trafficking.³⁷⁴⁶

2.2.2. Non-EU/EEA Nationals

Non-EU/EEA nationals will be subject to deportation in several situations—

- The SSHD considers the measure conducive to the public order;
- The person is the spouse/civil partner or child (under the age of 18) of a person subject to a deportation order; or

– A court has recommended the measure for a person over the age of 17 who has been convicted of an offence punishable with imprisonment.³⁷⁴⁷

The deportation order prohibits the person concerned from re-entering the UK for as long as it is in force, invalidating any leave to enter or remain in the country. The person concerned will receive a notice informing him/her of the deportation decision, and the SSHD may authorise detention or another restriction (residence, employment or police report) pending the execution of the order. The person will be returned to the country of which he/she is a national, or to the country that has most recently provided him/her with a travel document, unless there is evidence that another country is willing to receive him/her. Deportation orders will not be imposed where the measure would be contrary to the UK's obligations under the Geneva Convention and the ECHR, for immigrants that qualify for 'restricted leave',³⁷⁴⁸ or where there are exceptional circumstances such that the public interest in deportation is outweighed.

Administrative removal may be invoked against immigrants who require, but are not in possession of, leave to enter or remain; this includes illegal entrants,³⁷⁴⁹ those refused leave at a port of entry, and over-stayers. Administrative removal is also enforceable against those who are found to be breaching a restriction or condition of their visa to enter or remain, those who seek or obtain leave by deception, and those who or are family members of a person already being removed.³⁷⁵⁰ Notification of removal is not required. Rather the person concerned must be informed (by 'RED notices'³⁷⁵¹) of his/her liability to be removed, the country to which he/she will be removed, and the consequences of illegal immigration.³⁷⁵² The decision can be appealed only if the SSHD refuses a human-rights claim or refuses to recognise refugee or humanitarian protection or status.³⁷⁵³

Illegal immigrants can opt to leave by applying for voluntary departure or assisted voluntary return. As abovementioned, the Voluntary Returns Service helps those willing to voluntary leave the UK once they provide the required personal information and travel details. For those who are eligible for financial help and wish to apply for assisted return, there is an assisted return application form which may be supplemented with additional information to support the application at the request of the Home Office.³⁷⁵⁴ The person concerned must leave the country within three months of the approval date of the application for voluntary assisted return, and he/she must sign a 'declaration of withdrawal' for his/her application for asylum in the UK.

Commonwealth citizens may be deprived of this right 'if the Secretary of State considers it would be conducive to the public good for the person to be excluded or removed from the United

3. Is there a ministry, government agency or other public authority specifically dealing with migrants? If so, please provide a description of the framework this authority works under.

The Home Office is an important department of the UK Government responsible for immigration, drugs policy, crime, police and counter-terrorism. As such its five main stated objectives are to prevent terrorism, cut crime, promote growth, control immigration and deliver its services efficiently.³⁷⁵⁷

Prior to 2012, the immigration-related powers were enjoyed by the UK Border Agency, a single executive agency responsible for dealing with immigration and customs detection force at the borders³⁷⁵⁸. However, following an independent review of the work carried out by the Agency, the Border Force was separated and became a directorate of the Home Office.³⁷⁵⁹ Moreover, the structure was changed again drastically in 2013 when the SSHD decided to end the executive agency status of the UK Border Agency and 'reintegrate its functions into the Home Office'.³⁷⁶⁰ As a result of these major changes, all the immigration-related functions are again carried out by the Home Office, which delegates its powers directly to a number of bodies including the Border Force, the Immigration Enforcement and the UK Visas and Immigration.

The Border Force is a law enforcement authority which works at the external frontiers to protect UK borders by preventing unlawful immigrants and unlawful goods, mainly drugs, from entering the UK. A clear example of this can be seen when looking at the work that the Border Force carries out in UK airports. Here, the Border Force has the responsibility both to check passengers' passports but also to monitor the so called 'customs channels' to prevent any prohibited goods from entering the UK.³⁷⁶¹

The Immigration Enforcement monitors migrants within the UK territory to make sure immigration law is complied with. Immigration officers have a number of powers including examining, arresting and detaining unlawful immigrants for the purpose of removal.³⁷⁶² These powers were further extended in 2016³⁷⁶³ and officers now have the authority to search and seize evidence where 'there are reasonable grounds to believe it has been obtained through, or is evidence of, a crime and where it is necessary to prevent it being concealed, damaged or destroyed'.³⁷⁶⁴

UK Visas and Immigration is the public body which deals with migrants in the UK. This body plays a central role in regulating legal migration by administering the nationwide visa service for foreign nationals, dealing with British citizenship applications for migrants who wish to settle, managing the nationwide asylum service, running the appeal system for unsuccessful applications, and deciding which employers are entitled to register as sponsors of migrant workers.

On a local level, since 2004,³⁷⁶⁵ the Home Office has been funding 'Migrant Help', a charity based in England to provide holistic advice and support to people seeking asylum in the UK and to victims of human trafficking. The organisation offers independent and impartial guidance on a wide range of issues including how to claim asylum, financial support, finding legal representation, accessing health care, and accommodation support.³⁷⁶⁶ The Refugee Council is another leading charity which receives funding from the UK Government as well as the EU to act in localised areas. The Council focuses on societal integration by providing refugees with essential resources, namely settled housing, healthcare, access to training and employment, and financial stability.³⁷⁶⁷

4. What are the recent statistics regarding migrants (i.e. asylum-seekers, immigrants, transitmigrants, trends in migratory flows) in your country?

Net immigration, or the difference between the number of people moving into a country and those moving out of that country, was estimated to be +248,000 in 2016 with a total of 588,000 migrants entering the UK.³⁷⁶⁸ The main reasons why migrants enter the UK are work, study, family and asylum.³⁷⁶⁹

Work³⁷⁷⁰ accounted for 47% of the total immigration (275,000 persons), the lowest figure recorded since 2014.³⁷⁷¹ Most of the immigrants entering the UK for work-related reasons had already secured a job (65%, 180,000), while the number of those seeking a job at the time of arriving decreased to 95,000 people in 2016 against 130,000 people in 2015. According to International Passenger Survey (IPS) data, this decrement was due to a decrease in EU citizens' arrivals, with 55,000 EU arrivals in 2016 compared to 77,000 in 2015. On the origin of migrants, 61% were EU citizens (of which 34% arrived while still looking for a job), whilst 25% were non-EU citizens (of which 27% arrived seeking for a job). The remaining 14% were British citizens. In 2016, there were 163,882 visas granted for work related reasons (-1% than in 2015 with 165,900 visas granted). The number of sponsored visas applications for skilled work positions was 56,058 in 2016. The top five sectors, accounting for 87% of the applications, were: Information and Communications (23,358); Professional, Scientific and Technical Activities (6,676); Education (2,834); and Health and Social Work (1,748). The majority of the applications were submitted by citizens from India (30,556), followed by the USA (5,809), Australia (2,434), the Philippines (2,147), and Japan (1,728).

Immigration for study³⁷⁷² is the second most common reason for coming to the UK. Long term immigration saw a significant decrease of 30,000 compared to 2015, over a total of 163,000 immigrants (including EU citizens, non-EU citizens and British nationals). The majority were non-EU citizens (73% of the total).³⁷⁷³ As for the number of immigrants entering the UK for short-term study reasons (6 months, or 11 months for English Courses), there were 295,000 admissions in the year ending June 2016.³⁷⁷⁴ According to the Home Office data, there were 207,200 study-related visas granted in 2016 (including those of dependants), with just five non-

EU countries accounting for most of them.³⁷⁷⁵ The top five countries were China (37%, 76,636), the USA (6,8%, 14,143), India (5,3%, 11,160), Saudi Arabia (4,5%, 9,360), and Hong Kong (4,3%, 9,041).³⁷⁷⁶ The type of study-related visas that can be granted are: short-term visas, issued for a period of 6 months or 11 months for students attending English Courses (87,197); long-term study visas, issued for 12 months or more (141,248); sponsored visas (200,849); and extended visas (42,032).³⁷⁷⁷

The third most common reason why people immigrate to the UK is to accompany or join other members of the family.³⁷⁷⁸ In 2016, a total of 135,144 visas were granted, including family-related visas, EEA family permits, and visas granted to dependants of other visa holders. There were 38,119 family related visas granted in 2016 (and 61,258 grants of extensions), of which 29,090 were granted to partners, 2,661 to minors and 6,368 to other dependants. The top five nationalities obtaining a visa for family related reasons were nationals from Pakistan (6,051), India (3,031), Syria (2,113), the USA (2,067), and Nepal (1,738). Regarding permits granted to EEA relatives, there was an increase of 9% since 2015 with a total of 33,118 permits.

According to official data provided by the Home Office, the UK had the sixth highest number of asylum applications within the EU in 2016, with a total of 39,000 applications.³⁷⁷⁹ Compared to 2015, asylum applications decreased by 7%, with 30,603 people expressing their intent to apply for asylum, of which 3,175 (10% of the total asylum applications) were unaccompanied minors. Most intentions were expressed by nationals from Iran (13.69%, 4,192), Pakistan (9.33%, 2,857), Iraq (8.71%, 2,666), Afghanistan (7.64%, 2,341), Bangladesh (6.33%, 1,939), Albania (4.86%, 1,488), and India (4.86%, 1,488).³⁷⁸⁰ In 2016 there were 24,984 decisions taken at first instance, of which 7,136 applicants were granted refugee status, 189 applicants were granted humanitarian protection, and 16,518 applications were rejected.³⁷⁸¹ At the end of 2016, 24,903 applications were pending a decision; this is 6% less than the 26,409 applications pending at the end of 2015. There was an increase of 143% in the number of applications awaiting an initial decision for more than six months (from 3,626 in 2015 to 8,825 in 2016) while those pending further review decreased by 59% (3,428). As of the end of March 2017, 6,516 people have expressed their intent to apply for asylum in the UK. Most of the intentions were expressed by nationals from Iran (664), Pakistan (663), Iraq (602), Bangladesh (480), and India (389).³⁷⁸²

In addition to asylum seekers who applied in the UK in 2016, 4,369 people were resettled under the VPRP. Resettlement schemes are offered to asylum seekers who have been referred to the

5. How have the decisions by the European Court of Human Rights concerning migrants been implemented at national level?

The Human Rights Act 1998 took the body of substantive rights enshrined in the ECHR and transposed them into English law.³⁷⁸⁴ The UK had been a party to the ECHR previous to this, but the bringing into force of the Act means that ECHR rights are directly enforceable in the UK. It also means that public authorities must ensure that their decisions comply with ECHR rights.³⁷⁸⁵ Courts, when determining a question concerning ECHR Rights, must have account of any relevant jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights ('ECtHR').³⁷⁸⁶ Furthermore, new laws have to be examined to see if they are ECHR compliant.³⁷⁸⁷ Due to the range of obligations contained in the Human Rights Act and the range of ways that human rights can be engaged in migration issues, there are a number of channels for ECtHR jurisprudence to be implemented into UK migration law. The main mechanisms that have been used are legislation, Supreme Court decisions and secondary legislation, such as the Immigration Rules.

Deportation is a key area where UK migration law has been shaped by ECHR rights and ECtHR jurisprudence on the scope of these rights. A persistent problem for the UK Government has been the ability to deport foreign nationals who have committed crimes whilst living in the UK. This was particularly the case after 2006 when the Home Secretary was dismissed following the release of 1,000 foreign national prisoners, without being considered for deportation.³⁷⁸⁸ An individual may raise a claim that deportation would breach one or more of their ECHR rights if deportation were to be approved. The three main rights that an individual may claim will be breached by their deportation are the right to life (Article 2), the prevention of torture (Article 3) and the right to family and private life (Article 8). There are extensive bodies of case law on all three of these rights which have had to be implemented into UK migration law to render it ECHR compliant. For example, the ECtHR has affirmed that Article 3 can be engaged in a deporting State even where the individual alleges that treatment which would reach the threshold of torture or inhuman treatment would occur in the territory of another State.³⁷⁸⁹ The test for engaging Article 3 in deportation decisions, as decided in Soering v UK, is whether substantial grounds for evidencing that the individual will face a real risk of treatment contrary to Article 3 have been advanced.³⁷⁹⁰

Of vital importance to migrants is Article 8 of the ECHR which enshrines the right to family life. As mentioned above, jurisprudence delimitating the scope and extent of obligations flowing from this right has been a source of tension regarding its implementation into UK migration law. In 2010, there was public and political outrage following the case of *SSHD v Respondent*³⁷⁹¹ wherein the designated immigration judge was held not to have erred in considering Article 8 concerns overriding when deciding whether it was in the public interest to deport a Turkish asylum seeker guilty of killing a 12 year-old girl in a hit and run.³⁷⁹² Article 8 provides that everyone has the right to respect for his/her private and family life. This ECHR standard has been developed by jurisprudence of the ECtHR to include two limbs concerning migrants and the notion of family reunification. The first is that, under limited circumstances, families of migrants should be granted entry into a Council of Europe Member State. the second is that Article 8 can be engaged to prevent deportation where a migrant is already in a Council of Europe Member State.³⁷⁹³ Jurisprudence from the ECtHR on this area has defined the test as rendering deportation an infringement of Article 8 if it would cause ‘insurmountable obstacles’ to enjoyment of the right to family life.³⁷⁹⁴

Implementation of these ECtHR standards on deportation into UK migration law has happened through different mechanisms. Section 94B of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, amended by the Immigration Act 2016, contains a power to certify all human rights claims made by individuals from within the UK. This power allows the Secretary of State for the Home Department (SSHD) to certify that a decision requiring an individual to leave the UK, despite the appeals process neither being begun nor exhausted, would neither be a breach of Section 6 of the Human Rights Act, nor result in a real risk of serious irreversible harm where requiring the individual to leave. This power was in direct reaction to concerns over the inability to deport foreign nationals where the Government considers it in the public interest to do so, but would be unable to due to a successful claim under Article 8, for example.³⁷⁹⁵ This mechanism corresponded to the ‘deport first appeal later’ policy of UK migration law. This policy aimed to remove foreign nationals, in particular foreign criminals, before their appeal, believing that would be in the public interest to do so, in order to prevent reoffending by the individual.³⁷⁹⁶ However, as explored below, the legality of this policy has been challenged by the Supreme Court in 2017.

³⁷⁹⁶ Kiaire and Byndloss v SSHD [2017] UKSC 42, 35.

In June 2017, the ‘deport first, appeal later’ policy was challenged before the Supreme Court in Kiaire and Byndloss v SSHD.³⁷⁹⁷ This case looked directly at the legality of two such certifications pursuant to Section 94B of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. The test of ‘serious irreversible harm’ was also analysed and explained in Kiaire. The test is cemented in Section 94(3) and is considered to be directly drawn ‘from practice of the ECtHR’.³⁷⁹⁸ The Supreme Court considered the test parallel to situations where the ECtHR has decided whether or not to indicate interim measures under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court. The case of Mamatkulov v Turkey was referred to, wherein the ECtHR considered whether the individual would face ‘an imminent risk of irreparable damage’ if deported or extradited.³⁷⁹⁹ Under this test, the individual must advance evidence to satisfy the serious irreversible harm test. The Court in Kiaire considered the quality of relationship with any child, partner or other family member in the UK, and the extent to which any relationship with family members might be reasonably sustained even after deportation, whether by joining them abroad or otherwise.³⁸⁰⁰ These examples echo Article 8 and the test established by the ECtHR concerning deportation that there must be ‘insurmountable obstacles’ to the enjoyment of family life.

The majority of the Supreme Court in Kiaire allowed the appeal of the applicants, as it considered that the policy of ‘deport first, appeal later’ did not meet the requirements of Article 8, together with the UK’s obligation under Article 13 to provide an effective remedy. The Supreme Court took account of the jurisprudence of the ECtHR which has found States in breach of Article 8 in conjunction with Article 13 where individuals have been deported without the opportunity to challenge the decision.³⁸⁰¹ In light of the above, the Supreme Court decision in Kiaire is a good example of how the jurisprudence of ECtHR can be implemented into UK migration law through various mechanisms. The case serves as an especially good example of how, in order to render migration law ECHR compliant, legislation alone may not be enough and may require the scrutiny of the Courts.

The decision in Kiaire demonstrates that implementation of ECtHR jurisprudence into UK migration law does not start and end with legislation. Due to the variety of obligations contained in the Human Rights Act, parliamentary, judicial and government officials all have the responsibility to ensure that, as migration law evolves, it remains ECHR compliant. The Immigration Act 2016 itself constitutes part of the latest evolution of the UK Government’s migration law policy. Already the Act has been challenged by the Supreme Court for compliance with the Convention and ECtHR standards. The main point of challenge in the case was that an individual, subject to the ‘deport first appeal later’ policy would have their ability to appeal significantly weakened,³⁸⁰² meaning that the ECHR requirement to have an effective appeals mechanism was not met. With this in mind, it is interesting to note the 2016 report from the Council of Europe Commissioner on Human Rights.³⁸⁰³ This report applauded the UK for its approach to the Syrian Refugee Crisis, but also warned against the possibility of the Government's policy conflicting with ECHR standards. In particular, the report urged the Government to overhaul family reunification rules which are 'overly restrictive in nature'.³⁸⁰⁴

6. How have the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and of national human rights bodies concerning the integration of migrants been implemented?

6.1. Implementation in the UK

From the outset, it is important to note the vital distinction between migrants and refugees when considering integration policies; the UNHCR emphasises the fundamental difference between migrants and refugees, namely the involuntary nature of migration for the latter category, as a ground not to conflate the two terms.³⁸⁰⁵ In the UK, a significant proportion of migrants have naturalised, with only 7.4% of foreign-born persons having not yet secured UK nationality.³⁸⁰⁶ As a result, a majority of the recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance ('ECRI') on migrant integration are encompassed in the 'black and ethnic minorities' group.³⁸⁰⁷ In addition, the ECRI has issued a number of general recommendations relating to integration. By comparison, the Equality and Human Rights Commission ('EHRC'), as the UK's core human rights body, has not made any recommendations on the integration of migrants in particular. Rather the EHRC has issued general recommendations on discrimination and diversity that inherently encompass the integration of migrants. The relevant recommendations and implementing policies fall into three main categories: general; black and ethnic minorities; and refugees and asylum seekers.

6.2. General Recommendations

The ECRI has consistently emphasized the important role access to citizenship has in the integration of migrants. It therefore recommends that the process of naturalisation serves to 'assist and not to hinder' the acquisition of British nationality.³⁸⁰⁸ The 'Earned Citizenship' policy was a new system of naturalisation introduced in the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009 in which citizenship would have been acquired through a new three stage process, including a 'probationary citizenship' period and a demonstration that the migrants had 'earned' the right to citizenship.³⁸⁰⁹ The ECRI noted in an earlier report that the Earned Citizenship policy would have the effect of slowing down and increasing the difficulty of acquiring citizenship.³⁸¹⁰ Thus, the decision of the UK Government not to pursue the Earned Citizenship policy facilitates the implementation of this recommendation.³⁸¹¹

Another recommendation consistently raised by the ECRI and the EHRC is the need to increase the protection and preventative measures against discrimination.³⁸¹² Discrimination has been recognized as a hindrance to integration by the Council of Europe's Commissioner for Human Rights. Thus the recommendation to decrease discrimination is an important policy objective in facilitating the integration of migrants.³⁸¹³ This recommendation is being implemented in the UK through a number of country-specific policies. These include—

- The British 2010 Equality Strategy: Building a Fairer Britain, complemented by the 2012 Strategy on 'Creating the Conditions for Integration';
- The Northern Irish Race Equality Strategy;
- The Scottish Race Equality Framework; and
- The Welsh 'Getting on Together' Project.³⁸¹⁴

In Britain, the 2010 Equality Strategy: Building a Fairer Britain (Equality Strategy) is part of the implementation of Equality Act 2010. The Act replaced previous anti-discrimination laws with a single legal framework and is aimed at protecting people from discrimination in the workplace and wider society.³⁸¹⁵ More specifically, the Equality Strategy is based on the principles of equal treatment and equal opportunity through the establishment of a framework focusing on the areas on education, the labour market, public services access, and cultural attitudes.³⁸¹⁶ The 2012 Strategy on 'Creating the Conditions for Integration' outlines the Government's approach in England, although it is recognized that the issues raised may also have a relevance across the UK. It is aimed at ensuring that everyone is able to fully participate and contribute to national and local life. It is complementary to the broader commitments made by the government in the Equality Act 2010 and focuses on five key factors to facilitate integration: tackling extremism and intolerance, common ground (the commonalities and shared values of society), responsibility, participation, and social mobility.³⁸¹⁷ While the strategy maintains that integration is a concern best tackled at the local level, it outlines specific steps taken at the national level in order to contribute to integration. While both the 2010 Equality Strategy and the 2012 Strategy have been highlighted as welcome progress in the integration of migrants, the ECRI notes the failure of both of these programmes to focus specifically on racial inequalities as a factor in the hindrance of integration of some migrant communities.³⁸¹⁸

For Northern Ireland, the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland ('ECNI') has recommended a consolidation of racial equality legislation based on the Equality Act 2010 in order to bridge the gap in protections against racial discrimination currently present between Northern Ireland and Great Britain.³⁸¹⁹ The main mechanism through which these recommendations is being implemented in Northern Ireland is the Racial Equality Strategy 2015-2025, a framework policy aimed at tackling racial inequalities, eradicating racism and discrimination, and promoting good race.³⁸²⁰ The strategy is based on an 'intercultural' society, which is distinguished from a 'multicultural' society in which many cultures live in the same area but have limited contact with one another.³⁸²¹ 'Intercultural' societies allow individuals to be proud of their own identities while also having the ability to relate to and learn from people of different cultural identities.³⁸²² A number of specific actions are outlined in the strategy ranging from shared open community spaces to educational reform.³⁸²³ The gap between protections offered in Northern Ireland and Great Britain is acknowledged in the strategy and a commitment is made to review the current Race Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 in order to reform or introduce new legislation that will eradicate the protection gap.³⁸²⁴

In Scotland, the Race Equality Framework describes the Scottish approach to ensuring equality amongst all communities. It is a long-term approach based on the priorities and experiences in particular of ethnic minorities in addition to the consultation of the public and voluntary sectors and academia to ensure the practicality and effectiveness of the framework.³⁸²⁵ Specifically, through policy and planning, the framework aims to provide a foundation for promoting race equality and building up the capacity of all society's involved sectors.³⁸²⁶ The framework sets out five key goals–

- Establishment of an accountable approach to support and drive forward implementation;
- Improvement of Scotland's public sector in terms of race inequality through more effective practices;

- Building up of the public sector's capacity to tackle race inequality and meet the needs of minority ethnic people;
- Evidence-based analysis and assessment of policy processes; and
- Strengthening of the minority ethnic voluntary sector.³⁸²⁷

In Wales, the 'Getting on Together' Project is a 'bottom up' programme originating from communities to address specific needs in order to promote tolerance, understanding, and respect of all.³⁸²⁸ It facilitates social cohesion through five areas with significant impact on community relations: housing, learning, communication, promotion of equality and social inclusion, and prevention of violent extremism strengthening social cohesion.³⁸²⁹ The project directly refers to increase of migration in the UK and the anxiety surrounding the integration of these newer populations. It also recognises the link between poverty and decreased integration.³⁸³⁰ The project aims to address the factors of decreased integration through a number of policies aimed at increasing inclusion and full social participation. The Welsh Government commits to tackling hate crime, promoting equal opportunities, supporting the integration of marginalised groups, and identifying and spreading best practices.³⁸³¹ It also improves mainstream cohesion across the Welsh Assembly by engaging with departments across the Welsh Government, identifying and acting on issues of joint concern, and by maintain a specialist fora to ensure more effective approaches are taken to govern communities.³⁸³²

Overall, the EHRC recommended that the government develop a comprehensive race strategy in its 2016 report on race in the UK.³⁸³³ The recommendation for a comprehensive race strategy was reiterated in 2017, illustrating the current lack of measures taken by the Government in its implementation.³⁸³⁴

6.3. Recommendations for Black and Ethnic Minorities

The majority of the integration policies for migrants are contained in the 'black and ethnic minorities' group recommendations of the ECRI. The main policies recommendations relate to improving the opportunities of black and ethnic minorities and combatting Islamophobia. Specifically, the ECRI recommends an increase in representation of black and ethnic minorities in teaching and police force positions and the establishment of effective dialogue with Muslim communities.³⁸³⁵ The recommendation to increase the representation of black and ethnic minorities is being implemented by the BME Progression 2018. This programme is aimed improving the 'recruitment, development, profession and retention of [black and ethnic minority] officers and staff'.³⁸³⁶ The programme includes research, evaluation, and propagation of best practices.³⁸³⁷ There were no specific policies highlighted by the ECRI report that addressed the recommendation to increase representation of black and ethnic minorities in teaching position. Instead, a description of the situation for black and ethnic minority teachers revealed the continued discrimination and underrepresentation of the group in the teaching field.³⁸³⁸

The recommendation to combat Islamophobia has been implemented to a limited extent through government funding of the 'Tell MAMA' (Measuring Anti-Muslim Attacks) project, which aims to record, report and analyse anti-Muslim incidents, and provide support to the victims of such acts. The project works with the police with the aim of increasing access to justice for the victims of anti-Muslim acts.³⁸³⁹ Further initiatives aimed at combatting Islamophobia reviewed by ECRI, such as the cross-Government Working Group on Anti-Muslim Hatred, are reported to have had limited effect.³⁸⁴⁰ In addition, certain UK policies were identified as indirect contributors to Islamophobia. An example is the Prevent Strategy which tasks people in public agencies, including schools, hospitals, and local authorities, with reporting 'at-risk' children and adults to the government anti-radicalisation programme.³⁸⁴¹ This programme has been identified as contributing to the further stereotyping of Muslims.³⁸⁴²

6.4. Recommendations for Refugees and Asylum Seekers

The main recommendation for refugees and asylum seekers by the ECRI is to develop a refugee integration strategy and to take positive steps to prevent refugees from falling into destitution.³⁸⁴³ Prevention of refugees falling into destitution could be accomplished through an extension of the financial support received by asylum seekers after they have been granted refugee status.³⁸⁴⁴ This recommendation is not being implemented as the period of support continues to be insufficient to bridge the gap between receiving refugee status and accessing welfare benefits.³⁸⁴⁵ Furthermore, there is currently no refugee integration strategy in England and Northern Ireland.³⁸⁴⁶ By contrast, there has been a refugee integration strategy in Scotland since 2014

7. How is migrants' right to access to healthcare regulated within the national legislation?

7.1. Right to Access to Healthcare in the UK

Primary healthcare in the UK is delivered by General Practitioner ('GP') Clinics, National Health Service ('NHS') walk-in centres, dentists, pharmacists and optometrists.³⁸⁴⁸ The qualifying factor for free recourse to the UK's public healthcare system is based on ordinary residence, meaning a person must be lawfully in the country and able to demonstrate that they are 'settled'.³⁸⁴⁹ The NHS is the publicly-funded healthcare system of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.³⁸⁵⁰ Established in 1948 to provide comprehensive, universal health coverage, it functions on the basis of need rather than capacity to pay and previously delivered free primary healthcare to all people requiring medical assistance, regardless of their immigration status.³⁸⁵¹

Whilst basic health services classified as 'immediately necessary'³⁸⁵² and emergency treatment (up until the person is an inpatient)³⁸⁵³ are available to undocumented migrants in the UK, administrative and practical barriers often prevent those most vulnerable from seeking medical treatment. The definition of 'immediately necessary' is unclear and, as it hinges upon the clinical judgement of health professionals, notoriously difficult to implement. This dilemma is further complicated by the fact that national health matters fall under the devolved powers of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, meaning that slightly different rules may apply depending on which UK country the patient resides in.³⁸⁵⁴

7.2. Non-EU/EEA Nationals

Non-EU/EEA migrants' recourse to healthcare is primarily regulated through the National Health Service (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Regulations 2015. The Regulation forms part of a parcel of immigration-centred legislative acts, including Section 38 of the Immigration Act 2014 and the Immigration (Health Charge) Order 2015, which introduced significant changes to the provision of healthcare for non-EU/EEA nationals. The Immigration Act 2014 requires non-EU/EEA nationals to possess indefinite leave to remain before being able to access free secondary NHS care.³⁸⁵⁵

Whilst the Act ended free primary care for migrants who do not possess leave to enter or remain,³⁸⁵⁶ GP practices are granted discretion as to whether they request proof of identity or immigration status from patients seeking to register with a GP practice.³⁸⁵⁷ Following the enforcement of the Regulation in April 2015, migrants seeking leave to enter or remain in the UK are required to pay a pre-emptive charge called a 'health charge'.³⁸⁵⁸ The Health Charge Order requires non-EU/EEA nationals to pay a charge of £200 per year (non-tier 4 or non-tier 5 visas), or £150 per year for students on a tier 4 or young people on a tier 5 visa. If the charge is not timely and fully paid, visa applications may be refused or delayed. Those who cannot pay will have their visas automatically rejected.³⁸⁵⁹

Previously, everyone ordinarily and lawfully resident in the UK for 12 months or more would be exempt from a charge.³⁸⁶⁰ However, under the new rules, anyone not possessing indefinite leave to remain is not entitled to free NHS care and may thus be liable under the charging framework (unless they fall within the purview of the specified exemptions).³⁸⁶¹ These exemptions include refugees (who have been granted leave to remain), asylum seekers (who possess leave to remain whilst they try to prove their claim), and 'failed asylum seekers' (whose claims have been refused but may still be seeking to appeal this decision).³⁸⁶² Whereas the first category of persons is entitled to free NHS treatment owing to their residency status, access to healthcare for the latter two categories is more controversial.

³⁸⁶¹ These exemptions include: enforceable EU rights (and family members); social security coordination agreements (and family members); reciprocal health care agreements (depending on the agreement, these may cover residents and/or nationals); refugees, humanitarian or temporary protection recipients under the Immigration Rules; asylum seekers (including failed asylum seekers under the National Assistance Act 1948, s 21); children in the care of a local authority; victims of human trafficking/modern slavery (and family members); prisoners; people detained in a clinical institution or under a court order for treatment; detainees under the immigration laws; members of the regular or armed forces/NATO/war pensioners and armed forces compensation scheme payment recipients (and their family members)/individuals in Crown service or similar governmental employment; employees on a UK registered vessel; and individuals facing exceptional humanitarian reasons at the discretion of the Secretary of State.

³⁸⁶² Rachel Sabates-Wheeler and Rayah Feldman, Migration and Social Protection: Claiming Social Rights Beyond Borders (Springer 2011) 152-153.

Asylum seekers and 'failed asylum seekers' may be detained in removal centres according to immigration laws throughout the application procedure or once their application has been refused, meaning that healthcare is provided free of charge but not by the NHS. The quality of the healthcare available in such centres has been sharply criticised. A recent report issued by HM Chief Inspector of Prisons for Yarl's Wood, one of the UK's largest immigration detention centres, noted that 'healthcare provision did not ensure that patients received care and treatment comparable to that provided in the wider community. They were not assured of access to support, care and treatment for low level mental health needs, chronic diseases or sexual health; national screening programmes; [or] health promotion.'³⁸⁶³

7.3. EU/EEA Nationals

EU/EEA nationals are not subject to the Health Charge Order. If they possess a valid European Health Insurance Card ('EHIC') or Provisional Replacement Document ('PRC'), they will be exempt from being charged for the provision of 'medically necessary treatment' in the UK.³⁸⁶⁴ If overseas visitors or indeed patients ordinarily resident in the UK can present evidence that they are nationals, citizens or lawful residents of an EU/EEA country, they are exempted from medical charges by virtue of Regulation 12 of the National Health Service (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Regulation 2015.³⁸⁶⁵ Once the issuing Member State of the EHIC is identified, the NHS can recover the costs of medical treatment provided in the UK, which depending on the insuring Member State may include a mutual waiver, a fixed payment formula or actual cost recovery.³⁸⁶⁶ In addition, a person deemed to be ordinarily resident in the UK, meaning that 'residence is lawful, adopted voluntarily, and for settled purposes as part of the regular order of their life for the time being whether of short or long duration',³⁸⁶⁷ may not be charged for treatment obtained through the NHS. In relation to EU/EEA nationals, this interpretation comprises of anyone possessing an extended 'right to reside' under Directive 2004/38/EC including workers, self-employed persons, students and job seekers (up to 91 days), as well as carers of EU/EEA nationals (such as a dependent child) and non-EEA family members of EU/EEA nationals.³⁸⁶⁸ Thus, EU/EEA nationals who comply with the conditions of ordinary residence are entitled to register with the NHS and qualify for free medical treatment.³⁸⁶⁹

7.4. Irregularly Residing Migrants

Although there is no specific programme which regulates the provision of healthcare for vulnerable migrants, free secondary healthcare is available on non-discriminate terms to refugees who have been granted leave to remain (such as victims of trafficking or modern slavery), and to asylum seekers who are awaiting a decision and who have not been detained in removal centres. Irregularly residing migrants are not considered to be lawfully resident in the UK and do not possess indefinite leave to remain, thus in principle they are not entitled to free healthcare under the NHS unless they fall under any of the above-mentioned exemptions.

The UK is the only EU Member State in which the provision of healthcare is directly linked to immigration status, meaning that irregular undocumented migrants who seek to regularise their status but who lack the means to pay the annual surcharge of £200 or £150 (depending on the type of visa) may be barred from applying for an extension to their leave.³⁸⁷⁰ Accordingly, the Home Office is empowered under the Health and Social Care Act 2012 to request access to patient records in order to 'crackdown' on immigration offenders, a measure which has been taken with increasing regularity.³⁸⁷¹ More recently, these policies have been criticised for being 'short-sighted', as irregular migrants might avoid seeking pre-emptive medical treatment and wait until they require emergency medical services which tend to be costlier. Such expenses are rarely recouped by the NHS from patients who are unable to pay.

That said, patients who wish to register with a GP are not required to disclose their immigration status as refusing to register them on such grounds could amount to unlawful discrimination under the Equality Act 2010. Discrimination will be deemed unlawful if a person experiences unfair treatment on the grounds of certain protected characteristics, a list which includes race among others.³⁸⁷² Refusing to register a patient on the basis of their nationality could therefore amount to direct discrimination rendered unlawful under the Act.

8. How do migrant children benefit from the right to education under your national legislation (Article 2 of the first Protocol to the ECHR)?

8.1. Right to Education in the UK

The right to education in the UK is provided for in the Human Rights Act 1998: 'no person shall be denied the right to education'.³⁸⁷³ In addition to that, Section 7 of the Education Act 1996 places a legal duty on the parent or guardian of a child aged 5 to 16 years (known as compulsory school age), to ensure that the child attends and receives full-time education. Local authorities have a duty to provide suitable full-time education for all children of compulsory school age resident in that local authority, irrespective of their immigration status and appropriate to their age, ability and any special educational needs they may have.³⁸⁷⁴ However, a report published by the Coram Children's Legal Centre in 2013³⁸⁷⁵ made reference to a series of cases which cast doubt on this requirement. In one case, a four-year-old pupil, born in the UK, who had attended a British nursery and was subsequently enrolled in reception class, had his place at primary school revoked after his father was found to be working illegally. Although immigration-related documentation is not required for registration at a school, some schools appear to be reluctant to accept migrant children (especially the children of undocumented migrants) owing to issues over funding arrangements or potential impacts on reaching government targets.³⁸⁷⁶

In the UK, until the age of 18, children must also pursue further full-time education, an apprenticeship or a traineeship, or spend at least 20 hours volunteering per week.³⁸⁷⁷ Given that many migrant children do not have permission to work in the UK, continuation of education will often be the most viable option.³⁸⁷⁸

8.1.1. Children of EU Migrants

Under EU law, EU citizens and their family members (including any children they have who are under the age of 21 years or dependent on them) can move to and reside freely in any EU Member State. Migrant children are thus able to access the education of other Member States on the same terms. This is provided for in Articles 7(2) (welfare benefits for workers, namely the parent or guardian of the child) and Article 10 (right to education) of Regulation 492/2011.67, both of which apply to the UK. Children have the right to be placed in a class with their own age group, at the equivalent level to their class in their country of origin, regardless of their language level. At the same time, they are entitled under EU law to receive free language tuition in their new home country to help them adapt to the school system. However, there is no automatic EU-wide recognition of school certificates. Instead, one must ask the national authorities to recognise their children's school certificates before they can enrol them in a local school. Once children are in education, they have a right to stay in the UK with their parent(s) until their education is completed, regardless of whether they can support themselves.³⁸⁷⁹

8.1.2. Children of Non-EU/EEA Migrants

The right of children to receive education varies for the children of non-EU/EEA migrants. Children in the following categories are entitled to receive education in the UK, but are not entitled to a place in a state-funded school—

- Children from non-EU/EEA countries who are short-term visitors living abroad but admitted to the UK for a short visit but not to study; and
- Children from non-EU/EEA countries who have permission to study in the UK on the basis that they attend an independent, fee-paying school.

State schools that receive applications from children that fall within one of these categories are instructed not to deny the child a place but to alert the Home Office school referrals team who will investigate the case further.³⁸⁸⁰ However the allocation of a place should not be refused on the basis of the Home Office's findings.³⁸⁸¹

An important step was made in this area by the publication of the first report of the Joint Committee on Human Rights on the human rights of unaccompanied migrant children and young people in May 2013 which called on the Government to affirm its commitment Articles 29 and 30 of the 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child ('UNCRC') and ensure equal access to education to children regardless of their immigration status.³⁸⁸²

8.2. Education System in the UK

8.2.1. Accessibility

In a research report³⁸⁸³ commissioned by the charity 'Action For Social Integration' ('AFSI') and published in 2010, it became clear that there is a 'lack of straightforward, easily accessible information about the UK school system'³⁸⁸⁴ to the confusion of newly-arrived migrant and refugee families. Parents and guardians usually struggle to understand the teaching process, the curriculum, and the various school policies, relying instead on information obtained from other migrant and refugee families. These concerns prompted AFSI to publish a targeted guide on the education system for migrants and refugees³⁸⁸⁵ which includes information on key issues such as getting children into primary school.³⁸⁸⁶

Government policy concerning children with English as an Additional Language ('EAL') is a useful way to assess any efforts made to increase accessibility to education for migrant children.

³⁸⁸⁰ Department for Education, School Admissions: Applications from Overseas Children (Guidance, 25 March 2014) <<https://www.gov.uk/guidance/schools-admissions-applications-from-overseas-children>> accessed 10 July 2017.

This class often encompasses children of refugees and migrants whose parents have moved to the UK for work.³⁸⁸⁷ In 2012, the Government emphasised that that it would promote ‘rapid language acquisition and include them within mainstream education as soon as possible’.³⁸⁸⁸ Accordingly, Teachers’ Standards Guidance from 2013 stipulates that teachers should have ‘a clear understanding of the needs of all pupils, including those with special educational needs; those of high ability; those with English as an additional language; those with disabilities; and be able to use and evaluate distinctive teaching approaches to engage and support them.’³⁸⁸⁹ Furthermore, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (‘QCA’) in England has provided specific guidance on how to teach EAL. In certain instances, such as where they are still developing their proficiency in English but the class materials are difficult, the QCA recommends that pupils should be encouraged to use their first language through visual cues or collaboration with other EAL learners that speak the same language.³⁸⁹⁰

Funding to support increased accessibility to the education system for migrant children is clearly key. However, since the cessation of the Ethnic Minority Achievement Grant in 2011 there is currently no direct funding from central government for children with EAL.³⁸⁹¹ Instead funding can be received based on local funding formulas, where schools can decide to include a funding factor for children with EAL.³⁸⁹² The Government’s recent proposal for an upheaval of school funding in the UK states that students with EAL would be accounted for when determining the availability of additional funding in order to ‘increase funding to schools likely to have pupils more likely to need additional support.’³⁸⁹³ Nevertheless, the proposal stipulates that schools will not be required to spend the extra funding in a particular way or for particular students.

Another obstacle which can hinder access to education for migrant children is the age assessment procedure conducted by immigration officials. As abovementioned, there is an obligation to provide education for children of compulsory school age. However, age assessments act as a barrier to services, including education, for children who cannot prove that they are under the age of 18. Fortunately, several mechanisms exist in order to broaden access to services. First, age assessments must not be conducted on the basis of appearance alone, as decided in the case of R(B) v Mayor and Burgess of the London Borough of Merton.³⁸⁹⁴ In addition, guidance from the Association of Directors of Children's Services states that these assessments should be carried out as quickly as possible to expedite access to services.³⁸⁹⁵ In cases where age cannot be established definitively, the guidelines urge that the benefit of the doubt should be given to an individual who claims to be a child.³⁸⁹⁶ Still, doubt was cast over the effective implementation of these mechanisms by the House of Lords in 2016. It was suggested by the Chamber's European Union Committee that age assessments are still a significant challenge to the ability of unaccompanied migrant children to access services, including education.³⁸⁹⁷

Eligibility (or not) for free school meals may further hinder the full and effective enjoyment of the right to education for migrant children. It has been reported that access to free school meals not only helps lift children out of poverty, but also extends important educational benefits.³⁸⁹⁸ In the UK, universal free school meals are available for all children in reception, year 1 and year 2.³⁸⁹⁹ Migrant children are also able to benefit from this policy, regardless of immigration status. Beyond this age, however, eligibility for free school meals in the UK depends on whether parents are in receipt of a specified benefit.³⁹⁰⁰ Asylum-seekers and their dependents who qualify for support under Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 are entitled to free school meals. However, children who are subject to immigration control will be deemed to have 'no recourse to public funds'³⁹⁰¹ and will not be eligible for free school meals. Local authorities have a discretion to fund school meals for these particular children, but there is not a unified approach to this.³⁹⁰²

8.2.2. Discrimination

The Equality Act 2010 prohibits discrimination on grounds of race, gender and religion among others³⁹⁰³ in all sectors, including higher and further education. Asylum-seeking, refugee and migrant children are further entitled to special protection and all associated rights under the regime of the UNCRC.³⁹⁰⁴ Such children should not be the victims of discrimination or stigmatisation since they are deemed to be particularly vulnerable to trafficking as well as economic and sexual exploitation.³⁹⁰⁵

Notwithstanding the existing legal mechanisms, which ought to ensure that any child is treated equally regardless of nationality or immigration status, a number of concerns have been raised in respect of unfair practices which negatively affect the ability of unaccompanied migrant children to access essential services, such as education, on the basis of their immigration status.³⁹⁰⁶ In particular, criticism has been levelled at the practice of granting 'Unaccompanied Asylum Seeking Children Leave' ('UASC Leave'). UASC leave is granted until the age of 17 and a half years, or for a period of 30 months (if shorter), to a child whose asylum claim has been refused but has yet to secure appropriate reception arrangements in the country of return.³⁹⁰⁷ This form of leave has been termed 'problematic' as it is a short-term solution and only 43% of children received UASC leave in 2016.³⁹⁰⁸

In 2016, the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child recommended that the UK Government work to reduce the risk of discrimination in several ways such as–

- Providing sufficient support to facilitate access to basic services;³⁹⁰⁹
- Establishing statutory independent guardians for all unaccompanied and separated children;³⁹¹⁰ and
- Strengthening the capacity of law enforcement authorities and the judiciary to detect and prosecute child sexual exploitation and abuse, and grant effective remedies to the child victims.³⁹¹¹

In response, the UK Government launched a new voluntary transfer scheme which seeks a 'fairer distribution of unaccompanied children across all local authorities.'³⁹¹² Under this scheme, a local authority strained by the scale of care required for unaccompanied children may be able to volunteer a child to be transferred to a different authority, one which has fewer unaccompanied children and less strain when providing essential services. For a transfer to be effected, the child's best interests must be considered. The Interim National Transfer Protocol for the scheme expressly provides that a child's right to education should be considered when assessing what is in their best interests.³⁹¹³ The Protocol states that the ability to transfer a child to a less strained and overcrowded local authority will, in the majority of cases, better serve their needs in this regard. The Protocol equally recognises that the right to education may be breached if children are in the care of a local authority where there are no school places available.

9. How are foreign school and university diplomas recognised in your country (e.g. through national law under the CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997) and what are the practical procedures?

9.1. Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education

The UK is a party to the 1997 CoE/UNESCO Convention on the Recognition of Qualifications concerning Higher Education in the European Region of 1997, also known as the 'Lisbon Recognition Convention' ('LRC'), having ratified it in 2003. However, as reported by the LRC Committee in its Monitoring the Implementation of the LRC Report 2016,³⁹¹⁴ the procedures and criteria used in the assessment and recognition of qualifications are not regulated in the UK at national level, and the UK Government did not indicate in its response that there was any oversight of regulations and implementation.³⁹¹⁵ The criteria and procedures for recognition are instead regulated by the individual higher education institutions ('HEIs') that provide higher education - typically degrees, diplomas or other certificate programmes - and which have full decision-making authority and total autonomy to set up their own criteria and procedure.³⁹¹⁶

9.2. The UK National Recognition Information Centre

Pursuant to Article IX.2 of the LRC, the UK's National Recognition Information Centre ('NARIC') was established in 1997 to provide services for individuals and organisations advising on comparisons of international qualifications against UK qualification framework levels. As a national agency, the NARIC provides the only official source of information on international education and training systems and qualifications and skills attained outside the UK. It is independent, and the centre's tasks and responsibilities are regulated at national level.³⁹¹⁷

Individuals may apply to the NARIC for a statement of comparability, which 'guides universities, colleges, employers and professional bodies on how [an individual's] qualifications (including professional qualifications) relate to UK qualifications and certificates'.³⁹¹⁸ The statement is not legally binding but issued for guidance purposes only,³⁹¹⁹ which means that ultimately it is the potential employer or institution that decides whether an individual's qualification is suitable for the job or course he/she is applying for.³⁹²⁰

The NARIC also provides a 'Visas and Nationality Service', on behalf of the Home Office, to support individuals applying for UK visas or for settlement in the UK.³⁹²¹ Under this service, individuals may apply for official NARIC statements, 'custom-designed for immigration purposes, that confirm [the individual's] academic qualification level and/or English language proficiency - as appropriate for [the individual's] personal circumstances and immigration route'.³⁹²² These statements are also only for guidance purposes.³⁹²³

9.3. Recognition Procedures

9.3.1. Basic Principles, Procedures and Criteria

In compliance with the LRC's requirement that procedures and criteria used in the assessment and recognition of qualifications are transparent, coherent and reliable,³⁹²⁴ the NARIC has drafted a Code of Practice and its own Evaluation Criteria and Methodology.³⁹²⁵ The application for a statement of comparability requires: a copy of the applicant's certificate(s) together with copies of final transcript(s) in the original language; and a copy of a certified translation in English, if necessary, or a Diploma Supplement and/or Certificate Supplement issued in English.³⁹²⁶ Although the LRC specifies that decisions on recognition shall be made within a reasonable time limit specified beforehand competent recognition authority,³⁹²⁷ the time limit for the assessment of foreign qualifications is not regulated in the UK.³⁹²⁸ The NARIC states that the assessment normally takes 10-15 working days from the date the NARIC receives all documents and payment, while less common qualifications may require additional research and thus may take longer.³⁹²⁹ The applicant's right to appeal the assessment is regulated internally.³⁹³⁰ The timeframe for submitting these requests is six months after the service has been provided, after which the requests can no longer be considered.³⁹³¹

The NARIC states that it focuses predominantly on an outcomes-based approach in its assessment of qualifications.³⁹³² It gives consideration also to criteria relating to qualification duration, entry requirements, method and rigour of assessment, professional or occupational outcomes and quality assurance mechanisms.³⁹³³ References to the position of qualifications within national education systems or frameworks and elaborated progression pathways are also factors in the decision-making process.³⁹³⁴ The resulting evaluation is a comparison to the NARIC Band Framework,³⁹³⁵ a hierarchical structure of educational outcomes. There are 16 bands in the framework which seek to provide 'a mechanism within which it is possible to categorise the wide variety of international qualifications and to further differentiate between them in a coherent and accurate fashion'.³⁹³⁶ The NARIC states that the use of this framework may also facilitate connections and references to domestic and other qualifications frameworks.³⁹³⁷

A key principle in the LRC is the substantial differences principle, which requires parties to the LRC to recognise the higher education qualifications, periods of study and qualifications giving access to higher education conferred in another LRC party, unless a substantial difference between a foreign qualification and a corresponding national qualification can be shown.³⁹³⁸ The UK has no national definition of the terms 'substantial differences'³⁹³⁹ but the report suggests this may mean that: the nominal duration of study is shorter by more than one year; the institution or a programme is not accredited (quality assured); and/or there are differences in programme content/courses.³⁹⁴⁰

9.3.2. Recognition of Refugees' Qualifications

The UK Government acknowledged that they have not implemented Article VII of the LRC and have no regulations at any level concerning the qualifications of refugees' and displaced persons.³⁹⁴¹ However, the NARIC is currently involved in a pilot project for the European Qualifications Passport for Refugees,³⁹⁴² in collaboration with the Council of Europe, the Greek Ministry of Education, Research and Religious Affairs, the office of the UNHCR, and qualification recognition centres in Greece, Italy and Norway. 10. How is participation of migrants in political decisions regulated in your national legislation? Are they legally allowed to participate in their country of residence the same way as in their country of origin?

10.1. Electoral Rights

At the European level, the UK is rather unique in awarding different types of voting rights to migrants, who thus hold the privilege of influencing policy that regulates their rights during their stay as non-citizens in the UK.³⁹⁴⁸ The right to vote for citizens is guaranteed under Protocol 1 to the ECHR, albeit subject to legitimate and proportionate restrictions.³⁹⁴⁹ The UK is thus entitled to reserve the right to vote solely to their own nationals, and even restrict it simply to those resident in the country subject to their specifications.³⁹⁵⁰ These voting rights are not granted uniformly, however, and are awarded to migrant voters depending on the historic relationship their country of origin has with the UK. Political participation for migrants is regulated through a trifurcated system, which differentiates the political participation of three groups: Commonwealth citizens, EU citizens, and citizens of other countries.³⁹⁵¹

10.1.1. Commonwealth and Irish Citizens

Citizens of the Commonwealth of Nations and of the Republic of Ireland are entitled to vote in parliamentary elections under the Representation of the People Act 1983 if eligibility is not restricted by the same age, residence, and capacity restrictions applied to UK citizens.³⁹⁵² The Act also entitles these citizens to vote in local elections in their municipality, including city councils, county councils, local mayoral elections, and elections to the devolved legislatures of Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland.³⁹⁵³ If Commonwealth and Irish citizens are registered to vote in general elections to the UK Parliament, they are further entitled to vote and stand in elections to the European Parliament.³⁹⁵⁴

Under the provisions of the Ireland Act 1949, the British government does not consider Ireland to be a foreign country with the effect that 'Irish citizens are not considered to be "aliens."'”³⁹⁵⁵ Irish citizens are considered by immigration authorities to have a permanent right of residence in the UK on arrival into the country, and are thus entitled to a large exclusive range of entitlements including rights of political participation equivalent to UK citizens.³⁹⁵⁶

For Commonwealth citizens, voting rights are independent of immigration status and are available to migrant lawfully residing within any electoral constituency.³⁹⁵⁷ Restrictions only arise for the rights to political candidacy, as the Electoral Administration Act 2006 qualifies the right to stand in elections to the House of Commons for Commonwealth citizens who either do not require leave to remain in the UK or who have attained 'indefinite leave to remain'.³⁹⁵⁸ These qualifying Commonwealth citizens are also entitled to stand for local elections if their eligibility is not curtailed by restrictions applied to UK citizens, such as the condition that candidates have a specific connection to the area.³⁹⁵⁹

Nationwide referendums, governed by the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000,³⁹⁶⁰ have grown in frequency in the UK in recent years. Eligibility for political participation in such referendums varies depending on the issue being voted on, and may be restricted geographically to either the UK as a whole, any of its four constituent countries, or to individual counties.³⁹⁶¹ The right to vote in referendums is not guaranteed by law and is granted by the Government on an ad hoc basis. For example, in the referendum on EU membership held on June 23 2016, eligibility was reserved solely for UK citizens as well as Commonwealth and Irish citizens resident in the UK and Gibraltar.³⁹⁶²

10.1.2. EU Citizens

The UK applies Article 20 of the Treaty on the EU to entitle all EU citizens residing in the country to stand and vote in the local elections for their municipality as well as for elections to the European Parliament.³⁹⁶³ Further, these rights are extended to the elections to the devolved legislatures in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland. EU citizens are also entitled to stand for office in any election where they have the right to vote, subject to the same requirements applicable to UK citizens.³⁹⁶⁴

10.1.3. Non-EU Citizens

Migrants who are neither citizens of the Commonwealth nor of the EU are not entitled to vote in any election for public office in the UK.³⁹⁶⁵ This includes the three non-EU EEA Member States.

10.2. Other Forms of Political Participation

Political participation beyond the rights to vote and to stand for political office usually follows the same categories outlined above. The right to donate to political parties is given to registered voters.³⁹⁶⁶

10.3. Restrictions on Political Participation

The UK remains one of few European countries to significantly restrict the right of convicted offenders to vote while they are incarcerated.³⁹⁶⁷ This policy, implemented by the Representation of the People Act 1983, renders any individual sentenced to penal detention 'legally incapable of voting' at an election.³⁹⁶⁸ The blanket ban was declared incompatible with the ECHR in the case of Hirst v the United Kingdom,³⁹⁶⁹ however no legal changes have followed the ruling to date.³⁹⁷⁰ That said, in October 2017, the UK Government announced its intention to implement a policy that would allow certain prisoners, specifically those serving short sentences who are entitled to day releases for 'rehabilitation courses' or 'community service', to vote in elections if they remained on the voter rolls.³⁹⁷¹ The scope of this prospective policy is unclear, with estimates indicating that it may entitle fewer than 100 prisoners to vote, but the proposal demonstrates a noteworthy shift towards greater political participation for convicts.³⁹⁷² Be that as it may, as the existing prohibition on voting is both ‘automatic and indiscriminate’,³⁹⁷³ the rights of migrants to political participation are not, at present, disproportionately affected when compared with those of British citizens.

10.4. Redress

The electoral register facilitates the invocation of the right to vote for eligible migrant residents in the UK.³⁹⁷⁴ In the event that a migrant is legally eligible for registration, but is denied induction on or removed from the register, he/she is entitled to appeal to the relevant county court if in England, Wales or Northern Ireland, or to the sheriff court if in Scotland.³⁹⁷⁵ Should an unlawful barrier be placed on a migrant’s right to political participation, their immediate avenue of redress is thus through judicial recourse.

On the international level, external voting practices are relatively novel, and electoral laws predominantly regulate the conduct of citizens voting from outside state borders yet ignore the conduct of foreign elections within sovereign borders.³⁹⁷⁶ Consequently, UK legislation outlines the procedures through which British citizens can vote in domestic elections from abroad. The rights of UK-based migrants to participate extraterritorially in foreign political processes are dependent on the varied rules in each respective country.³⁹⁷⁷ External voting predominantly occurs through postal ballot or voting in ‘diplomatic missions or military bases, or other designated places’,³⁹⁷⁸ and thus the UK does not typically assume a role in the process.

11. How can migrants acquire citizenship in the country? Is there a possibility of double nationality?

11.1. Citizenship

There are multiple ways in which one can acquire British citizenship. The traditional ways where one can claim citizenship are through descent, naturalisation after five years,³⁹⁷⁹ or naturalisation after three years as a spouse of a UK citizen.³⁹⁸⁰ The information regarding citizenship can be found in Section 6 of the British Nationality Act 1981 and in Part 2 of the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009. There are no separate set of rules for EU citizens and non-EU citizens. All applications for naturalisation governed by the British Nationality Act of 1981 and all candidates have to meet the same requirements regardless of the distinction between EU and non-EU nationals. Thus the Immigration Rules and European Regulations do not alter or affect naturalisation in the UK.³⁹⁸¹

11.1.1. Descent

Due to the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009, changes have arisen in regards to descent for children born abroad. Prior to the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009, the legislation on this matter referred to descent for citizenship through the father.³⁹⁸² New rules amended the old ones to rectify the anomaly and include ancestry from the mother to qualify for British citizenship.³⁹⁸³

11.1.2. Naturalisation

There are several criteria for a migrant to fulfil in order to qualify at the date of application. The applicant must be of full age, meaning 18 years of age or above.³⁹⁸⁴ Additionally, there are residency requirements whereby the applicant must have been living in the UK for at least five years without being absent from the territory for more than 450 days, and he/she must not have been absent from the territory for more than 90 days in the 12 months prior to the application being submitted.³⁹⁸⁵ There must be no restrictions on the period of stay of the applicant at the time of the application or the 12 months prior to the submission of the application, nor any breach of UK immigration laws within the past 10 years.³⁹⁸⁶

There are also specific requirements at the time of consideration of the application, such as the fact that the applicant must be of good character which signifies that he/she respects and abides

³⁹⁷⁹ Migrants must have resided in the UK for 5 years to be able to apply for naturalisation (for those who are not married to a British Citizen), with the last year having been a permanent resident with an indefinite leave to remain in the UK (ILR) which is normally acquired after 5 years living in the UK on a visa. by the law, for example.³⁹⁸⁷ Unless there is an exemption through age or disability, the applicant will need to have sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh or Scottish Gaelic language as well as take the 'Life in the UK' test which consists of being tested on UK society, history, politics and government.³⁹⁸⁸ This test was introduced in 2005 as a mean to maximize the chances of a successful integration of the applicant in the UK.³⁹⁸⁹ There is also an expectation that the applicant will continue to reside in the UK or will enter into or continue in either the Crown Service under the government of the UK, or service under an international organisations of which the UK or Her Majesty's Government is a member or service in the employment of a company/association established in the UK.³⁹⁹⁰ While these criteria are important to fulfil, the law does allow for discretion therefore permitting instances in which certain requirements can be waived.³⁹⁹¹

11.1.3. Naturalisation through British Spouse or Civil Partner

Section 6(2) of the British Nationality Act also recognises naturalisation through marriage to a British spouse or civil partner.³⁹⁹² The same criteria of Schedule 1 apply, with emphasis on complying with the residency requirements and also having a valid permanent resident card or a document that shows permanent residency are the same. Residency requirements apply unless the spouse or civil partner of the applicant works abroad for the UK government or an organisation related to the government.³⁹⁹³ Otherwise, the requirement is to have lived in the UK for three years before the applicant can begin the process.³⁹⁹⁴ Additionally, the applicant cannot leave the country for more than 270 days in those years, nor can he/she spend more than 90 days outside in the past 12 months.³⁹⁹⁵ It is imperative for the applicant not to have broken any immigration laws.³⁹⁹⁶

11.2. Dual Nationality

The concept of dual nationality is allowed in the UK,³⁹⁹⁷ meaning that it is possible for a migrant to become a British citizen without losing his/her initial nationality. This is dependent on the national laws of the country of origin and whether they also permit dual nationality.³⁹⁹⁸ The result is that other countries may have an indirect impact on the number of applications for British citizenship.

12. How is your country assisted by EU programmes and funding with regard to the integration of migrants?

12.1. EU Programmes and Funding

In principle, Member States of the EU have exclusive competence concerning integration of third country nationals ("TCNs").³⁹⁹⁹ Nevertheless, since the enactment of the Treaty of Lisbon, the EU has now has authority to support Member States in this area and, as a result, has adopted a number of programmes, agendas and instruments aimed to do so. The UK has participated in a number of initiatives promoted by the EU, such as the European Migration Network and the European Migration Forum. However, the three main programmes that benefit the UK in the integration of migrants are the European Integration Fund, the Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund, and the European Social Fund.

12.2. The European Integration Fund ('EIF')

The UK has taken part in the EIF since its launch in 2007 until its ending in 2013, receiving a total fund of €110 million. The responsible authority of the fund was firstly the UK Border Agency and, after its abolition in 2013, the Home Office. Since the outset, the UK established four main operational aims to be pursued using the EU funds.⁴⁰⁰⁰ First, focus was on developing a points-based system for immigration to simplify admission procedure and strengthen the possibility of integration for migrants. Second, part of the contribution was to be spent in developing programmes offering TCNs the chance to learn English as well as to gain new skills facilitating their entry in the UK job market. Finally, the last priority was identified as developing a clearer track to gain British citizenship for TCNs. Overall, 292 projects were funded using the funding that the UK was awarded. Of these, 8 were funded in 2007, 18 in 2008, 44 in 2009, 61 in 2010, 59 in 2011, 40 in 2012, and 62 in 2013.⁴⁰⁰¹

12.3. The Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund ('AMIF')

The UK opted into the AMIF in 2014. This fund, as the name suggests, was offered by the EU to Member States to support projects concerning asylum return strategies and integration. The UK was granted €370 million under the fund and decided to allocate different shares of such funding to the three different objectives. As far as asylum is concerned, this objective aims to developing better asylum procedures, enhancing staff training as well as providing social assistance to asylum seeker throughout the application process⁴⁰⁰². This objective was allocated €74 million (approximately 20%) of the AMIF. The vast majority of the funding, amounting to over €200 million (approximately 55%) was allocated to the second objective, namely return strategies. These include voluntary return measures as well as enforced returns and cover specific issues such as assisted travel arrangements, financial assistance and pre- and post-return counselling for TCNs.⁴⁰⁰³ Finally, in tackling the issue of integration, the UK government decided to allocate €74 million under the AMIF (approximately 20%). Under this objective, it was established that three main projects were to be supported by the funding: the development of regional and local integration strategies; language and cultural initiatives; and a twelve-month resettlement programme for refugees.⁴⁰⁰⁴ Notwithstanding the planned allocation of the AMIF to the three different objectives stated above, 27 projects have been funded as of July 2016. Of these, 18 projects were supported under the objective of return measures (amounting to over £85 million), 2 under the heading of integration (amounting to £12 million), and 7 under the objective of asylum (amounting to over £8 million).⁴⁰⁰⁵

12.4. The European Social Fund ('ESF')

The ESF is an EU initiative created to facilitate access to employment, with a particular focus on individuals belonging to disadvantaged social groups who struggle to access the job market. Between 2014 and 2020, the UK was allocated over €4 billion⁴⁰⁰⁶ for projects which predominantly aim to tackle youth unemployment and facilitate access to employment for job seekers by creating a more inclusive job market.⁴⁰⁰⁷ Migrants, as a vulnerable category of individuals, have thus been the focus of a number of projects funded by the ESF. In 2008, for example, the Minority Ethnic Employment Support Project, launched by GEMS Northern Ireland, was awarded €148,415 of ESF funding.⁴⁰⁰⁸ This ongoing initiative aims to help minority ethnic individuals entering the job market by providing language and training courses, workshops on job applications and job interviews, and development and volunteering opportunities. Since its launch in 2004, this project has proved to be extremely successful and, in its latest evaluation,

Conclusions

Several considered conclusions can be drawn from the British tapestry of interconnected yet varied migration policies, practices, and rules. First, there seems to be a lack of information regarding access to certain services, such as healthcare and education, available to migrants. Although charities such as 'Migrant Help' and the Refugee Council have received government funding to provide advice and support to those seeking asylum, the information available from government bodies and authorities is often outdated or difficult to access. Second, the accreditation of qualifications concerning education may prove to be equally as problematic. The Higher Education Institutions ('HEIs') who regulate the recognition of prior qualifications and education obtained have complete discretion as to the criteria and internal procedures they choose to implement, thus leading to a spectrum of possible outcomes which depend on the nature of the relevant decision-making institution. Third, there is scope to successfully challenge other controversial practices, such as the 'deport first appeal later' policy, on the grounds of incompatibility with convention rights under the ECHR. Indeed, the Human Rights Act continues to play a central role in forging British immigration law, often softening the effects of certain immigration policies and rules.

Nevertheless, with Brexit looming on the horizon, it is difficult to predict the future of immigration laws and policies in the UK. It is an estimated number of 588,000 migrants entered the constituent countries in 2016. In this context, questions regarding the immigration status of EU citizens resident in the UK following its divorce from the EU have caused a considerable amount of debate and unease. Most recently, the incumbent Government has pledged to tackle irregular migration and to reduce regular migration. New domestic policies, such as the awarding of visas (with the exception of student visas and temporary work visas) on the basis of skill and value, the requesting of access to patient records from the NHS for immigration purposes, and the scrapping of direct funding of 'English as an Additional Language' programmes, are liable to influence either the integration of migrants or the process of migration in and of itself. It remains to be seen, however, whether such policies will have the desired, immigration-curbing effect.
